"It is possible now to be grateful for the services which Bradlaugh-materialism rendered to the cause of Christianity. Of course, Bradlaughism, as represented by his popular lectures against the Bible, and against what he was so fond of calling 'the God of the Bible,' is as dead as Pharaoh's Egyptians. The lectures, as lectures, as reasoned statements against religion, were simply beneath contempt. The one puzzle in Bradlaugh's life is how so clever a man could be such a fool as to talk as he did, how so great a mind could bring itself to such puerility, or how, on another and not pleasing hypothesis, so honest a soul could degrade himself by 'playing it low down' to the ignoramuses from the taproom for the sake of their pence. With one's whole heart going out to this man in affection and in gratitude and in reverence for his great fight for freedom and humanity, one has taken a friend to hear him, and been disgusted and shamed by the spectacle of the lion of a man braying from beneath his ass's skin. Balaam's donkey, Jonah's whale, the Tower of Babel, the Resurrection, are all themes which will recur to the memory of men who heard him and who grieved over his buffooneries. However Mr. Bradlaugh could bring himself to repeat, in the large towns of England, that wretched witticism about the difficulty which would arise when a woman was taking her husband's dinner to a man employed as bricklayer on the Tower of Babel, and was three days on the way from the earth to the height which the man had reached; however he could bring himself to make merry over the man whose leg had been taken off on a battlefield or in a sawmill, and had to come flying through the air to meet the body on the Judgment day; however he could condescend to address these mountebank jokes to his audience, was then, and is now, an insoluble mystery. He did not act in this way in his debates. How could he do it in his threepenny lectures?

"But, the setting of his views ignored, there can, we repeat be little doubt that those views and the enforcement of them have been of service to the Church. He popularised doubt legitimate doubt, necessary doubt, healthy doubt, whose existence was amongst the first conditions of growth. That which had grown unthinkable to the scholar and incredible to the mass of the people he forced the untrained amongst the religious public of the working and lower middle classes to reconsider, and eventually to abandon in favor of that which was more tenable and enduring. His work was destructive; he was an iconoclast in very truth; but the work of the destroyer is good work very often, and the waster, though not in this case the builder, too, nevertheless, made the work of the builder at once more necessary and more possible. Many uneducated teachers and preachers in the churches, and many people of the same class in the different denominations, have abandoned silly and dishonoring notions about God and about religion and about the Bible because of Bradlaugh's work; and after he had helped to clear the rubbish away other men have been able to get to work on the erection of a larger and more surely founded temple of the living God.

"Charles Bradlaugh's work did not die with himself. It lives in the direction just indicated, in its service to unthoughtful popular religion. But his army of followers has dwindled, we will not say to a regiment, but to a corporal's guard. His 'school' does not exist. 'Secularism,' as he defined it, is no more. A 'Society' exists; there are some meetings held, some papers published; but to all practical purposes Bradlaugh-materialism has disappeared from our midst. But for the unwise efforts of narrow-minded religionists in Bradlaugh's day, his atheistic doctrines would never have had the vogue which they came to enjoy. And if it were not for foolish and incompetent people who try to set forth the evidences of Christianity to-day, it is probable that the few people who still seek to propagate Charles Bradlaugh's negations would fail to obtain sufficient gate money to pay for the hire of a hall in any town in Britain. His weaknesses and his abuse of strength are gone; his courage, his sympathy, his goodness, live on. He was a great, heroic man, who contended valiantly for the faith which had been delivered to him; who suffered for his faith, who poured out his life in the cause of truth and for love of the right, and who must be numbered amongst the true worshippers of the Crucified if there be any reality in the saying of his friend, Mazzini, 'We worship God by serving Man.'"

OUR REPLY.

Bradlaugh's "services to Christianity" were not always regarded as such. Ardent and sincere Christians used to detest his iconoclasm. And they were right. He rendered no service to Christianity—but he did render service to Christians. He made them ashamed of the worst parts of their creed. That is, he helped to extinguish Christianity. For a religion does not die like a man, all at once; it disappears gradually, and the worst parts go first. The "service" which Bradlaugh rendered to Christianity, therefore, was the service of destroying as much of it as he could. The rest will go in time.

It is amusing to read that Bradlaugh's lectures against the Bible were "beneath contempt." We always hear that from Christians when they are beaten. Nor will it make a Freethinker wild to be told that Bradlaugh was "a fool to talk as he did," especially when his folly came out in laughing at Balaam's donkey and Jonah's whale—which, of course, are profoundly serious subjects. As for that "wretched witticism" about the confusion at Babel, something similar occurs in grave old Bishop Hall's Meditations. The "mountebank joke" about the joining of corporeal pieces at the Resurrection seems fair enough in the light of the historic doctrine, still held by most of the Churches, of the actual resurrection of the human body. The "insoluble mystery" is not in Bradlaugh's joking, but in grave divines teaching the nonsense he ridiculed.

Digitized by Google

The gentlemen of the pulpit should not set up as critics of wit. They read the Bible too much to be good judges. They catch its portentous solemnity, and come to regard a joke as buffoonery if cracked within a mile of a tabernacle.

Bradlaugh's work was "destructive." Indeed! Is it destructive work to pull down fetid slums in great cities? Is it destructive work to fight disease? Is it destructive work to fell forests and make room for happy homesteads? Is it destructive work to purge the human mind of evil superstitions? Is it destructive work to kill lies? "Destructive" is a canting expression. In the eternal processes of Nature, destruction and construction are interdependent. To rail at the one is to undervalue the other.

It is something, however, to learn that Bradlaugh induced many people to "abandon silly and dishonoring notions about God and about religion." What the superior persons at Liverpool overlook is the fact that these silly and dishonoring notions were established and inculcated by their own Church. It was reserved for the Atheist to remove the rubbish set in Man's path by the friends of God.

The reviewer is mistaken (perhaps he is not mistaken, but worse) as to the dwindling of Bradlaugh's "followers." It is ridiculous to say that "some" meetings are held, and "some" papers published. Meetings are held all over the country, and the Freethinker, at any rate, though increased in price, has a considerably larger circulation than the National Reformer had at the time of Bradlaugh's death. Of course we miss Bradlaugh. He was a giant, and giants are not easily replaced. But we always knew he was mortal, and it is only Christians who are silly enough to believe that his "party"—that is, the Freethought movement—merely existed on his tenure of life.

There is no need to say much about that "gate money." It is simply too ridiculous to suppose that our foremost lecturers could not take money enough to pay for the hire of a hall "in any town in Britain" unless they were advertised by Christian Evidencers. If the test is to be payment, Secularism simply takes the cake. How many people, we should like to know, would pay money at the door, even to hear the gentlemen who run the Liverpool Pulpit?

It only remains for us to observe that there is something peculiarly nauseous in the closing sentences of this reviewer. It is positively indecent to take a great man who fought all his lifetime against you, and to pretend that he was on your side without knowing it; and it is doubly indecent when the imbecility is clinched with the dictum of a great Freethinker like Mazzini. If there be a God, it may be true that he is best worshipped by serving Man. But what has this to do with "the Crucified"? We tell the reviewer and his friends that Bradlaugh had no sort of respect for the Jesus Christ of the Gospels, and that he had nothing but contempt for the sentimentalists who claim every good man, even though he be a convinced Atheist, as a sound and "true" Christian. Bradlaugh held aloof from them in his lifetime, and they only dishonor themselves by shedding maudlin tears over his grave. G. W. FOOTE.

MADAME BLAVATSKY.

(Continued from p. 227.)

PROFESSOR COUES gives the following description of Madame Blavatsky as she appeared on her return from Europe: "Except for being immensely obese, in consequence of her gross habits, she was not a particularly ill-favored old witch when I met her in 1884. Remarkably small, pretty hands and feet for such a corporosity, though with long, dirty nails; suspicion of pug in the saucy nose; pale, restless eyes; flossy, yellow hair, tending to kink; Tartar face with high cheek bones, fat chops, and a dewlap, the latter always hid by hand or fan in her photographs; stature medium; weight, perhaps, 250 pounds; harsh, strident voice; conversation profane and witty; temper abominable; odor of tobacco abiding; dress, a sort of a compromise between the robes of a Norma and a robe de nuit. Such is the general impression she made upon me in 1884, when she was about fifty-three."

The same writer goes on to say: "The ingredients of a successful charlatan are: no conscience, some brains, much courage, great industry, the corrosive sublimate of selfishness, vainglorious ambition, vivid imagination, good address, ready resources, monumental mendacity, and a pious, living faith in the love of mankind for being humbugged."

H. P. B. was a born romancer, and delighted in fooling the "flapdoodles," as she called those she swindled and despised. Mabel Collins, who for over a year co-edited Lucifer with her, said: "She taught me one great lesson: I learned from her how foolish, how 'gullible,' how easily flattered human beings are, taken en masse. Her contempt for her kind was on the same gigantic scale as everything else about her, except her marvellously delicate taper fingers. In all else she was a big woman; she had a greater power over the weak and credulous, a greater capacity for making black appear white, a larger waist, a more voracious appetite, a more confirmed passion for tobacco, a more ceaseless and insatiable hatred for those whom she thought to be her enemies, a greater disrespect for les convenances, a worse temper, a greater command of bad language, and a greater contempt for the intelligence of her fellow beings than I had ever supposed possible to be contained in one person."

Her lies were incessant. Thus she wrote in the New York Graphic, November 13, 1874: "When I was sixteen years of age they married me to M. Blavatsky. Fancy! He was seventy-three, and I sixteen." She died at the age of sixty in 1891, and M. Blavatsky survives her. She says she lived with him three years at Tiflis, about 1863. As M. Solovyoff says: "It was always very easy to catch her lying, as she used constantly to forget her own words, assertions, and depositions" (Modern Priestess, p. 110). With this gentleman, who, as her countryman, she said was sacred to her, and who, as a journalist, she was desirous to spread her fame in Russia, she appears to have been particularly unfortunate. Some clumsy tricks made him watchful of phenomena. Bavaji, her Hindu attendant, who knew no Russian, confessed that, at her instigation, he drew for his edification the words in Russian: "Blessed are they that believe, as said the Great Adept." But, omitting some letters, it read: "Blessed are they that lie."* One day her famous "silver bell" was heard, when suddenly something fell beside her on the ground. He says: "I hurried to pick it up, and found in my hands a pretty little piece of silver, delicately worked and strangely shaped. Helena Petrovna changed countenance, and snatched the object from me. I coughed significantly, smiled, and turned the conversation to indifferent matters.

> "Another time I said that I should like to have some of the real essence of roses made in India.
>
> "'I am so sorry,' she said, 'I have none with me. I do not like strong scents in general, and do not keep them. But I will not guarantee that you may not receive some essence of roses from India, such as you speak of, and that very soon.'
>
> "Watching her from this moment, I distinctly saw her open one of the drawers of her table and take something out. Then, some half-hour later, after having walked round me, she very gently and cautiously slipped some little object into my pocket. If I had not watched her every movement, and had not guessed why it was that she kept passing round me, I should probably not have noticed anything.
>
> "However, I immediately produced from my pocket a little flat flask, opened it, smelt, and said: 'This is not essence of roses, Helena Petrovna, but oil of oranges; your "master" has made a mistake.'
>
> "'Eh, devil take it!' she exclaimed, unable to restrain herself."

She even permitted him to discover the Chinese envelopes, in which the elect used to receive the letters of the Mahatmas by "astral post." Taxed with it, he says: "She tried in vain to speak; she could only writhe helplessly in her great arm-chair." Asked to put an end to the comedy, she exclaimed: "But, then, if you think I do nothing but take in all the world, you must despise me!" "Why so?" he replied. "There is deceit and deceit, and there is trickery and trickery! To play the part you play,

* This Bavaji was the Babajee said by Sinnett to have been ten years with the Mahatmas.

Digitized by Google

to make crowds follow you, to interest the learned, to found societies in distant lands, to start an entire movement—good gracious! Why, it is so out of the common that I am enraptured at you against my will. In all my life I have never met so extraordinary a woman as you, and I am sure I shall never meet another." In great excitement she exclaimed: "Yes, you have a very warm heart, and a very cool head; it was not for nothing that we met"; and, after calling Olcott an ass and a blockhead, "If you will only come to my aid, we will astonish the world between us; we shall have everything in our hands."

> "What is one to do," she said, "when in order to rule men it is necessary to deceive them, when in order to persuade them to let themselves be driven where you will you must promise them and show them playthings? Why, suppose my books and the Theosophist had been a thousand times more interesting and more serious, do you imagine I should have had any sort of success anywhere, if behind all that there had not been the 'phenomena'? I should have done simply nothing. I should have long ago starved to death. They would have crushed me, and it would never have even occurred to anyone to think that I too was a living creature, that I too must eat and drink. But I have long, long since learnt to understand these dear people, and their stupidity sometimes affords me unbounded satisfaction. Why, you are 'not satisfied' with my phenomena; but do you know that almost invariably the more simple, the more silly, and the more gross the 'phenomenon,' the more likely it is to succeed? I may tell you such stories about this some day as will split your sides with laughter, indeed they will. The vast majority of people who are reckoned clever by themselves and others are inconceivably silly. If you only knew how many lions and eagles in every quarter of the globe have turned into asses at my whistle, and obediently wagged their great ears in time as I piped the tune!"

J. M. WHEELER.

(To be concluded.)

WHAT IS MEANT BY LAWS OF NATURE?

(Concluded from page 228.)

IT is, we think, rather unfortunate that we have no other term to take the place of "law" as describing the operations of nature. The word is so generally associated with a "lawgiver" that its true meaning, when applied to nature, is misunderstood. The late G. H. Lewes suggested the phrase, "The methods of nature," as that would "express the paths along which the activities of nature travelled to results (phenomena)." The Duke of Argyll, who is, of course, rather orthodox upon this subject, admits, in his Reign of Law, that the word "law," in many cases, means nothing more than "an observed order of facts" (p. 66).

Professor Huxley, in his Essays on Controverted Questions, writes: "A law of nature, in the scientific sense, is the product of a mental operation upon the facts of nature which come under our observation, and has no more existence outside the mind than colour has. . . . . Scientifically speaking, it is the acme of absurdity to talk of a man defying the law of gravitation when he lifts his arm. The general store of energy in the universe working through terrestrial matter is, doubtless, tending to bring the man's arm down; but the particular fraction of that energy which is working through certain of his nervous and muscular organs is tending to drive it up, and, more energy being expended on the arm in the upward than in the downward direction, the arm goes up accordingly" (pp. 252 and 253). The Professor points out with great clearness that law is not a cause. He says: "Law is often inadvertently employed in the sense of cause, just as in common life a man will say that he is compelled by the law to do so and so, when, in point of fact, all he means is that the law orders him to do it, and tells him what will happen if he does not do it. We commonly hear of bodies falling to the ground by reason of the laws of gravitation, whereas that law is simply the record of the fact that, according to all experience, they have so fallen (when free to move), and on the grounds of a reasonable expectation that they will so fall. . . . . The habitual use of the word 'law,' in the sense of an active thing, is almost a mark of pseudo-science; it characterises the writings of those who have appropriated the forms of science without knowing anything of its substance" (pp. 254 and 255).

To make the true meaning of natural law clear, we give the words of Mr. M. J. Savage, who, in his Morals of Evolution, says: "Natural law is simply a phrase that we use to express the relations in which persons, things, forces stand to each other, or the mutual influences which they exert upon each other, by virtue of what they are. It means the constant universal relations between persons, things, and forces. Take, for example, ourselves as members of society. Certain men, women, and children are what they are; and they are together, in certain relations in society. What we mean by the natural law of society, then, are the duties and responsibilities that spring out of these natural and necessary relations. Take it into the region of things to make it clearer. Suppose I have here, in some jar or vessel, the chemical ingredients which, brought together in certain proportions, will result in forming a crystal. What I mean by the natural law of crystallisation is that, if I bring these chemical ingredients together after this fashion, a crystal will always be the result. They stand in such a relation to each other that, being what they are, they must crystallise. They cannot help doing so. . . . . It is a law of my body that, if I am to live, I must keep my body at a certain temperature. It must have food; it must be preserved from hurtful influences of all kinds. The laws of life, in other words, must be obeyed. If I break these laws and become diseased, that is the first step towards death. If I carry the breach of these laws beyond a certain point, death itself ensues, and must ensue. Take it in regard to intelligence; for it holds true in these higher realms of life, just as well as in the lower. If a man is to grow up an intelligent, instructed, educated being, there must be a certain amount of development of his brain; if that fails, he is an idiot. If, after he has become an intelligent being, these laws of the brain are broken, he is insane. There are laws of thought, of study, of the pursuit of intelligence in this department of the world or that; and if a man fails to keep these, his brain as a physical organ may be perfect, but he will be ignorant. There are vast realms of truth and beauty, the threshold of which his foot will never cross. Bring it up into the realm of the moral nature. Precisely the same thing holds true. There are moral laws that a man, if he is to be a moral being, must keep. If he ceases to keep these, he ceases to be a moral being; his moral nature is dead; he is an immoral man" (pp. 165–167).

We presume it will now be seen, even by the most superficial reader, that what is meant by law (when the term is used in its proper sense) is not that it is a command from some being "who rules and regulates the destinies of men," but that it refers to the order of natural operations, the method of cause and effect. Theologians have corrupted the correct signification of this, as they have of many other words; and one of the many useful services now being rendered by science and secular philosophy is that of rescuing language from the misinterpretation so often given to it by theology. The old notion, that events are produced by some power higher than the ordinary law of cause and effect, is being rapidly given up by men of science. The self-potency of nature is becoming more and more recognised as our knowledge of its power increases. There is less inclination to-day than there was to rob nature of those capabilities to which it is justly entitled. As Mr. Moncure D. Conway observes: "What we need is harmony with nature—harmony with its laws, that we may have health; sympathy with its beauty, that we may be pure; obedience to its conditions, that we may command its forces and inspire them with human purpose. In nature is the constancy which is our dependence and our development; in it the potentiality, reason, which is our only source of wisdom; in it the love which attends the living from the cradle to the grave. Ignorance can see it only as chaos in one age, accursed in another; superstition can find but terror in its laws, and hope only in their fancied overthrow by arbitrary thaumaturgy of omnipotence; but wherever the mind of man flowers, nature flowers in response, filling every sense with beauty, giving mind and heart their deeper satisfaction, steadily incarnating every pure ideal."

Among the less informed believers in theology two conceptions of law and nature still obtain. The one is, that the universe was created by a supreme being, who, having made it, set it going, and keeps it in order, like a watchmaker does a watch that he has manufactured. The other conception is that God, having made the world and set it in motion, leaves it to regulate itself by general laws, which he has endowed nature with. The latter view is taken even by some men of science who belong to the old school; they think this idea of Providence enables them to get over the difficulties attending the belief in God's special interference with the operations of nature. Thus they jump at the conclusion that there is a law-maker, and an intelligent producer of life. They further assume that intelligence can only come from intelligence, and that life can only proceed from life. This is about as scientific a statement as that of the man who is reported to have said that he who drives fat oxen must himself be fat. Scientifically, when we speak of life, motion, and intelligence, we do not mean that they are things, any more than the laws are which record their action. What might have existed before, or what may exist beyond nature, it is not the function of science to attempt to determine. The laws of nature are not in any way affected by what may or may not be exterior to nature. At the same time, to us it appears obvious that science, as a foreteller of events, would be impossible if there existed any power outside nature that could interfere with the operations upon which the calculations are based. If God constantly interfered in nature, nothing would be certain; and if the speculations of theology could be verified, science would be impossible.

Digitized by Google

We believe, then, to use Tyndall's phrase, in the "stability of natural law," and we learn that incessant change is the "order" of nature; and as these changes are interminable, so likewise are cause and effect, which are names that record the operations of all existing things.

CHARLES WATTS.

A MISSIONARY DISGRACE.

(From the "New York Post.")

MR. THOMAS G. SHEARMAN made the result of missionary work in Hawaii the subject of some remarks at the last Friday night's prayer-meeting in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. He began by saying that more than a year ago he told Dr. Abbott that, in his opinion, the proceedings in Hawaii reflected great discredit, not only upon the American name generally, but especially upon our American missionaries and the Congregational Church which had sent them there, and seemed generally disposed to sustain the actions of the missionaries' sons, and that, "had Mr. Becker been still alive, I felt perfectly certain that he would long ago have expressed from Plymouth pulpit most emphatic opinions upon this subject; that he would never have allowed a weaker race to be practically enslaved by white Americans—especially Congregationalists and sons of Congregational missionaries—without making a protest which would have been heard all over the land."

Mr. Shearman continued: "I then said in substance that seventy years ago the American Board of Foreign Missions sent a few Congregational missionaries to the Sandwich Islands, who were received by the people with enthusiasm. They did not really have to convert the people, for they were all ready for conversion. The chiefs and the people threw away their idols, and embraced Christianity with all their hearts. So complete was their trust in the missionaries that, practically, all government was placed under missionary control, and the missionaries and their sons or their nephews had ever since had the practical government of the islands.

"What had been the result? They found 130,000 people there, and now they report that there are only 34,000. But of these 34,000 they recently reported that 18,000 were members of the Congregational Churches—a larger proportion of Church members than can be found in any other Protestant country in the world. The missionaries boasted that those natives were better educated, better behaved, and more peaceable, orderly, and religious, in proportion to their numbers, than the people of many parts of the United States. The triumph of religion, and especially of Congregationalism, in Hawaii, was made the subject of endless boasts by missionaries and managers of missions, and was made the ground of appeals to American Christians for fresh subscriptions and aid for missionary work.

"Suddenly their whole tone changed. The missionaries' sons and some returned missionaries vehemently asserted that the native Hawaiians were filthy and ignorant, and a debased, licentious, and idolatrous race, utterly unfit to be trusted with liberty, but must be kept under the control of a firm and unscrupulous, but pious, Congregational despotism.

"Assuming this to be true, then, the result of between fifty and sixty years' unbroken missionary government in these islands has been that the population has been reduced in numbers by three-quarters, and that these three-quarters are as debased, licentious, and brutal as they were when the missionaries began their labors, and that the whole missionary enterprise has been a disgraceful failure.

"Meanwhile, there are some other facts which the missionaries do not mention, but which cannot be disputed. During the fifty years the government of these islands was under missionary influence most of the natives were deprived of their rights in the land, excepting about 27,000 acres, and all the rest was divided among the king, the chiefs, and the families and friends of the missionaries.

"The missionaries' sons and their associates boast that they own four-fifths of all the property of the islands. Nearly all the rest is owned by the descendants of the former chiefs. The great mass of the people own nothing. The missionary government, finding that the natives would not work for less than 25 cents a day, complained of the want of labor, and insisted on the importation of scores of thousands of the scum of the human race, including Chinese and what are called Portuguese, a mongrel race, who never saw Portugal, but who speak something resembling the language of that country. In this manner the missionaries' sons cut down the wages of the native Hawaiians, and compelled them to work on their sugar plantations at such rates as seemed good to their masters.

"Before the missionaries gained control of the islands leprosy was unknown. But with the introduction of strange races leprosy established itself and rapidly increased. An entire island was very properly devoted to the lepers. No Protestant missionary would venture among them. For this I do not blame them, as, no doubt, I should not have had the courage to go myself. But a noble Catholic priest consecrated his life to the service of the lepers, lived among them, baptised them, educated them, and brought some light and happiness into their wretched lives.

"Stung by the contrast of his example, the one remaining missionary, a recognised and paid agent of the American Board, spread broadcast the vilest slanders against Father Damien. He said that Father Damien was dirty. Much good missionaries can do among a wretched and degraded people if they hold themselves aloof from those who are dirty! Did the apostles take care never to touch the dirty hands or sit against the dirty clothes of their early converts? He accused the good father of vile practices. But the vileness was in the Congregational missionary's mouth, not in the Catholic missionary's life; and under threats of exposure and legal punishment the Congregational missionary sneaked out of the accusation. Yet, after he had degraded himself in the eyes of every decent man, he remains, if I am correctly informed, still a well-paid, well-housed, comfortably-cared-for agent of the American Board in Hawaii. Of course, he is an ardent annexationist.

"And now the very same men who by hundreds and thousands have protested with pious indignation against the Southern States for their practical disfranchisement of the Southern negroes, who are, by the confession of their own best men, vastly below the moral standard which the Hawaiian missionaries have, until lately, boasted as the peculiar attribute of the converts, are full of enthusiasm over what, with bitter irony, is called the Hawaiian Republic. A Republic, forsooth, in which no man can vote unless he has property which would be equivalent to the possession of $5,000 in Brooklyn, and in which no one can vote for senator who is not worth $3,000, which is equivalent to $20,000 in Brooklyn.

"But even with this restriction of the suffrage our Republican missionaries are afraid to trust their Republican voters. Accordingly they did not dare to allow the people, under any limitations whatever, to elect the president; but, having got possession of the constitutional convention, they appointed Mr. Dole president, to hold office for six years, and just so much longer as the senate and assembly should fail to agree on a successor; restricting the choice, even then, to such persons as should be agreeable to a majority of the senate, which will be elected by about two hundred of the richest men on the island.

Digitized by Google

"Nor do they stop here. They passed laws, severely punishing anyone who dares to speak disrespectfully of any of their High Mightinesses. Anyone, whether a native or an American, who dares to say that this Republican Government is not Republican, or that any of the missionaries' sons who deign to govern the barbarous Christians of Hawaii are not well fitted for the post, is liable to a long term of imprisonment and a heavy fine.

"And yet, after all, though they have the government and the laws and the courts and the juries all in their own hands, they are afraid to trust any of them, and on the first sign of alarm, and before a blow was struck, they shut up all the courts and proclaimed martial law. And this is our pious Congregational missionary Republic. This is the fruit of seventy years of Congregational teaching and missionary government.

"And now it is proposed to annex this island, with its barbarous, idolatrous, dirty, debased Congregational heathen, Christian idolaters, and the one hundred thousand Mongolians and half-bred Portuguese to boot, and to bring it into our Republic as one of the States of our union to help govern us. Already one branch of Congress has voted to expend $500,000 in beginning to lay a cable for this purpose, which, of course, will involve us in about $3,000,000 more, in addition to that already incurred to enable Hawaiians to plant sugar at a cost to this country of $50,000,000, taken out of the public treasury and put into the pockets of the planters to enable them to employ Mongolians and half-bred Portuguese."

FREE WILL.

ASSERTIONS are ever made by Christians to the effect that we have a free will to believe or disbelieve as we please, and that that is the chief reason why we actually deserve eternal damnation if we do not accept the Gospels as the truth. So that the question of free will is, so to speak, the foundation of Christianity; for, if we have no free will to choose, a just and a good God will not punish us with everlasting torment for rejecting it. If, then, there be no hell, we need no Savior to save us from it, and Christianity is gone. To illustrate their theory, however, the religionists instance our power of reflection and capability of choosing in every-day life.

Now, it will not be denied that we, in common with the lower animals, have a will; without it we could not perform a single conscious action. But is it free? In other words, is there nothing stronger? It is the will which bids me take up my pen and write. But behind the will is the feeling, whether it be ambition, desire for remuneration, or love to my fellow men. It is the will that bids me fetch water, but behind the will is the feeling of thirst. The will bids my tongue to speak, but behind is the desire or necessity, as the case may be, to impart my thoughts to others. The will is not the cause of all causes, but only an effect of a cause. It is not the primary and predominating, but the secondary and executive, force of our mind.

We have the power of reflection. But have you not been out with a dog, in company with a friend, and observed how, as you part with your companion, the animal will remain on the spot for several minutes, looking from one to the other, and finally take his choice, and follow one of you? Is the dog not reflecting? At the time his will is suspended; at last it yields to the greatest influence, and bids his legs carry him in the direction he has decided to take.

It is precisely the same with the will of man. It submits to the strongest influence. For instance, I am sitting in my room reading. I begin to feel fidgety, and the more I try to control my feelings the more my uneasiness increases, and at last I make up my mind to go for a walk. Still I hesitate. There are two contending forces in my mind. One strives to bind me to the book, the other seeks to beckon me out into the free air. Finally the latter, at the moment being the stronger thought, conquers. Having got outside, another mental struggle begins as to which road to take. At first I think of road No. 1, but another influence steps in and reminds me of the fact that it is full of people, and therefore affords an unpleasant walk. Accordingly I select another and more quiet route. But presently I remember that this road is blocked on account of a fire. I walk towards a third direction; but all at once another objection enters my mind. I see a person whom I know standing at the corner; I know that he is a talkative man, I am in a thoughtful mood, and I don't wish to be disturbed nor detained. I stop and consider about another route, when suddenly it begins to rain, which circumstance results in a final turn of mind and prevents me from going altogether.

Thoughts originate like the seeds of a flower. They are formed of nature; appear and disappear. Whence they come and whither they go, we know not. They arise, like bubbles of the sea, linger for a time, struggle and conquer, or submit to others, and the final victor we superficial-mindedly term "the will," although, had the ensuing action been delayed, and the fight been prolonged for another second, perchance a final shock of thought-electricity might have weighed down the scale; then that would have been called "the will," the reasoner would have been judged differently, and the act would have been omitted or have been a different one. And, moreover, it is the grossest violation of logic to say that man has a free will, for "will" is thought, and thought is the man himself. Without it he is a dead lump of flesh, on a level with other "dead" matter. How can the will be free when it is subjected to natural laws in the moral, intellectual, and material spheres, of which we know nothing? To my mind, it is as clear as daylight that it is nothing of the kind, and it is well nigh time that this nonsensical talk about free will ceased.

If the will of man is psychologically not the strongest power, still less has it the supreme control over the mind at the time the character is being moulded. Every Christian knows—although few will admit it—if not steeped in ignorance or entirely spell-bound with the lies of prejudice, that the origin of man's character can be traced back to certain causes—viz., heredity, education, environment, and circumstances in later life; and I shall not here take the trouble to analyse it in its details: partly because the space is valuable, and partly because anyone can select piles of verification thereof for himself, if he will take pains to think and look around.

It is useless to point out men who have risen above their surroundings, and say: "Lo, it can be done!" Perhaps they have had more favorable opportunities; maybe even that they have been furnished by nature with a stronger will. The utterance itself is an admission of the fact that what I have stated is the rule. Rules which always will follow the same order we have accustomed ourselves to consider as laws of nature, and as such they cannot be broken. When I hold up my hand the law of gravitation is not broken, only other forces are in operation as well. When a man here and there rises above his environment or education a "law" is not broken, but other circumstances counteract it. But these circumstances rarely step in.

Now, we are told that, when we reach the age of maturity, a free will is developed, which we are to exercise to discriminate between good and evil. But the same folks who tell us this admit that they continually sin every day, despite that they will not, and St. Paul himself says: "The good which I will, I do not, and the evil which I will not, that I do." Further, if you inquire into the life of the blackest criminal, behind whom the doors of the prison have closed, or whose neck has been stretched by the hangman's rope, you will always find natural causes in his nature, environment, or surroundings that drove him to be what he became.

The process of rejecting Christianity is regarded by Christians as the act of a man who voluntarily stands up to defy a God whom he believes in. A more silly idea cannot be conceived. The process of thinking is no subject of volition at all. The belief that it was has, for centuries, been the cause of much persecution, massacre, and bloodshed. It was the father of the rack, the stake, the thumbscrew, and all the other terrible instruments of the Inquisition. None but the man who has undergone the change of passing from faith to reason can realise what a heartrending and prolonged struggle it is. None but he who has passed from Christianity to scepticism can comprehend how many tears it costs, how many sleepless nights it claims, and how much courage is required, before all the prejudices, which have been implanted into the pliable, juvenile mind, are worn off, before all the fondly-cherished illusions are broken, before all the ghastly fears of eternal torment as a punishment for doubt are expelled, and before all the long-nourished errors are exploded. Bit by bit they go, impelled by the light of reason, or, if you will, the thoughts continually force their way irresistibly into one direction, volition being entirely out of the question. The thinker thinks himself into Freethought, but he cannot think himself out of it again.

Digitized by Google

It is true that some persons pass through the ordeal of scepticism, but return to the old faith; and they will tell you that it was through exercising the will to pray, and that the prayer helped them. This is untrue. It is because prejudice and fear ultimately proved to be stronger than the element of originality, reason, and mental independence. Nay, more; what shall we say about the many millions who are born, live, and die in non-Christian countries, and who never hear, through no fault of their own, of the Christian religion? Are they, too, to be judged according to the Biblical injunction: "He who believeth shall be saved, and he who believeth not shall be damned"? Have they a will of their own to accept or reject Christianity without being introduced to it? What about the little innocent children who die before they are baptised, and before they are capable of believing anything? Will an all-good God turn his back upon them? Are they also to be subjected to eternal damnation? Have we not heard enough of this fiendish and monstrous doctrine to be sick and tired to the very core of our hearts?

J. K. Maagaard.

(To be concluded.)

ACID DROPS.

The Rev. J. Moffat Logan gained a good deal of local notoriety by his debate with Mr. Foote. It was a fantastic debate from one point of view, for Mr. Logan would not discuss whether Jesus Christ did rise from the dead, but only how the Christians came to believe he did. Mr. Logan said he would be a child of folly—that is, a fool—if he discussed the fact of the Resurrection; and we quite agreed with him.

Since that debate Mr. Logan has been holding "popular" meetings, with a certain allowance of discussion, in his chapel. By this means, without knowing it, he is undermining the faith of a good many young people.

Mr. Logan makes a great pretence of fairness, but we are afraid that this quality in his case is but superficial. We remember the satisfied smile upon his face, during the debate, when his followers brutally interrupted Mr. Foote. We also remember some other things that need not be mentioned. And it does not surprise us to learn that Mr. Logan has taken advantage of the Oscar Wilde case to strike an unfair blow at Secularism.

This is what we are informed Mr. Logan said from his pulpit on Sunday, April 8: "Oscar Wilde! . . . . I wonder the fire of Sodom and Gomorrah did not fall and devour him! . . . . There's a specimen of Secular culture! . . . . Only Christianity can keep us moral."

Now we have to remark, first of all, that this is a damnable thing to say about a man who is awaiting his trial. It is a plain statement, though in indirect language, that the man is guilty. Mr. Logan plays the part of judge and jury in anticipation, and almost calls upon God Almighty to execute the sinner.

Only Christianity can make us moral! Well, it takes something more than Christianity to make us just.

Mr. Logan assumes that Oscar Wilde is an Agnostic. Many of his poems, however, display an opposite tendency. We do not say he is a Christian, we only say that we should like to have Mr. Logan's reason for assuming him to be a Freethinker.

But the Marquis of Queensberry is an Agnostic. He was actually excluded from the House of Lords on that account. Mr. Logan should therefore explain whether it was Agnosticism or Christianity that made Lord Queensberry so honorably anxious about the morality of his son.

Oscar Wilde is not yet proved guilty of the charges brought against him. Mr. De Cobain, however, ex-member for Belfast, was found guilty of unnatural offences and sentenced to imprisonment. He was a shining light in Belfast religious circles, and actually held a young men's Bible Class at his own house. Was this man "a specimen of Secular culture"?

Mr. Logan would do well to reflect that most young people in this country first learn of the crime committed by De Cobain from the Bible. Some of the references to it in Scripture are unspeakably disgusting. What an irony! The very book which alone can make children grow up virtuous is the book which too often gives them their first suggestions of beastliness.

Only Christianity can keep us moral! Why the biggest rogues in this country are all Christians. The great "Liberator" fraud was perpetrated by pious scoundrels, with the active assistance of hundreds of Christian ministers in all parts of the kingdom. "Jabez" himself is a Christian.

The Parnellite speaks out on the witch-burning case at Clonmell in a way which the priests will little relish. It asks: "What has Christianity accomplished when cruel superstition can stalk abroad like this, and when a revolting crime can be perpetrated upon a sick woman by those who, by all the laws of God and nature, were most bound to love and cherish her? Are the priests too busy looking after the registration of votes and the collection of Whig Funds to stamp out such barbarous ignorance?" We would tell the Parnellite that Christianity, by its doctrine of possession of devils, distinctly countenances the barbarous ignorance and cruel superstition that led to Bridget Cleary's death.

During the last four years the Roman Catholic Church in the United States has added 2,000 churches to her number, and increased her communicants by 1,243,568. Irish and South German emigration only partly account for this. The Church preaches in the confessional and in public, "Increase and multiply," as a means of eventually attaining to power.

The Rev. Mr. Jessop, a Baptist minister at Mobile, in Alabama, fell to the floor in spasms, while in the midst of his sermon, and died in a few minutes. He had in one pocket bread poisoned with strychnine, to destroy the sparrows in his garden, and in the other sugar with which he cleared his throat during the sermon. By mistake he swallowed the poisoned bread instead of the sugar.

Prince Kropotkin points out in the Times that Jew-baiting is as severe in Russia as ever. Not only are the Jews not allowed to attend the public hospitals, but a recent decree prohibits them resorting to the provinces of Don, Kuban, and Terek to use the mineral waters there.

In the January number of the Theosophist a writer argues that Mrs. Besant is a reincarnation of Hypatia. The similarities in the two characters, it is sagely asserted, are too striking to belong to two different personages. Hypatia was beautiful, and so is Mrs. Besant; Hypatia was eloquent, and so is Mrs. Besant; Hypatia was persecuted by her enemies, and so has been Mrs. Besant; what more, it is triumphantly asked, can be wanted to complete the identification? There is, however, one small hitch that appears to have given a little trouble to the complacent writer. Hypatia was unmarried, while Mrs. Besant, unfortunately, is not. But this is easily and gracefully explained away; for Mrs. Besant, on the same authority, though she allowed herself to be led to the matrimonial altar, and to pronounce the sacred formula, never loved her husband. The lady will surely cry, "Save me from my friends."

H. B. Foulke, who claims that Blavatsky made him her successor, calls W. Q. Judge "an exposed fraud," and says Mrs. Besant has been in delusion and error.

An American paper says: "Mrs. Jessie Timko, who recently threw herself upon a railroad track, and, with a Bible clutched in each hand, called upon God to take her to heaven, has been adjudged insane, and will be taken to an asylum." If orthodoxy be true, and the Christian at death goes to a heaven of bliss, we can't see why the above should be an evidence of insanity. It only shows she was a real believer in the creed.

Ananias has been caught again. A writer in Christian Life reports him as saying the old English Universities were "so slow and bigoted that they never conferred a degree upon a Nonconformist." The writer points out that the Rev. Gwenogfryn Evans, a Unitarian minister, received from the University the honorary degree of M.A. in recognition of his eminent services to Welsh literature. And the Rev. James Martineau, the veteran leader of advanced thought among the Unitarians, received some years back the complimentary degree of D.C.L. from the same University. A long list may be drawn up of eminent Nonconformists whom the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge have delighted to honor."

Digitized by Google

Emory Boyd, in the New York Truthseeker, gives a translation of the first chapter of Genesis, rendering the word Elohim by "the gods." He says: "The Bible is full of polytheism, in spite of the efforts of ancient and modern priests to establish monotheism."

The Bishop of Worcester has found out that the proper method of marking the Easter season is the ancient practice of making offerings to the clergy. The bishops, of course, have no duties towards their poorer brethren, but they are always calling on the laity to shell out.

Bishop Potter has advised young men who would succeed in business to be regular at church. In that way, according to this New York ecclesiastic, they can win the favor of their employers and expect to outstrip, in the race for wealth, those who are irregular at church or regular in absenting themselves. This is a very lofty motive indeed for going to church. It is, moreover, we fancy, very similar to the motives that do animate attendants.

In the Two Worlds Mr. A. F. Colborne trots out "The Strange Story of Mrs. Veal" as a proof of Spiritism. Now this strange story was written by that eminent romancer, Daniel Defoe, as a preface to, and in order to sell, a number of copies of Drelincourt on Death, which the publisher could not get off his hands. One would think bogus stories of apparitions were scarce to fall back on this old stuff, whereas the Spookical Society offers an abundant supply.

Dr. and Mrs. Halten, Christian scientists, have been arrested at Dayton, Ohio, on a charge of manslaughter in connection with the death of Lila Mead, granddaughter of Congressman Honk. They pretended, and the parents believed, that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick."

The Bishop of London has been called upon to uphold the law of God, and prevent the re-marriage of a divorced person which takes place on April 27. The minister of St. Mark's, North Audley-street, refused to perform the ceremony, but the bishop has advised him to lend the church to the Rev. G. H. Smith, who is willing to do so.

The Record of Christian Work (New York) says: "Forty cents was all that the average church member in the United States could spare last year out of his abundance to send the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth! It took 7,862 church members to support one ordained foreign missionary last year!" Yet the heathen are going to hell headlong for want of a chance of rejecting the gospel.

The Baptist Journal, of Cincinnati, says: "For each convert made in the foreign field during the past year it has cost the American Board (Congregational) $290; the Baptist Union, $85; the M. E. Church, $235; the Protestant Episcopal Church, $1,834; and the Presbyterian Board, $278." It is a question if the converts are worth it.

The Truth, of New York, asks: "What is Higher Criticism?" and answers, "Baptised Infidelity."

In 1890 the Legislature of the province of Manitoba, Canada, ordered that no public support should be given to sectarian schools. All the Catholics of Canada have been kicking up a dust ever since, and at length they have induced the Dominion Government to declare that the school law must be modified in favor of Catholic schools. The Catholics, not satisfied with ruling the roost in Quebec, are thus fighting for, and determined to have, the control of education in the entire Dominion. The Manitobians refuse to obey the Dominion order, and an interesting conflict of powers is the result.

Talmage says that three-fourths of the population of heaven are women. Of course he has been there and knows. Our information, derived from an old fetish book, is quite different. That book represents all the angels as males. When the sons of God wanted children, they came to earth for females, and when they did come, children generally followed. This old book says nothing about heaven being made for women, or women for heaven; but it has a significant passage that "there was silence in heaven" for half-an-hour, whence also conclusions may be drawn unfavorable to the contention of Dr. Talmage.

An attempt was made on March 19, at the Baltimore Methodist Conference, to prohibit the use of "individual cups" when sipping, or bibbing, or drinking wine in church. A very heated wrangle occurred, and Dr. Harcourt was prevented by the Methodist "Bishop" who presided from reading medical testimony on the subject, but he said: "There was a time when it was said that everybody should go clean-shaven, like the bishop of this Conference—when there was no dipping of the moustache into the cup, with perhaps tobacco-juice on it; when there was no offensive suffering from the grip after having left the handkerchief at home. (Groans.) I tell you, Mr. President, that from these causes, at the table of the Lord and at his communion, I have administered slops!" A regular tumult now ensued, Dr. Harcourt was cautioned, and at last he said he would refrain on account of the presence of ladies from giving further unpleasant facts. A non-committal resolution was finally passed.—Secular Thought.

"Peter Lombard" tells in the Church Times how it was the custom in the good old days, in the Cathedral of Toulouse, to whip a Jew on Good Friday round the interior of the building. Of course Mrs. Glasse's principle had to be carried out, "First catch your Jew," and every poor Israelite made haste to hide himself from the searchers. The hunt for a victim, therefore, must have been on one side an exhibition of uproarious savagery, on the other of terror and despair.

The Rev. James Clark writes a tract to show that vegetarianism is taught in the Bible. Will he tell us what God wanted with the holocausts of burnt-offerings of oxen, rams, lambs, and does, whose sacrifices were required in the Bible? We should also like to know if Jesus took vegetarian lamb at Passover, and what he meant by saying to Peter from heaven, "Rise, Peter, kill and eat."

The tender sensibilities of sweet Jesus for animal life are hardly displayed in the last chapter of John. Jesus, after his resurrection, and presumably in his glorified body, asks his disciples, "Children, have ye any meat?" They answered him, No." He causes a miraculous draught of great fishes, a hundred and fifty and three; and when the disciples came to him they saw a fire of coals there and fish laid thereon, in true savage-Indian style. After eating, they left the fish to fry further, and went on talking of love and feeding sheep.

An enterprising Italian purveyor advertises "Sardines from the Lake of Galilee." Perhaps they are some of the original miraculous draught of fishes.

No wonder Italy is poor. It has 77,128 priests, not to mention monks and nuns—also, for the most part, non-producers—who bring the number up to 100,000. As the intelligent Italians of the towns are Freethinkers, the priests have for the most part to get their living out of the ignorant peasant. The majority of Italian priests come from South Italy. Piedmont, with 3,700,000 inhabitants, has only 6,842 priests. Sicily has no fewer than 8,415.

Since Mormonism has been compelled to resign its Bible institution of polygamy it has lost its chief attraction, and the Mormon Church is now said to be in debt to upwards of one million dollars. The "tithes" are the Church's only source of revenue, and orthodox Christians are looking forward to the sale of the big temple in the sweet by and bye.

Our readers will remember what a fuss was made because Mr. Foote branded Price Hughes's story of the converted Atheist Shoemaker as "a lie." The man of God put on airs of dignity, and declined even the arbitration of a Committee of Honor. No one, he said in substance, has the right to question my veracity; and on this paltry plea, such as every thief in the dock puts in when he pleads "Not Guilty," the man of God evaded the full measure of his retribution. He had the discretion, though, to discontinue the sale of his lying story, which is no longer to be obtained for love or money. And as he pretended that the story of "Herbert's" conversion was powerful in the saving of souls, the withdrawal of the book is an admission that Hughes doesn't care whether souls are saved or not, or else that he knows the story is false and wants to let it die out of the public recollection.

Considering this man of God's objection to any doubt being thrown upon his veracity, it is amusing to open the Methodist Times and read what he has to say about the statement in the New Age that he will not accept a certain secretaryship unless he has Dr. Lunn for his colleague. "It is an absolute falsehood," cries Mr. Hughes. He complains that the metropolitan press is constantly printing "mischievous falsehoods" about him, that these falsehoods are dictated by "vicious spite," and that they are "not really believed even by the writers." And the worst of it is, as Moody said—though it was said before him—that "a lie rushes round the world before the contradicting truth has time to put its shoes on."

This language shows how much real sincerity there was in Hughes's evading his responsibility because Mr. Foote called his story "a lie." He employs the very same word himself, and employs it in reference to a fellow Christian.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Holyoake, who came to Hughes's rescue, and without whom he would have been absolutely lost, stated that the man who used the word "lie" in America would probably be shot at sight. Mr. Holyoake has also expressed his high opinion of Colonel Ingersoll, not only as an orator, but as a gentleman. Well, what does Colonel Ingersoll say about the story that he funked in a storm on board the "Servia"? He calls it "an orthodox lie." How shocking! Mr. Holyoake should send the Colonel a letter of admonition, and would do well to get it endorsed by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

Does the Daily Chronicle, like the Hindus, believe in the power of ascetic austerities to move God? Reviewing the Rev. E. J. Newell's History of the Welsh Church, it mentions how Kentigern, at St. Asaph, would recite the Psalms standing naked in cold water, even in time of frost. Illtyd, at Llanwit, bathed at midnight before matins, staying in the cold water as long as it took him to say the Lord's Prayer thrice. The Irish monks went further. One would sleep with corpses and hang himself up on sickles placed under his armpits; another would keep a stone in his mouth during the whole of Lent; a third mixed his bread with sand; and a female saint, named Ite, let a stag-beetle eat away her side. St. Patrick himself is related by Tirechan to have fasted for forty days and forty nights on Cruachan Aigle.

The Chronicle says on this: "All highly irrational, of course, to a solid, sensible, English prelate in his palace; but somehow these devotees gained a spiritual power which is sorely needed in our flabby age." To suppose these are the means of gaining spiritual power is worthy of a Theosophist.

A young Anglo-Indian lady, Miss Oliva Francis, aged 23, has formally renounced Christianity and become a Muslim, adopting the Islamic name of Habiba, at Mozuffurpore, India.

'Rev." Henry Powers addressed his Unitarian brethren, the other day, on "What do we Really Know about Jesus?" This is easy—simply nothing.

Mr. Joseph Dyson, the Labor representative on the Huddersfield School Board, seems very familiar with God's intentions. At the Fields Congregational Chapel, P.S.A., he said, "God never intended that there should be so much poverty," etc. Now, a truly pious Theist would hold that God intended whatever is, and take care he did not thwart these intentions, as, we are glad to say, Mr. Dyson wishes people to do.

Jesus Christ, it is said, washed his disciples' feet, and Simon Peter objected to the performance. Perhaps his feet wouldn't bear inspection.

Like another Jesus Christ, the Emperor of Austria washes the feet of twelve poor old men during "Holy Week." These old men are carefully selected, and no doubt their pedal extremities are well attended to before the Emperor goes to work upon them. The water is carried by a priest in a golden basin. After this ceremony, which is witnessed by a crowded Court, the Emperor places round each old man's neck a chain, to which is attached a little bag containing thirty pieces of silver—the number of coins received by Judas for "selling" his master. Then the twelve old men go home and have a good feed, which is sent on before them, and is some consolation for having their feet messed about in public.

Japan is on the winning side in the present quarrel with China, and the Christian proselytisers are naturally trying to convert the upper dog in the fight. The Bible and Tract Societies, aided by private donors, are distributing 12,000 New Testaments amongst the Japanese soldiers at Hiroshima, and twenty-six special missionaries are at work there. An urgent appeal is made in England for £200 at once, and one of the religious journals in this country hopes the appeal will be promptly responded to, as the "authorities" over there are watching to see "whether Christianity or Buddhism is doing more in the interests of higher morality during the present war." In other words, there is a brisk competition between rival religions, and the Christians are asked to back their own side. Such is the "higher morality" of this business.

Northern Gossip, of Newcastle, in its "Dramatic Notes," gives some attention to the performance of a Christian Evidence lecturer at the Olympia, whom "the Sightseer" says has "a marked genius for representing lunacy," and is unrivalled "for speaking bad English and sending his fellow creatures to hell." This is the fellow who wrote to Mr. Holyoake concerning the Atheist Shoemaker.

Buena, Vista, Ga., March 14.—While C. S. Crawford, an Atheist, was denouncing God and the Bible yesterday, lightning struck his house. Several members of the household were stunned!—Buffalo Courier.

Here is another case of "bad marksmanship," as Colonel Ingersoll said when a bolt of lightning struck the Y.M.C.A.'s office and destroyed it, adjoining the Colonel's office in Washington, D.C., and did not injure his office in the least.—Freethought Magazine.

Christians, who boast that their religion abolished the old gladiatorial shows, should explain why it has not abolished the Spanish bull-fights. Men went into the arena for the most part of their own free will, but the bulls are unwilling combatants, and are literally butchered to make a holiday. In this respect, a bull-fight is worse than a gladiatorial show.

There are people silly enough to imagine that cruelty fosters courage. This is a great mistake. Cruelty is more often allied with cowardice. When, at a bull-fight in Barcelona last Sunday afternoon, the third bull jumped over the barriers, the whole crowd was thrown into a panic. One of the civil guards shot the bull dead, and the bullet, passing through its body, also killed a spectator; in which accident there is a sort of poetical justice.

A VISIT TO DARWIN.

Professor Haeckel has given the following charming description of Darwin and his home surroundings in his later years:—

"In Darwin's own carriage, which he had thoughtfully sent for my convenience to the railway station, I drove, one sunny morning in October, through the graceful, hilly landscape of Kent, that, with the chequered foliage of its woods, with its stretches of purple heath, yellow broom, and evergreen oaks, was arrayed in its fairest autumnal dress. As the carriage drew up in front of Darwin's pleasant country house, clad in a vesture of ivy and embowered in elms, there stepped out to meet me from the shady porch, overgrown with creeping plants, the great naturalist himself; a tall and venerable figure, with the broad shoulders of an Atlas supporting a world of thought; his Jupiter-like forehead highly and broadly arched, as in the case of Goethe, and deeply furrowed with the plough of mental labor; his kindly, mild eyes looking forth under the shadow of prominent brows; his amiable mouth surrounded by a copious silver-white beard. The cordial prepossessing expression of the whole face, the gentle, mild voice, the slow, deliberate utterance, the natural and naive train of ideas which marked his conversation, captivated my whole heart in the first hour of our meeting, just as his great work had formerly, on my first reading it, taken my whole understanding by storm. I fancied a lofty world sage out of Hellenic antiquity—a Socrates or Aristotle—stood before me."

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

May 5, Hall of Science, London; 12, Camberwell; 19, Bradford; 26, Liverpool.

June 2, N.S.S. Conference; 9, Glasgow; 16, Edinburgh; 23, Manchester; 30, Sheffield.

July 7, South Shields; 14, Bristol.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York in August, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

Arrangements are being made for him to speak in Derby and Stockton-on-Tees during the weeks following his being at Manchester and South Shields. Dundee should be visited when he lectures in Glasgow and Edinburgh.

The Republic of Man is the outcome of the logic of history; and to foresee that Republic, to begin to set in order, to live it beforehand, is the highest object of life, and the surest passport to all the heaven there can be on this earth or elsewhere.—T. B. Wakeman.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, April 21, Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street, Glasgow:—11.30, "The Romance of the Resurrection"; 2.30, "New Light on the Old Book"; 6.30, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?"

April 28, Sunderland.

May 8 and 9, debate at Derby with Mr. Lee (C.E.S.).

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—April 21, m. Walworth Radical Club, e. Hall of Science, London; 28, Hall of Science, London. May 5, Glasgow; 6, 7, 8, and 9, debate at Glasgow with Dr. Jamieson; 12, Dundee; 19, Camberwell; 26, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

J. T. (Bristol).—It is impossible to insert such an article while the case is sub judice. We hope our comment in "Acid Drops" will meet with your approval.

E. Shedley.—(1) The "Goddess of Reason" was not a prostitute, and she was not naked. These are Christian inventions. She was a respectable woman, and she was decently clothed. Nor was she worshipped. She was only an emblematic figure. For our part, however, we would sooner worship a beautiful woman than an ugly old god. (2) Undoubtedly there are traces of sexual mutilation in the Bible—amongst them the passages to which you refer. (3) Christians don't know that witchcraft is a Bible doctrine simply because they don't read the Bible. We have often dealt with the subject in this journal.

J. Hughes.—Thanks.

F. Shepherd.—By no means without merit, but hardly up to our mark.

E. L. Garbett.—Such a discussion is more fit for a Christian than for a Freethought journal. We inserted Father Ignatius's letter in common fairness, because he had been mentioned in our paragraph to which he replied.

A. Anderson.—All right. Thanks.

W. O. Hawes.—Received. Next week.

A. Hindley.—We have not forgotten it. We took it as the subject of a Sunday morning lecture at the Hall of Science some months ago, but we have not yet found time to write upon it adequately in the Freethinker.

S. Small.—Thanks. Next week.

P. Shaughnessy.—Shall appear.

Papers Received.—Northern Gossip—Crescent—Islamic World—Christian Life—Freethought Magazine—Two Worlds—Chatham Observer—Church Reformer—Progressive Thinker—Liberator—Echo—Freidenker—Fur Unser Jugend—Monist—Open Court—Truthseeker—Blyth News—Twentieth Century—Liberty—Isle of Man Times.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

I announced in last week's Freethinker that the sum of £600 was required during the present month of April, in order to clear off, at a greatly-reduced figure, the mortgage upon the London Hall of Science.

I appealed to the Secular party to provide this amount, either by taking shares in the National Secular Hall Society, Limited, or by giving donations which will be invested in shares to be held by the N.S.S. Executive, or in the name of any person who may be indicated by the donor.

Probably in consequence of the holidays, the response up to the time of going to press has been extremely moderate. The remittances that have reached me will therefore be held over for acknowledgment until next week, when I hope I shall be able to publish an encouraging list.

One or two friends, who may do something handsome, are waiting to see what the general body of Secularists are going to do before coming to a definite decision.

A subscriber, who sends me a cheque for £1, expresses a hope that 1,000 others will send the same amount.

Perhaps there are not a thousand of my readers who can afford to give as much immediately. But a great many can do something, and I beg them to do it at once. Any sum, however small, will be acceptable.

My own subscription will amount to (say) £5, and there should be a hundred friends who can cover that.

If the Secular party in general, and the London Secularists in particular, do not want good headquarters, and are indifferent about a worthy memorial to Charles Bradlaugh, I must wash my hands of this affair, and go to work in another direction. It would be far more profitable to me to take life a little easier, and to attend to my own affairs, which have suffered from my devotion to the interests of the Society.

In any case I am resolved that this effort shall not be wasted. Shares will not be allotted unless the response is adequate, and donations will all be returned to the subscribers if there is not enough to meet the emergency. This will be a satisfaction to those who, like myself, have put down their mite at a venture.

I now wait to see what the Secular party will do.

G. W. FOOTE.

(Chairman, Board of Directors, National Secular Hall Society, Limited.)
(President, National Secular Society.)

SUGAR PLUMS.

There was a surprisingly good Easter Sunday audience at the London Hall of Science. Mr. Foote's lecture on "The Romance of the Resurrection" was followed with profound attention, and very warmly applauded, especially at the close, when the cheering amounted to an ovation. Mr. James Rowney, who makes a first-rate chairman, strongly invited questions and discussion; but the invitation met with no response, although one clerical gentleman had been industriously taking notes in the gallery.

Mr. Foote lectures to-day (April 21) at Glasgow, and the following Sunday at Sunderland. It was his intention to take a little rest and change during the interval, but he finds himself obliged to return to London on Monday to attend to important business.

Mr. Watts occupies the London Hall of Science platform to-day (April 21), and will doubtless be welcomed by a capital audience after his absence in the country. His subject is an interesting one, and he himself is always interesting.

Easter Monday's Pall Mall Gazette contained a letter from Mr. Mortimer Granville, pointing out that the "hot cross bun" has really nothing to do with Christianity, the "cross" being "a symbol of the faith which existed long before Judaism." Mr. Granville also points out that Easter is a very ancient festival, and has nothing whatever to do with the Resurrection. Of course this information is no novelty to the readers of the Freethinker. We only mention Mr. Granville's letter to show how scepticism is invading the daily press.

Mr. W. Fraser Rae has unearthed a fresh "Junius" letter from the London Evening Post for August 24, 1773. It contains a caustic attack on priestcraft, and refers to the clergy as "that immaculate class" who receive such a "scanty allowance of tithes, which they possess in lieu of that 'daily bread' for which the most devout among them so fervently pray." With respect to their character, he asks: "To what regions of the habitable globe shall we go to find a set of men so detestable as our clergy, for their pride, haughtiness, covetousness, voluptuousness, indolence, and self-conceit?" "Such are the men," he continues, "who claim the distinguished name of Ministers of the Gospel of Christ; and take upon them to direct us in our way to heaven, in order to get from us the fruits of our labor on earth; but who, instead of having rendered any real service to mankind, have been a plague to human society from generation to generation." Those who would like to see the rest of this letter will find it in last week's Athenæum.

Digitized by Google

In Turin has recently been published some letters from Cavour in 1857 calling Mazzini "an infamous conspirator who has become the regular head of a band of murderers." Thirty years later the Italian Parliament decreed that a monument should be erected to Mazzini, and King Humbert gave one hundred thousand lire towards it. The "head of a band of murderers" has become recognised as a noble-minded patriot.

Captain Otto Thomsen sends us his Swedish translation to Colonel Ingersoll's lecture on "The Old and the New Religion." We hope it will have a good circulation, for it is well calculated to spread Freethought wherever it is read.

Soon after this number of the Freethinker goes to press Mr. Foote will be debating at New Brompton, Kent, with the Rev. A. J. Waldron. This gentleman, in a recent lecture at New Brompton, is reported in the local News to have said that "Mr. Foote had stated that he (Mr. Waldron) was the fairest and frankest opponent he had had to deal with." No doubt Mr. Waldron is reported inaccurately. Mr. Foote cordially admits the fairness and frankness displayed in the negotiations for the debate by Mr. Waldron, but he found perfect fairness and frankness years ago in Dr. A. J. Harrison and Dr. James McCann. There are gentlemen on the Christian side, though unfortunately Freethinkers see too much of the other sort.

On Sunday, the 14th inst., the discussion class of the Glasgow Branch of the N.S.S. held their annual social meeting. Considering the early hour (12 a.m.) at which the proceedings began, there was a good attendance. After a short address by Mr. W. Gilmour anent the work of the class, a varied musical program was submitted. Messrs. Turnbull and Gilmour rendered some violin duets in a tasteful manner, followed by songs from Miss Reid and Mr. Crawford, which were much appreciated. After tea was served the second part of the program was gone through, and the proceedings terminated by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

Mr. Symes, in reprinting "Some Little-Known Freethinkers," says: "I am right glad my friend Wheeler is disinterring some of the obscure heroes of our movement. What a book a record of them would make! The heroes who do battle in private, with no public applause or notoriety to encourage them, are the greatest and truest heroes in most cases." Mr. Wheeler will continue these articles shortly. He has recently been engaged on a new pamphlet dealing with Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

Mrs. Katie Kelum Smith, Miss Nettie Olds, and Mrs. Barker, of the Oregon Secular Union, have established Freethought Churches, with large Sunday-schools, with kindergarten classes, in Portland, Forest Grove, and McMillville.

The Freethought Magazine gives three portraits in its April number. As frontispiece appears Mr. C. C. Moore, editor of the Blue Grass Blade, who was threatened with a prosecution for blasphemy. The other portraits are of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who writes on "The Woman's Bible Revised by Woman," and of Miss Mary Proctor, daughter of the late Richard A. Proctor, who follows her father's work in popularising astronomy.

The Camberwell Branch held its quarterly general meeting on Sunday, and decided to hold such a meeting once a year in future, in October. Mr. P. Sabine was elected president, and Mr. Egan vice-president. Other officers remain as before. After the meeting came a tea and soiree, which was attended by Secularists from distant parts of London.

The Bristol Branch has appointed a strong committee to look after the arrangements for the N.S.S. Conference on Whit-Sunday. The membership of this Branch is increasing, the accessories consisting principally of young men and women who are sick and tired of Christianity. It has been decided to carry on a Sunday evening open-air propaganda in Eastville Park during the summer.

Mr. Wheeler's paper on "Brutal Atheists" has been reprinted from our columns into the Independent Pulpit of Waco, Texas, and also into the Liberator of Melbourne.

A student at Beuchtel College attended a revival effort, and the preacher took it upon himself to show how inadequate everything short of orthodox religion is in times of trouble and emergency. It was shortly after the "Servia" came so near going down. He said that "Bob" Ingersoll was aboard her in that hour of perilous extremity, and that he fell on his knees and implored God to save him. The student thought the story improbable, and wrote to the great infidel about it, receiving the following reply:—"Dear Sir,—I was not on the 'Servia.' I have not crossed the ocean in twelve years, and the whole story is an orthodox lie.—Yours truly, ROBERT G. INGERSOLL."

THE DYING INFIDEL.

ANYONE who walks through the ethnographic gallery of the British Museum, or any similar institution, will notice how frequent a feature in the collections illustrating the manners and customs of savage life are masks. These masks are to represent bogies—gods or devils; for, philosophically and ethnographically, as well as etymologically, bogies, gods, and devils are of the same species. The earliest gods are all ugly devils. The uglier the bogies, and the more hideous the masks used to represent them, the better, for they are used by the medicine men to frighten away the profane from penetrating the secrets of the godly. They have only a faint semblance to humanity; for the more horrible and unnatural the mask the better it fulfils its purpose.

A similar dreadful bogie stalks through the pages of religious magazines, pious tracts, pulpit sermons, and Sunday-school stories. He also occasionally turns up in goody-goody novels. It is the horrid "infidel." The "infidel" is unlike any being on earth. He is an impossible villain, ready to sharpen a knife on his mother's grave to cut his father's throat, and revels in the wildest rascality; or else a maundering imbecile or nincompoop like Paul Negent, Materialist. Such beings were never met in real life. They are masks to frighten people from thinking for themselves in religion.

If the living "infidel" is strange, the dying infidel is a still greater wonder. The Atheist is terrified by a God whose existence he does not believe in. The unbeliever cries out for mercy, sees hell before him, and rends the sky with shrieks of despair. To those who know what infidel death-beds really are, such bugaboos are as impudent impostures as the painted devils of the savage medicine man.

A pair of pictures, well known in all Catholic countries, represent the imaginary death-beds of saint and sinner. The former, attended by his family, the priest, and all signs of religion, clasps a crucifix and looks ceilingwards, where angels are floating, and the Holy Family, in gorgeously colored garments, beam down benignantly. The "infidel," writhing on his bed, turns from priest and crucifix and gazes fondly at a girl's picture held before him by a devil with horns and tail. Other demons are in attendance, and Satan, surrounded by the flames of hell, is prepared to give the sinner a warm reception.

The wide circulation of these pictures shows they are excellent weapons in the hands of the priests. The Protestants are giving up such pictures, and here is our old friend, the Christian Herald and Signs of the Times, on which we relied for a continuance of these stories, actually, in its issue for March 28, sending an infidel off to hell without first making him shriek with despair, or having any foretaste of the horrors of his final doom. It will be a thousand pities if, after all, we lose our old friend, the dying infidel. We like these stories. They show what a sickly, debilitated thing religion is, and how, at bottom, it depends on fear. A man in vigorous health and robust intellect becomes a sceptic. In sickness, when the physical powers are declining, he sees what he could never discover when in health. What better illustration could we have that faith depends on malady, and that, as Pascal said, "sickness is the natural state of a Christian." TOLANDUS.

J. K. Fowler, in his Recollections of Old Country Life, tells a story of an aspirant to holy orders who was plucked at college in divinity. On being asked, "Who was the mediator between God and man?" he replied at once, with much complacency, "The Archbishop of Canterbury."

Digitized by Google

THE WOMEN OF THE BIBLE.

Dr. Parkhurst has been saying: "The intention of Scripture (concerning women) is clear, also, from the method in which it handles representatives of the womanly sex. Those women upon whom it put the stamp of divine distinction and approval are women, with scarcely an exception, whose womanhood is realised to be a pervasive ingredient, entering into all their capacities, faculties, experiences, and activities."

To this Ellen Battelle Dietrick retorts in the Twentieth Century: "Wonderful! wonderful! Now, here I, a poor, weak female being, have been grinding away in the study of the Scriptures for thirty-five years (having begun when I was twelve), and I have never been able even to guess what women of the Bible do have 'the stamp of divine distinction and approval.' . . . ."

She looks them over a little, continuing: "I have always found that one of the most important duties of a human being is the duty of doubting. First let us consider Sarah, a woman who does seem to bear a special stamp of Scriptural distinction, for we are told by the Scriptures that God himself commanded Abraham, the husband, to render unquestioning obedience to Sarah, the wife (Genesis xxi. 12). What evidence of intrinsic superiority does Sarah present in contrast with Abraham? I confess I can discern not a jot or tittle of superior fineness of texture, or of superior refinement of organisation, in either of that precious pair; and yet there is no room to doubt the 'pervasive ingredient' of Sarah's womanhood, any more than of Abraham's manhood. Speaking dispassionately, I should pronounce their moral fibre pretty much of a muchness.

"Then take Rebekah, another of Dr. Parkhurst's heroines. Where is there any proof of her 'intrinsic superiority'? Or Rachel—where is her moral superiority? She seemed to find thieving and lying quite as easy as Jacob did cheating. Or reflect upon the character of Deborah, a woman upon whom the Scriptures undoubtedly put the stamp of divine distinction and approval, for they tell us that she was an inspired prophetess, speaking authoritatively as to the Lord's commands. Was Deborah less ready to lead her troops to battle than Barak? What peculiarity of moral power, of tenderness, gentleness, or 'intrinsic superiority' of womanly fibre do we find in that Great Mother of Israel? Read her war-song—the poem composed when intoxicated with the sight of the blood of her dead enemies. Who is that other womanly woman whom she pronounces 'Blessed above all women'? It is Jael; and here is the reason why Jael is exalted in that Scriptural song: 'She put her hand to the nail, and her right hand to the workman's hammer; and with the hammer she smote Sisera; she smote off his head when she had pierced and stricken through his temples. At her feet he bowed, he fell, he laid down; where he bowed, there he fell down dead. The mother of Sisera looked out at a window and cried through the lattice, "Why is his chariot so long in coming?"' And the womanly Deborah exults, 'So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord.'

"Then there is Ruth, the gentle Ruth, whose song is sung by sweet choristers in all our modern churches. Does Dr. Parkhurst mean to intimate that he considers Ruth an example in morality for young women of the present day? In what does her intrinsic superiority over man's refinement consist? How does the womanly fibre of Ruth surpass that of those New York sisters of hers whom Dr. Parkhurst has just scattered? Ruth stood high in Scriptural times, however.

"Another Scriptural favorite is Esther. We are told in these days that Esther is womanly par excellence, for the reason that she submitted to the will of her uncle, Mordecai, who made her one of the inmates of a harem, with beneficial results to the Jews. Esther used her power to defeat the man who contemplated the death of her uncle, and had him put to death. On the next day, after five hundred of the dead man's followers and his ten sons had been murdered in cold blood, the king asked the womanly Esther what further he could do to please her, and she replied: 'Let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to-morrow, also, according unto this day's decree (to bring the slain into the palace), and let Haman's ten sons be hanged upon the gallows.'

"Now, as we review those 'womanly' women of the Old Testament, does it not become very clear that if women have now developed a higher morality, a gentler, sweeter spirit than men, it is indubitably not due to any intrinsic superiority at the outset? I find this conclusion very encouraging to men, for it is evident that, with a little perseverance, they may attain to every present moral excellence that they find admirable in women."

"SLUDGE THE MEDIUM."

Mr. Frederick Greenwood, in his personal recollections written for the Realm, tells the following story: "Everybody who lives with books has heard that Robert Browning's 'Sludge the Medium' reflected upon Home; and most people have also heard that the celebrated creature succeeded in bringing Mrs. Browning under his influence completely. But the trick that undeceived her (we must suppose) is not so well known. It may have got into print, but, if so, I for one have never seen it, and tell the story as it was told by Browning himself. Home had been about the Browning's a good deal; knew many people known to them; was in his tea-party way an agreeable sort of person; and there were séances here and séances there; 'and,' said the poet, casting a vague look about the room to express his bewilderment, 'I don't know how it was, I did my best, but little by little he gained her over to believing in him; how much to my distress, imagine?' After a while Home found a yet more excellent way of working on the poor lady's mind. She had lost a little child by death, and, her own wishes running out to embrace the promise, he began to hint that some day he would bring the little one's spirit into her presence. But he was slow in performing this promise—naturally; for otherwise he would have lost the advantage of an excited expectation, often stimulated and as often baffled. At last an evening was named when the mother's yearning should be satisfied. In the customary way, light was shut out of the room when the three sat down, and the usual rappings, and questionings, and invocations went on for a time, and then—then the child's spirit was to appear. And sure enough there did arise above the edge of the table something that was whiter than the dark, that seemed to have a motion of its own and the luminousness of a living thing, and that might veritably be what poor Mrs. Browning fancied it. But, conscious of her trembling state of mind, her husband was in another guess sort of passion. 'I suddenly sprang up, dashed my arm across the table, and took hold of—what do you think? The scoundrel's obscene foot!—naked!' The flaming anger in which Browning finished the story—after so many years, too—left no doubt about what happened next to the celebrated medium—Home. He was instantly and literally kicked out of the house, his shoe and stocking after him no doubt."

Greek Atheists.

Thales and the other Ionics are, as Hylo-zoists, nothing but Atheists; while to call the Eleatus and Heraclitus pantheists is tantamount for all that to an admission, as their doctrines were, that they were Atheists. Empedocles was no better. Democritus could point to the superhuman powers he believed in, as it were, in the air; but still a nature built up of atoms was his god. Then Anaxagoras, with the principal Sophists, even Socrates himself, had been publicly arraigned as Atheists. Diagoras, in the time of Aristotle, became an Atheist in consequence of a real or supposed wrong unretributed by the gods, and was known and named, and is still familiar to us in our books, as Diagoras the Atheist. Aristotle himself hardly escaped a similar imputation; which, besides, his own school in the end would only have justified; for almost every member of it, at least in the second generation, gave more and more breadth to what naturalistic doctrine had taken birth in it. Aristoxenus, for example, held that "the soul was but a certain tension or intension of the body itself, like what is called music on the part of string cords." While Dicæarchus, another Aristotelian, declared the soul to be "only an idle name, and nothing but the body, which one, single and simple, acts and feels by organisation of nature."—Dr. J. H. Stirling, "Philosophy and Theology," pp. 219–220.

Obituary.

Professor George von Gizycki, one of the most prominent leaders of the Ethical Culture movement in Germany, died from influenza in Berlin last month.

Mr. W. F. Jamieson, one of the veteran American Freethought advocates, has lost his wife, with whom he had lived nearly forty years.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

An interview with Mr. John Davidson, whose Ballads and Poems were recently noticed, appears in the New York Bookman. Mr. Davidson was born at Barrhead, Renfrewshire, April 11, 1857. He became a pupil teacher, and came to London in 1890. Asked if any one has a right to claim that he "discovered" him, he said: "Well, no. I discovered myself; but I may say that I have never met a more sympathetic and appreciative man than Mr. Grant Allen. He has an open mind for everything new, and does not, like some critics, keep back his kind words till an author no longer requires them."

* * *

We are pleased to notice in De Dageraad that the works of Spinoza are very appropriately published in Dutch, edited by Dr. J. P. N. Land, who has already brought out an edition of the great Pantheist philosopher's Latin works, in conjunction with J. van Vloten.

* * *

A German translation of Giordano Bruno's Io Spaccio della Bestia Trionfante has been published at Brunswick, edited by Dr. L. Kuhlenbeck.

* * *

The following story is cited from a book on Rural Bengal: "In a Mussulman village, whose inhabitants nearly all made a living as pedlars, there was faction. The leader of one faction was given to the use of ganja, an intoxicating drug. So the leaders of the other faction decided to lay a trap for him. They called a meeting of the village together, and said: 'Let us all become very holy. Let us all sign a covenant that we will keep the Koran, and use no intoxicating drugs.' They hoped that the ganja-eater would refuse to sign, and lose influence in the village. But he met them on their ground, and said: 'I am ready to sign, but let us, in our covenant, include the whole Koran, and not a part only. Let us enter a clause that we will take no interest on money.' 'But that is what we live by; how can we do that?' said the others. 'I can't help that. It is forbidden by the Koran, as well as the use of intoxicating drugs,' said he. So there was a good deal of discussion and bargaining, and, as a result, a covenant was drawn up, which contained no mention of intoxicating drugs or of interest on money, and which all were able cheerfully to sign." These Mohammedans used the Koran pretty much as Christians use the Bible. Everywhere we find that religionists, in the words of Butler,

> Compound for sins they are inclined to
> By damning those they have no mind to.

* * *

Appropriately to the Easter season comes Our Sun God; or, Christianity before Christ, written and published by Mr. J. D. Parsons, 7 Crawshay-road, S.E. (3s. 6d.). The work is announced as the first of a contemplated series of six, each to be complete in itself. We shall give Mr. Parsons's work a fuller examination shortly.

* * *

The Norwegian author and Freethinker, Kristofer Janson, has published four new Freethought lectures, which are said to be among the best extant. Freethought literature is certainly needed in both Norway and Denmark, and we hope that Mr. Janson's latest book will have a sale equal to his other works—but not as a certain one which was bought up, plates and all, by the pious Danish Government, so that it should not destroy the innocence of the Danish people.

* * *

Mr. F. Espinasse, who has a life of Voltaire in the "Great Writers" series, has prepared a life of Renan which is announced as "in the press." It is said that he will lay particular emphasis upon Renan's love of truth.

* * *

The Daily Chronicle, in noticing Gain or Loss by the Rev. Bernard J. Snell, of Brixton, cites the following as an instance of how far Congregationalists have got: "I do not consider that I am bound, as minister of Christ, to defend Abram's cruel treatment of Hagar, the duplicity of Jacob, or the treachery of Jael; it is not my duty to apologise for the sins of the 'man after God's own heart'; I do not hold a brief for Elisha, who called out bears to devour the children who gave him a nickname; I have nothing to say in favor of the making of a woman from a man's rib, or the abnormally low specific gravity of iron axes, or the temporary stoppage of the sun in the heavens, or any other miracles to which neither my intellect nor my conscience responds. Neither you nor I are bound to acquiesce in all the sentiments of Ecclesiastes, or to believe Micaiah when he said, 'The Lord sent a lying spirit.' What do we lose by relegating to legendary folklore Samson's slaying of thousands with the jaw of an ass, or his tying brands to the tails of three hundred foxes?" Mr. Snell is, we hear, one of the writers on the Christian World who helps to liberalise that journal.

Comte, Mill, and Spencer, an outline of philosophy, by John Watson, LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Queen's College, Kingston, Canada, has just been published by Maclehose, of Glasgow.

* * *

The Harbinger of Light, a Spiritist paper published at Melbourne, in its March number, under "Occasional Notes," by X., notices the Life and Times of Charles Bradlaugh. It says: "It is now nearly four years since death seemingly closed the all-too-short life, which was an all-too-long fight, of this tribune of the plebs; Atheist, Materialist, Radical, Republican, yet one of the greatest Englishmen since Cromwell, and one of Nature's realest gentlemen." It continues: "As regards Spiritualism, Mr. Bradlaugh had devoted some attention to the subject, reading its literature and investigating its phenomena. He attended séances held by Mrs. Marshall, by the Davenport Brothers, and by D. D. Home. He was one of the committee appointed by the Dialectical Society to inquire into the phenomena, and he publicly debated Spiritualism with the late Mr. James Burns, editor of the Medium and Daybreak. Nothing, however, that he read, saw, or heard sufficed to satisfy his sceptical mind that the 'phenomena' were of other than mundane origin. But Charles Bradlaugh knows to-day." The efforts of the Spiritists to make Bradlaugh a Spiritist after his death have been among the most ridiculous of their proceedings. The spirit of Voltaire unable to speak French has been paralleled by the "spirit" of Charles Bradlaugh drivelling pitiable rubbish.

* * *

Mr. L. C. Smithers, of Effingham House, sends us a book catalogue in which the complete works of Voltaire, in seventy volumes, is marked at £300. It is, of course, a special copy. The edition is that of Kehl, 1784-1785, for which the types of the Freethinker Baskerville were used. There are inserted a large number of illustrations and portraits, over five hundred plates, and the whole magnificently bound in blue morocco. This copy was collected together and bound by Prince Jerome Napoleon, who, it is well known, was a Freethinker.

THE RELIGION OF BLOOD.

Hush, Christian! speak in bated tones
Of Druids' worship round their gory stones!
The founder of thy creed
Died with despairing groans.
Within thy book we read
God bade his own Son bleed—
A human sacrifice! But blood might plead
With the Omnipotent for sinners' need.

Years rolled away; again the pious priest
Spread for his Moloch the Satanic feast;
Fires mantled round the quailing, quivering frame,
Fierce scorching God's true Son e'en in his Father's name!
Christian, thine idol 'twas whose fêted fane
Reeked with the blood of innocents; their pain
Gave a fresh thrill of rapture to the hells
Where, bloated with his bliss, thy brain-born image dwells.

Come, brother men, together let us weep
That men can be so cruel to their kin;
Love gives all vengeance an eternal sleep,
And damns not erring as a mortal sin.

—Robert B. Holt.

A Christian Method to Get at Truth.

The Rev. Lem Penrod, who preaches at Vanceburgh, Ky., has decided opinions on infant baptism, and one of his church members, John Slate, has opinions equally decided. Unfortunately their opinions are diametrically opposed, and the Bible, to which they appealed, deals a flush hand of texts for both. The other day they met and waxed hot and furious in argument, and the layman got the better of Preacher Penrod, whereupon the spirit of the old church fathers, and of Calvin, came to the latter's rescue, and inflamed him until he drew a revolver and put a bullet through Slate's bootleg. Thereupon Slate rushed upon him, and the preacher drew a butcher's knife and slashed away at him. But the layman had the reverend in the dust, and, although his clothes were cut, received no wound. How it would have been decided, whether infants are damned if baptised or not, is difficult to tell, for the Church militant were parted by bystanders. Thereby Rev. Penrod will be taught a lesson, and that is to be silent, except when behind his pulpit, when no one dare to dispute him.

Digitized by Google

THE DOCTRINE OF HELL.

The Christian priest and preacher have but little or anything to say about hell or a place of endless future punishment for the wicked of this world. Their sermons, like much of their religion, are becoming greatly modified on all such subjects, and are much more in line with common sense and rational ideas than they once were. Even hell, with a cooling apparatus attached to keep down its hot temperature, has been abandoned as a pulpit theme by a majority of Christian ministers. In fact, a place of torment, eternal, and where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched, is seldom, if ever, heard of any more in a Christian sermon. Thanks to science and human progress, all such doctrines as that of a hell, even for the vilest sinner, after death, have been about relegated to the dead past.

How long, may we ask, would any Christian minister in either Boston, New York City, or Chicago hold sway as a popular pulpit orator to-day who should follow in the footsteps of a John Wesley, a Richard Baxter, or a Jonathan Edwards, by reiterating and preaching the doctrines they advocated and proclaimed in favor of a hell? The answer is plain why ministers no longer now preach and promulgate the doctrine. It is because even the pulpit, as well as the majority of Christians, have at last evoluted out of it.

But who, we ask, have been the great instruments, more than all others, in forcing the pulpit to abandon teaching and preaching this damnable doctrine of a hell? We answer, most emphatically, Infidels. It has been the Voltaires, the Paines, and the Volneys, together with the Spencers, the Darwins, and the Huxleys, who have stood as valiant soldiers upon the ramparts of Freethought and proclaimed boldly and fearlessly another and a more rational doctrine. Such gallant souls as these—heralds of a new religion and a better gospel—are the ones who have driven gradually and slowly, but yet surely, much, if not about all, the belief in a hell out of the minds of millions in the world. All praise to them for their great and noble labors.

The words, "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned," as a text, are no longer heard from the lips of the advanced and educated Christian minister. The things of this life, the subjects of this world, the ones of beauty and grandeur, as well as those of pain and sorrow found here and now, are more, in this age of human investigation and progress, engaging the thoughts of Christian ministers than is the question of an endless hell of torment, or even the one of an everlasting heaven of fruition and joy.

Christian priests and ministers are beginning to study the wants and the desires of their patrons. A religious doctrine, like everything else in the world, in order that it may be acceptable and relished, craved and paid for, must be not only up to date, but a staple article in the market. Therefore, it is not a matter of wonder that Christian ministers are ceasing to burden their hearers' ears with the meaningless and unsavory admonition to "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and, after that, have no more that they can do, but fear him who, after he hath killed, hath the power to cast into hell."—"Boston Investigator."

An Unexpected Solution.

At a Sunday-school service a clergyman was explaining to a number of smart little urchins the necessity of Christian profession in order properly to enjoy the blessings of Providence in this world, and to make it apparent to the youthful mind he said:—

"For instance, I want to introduce water into my house. I turn it on. The pipes and every convenience are in good order, but I get no water. Can any of you tell me why I don't get any water?"

He expected the children to see that it was because he had not made a connection with the main in the street. The boys looked perplexed. They could not see why the water should refuse to run into his premises after such faultless plumbing.

"Can no one tell me what I have neglected?" reiterated the good man, looking at the many wondering faces bowed down by the weight of the problem.

"I know," squeaked a little five-year-old. "You don't pay up!"

We still pray for a fine harvest, but we really consult the barometer, and believe more in the prophecies of meteorologists than in an answer to our prayers. Te Deums for victories excite more ridicule than sympathy, and we encounter the cholera by improved systems of drainage without attributing much value to fastings and processions. In other words, the old belief in the supernatural is so far extinct that it could not be restored without encountering some of the most vigorous beliefs of the time.—Leslie Stephen.

A COMMON MAN'S CONCLUSION.

He's a wonderfu', wonderfu' body, the Lord,
If what the Claith tell us be true;
But auld Nicky Ben is his maister whan dune—
To him the maist honor is due.
It's said that the wonderfu' Jahveh, the Lord,
Kens aforehand ilk' thing that's to be;
But he fairly was diddled whan Adam an' Eve
Took a taste o' the wisdom-fruit tree.

Of course, Nicky Ben got the blame o' the ploy—
E'en till noo he is blamed for the deed;
Still, I'm thinkin' he did the best thing for the race,
Tho' o' praise he gets mair than his meed.
Gif the michty Jehovah had gotten his will,
We'd ha'e been little ither than brutes;
Eatin' roots like the swine, wi' a cockle at times—
We'd ha'e scarcely haen sense to catch troots.

We wadna haen bogus directors nor priests,
Nor wad we haen shoddy for breeks;
We wadna haen mansions wi' muckle deer-parks,
Nor slums whar the very air reeks
Wi' disease an' the vilest o' stinks bred frae dirt;
Whar despair clinks alang beside want;
Whar maudlin hymn-ranters deliver their tracts,
An' yowl oot their havers an' cant.

An' we'd maybe been best, for tho' auld Nicky Ben
Has been banned wi' fu' mony a curse,
Still, they only are wirds; the folks praise him wi' deeds,
An' the deeds are a michty piece worse
Than the warst o' ill wirds. But juist crack as ye will,
This warl' is a heaven an' a hell
Whar man is baith blessed an' tortured by turns:
Whar his god an' his deevil's himsel'.

The Gaberlunzie.

PROFANE JOKES.

Good Man—"My son, is your father a professional man?" Boy—"Yes'r; professes conversion at every revival."

"Do you know much about that horse you bought from the deacon?" "I know more about the deacon than I did."

A clergyman looked in at a Salvationist meeting just as the captain bawled out: "Who is present? who is not among the saved?" and a voice was heard, "Our vicar is here."

The following notice was read from a country pulpit on a recent Sunday: "The pastor will preach his last sermon this evening, and the choir have arranged a special praise service for the occasion."

Fond Mother—"Clarence, didn't I overhear you praying at bed-time for God to keep Willie Wiggles from harm during the night?' Little Clarence—"Yep! I wanted him spared, so's I could lick the stuffin' out of him to-day."

"Just my blame luck," ssdly soliloquised Noah, looking out o'er the vast waste of mud that spread as far as the eye could reach, "Here I've gone and got together the greatest animal show on earth, and there isn't a soul left to come and see it." No wonder Noah got drunk.

"John," said Mrs. Hawkins, as they were going home from church, "why did the minister call the dove that brought back a green twig to the ark 'he'?" "I don't know," replied John, "unless it was that if the dove had been a female she couldn't have kept her mouth closed long enough to get the bough to the ark"; and there was ill-feeling in that household all the rest of the day.

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30 Charles Watts, "The Theological Free-Will Puzzle." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.)

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, J. H. Woods, "The Independent Labor Party." (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, social gathering. Wednesday, at 8, dramatic club.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, S. E. Easton, "Some Old Tales Re-told."

ISLINGTON: 3, Special business meeting at secretary's, 19 Alwyne-road, Canonbury.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Moncure D. Conway, "The Gardens of the Gods under the Culture of Science."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, Stephen H. Alison, "The Soul and Anthropology."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, A. Guest, "The Infinite."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "What Must I Do to be Saved?"

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, W. J. Ramsey, "The Atonement."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, A. B. Moss, "The Ascent of Man." Thursday, at 8.30, Stanley Jones, "Christianity and Social Life."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, A. B. Moss, "What do Christians Believe?" 3.30, "Two Revelations."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, F. Haslam, "Secularism and Social Problems."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, W. Heaford, "God and the Problem of Evil."

VICTORIA PARK: 11.15, Stanley Jones will lecture; 3, W. Heaford will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, C. James, "Buddha, Confucius, and Christ"; 7, "Still it Moves."

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8 papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, social gathering.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 7, F. Swan will lecture.

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 11.30, G. W. Foote, "The Romance of the Resurrection"; 2.30, "New Light on the Old Book"; 6.30, "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?"

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 2.30, Greevz Fisher, "Law in a Free State"; 7, "Evolution v. Creation."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Tontine Society; 7, Mr. Hill, "Some Eccentricities of the Law." Committee meeting after lecture.

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, J. Hammond, "Spiritualism and its Claims." (Free.)

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Northumberland Hall, High Friar-street): 3, C. Cohen, "Why are Men Religious?" 7, "Is the Belief in God Reasonable?"

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, Sam Standring, "How Margaret Marie Saw the Blessed Virgin."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 3, Robert Law, F.G.S., "The Wonders of the Sun"; 7, "Is the Interior of the Earth Red-hot? If yes, whence did it Derive its Heat?"

SOUTH SHIELDS (Captain Duncan's Navigation School, King-street) 7, Social evening.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, Robert Weightman, "What is Infidelity, and who are the Infidels?"

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

DERBY (Market-place): 6.45, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside—weather permitting): 11, C. Cohen will lecture.

ROCHDALE (Town Hall Square): 11, Sam Standring, "Some Events of the Week"; 3, "The Pagan Origin of Sunday."

Lecturers' Engagements.

STEPHEN H. ALISON, Sunnyside, 72 Union-grove, Clapham, London, S.W.—April 21, West Ham; 28, Manchester. May 5, Sheffield.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—April 21, 28, Newcastle-on-Tyne. May 2, Wood Green; 5, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 9, Wood Green; 12, Sheffield; 19, Manchester; 23, Wood Green; 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—April 21, m. Victoria Park, a. Tottenham, e. Deptford; 25, Hammersmith; 28, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park. May 5, m. Finsbury Park, e. Battersea; 12, m. Wood Green, e. Edmonton; 19, m. Finsbury, e. Deptford; 22, Hyde Park.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—April 21, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 28, m. Camberwell. May 5, a. Finsbury Park; 12, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, Clerkenwell.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR OUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Price 1s. Superior edition for Subscribers, bound, numbered, and signed, 2s.

VOLTAIRE:

HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

WITH SOME SELECTIONS FROM HIS WRITINGS.

BY G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

"The English people ought to know Voltaire, an admirer and lover of their nation, better than they do, and this lively shilling pamphlet will give them a good deal of information as to his life and work."—Literary World.

"A lucid and interesting sketch of the great French philosopher. We strongly recommend it to all who want to know what the influence was which Voltaire exercised."—Weekly Times and Echo.

"Those of the new generation who desire to know more of a man with whose writings their fathers were intimate should consult this little shilling volume."—Reynolds's Newspaper.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumours and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 3d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 3d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 3d.
All three Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says. "Mr. Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by H. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendell" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

132 pp., price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d., post free.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES.

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The only Complete Edition published in England.

ACCURATE AS COLENSO, AND FASCINATING AS A NOVEL.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Now Ready, Price Twopence,

IS SUICIDE A SIN?

BY COLONEL INGERSOLL.

Together with the Reply of MONSIGNOR DUCEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE

A Reply to the Critics of "Is Suicide a Sin?"

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 2d., by post 2½d.,

AN ESSAY ON SUICIDE.

BY

DAVID HUME.

With an Historical and Critical Introduction by

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS

(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

FIRE

SALE ENDS APRIL 20.

Don't miss some of the Bargains.

A Few 21s. Parcels, carriage paid; worth 42s.

No. 1.—2 Suit Lengths or 4 Trousers' Lengths, good quality.
No. 2.—1 Black Figured and 1 Heavy All-Wool Navy Serge Dress Length; tip-top quality.
No. 3.—1 Suit Length and 1 Dress Length, any color or make.
No. 4.—Blankets, Sheets, Quilt, Table-cloth, Belt, Apron, Purse, etc.
No. 5.—Mixed Lot of Goods for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear.

TROUSERS TO MEASURE 7s. 6d. Per Pair.

Round waist .....
Round seat .....
Inside leg seam .....
Outside leg seam .....
Thigh .....
Knee .....
Bottom .....
Lined or Unlined .....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Color .....

NEW PATTERNS FOR SPRING

NOW READY. WRITE AT ONCE.

They Include all the Latest Novelties for both Ladies' and Gentlemen's Wear.

LEADING LINES—

10s. 6d. Trousers to Measure.
35s. Black & Indigo Serge Suits.
Pure Wool Dress Materials, in Pretty, New Designs.
Boys' Sailor Suits 4s. each.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free.

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s., post free,

SATIRES AND PROFANITIES

BY

JAMES THOMSON (B.V.)

(Author of "The City of Dreadful Night").

Contents:—The Story of a Famous Old Jewish Firm (Jehovah, Son, and Co.)—The Devil in the Church of England—Religion in the Rocky Mountains—Christmas Eve in the Upper Circles—A Commission of Inquiry on Royalty—A Bible Lesson on Monarchy—The One Thing Needful.

"It cannot be neglected by any who are interested in one of the most pathetic personages of our time."—Academy.
"As clever as they are often profane."—Christian World.
"Well worth preserving."—Weekly Dispatch.
"Reminds one of the genius of Swift."—Oldham Chronicle.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 17. SUNDAY, APRIL 28, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

GOD AND THE ANT.

God and the Ant. By Coulson Kernahan. (London: Ward, Lock, & Bowden.)

MR. COULSON KERNAHAN is the author of two volumes of highly-praised fiction and one volume of highly-praised criticism. When we heard, therefore, that he was engaged on a kind of theological treatise, we looked forward to its publication with considerable interest. But now the much-heralded volume is before us we confess to a feeling of disappointment. To begin with, there is very little for the money. Sixty little rivulets of type flow through broad meadows of margin, and the price is one shilling. A vivacious reader could easily get to the end in ten minutes; a dull one could hardly need more than a quarter of an hour. In the next place—and this is far more serious—the booklet is an utter mistake. The problem of evil has exercised the keenest intellects and the greatest wits; it has also occasioned the writing of a multitude of treatises, which test the strength of the stoutest library-shelves. Little that is new can possibly remain to be said upon this theme. Yet, in reading Mr. Kernahan, one would think that the world was waiting for a word of reassurance, and that the problem was as virginal as the blank leaves before Mr. Kernahan's title-page.

Although his space is so limited, Mr. Kernahan goes to work very leisurely. He gives us two pages of Dedication to a friend and benefactor with whose name he begs to associate his "little booklet"—which is a nasty tautology; and to whom he expresses his "thanks and gratitude"—which is nearly as bad. Then comes a three-page Apologia, in which we hear of "the form and shape" of something, as though they were different. Such marks of carelessness are regrettable in a writer like Mr. Kernahan. For the rest, the Apologia is an absurdity. Mr. Kernahan says he dreamed what he relates; and he informs us, as though he were one of the prophets, that he "did not set to work to write it: it came." This is pretty enough, in its way; but, as a proem to an attempt to justify the ways of Providence, it is almost ludicrous.

Mr. Kernahan starts with the End of the World—just at the point where Prophet Baxter leaves off. The sea gives up its dead, and the graves discharge their occupants; who, by the way, would (most of them) not be there—as the Irishman said. Men were all ready for judgment, but God and the angels did not put in an appearance. The last day had indeed come, but "it was God and not man who was bidden to the bar of heaven," and the people called upon him to "Come forth," as though he were another Lazarus, and make answer for the wrongs he had done to man. But the boss of the universe was in no hurry, and the millions of millions of resurrected ones begged to know why he had "awakened" them—which, again, is bad grammar. Then a woman has a go at him. She had worked hard for a little bread, and she was having a good rest in the grave, and why was she disturbed? Next a man wants to know whether the Great Derider is preparing a fresh diversion for himself. He is followed by another woman, who had been born amongst thieves and prostitutes; she inquires why God made any creature to perish everlastingly. Finally "one" spoke, who wanted to know why God makes the innocent suffer for the guilty, and visits the sins of the fathers upon the children. And once more all the people call upon God to stand in the dock and answer his indictment. Evidently he has a lot to answer for, though it is all very familiar to Freethinkers; but he is still in no hurry, and keeps the court waiting.

In his absence, a woman attempts to justify the ways of God to man. Children suffer for their parents' sins; but they also profit by their parents' virtues; and six balances half-a-dozen. Besides, if misery did not overtake ill-doing, man had soon made a hell of earth. On the whole, life is good, not evil; and if there were no misery, and all were plain, where would then be "the test of our faith in God"? This lady barrister, pleading for the Almighty, reminds men that they cannot understand God, though she appears to be well up in the subject. "Can the ant," she asks, "crawl up into the brain of man to see man's world as man sees it? Yet has man, whose whole world is, in the eyes of God, but as one ant in a universe, thought to creep into God's brain, to think as He thinks, to see as He sees, and to judge the Omnipotent by man's little laws."

With some rather mixed imagery, this is an old story retold. Those who set out to explain evil always end by giving it up, and tell us not to criticise, but adore; which we might do before the argument as well as after it—perhaps a little better.

Mr. Kernahan imagines that God is exculpated because it was man who tempted the woman, seduced her, and brought her to prostitution. He forgets that God made the man to tempt, and the woman to be tempted; and that an omniscient creator is responsible to the uttermost for the faults of his creatures.

The impenitent thief upon the cross is the next person who addresses the multitude:—

> "I am he who, when in like straits to yours, did blaspheme as you, O my brothers and sisters, have blasphemed; I am he who hung by the dying Savior—he who in the hour of death and judgment did revile that Divine Sufferer, even as you in your hour of judgment have blasphemed the most Holy Name of God. I am he whom, these many a hundred years, ye have called the 'impenitent thief,' knowing not the infinite mercy and power of God.
>
> "For, be it known to you that, as I hung in that Sacred Presence, I saw, ere my spirit fled, the people mocking and reviling Him, even as I—foul sinner that I am—had mocked and reviled Him. And I saw that, even as He had answered me not, so He answered them never a word, but, lifting His eyes to heaven, He prayed to His God and theirs, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!'
>
> "And as He thus prayed, He turned and bent on me—me, the outcast, the blasphemer, the vilest and most impenitent of all that vile and impenitent throng—such look of Divine dignity, such look of infinitely pitying and pardoning love, that, though my anguish-racked body, heavy with approaching death, hung, dragging its dead weight from the cross, I forgot the straining of my torn and quivering hands against the cruel nails, forgot the thousand tortures which each heart-throb sent through every nerve and limb; forgot shame and death and judgment, in wonder and worship and love.
>
> "To your knees, O brothers and sisters, and sue for pardon, that even as I—outcast and blasphemer—obtained mercy at that last moment of my life, so may ye, blasphemers and impenitent, be forgiven by the intercession of the same Savior who laid down His life for us all!"

Finally, after a blasphemer has had an innings, ONE [thus, please] appeared with the features of a man and the face of a God. This is Jesus Christ himself, who harangues the people as follows:—

Digitized by Google

"Did you indeed think, beloved, that while you were suffering and sorrowing on earth, I, your elder Brother and Savior, could rest content in the bliss of heaven?—that I ceased to share your sorrows when my earthly life was at end?

"O mothers, who mourned for your children, it was my heart that brake when you fell sobbing by that tiny bed! O little children! every hair of whose head is sacred unto me, to spare whose little feet one step on a thorny road, I would endure and gladly a Calvary of woes! O weary men! O lonely women! whose every sorrow I have known, at whose every tear this heart of mine has bled—think you that any nail which wounded these hands, these feet, on Calvary's Cross, stabbed me with so cruel a pang as that which pierces my soul at any sin or sorrow of thine?

"You have suffered for a lifetime, but I, until time shall be no more; and even as every sorrow of yours has entered into my heart, so has every sorrow of mine entered into the heart of the Father.

"Said I not unto you that, 'Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world'? and thought you, that I could be with you, and not feel with you, sorrow with you, suffer with you?

"But now is that end indeed accomplished; now are the powers of darkness for ever overcome; now is death, the last enemy, destroyed; and now render I up the Kingdom to my Father, that God may be All, and in All."

This kind of eloquence is about fit for a Sunday-school. What a grotesque notion underlies the pathetic phraseology! One is inclined to pity this Christ until one reflects that he is playing the fool. All the world suffered, and he suffered, and his Father suffered. And what for? Alas! we are not informed; the problem of evil is left where it was, and where it will always be while men personify the universe, make a deity of their own ignorance, and prate about "God."

Mr. Kernahan winds up with a waking dream. Looking out of his window in the early morning, he sees haggard men and careworn women hurrying to their work; but in every face he saw the sorrowful face of Christ, and over the great city of London he seemed to see resting THE SHADOW OF A CROSS. We also have seemed to see that shadow; but to us it was terrible—the shadow of priestly fraud over human misery.

G. W. FOOTE.

MADAME BLAVATSKY.

(Concluded from page 248.)

REMINDED that she had been caught sometimes, and of her own carelessness and inattention, Helena Petrovna said:—

"Yes, I certainly am careless and inattentive; but others, with very, very rare exceptions, are far more inattentive than I am; they are just so many sleepy owls, so many blind men, and never observe anything at all. Would you believe that all this time, before and after the Theosophical Society's foundation, I have not met more than two or three men who knew how to observe and see and remark what was going on around them? It is simply amazing. At least nine out of ten people are entirely devoid of the capacity of observation, and of the power of remembering accurately what took place even a few hours before. How often it has happened that, under my direction and revision, minutes of various occurrences and phenomena have been drawn up; lo, the most innocent and conscientious people, even sceptics, even those who actually suspected me, have signed en toutes lettres as witnesses at the foot of the minutes. And all the time I knew that what had happened was not in the least what was stated in the minutes. Yes, my dear sir, I venture to assure you that in history, even the best attested, there is far more fancy than truth."

In such observations we may see not only the woman of the world, but the thinker, who was able to dupe even those with pretensions to culture and science.

Solovyoff asked her: "Are you alone the author of Koot Hoomi's letters, philosophical and otherwise?" "No; chelas used sometimes to help me—Damodar and Subba Rao and Mohini." "And Sinnett?" "Sinnett won't invent gunpowder; but he has a beautiful style, he is splendid at editing." "And Olcott?" "Olcott is not bad at editing either, when he understands what he is talking about. But one has always to chew everything for him till one is sick."

She showed Solovyoff the magic bell which he had already discovered. "Yes," she confessed, "that is my occult telegraph, through which I communicate with the 'master.'" She then asked him to prepare the ground for her to work in Russia. "Write more, louder, about the Theosophical Society; rouse their interest, and 'create' Koot Hoomi Russian letters. I will give you all the materials for them." Instead of answering, Solovyoff fairly ran away. She immediately sent Bavaji after him with a note, in which she showed her whole hand, telling him that, if he would only trust her, and see in her a résumé of all the so-called, imaginary, many masters, "then you, as a patriot, would perform an immense service to Russia also." Solovyoff interpreted this as an attempt to cover up her self-revealed exposure of fraud with a new mystification. He had previously deprecated the view of Mr. R. Hodgson that she was a Russian spy, "not," he is careful to say, "because I believe her incapable of playing such a part, but because, in the autumn of 1885, she was extremely anxious to become a secret agent of the Russian Government in India." "If she wished to become," he says, "it is plain that, up to that time, she was not." How naive! Had M. Solovyoff known her American and Indian career, he might have seen a little further. Of course, having had to fly from India, Helena Petrovna was in disgrace with the controllers of the Secret Service, and wished to utilise Solovyoff to get reinstated.

This is how he reports what she said:—

"Look here, this is what it is," she began; "you are soon going to St. Petersburg; now do undertake a very important business of the greatest benefit to Russia. I wish to propose myself as a secret agent of the Russian Government in India. To promote the triumph of my country over those vile English I am capable of anything. I hate the English Government in India, with its missionaries; they are all my personal enemies, thirsting for my destruction. That alone is reason enough why I should throw my whole soul into the struggle with them. And that I can do them immense harm in India is certain; and I alone can do it, no one else is capable of the task. My influence on the Hindus is enormous; of that I can easily produce as much evidence as you will. At a sign from me, millions of Hindus would follow me. I can easily organise a gigantic rebellion. I will guarantee that in a year's time the whole of India would be in Russian hands. Only they must give me the pecuniary means—I don't want much. You know how I am in this respect. And they must put it in my power to penetrate into India through Russia—for I can't go back there any other way since this affair of the Coulombs and the missionaries—and I will bring about one of the greatest events in history. I proposed the same thing before, some years ago, when Timasheff was still minister; but I did not receive any answer. But now, now it is much easier for me; I can arrange the whole thing in a year."

She thus confessed that she had years before offered her services as a secret agent to the Russian Government. It would have been unlike herself had she betrayed that the real purpose of the society was to spread in India a secret society with signs and pass words, and with the exoteric doctrine of the brotherhood of man, and the esoteric teaching, as expounded in the Introduction to the Secret Doctrine, p. xliv.: "We have not long to wait, and many of us will witness the Dawn of the New Cycle, at the end of which not a few accounts will be settled and squared between the races."

When the right moment came messages from the Mahatmas would have appeared, proclaiming a general rising. This is the established way in which political movements have been carried on in the East from time immemorial. Those have at best an imperfect comprehension of the Bible who do not recognise how much its prophecies were intended to bring about their own fulfilment.

M. Solovyoff admits that, in some respects, Madame Blavatsky appeared to be a subordinate. From his own book an impression is derived that she was something beyond the lying, fraudulent impostor which he nonetheless thoroughly proves her to have been. Despite her woeful failings, she was a woman of Titanic power, whose contempt for the mass of mankind was equalled by her own determination to make history. She has achieved a place beside her occult heroes, Cagliostro and St. Germain, and we can leave her with the charitable hope that, if her life could be seen from start to finish, she would be found more sinned against than sinning.

J. M. WHEELER.

Digitized by Google

THE VALUE OF DOUBT.

Religious people of the present time are no more disposed to give doubt and scepticism credit for any power for good than were those persons who two thousand years ago were said to have questioned that any good thing could come out of Nazareth. There is, however, much truth in Coleridge's remark that "the road to belief is through the portals of doubt"; and yet this word is dreaded by many individuals, not so much upon its own account as in consequence of what it may lead to. Doubt is known to be the innovator, the turbulent element, that disturbs the deep slumber in which faith, superstition, and despotism repose. As it is the parent of the changes and improvements that take place in long-standing institutions, those people who are wedded to things as they are are adverse to its advent among them. The worldly interests of men are bound up with the established order of things; hence, instead of doubting the wisdom of maintaining an unalterable state of affairs, the interested ones are opposed to whatever is likely to produce a change. This is particularly manifest in discussions upon questions of law, government, and religion. The retention upon our statute book of those laws which are a disgrace to the age is vehemently defended, old forms of government that are quite incompatible with the spirit of the times are tenaciously clung to, and orthodox views of religion are credulously adhered to by a large section of the religious world. So far as progress has been effected in reference to each and all of these subjects, it has been the result of doubt, and therefore to this force must we look for further advancement.

In the popular theological mind there is a much stronger feeling against doubt than there is against the acceptance and retention of the most glaring superstition. Notwithstanding this deplorable fact, men of thought know and acknowledge that there is no condition of mind so appropriate and useful, in a state of society like ours, as that of doubt. We are inundated with all sorts of theories and doctrines, and to implicitly accept all as being right would be impossible. So doubt affords time for investigation, whereby the true may be detected from the false. Of course, it does not follow that this result will always happen where examination takes place; still, it is more likely to occur in the region of doubt than under the influence of "blind belief." People who decline inquiry lack either adequate mental capacity, or that spirit of fairness which is so essential in the pursuit of truth. Why should any man fear to examine the foundation of his beliefs unless he be apprehensive that it may give way? No one whose opinions are based upon matured thought should object to submit them to the force of argument. As Bishop Watson aptly remarked: "Whoever is afraid of submitting any question, civil or religious, to the test of free discussion seems to me to be more in love with his own opinions than with truth." Yet this aversion to debating religious questions is very extensive among theologians and their supporters. If all that is new is not true, it is equally certain that much that is old is manifestly false. Many of the views held by our ancestors were founded upon insufficient data, and the chief reason given why such views should be received to-day is not their truth or utility, but their antiquity.

This theological dislike to doubt and free inquiry can be readily explained. As already intimated, fearless investigation tends to expose any unsound point in the armor that is supposed to shield orthodoxy from the attacks of its opponents. Moreover, there is the common habit of regarding some beliefs as if they were beyond the reach of the critical faculty, and of adhering to certain opinions because they are pleasant and consoling. To discover that such beliefs and opinions are false would be to destroy the tranquility in the minds of those persons who too often "purchase intellectual peace at the price of intellectual death." Let it once appear that certain views must be true, because they harmonise with one's cherished convictions; let it be thought that to learn that such views were false would cause an unhappy state of mind, then the desire to find and to adhere to truth for its own sake would never be fostered. It is this "base repose" and this preference for "the stillness of the swamp" that produce what Buckle calls the "protective spirit." It was this very intellectual subjection that in times past created a state of society in which the greatest absurdities and the most palpable errors were believed to be solemn truths. It is only about two hundred years ago that such silly and preposterous notions as the existence of giants of enormous height, of devils and witches, of ghosts and of flying dragons, etc., began to be discarded. The drowning of so-called witches, the burning of heretics, and a host of other cruelties, were among the approved methods of our ancestors when doubt was condemned by "the powers that be," both temporal and spiritual. And to-day, in countries where doubt is prohibited, similar crude notions exist, and the same kind of mental stagnation and degradation obtains. Buckle truly observes: "It is necessary that men should learn to doubt before they begin to tolerate; and that they should recognise the fallibility of their own opinions before they respect the opinions of their opponents. This great process is far from being yet completed in any country; and the European mind, barely emerged from its early credulity, and from an over-weening confidence in its own belief, is still in a middle, and, so to say, a probationary, state. When that stage shall be finally passed, when we shall have learned to estimate men solely by their character and acts, and not at all by their theological dogmas, we shall then be able to form our religious opinions by that purely transcendental process of which in every age glimpses have been granted to a few gifted minds."

In considering the causes of the progress of nations, we recognise the vast importance of the acquirement and diffusion of that knowledge which is seminal and fruitful—a knowledge that results from the exercise of doubt and the carrying out of the principle of free inquiry. It is now granted that to most questions there are two sides; but in former times only one side, as a rule, was allowed to be published, and to doubt the truth of the popular side of the question was looked upon as a sin. It is only the antipathy produced by ignorance that causes an aversion to the investigation of every phase of a subject. No truth can be lessened in value, or lose any of its lustre, by repeatedly passing it through the ordeal of honest criticism. The spirit of doubt that has seized the minds of men in modern days has not only increased our general knowledge, but it has led to the adoption of new methods of inquiry that were only dimly seen by Aristotle, revived by Bacon, and matured by observation and experiment within the memory of living men. Those persons who are burdened with ancient prejudices are constantly dwelling upon the evils that doubt produces, and warning others against its dangers. It is, however, overlooked by these self-satisfied believers that stagnant ideas are useless; that a passive state of mind can give no security for the correctness of its opinions; and that, without change, no new truths can be established. People who passively submit to things as they are are not the promoters of commercial progress, or the guides in fresh enterprises. It is those who aim at improvement and advancement that should be looked upon as the real pioneers of the civilisation of the human race.

Men who feel sure that they have inherited the truth from their forefathers, who could not err, are not the persons upon whom we should rely for an increase in knowledge and the development of mental freedom. We prefer depending upon the heroes of doubt, men who are willing to grapple with the pros and cons of all subjects brought under their notice. Not to doubt is to ignore the advantages to be derived from the continual conflict going on between truth and error, and to lose the incalculable benefits arising from free and open discussion. As J. S. Mill, in his work On Liberty (p. 12), wrote: "Man is capable of rectifying his mistakes by discussion and experience. Not by experience alone. There must be discussion, to show how experience is to be interpreted. Wrong opinions and practices gradually yield to fact and argument; but facts and arguments, to produce any effect on the mind, must be brought before it." To aid in this work is one of the functions of doubt, and herein lies its value.

Charles Watts.

(To be concluded.)

After a long drought there came a heavy rain, during which one farmer observed to another: "This is a providential rain. I hope it will bring up everything out of the ground." To this the other replied, with a dubious shake of the head: "I can't say as I agree with you there, neighbor. I've buried three wives in the ground, and I should mortally hate to see them all come up again."

Digitized by Google

MAY DAY.

THE decoration of horses with rosettes, and an occasional "Jack in the Green," and girls with paper feathers dancing round a barrel organ, are all that remain to remind the Londoner of the old festival of May Day. When I was a youth it was still the custom to trip out early in the country to get the May dew and gather hawthorn. This interesting survival of an old Pagan practice is not quite extinct. Shakespeare, in his Henry the Eighth, alludes to it, saying it is impossible to make people sleep on May morning. And who does not remember that passage in Midsummer Night's Dream where Lysander appoints to meet Hermia

> —In that wood, a league without the town,
> Where I did meet thee once with Helena
> To do observance to a morn of May?

Chaucer, in his "Court of Love," tells us that early on May morning "forth goeth all the court to fetch the flowers fresh, and branch, and bloom."

To this custom of early rising Herrick alludes, in his fine pastoral on "Corinna's Going a Maying":—

> Get up, get up, for shame; the blooming morn
> Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.
> See how Aurora throws her fair,
> Fresh-quilted colors through the air;
> Get up, sweet slug-a-bed, and see
> The dew-bespangling herb and tree.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> There's not a budding boy or girl, this day,
> But is got up, and gone to bring in May.
> A deal of youth, ere this, is come
> Back, and with white-thorn, laden home.

And in Tennyson's "May Queen":—

> You must wake and call me early, call me early, mother dear.

This early rising itself was but a survival of a vigil in which the fun was kept up through the night. Stubbes, a Puritan writer of Queen Elizabeth's time, in his Anatomie of Abuses, published in 1585, says:—

> "Against May, Whit-Sonday, or other time, all the yung men and maides, old men and wives, run gadding about over night to the woods, groves, hils, and mountains, where they spend all the night in pleasant pastimes; and in the morning they return, bringing with them birch and branches of trees, to deck their assemblies withall; and no merualle for there is a great Lord present amongst them as superintendent and Lord of their sports—namely, Sathan, prince of hel. But the chiefest jewel they bring from thence is their May-pole (say rather their stinking poole), which they bring home with great veneration."

This interesting passage lets us know that the old Pagan rites were confounded with witchcraft, and confirms the evidence that the persecution of witches was the last act in the tragic suppression of Paganism. Stubbes remarks that, when the Maypole was reared, "they fall to banquet and feast, to leape and dance about it, as the heathen people did at the dedication of their idolles, whereof this is a perfect pattern, or, rather, the thing itself." The acrid old Puritan was quite right. The Maypole was a phallic emblem of the life and generation manifest in the flowering of vegetation. It was the symbol of the renewal of life, as was also Flora, or our Maid Marian, or the Queen of the May; while Jack-i'-the-Green represents the tree spirit, whose rôle Mr. J. G. Frazer, in his Golden Bough, has shown to be so important in all the old religions.

Had the Puritans known the Pervigilium Veneris, a Latin poem ascribed by Erasmus to Catullus, but certainly later, it would have afforded them an additional text for invective against the Pagan superstitions which the May games were denounced as representing. The poem shows that the Romans, like our English ancestors, celebrated the season by betaking themselves to the woods for three nights, where they kept vigil in honor of Venus, to whom the month of April was dedicated, as being the universal generating and producing power. The poem seems to have been composed with a view to its being sung by a choir of maidens in their nocturnal rambles beneath the soft light of an Italian moon. All the signs of spring whisper of love, and the constant refrain comes in, Cras amet, qui nunquam amavit; quique amavit, cras amet.

Students of peasant customs and mythology—above all, students of the Golden Bough—will not be astonished at the suggestion that the three nights of vigil may have some connection with the legend of Jesus being three days and nights in the heart of the earth.

Mr. Douce, in his Illustrations of Shakespeare, observes that, during the reign of Elizabeth, the Puritans made considerable havoc among the May games, by their preachings and invectives, and at length put Maypole and all to the rout. King James's Book of Sports restored some, but by an ordinance of the Long Parliament in April, 1644, all Maypoles were taken down, and the games suppressed. This, and the prohibition of Christmas festivities, contributed largely to bring the Puritans into disrepute, and at the Restoration the Maypoles were restored, and even the most complained of licentiousness returned, as may be guessed from Herrick's lines:—

> Many a green-gown has been given;
> Many a kiss both odd and even;
> Many a glance, too, has been sent
> From out the eye, love's firmament;
> Many a jest told of the key's betraying
> This night, and locks picked; yet we're not a-Maying.

The May festival is usually referred to the Floralia of the Romans, which commenced on April 27, and ended on the first of May. The people decked themselves with trees and flowers, and licentious dancing went on in the streets. But, in truth, festivals at the first risings of plant life, after the death of winter, and also when flowers open their buds, are natural everywhere and world wide. When nature assumes her bridal robes is a proper time for rejoicing. If Easter celebrates the resurrection of life from the underworld, Whitsuntide announces the coming of the Holy Spirit of Love. The Pagan observances still remaining in all Christian festivals sufficiently show how deeply rooted they were in nature worship.

The last Maypole in London was taken down in 1718. It was set up in Wansted Park, Essex, as a support to Sir Isaac Newton's large telescope. Pope thus perpetuates its remembrance:—

> Amidst the area wide they took their stand,
> Where the tall Maypole o'erlook'd the Strand.

"The Mayings," says Strutt, in his Sports and Pastimes, 1801, "are in some sort yet kept up by the milkmaids at London, who go about the streets with their garlands and music, dancing." But the milkmaids gave place to the chimney-sweeps, as Maid Marian had to Malkin, a clown dressed in woman's clothes; and even the sooty sweeps have almost entirely abandoned the festival. Our country largely owed its title of "Merrie England" to its remnants of Paganism. Puritanism did much towards stamping these out, but Puritanism has in turn itself become almost as effete as Paganism.

J. M. WHEELER.

INGERSOLL ON SHAKESPEARE.

IF Shakespeare knew one fact, he knew its kindred and its neighbors. Looking at a coat of mail, he instantly imagined the society, the conditions that produced it, and what it in turn produced. He saw the castle, the moat, the drawbridge, the lady in the tower, and the knightly lover spurring across the plain. He saw the bold baron and the rude retainer, the trampled serf, and all the glory and grief of feudal life. He was a man of imagination.

He lived the life of all.

He was a citizen of Athens in the days of Pericles. He listened to the eager eloquence of the great orators, and sat upon the cliffs, and with the tragic poet heard "the multitudinous laughter of the sea." He saw Socrates thrust the spear of question through the shield and heart of falsehood. He was present when the great man drank hemlock, and met the night of death, tranquil as a star meets morning. He listened to the peripatetic philosophers, and was unpuzzled by the sophists. He watched Phidias as he chiselled shapeless stone to forms of love and awe.

He lived by the mysterious Nile, amid the vast and monstrous. He knew the very thought that wrought the form and features of the Sphinx. He heard great Memnon's morning song when marble lips were smitten by the sun. He laid him down with the embalmed and waiting dead, and felt within their dust the expectation of another life, mingled with cold and suffocating doubts—the children born of long delay.

Digitized by Google

He walked the ways of mighty Rome, and saw great Cæsar with his legions in the field. He stood with vast and motley throngs, and watched the triumphs given to victorious men, followed by uncrowned kings, the captured hosts, and all the spoils of ruthless war. He heard the shout that shook the Coliseum's roofless walls, when from the reeling gladiator's hand the short sword fell, while from his bosom gushed the stream of wasted life.

He lived the life of savage men. He trod the forest's silent depths, and in the desperate game of life or death he matched his thought against the instinct of the beast.

He knew all crimes and all regrets, all virtues and their rewards. He was victim and victor, pursuer and pursued, outcast and king. He heard the applause and curses of the world, and on his heart had fallen all the nights and noons of failure and success.

He knew the unspoken thoughts, the dumb desires, the wants and ways of beasts. He felt the crouching tiger's thrill, the terror of the ambushed prey, and with the eagles he had shared the ecstacy of flight and poise and swoop, and he had lain with sluggish serpents on the barren rocks uncoiling slowly in the heart of noon.

He sat beneath the bo-tree's contemplative shade, wrapped in Buddha's mighty thought, and dreamed all dreams that light, the alchemist, has wrought from dust and dew, and stored within the slumbrous poppy's subtle blood.

He knelt with awe and dread at every shrine; he offered every sacrifice and every prayer; felt the consolation and the shuddering fear; mocked and worshipped all the gods; enjoyed all heavens, and felt the pangs of every hell.

He lived all lives, and through his blood and brain there crept the shadow and the chill of every death; and his soul, like Mazeppa, was lashed naked to the wild horse of every fear and love and hate.

The imagination had a stage in Shakespeare's brain, whereon were set all scenes that lie between the morn of laughter and the night of tears, and where his players bodied forth the false and true, the joys and griefs, the careless shallows and the tragic deeps of universal life.

From Shakespeare's brain there poured a Niagara of gems spanned by fancy's seven-hued arch. He was as many-sided as clouds are many-formed. To him giving was hoarding—sowing was harvest—and waste itself the source of wealth. Within his marvellous mind were the fruits of all thought past, the seeds of all to be. As a drop of dew contains the image of the earth and sky, so all there is of life was mirrored forth in Shakespeare's brain.

Shakespeare was an intellectual ocean, whose waves touched all the shores of thought; within which were all the tides and waves of destiny and will; over which swept all the storms of fate, ambition, and revenge; upon which fell the gloom and darkness of despair and death, and all the sunlight of content and love; and within was the inverted sky, lit with the eternal stars. Shakespeare was an intellectual ocean, towards which all rivers ran, and from which now the isles and continents of thought receive their dew and rain.

DID CHRIST RISE FROM THE DEAD?

A PUBLIC DISCUSSION.

Being exceedingly fond of intellectual encounters upon the platform when they are conducted by gentlemen, I accompanied Mr. Foote last week to Kent, to listen to his debate, upon the above question, with the Rev. A. J. Waldron. It was the first time that I had heard my colleague in a regular set discussion; the event was therefore anticipated by me with great interest; and, to be frank, I may at once say that my anticipations, in some particulars, were more than realised. The local excitement was intense—the debate had been the talk among all sections of the neighborhood for weeks past; for a controversy upon such a subject as "Did Christ Rise from the Dead?" was an incident new to the majority of those who listened to it.

The discussion took place on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, April 17 and 18, in the Public Hall, New Brompton, before crowded audiences, the building being packed each night in every part, including platform and an ante-room. Complete order was maintained throughout, and it was manifest that all present desired to hear both sides with patience and fairness. This is a striking indication of the progress of Freethought. Ten years ago Mr. Foote, or any other Secular advocate, would not have been listened to while boldly assailing orthodox pretensions. In my judgment, two-thirds of the audience were in favor of the Christian position, and one-third were Freethinkers and Secularists. I have faced many audiences in my time, but never more impartial ones than those at New Brompton. Both gentlemen were warmly received and enthusiastically applauded at the various points they made. Mr. A. J. Waldron won respect from our party for his earnestness and gentlemanly behavior; while Mr. Foote—in addition to these qualities—by his dialectical skill and his analytical reasoning, commanded the admiration of many who were opposed to him. Major Scott Moncrieff presided the first night, and I the second.

Personally, I did not regard the encounter as being a great one. The cause of this was to me obvious. The rev. gentleman was no match, intellectually, for Mr. Foote. Debate is an art, and, in addition to a person having the gift to master it, practice is required. Now, it appeared to me that Mr. Waldron was deficient in each of these requisites. He possesses, no doubt, many qualifications as a speaker, and probably as a preacher he is above the average; but as a philosophical debater he is not great. He seemed not only to fail to grasp the nature of his opponent's arguments, but also to possess a very limited supply of his own. Hence he too frequently resorted to preaching, and to introducing matter that had nothing to do with the question in debate. Of course, this at the moment captivated the thoughtless believer; but it could not convince the judicious inquirer.

The rev. gentleman's contentions were practically three—namely, (1) That Christ must have arisen, because St. Paul and "others" saw him after he rose from the dead; (2) that the New Testament records the event as a fact; and (3) that the early Church was founded upon the belief that the Resurrection really took place.

It will be seen, by those who understand the subject, what an opportunity was here given to Mr. Foote to show his debating power, and to expose the fallacies thus expounded. And he was not slow to avail himself of the chance thus given. A more crushing reply I have never heard. He showed (1) The utter absence of any adequate evidence that Christ rose from the dead. (2) That, if Paul "saw" Jesus at all, it was subjectively, not objectively—that is, while Paul was suffering from a sunstroke, or some other mental derangement. (3) That no other writer in the New Testament says, "I saw the risen Christ"; it is only alleged that "he was seen," but there is not a particle of first-hand testimony. (4) That the documents which relate the story of the Resurrection are so contradictory that they would not be accepted as evidence in any court of law. (5) That many sections of the early Church did not believe in the Resurrection.

Upon all these points Mr. Foote dwelt with a precision and force which must have greatly surprised some of the audience who differed from him. His exposition and exposé were couched in language so pertinent, and delivered with such force, that even Mr. Waldron referred more than once to the eloquence of his opponent. To me it appears marvellous how independent thinkers can believe in the story of the resurrection of Christ; for, as Mr. Foote demonstrated, the Christian version of the delusion is only a reproduction of older legends. We are not surprised, however, that the multitude, who have been trained from their infancy to regard the myth as a fact, still cling to the error. It would be well if a verbatim report of what Mr. Foote said upon this point could be published. It would be an "eye-opener" to many of the faithful.

There is no doubt that the debate will prove a great advantage to the cause of Freethought in New Brompton. I noticed how elated the Secular friends were at the result of the discussion, and how many congratulations Mr. Foote received from them. I am pleased to be able to sincerely join in the general verdict, that he did his work well.

Charles Watts.

The human race, in all countries, has become the prey of the priests.—D'Holbach.

Digitized by Google

FREE WILL.

Now, what does the Bible teach? Does it endorse the doctrine of the free will, or is it opposed to it? If the Bible teaches anything, it is that man is the subject of an eternal strife between God and the Devil, and whoever happens to be the stronger wins the game, and poor, suffering man has to put up with the consequences. If Christ taught anything at all, he taught the doctrine of predestination. He speaks of the elect, and compares them with a fold of sheep which knows its shepherd's voice, and which cannot be taken from him. Again, "None can come to the Father but by me, and none can come to me except the Father draw him." What, I ask, if Christians believe their own doctrine, has become of the free will?—Nil. But do the Christians really believe that the will is the predominant power of the human min? Have you not heard them comment as follows, criticising other people's morality: "O, one can easily understand his being a bad fellow, for I have known his father and grandfather, and they were both like it"? Or: "One can't expect him to be better, for he has never seen any good in his home." Or: "Don't expect too much of him, poor fellow; the world has been against him." I have repeatedly heard these remarks from exponents of the "free-will" theory; nay, I have actually heard exclamations of surprise at an isolated individual who has deviated from the rule. Does not this show that they know better than they will admit, and that the Christians are practically Freethinkers, not knowing it in their ignorance? Further, why are the clerical shepherds so anxious to seize hold of the children, and cram their religion down their throats, while they are yet young? Is it not because the cunning are Freethinkers, though they will not admit it? Is it not all admission of the truth of my argument that atavism, education, and environment mould our character and build up our lives?

I am well aware that the champions of religion make a laughing-stock of this view. The thief will say: "I could not help stealing the watch," and the policeman replies: "I cannot help locking you up"; and the thief gets punished for not helping his action, and so forth. These ridiculous fools have not ascended high enough in the scale of development to understand that it is not for the sake of revenge and punishment that the criminal is punished. They have still the brute-passion of revenge in them, and cannot comprehend that the idea of punishment is to reform and to deter from repetition of the act, thus counteracting the causes which stimulate to crime. They forget that society imposed responsibility upon its members by submitting them to certain restrictions long before they invented their God to give his ten commandments. If not, why was it that Moses fled when he had killed the Egyptian? Was it not because he knew that the law, "Thou shalt not kill," was already in force?

Responsibility between man and man we do not deny. The feeling of this responsibility is heightened, and our sympathy towards our fellow beings is intensified, in proportion as we realise that what we are we have been made through causes which are too strong for the individual, but which can be counteracted by mutual aid and combined effort. In proportion as he realises that what we are we have been made by causes which we do not know, so will man begin to investigate into the conditions of his fellow men, be kind, generous, and ready to forgive his brothers, and reach the weaker a helping hand. But what we will not recognise is the responsibility to God. As the chief duty lies with the parents towards their offspring, so lies the duty with him towards us. He has called us into being without consulting us. He has, if he exists and is all-powerful, made us as we are, created the causes and circumstances which constitute our misfortunes and shortcomings. Consequently, he has no right to inflict eternal suffering upon us for being as he created us, and as an all-good God he will not do so. Therefore, we say hell is a cruel, malicious invention, a scarecrow invented by a tyrannical clergy, imposed upon the ignorant in an age of superstition, for the purpose of forcing them into mental submission. Finally, when hell is gone, we have no use for the Christ to save us from it, and Christianity is exploded. Up to the present, mankind has worked out its own salvation step by step. What it has gained it has gained without any supernatural intervention. This is an established fact, which ought to be an inducement to self-reliance, and to refrain from cherishing any vain illusions about any kind of superhuman assistance.

J. K. Maagaard.

ACID DROPS.

Mrs. Besant is home in London again, and is going to enlighten (or darken) the world on the subject of Mahatmas. She will first have to satisfy the world that she acted squarely in regard to the Judge forgeries. Before she left for Australia she made it up with Judge, and accepted a resolution of the Theosophical Society expressing "pleasure" that the matter had been finally settled. But during her absence Mr. Garrett published his crushing exposure in the Westminster Gazette, which gave Mrs. Besant to see that the hushing-up game was no longer playable. Accordingly she finds it prudent to go upon the war-path again after Judge's blood. She informs the Chronicle interviewer that three out of the four "sections," into which the handful of Theosophists in the world are divided, will vote for Judge's expulsion.

Mrs. Besant doesn't want Judge now. She did at first, for he had a Mahatma in tow; but she has since found one of her own, and with that fine imagination which is characteristic of mystery-mongers, she locates her first acquaintance with him before she so much as knew Judge. Of course she adduces no corroborative evidence. We have only her word for it; and, unfortunately, her word is contradicted by the facts.

"I got my first absolute proof of the existence of Mahatmas," she says, "in 1889, before I had met Mr. Judge at all. From 1889 onward I both saw the master and he talked to me, taught me, and told me what was to happen. By him I was forewarned of Mr. Bradlaugh's death, which, occurring somewhat suddenly, would otherwise have come to me as a great shock."

It is easy enough to talk in this fashion. Anybody can wait until an event has happened, and then say "I knew it beforehand." Unless it is said beforehand, the statement is incapable of proof or disproof. It is only another form of the old confidence trick.

We never saw a Mahatma, and no Mahatma told us that Bradlaugh was going to die. Yet we knew it. He was a broken man before he went to India, he presumed upon his strength when he returned, and it required no "supernormal" wisdom to see that he would in all probability succumb to the next attack of his malady, especially if it happened in the depth of the winter. To talk of his death as "sudden" is an abuse of the English language, or an abuse of something still more universal.

Mrs. Besant did not know a Mahatma in 1889. At least, we assume that she is mistaken; otherwise we should have to say that she was juggling when she delivered her farewell address at the London Hall of Science in 1891. On that occasion she said nothing about knowing a Mahatma. She declared that, since Madame Blavatsky's death, she had received "letters in the same writing and from the same person." Nay, more; she said that her knowledge of Mahatmas had been secondhand during Madame Blavatsky's life; but, she added, "it is not so now, and it has not been so for many months." This chronology quite excludes her personal acquaintance with a Mahatma in 1889. As a matter of fact, she did not leave the National Secular Society until Bradlaugh resigned the presidency in 1890.

Mrs. Besant played those mysterious Mahatma letters ("on my honor as a lady") for all they were worth. Her announcement about them was the sensation of the day. Since then she has had to admit—under pressure—that the letters she trumpeted in this style were forgeries; and now she says that her reference to them was "altogether incidental."

The High Priestess of Theosophy does not wait till she has been in Devachan for a fresh incarnation. She has lots of new avatars on this side of the tomb. Having played out the old drama, she has started a new one, to fill up the empty benches. First, she played Madame Blavatsky and her Mahatmas; then she played Judge's forged Mahatma letters; and now she is playing a Mahatma of her own. It has taken her just four years to appropriate the Blavatsky's mantle.

Mrs. Besant will never equal that clever charlatan. She has not the necessary gifts for the part. Still, she is making as much progress as can be expected; and there is every likelihood of her drinking the cup of imposture to the very dregs.

Digitized by Google

A few months back the Australian press teemed with Theosophic and Spiritualistic rubbish. Mrs. Besant, who had been despised and hated most bitterly while she followed an honest and useful course of life, was now praised up and paraded before the public as an Eighth Wonder of the world, for no other reason than that she had made herself respectable by allying herself with a most transparent humbug—and humbug is the only respectable thing, as our readers know. She gave her sanction to one of Mrs. Mellon's open tricks, in Sydney; and a little later that dealer in spooks was most thoroughly exposed. A month or two passed, and Mrs. Besant was compelled to expose herself, and to inform the world that the stuff she had staked everything upon, stuff she had been as confident of as of her own existence, was—what? forgery! Still Theosophists and Spiritualists, like Adam and Eve, are "not ashamed." They brazen it out with a boldness worthy of a Catholic priest or a Salvationist. And the Ghosts and Mahatmas, like God and Christ, and the other Saints and Bugbears, decline to come to the rescue! This is extremely unkind of them. And it must be admitted that "Geordie" and "Koot Hoomi" are anything but gentlemen so to leave their lady friends in the lurch.—Liberator.

Archdeacon Farrar has had a plum from Lord Rosebery. He is appointed Dean of Canterbury. "In my Father's house are many mansions." Dr. Farrar is on the road to one of them—as a Bishop.

Dr. Farrar has made a lot of money by supplementing Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. His Life of Christ is said to have brought him over £2,000. Lucky man! Judas Iscariot, the cashier of the J. C. company, sold the entire business for £3 15s. There's more money in it now.

The following answer is said to have been given to a Cambridge Examiner: "We know little of the childhood of Christ; what knowledge we have we derive from Archdeacon Farrar."

The merry May Meetings, the Christian World list of which extends from April 1 to July 16, are now on, and parsons are almost as plentiful in the Strand as ballet girls. It gives them a nice outing, and all the religious societies an opportunity for crying out for funds, even while they proclaim the condition of London rivals that of Sodom and Gomorrah.

The small hall at St. Martin's Town Hall more than sufficed for the very small meeting of old ladies and young workers of the Christian Evidence Society. The report was rather doleful. Though the income, thanks to "the fact that the money contributed for the Special Provincial Lecturers' Fund has been temporarily appropriated to other departments," reached a total of £1,472 3s. 3½d., yet of this the secretaries and clerk took £519, besides office-rent and other expenses.

In the items for Secretaries there follows the words for "Administration, Correspondence, and Interviews with Sceptics, Examinations, etc." We fancy the interviews with sceptics must be most trying, and well worth all the money they receive, for we note that they do not report a single case of their having converted a recognisable sceptic.

The Report says: "The very heavy losses and depreciation of investments, the general tendency to give to the relief of physical necessities, and the large multiplication of new organisations of different kinds, will account for the straitness in finances of almost all religious societies." If the public know what return they get for their money, there would probably be further straitness. We note that the C. E. S. Committee "constantly and earnestly urge their agents to maintain a Christian spirit and bearing." The reports from our outdoor stations elucidate what sort of spirit and bearing this is.

The Protestant Church of Ireland has sat upon the Rev. James Hunt, rector of Donegore, for having taught doctrines contrary to the Articles in the Prayer Book. Mr. Hunt has signed a recantation. Three hundred years ago he would have been burnt first, and allowed time for recantation afterwards.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the veteran associate of Ernestine Rose in the advocacy of woman's rights, says: "During the fifty years since I went before the Legislature of New York to urge the rights of women, I have seen that the greatest trouble was that women believe themselves cursed of God, that they were the origin of sin, and that maternity is a curse, marriage a condition of slavery." These ideas are Bible sanctioned. Mrs. Stanton thought a remedy might be found in a revision of the Bible.

Had Mrs. Stanton tackled this business herself, giving her own comments on passages of the Bible affecting women, the probability is her work would have been a real instrument of woman's emancipation. But she formed a committee, associating with herself such persons as the Rev. Olympia Brown, Rev. Phœbe Hanaford, Mrs. Lord, Frances Ellen Burr, and Lady Somerset. The result appears mainly to be that these ladies revise the Bible to say what they wish it to say. They point to the first chapter of Genesis as showing the equal creation of man and woman, while dismissing the rib story in the second chapter as contradictory and belittling the story of the first chapter. On the third chapter they point out "the worthy ambition of the first woman for knowledge." Altogether the woman's revision of the Bible is likely to be a curiosity.

The inhabitants of Rockford, Illinois, are still concerned about Christ Schweinfurth, who is said to have over forty young women in his "Heaven" adjacent to their city. These "handmaidens of the Lord," as Christ Schweinfurth calls them, are said to occasionally have children by the Holy Ghost, for the followers of Schweinfurth hold that the age of miracles is not past, the arm of the Lord is not shortened, neither is his power less than in the days of the Apostles.

A new Messiah, or rather a new deity, has arisen in America. Of course the new deity is feminine; Mrs. Eddy is her name. She is said to be a manifestation of the feminine deity, the only begotten daughter of the bi-sexual He-She. It is said that the Christian scientists have put up for her a church in Boston, having stained-glass windows with portraits of the lady with a halo, and representing her in conversation with God.

Matthew Arnold said: "There is nothing one would more desire for a person or a document one greatly values than to make them independent of miracles." In pursuance of this idea, "advanced" men of God talk much of the natural foundations of Christianity. They either discard or slur over the miraculous, evidently thinking their faith will float more buoyantly were the supernatural element thrown overboard. But to do this consistently, it must be done wholesale. If, for instance, the temptation by the devil and perching on the pinnacle of the temple is only an allegory, may not the resurrection be an allegory? The Gospels without the miraculous would be more barren than the play of Hamlet with the character of the Prince of Denmark omitted.

The story of Saul and his séance with the witch of Endor has often been cited as confirmatory of Spiritism. But R. Phillips, writing in the Spiritist Two Worlds, rejects it as unhistorical. He says: "Now, we do not believe that the spirit world is a subterranean one, or that the departed exist in a state of drowsy oblivion. The very opposite is the truth, and, so far from regarding intercourse with us as an operation which disturbs and annoys them, our spirit friends unanimously tell us that it is one of their greatest pleasures, and we have no reason to doubt it."

If the greatest pleasure of the spirit world is to turn earthly tables and play the banjo in dark cabinets, all we can say is that we sympathise with the ghost of Samuel, who asked, "Why hast thou disquieted me to bring me up?" The poor old prophet had been buried at Ramah, forty miles distant, and was calmly snoozing in Sheol when the witch trotted him out to meet Saul. He did not like it, though his visitor was a king. Yet the Spiritists want us to credit that the greatest pleasure of the defunct Shakespeare is to come back and talk through a medium to John Snooks!

American cities have been deluged with tracts with such taking titles as "Flee from the Wrath to Come," "The Terrors of an Endless Hell," "The Misery of the Damned," "The Eternity of Punishment," "A Lost Soul," "Do You Love Jesus?" and so on. "These tracts," says the Progressive Thinker, "were bought in immense quantities by religious fanatics, and were freely distributed among the people, with the avowed purpose to save poor, lost souls from endless woe. A recent trial at law in New York court has taken us behind the curtains. A party testified that he made a fortune in the manufacture and sale of these frightful tracts; that he engaged with another party in a speculative project purchasing whiskey; that his partner had diverted a portion of the money from its intended use; and that the action was brought to right the grievance." The union of hell-fire with the whiskey business has occasioned much comment; but, after all, it is a natural affinity.

Professor Flinders Petrie, on taking the honorary degree of LL.D. at Edinburgh, told of a new race he had discovered as living in Egypt, thirty miles North of Thebes, on the western side of the Nile. They had a custom of cutting off the head at burial. The race knew and venerated the dog. He believed the race existed 3000 B.C., or before the time of Noah's deluge, which evidently did not affect Egypt.

Digitized by Google

Max O'Rell says that in France there are many men who can swear and many who can sing hymns; but the Anglo-Saxon seems to have developed a capacity for doing both.

The Rev. George W. West, of the Episcopal Church of Manville, Rhode Island, has been forced to resign. This is not a case of heresy, for Mr. West is said to have an excellent reputation as a preacher and worker; but he was too fond of whist, tennis, and tobacco to please the candidates for white shirts, wings, and golden harps and crowns. The Chicago Tribune says this West case reminds it of the more pronounced weakness of the Kansas preacher, who was forced to resign because, while he was a strong exhorter, an eloquent preacher, and a man of great gifts in prayer, he was "apt to be quarrelsome when he was drunk!"

William Purkis, a Truro "Court Hairdresser," who was superintendent of the Congregational Church Sunday-school, has been arrested for selling bicycles, which he had never paid for, at less than cost price.

In Oklahoma there is a town called Tipperusalem. One founder wanted it called "Jerusalem," and the other "Tipperary," and in order to avoid a row they compromised.

It is recorded that, once upon a time, the parish minister of Lochnaben prayed for the Town Council, "such as they are." Last Sunday another minister, preaching in the same place upon Peter's denial of Christ, said: "He cursed and swore just like one of your Commissioners." That is bringing the Gospels up to date.

The clergyman at Barrow-on-Soar will not officiate at the new cemetery because it has not been consecrated, and the Home Secretary also will not permit its being simply dedicated. The consecration is only a pretext for getting more clerical fees. Can any superstition be more foolish than that of fancying that the earth in which one is buried needs holy water or prayers?

A Wesleyan trustee writes to the Times urging that Wesleyans should oppose the disestablishment of the Welsh Church, because otherwise the principle of secular application may some day be applied to Wesleyan trust property, which, he shows, is often held as a public charitable trust.

The Opium Commission has at last issued its report, which quite goes against the missionary view of the drug. The Commissioners say that it is considered the common domestic medicine of the people of India; that, taken in moderation, it is not attended with ill effects, and that excess is exceptional.

The Girls' Friendly Society is a philanthropic institution, receiving subscriptions from all quarters; but it appears that Nonconformists are debarred from all share in the management. If run on sectarian lines, it should appeal for support only to those in the Church of England.

The bubonic plague at Hong Kong has been followed by a similar or worse outbreak at the Portuguese settlement in Macao. Truly, the tender mercies of the Lord are manifold.

A Russian journal reports that the town of Kutschan, in Khorasan, has been swallowed up by an earthquake. It is said that, at a second shock, the already shattered town disappeared into an immense chasm in the earth. The number of victims of this visitation of God must be many thousands.

Further shocks of earthquake in Central Europe killed a good number, and drove many fairly out of their minds. At Laibach more than 20,000 persons camped out. There was a severe frost, and the women and children suffered greatly from the cold. Any human person guilty of such wanton destruction and cruelty would be considered a monster unfit to live. Yet we are told to credit everything to an all-good God.

An Ohio preacher said, "Chicago is the nearest approach to hell we have upon this earth." He got a call from the pork city at a larger salary, and made haste to go to the terrestrial Sheol.

The Archbishop of Paris has given the blessing of the Church upon the French invasion of Madagascar. He says the mission of France is that of Christianity and civilisation. Probably some of his hearers do not know that the Hovas, against whom the expedition is directed, are much better Christians than the majority of Frenchmen are.

Is fetishism extinct in the Church of England? Some people see distinct traces of fetishism in the rite of Holy Communion. Idolatry is yet more evident in the "Adoration of the Cross," which was performed at various Ritualistic churches on Good Friday. At St. Margaret's, Anfield, Liverpool, there was a procession of the cross. The hymn sung was the Christian version of the old phallikon:—

> Faithful Cross! above all other
> One and only noble Tree!
> None in foliage, none in blossom,
> None in fruit thy peers may be.
> Sweetest wood and sweetest iron,
> Sweetest weight is hung on thee.

The physicians of a new hospital erected in Brunswick are said to have been much vexed by the Minister of the Interior, a very High Churchman, having ordered that religious mottoes should be painted on the walls. They say that patients who see such mottoes constantly before them are easily excited, and their cure is hindered. They have had such mottoes banished at least from the operation-room. Fancy sick people being greeted with "Prepare to meet thy God," or "Where will you spend Eternity?"

Religion crystallises even commendable principles into a narrow and irrational form. Thus Dr. Hendley says that Jains of the strictest kind will not even drink water from the spring, because it contains life, but use that which has been drawn by other people from the wells, as the sin of destroying life then falls on the latter instead of on themselves. The idea of passing on sins and disorders to others is common to all Hindus.

Dr. F. Peake, the secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, has been going out of his way, or perhaps all bigotry is in his way, in urging people to write to members of Parliament in opposition to the Religious Prosecutions Abolition Bill, which is set down for second reading on the 26th instant.

The first day of April was appropriately chosen by the Rev. Jacob Primmer, the Dunfermline anti-Romanist prophet, for a visit to the Vatican. He did not see the Scarlet Woman, but her influence was there; for while denouncing "a glaring imposture" placarded on the wall of the Mamertine Prison, which says that Paul was immured there, his feet slipped, and he fell headlong into the dungeon. Doubtless the monkish guide regarded this as a judgment on his unbelief, and will henceforth hold up the reverend anti-Romanist as a warning to sceptics. The Aberdeen Evening Express, which tells the tale with wicked glee, says: "The sooner that Jacob scuttles beyond the precincts of Rome and its sphere of influence the better, and he would be wisely advised were he to become of the same mind as Baillie Nicol Jarvie regarding his Hielan' kinsfolk, that his 'buits might be foo o' boilin' het parritch ere he again sets foot in such a —— country.'"

There have been a lot of disturbances at the Vestry meetings this Easter. The laity are not so subservient to the men of God as in days of yore. In some cases they objected to their ritualism; in others to high-handed proceedings in other directions; and at the parish church of Ogley Hay, Brownhills, they passed a resolution unanimously protesting against the attitude of the vicar (the Rev. S. F. Arrowsmith) in stifling discussion, and also "against the un-Christianlike and ungentlemanly conduct shown by him at the funeral of the late Mr. J. Poole, who had resided in the parish for thirty years, and was highly respected."

Mr. A. E. Fletcher, who retired from the editorial conduct of the Daily Chronicle, and is seeking the suffrages of the electors of Greenock, says he wants Government to be carried on "in accordance with the Ten Commandments and the doctrines of the Sermon on the Mount." We could understand this if he were an Anarchist, desiring no Government at all, for the doctrines he esteems would certainly reduce it to a minimum. Army and navy, judges, magistrates, and policemen would be abolished, and, with these gone, people might find out they could even, at a pinch, dispense with members of Parliament.

Talking about religious folks, we are reminded that "knee drill," which is supposed to be a very cheerful and elevating form of devotional exercise, much appreciated by members of the Salvation Army, has led to the suppression of the Army in Toulon, the Sub-Prefect of that particular French town having issued an order in which he says "knee drills" are manifestations of a religion which is not recognised by the State. Perhaps the "General" will find a more commonplace and sensible description of this especial form of religious evolution.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, April 28, Victoria Hall, Toward-road, Sunderland: 11, "The Shadow of the Sword"; 3, "Was Shakespeare a Christian?" 7, "The Philosophy of Secularism."

Tuesday, April 30, Athenæum, Godolphin-road, Goldhawk-road, Shepherd's Bush, W.: 8.30, "How the Bible Stands Now."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—April 28, Hall of Science, London. May 5, Glasgow; 6, 7, 8, and 9, debate at Glasgow with Dr. Jamieson; 12, Dundee; 19, Camberwell; 26, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

A. Broadbent, 9 Peter-street, Manchester, repeats his offer to send vegetarian recipes free to any reader of the Freethinker.

A. G. Levett.—Thanks for your batches of cuttings.

Well Wishes.—Mr. Foote could not allow Mr. Watts to bear the responsibility of any deficit arising from his School Board contest in Finsbury, which was undertaken at the desire of the N.S.S. Executive. He has just paid the balance of £11 and closed the account.

W. H. Spivey.—Thanks for your encouraging letter. It is pleasant to find the Huddersfield friends keep a warm place in their hearts for Mr. Foote, who wishes he could visit them more frequently.

N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—Blackburn Branch, 3s. 6d.

W. Clogg.—Your suggestion shall be considered.

P. Braham.—Your friend is about right.

J. Hayes.—It is enough if all assist to the extent of their power.

Ingersoll Admirer.—Colonel Ingersoll is under no obligation to reply to any and every Christian who likes to attack him. He has replied to Judge Black, Dr. Field, Talmage, Mr. Gladstone, and Cardinal Manning. He has not replied to Father Lambert, and no doubt for very good reasons.

R. J. Murray.—Thanks for your letter. Mr. Foote did mention the matter to your Committee when he was with you, and said there was no time to lose. If Nottingham is nominated next year, we shall feel bound to use our influence on its behalf.

W. Simons.—Glad to see the Kingsland open-air work is to be continued.

Liverpool Atheist.—We value your appreciation of our treatment of the Liverpool Pulpit attack on Bradlaugh.

E. Smedley.—(1) We did not preserve the report, and cannot now check the references. Of course we should be sorry to do the reverend gentleman an injustice. (2) There was certainly no ban upon the Christian religion for 250 years. The story of the Christian persecutions is, for the most part, a monstrous mass of falsehood. (3) The savage act of Nero, if it really happened, was confined to Rome. There was no general persecution of Christians at that time, as Gibbon clearly shows.

Newo.—Send the Freethought literature to Mr. Forder. He will see to its judicious distribution. Thanks for the cutting. Glad to hear you will send what you can in answer to our appeal.

Isolated Freethinker.—Pleased to hear we have aided in your mental emancipation. We do not know whether there are Freethinkers enough at Worcester to form and maintain a Branch. The Leicester Secular Society does not send us a lecture notice; of course we should gladly insert it. Any Freethinker can attend the Bristol Conference, sitting behind the N.S.S. members, and taking no part in discussing the Society's business. Why not join before then?

Papers Received.—New York Herald—Literary Digest—Clarion—Two Worlds—British Temperance Advocate—Darwen News—Isle of Man Times—Liberty—Lucifer—Nya Sanningar—Open Court—Liberator—Royal Cornwall Gazette—Huddersfield Daily Examiner—Echo—Freidenker—Der Arme Teufel—Solidarity—Aberdeen Express—Progressive Thinker—Twentieth Century—Blue Grass Blade—Sporting Chronicle—Birmingham Daily Post—Financial Weekly Bulletin—Northern Gossip.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

HALL OF SCIENCE.

I do not know whether I shall be able to raise the £600 necessary to extinguish Mr. R. O. Smith's mortgage (as vendor) upon the London Hall of Science; but if I do not succeed it will not be my fault.

Very little time remains, and those who mean to help must do so by next Tuesday.

None of the money sent in will be lost. Not a single share will be allotted unless we are in a position to settle with Mr. Smith. If we have to say to him: "Well, you must exercise your rights as mortgagee"—every penny of share-application money, and every penny of donation, will be returned.

Applications have been received, either by the National Secular Hall Society's secretary or by myself, for about 120 fresh shares. I cannot print a complete list of these applications. The best plan is to give a few items from the correspondence.

Mr. Samuel Seal sends me a cheque for £30 for as many shares, which is a sufficient pledge of his sympathy. I know some other Freethinkers who could easily spare as much. Will they send it?

Mr. William Clarkson sends me a cheque for £15; £10 for as many shares in his own name, and £5 as a donation. "The necessity of having headquarters," he says, "must be apparent to every member of the Secular Society." This gentleman lives in Scotland, and his example should stimulate the Londoners, who have hardly done their duty in this matter.

Mr. C. J. Pottage, who is a Londoner, sends me £5 for five shares in my own name.

G. R., another Londoner, who was such a good friend of our cause in the old Bradlaugh days, sends £2 as a donation, and writes: "I hope you will soon be able to collect the necessary amount for such a very important object."

A sailor on board a steamship, just about to sail, having seen our appeal, sends a donation of 10s. before leaving old England's shores. He thinks that if the Secularists are in earnest about the honor of Charles Bradlaugh they will find the money for a splendid memorial in London.

A Cheltenham friend applies for a share in token of "my esteem for you and our late leader."

A Torquay friend applies for four shares, and wishes he could take more. He is in a priest-ridden place, but he is glad to help Freethought where it has a better chance.

Mr. W. H. Spivey, of Huddersfield, thinks the party ought to seize this opportunity. He applies for two new shares, and says that other Huddersfield friends will do something. He wants to know why every Freethinker cannot take at least one share. We should then have splendid headquarters in the metropolis.

Mr. J. Partridge, secretary of the Birmingham Branch, applies for four more shares; another friend will apply for five, and the members are to see what can be done at their meeting on Thursday (April 25).

Mr. C. Heaton, a working man at Woodville, Burton-on-Trent, applies for one share, and calls upon five hundred working men to do the same "as a proof of gratitude to Charles Bradlaugh and our present leader."

Mr. John Hughes, whose donation of £1 was the first received, trusts that "one thousand others will do likewise."

Mr. G. F. Wenborn, a Londoner, takes five shares, and says he will take twenty, or even a hundred.

The donations I have to acknowledge are as follows: G. W. Foote, £5; C. J. Pottage, £5; G. R., £2; J. Hayes, 1s.; John Hughes, £1; W. O. Hawes, £2; J. Bevins, 5s.; John and James McGlashan, £2; Isolated Freethinker, 1s.; T. H. Elwen, £1; Old Shellback, 10s.; William Clarkson, £5.

I have now to make a final appeal. Those who can take shares, even if they cannot pay up at once, should do so immediately. Those who prefer to send donations, to be invested in shares in the name of the N.S.S., or in that of any person they indicate, should send their cheques or postal orders without a moment's delay. Those who prefer to make a promise, on condition that the attempt is successful, are invited to communicate with me. Even the "rank and file"—and there are thousands of them—might bestir themselves. Every one who reads this should decide at once what he can afford to give, however small the sum may be, even if only a shilling; then he (or she) should go to the post-office, obtain an order for the amount, and forward it to me. I will acknowledge every penny in next week's Freethinker. G. W. FOOTE.

The Buffalo Express gives the following as the subjects of Sunday pulpit discourses in that city: "Is the Trilby Craze Dying Out?"; "Fitzsimmons v. Corbett;" "How the Parson Spends his Vocation;" "Should our Daughters Marry Foreign Noblemen?"; and "High Sleeves and Theatre Hats." It wants to know if the Gospel and the old scheme of salvation have clean gone out of fashion.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote's morning and afternoon audiences at Glasgow on Sunday were (for him) only fair; partly, perhaps, owing to the number of friends who were finishing a holiday at the seaside. In the evening, however, the hall was crowded, many persons even standing in the lower passages. The third lecture was much applauded. Mr. Gilmour, who was in the chair, strongly invited discussion, but no one responded to the invitation. "General" Evans, late of the Salvation Army, but now on his own account, was present in the afternoon taking notes, but he did not raise any opposition. A collection was taken for the N.S.S. General Fund.

The Glasgow Branch, we are glad to hear, is stronger than ever in its membership. This is very gratifying and encouraging after such a long spell of hard weather and commercial adversity.

Mr. Gilmour will be known to the N.S.S. delegates and members who attended the Newcastle and Hanley Conferences. We are much pleased to hear that he thinks of travelling south in July or August. He will have three or four Sundays to spare, which should be greedily snapped up by Branches between Glasgow and London. We shall see, if he does come south, that our London friends have an opportunity of hearing him. Mr. Gilmour is a man of high ability and many accomplishments; he is also a capital speaker.

Mr. Foote lectures at Sunderland again to-day (April 28). Since his previous visit the proprietors and lessees of halls have been more or less intimidated by the bigots. One refused to let unless the police guaranteed the lectures as "all right." Even the lessee of the hall which is engaged stipulated for the mildest subjects. The Victoria Hall is the largest in Sunderland, seating about 4,000 people. It is to be hoped that every local Freethinker will do his best to secure large meetings.

On Tuesday evening (April 30) Mr. Foote lectures for the West London Branch in the Athenæum, Godolphin-road, Shepherd's Bush, on "How the Bible Stands Now." Complimentary tickets have been sent to many of the local clergy.

Last Sunday morning Mr. Charles Watts lectured, to a crowded audience, for the Walworth Liberal and Radical Club, taking for his subject "The French Revolution." Mr. W. M. Thompson, L.C.C., editor of Reynolds's Newspaper, presided. Several questions were asked and answered at the close of the lecture, and a hearty vote of thanks was given to the lecturer.

In the evening Mr. Watts had a capital audience at the Hall of Science. Mr. Rowney, as usual, made an excellent chairman. Unfortunately, soon after Mr. Watts's arrival at the Hall he was suddenly seized with a most severe attack of cramp in his left leg. He had, in consequence, to abbreviate his lecture to three-quarters of an hour. The audience deeply sympathised with him, and two medical gentlemen present rendered valuable aid. It is the first attack of the kind our colleague has had, and we hope it will be the last. We are glad to report his entire recovery.

This Sunday evening (April 28) Mr. Watts will again occupy the platform at the Hall of Science, taking for his subject "Man and the Universe, from a Christian and Secular Standpoint."

Mr. S. P. Putnam's engagements are completed for his Sunday evening lectures during his coming visit to this country. There are, however, several week-nights for which arrangements can be made for a visit from him. Applications should be made at once to Mr. Charles Watts for vacant dates. In all cases a stamped and directed envelope must be enclosed for a reply.

"Nunquam" devotes another pretty column to the Methodist Times, which started the rumor that the editor of the Clarion had been captured by the High Church party. After some excellent chaff, Mr. Blatchford says frankly: "My religion is the religion of humanity. God has never revealed himself to me. Perhaps because I am too small for his notice; perhaps because he is too great for my understanding."

"Nunquam" says he doesn't know the difference between High Church and Low Church. He doesn't even know what Evangelical Christianity is. "Because," he adds, "I never thought it worth while to inquire." His conclusion is as follows: "Let the Methodist Times go on its way rejoicing: the Clarion is not to be caught with chaff."

The Nya Sanningar, the new organ of the Swedish Freethinkers, presents a very creditable appearance, and shows its decided character by reproducing a number of sketches from the French Comic Bible. Petrus Asplund is the editor, and we wish him all success in his venture.

Mr. Symes, noticing the Literary World review of our book on Voltaire, says: "Could we have better signs and proofs that Secularism, as the antithesis of Christianity, is gaining the ascendancy than these two facts—namely, that our universities are adopting the very views which Voltaire and Paine promulgated, and that these two men are now honored by Christians, after the churches have heaped upon them unlimited and horrible abuse for more than one hundred years? So bitterly and terribly were Voltaire and Paine abused, in my hearing, by parsons, by Sunday-school bosses, by pious tract writers and others, in my early days, that I felt a perfect horror of them; and long after I became un-Christianised I found it impossible to quell the old prejudice against those good and most useful men. Now we find Christians speaking in decent terms of them, and even hinting at an admiration for them which they can hardly venture to express just yet. To me nothing can be more encouraging than these facts, for they show the trend of modern thought and sentiment to be directly away from Christianity, and in favor of the forces which have rendered that superstition effete."

Secular Thought, of Toronto, devotes nearly the whole of its issue of April 6 to the Manitoba School Question, which is creating great excitement throughout the Dominion. It is felt that if the Catholics carry their point and compel the Manitobans to support their schools, they will virtually be masters of Canada. It is likely, however, that their claims will give an impetus in the direction of secular education. Messrs. Ellis, Adams, & Pringle have very good articles on the subject.

In Scranton, Pennsylvania, Judge Gunster decided that Bible reading and exposition in the public schools was in contravention of the law of the State.

Mr. Forder will lecture at Camberwell on Sunday evening, the lecture arranged for having fallen through. His subject will be "Science and Christianity."

The secretary of the Wood Green Branch asks us to announce that they begin their course of week-night lectures on Thursday, May 2. Mr. Cohen is to be the speaker, and as this is his first lecture after his absence in the north, we hope he will be well supported. The secretary does not inform us of the exact time and place of the meetings, but we presume those in the district will know.

The Finsbury Park Branch will hold a meeting at 91 Mildmay-park, N., on Sunday, at 3 p.m., when matters for the Conference Agenda will be considered. A full attendance of members is particularly requested.

Kingsland Freethinkers are requested to meet at Mr. Davey's, 21 Castle-street, to-day (April 28) at 12 noon, to make final arrangements for the open-air lectures at Ridley-road. The first lecture will be delivered on the following Sunday morning by Mr. P. H. Snelling, on "Secularism and Citizenship."

The Edmonton Branch begins open-air work to-day (April 28) at 7 o'clock, when Mr. James will lecture on "Still It Moves." Local Freethinkers should attend and support the speaker.

Mr. A. B. Moss, who is a member of the new Camberwell Vestry, was actually proposed as a churchwarden. Angels and ministers of grace defend us! The clergymen on the Board were smitten with amazement. There was some humorous speechifying, in which Mr. Moss took part. He said he felt quite qualified for that high function, but on the whole he would rather not stand. Mr. Moss, therefore, is not a churchwarden.

Mr. C. Cohen completes his month's mission at Newcastle-on-Tyne to-day (April 28). We hope the local Freethinkers will rally round him in strong force on this occasion. After the evening lecture he will address the Branch members on a matter of great importance to them.

The Committee of the West Ham Public Libraries send us "sincere thanks" for our donation of the Freethinker. We hope it will do good in Mr. Keir Hardie's constituency.

Crowded meetings listened to the debate at New Brompton between Mr. Foote and the Rev. A. J. Waldron. There were two chairmen, but not work enough for one, as the debaters kept the peace, and the audience was most orderly. Major Scott Moncrieff presided the first evening, and Mr. Charles Watts the second. The major, of course, was well known already; Mr. Watts was a stranger, but his appearance was a good enough introduction. Mr. Waldron is popular among the Christians at New Brompton. He is certainly a fluent and capable speaker. Of course he had the last speech; Christians generally manage to get that, and they generally abuse the opportunity. Mr. Waldron's last speech was a long way off the Resurrection. It was a general panegyric on Christianity, supported by recitations from Browning, Tennyson, and Newman. Still, it satisfied the Christians, and the Freethinkers did not care to interrupt.

Digitized by Google

A MINISTER'S FUNCTIONS.

THE Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, a Broad Church minister, who is said to be the most popular reverend in America since the death of Henry Ward Beecher, writes in the Forum Library on "What are a Christian Preacher's Functions?" He notices that the preacher is getting to be looked on mainly as an entertainer, and he does not like it. "The preacher's function," he says, "is not that of a play actor or orator, or even a moral reformer, but that of a messenger of God." He justifies denominationalism on the ground that "experience has proved the truth of Christ's prophecy, that each shepherd would have his own flock, who would hear his voice, but would not hear the voice of a stranger." This citation shows Mr. Abbott's own methods of dealing with the Bible. There is no such prophecy as Mr. Abbott speaks of, but in the very same chapter where Jesus is made to say, "The sheep follow their own shepherd, for they know his voice," he says, "There shall be one fold and one shepherd," which Catholics rightly cite as a condemnation of denominationalism.

Dr. Lyman Abbott wants to sell a new article under the old label, to offer evolutionism under the guise of Christianity. He says: "It is useless for the ministry to go on preaching a catastrophic theology to an age which has adopted an evolutionary philosophy; and it is a great deal worse than useless for the ministry to identify religion with a catastrophic philosophy, and so incite the thoughtful men and women of the age to relegate religion with that philosophy to the lumber room where old and cast-off furniture is kept." "Religion," he virtually says, "must follow science. Formerly science was catastrophic; it is now evolutionary. The change began, at least it was emphasised, in geology, which half a century or more ago taught that the world was brought into its present shape by forces now operative, and through phenomena akin to those of comparatively recent history. The nebular hypothesis carried back this evolutionary theory of world-building to very remote ages. Philology undertook to account for the difference of tongues by an analogous, natural, and long-continued process. Historical science was re-created on a new basis, upon the hypothesis that epochs created men rather than men epochs. Anthropology traced all variations of race upon the earth back to a single pair, denying the theory of special creations. Zoology and embryology carried the process further back, claiming to explain the differentiation of the different animal species, and then the difference between men and the other animals, and, finally, the difference between the animal and the vegetable, as due, in a similar manner, to gradual growth, not to sudden and divine interventions. The scientific thought of the present age is as truly constructed on this evolutionary theory of change by growth as the astronomical thought is on the Copernican theory."

Religion formerly taught a God who came from nowhere, who at some moment of time made all things out of nothing, man from dust and woman from his rib. The function of the modern messenger of God is to give a totally different message, but one in which the difference is wrapped up in a mass of verbiage and duplicity. After this, we are not surprised that Dr. Abbott concludes by saying: "I add, to any young man who may read these pages, and who is deliberating the question of his profession, that never was 'the cloth' or 'the pulpit' less venerated than now, never was so scant respect paid to the mere vestment and standing place; but never did an age or a nation so greatly need the prophet as this age and this American people, and never was age or nation more ready to hear and heed the prophet, if he comes to it inspired by the consciousness of a divine message." Since, evidently, the men of God are not inspired by the consciousness of a divine message, but palpably eager to put new wine into old bottles and palm it off as the original article, we do not wonder that the cloth has fallen into disrespect.

UNCLE BENJAMIN.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

THE French writer who laid it down that science is bankrupt, probably only meant to express his own inaptitude for, and indifference to, the serious investigation of facts, and his preference for the realm of imagination, wherein he can build what castles in the air he pleases. If he came calmly to consider matters, he might find that it is science, or systematised knowledge, which has given him the possibility of leisure to indulge his fancy. Nay, he might discover that the actual facts of science—the ascertained distance of the stars, for instance—are so stupendous as not only to outsoar his imagination, but absolutely to pass beyond his conception. Religion has myriads of ministers who every week extol its triumphs, yet the fact remains that all we call civilisation is due, not to religion, but to science. There is plenty of religion among savages; indeed, it may be said the more barbarous a nation is, the more attention it will bestow on religion; but not until it has some systematised knowledge will it make progress. Abyssinia is a Christian country, as much as, or more so, than England. What makes the difference but the acquisitions of science? All the preaching in the world has not done so much in the interests of peace and civilisation as the mere intercommunication of peoples, brought about by science. And there is this difference between science and religion: the one is constantly expanding, the other constantly contracting. Religion was first in the field, and claimed all the ground. It pretended to settle every question in regard to world-making and man- and woman-making. It laid down the laws for human life here, and pretended to tell our destiny hereafter. But exactly as science has extended, as knowledge of nature has increased, so have religious pretensions been forced to retire. Religious teachings have been found to be in contradiction to the conclusions of geology, of astronomy, and of biology. The religious account of the origin of the world and of man is found to be incorrect; and, now being found in error upon things upon which we are capable of judging, it asks to be credited unreservedly upon things which no human person can possibly decide.

The men of God now speak of the reconciliation of science and religion. They are like the Chinese saying to the Japanese, "Let us be at peace," since they have found themselves beaten at every encounter. But they cry "peace, peace," where there is no peace. The basis and method of science is entirely different from that of religion. Religion rests on authority; science on investigation. Religion is stationary; science progressive. The one starts with a priori assumption of a God; the other works inductively, and questions all assumptions. Religion is based on some supposed revelation, either universal or special; science upon reason. Religion pre-supposes the inefficiency of the human faculties; science their relative sufficiency. The only peace possible is by the constant surrender of religion to science, and the accommodation of the theories of the former to those of the latter. The surrender may make for a time a modus vivendi; but science as it advances soon makes fresh demands, and religion again has to retire.

To reserve some territory to itself, religion has now to live entirely in castles in the air. It rests not on verifiable facts, but on an assumption of supernatural existences and an after-life altogether too nebulous to be brought within the domain of science. In plain terms, it has to do with fictions, while reason has to do with facts. The one points to an imaginary cloudland hereafter; the other deals with the actualities of the present world. Religion gives no guarantee for human progress, for, if evil and misery were once compatible with the existence of God, they may be so for ever; but science, by the gradual accumulation of knowledge, and consequently of power, gives assurance of the amelioration of human destiny. It is science which has taught us to manfully grapple with the evils that surround us, and to overcome them, instead of prostrating ourselves before them in a spirit of prayer and abject submission. It substitutes work for prayer, conduct for creed, and the service of man for the vain worship of God.

Digitized by Google

LUCIANUS.

BOOK CHAT.

MR. KENNETH FEARINGTON BELLAIRS, who has published a pamphlet entitled Is Christianity a Forgery? Is English History a Fraud? is a thorough-going disciple of Professor Edwin Johnson. He holds that all Church history prior to the invention of printing is forged; that the painted missals are no earlier than oil paintings; that the oldest abbeys and churches are but between 400 and 500 years old, as proved by the age of the trees around them; and that the whole pretence of antiquity was part of a scheme to despoil the people.

* * *

Mr. Bellairs further holds that the Romans were not long in Britain, and that when they left they were followed by gangs of continental adventurers and monks, who subdued the barbarous people and backed up their pretensions by fraud. He discredits the story of the battle of Hastings, no bodies ever having been recovered there. Battle Abbey—dated nearly three hundred years after the battle it was to commemorate—he dates about 1600. Domesday Book, which, everyone knows, is written in an Italian hand, he says is in Dog Latin of the Tudor period; and, in short, he regards all history prior to the invention of printing as legendary.

* * *

Mr. Bellairs has visited a number of places of alleged antiquity, whose pretensions he finds break down under scrutiny. His conclusions are given in a rough and ready style, and are none the less likely to be acceptable to those who only know the facts that the Church somehow got possession of the best lands, and has ever since battened on the tithes. If Bishop Stubbs is too busy to refute Mr. Bellairs, perhaps some antiquarian like the Rev. Augustus Jessop will come forward and do so, for he professes himself only anxious to arrive at the truth.

* * *

Dr. P. S. George, of Lincoln, Nebraska, proposes to compile and publish a book detailing accounts of the religious insanity of the present time. It is likely to be a big work. The superintendents of lunatic asylums could give much information on the pernicious character of the vaunted faith in another world, though too often cases of religious insanity are registered as simply melancholia with delusions.

* * *

Messrs. George Bell & Sons propose to add to "Bohn's Library" an illustrated edition of Motley's History of the Rise of the Dutch Republic, with an introduction by Moncure D. Conway; and Comte's Positive Philosophy, as translated and condensed by Harriet Martineau, with an introduction by Mr. Frederic Harrison. Each of these will be in three volumes.

* * *

A new English Dialect Dictionary is announced. It is to be a complete vocabulary of all dialect words still in use, or known to have been in use during the last two hundred years. It will be edited by Professor Joseph Wright, and issued to subscribers only. Subscription of a guinea a year to be remitted to the Rev. Prof. Skeat, 2 Salisbury-villas, Cambridge.

* * *

The catalogues of Mr. Bertram Dobell, of 75 Charing Cross-road, the publisher of the complete poetical works of James Thomson, are always interesting. The one just issued, besides having many interesting and special items, such as first editions of Fielding, Swinburne, Landor, etc., has some interesting notes, one given to An Essay on Government, the now scarce work of Mrs. Lee, the Female Infidel, of whom a sketch is given in the Secular Almanack of this year.

* * *

The Daily News, reviewing Madame du Hausset's Private Memoirs of Louis XV., says: "In that Court of King Louis all is corruption. The palace is a moral posthouse under the thinnest varnish. Take away one or two honest people—such as Dr. Quesnay and M. de Morigny, the Pompadour's brother—and the brilliant swarms of courtiers are for the most part pimps, panders, procuresses, adulterers, spies, intriguers, liars, swindlers. One of their most curious characteristics is their combination of a scrupulous regard for the forms of religion, with an utter indifference to its spirit." From the king downward they were childishly superstitious, and also selfish and sensual. They were all horrified at Frederick the Great's "irreligion."

In these memoirs of Madame de Pompadour's lady's maid, says the Daily News, "the arch-impostor, the Count de St. Germain, is pretty fully described. A Cagliostro of an earlier time, the Count had, according to his own account, already lived two thousand years. He expected to live five hundred more. He laid claim to the power of conferring long life. He resisted the temptation of living five years longer and seeing the Revolution. He died in 1784, 'in the midst of his enthusiastic disciples, and to their infinite astonishment at his sharing the common lot.' As a miracle worker he could have put the Blavatskyite congregation to shame. But there was this difference between him and the thaumaturgists of our own day—he was clever, amusing and accomplished."

TRIA JUNCTA IN UNO.

"According to Luke, Jesus, having been born in Bethlehem, was taken, after forty days, to Jerusalem, and there publicly presented in the temple; after which his parents returned with him to Nazareth. On the other hand, according to Matthew, after the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem, his parents were warned to flee with him into Egypt, since Herod, at Jerusalem, would be lying in wait for the child to destroy him. This warning was obeyed; hence, according to Luke, Jesus was publicly presented in Jerusalem at the very time when, according to Matthew, he was carried to Egypt to avoid being seen in Jerusalem."—Judge C. B. Waite, in the "Investigator."

THE Judge, perhaps from weariness, has not disclosed all the strange things that crowded themselves into the little space covered by his remarks. Not only was the youngster in two or three places at once, but he was there for as many different reasons. Of course he went to Egypt to escape the slaughter of innocents, and he had to be in Jerusalem for presentation at the altar (circumcision?); but the Egyptian excursion was for still another purpose—namely, that of fulfilling prophecy—"Out of Egypt have I called my son"—though no such prophecy had ever been made about him; neither does it fit the case, as Jesus was not called out of Egypt, but out of Galilee into Egypt. Incidentally, he must be conveyed to Nazareth to verify another prophecy—"He shall be called a Nazarene"—though the prophets never spoke these words of anybody. Matthew, who makes this queer break, appears not to have been aware that Nazareth was the habitat of Joseph; that an angel had visited Mary there; and that when Joseph, with his female and young, "turned aside into Galilee," and "came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth," he was merely going home. Matthew and Luke should have "got together." Some of our Irish citizens who, two weeks ago, celebrated Sunday and Monday, March 17 and 18, to the glory of their patron saint, explain that St. Patrick had two birthdays "because he was twins." In view of the variety of localities occupied simultaneously by the subject of these remarks, there seems to be no escape from the conclusion that he was triplets. I charge the Christian world nothing for this prop to the doctrine of the Trinity.

GEO. E. MACDONALD.

Belief Not of the Will.

Said Sir Thomas More, in his Utopia, three and a half centuries ago: "I am fully persuaded it is not in man's power to believe what he list."

Go to the jury room, where a dozen men are collected to render a verdict on important issues. They are honest, conscientious men, who have been selected with greatest care from the people, men of character and probity which the tongue of slander cannot assail. They are under oath to render an honest verdict. They have already heard the evidence, the arguments of counsel, the instructions of the judge. But note their variant opinions, as revealed in their first ballot. They may agree in the end; but each must surrender somewhat his own convictions.

More was the oldest jurist of his day on the King's Bench of England. It was his special duty to know of these conflicting views of persons whose opinions were based on the same facts. He knew it was impossible for a man to believe as he wished, contrary to evidence, or in the absence of evidence. But the Son of God, yea, God himself, according to orthodoxy, demands the world to believe in him or be damned, and this on conflicting hearsay evidence only. Is there not some mistake about it?—Progressive Thinker.

I am quite sure, from my own experience of children who have been allowed to learn penitential psalms and hymns, that they think of wickedness as a sort of thing which gives them self-importance.—Mrs. Jameson, "Commonplace Book," p. 223.

Digitized by Google

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BIBLE GOD PUZZLED.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Yesterday (April 21st, not the first, bien entendu) Cardinal Richard, Archbishop of Paris, caused prayers to be offered up in the principal churches for the success of the French forces in Madagascar, where they have embarked upon a policy of spoliation and plunder. The pious Cardinal is not ashamed to say that "by a secret instinct (sic) France, in going to Madagascar, is accomplishing one of the acts of the providential mission (sic) with which she was entrusted (sic) at her baptism [oh !]—to spread Christian civilisation [with syphilis to boot, till then unknown] throughout the world!" What would Arouet de Voltaire say to this impudent lie? "O, grand homme, tu dois rougir dans ton tombeau!" The Queen of Madagascar, per contra, has also solicited prayers in England and elsewhere for the success of her soldiers, who not only fight pro aris et focis, but for a hybrid Christian religion, very much in vogue among the canting, ranting, hypocritical humbugs of dear old England. Voyez la galère!

CHARLES KROLL LAPORTE.

A STRAIGHT LETTER.

35a Great George Street, Westminster, S.W.,
London, April 18, 1895.

The Assistant Secretary, Railway Department,
Board of Trade, Whitehall, S.W.

SUNDAY PHILHARMONIC UNION.

SIR,—I am informed that the Department has received numerous petitions from many distant towns against the application of the above for a licence to give performances on Sunday.

I am seventy-three years of age, have travelled a good deal on the European Continent, have noticed the behavior of Continentals on Sunday where museums and music are to be had. I am also well acquainted with the behavior of our own people both in England and Scotland, and I unhesitatingly give superiority to the Continentals.

I consider it grossly impertinent for provincials to interfere in the matter of how Londoners shall spend Sunday, and I trust your Board will be of a similar opinion.

The above Union desires to elevate the tastes of the people. Our lower classes are far from green lanes and shady walks, and have only the churches and the public-houses to resort to. Many of them would prefer music or lectures to elevate the taste and the understanding, and the "Union" desires to give the opportunity.

The sanctioning the application of the Union will interfere with the rights of no one, while it will supply a want felt by many who are, in my opinion, better subjects of her Majesty than those who, seemingly having what they want, are intolerant enough not to grant a similar boon to others.

Trusting that the application of the Sunday Philharmonic Union will be granted by your Department,—I am, Sir,
Yours,

GEORGE ANDERSON.

Causes and Effects.

Dr. Hutchinson Stirling, following Hegel, seeks to overthrow Hume by asserting the identity of cause and effect. Does he not see that this overthrows his own argument for a deity? If the universe is material, then must God be material. If it is conditioned, then must he be conditioned. If there is evil in the world, then first must there be evil in the cause of the world. The deity must be in essence just such a compound as is the universe. Is it not, then, easier to suppose, as Hume pointed out, that the universe itself is the one necessary existence than to hunt outside the universe for a cause that is as difficult to explain as the universe itself?—Bion.

Michael Angelo as a Rationalist.

Scarcely any other great painter so completely eliminated the religious sentiment from art, and it was reserved for him to destroy the most fearful of all the conceptions by which the early painters had thrilled the people. By making the Last Judgment a study of naked figures, and by introducing into it Charon and his boat, he most effectually destroyed all sense of its reality, and reduced it to the province of artistic criticism.—W. E. H. Lecky, "Rationalism in Europe," vol. i., p. 277.

RELIGION AND COMMON SENSE

WE hear a great deal about "pure religion," and the phrase seems to be an admission that all religion is not pure, which is no doubt the fact; but what quality of religion is genuine, or who possess it, may be difficult to decide. And even if we knew, how much better off should we be? For what is religion, in itself considered, and separate from morality, to which it has no just or proper claim? It is a system of faith in, and worship of, supernatural agencies and beings. That is about all there is of it, when summed up in brief. It may exist, no doubt, in the character of a good man, but it is no proof of goodness in the individual, nor that he is laboring for the welfare of humanity. It is only, as we have said, a system of faith and worship having reference to the supernatural. That is religion, and all that rightly belongs to it. We fail to see wherein it can be of any benefit to this world, and as for another, it is not settled yet whether there is one.

Now, in order to have a system that is useful and practical it ought not to consist in unmeaning phrases, forms, and ceremonies, but in the unceasing practice of promoting the happiness of every human being, without regard to sex, party, country, or color, and confine its labors entirely to this world, depending on knowledge rather than faith, and human efforts instead of prayers to a supernatural deity. This is a common-sense system or philosophy, and one in which there are no metaphysical difficulties or mystery, and which every child even, who is properly educated, will be taught to practise through life, and which he will necessarily practise, as no incentive to injure his fellow-man will then exist, such as forms an inherent and essential part of the present order of society. Under the common-sense system to which we allude, there would not be the slightest pretext for keeping up those holy bugbears which are supposed by many Christians to be so indispensable at present to control the vicious inclinations of human beings, such as avenging Gods, devils, priestly prayers, and denunciations; but mankind will be governed by reason, and learn their duty by obeying the laws of nature, which are the only true guides.
—Horace Seaver, "Occasional Thoughts."

RECOMPENSE.

THE wine-flushed monarch slept; but in his ear
An angel breathed, "Repent; or choose the flame
Quenchless." In dread he woke, but not in shame,
Deep musing, "Sin I love, yet Hell I fear."
Wherefore he left his feasts, and minions dear,
And justly ruled, and died a saint in name.
But when his hasting spirit heavenward came
A stern Voice cried, "Oh Soul! what dost thou here?"

"Love I forswore, and wine, and kept my vow
To live a just and joyless life, and now
I crave reward." The Voice came like a knell,
"Fool! dost thou hope to find again thy mirth,
And those foul joys thou didst renounce on earth?
Yea, enter in! My Heaven shall be thy Hell!"

—Constance Naden.

PROFANE JOKES.

Alice (to her sweetheart)—"How did you like the vicar's sermon, Will?" Will—"Excellent! Why, it sent me off to sleep in less than five minutes."

An Italian priest, reading the passage of Scripture, "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord," commented, "Yes, to be sure; it is too sweet for any mortal."

Professor Von Gookhenheimer, they say, is a marvellous mind-reader and hypnotist. Yes; he claims he can attract the attention of a restaurant waiter by merely looking at him steadily for half-an-hour.

"The timprance man had a wondherful glass that made iverything a thousand million times as big. What's this he called it? Ye're right, 'twas a my-cross-scrope; ye hit it to a pop; bedad 'tis yerself has the larnin'; an' the people looked through it at the wather he put in a glass, an' they seen the wather all swimmin' wid snakes an' scorpions; 'twas enough to terrify the mortial sowl out o' ye. An' so Sheela looked in an' saw them. An' the man put in the wather a good dhrop o' whiskey, an' he says, says he, 'Now ye'll see the effect on animal life,' says he. An' Sheela looked in again, an' she seen the snakes all doubled up, an' kilt, an' murthered, an' says Sheela, says she: 'May the Divil fly away wid me (says she) if I ever touch wather agin till I first put in whiskey to kill them fellows!'"

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30, Charles Watts, "Man and the Universe, from a Christian and Secular Standpoint." (Admission free; reserved seats 3d. and 6d.)

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, Musical and dramatic entertainment. (Free.) Tuesday, at 8, dancing.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, R. Forder, "Science and Christianity."

FINSBURY PARK BRANCH: 3, members' meeting at 91 Mildmay-park.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "The Rights of Animals."

WEST LONDON BRANCH (Athenæum, Godolphin-road, Goldhawk-road, Shepherd's Bush): Tuesday, at 8.30, G. W. Foote, "How the Bible Stands Now."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, A Member, "Is Life an Entity?"

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, Stanley Jones, "The Bible."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, Arthur B. Moss, "Man and Evolution."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, W. J. Ramsey, "A New Gospel Harmony."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, Lucretius Keen, "Atheism and the Hour of Death"; concluding with an original Romance. Thursday, at 8.30, St. John will lecture.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, Lucretius Keen, "Atheism and the Hour of Death"; concluding with an original Romance; 3.30, "What Must I Do to Inherit Eternal Life?" Wednesday, at 8, S. E. Easton will lecture.

MILE END WASTE: 11.15, W. J. Ramsey, "The Atonement."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Where will you Spend Your Eternity?"

VICTORIA PARK: 11.15, W. Heaford will lecture; 3, Stanley Jones will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, A. Lewis will lecture; 7, S. R. Thompson, "Christianity and Slavery." Thursday, at 8, C. Cohen will lecture.

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

BRISTOL (Shepherds' Hall, Old Market-street): 7, J. Kenat, "Saviors of Mankind."

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 7, C. James, "The Star of Science in the Night of Faith."

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, discussion class; 6.30, Neuron, "Bible Fictions and Malay Archipelago Facts."

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Mr. Sketchley, "Rome and the Revolution."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, John Walter, B.A., "Herbert Spencer" (II.). Adjourned committee meeting after lecture.

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, S. H. Alison, "The Gospel of Socialism"; 3, "The Bible and Modern Thought"; 6.30, "The Evolution of Theology." (Admission 3d. and 6d.)

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Northumberland Hall, High Friar-street): 3, C. Cohen, "The Origin of Species"; 7, "Science and Supernaturalism."

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 7, special meeting, social, and business.

ROCHDALE (Working Men's College, 4 Acker-street): 6.30, Sam Standring, "How they Make Priests"; 8, Branch meeting.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, musical and other recitals.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Captain Duncan's Navigation School, King-street): 7, Business meeting.

SUNDERLAND (Victoria Hall, Toward-road): 11, G. W. Foote, "The Shadow of the Sword"; 3, "Was Shakespeare a Christian?" 7, "The Philosophy of Secularism."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

DERBY (Market-place): 6.45, Mr. Brigge will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside—weather permitting): 11, C. Cohen will lecture.

ROCHDALE (Town Hall Square): 11, Sam Standring, "The Temptation"; 3, "The Four Gospels, their Dates and Authors."

Lecturers' Engagements.

STEPHEN H. ALISON, Sunnyside, 72 Union-grove, Clapham, London, S.W.—April 28, Manchester. May 5, Sheffield.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—April 28, Newcastle-on-Tyne. May 2, Wood Green; 5, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 9, Wood Green; 12, Sheffield; 19, Manchester; 26, Wood Green; 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—April 28, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park. May 5, m. Finsbury Park, e. Battersea; 12, m. Wood Green, e. Edmonton; 19, m. Finsbury, e. Deptford; 22, Hyde Park.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—April 28, m. Camberwell. May 5, a. Finsbury Park; 12, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, Clerkenwell.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—May 19, m. Kingsland. June 2, m. Finsbury Park; 16, m. Kingsland. July 17, m. Kingsland.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

PRICE SIXPENCE,

THE

SECULAR ALMANACK

For 1895.

Altered and Enlarged. Finely-Designed Cover.

EDITED BY

G. W. FOOTE & J. M. WHEELER.

CONTENTS: Progress of Freethought; by G. W. Foote—This World; by J. M. Wheeler—Heroes in the Service of Man; by Charles Watts—Dod Grile—A Wish; by Matthew Arnold—The Abducted Female Infidel—Farquhar of Nethertoun—Bits from Selden's "Table Talk"—Jeremy Bentham on Inspiration—Abou-ben Adhem and the Angel—Man's Soul his God—The Sacred Books of the World—The Dear God—What have Unbelievers Done for the World?—Information Concerning Freethought Work and Organisation—Lecturers, etc.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

"A Letter to Lord Ellenborough"

OCCASIONED BY THE SENTENCE WHICH HE PASSED ON

MR. D. I. EATON,

AS PUBLISHER OF

THE THIRD PART OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON,"

BY

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

FOR SALE, seven years' National Reformers, from 1885 to 1891. Offers to Mr. "H.," 37 Cotton-street, Poplar, E.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Childbirth, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 2s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,
TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell
No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 182 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.
THE GODS. 6d.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.
ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.
CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.
ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.
ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.
PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.
HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.
ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.
TRUE RELIGION. 2d.
THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.
LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.
GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
THE DYING CREED. 2d.
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.
ART AND MORALITY. 2d.
DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.
SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.
MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.
SKULLS. 2d.
THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.
LIVE TOPICS. 1d.
MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.
REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.
REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.
CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.
CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 2d., by post 2½d.,

AN ESSAY ON SUICIDE.

BY

DAVID HUME.

With an Historical and Critical Introduction by

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d., post free,

ESSAYS IN RATIONALISM.

BY

CHARLES ROBERT NEWMAN

(Atheist Brother of Cardinal Newman).

With Preface by G. J. HOLYOAKE, and Biographical Sketch by J. M. WHEELER.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

SPECIAL OFFER FOR 21 DAYS ONLY.

To clear our stock of 872 Parcels of

LOT 11

CONTAINING

ONE PAIR OF PURE WOOL BLANKETS,
ONE PAIR OF BED SHEETS,
ONE QUILT (Beautiful Design),
ONE TABLE-CLOTH.

Rather than keep them over till next Winter, we have decided, AS AN ADVERTISEMENT, to clear them out at 19s. per Parcel, Carriage Paid.

WE CANNOT SEND MORE THAN TWO PARCELS TO ONE PERSON,

as the price is less than cost and, apart from the advertisement, we should never offer to sell at the above price. To those who have already tried LOT 11 we need say nothing about the value. They are all agreed that this is the Cheapest Parcel in the market. To those who have not tried it we say, Send one back and we will give 20s. for it, which will be a fair way of testing whether you like it or not.

Remember, for 21 Days Only, and no more than Two Parcels to One Person.

NEW SPRING PATTERNS NOW READY.

Send at once before the Crush for Whitsuntide.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 316 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—C. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.

"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.

"The book has a purpose, and is entitled to a fair hearing."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"The work should be scattered like autumn leaves."—Ironclad Age (U.S.A.).

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Handsomely bound in cloth, post free 7s. 6d.,

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF FREETHINKERS OF ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

"The Dictionary has involved enormous labor, and the compiler deserves the thanks of the Freethought party."—National Reformer.

"The work will be of the greatest value."—Freethought.

"At last we have the long-wanted means of silencing those Christians who are continually inquiring for our great men, asserting that all great men have been on the side of Christianity."—Truthseeker (New York).

"The most important Freethought work published this year."—De Dageraad (Amsterdam).

"A good and useful work that was much needed."—Commonweal.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters AND BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—NO. 18. SUNDAY, MAY 5, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

SUNDAY CRANKS.

CHRISTIANS, or at least orthodox Christians, are evidently going to make a determined stand against Sunday freedom. The Lord's Day Society has half, if not wholly, captured Mr. Gladstone, and its cause has naturally received a fresh fillip. It is to the credit of the ordinary, or profane, press that it takes up, on the whole, a sensible and tolerant attitude on this question. But the religious press, with the exception of a few journals like the Christian World, opposes Sunday freedom out of the mere instinct of self-preservation. Churches of all kinds depend upon privilege. They detest every sort of competition. Their trade is largely supported by Protection. Free Trade would annihilate their artificial advantages. And one of the greatest of these advantages is having Sunday almost entirely for their own business. When they take their shutters down they have the pleasure of seeing everybody else's shutters up; everybody's, that is, with the exception of the publican; and they are beginning to cast an evil eye upon him; indeed, they will never be satisfied until he also is compelled to close his establishment from Saturday night till Monday morning, so that it shall be "Church or nothing" for everybody who wants to go anywhere on what is facetiously called the Lord's Day, but is in reality the Priest's Day.

Our readers will not be surprised to learn that the Methodists are on the side of Sunday tyranny; but they may be interested to learn, as a matter of psychology, what the Methodists have to say for themselves in pursuing a policy which is so alien to their boasted principles of "civil and religious liberty."

There were several paragraphs in last week's Methodist Times on the Sunday question. The Lord's Day Society is highly complimented, with the qualification that in view is perhaps "too Jewish." This is followed by an attack on the Leeds Sunday Lecture Society, which was recently the object of an abortive prosecution. "It is quite evident," we are told, "that some of the lectures given by the Leeds Society were anything but instructive and elevating." Well now, that is a matter of taste. Max O'Rell mingles wit with sense, and sometimes makes people laugh; and anything that provokes laughter, especially on Sunday, is naturally not "instructive and elevating" to a devotee of the Bible. But the Methodists might recollect that tastes—ay, and opinions—have always differed, do still differ, and probably ever will differ. There are people quite fit to be at large who do not care for sermons, and some of them (alas!) are unable to find anything "instructive and elevating" even in the discourses of the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Still, they do not want to close his mouth on Sunday; they only want to open their own.

Our Methodist contemporary proceeds to state, in its usual dogmatic way, that "It should be distinctly understood that the Act of Parliament under which that particular course of lectures was arrested simply forbids a pecuniary charge for admission to any lecture or entertainment provided on Sunday." Now, when the Methodist Times says that anything must be "distinctly understood," it is pretty certain to be wrong; and it is certainly wrong in this particular instance. The Act contains nothing about lectures. Its preamble states that working people had met to discuss religious questions which were beyond their competence—that is, they were poaching on the preserves of the clergy. This was what Bishop Porteus, who instigated the Act, wished to put down. Meetings for discussing religion were therefore prohibited, and entertainments were included just to make the Act look a little less intolerant. Nor is it exactly true that only a charge for admission to such assemblies is made illegal by the Act. In our opinion—and it is endorsed by our solicitors—the taking of money at all is prohibited; and, if the Act were strictly and impartially enforced, not only a charge at the doors, or an admission by saleable tickets, but even a collection, would render the responsible persons liable to penalties.

Mr. Hughes's organ thinks it "significant" that "without enforcing the illegal charge for admission these entertainments cannot be made to pay." But, in the first place, is it not hypocrisy to call Sunday lectures "entertainments," merely because the lecturer happens to have a broad face, instead of a long one? The object of this designation is simply to bring "lectures" within the scope of the Act. And, in the next place, we should like to know why a lecture should not be paid for by the people who hear it? What is the essential difference between hiring a pew quarterly, and paying for your seat when you attend? Ministers of religion depend, at least to some extent, upon the seat-money of their congregations. What impudent hypocrisy they display, therefore, when they turn up the whites of their eyes against Sunday lecturers who tap the same source of income!

"These lectures," the Methodist Times says, "are exceedingly profitable to professional lecturers." Well, why should they not be? Is not a lecturer as good as a preacher? Why should not Sir Robert Ball be paid ten or fifteen pounds for teaching the truths of astronomy, when clergymen get hundreds a year, and sometimes thousands, for preaching the inspiration of a book which represents the earth as flat, and relates a cock-and-bull story of the sun and moon being stopped while the Jews went on with a massacre? Really, it is the clergy, and not the lecturers, who ought to be ashamed of themselves.

In the Leeds case it is admitted that "the immediate promoters do not seek pecuniary gain." What is their crime then? The Methodist Times says they are "extremely blatant and self-righteous." But this offence is not punishable at law; otherwise, it would go hard with a good many Methodists, and Mr. Hughes himself would be in serious danger of fine or imprisonment.

Our contemporary, in its beautiful, urbane fashion, speaks of the "yells of delight" with which the lovers of Sunday freedom greeted a pronouncement by a Committee of Convocation in favor of the Sunday opening of museums, picture-galleries, and libraries. It rejoices that the Committee's report was rejected; and then announces, with a final blast of the Methodist trumpet, that "the demand for the Sunday opening of such institutions is a mere fad of a handful of benevolent cranks who live in an imaginary world of their own."

Let us see who are these Sunday cranks. They include the most illustrious names in science, literature, and art. What sort of a philosophy is it which regards Mr. Price Hughes as the standard of sanity, and sets down as cranks such men as Mr. Herbert Spencer, Professor Huxley, Sir Robert Ball, Sir Frederic Leighton, and Mr. Burne Jones? And what is it that these "cranks" demand? They do not want to close the Gospel-shops and make the men of God rest themselves on the day when they condemn others to inaction? They simply say that the Church should not be allowed to play the part of the dog in the manger. Let those who like go to church; let those who like go to a museum, a library, an art gallery, or a lecture hall. Do not let those who prefer one place say to their fellow citizens, "You shall go there or nowhere." Let us have fair play all round.

Digitized by Google

Such is the demand of the Sunday cranks. And they will win. It is only a question of time. They are "cranks" to the Sunday bigots, who understand by "liberty" the right to do as they please, and to make other people do as they do. But they are really the champions of justice, liberality, and enlightenment; and they may well despise the railing of their adversaries, in the sure faith that history will ratify the verdict of their own consciences.

G. W. FOOTE.

WHEN CHRIST RULED.

It is useful to look back and observe what Christianity actually was in the days of its power. Now-a-days it poses as everything that is gentle, benign, and helping to civilisation. Yet it cannot get rid of the damning fact that war, slavery, oppression, and persecution accompanied its career during the days of its supremacy. It has the blood of myriads of heretics and Jews and of millions of so-called witches on its track. In its palmy days the Christian Church literally revelled in cruelty. Punishments by torture and death by fire were the natural results of a creed which taught that God needed a blood atonement, and would punish the immense majority of his creatures in ever-burning hell. Mr. Lecky says of these dogmas: "We can never conceive the intense vividness with which these conceptions were realised, or the madness and misery they produced. For those were ages of implicit and unfaltering credulity; they were ages when none of the distractions of the present day divided the intellect, and when theology was the single focus upon which the imagination was concentrated. They were ages, too, when the modern tendency to soften or avoid repulsive images was altogether unknown." What must have been the feelings of those who believed in diabolical possession, a doctrine distinctly taught in the New Testament, as fully shown in Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible; and who believed that they themselves or those they held dear were the victims of the wiles of the devil?

Christianity tended from the first to withdraw men's minds from the concerns of this world, and to concentrate them upon another life; and no fact in history is more patent than that the triumph of Christianity was followed by the decline of Pagan civilisation. Literature passed from the hands of poets, philosophers, and historians to those of monks and theologians, and then almost totally declined. Bury, in his history of The Later Roman Empire (i. 311), says: "The spirit of early Christianity was a most favorable atmosphere for the stifling of humane literature; and as Christian theology became current, and Christian ideas penetrated the minds of men, little breathing-space was left for the faint life of that humane literature which had already travelled so far from its former heights." From the first ages a dislike of Pagan learning was general among Christians.

Warned by the apostles to beware of philosophy and the knowledge which puffeth up, they despised the vain science and learning of a world they expected soon to pass away. Those only of the Fathers who were converted from Paganism retained somewhat of the philosophic temper, like Origen, Clement, and Augustine. But once Christianity had obtained complete victory, and its effects were seen in the destruction of libraries, the decline of learning, and the long night of the Dark Ages.

In Pagan Rome books were common, and sold at comparatively low prices. When Christ ruled books were so scarce that none but the wealthiest could purchase them. Charles V., who began to reign 1365, formed the first royal library, and when the English took Paris in 1425 the collection only amounted to about 853 volumes. When, in 1471, Louis XI. borrowed the works of Averroes, the Arabian, from the faculty of medicine in Paris, he had to deposit in pledge a considerable quantity of plate, and to procure a nobleman to join with him as surety in a deed binding himself under a great forfeiture to restore them.

Buckle declares that such learning as there was in the days when Christ ruled, only ministered to ignorance. He says:—

> "From the sixth to the tenth century there was not in all Europe more than three or four men who dared to think for themselves; and even they were obliged to veil their meaning in obscure and mystical language. The remaining part of society was, during these four centuries, sunk in the most degraded ignorance. Under these circumstances, the few who were able to read confined their studies to works which encouraged and strengthened their superstition, such as the legends of the saints and the homilies of the Fathers. From these sources they drew those lying and impudent fables of which the theology of the time is principally composed."

The ages that were pre-eminently Christian were pre-eminently dark. Violence, tyranny, spoliation, and pestilence characterised them. The people were serfs; the nobles, robbers. The ages of faith, as Mr. J. C. Morison has shown in his Service of Man, were ages of immorality. He says with truth and force: "The temperature of faith rises steadily, as we penetrate into the past, almost with the regularity which marks the rise of the physical temperature of the air as we descend into a deep mine; but a neglect and defiance of morality are found to ascend in a corresponding ratio." Faith abounded, all scepticism being stamped out; but it was powerless to prevent the brutality of the Middle Ages seen in the records of the Crusades and of the Inquisition.

But it may be said all this was Catholic Christianity. Christ was not really ruling, but under a cloud, overshadowed by the head of the Church. Well, I admit that Protestantism was an improvement, so far as it asserted the right of private judgment; but what little good it did was largely mitigated by its substitution of the Bible as an infallible fetish book for the infallible authority of the Church. The publication of the Bible with its inspired text, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," led to renewed persecutions of witches. Protestants were just as persecuting as Catholics. Men were still burnt, tortured, and imprisoned for their opinions. In England Dissenters were long treated almost as outlaws. That pious monarch, James I., not only wrote against and persecuted witches, but burnt two Unitarians, himself kicking one previously to burning him, because he would not be convinced by the king's arguments. His sacred majesty, as the translators of the Bible called him, decorated Temple Bar and London Bridge with human heads and trunks from which the limbs were severed. The head of the noble Raleigh, who gave us tobacco and the potato, would have been with the number had not influential friends carried it away. So Christian was this savage custom that his sacred majesty got himself painted on his war horse, with the gate of London Bridge, decorated with the heads of traitors, in the background. So much had Christian civilisation done for the world up till the seventeenth century.

J. M. WHEELER.

THE VALUE OF DOUBT.

(Concluded from page 259.)

When professed Christians have a firm conviction that to doubt in matters of religion is a sin, there is no degrading superstition to which they may not fall victims. If such unfortunate persons could only be induced to seriously reflect, apart from all prejudice, they would undoubtedly experience the humiliating thought that they would have been just as violent upholders of any other faith than their own, if such faith had been that of their parents or their country. It is the tendency of orthodoxy to produce intellectual apathy, and to cause its adherents to allow others to think for them, instead of exercising their mental powers themselves. Until men acquire the habit of independent thought they will be influenced more by the prevailing ideas of their time than by their own reason. Now, doubt is valuable, inasmuch as it tends to destroy this condition of mental torpor, and to remove that unfruitful uniformity of acceptance upon trust which has so long prevailed throughout Christendom.

In the absence of all doubt a state of intellectual indolence must appear, to those who encourage it, as profitable as a state of activity. If this were not so, it would be difficult to account for the human mind being dazzled by certain creeds and dogmas which are being constantly repeated as if they were self-evident truths. Not the slightest suspicion is entertained that such theological figments may be false; they are, as a rule, believed without any examination, and defended at the sacrifice of reason and mental dignity. It is a serious drawback of that too-confiding spirit engendered by the popular religion that it induces its lethargic devotees to placidly listen to the incoherent statements made in the pulpits, which are the stock-in-trade of the clergy in their efforts to endeavor to stifle free inquiry, and to suppress that doubt which has proved the great enemy to priestly supremacy. Christians, of course, claim that they are not opposed to free inquiry; judging, however, from their actions, such is far from being the case. They tell us to "prove all things; hold fast that which is good"; but they take upon themselves to decide what is good. This is an orthodox notion of freedom with a vengeance! What stimulant did Christ give to free thought when he said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me; . . . if a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned"? Is there any incentive to impartial investigation in the gloomy words, "He that believeth, and is baptised, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned"? Once establish among mankind the erroneous notion that truth is confined to one particular channel, and that the man who does not go in that direction is to be cast forth as a "withered branch," and the impossibility of unfettered thought will be immediately apparent. Induce a man to examine a subject, and tell him that, regardless of evidence, he must arrive at one conclusion or be damned, the pursuit of truth is then made a hypocritical farce, rather than a noble and useful reality.

Digitized by Google

The encouragement which free inquiry received from Christians when they had undisputed power was that they not only tortured and imprisoned those who opposed their faith, but they committed to the flames those works which demonstrated the fallacy and absurdity of their system. Their desire to promote free inquiry during their early history is exemplified in the memorable proclamation of the Christian Emperor, Theodosius, in which he ordered that the whole of the writings of Porphyry, and all others who had written against the Christian religion, should be committed to the fire. The writings of Celsus met with an equally warm reception, and for a proof that the same desire has existed in modern times it is necessary, not only to read the history of those Freethought pioneers of the last and of the early part of the present century, but also to remember that now, whenever Christians have the power, they exercise it in order that we may not have the opportunity to promulgate those principles that stimulate free inquiry. Fortunately, man is a progressive being, having within him an inherent love of freedom; he cannot, therefore, long tolerate anything which cramps his mind or fetters his thought. Truth may be crushed, but it cannot be annihilated; it is as permanent as the earth which contains it. The fact is being more and more acknowledged that opinion is the result of organisation and evidence. And, instead of inflicting punishment for the imperfections of the one or the limitation of the other, it is now recognised by advanced minds that the true policy is to recognise the widest and most diversified thoughts, seeking to correct those which are erroneous by unfettered inquiry and honest criticism.

There are two methods by which opinions are formed: (1) the impressions made upon our senses; and (2) the testimony of others. If people would but study this fact, they would probably understand why so many different views are held upon the subject of religion, and how impossible it is to prevent doubt in a progressive state of society. It is to be regretted that the majority of believers in theology rely principally upon the second method. It is found by some persons to be much easier to depend upon others than to investigate for themselves. This is one reason why the Church has so many adherents who have no solid reason for the hope or the faith within them. The great majority of professed Christians are such more from a desire to be fashionable than in consequence of a calm investigation into the credentials of their faith. They too often accept belief passively from their parents, instead of testing its nature and value. Now, doubt has the immense advantage of being the means of securing a justification for the reception and the retention of any given opinions.

It is well known that in England the acquirement of useful knowledge and the reform of our penal laws may be traced to the time when doubts as to the validity of certain Bible teachings began. It was through doubt that the old Mosaic idea of creation was exploded, and to the same cause are we indebted for the abolition of capital punishment, which was once inflicted for many trivial offences. So long as men believed in the infallibility of Moses and the divine sanction of the prediction, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed," scientific progress and humane legislation upon these questions were unknown. The price paid by the English people for their adherence to the advice of Bible interpreters was a high one. It deprived them of the advantages that result from a rational view of nature, and from conforming to the laws that govern human actions; and, moreover, it inaugurated and maintained a relentless persecution towards those who dared to seek emancipation from the yoke of the Bible and the priest. In proportion as doubt has been fostered, progress has followed, and mental liberty has been vindicated.

CHARLES WATTS.

BEATING THE RELIGIOUS DRUM.

IT is to be presumed that the lengthy notices of books under the title "Book of the Month," in the Review of Reviews, when unsigned, are by Mr. Stead himself. If, then, Mr. Stead be responsible for the compilation in the March number, introducing Mr. Balfour's book on The Foundations of Belief, it is to be regretted; for he has been guilty of some language of which one need say no more than that its more fitting place would be the columns of some of the lower-class Christian-Evidence journals.

Every now and then we are startled by great drum-beating in the religious camp; we are told that religion is "on the boom," or, as Mr. Gladstone's curious phrase puts it, "creation is gathering itself together for a great recovery." Now it is the Pope who is issuing one of his innumerable encyclicals that is to do something wonderful; then it is Mr. Gladstone writing one of his innumerable articles to some magazine or other. Here it is a scientist dropping some stray phrase about science having limitations; there it is a book by a Tory statesman arguing that, if there be no god, it is necessary, in order to keep things from going to wreck, to persuade ourselves that there is. And, singularly enough, these people, who are always telling us that religion is recovering, are the people who could never be got to admit that it had suffered any reverses.

Mr. Stead, however, makes the publication of Mr. Balfour's book the occasion for a great whoop about the revival of religion. For the last half-century, at least, he says, "a science that was nescience, as far as the soul of man was concerned, has been swaggering in the foretop of civilisation." This is a sample of the choice language which it seems the religious revival will bring with it. But there is even more choice language still. Here are some specimens of it which must be transcribed:—

> "The intolerance of the bigot of the Churches was succeeded by the even more detestable superciliousness of the Brahmin of science. . . . . The doctrine that no man of ordinary intelligence could be a Christian, and that all who held on to the old faith were old women or cowards, has been thundered ex cathedra from the pontifical chairs of Unbelief, and complacently repeated by simpering nincompoops, who were delighted to be assured on such unexceptionable authority that there was no Being in the universe superior to their own noble selves, and, what was still more important, no Taskmaster or Judge who would ever call them to account for frivolling away their existence."

Now, when we hear this sort of thing from the reckless street-corner evangelist, or read it in those gutter journals that make a business of combatting "infidelity," we do not marvel greatly. Long suffering has produced indifference, and, besides, one reflects that, after all, it is only the language that is to be expected from ignorant and intolerant persons incapable of thinking, with no leisure or incentive to acquire knowledge; reared, as most of them have been, in a creed which cramps and starves the intellect. But when the language and the methods of the street-corner are transferred to the pages of a serious magazine with a great circulation and greater pretensions, by an editor who is oppressively godly, and who evidently believes that there are not many saintly enough to touch the hem of his garment, then it is difficult to know quite how to characterise his conduct. The insinuation about it being "important" to Freethinkers that there was no "Taskmaster or Judge who would ever call them to account for frivolling away their existence"—the old, old bracketing of moral guilt with intellectual difference of opinion—is peculiarly contemptible, coming from a man who would be denounced as a heretic himself by any of the great Churches, and a man too who, whenever there was any journalistic capital to be made out of praising and writing up representative Freethinkers like Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant, was never behindhand in the work. Mr. Stead, in fact, is a journalist first, and anything else in the world afterwards.

Digitized by Google

But I must confess I do not know what is meant by the reference to Freethinkers "frivolling away their existence." Do all Freethinkers "frivol," and does no Christian "frivol"? Or does the Freethinker's frivolling consist in the very fact of his Freethought? And, if so, are all Christians stolid and sedate "by the grace of God," who look with disdain and pity on the gambols and frolics of the giddy Freethinker, who buzzes about, heedless of the flame? I would humbly ask a little enlightenment. At the same time, I frankly think myself that Freethinkers are neither serious nor moral. For seriousness evidently means rushing after every passing sensation in literature or politics, and writing columns about it as if it were the final end of all things; whilst obviously no man can claim to be moral who does not go into hysterics at the sight of a petticoat. I agree Freethinkers are frivollers. Balls, receptions, theatres, concerts, clubs, levées, and Monte Carlo make up the story of their wasted lives. Take a census of the N.S.S., and you will find that ninety per cent. of the members winter in the Riviera; whilst the humble, serious, hardworking Christian, who is perforce compelled to take a few months' well-earned holiday in Grindelwald or elsewhere, attempts to stem the tide of frivolity with telepathic interviews and blazing placards.

Let the nincompoop, however, return to his frivol. One sign of the times, showing the way things are going, the recovery religion is making, is an article by M. Brunetière on "The Bankruptcy of Science." Mr. Stead publishes a summary of the article taken from the Spectator. I am unable to vouch for the accuracy of the summary, but, presuming it to fairly represent M. Brunetière's statement, it is certainly curious, inasmuch as it contains nothing but what has been said many times over by Christian apologists. The sole "importance" of the article—to judge from this précis—presumably consists in the fact that it was written by M. Brunetière. Take, for instance, these passages:—

> "The Hellenists, it is true, have discovered the scattered fragments of the Sermon on the Mount in the Manual of Epictetus or the Thoughts of Marcus Aurelius; but they have never explained why the Sermon on the Mount has conquered the world, while the Manual and the Thoughts have remained mere barren pieces of literature. . . . . But after all their labors there remains something in the Bible which is found in no other book and in no other history—something which resists exegesis as it resisted philology."

Had this passage occurred—as it very well might—in one of Archdeacon Farrar's or Mr. Price Hughes's discourses, it would have attracted little or no attention. Its curiosity, like its importance, is bound up solely in its authorship. For the rest, it is no more than you could find scores of parallels to in the sermons of professional Bible-boomers. It is probably what the average Mohammedan thinks of the Koran; what every believer, in fact, thinks of his fetish book. It may also be remarked that if Marcus Aurelius were taught to little children as a divinely-inspired author; if his work were pushed and extolled for centuries by as powerful an organisation as has pushed the Bible; if, through the aid of this powerful organisation and the hold which its officials obtained over the young, Marcus Aurelius had become woven into the art and literature of generations; and if, furthermore, a man of science could be got occasionally to furnish a testimonial to the wonderful power and the unique nature of Marcus Aurelius's work, then, I suppose, Marcus Aurelius would resist exegesis and resist philology, and all the rest. That, it seems to me, is, in outline, the natural explanation of the position and prestige of the Bible. Can M. Brunetière suggest a more rational one?

There is one passage in M. Brunetière's statement, however, that is extraordinary. He says, or is represented by the Spectator as saying: "It [science] has made an enemy instead of a friend of religion; it has insisted on seeing an opposition where, in fact, none exists." It is certainly difficult to believe that this even approximately conveys the sense of the original. It may be presumptuous to say so, for M. Brunetière is a very eminent gentleman, is one of the editors of the Revue des Deux Mondes, and is worthy of respect; but the above is the language of one who is completely ignorant of the most common facts of history. Professor Huxley has told us that along every path of scientific inquiry Theology has erected its notice-boards, "No thoroughfare. By order.—Moses." And most people with any historical knowledge will agree that Professor Huxley is as right as M. Brunetière is wrong. Science simply went on its way, and it was stopped by Theology; a conflict was, therefore, inevitable. It was Theology which was the aggressor always until Science was provoked into an aggressive attitude itself towards the system which hampered and thwarted it.

If, as M. Brunetière says, there is no opposition really between religion and science, why did the Church heap indignities on Galileo? Why did it burn Bruno? Why did it anathematise Darwin? Why, in short, has it thrown every obstacle in the way of scientific advance? It was only in the early part of the present century that the Church removed from the Index a simple manual* teaching the Copernican astronomy. It does not even yet accept Darwinism, or allow the doctrine of evolution to be taught. Whilst, if anyone wishes to know how the Church guarded liberty of thought, let him study the blood-red page of history; let him read the records of the Inquisition; let him examine the life of the saintly Torquemada, under whom thousands of human beings were burned at the stake; let him dive into the history of the debauchery and corruption which polluted Europe during the Dark Ages, and which revolved around Rome as its centre. It may not be an edifying study, I admit, but it will throw a great light on the Church's claim to be considered the friend of science and culture. It may be remarked that all this belongs to the past, that the Church has "reformed." Well, I have instanced the case of Darwin, which is modern. But I would recommend anyone who considers things have changed to peruse an important article which appeared in the Contemporary Review for August last, entitled "Intellectual Liberty and Contemporary Catholicism," by the Catholic writer who discussed in that magazine the policy of the Papacy. And he will find that, in spirit and method and purpose, the Catholic Church—and it was of the Catholic Church particularly that M. Brunetière was writing—stands precisely where it did. It has moved just so far as the pressure of the scientific spirit of the age has absolutely forced it. And what is true of the Catholic Church is true, in greater or less degree, of every organised hierarchy in the world.

But the hierarchies are doomed. Not even the fact that Christianity, according to Mr. Gladstone, "commands the largest number of professing adherents" will save it from extinction. Of course its spokesmen and penmen will beat the drum as loudly as they can; it is natural that they should make much of every little back-eddy, while ignoring the stream that flows steadily the other way. It is natural, perhaps, also that, in the very act of dogmatising themselves, they should accuse science of dogmatism, and, while violently abusing Freethinkers in offensive language, invite them to deal reverently with the shibboleths of the abusers. There is generally a tendency on the part of the conquered to lose their tempers. And religionists—with

* The author of the article in the Contemporary Review which has been referred to says: "As late as the Pontificate of Leo XII. (1823-29) Professor Setele's book on astronomy was forbidden to be printed by the ecclesiastical censor in Rome (Magister Sacri Palatii), because the motion of the earth round the sun was described therein as a fact. Professor Setele appealed to the reigning Pope who authorised the publication, and for the first time removed Galileo's works from the Index of forbidden books." I instance this as one example merely of that overwhelming friendship for science on the part of the Church to which M. Brunetière refers.

Digitized by Google

all their meekness and humility, and with all the consciousness of fighting on the side of omnipotence, to aid them—form no exception to the rule. But bad temper even does not save a lost cause. Religions always die hard. But they die all the same. FREDERICK RYAN.

JESUS AND THE COLT.

Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the Lamb?
And shall I fear to steal a hoss,
Or blush to ride the same?

IT may seem strange that one living in a land where Jesus is worshipped as a God should ask the question, "Did Jesus steal a colt?" and were it not for his own testimony (Luke xix. 29–31) probably no one ever would have accused him of such an act. His teaching and precepts in general are good, and but little, if any, inferior to those of Buddha or Confucius, from whom he possibly copied them; yet I have never read a word charging that either Buddha or Confucius was a thief, and I cannot for a moment believe that Jesus ever converted to his own use property belonging to another, or sent his disciples to steal a colt. Furthermore, I would not repeat the story were it not that nearly every family in Christendom has, at some time, either bought or had given them a Bible in which the story appears. It is as follows: "Go ye into the village over against you; in the which, at your entering, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat; loose him and bring him hither; and if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need of him."

If the record is true, and Jesus actually did order his disciples to so purloin a colt, I have no plea to make for the man-god, for all criminal law would hold him equally guilty with his deluded disciples who "led the hoss away." We have no evidence of any kind to show that the colt belonged to Jesus, in fee simple, or that he had a mortgage lien on the animal; to the contrary, his own words condemn him when he says: "If any man asks you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need of him."

I can see no reason why a god should need a colt in such a hurry that he would have to steal one, when we are told there is nothing impossible with God, and he could have made a two-year-old colt in a minute (though he would not have been two years old), and had him ready broke to carry double, if necessary, without extra expense; and why Jesus set such a bad example before his disciples (which many of them still follow) I cannot understand. From a general digest of the matter, I judge that the end justified the means, and that it was all for the glory of God. This being true, why should we condemn the Jesuits for doing anything and everything they choose, when "the end justifies the means" and "for the glory of God"?

Whether the Lord had need of heretical ashes (for Christian lye) in the Dark Ages, I know not; but the end must have justified the means when, between the years 1600 and 1630, the Christians burned at the stake over 270,000 human beings as heretics to the Roman faith. Otherwise the omnipresent Lord would not have been lounging around without calling a policeman. To say the least, it looks rather bewildering to read that Jesus commands us not to steal, and then commands his disciples to borrow a rope that he knew had a colt on the other end of it. Perhaps this is why his vicegerents preach one thing and practise another, and why, like a guide-board, they point the way, but never go themselves. They teach what to do to go to heaven, but they cannot indicate the direction of either heaven or hell, and

Had I the colt that Jesus stole,
I should not know, 'tis pity,
Which road to take to land my soul
Within the golden city.

If the olden saying is true that "what is bred in the bone cannot be whipped from the body," Jesus must have been "a chip from the old block," for Jehovah is credited with saying to his chosen people (Exodus iii. 21, 22), "When ye go ye shall not go empty; but every woman shall borrow of her neighbor and of her that sojourns in her house jewels of gold and raiment; and ye shall put them upon your sons and upon your daughters; and ye shall spoil the Egyptians." This is theft of the meanest kind, and no other god but Jehovah would ever have risked his reputation by ordering it in writing.

Mine eyes are dim; I cannot see
The great Jehovah's plan.
Did God—will you enlighten me?
Wish for the fall of man?
Pray tell me, if you will and can,
Did God, in thunderbolt,
Bid Moses slay the Egyptian,
Or Christ to steal that colt?

It's no go, my Christian friend. You never can make thinking people believe that any god ever stole a colt or cut up such capers as you say Jehovah did; or that any real, sure-enough god ever cursed the world because Eve ate an apple. You can fool our unsophisticated women and artless children, make them believe that the Lord of this universe was so put to it for a colt that he had to steal one; but intelligent people who have no bread and butter depending on the issue will swallow no such truck.
—Truthseeker. A. D. SWAN.

FROST, THE FRIEND AND FOE.

SING ho! for the Frost, for the keen, sharp Frost,
With its bracing and biting breath!
With health that is won, with health that is lost,
And the poor ragged weakling's death.

Sing ho! for the Frost, and the rosy crowds
With their sports, and their health and wealth!
For icicle shuttles that weave the shrouds
Of the bankrupt in wealth and health.

Sing ho! for the Frost, with its dainty hand,
As it decks ev'ry branch and leaf
With glittering jewels of fairy land,
Whilst it mocks at the starveling's grief.

Sing ho! for the Frost, as its sculptured jests
And pictorial pranks appear;
That playfully shatters the mountain's crests,
And disports with the outcast's tear.

"Sing ho! for the Frost," say the clothed and fed,
"On a heavenly earth we dwell!"
Whilst those that are starved cry: "Would we were dead!
For there's comfort in thoughts of hell!"

G. L. MACKENZIE.

THE MAHATMAS.

THE only evidence of Mahatmic agency adduced by Mrs. Besant at her recent lecture was the fact that Madame Blavatsky, whom she chose to describe as an uneducated woman—though she was evidently, like Mrs. Besant herself, a woman with a very large power of assimilating other people's thoughts—had written, as if by inspiration, The Voice of the Silence. Now, Mr. W. E. Coleman has examined all the works published with the name of H. P. Blavatsky, and finds throughout that they are plagiarisms from other writings. He says of the book in question:—

> "The Voice of the Silence, published in 1889, purports to be a translation by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky from a Thibetan work. It is said to belong to the same series as the Book of Dzyan, which is true, as, like that work, it is a compilation of ideas and terminology, from various nineteenth-century books, the diction and phraseology being those of Madame Blavatsky. I have traced the sources whence it was taken, and it is a hotch-potch from Brahmanical books on Yoga and other Hindu writings; Southern Buddhistic books, from the Pâli and Sinhalese; and Northern Buddhistic writings, from the Chinese and Thibetan—the whole having been taken by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky from translations by, and the writings of, European and other Orientalists of to-day. In this work are intermingled Sanskrit, Pâli, Thibetan, Chinese, and Sinhalese terms—a manifest absurdity in a Thibetan work. I have traced the books from which each of these terms was taken. I find embedded in the text of this alleged ancient Thibetan work quotations, phrases, and terms copied from current Oriental literature. The books most utilised in its compilation are these: Schlagintweit's Buddhism in Thibet, Edkins's Chinese Buddhism, Hardy's Eastern Monarchism, Rhys Davids's Buddhism, Dvivedi's Raja Yoga, and Raja Yoga Philosophy (1888); also an article, 'The Dream of Ravan,' published in the Dublin University Magazine, January, 1854, extracts from which appeared in the Theosophist of January, 1880. Passages from this article, and from the books named above, are scattered about in the text of the Voice of the Silence, as well as in the annotations thereon, which latter are admitted to be the work of Blavatsky. Full proofs of this, including the parallel passages, will be given in my work on Theosophy; including evidence that this old Thibetan book contains not only passages from the Hindu books quoted in the article in the Dublin Magazine, but also ideas and phrases stolen from the nineteenth-century writer of said article."

Digitized by Google

MORE LYING FOR THE GLORY OF GOD.

When the American carrion crows leave off raking over the long dead body of Thomas Paine, they usually, without approaching too close, try to leave some of their foul odors near the door of Pagan Bob. The Rev. Robert F. True, whose name belies his nature, is one of this breed. He is secretary of the Evangelistic Association of New England, and at a meeting of that society made the remark "that Colonel Ingersoll's own daughters do not believe his doctrine, and one of them has recently joined the Presbyterian Church in Albany." A representative of the Boston Investigator, who occasionally wanders into such gatherings, moved by curiosity or by purposes of criticism, happened to be present. At the close of the meeting he went forward and asked Mr. True for his authority for the statement he had just made. The gentleman, evidently somewhat taken aback by this bold challenge, replied that he had been so informed by several pastors (a very uncertain source of information, by the way). He was then asked if he would retract that statement as publicly as he had made it, provided he was convinced that he was in error, and he replied that he would do so. With the remark that the matter would be thoroughly investigated, and that he would be put in possession of the fact, the Investigator representative left the church.

Mr. Ernest Mendum, the editor of the Investigator, at once wrote and received answers from the two daughters of Colonel Ingersoll, fac-similes of which are given in the Investigator. They both emphatically deny having for a moment thought of joining any church. Colonel Ingersoll also wrote: "Ernest Mendum, Esq. My Dear Friend,—I have two daughters, and neither of them ever joined any church. On the subject of religion both of them agree with me, or I agree with them. My wife and I are of the same opinion as to the supernatural. We both believe in the natural, and in what I have done against what is called religion I have always had her support and sympathy. So, you may say from me that the reverend gentleman was entirely mistaken, and in what he said there is not the slightest truth.—Yours always, R. G. Ingersoll."

Armed with these letters, Mr. True was waited on. He was true to his word, and withdrew the statement publicly in his own church.

Did God Die?

In the Colloquia of Martin Luther (p. 114; 1652) we read that on June 18, 1538, Luther received letters from Vienna, out of which he understood that there was one who denied that the Godhead in Christ did not suffer, but only his humanity. Luther said: "That cannot be, for it is written 'God who hath purchased the Church with his blood.'" At the same time this question was put to Luther: "If it were justly and right spoken like a Christian to say Christ did suffer and die according to his Godhead or divine nature, seeing the Godhead is not subject to death, neither can suffer nor die; for St. Peter saith: 'Christ was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit.'" Whereupon Luther answered and said: "All true and upright Christians fearing God and the whole Christian Church and Communion do believe, undoubtedly, that which in the Children's Creed is spoken—namely, that Jesus Christ, the only Son of God, in one divine substance and nature with the Father, is true man, born of the Virgin Mary, conceived by the Holy Ghost, did suffer, was crucified, died, and was buried. Therefore we must believe that not only the nature of His Humanity, but also of His Deity, or the right, true God did suffer and die for us." The italics are in the original.

ACID DROPS.

Mrs. Besant has lectured at St. James's Hall, London, on Mahatmas. She was eloquent as usual, but quite unconvincing. "Plenty of eloquence, but not a shred of evidence," cried out one of her auditors when it was all over; and this seemed to be the general feeling amongst all but the Theosophists. Another auditor wanted to know whether Mrs. Besant had ever seen a Mahatma, and the faithful cried "Shame!" at that grovelling materialist. Mrs. Besant did not answer questions or take discussion. She has got past that stage. The High Priestess of Theosophy only delivers oracles.

Mrs. Besant told a Westminster Gazette interviewer that she first saw her Mahatma in France in 1889. He revealed himself to her in the night, and we presume the door was locked. Mrs. Besant saw him and smelt him; in fact, it was the odor that clinched the demonstration. Mahatmas bear a peculiar aroma, something like sandal wood. By this sign ye shall know them. Good old Mahatmas.

No wonder the Westminster hopes that Mrs. Besant will drop this wretched business and "save the wreck of her reputation." It is a charitable hope, but we fear it will not be realised. While the world talks about her Mrs. Besant is in her element.

An appeal for £20,000 for the East London Church Fund speaks of "the growing opportunities of the Church," because "Secularism seems played out." Our friends the enemy may delude themselves with the belief in our non-existence as long as they please, but the time may come when they will have a rude awakening.

What is the calibre of minds that revel in missionary reports? A Christian paper relates the case of Chung-Te, the only convert in Ohyo, a village in Fuh-Kien. A great fire broke out in this village, although the people tried, without success, to stop the flames with a row of their household gods. Chung-Te, however, knelt down and prayed, and his house was saved; which made the people admit that his God was the strong God. But, after all, Chung-Te was as big a fool as the rest, though a bit luckier. It would be better to improve the antiquated Chinese fire-engines, and let all the gods alone.

What a funny thing it is that the Christian God protects a Chinaman, but does not lift a finger to protect an American evangelist. At one of Moody's recent meetings at Fort Worth, Texas, the roof suddenly fell, killing one person and injuring forty-six others. Providence, sir, Providence!

A drowning person, it is said, will grasp at a straw, and we are reminded of the saying by the avidity with which the religious world has hailed Mr. Balfour's book. Mr. Stead's gush is dealt with by Mr. Ryan in another column. Mr. Balfour's argument is an argument for authority, and therefore an argument for Rome. It is amusing to notice the Protestant Mr. Stead saying: "After this no one will contest with Mr. Balfour the right to Mr. Gladstone's mantle."

Diderot said: "Bewildered in an immense forest in the night time, I have only a feeble lantern to light my path. Comes a stranger, who says to me, 'Blow out thy candle to better find thy way.' This stranger is the theologian." Had he lived now, he might have applied this to the author of The Foundations of Belief.

By arrangement, Father Black, the Duke of Newcastle, and a number of members of the English Church Union went to St. Mark's, North Audley-street, W., on April 27, to protest against the marriage of Mr. Brinckman to Miss Linton. Mrs. Brinckman having obtained a divorce was the ground on which Father Black continually protested against the ceremony; but the Rev. Gray refused to listen to him, and he and his fellow protesters were loudly hissed by the crowd.

Not content with this, Father Black (a Father of the Church of England) writes to the Church Times, reminding the Bishop of London "how, a few weeks ago, he deprived Mr. Briggs of his licence and daily bread for an offence which in every way falls short of his own."

The Church Times, which devotes an article to the subject, declares that the provisions of the Divorce Act of 1857 "are in open defiance of Holy Scripture, of the express words of Christ in our own Prayer-Book Marriage Service, and of the Canon of 1604," for which, we suppose, the twentieth century will be expected to have revived reverence. The C. T. excitedly asks: "How long are Christians of the Church of England going to stand this kind of thing? Are the parishioners of St. Mark's going to allow their church to be thus desecrated?"

Digitized by Google

Durant, the Sunday-school superintendent who stands charged with having outraged and murdered a little girl whose mutilated body was found in the Emanuel Baptist Chapel, San Francisco, has been identified by a microscopic examination of horsehair. He had a key of the side door of the church which was found unlocked.

At the further hearing of this case the evidence pointed very strongly to the guilt of Mr. Gibson, the pastor of that church, who is a native of Edinburgh. The examination by experts of the handwriting of Mr. Gibson revealed an extraordinary resemblance existing between the written characters and those in the slip of writing sent to the murdered girl's aunt, together with a couple of her rings taken from her fingers before the murder, of which the police now affirm that Gibson and Durant were jointly guilty.

The New York Tribune said on Easter Sunday: "In the churches this morning there will be much said about 'the blessed hope of immortality'; but we doubt if a single preacher will declare that the atoms of the identical physical body that was laid in the grave will be brought together again and dowered with an immortal existence. It is a conception entirely foreign to the spirit of the age; and, in the long run, the Church must always take account of the spirit of the age." The Tribune professes to discern in this a sign of drift from Materialism. To us it indicates a drift from the Bible, for the doctrine of the New Testament is distinctly that of the resurrection of the body. Nothing is said about an immortal, immaterial soul. Christians recite in church the old creed, "I believe in the resurrection of the body," but they attach to it a new and totally different signification from that of the authors.

Talmage has furbished up an old argument for the resurrection. He says: "If, out of ordinary dust of the earth, and without a model, God could make Adam, a perfect man, surely out of the extraordinary dust of mortal body, and with millions of models, God can make each one of us a perfect being in the resurrection." With improved materials and models, of course, the deity ought to turn out something better than his "perfect man," who fell at the first temptation.

In the Cosmopolitan Mr. J. T. Van Gestel gives a vivid account of the eruption of the Krakatoa volcano, which, in May, 1893, overtook the islands of Java and Sumatra, and brought to a horrible death no less than two hundred thousand people. Mr. Van Gestel himself saw the city of Anjer, with its sixty thousand inhabitants, engulphed and blotted out. Believers in Providence must find it hard to reconcile a sudden terrible calamity like this with their fanciful theory.

Catholic Opinion has had its feelings outraged by the fact that eighty French Freethinkers sat down to dine together on Good Friday. It suggests they must have been instigated by the devil to thus outrage the feelings of good Catholics, who were fasting, and were not even obliged to smell the offensive dinner.

A church dispute reached an acute stage in Nebraska a few weeks ago. The affairs of the Polish Roman Catholic Church at Sheelytown, near Omaha, have been in the law courts for over a year, and a deadly hatred has existed between the factions, resulting in a bloody riot a month ago. On March 27, just after the evening service, the church was burned, and it is alleged that the faction of Father Kominski destroyed the church rather than allow it to fall into the hands of the bishop. Fighting is going on, and another riot is feared. Christianity has seldom brought anything more nearly approaching the popular idea of the millennium than this state of things; but perhaps these rioting and bloodthirsty Polish Catholics are not Christians? Who shall decide?

The Rev. Geo. H. Hepworth, who writes the sermon in the New York Herald, Sunday, March 31, says: "We shall, undoubtedly, experience a great many surprises when we get to heaven. The heaven depicted by the popular theology is a place very undesirable to go to, because death, we are told, will make such changes in us that we shall lose all of our personal peculiarities, and perhaps our personality itself." Well might the man of God question if such an immortality would be worth having.

Mr. Carroll Everett, of Harvard University, in a paper on "The Devil," in the New World, points out that Old Nick could always be trusted to keep a bargain. He says: "In all the stories that I recall in which a pact was made with the Devil, it was not he who tried to squirm out of it. We all remember the many questionable methods which have been adopted by those who had sold themselves, or others, to him to escape making the delivery by some technical subterfuge, even after they had received the price. In all these transactions it has not been the Devil that has appeared at the greatest disadvantage. So far as I can recall the various narratives, if the Devil makes a promise he always keeps it, even to his own loss." The Bible stories bear this out. When the serpent says, "Ye shall not surely die," he is literally correct. On the other hand Jehovah sends lying spirits into the mouths of Ahab's prophets to lure him to destruction.

God's mercies have been magnificently displayed in the terrible French disaster, sweeping away whole villages, destroying over a hundred lives, and rendering hundreds of others homeless. In Hungary, too, four market towns, with thousands of houses, have been destroyed by the floods, and a great many persons and large numbers of cattle have been drowned.

Again the cholera has broken out at Mecca, and is reported as spreading rapidly from that pilgrim centre. Here religion, instead of coping with disease, rather tends to its diffusion.

According to the Dover Observer (April 27), an abominable case of cruelty has been perpetrated at one of the religious Homes of that city. The Institution has associated with it people who believe that faith and prayer will accomplish everything. A young woman was admitted into the Institution who had run a needle into her foot, which, together with the leg, became greatly inflamed, keeping her in an agony of pain. Orders were given that she should not be allowed any surgical assistance, but that, instead, prayers should be said over her for two hours daily, and that she should wait till it should please her Maker to release her from the tormenting pain which had driven her well-nigh mad. If the Observer's statement is correct, the directors of the Institution in question should not only be named, but prosecuted for their pious inhumanity.

The South Shields Free Press is printing a discussion on "Theosophy," which is rendered amusing by bogus Mahatma letters. The matter advanced by the Theosophists is hardly worth anything better, though Mr. Gordon Scott puts his pin into their air-bladders very seriously.

The Bolton School Board spent three hours arguing whether they should petition for rates to be applied to voluntary schools. Mr. Cooper told them plainly that, if the clerical resolution passed, the minority would present a counter petition.

Walter Condy Parsons, a lad of seventeen, who lived at Small Heath, Birmingham, blew out his brains with a revolver. His mother had committed suicide some months previous, and he brooded over the catastrophe until his own mind became unhinged. According to some letters he left at his lodgings, he was an Agnostic without belief in a future life. Whereupon the Coroner—Mr. Oliver Pemberton—was silly enough to tell the jury that "If a man can neither find a deity in theological teaching nor in nature, he must be mad." Fancy an obscure official talking in this way of his intellectual superiors—such as Darwin, Clifford, Spencer, Huxley, and Bradlaugh! We should like to feel that coroner's bumps.

The Christian, who is ever ready with a defence for his fetish book, is sometimes amusing. One who was asked how, after all the cattle had died by one of the plagues of Egypt, they were nevertheless afflicted with boils, said the Egyptians had bought fresh cattle in the meantime. He might as well have said that the Lord created fresh cattle for them.

"General" Booth has been occupying the Colston Hall, Bristol, which would not be available for a Freethought meeting. His advertised program was "Two Days with God." It doesn't follow, though, that God has had two days with Booth.

Charles Dickens used to tell the following story about a Methodist preacher: "This preacher had been called to officiate at the funeral of a relative of a Conservative editor, and as the preacher himself aimed to be a Liberal leader in the district, he and the editor had often crossed swords. This time the chance came to deliver a home thrust without a chance for either parry or reply. At the coffin of the deceased, beside which the editor and other mourners knelt together, the preacher made this appeal: 'Lord, overrule this affliction to the welfare of all assembled, including the reptile now sprawling in Thy presence, who has frequently abused Thy servant in the columns of his beastly publication.'"

According to the special commissioner of the Boston Herald, who visited all the principal towns in the State of

Digitized by Google

Maine to observe the working of the Maine Liquor Law, which has been for many years in force in that State, Prohibition does not prohibit. The law is violated with impunity. Portland is said to have "about four hundred rum-shops" and from four to five hundred liquor-sellers live in Lewiston. The commissioner observed that the police can resolutely "put down" whiskey when it is offered them to drink, and one beside him at an hotel bar insisted on the commissioner taking a drink at his expense.

An Austrian has invented a rapping and talking table Der Stein der Weisen describes this ingenious electrical apparatus, which is intended for conjurers, "mejums," and private parties entertaining their friends.

Mr. Disraeli and Dean Stanley were once staying in the same house, and it fell to the statesman's lot to listen to a sermon from the Broad Church divine. As was his wont, Dean Stanley indulged in an eloquent denunciation of dogmatism. When next they met, Mr. Disraeli remarked: "We have to thank you for a most eloquent sermon, Mr. Dean, and I must say, from your own point of view, for a most disinterested one. No dogmas, no deans."

The Monist, of Chicago, opens with an account of "The World's Parliament of Religions," by the President, the Hon. C. C. Bonney. It is proposed to commemorate and follow up the work of that Parliament with "The World's Religious Parliament Extension." This may be taken as one sign of the break up of Christianity. For Christianity is nothing if not exclusive in its pretensions. It proclaims there is no salvation under heaven save in the name of Jesus Christ, and "he that believeth not shall be damned." At the Parliament the only voice of narrowness and bigotry came from Christians. When once Christians resign their pretensions to having an infallible divine revelation, and admit that there is truth in other religions besides their own, they virtually admit that their own faith may be criticised and rejected as much as Buddhism or Brahmanism.

The Rev. W. D. P. Bliss calls Mr. Kidd's Social Evolution "one of the most dangerous productions of recent years." He regards it as a trap for the orthodox. The cheese that baits it is the laudation of religion and Christianity, but the hidden barb is that Christianity is only pretended to be useful, not true. "Evolution is the main thing. God and Christianity are incidentals. What of it? They are useful as characteristic social factors, such as slavery, for example, was." This, says Mr. Bliss, is the real position of the book, and he asks: "Does it really make no difference whether Christianity be true or not?"

At the same time, Dr. F. Lees, the veteran temperance advocate, declares he regards Mr. Balfour's Foundations of Belief as most pernicious, anti-rational, and Romanising. He intends to devote his remaining days to a refutation.

The English Mechanic, writing on "Examinations," says: "We remember at the London University matriculation examination that one of the questions in English literature, set, by the bye, by the Rev. Dr. Angus, now member of our London School Board, was, 'Write out the Lord's Prayer, and underline the words in it of classical origin.' Immediately in front of us sat a Hindoo student, and we were curious to know his reply. He told us afterwards, outside the examination-room, that he had written: 'Not being a Christian, I do not know the Lord's Prayer.' But that two average sane men should have propounded such a question at an examination which it was known would be attended by Hindoos, Jews, Mohammedans, 'barbarians, Scythians, bond and free,' is significant of the bad side of the system."

The Vicar of St. Pancras is one of those numerous men of God who collect their Easter offerings under false pretences. He issued a formal notice, like a taxgatherer, stating that the collector will call on the parishioners for the purpose of collecting the Easter Dues. There is not a hint in it to ill-informed people that this is a voluntary contribution, while a reference to seeing that they get "a receipt" for the "payment" rather suggests the contrary.

The Fulham Vestry have directed their Law and Parliamentary Committee to consider and report on the recent action of the Rev. C. W. Muriel, the vicar of the parish. The man of God at the Easter vestry meeting took the chair without being elected, and the people's warder was appointed by his casting vote. The vicar's action was absolutely illegal, the law having distinctly abolished the old privilege of vicars. Vestries are foolish if they longer stand the usurpation of non-elected persons, and the sooner the men of God are made to feel they are no longer in their old position of privilege, the sooner they will be on good behavior.

The introduction of separate Communion cups into the fashionable churches in America has occasioned considerable commotion. Many doctors advocate it as a necessary sanitary precaution. Many theologians, however, denounce the practice as not in accordance with the example of Christ, who passed around the one common cup. Dr. Rainsford denounces it as "fake and fudge." The Rev. C. W. Millard says: "Take away the common cup, and the tendency to divide the worshippers is felt. The natural trend is bad. One man may have a better cup than another. This may cause jealousy or envy. Then the more fortunate may clamor for a separate altar, where they can be divided from their poorer neighbors."

Dr. J. M. Buckley, the editor of the New York Christian Advocate, says: "The emergency is grave; for the holy communion, the most sacred symbol of the Church, the most tender and pathetic ceremonial of all history, the source of the most blessed influences, the nucleus of the most spiritual associations, the elixir of life to the penitent, the renewer of hope in the self-distrustful, the vivifier of faith, the foretoken of immortality, the antetype of the marriage supper of the Lamb, and the unifier of believers in heaven and in earth, is contemplated and approached by many with a divided mind." The alarm of the ministers at the division of their congregation on this point will not count for much in face of the published report of Dr. Forbes, professor of chemistry in Rochester University, who says: "We have found in the communion cup the undeveloped germs of twenty-two diseases." Few love their Jesus so much as to be regardless whether they imbibe bacteria with him or not.

The Sporting Chronicle gives insertion to the following lines on L:—

Hell's played out! no matter what the preacher folks may say,
Though they may try to keep it hot, it's dying every day;
The place where sinners sizzled in the tortures of the cursed
Has somehow cooled its fires since our water pipes all burst.

The pit of burning sulphur o'er which they used to shake
A fellow every Sunday, just to keep him wide awake,
And the awful smell of brimstone, and the imps that shrieked with glee,
They aren't one-half so terrible as what they used to be.

Some people say it isn't right to let the fires die;
They'd rather keep them going, just to hear the sinners fry;
"What good is heaven going to prove," they ask, "for me and you,
If everybody else gets in to share the glory, too?"

Lord Oxford mentions having seen for sale at a small town in Italy, among other relics, a finger-nail from the hand of St. Peter, a bit of a never-dying worm preserved in spirits, a quill from a cock that crowed at the crucifixion, and the chemise of the Holy Virgin! "The good man that showed me all these commodities had got into such a habit of calling them 'the blessed' this and 'the blessed' that, that at last he showed me 'a bit of the blessed fig-tree that Christ cursed.'"

Mr. J. B. Wookey—we believe he is an "evangelist"—held forth at Nottingham lately, in connection with the P.S.A. movement, on "The Woman Who Did." It was a meeting for "men only," with "no youths under eighteen years of age admitted." Perhaps the precaution was necessary. We dare say Mr. Wookey was equal to the suggestiveness of his advertisement. But would it not be as well to fix the same age-limit for Bible reading? Mr. Wookey's address could hardly have been blacker or bluer than Holy Writ.

Hugh Price Hughes has been to Derby—not the Derby, but the city of that name. Of course he was haunted by that Atheist Shoemaker exposure. Some of our friends sent him one of our pamphlets in an envelope marked "urgent," while he sat upon the platform. They caught him as he was leaving the building, and asked him why his book was withdrawn. He replied: "Rubbish, nonsense, it's a lie." Afterwards he actually denied that the Gibsons were the right people, forgetting that Mr. Holyoake admitted "Gibson" to be the name which was given to him in confidence. What a brazen liar, to be sure!

Professor Drummond is getting into trouble over his Lowell Lectures on "The Ascent of Man." The Free Synod of Argyll has asked the General Assembly to "take the matter into consideration, and to give such judgment as shall conserve the interests alike of faith and science." No judgment can conserve both.

There must be something wrong about the family government when a four-year-old boy is heard praying: "Oh, Lord, take all the naughty out of Johnny, and all the scold out of papa, and all the punish out of mamma. Amen."

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

May 15 and 16, debate at Derby with Mr. Lee (C.E.S.).

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—May 5, Glasgow; 6, 7, 8, and 9, debate at Glasgow with Dr. Jamieson; 12, Dundee; 19, Camberwell; 26, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

E. Mendum.—We send you our paper as soon as issued. Will you oblige by doing the same? Yours is usually six weeks old ere it reaches us.

H. Organ.—"Acid Drops" are all written by Messrs. Foote and Wheeler. Glad to hear you are so fond of them.

J. Fletcher.—We hope we have your initial properly. The Derby debate is now fixed for May 15 and 16. Mr. Foote is in first-rate health, but often a little weary from over-work.

S. Holmes.—Thanks for your good wishes.

The Secretaries of London Branches whose lectures are announced in the London Secular Federation list need not send notices to us, except in case of any alteration.

S. P. (Manchester).—Delighted to learn that your affection for Charles Bradlaugh is consistent with a "robust admiration" for his successor in the Presidency. Swift said of Queen Anne that her heart was not large enough for more than one friendship at a time; and there are a few Bradlaughites who seem nearly as narrow. Happily it is only a few.

W. C. (Dorking).—Many thanks. We always look for your name among subscribers. We shall resume the Christmas and Midsummer appeals for the N.S.S. when we have done with these special appeals.

W. Stuart.—Thanks for your offer of £10 if the project is brought to a successful termination.

H. A. Cumber.—It may be true that if we advocated Christianity with what you are pleased to call our "eloquence and wit" we should be "swamped with donations," but we could hardly become a Christian without softening of the brain, and the "wit," at any rate, would then have disappeared.

E. H.—(1) Begging your pardon, Judas was paid to identify Jesus; which is a great joke, seeing how well he must have been known, if there is any truth in the Gospel. Judas says to the apprehenders, "Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he." (2) Sunday—that is, the Sun's Day—was observed by the Gentiles; and when the Christians broke away from Judaism and its forms, and gave up the Sabbath, they just took Sunday instead of it, as the only day open to them. That is the whole secret of the "first day."

T. Wilmot.—We must speak of a man as we find him. Mr. Foote will publish a little volume on the question you refer to as soon as he finds time for its composition.

Nemo.—Your letter is flattering; but this is certain, that we give our whole life (body and soul, as the saying is) to the cause of Freethought.

F. W. Thorrington.—Thanks for your Unitarian friend's comments on that Christian lecturer, who is not worth an advertisement in our columns.

J. M. R. B.—Mr. Foote missed you at Glasgow. Thanks for cutting.

R. Brown.—We have Palmer's Principles of Nature. He was, as you say, an able writer. Shall be pleased to hear from you at any time.

T. Fisher.—Thanks for the promise.

Two Macs.—We wish you success.

J. Hill.—The Chatham Branch did noble work in raising its pretty little hall at New Brompton. We are not surprised to learn that working men and women members subscribed as much as £7 or £8 each.

Papers Received.—Dover Observer—Two Worlds—New York Review of Reviews—Newcastle Daily Leader—New York Tribune—Blue Grass Blade—Truthseeker—Western Figaro—Boston Sunday Globe—Boston Journal—Isle of Man Times—Middlesex County Times—Freeman's Journal—Bon Accord—Open Court—Melbourne Argus—Chatham and Rochester News—Newcastle Evening Chronicle—Dublin Evening Herald—Der Arme Teufel—Twentieth Century—Boston Investigator—South Shields Free Press—Kansas Lucifer—Freidenker.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

HALL OF SCIENCE.

A considerable number of shares in the National Secular Hall Society (Limited) have been applied for, and fresh applications are coming in daily. But we are still a good way off realising the £600 necessary to clear off Mr. R. O. Smith's mortgage. It will be remembered that he gave us till the end of April to raise the amount, but the time is insufficient, and I have requested him to let his offer stand until the end of May. Unfortunately his answer has not arrived yet (I am writing on Wednesday morning), but I presume it will be favorable.

This fact need not deter any friend from applying for shares, or sending donations, in response to my appeal; for I promise that all their money shall be returned if the project is not carried to a successful issue.

There are several interesting letters amongst my mass of correspondence, but I have only room to mention a few of them.

Mr. John Umpleby, of Blackburn—one of the N.S.S. vice-presidents—says that if five friends will subscribe £100 each, or ten friends £50 each, he will do the same. Mr. Umpleby says he is not a wealthy man, but he would strain a point in this instance, as he thinks there should be "no apathy shown in the matter."

Mr. R. S. Smith, a veteran Freethinker, of Devonport, sends up applications for five shares. Mr. Boorman, of the Chatham Branch, states that twelve shares will be taken up by some of his members; which is a brave example to other Branches, especially as the Chatham friends are maintaining a hall of their own. The Barnsley Branch, which has had some reverses, also applies for four shares.

Mr. W. H. Morrish, a fine old veteran, of Bristol, who took some shares a few months ago, offers to take more if there is a prospect of success. Mr. Daniel Baker, of Birmingham, who has recently been laid low with a severe illness, is now well enough to write me a letter with his own hand. Unfortunately he is still confined to his bed, but he will help when he is able to get about.

Responding to my appeal to "those who prefer to make a promise, on condition that the attempt is successful," a city friend offers £10 as a donation for shares in my name or that of the N.S.S.

Mr. Martin Weatherburn, of Cramlington, whose support I am always proud of, applies for two shares. Another veteran, and the oldest of them all—a Londoner—offers his subscription.

A London friend, already a shareholder, will take any number of shares up to a hundred. Mr. J. H. Ridgway, one of our quiet "always there" London workers, takes another twenty shares. Mr. G. F. Wenborn, another Londoner, takes fifteen more. Mr. A. Tripp, a Brighton veteran, takes another five. The Birmingham Branch and the Finsbury Park Branch take five shares each.

Mr. G. Nidd, a London friend, is one of twelve, who hope soon to be twenty, or even forty. They are to subscribe sixpence each weekly, and to take a share in the name of one of them for every pound thus accumulated. Which is a very happy idea.

I wish I had room for bits from the letters of donors, some of which have brought the moisture to my eyes. I greatly value their expressions of affection and confidence.

I have received the following fresh donations:—J. D., £2; W. Baxter, 5s.; D. F. Gloak, 2s. 6d.; T. Dobson, 5s.; W. S. M., 10s.; H. A. S., 10s.; C. North, 1s.; E. F. B., 10s.; F. Holland, 2s. 6d.; W. B., 2s. 6d.; W. Hyde, 2s. 6d.; Rubber Stamp Flexible Type Co. (Manchester), £5; One of the Girls, 2s.; C. Mallinson, 2s.; T. Hopkins, 1s.; A few non-members, 5s.; Two Macs, 2s.; M. Bell, £3; T. E. M., 1s.; Nemo, 2s. 6d.; Alpha, 1s.; H. A. Cumber, 5s.; Shop Assistants, 4s. 6d.; F. B., 2s. 6d.; T. Dunbar, 1s. 6d.; W. C. (Dorking), £1; J. Hayes, 1s.; S. Holmes, £1; Fletcher (Derby), 5s.; H. Organ, 1s.; W. Lamb, £1; B. D., £1.

In continuing this appeal I do so in the hope that it will soon be entirely successful. Those who cannot take shares, or prefer not to do so, are earnestly invited to send me any donation they can afford, no matter how small it may be. Many littles make much, and in the union of numbers is strength.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Putnam, the President of the American Secular Union, and an intimate personal friend of Colonel Ingersoll, is on the Atlantic while we are penning this paragraph. The ship he is voyaging in is timed to arrive at Southampton early on Friday morning, and Messrs. Foote and Watts will be there to meet her as she steams into dock. They will welcome Mr. Putnam in the name of the Secular party, and travel up with him to London, where they will see to his comfort and make him feel as much at home as possible in a new land.

Mr. Putnam is to deliver his first lecture at the London Hall of Science this evening (May 5). Mr. Foote gives up his Sunday in order to take the chair and introduce our distinguished visitor. We hope the Freethinkers of the metropolis will muster in strong force on this occasion, and pack the hall in every corner. Mr. Putnam ought to have a big meeting and a grand reception. He represents the American Secular Union officially, and in giving him an enthusiastic welcome our friends will be honoring the Freethought party in the land of Ingersoll. Mr. Putnam has a reputation for eloquence upon the platform, and we know he is an eloquent writer. N.B.—The free admission will be suspended on this occasion.

The National Secular Society's Annual Conference takes place at Bristol on Whit-Sunday. Mr. Putnam will attend it and speak at the evening meeting as President of the American Secular Union. He will also read a special letter from Colonel Ingersoll to the Freethinkers of Great Britain. Mr. Putnam will send an account of the Conference to the New York Truthseeker, and we hope he will have plenty of good material for his article. Branches of the N.S.S. should lose no time in making arrangements to be represented at this Conference. We believe there will be a strong gathering of our party's lecturers.

The report of the Hall of Science Libel Case is now on sale in pamphlet form, with a sixteen-page Introduction by Mr. Foote, giving a history of the case before trial and a full and true account of "The Leeds Orgies," which the Christian Evidence people have made such sinister use of for nearly twenty years. This Introduction has given Mr. Foote a great deal of trouble, partly owing to the difficulty of obtaining all the facts relating to the Leeds affair. But the thing is done at last, and done once for all; so that this pamphlet should stand for a long while as a thorough vindication of Secularism against its most malignant calumniators.

The pamphlet is well printed on good paper, and is published at the low price of threepence. Of course there will be a considerable loss on this edition. Should it turn out that there is a wide demand for the publication—and there should be, for Secularists ought to circulate it as extensively as possible—Mr. Foote will issue a bigger edition on cheaper paper and at a lower price—say twopence, or even a penny. It could not be produced at that price, but the great thing is to get it widely distributed.

There was a capital audience at the Hall of Science last Sunday evening, when Mr. Charles Watts lectured on "Man and the Universe." The applause was very enthusiastic, and at the conclusion of the lecture it was repeated again and again.

To-day, Sunday, May 5, Mr. Watts lectures three times in Glasgow, and on Monday evening he commences a four nights' debate in the Glasgow City Hall with Dr. Jamieson.

The annual meeting of the Liverpool Branch takes place this Sunday evening at the Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne's-street. A good attendance of members is desired.

At the Finsbury Park Branch meeting, last Sunday, motions for the Conference Agenda were passed, and delegates appointed. It was unanimously resolved to take up five fully-paid-up shares in the National Secular Hall Society as an inducement to other N.S.S. Branches to go and do likewise.

The Report of the Humanitarian League, read at its annual meeting on April 25, showed a greatly extended amount of work during the past year. The energetic workers on the H. L., with but a small income, can fairly claim that they are helping to leaven the public mind with humanitarian principles.

Mr. C. Cohen lectures in Victoria Park, for the first time this season, on Sunday afternoon. Freethinkers in the neighborhood are asked to attend and support the meetings against the attacks of Christian rowdies.

The Rochester and Chatham Standard devotes several paragraphs of "Chit-Chat" to the recent Foote-Waldron debate at New Brompton. The writer doubts whether any good comes of such intellectual encounters, but he compliments Mr. Waldron as a speaker, and says that "Mr. Foote is an able and eloquent debater, and friends and foes joined in acknowledging his power and ability."

The Islington Branch opens its al fresco lecturing season to-day (May 5) at its station in Prebend-street, Packington-street. During May the experiment of lectures in Finsbury Park on Sunday evenings is to be tried, and they will be continued if the Branch finds them successful.

The West London Branch having decided to reopen the outdoor propaganda in Kilburn, local Freethinkers are earnestly requested to attend and support the platform to-day (May 5), when Mr. F. Haslam will lecture, his subject being, "Bible Stories: Are they True?" Time, 7 p.m.

The Bristol Branch commences its open-air propaganda this Sunday evening, at 7, in the lower end of Eastville Park, when Mr. J. Keast will give an address on Christian Evidence. Friends in the neighborhood are requested to attend and support the meeting.

Mr. William Heaford lectures at the Failsworth Secular Schools on Sunday afternoon and evening, his subjects being "Secularism Expounded and Vindicated," and "The Bible, the School, and Morality." Hymns and choruses will be sung by the choir, assisted by the Failsworth string band, and tea will be provided for friends from a distance.

Dr. Lyman Abbott writes in the Century on "Religious Teaching in the Public Schools." He argues in favor of moral teaching, and against the State conducting religious exercises. "Settlement," he says, "will not be reached by contriving some simple theology which can be taught in the public school, on the theory that a theology can be found so broad and simple that Agnostics, Jews, Protestants, and Roman Catholics will agree upon it. Theology is the philosophy of religion, and the philosophy of religion is not necessary to good citizenship." His paper is an attempt to find a basis acceptable to all reasonable parties.

There was a capital audience at Mr. Foote's lecture for the West London Branch on Tuesday evening. The Athenæum was well filled, and the lecture was followed with close attention. Mr. Touzeau Parris took the chair and kept questioners to the point, much to the disgust of one or two of them who wanted to put questions several yards long. Four Christians offered opposition, and were listened to courteously. Mr. Foote's reply aroused great enthusiasm.

Mr. A. B. Moss will be forty years old on May 8. People used to think about their funerals at that age, but the world has altered, and Mr. Moss is still a "young man," though it is just twenty years this month since he delivered his first Freethought lecture. Mr. Moss's last lecture (that is, his last up to date) was delivered on Sunday morning to a big open-air audience at Camberwell. We hope he will keep on the war-path for another twenty years at least.

Mr. J. M. Wheeler has taken the witch-burning case at Clonmel as the text for a terrible sermon, which he preaches in a pamphlet entitled Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible. Readers of the Freethinker know how thoroughly our colleague always does his work. He proves conclusively, by a multitude of references, that the Clonmel witch-burners were good Bible Christians. The pamphlet, which is published at twopence by Mr. Forder, should be widely circulated while the Irish tragedy is fresh in the public mind.

Obituary.

Last Sunday, the 28 ult., we consigned to the tomb, in Sunderland Cemetery, the remains of a sturdy Freethinker, Thomas Cussins, who died at the age of fifty-one on the previous Thursday. Though not taking any official part in the business of the N.S.S., our late friend had for many years maintained in private discussion the truth of Secular principles, both here and in the South of England. As a young man he had fought for liberty in the American War. Though earnestly adjured to seek the services of a clergyman in the last days of his illness, he resolutely held to his opinions, contemplating the end with calmness, and even with pleasure. Austin Holyoake's service was read at the graveside by W. R. Stansell to an attendance composed chiefly of the deceased's Catholic friends, upon whom it appeared to have much effect. Few Freethinkers assembled, they being mostly occupied in listening to Mr. Foote's grand lecture in the Victoria Hall.—W. R. Stansell.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

In the April Monist the editor, Dr. Paul Carus, criticises the late Professor Romanes's Thoughts on Religion; and, having been a correspondent of the Professor, throws some light on his "conversion." Romanes never got away from the sentiments in which he was trained. In his Candid Examination of Theism he says: "I feel it is desirable to state that any antecedent bias with regard to Theism which I individually possess is unquestionably on the side of traditional belief." It was "with the utmost sorrow" he found his intellect in opposition to it. When his health broke down, he "rummages his brain for arguments to silence the voice of reason!" "What tortures," exclaims his friend, "must this man have suffered in his eagerness not to think, but to believe! His religious struggle may have been the physical cause of his premature death; for distraction of mind is more injurious than overwork. And, after all, he was anxious to attempt the impossible." The case of Professor Romanes seems to be the painful, but not unusual, one of a long struggle of reason against preconceived ideas and dogmas inculcated in youth, which only triumph, if triumph it can be called, when ill-health prostrates the faculties. The incoherent and unfinished state of the notes left by Professor Romanes sufficiently indicates that their author, when he penned them, was no longer at his best. Canon Gore would probably have done better for his friend's reputation, and his own, by suppressing them.

* * *

Mr. Edward Douglas Fawcett, author of A Key to the Riddle of the Universe, contributes an article to the Monist on "The Well-Springs of Reality." He says: "Monads, human, subhuman, superhuman, are the well-springs of reality." This key to the riddle is an old one, which even in the hands of Leibnitz did not prove very useful. Mr. Fawcett, who makes "metaconsciousness" and "idealist monadology" solve all sorts of difficulties, complains of the "word-spinning" of Hegelianism!

* * *

It is pleasant to find that our old friend, the English Mechanic, keeps up its high standard of excellence, and provides thought as well as information for its clientele. It was this combination which, in the days of R. A. Proctor, made the E. M. a welcome visitor in other places beside the workshop. In the monthly part for May, which lies before us, we note that "A Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society," and other writers, ably maintain the reputation of the paper; while the leading articles embrace such popular topics as Eastertide, Witches, and Witchcraft, and a large number of correspondents seem to delight in answering every conceivable question bearing on science, mechanics, and the arts.

* * *

During the Franco-Prussian War the name of M. Albert Collignon, "the man on the white horse," who stirred up the people of Metz against Marshal Bazaine, was familiar. He is now about to publish two volumes on two Freethinkers, one dealing with the life and work of Diderot, and the other on Gustave Flaubert.

* * *

Messrs. Luzac & Co. have issued a translation of Dr. Wildeboer's Origin of the Canon of the Old Testament, which gives the present aspect of "higher criticism."

* * *

D. Appleton & Co., of New York, are issuing an "Anthropological Series." The initial volume is Dr. Mason's Woman's Share in Primitive Culture, which share is proved to have been a very considerable one. The second volume is by the late A. D. Quatrefages, on The Pygmies. The author, who was of the old school of anthropologists, believed in the great antiquity of the human race, and never fully accepted evolution. He tries to show that the pygmies offer no support to the hope of finding a missing link. The last chapter, on "The Religious Belief of the Hottentots and Bushmen," is of great interest.

* * *

English versions of a number of the late M. Darmesteter's essays have been included in a volume which Houghton, Mifflin, & Co. are to publish. The subjects of the essays are: "The Religions of the Future," "The Prophets of Israel," "Afghan Life in Afghan Songs," "Race and Tradition," "Ernest Renan," "An Essay on the History of the Jews," and "The Supreme God in the Indo-European Mythology."

* * *

The Melbourne Argus (March 23) has a very ill-natured notice of Charles Bradlaugh: His Life and Works, which it calls "pious, but a little preposterous, and altogether out of proportion." It says: "Bradlaugh or no Bradlaugh, the oath would have been abolished in good time." The "good time" of the Argus, like that of the song, is always "coming." To go on, as it does, to speak of "Bradlaugh's brutal and foolish attempt to force his way into the House of Commons" may be pious, but is certainly preposterous. Bradlaugh only persisted to his utmost in doing what his constituents had sent him to do. Had he not done so, the "good time" might have been deferred to the Greek calends.

A KIND OF PREACHER.

"Volumes might be written on the impiety of the pious."
—Herbert Spencer.

A MIGHTY moral leader this,
Who deals with finely-flourished arms,
Now in damnation, now in bliss,
Now sweetly comforts, now alarms;
And skilled to clothe each view intense
With pulpit-shaking eloquence!

Nothing too vague or too sublime
Transcends his confident surmise;
The awful ambuscades of time
Conceal no secrets from his eyes;
The deeps of space he coolly sounds,
He gives eternity its bounds.

On Nature's plan his looks are bent,
And lo! she teems, we straightway learn,
With special providences meant
For his rare wisdom to discern.
He scorns what Science may disclose,
For she but talks of what she knows.

He lifts aloft his pious gaze;
In holy wrath his features glow;
For all dark sinning souls he prays;
His congregation weeps below.
He sees destruction's giddy brink
Thronged with these rogues who dare to think.

But once beneath his throne we sat;
We heard his outflow, word for word:
And God was this, and God was that,
And God was thus and thus, we heard;
Till we, who merely mope and plod,
Envied this bosom-friend of God!

—Bloom and Brambles. EDGAR FAWCETT.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

May 5, Hall of Science, London; 12, Camberwell; 19, Bradford; 26, Liverpool.

June 2, N.S.S. Conference; 9, Glasgow; 16, Edinburgh; 23, Manchester; 30, Sheffield.

July 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14, Bristol; 21, Birmingham.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York in August, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

Arrangements are being made for him to speak in Derby and Stockton-on-Tees during the weeks following his being at Manchester and Newcastle-on-Tyne. Dundee should be visited when he lectures in Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Christianity is to be regarded as a system rather than as a doctrine, for, like Proteus, it changes its form, and, whenever defeated in attack, if policy so dictates, it adopts the proved ideas of its assailants, and thus preserves its organisation, which is more essential to its official supporters than are its dogmas. These are abandoned or changed whenever expediency dictates, making aggressive effort very difficult; for whenever a point is successfully assailed it is declared to be "unessential," or else not to belong to true Christianity. Everything is abandoned but natural morality, and still men call themselves Christians and support the system which has no excuse for continuance unless miracle and revelation are facts. When Rationalists see the duty of consistency, they will cease to uphold a system which has no logical existence apart from supernaturalism.—Robert C. Adams.

Digitized by Google

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—VII.

Major Evans Bell.

Major Thomas Evans Bell was chiefly known by his works on Indian affairs. He entered the army in 1842, and was employed in the suppression of Thugee. He served his country well in India, and probably in nothing better than in his continued advocacy in books and pamphlets of the just claims of the natives. But this independent attitude did not commend him to the authorities, and stood in the way of justly-earned promotion. As a Freethinker, he is to be remembered by his concise little book entitled The Task of To-day, in which, taking up Carlyle's injunction to do the duty nearest hand, he examines the religion in which he had been reared. During the early days of the Reasoner Major Bell supported that paper with both purse and pen, writing many Freethought articles under the signature of "Undecimus." He, indeed, contemplated selling his commission to devote himself to Freethought, but, by the advice of friends, was deterred. He returned to India at the outbreak of the mutiny, and became Deputy Commissioner of Police at Madras. He probably had some share in leading Judge Strange on the road to Freethought.

The influence of Carlyle is notable in The Task of To-day, which was published by James Watson in 1852, and is dedicated to G. J. Holyoake. He says in his preface: "Life is a very serious thing; every gleam of truth reveals to us more of the laws of absolute fact, inexorable and eternal, which make up the inscrutable Future and Invisible, as they do the visible and mysterious Present. Shall we raise our puny hands or voices and fight against those laws? Shall we lie against eternal truth, or shut our eyes and ears against it? I dare do none of these things deliberately. My share in the work of the world is doubtless of the minutest consequence, but to me it is of infinite consequence. To me it is of infinite consequence whether I live a traitor and a coward, or a true man. Good or bad, this is my work; I found I had it to do, and I have done it. May I ever do so."

The Task examines the Christian evidences with the result of showing that they were accepted in days of gross credulity, and have been largely maintained by pious frauds. Thus he says: "There was exactly the same evidence, and no more, in the third and fourth centuries that there is now—namely, certain narratives, the earliest of which was certainly not written sooner than thirty years after the death of Christ; but the superstition and ignorance of those times were such that accounts of supernatural events met with easy credit, and were attributed by some to divine, and by others to diabolical agency, according as they approved or disliked the character of the miracle-worker, or the tendency of his doctrines."

"Hardly two centuries ago a man in England was considered, even by the educated, as little better than an Atheist if he doubted that many old women were endowed by the Devil with the power of working miracles without number." The frauds, he shows, were not confined to Catholics. "Although modern Protestantism has never pretended to miraculous powers, yet Protestant pious frauds have always abounded, and abound in the present day. It is a gross fraud to gloss over and conceal the infamous characters and obviously interested motives of many of the principal actors in the Reformation, in England particularly, as Protestant writers have done. Awful interpositions of Providence, exaggerated and fictitious accounts of death-bed scenes, both of believers and infidels, the lying reports of missionaries, and, in particular, the long evangelical speeches they are so fond of putting into the mouths of their converts, are instances of Protestant pious frauds."

The alleged evidences of prophecy are equally examined, and paralleled by the evidence for Mohammedanism. The Bible is shown to bear many traces of superstition and savagery, and he proceeds to examine the evidence for an alleged Great First Cause. He concludes this section with the words: "To act this life well it is not necessary to know the secrets of the Invisible, the destinies of worlds and systems, or the life beyond the grave, if a life there be. That is the department of speculation and poetry, and not of knowledge or of action. We owe no service to the Invisible and Unknown; our work is here before us."

The little book concludes with the contention that morality must be independent of speculation, and an exhortation to mutual help and frankness in proclaiming unbelief in dogmas which have only cursed mankind. "How long," he asks, "could the present social ostracism be pursued against avowed unbelievers if the words, 'I am not a Christian,' were calmly and gently, but firmly, pronounced, not obtrusively paraded, in the drawing-room, the court of justice, and the senate, whenever passing event called for such an expression of opinion from a candid and honest man? How long could the Christian superstition enjoy its galvanic life in England if every man whose heart and intellect revolted from it were henceforward to raise his voice and pen to denounce and to abolish it? And in the speedy destruction and abolition of its influence lies our only hope of peaceable and harmonious progress."

Major Bell retired from India in 1865, but continued to largely interest himself in Indian affairs. He died September 12, 1887. The Illustrated London News shortly afterwards gave his portrait, which is that of a remarkably fine-looking man. J. M. W.

JONAH OUTDONE.

An American paper publishes the following, which bears internal evidence of being as true as Gospel: "Many years ago a ship had made its way around Cape Horn, and had entered the Gulf Stream. On this trip many of the passengers sickened and died. When they died it was the usual custom to read over the dead the burial service, attach a weight to the bodies, and cast them overboard. Among the passengers were an old man and his boy. The old gentleman had been out as a missionary to some island. At last he sickened, and it was supposed he had died. The usual service was read over his body, a carpenter's axe and grindstone were attached to it, and it was cast overboard into the sea and passed out of sight. This crazed the boy, and in a paroxysm of grief he leaped overboard and disappeared also. It was discovered that many sharks were following the vessel, and the sailors baited a hook, threw it overboard, and caught one of the monsters, and, with the aid of a windlass, they drew it on board. When the creature was dissected the sailors found the old man and boy in its stomach. By chance, or by the power of God, they had both been swallowed by the same shark. The old missionary was not dead, as supposed, but only in a religious trance. The warm atmosphere inside the shark had revived him. They had set up the grindstone, the boy was turning it, and the old man was grinding the axe preparatory to cutting their way out. As they had been working a'l-fired lively to prevent the gastric juices from taking hold of them and digesting them, and the atmosphere being quite warm, and the air rather impure, they both sweated tremendously. But after using two or three bottles of 'Orthodox Stomach Bitters,' the old man seemed better than he had been for some years, and entirely recovered."

Witchcraft.

Two hundred and fifty years ago it was moral in England to believe in witches, and it was a moral act to kill a witch. To-day it is held immoral to believe in witchcraft; to kill a witch would now be at law a criminal act. Witchcraft is so admittedly false that palmistry, conjuring, and fortune-telling are treated as punishable frauds. Yet from the supernatural point of view the reality of witchcraft is unquestionable, and the praiseworthiness of witch-killing is indisputable (vide Exodus xxii. 18, Leviticus xix. 26-31, xx. 27, Deut. xviii. 10, 11, I Samuel xxviii.). And in some of the districts of England where school boards are yet without influence, and where godless education has been prevented, the pious ignorant folk still believe in charms, wise women, and white and black magic.—C. Bradlaugh, "Supernatural and Rational Morality."

Real Beliefs.

I remember reading some time ago a suggestion, I think it was by a man of God, that every one should write down, in his own words, what he really believes. Having some leisure and a stock of paper, I thought of doing so. But the more I pondered the matter, the less paper seemed necessary, and I found that the document would not only omit every particular of the Athanasian Creed, but even of the Creed ascribed to the Apostles. I found that my real creed was a very meagre one, and entirely secular. If I wrote down "I believe in God," it would have no more real meaning than "I believe in ghosts." In my own existence and that of my fellows, and in my consequent relations to them, my real belief was included. Of course one could expand the beliefs arising out of our relations to other beings to considerable dimensions; but between this and the theological dogmas for which faith is demanded there is a great gulf fixed. People say they believe in them, but what they mean is that they assent to, without ever realising them.—Carpe Diem.

What strange rage possesses some people to insist on our all being miserable! They are like a quack, who would fain have us believe we are ill, in order to sell us his pills. Keep thy drugs, my friend, and leave me my health.—Voltaire.

Digitized by Google

MOSES AND SARGON.

STUDENTS of legendary lore are aware that one of the most widely extended of myths is that of the miraculously-preserved child. The Roman story of Romulus and Remus is strikingly similar to that told of the Trojan Paris and the Persian Cyrus. The story of Herod seeking to slay the child Christ is similar to that of Kansa seeking to destroy the infant man-god, Krishna. The oldest known of these stories is that of Sargon, whose reign is fixed by Assyriologists at about 3800 B.C., or some fifteen hundred years earlier than the date ascribed to Moses. Yet the story of Moses in the bullrushes is almost identical with that of Sargon.

As rendered by George Smith, Sargon's birth was in a grove, and the child's mother placed him in a cradle of wicker and launched it on the river. Fox Talbot renders it: "In a secret place she brought me forth; she placed me in an ark of bullrushes; with bitumen my door she closed up; she threw me into the river, which did not enter the ark to me; the river carried me; to the dwelling of Akki, the water-carrier, it brought me. Akki, the water-carrier, in his goodness of heart, lifted me up from the river. Akki, the water-carrier, brought me up as his own son" (Records of the Past, vol. v., p. 1).

Before the birth of Cyrus it was foretold that he would overthrow the Median kingdom of his grandfather, Astyages, and conquer Asia, and it was to ward off this calamity that the child was abandoned. Hecuba, wife of Priam, king of Troy, before the birth of Paris, dreamed that she brought forth a firebrand which caused the destruction of the city. To prevent it, the king ordered the destruction of the child. A tale of the Midrash tells us that, before the birth of Moses, Pharaoh dreamed that as he sat upon his throne an old man stood before him holding a balance, into one side of which he put all the princes and elders and nobles of Egypt, and all its inhabitants, and into the other side he put a young babe which outweighed them all. As Balaam interpreted the dream, a child was to be born to the Hebrews that threatened great danger to all Egypt; and he advised the decree that all their new-born sons should be thrown into the river.

In Chilperic Edwards' admirable little book, The Witness of Assyria; or, the Bible Contrasted with the Monuments, he gives not only the legends concerning Sargon and the proof of what an important part he played in Babylonian history and literature, but evidence of the improbability of the story of Moses. He says: "Commentators and apologists have long seen the absurdity of representing Pharaoh's daughter as giving a purely Hebrew name to her foundling." He shows how far-fetched are their conjectures, and remarks: "The whole story was written in Hebrew, by Hebrews, as part of the history of a Hebrew nation; therefore, the name of the hero must be taken as Hebrew until we have very strong evidence to the contrary. The probability is that the Jews borrowed the legend of Moses from their Babylonian conquerors."

CELSUS.

Known by their Fruits.

The Freethinkers of Oregon celebrated the birthday of Thomas Paine, and some of the orthodox people of the same State hanged him in effigy. With these specimen products of Liberalism and of religion before him, the Rev. Mr. Locke, of Portland, was moved to deliver a sermon on the "Fruits of Infidelity." No pomological expert can censure him for the choice he made, for the fruit of Infidelity, as illustrated in the present case, is good, being nothing less than a display of gratitude for services rendered and the paying of honor where honor has been long overdue. The fruit of religion, on the other hand, ripened under a hundred years of freedom, is the hanging in effigy of the foremost of the patriots who provided that freedom a home. The one fruit improves under liberty; the other decays. The one, grown on the tree planted by Paine, it is worth our trouble to pick; the other, dropping rotten from the gallows-tree, is enjoyed by no animal that I know of, except the religious hog, whose taste is not sufficiently cultivated to relish humpy salmon.—G. Macdonald, in "Truthseeker."

Whence the influence of our churches? By what agency have they awed the masses into silence, and even thrones into obedience? By what means have they succeeded in sowing sectarianism, setting man against his fellow, and threatening eternal infamy to all who would not kneel at their dark and dominant shrine? The Bible! Faith in the supernatural origin of that book is the secret source of priestly ascendency throughout Christendom. While that delusion prevails there is no hope for freedom in Europe.—Robert Cooper.

SCIENCE AND SUPERSTITION.

As crumble custom's mouldering chains away,
Power's gilded idol turns to common clay.
Heart flies to heart; no longer reason heeds
The weak resistance of established creeds;
Tradition totters from her misty throne,
And all the impostures of the past are known.
Hardly can we lend credence to the tale
Of their long woes who first rent error's veil;
What royal spite, what curses from the church
Scared the pale scholar in his cloistered search;
How many from themselves their visions hid,
Or, friendless, exiled, outcast and forbid,
Like Dante, scaling with dejected tread
A tyrant's staircase, broke a tyrant's bread!

. . . . . .

But now the soul, from ancient falsehoods woke,
Abjures old Superstition's rotten yoke;
No wrathful threat in Nature's thunder fears,
No fate foreboded in the falling spheres.
All fables, Fancy's fond impertinence,
Fade from the cold arithmetic of Sense.
Now to Truth's courts a never-faltering throng,
Thy torch, O Science! lights and leads along;
No sluggard sons this age of labor owns,
In earth's great workshop solitary drones,
But every mind the general task must share,
Brave the long toil, and mingle in the care;
In love with knowledge, that alone can be
Our country's hope—sole safeguard of the free.

T. W. PARSONS.

"General" Booth and the Angels.

While in Scotland last week "General" Booth, the Pope of the Salvation Army, in one of his addresses, remarked that he was particularly satisfied with the conduct of the angels who had warned Lot and his family of their danger, and helped them to flee from the doomed city. "I do like these angels," he added. "When I go to heaven, and have got over the first surprise at all I shall see there, I'll go and have a cup of tea with them."

For writing an infinitely more decorous yet scathing denouncement of the follies of Christianity, G. W. Foote, the Freethinker, was a few years ago sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment in Holloway Gaol. "General" Booth's coarse vulgarity was received with acclamation and loud cries of "Amen" and "Hallelujah" by thousands of excitable Salvationists "who had been washed in the blood of the Lamb."

What in one man was considered as the "rankest blasphemy," in another is regarded as "pious jocularity." But then the one man was an "Infidel," and the other is a pious Christian.

That accounts for the milk in the cocoa-nut.—The Crescent.

PROFANE JOKES.

Son—"And the missionary was eaten by the cannibal? Will the missionary go to heaven?" Father—"Oh, yes!" Son—"Will the cannibal?" Father—"Of course not." Son—"He'll not! Why, how can the missionary go to heaven if the cannibal doesn't, when the missionary's inside him?"

Dr. P—— took his son for a drive the other day, and stopped at a tavern to water his horse. After watching the operation, Bobby blurted out, "Papa, why don't the horse take the pail up with his feet and drink?" "Why, he isn't made that way," replied Dr. P——. "Why didn't God make him so?" next asked Bobby. "Ah! that beats me. How should I know?" The youngster's reverence for his father fell fifty per cent., and he replied: "I'll ask grandma. She knows God."

A well-known divinity professor, a grave and learned man, had five daughters, whom his students irreverently named "Genesis," "Exodus," "Numbers," "Leviticus," and "Deuteronomy." Beginning his lecture, one day, the professor said: "Gentlemen, I wish to speak to you about the age of Genesis." Roars of laughter came from the students. "Genesis is not so old as you suppose," continued the professor. More roars—so long continued, indeed, that the worthy man had time to think before he made the next remark. He said timidly—and he managed to hit the mark this time—"I may not be thinking of the same Genesis as you are!"

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30, S. P. Putnam will lecture.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science." Tuesday, at 8, dancing.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, C. James, "God at the Bar of Humanity."

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "Thomas à Kempis and the Inner Life."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, E. E. Sims, "The Need of an Aggressive Policy."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, T. Thurlow will lecture.

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Mansions in the Sky."

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, G. Standring will lecture.

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, a lecture.

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, C. Cohen will lecture.

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science"; 3.15, A. B. Moss, "The Ascent of Man"; 6.30, J. Fagan, "The Apostles' Creed."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, St. John will lecture. Thursday, at 8, F. Haslam, "Modern Science and Revelation."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, St. John will lecture. Wednesday, at 8, St. John will lecture.

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, J. Fagan, "Is there a God?"

KILBURN (High-road): 6.30, F. Haslam, "Bible Stories: Are they True?"

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, F. Harold Snelling, "Secularism and Citizenship."

MILE END WASTE: 11.15, C. Cohen, "Christianity and Morality."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, F. Haslam, "The Bible at the Bar of Reason."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, W. J. Ramsey, "Salvation by Proxy"—Part I.

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, J. Marshall will lecture; 3.15, C. Cohen will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Some Old Tales Re-told"; 7, "Under Which Flag?" Thursday, at 8, C. Cohen, "Fruits of Christianity."

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Coffee House, corner of Broad-street): Thursdays, at 8, papers, discussions, etc.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 7, J. J. Taylor will lecture.

DERBY (Pollicott's Dining Rooms, Market-place): 7.45, members' meeting to appoint Conference delegates, etc.

FAILSWORTH SECULAR SUNDAY-SCHOOL (Pole-lane): 2.30, William Heaford, "Secularism Expounded and Vindicated"; 6.30, "The Bible, the School, and Morality."

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 11.30, Charles Watts, "Trust in God a Delusion"; 2.30, "Theology at the Bar of History"; 6.30, "The Drawbacks of Theism; or, Dr. Jamieson's Fallacies Exposed."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Tontine Society; 7, C. Doeg, "The Best of All Possible Worlds." Annual meeting of members after lecture.

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, Laurance Small, B.Sc., "Darwinism and Socialism."

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (32 Dovecote-street): 6.30, Members'-meeting—important business.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 11, S. H. Alison, "The Gospel of Socialism"; 3, "The Bible and Modern Thought"; 7, "His Satanic Majesty" (preceded by recital). Tea at 5.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Captain Duncan's Navigation School, King-street): 7.30, Business meeting.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Secretary, "Royal Paupers."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BARNSLEY (May Day Green): 11, W. Dyson, "The Single Tax a Solution of Poverty"; 6.30, "The Problem of Evil—Theism's Latest Defence."

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, J. Keast, "Christian Evidence."

DERBY (Market-place): 6.45, Mr. Whitney, "The Bible Up to Date."

HULL (Corporation Field): 2.30 and 7, "What Socialism will Do." [If wet, Cobden Hall, Storey-street.]

Lecturers' Engagements.

STEPHEN H. ALISON, Sunnyside, 72 Union-grove, Clapham, London, S.W.—May 5, Sheffield.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—May 5, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 9, Wood Green; 12, Sheffield; 19, Manchester; 26, Wood Green; 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—May 5, m. Finsbury Park, e. Battersea; 12, m. Wood Green, e. Edmonton; 19, m. Finsbury, e. Deptford; 22, Hyde Park.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—May 5, a. Finsbury Park; 12, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, m. Clerkenwell.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—May 19, m. Kingsland. June 2, m. Finsbury Park; 19, m. Kingsland. July 17, m. Kingsland.

CHRIST'S MALTHUSIANISM.
WIFE AND SONS. Twopence.
London: W. REEVES, 185 Fleet-street, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's
Great New Lecture
ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE
Price Sixpence.
London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 182 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.
THE GODS. 6d.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.
ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.
CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.
ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.
ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.
PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.
HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.
ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.
TRUE RELIGION. 2d.
THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.
LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.
GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
THE DYING CREED. 2d.
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.
ART AND MORALITY. 2d.
DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.
SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.
MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.
SKULLS. 2d.
THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.
LIVE TOPICS. 1d.
MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.
REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.
REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.
CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.
CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.
Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.
Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.
The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.
Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.
Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.
Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.
Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 5s. 3d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 5s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 2s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 3d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free,

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

SPECIAL OFFER FOR 21 DAYS ONLY.

To clear our stock of 872 Parcels of

LOT 11 CONTAINING

ONE PAIR OF PURE WOOL BLANKETS,
ONE PAIR OF BED SHEETS,
ONE QUILT (Beautiful Design),
ONE TABLE-CLOTH.

Rather than keep them over till next Winter, we have decided, AS AN ADVERTISEMENT to clear them out at 19s. per Parcel, Carriage Paid.

WE CANNOT SEND MORE THAN TWO PARCELS TO ONE PERSON,

as the price is less than cost and, apart from the advertisement, we should never offer to sell at the above price. To those who have already tried LOT 11 we need say nothing about the value. They are all agreed that this is the Cheapest Parcel in the market. To those who have not tried it we say, Send one back and we will give 20s. for it, which will be a fair way of testing whether you like it or not.

Remember, for 21 Days Only, and no more than Two Parcels to One Person.

NEW SPRING PATTERNS NOW READY.

Send at once before the Crush for Whitsuntide.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4, UNION STREET, BRADFORD.

3d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 64pp.

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

"A Letter to Lord Ellenborough"

OCCASIONED BY THE SENTENCE WHICH HE PASSED ON

MR. D. I. EATON,

AS PUBLISHER OF

THE THIRD PART OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON."

BY

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—NO. 19. SUNDAY, MAY 12, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

OUR AMERICAN VISITOR.

MR. S. P. PUTNAM, the President of the American Secular Union, set foot on the shores of Albion on Friday morning, May 2. It was the dream of his life to visit this old country; the land of his forefathers, the land of Shakespeare and Shelley, and of Scott and Burns, the land of Thomas Paine and Charles Bradlaugh. He longed to see the Freethinkers of Britain, and to clasp hands with the men he had read of, who were over there—across the wide Atlantic—fighting the great battle of liberty. So one day he made up his mind to go, and now he is here in wonderland. It is not the vastness of our country that rouses his enthusiasm; for our island is ridiculously small to Americans, who say that we have to be careful after dark lest we should fall off it into the water. The only big thing here is London, and that is big; colossal, stupendous, overpowering. No, it is the great historic memories that appeal to a man like Mr. Putnam; not only what is, but what has been; the long past of a great present, and (let us hope) a mightier future.

When I heard that Mr. Putnam was coming I resolved that he should have a hearty welcome. Mr. Watts told me that he was a genial, earnest, hard-working "Liberal"—as they call Freethinkers in America; I knew myself that he was an able writer; and, beyond all that, he was the elected chief officer of the American Secularists. Apart, therefore, from any promptings of my own heart, I was bound to hold out the right hand of good fellowship.

Mr. Putnam came over on the "City of Berlin." She was due at Southampton some time on Friday morning; and as she might be in early in such fine weather, and we did not like the thought of his waiting on board the ship, with no one to greet him as she touched the shore, Mr. Watts and I ran down from London on the Thursday evening, so as to be in readiness at the moment of her arrival. It was lovely weather when we walked down to the dock, and we rejoiced that our American visitor would have a good introduction to our climate. When the "Berlin" arrived we were soon on board, and I welcomed Mr. Putnam in the name of the Secularists of this country.

There is nothing of the legendary Yankee—long, thin, and taciturn—about Mr. Putnam. Were it not for his moustache, he might be taken for a jolly little Irish priest. He positively bubbles over with geniality. Of course he does a little "guessing," but his American accent is not aggressive. It is just enough to give spice to his speech in the ears of an Englishman.

Yankees are somehow thought to be boastful. Why, I could never understand. Perhaps I have met with picked specimens, but I have always found them at least as modest as Englishmen. I remember the late Dr. Garrison, of Chicago, and how fine, manly, and unassuming he was. And there is really not the slightest flavor of "uppishness" about Mr. Putnam. He is sincere, open, and unaffected; and I was thoroughly at home with him in a few minutes.

We were a merry trio as we sped along to London by the boat train. We chatted about English and American Freethought, and I was surprised to see how well Mr. Putnam was posted up in the history of our movement on this side of the Atlantic. Every now and then, as he caught sight of an idyllic landscape in the Lotos-land we were passing through, he exclaimed, "That's fine!" America was younger and more unkempt; here the hand of man had been at work for ever so many centuries, giving the land an air of orderliness and good breeding.

From Waterloo station we drove to Charing-Cross over Westminster-bridge, giving our American visitor a view of the Thames, St. Thomas's Hospital, the Houses of Parliament, Westminster Abbey, and Trafalgar-square. After a good dinner—for all three of us were in excellent health and appetite—we parted; Mr. Putnam going home with Mr. Watts for a day or two, before taking up quarters at an hotel. The next day I saw Mr. Watts off to Glasgow, and took Mr. Putnam in charge until dusk. We visited the Zoological Gardens, which he much enjoyed; and he was much struck with Regent's-park.

I was able to show our American visitor the front of Holloway Gaol, where I spent a year of my life in a brick vault. Naturally he was much interested in that establishment. I was sorry I could not take him inside, and show him the apartment that was provided me, rent free, by generous Christians.

The Hall of Science was crowded on Sunday evening, when Mr. Putnam stood for the first time on an English platform, and heard for the first time in his life a ringing English cheer. Several ladies were upon the platform, including Mrs. Foote and Mrs. Watts. Among the more ungainly sex I noted Messrs. Wheeler, Forder, Parris, Moss, Samson, and Roger. Miss Vance and Miss Brown were busy, and alas! perspiring, over their work in the hall. I had given up my own Sunday to do our visitor honor, and through him the whole Secular party in America. My words as chairman were few. Mr. Putnam's rising was the signal for an outburst of enthusiasm that fairly startled him, and for a few minutes he was a little nervous. But he soon warmed to his work, and carried the audience with him to the end of his lecture. Mr. Putnam's style is what the Americans most appreciate; easy, colloquial, and abounding in anecdotes, which are always telling and illuminative. His spring-chicken story fairly convulsed the house. Of course it was at the expense of a minister. Mr. Engström, one of the secretaries of the Christian Evidence Society, who was busy taking notes, could hardly have relished this sally.

Mr. Putnam resumed his seat amidst a tempest of applause. One gentleman asked a question and offered a little opposition, which was well answered. Then an irrepressible lady took an innings. What she said was mostly unintelligible. But two points were clear enough. First, she said she was not religious; afterwards, she said she was a Catholic. This was too rich for anything. The audience exploded, and lecturer and chairman joined in the merriment.

Colonel Ingersoll had sent Mr. Putnam a brief letter before the latter left America. It was short and sharp; a kind of telegram from the front; for the Colonel is on a very active lecturing tour, with little time for correspondence. Mr. Putnam read this letter, and it immensely delighted the audience. After a handsome compliment to the English Freethinkers, who were described as honest, brave, tenacious, lovers of truth and haters of cant and hypocrisy; the Colonel told Mr. Putnam to "be a good boy," to "enjoy himself," and to "tell the truth and shame the clergy." Mr. Putnam will read a longer letter from Colonel Ingersoll at the National Secular Society's Conference.

Mr. Putnam was delighted with his reception, which, he says, far exceeded all his anticipations; and no doubt he has sent a glowing report to the New York Truthseeker, for which he is to write descriptive articles during his stay in England.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Putnam will be made as happy as possible while he is in London. When he goes into the provinces, I have no doubt he will meet with similar treatment. It should be a point of honor to give him large meetings as well as a hearty welcome. Mr. Putnam is a soldier of Freethought. His life is dedicated to her service. He subsists on soldier's wages—when there are any. We must see that he goes back to America with good reason to say that British Freethinkers are cordial, brotherly, and generous. And we want him to say all this, and as much more as his heart may prompt, to Colonel Ingersoll. We want him to tell the Colonel that the Freethinkers of this country are dying to see him, and that if he will only come he may be sure of a grand and loving reception.

G. W. FOOTE.

CRUELTY: HUMAN AND DIVINE.

HUMANITY is the measure of civilisation. If we wish to judge how far a nation or an epoch can be considered civilised, we should inquire its attitude with regard to women, to children, slaves, serfs, or underlings, to criminals, and to animals. We may adopt a similar standard in judging men. I know no better test of character than behavior to subordinates. "Power will show the man," said the early Greek sage, Bias, and the longer I live the more I see how few are fit to have power over their fellow beings. Professor F. W. Newman, a fervent Theist, confessed that his greatest difficulty was in God having created a being at once so powerful and so malignant as man.

Theologians ascribe cruelty to "our fallen nature." It would be more correct to say that it is an evidence of our brutish ancestry. And it is fearfully deep-seated. If any doubt this, let them watch the sports of boys, or read the reports of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. General Hamley, an observant writer as well as a brilliant soldier, noticed the ferocity engendered by war, and the absolute thirst for blood and slaughter which, in the heat of battle, came over even cultured soldiers. He did not doubt the stories of Chengis Khan delighting in pyramids of skulls, ninety thousand of which he is said to have had piled together on the ruins of Bagdad. The records of war, of slavery, and of insatiable "sport" are woeful reading to the tender-hearted. Human history is a long, red record of blood and tears.

Man's inhumanity to man must, on the Theistic hypothesis, be referred to his Maker. He has made him as he is. Nay, the cruelty of man is insignificant to that of his Creator. No tyrant would torture his enemy for ever. And human cruelty finds its defence in the remorseless cruelty which it sees everywhere in nature, from the tiger to the tapeworm.*

Herbert Spencer remarks: "Throughout the animal kingdom high organisations habitually serve to aid destruction or to escape destruction." The wasp has its sting, as man has his dynamite, his ironclads, and Krupp guns. What sign of benevolence can there be in one animal having been designed to eat another? Will you say that the pleasure of the one eater compensates the pain of the many eaten? What possible pleasure or profit can a deity derive from this world-wide and incessant slaughter? Darwin might well ask: "Did He cause the frame and mental quality of the dog to vary that a breed might be formed of indomitable ferocity, with jaws fitted to pin down the bull for man's brutal sport?" Professor H. D. Garrison says: "Every second of time records the dying agonies of thousands of animals to whom life was, apparently, as sweet as it is to us. Indeed, this universal butchery and murder seen on every hand throughout the animal kingdom is one of the chief hindrances to the refinement of men. It is impossible to learn mercy from nature, and yet without mercy man is a brutal savage." As John Stuart Mill remarks: "In sober truth, nearly all the things which men are hanged or imprisoned for doing to one another are nature's every-day performances." If nature is ascribed to a deity, then is he responsible for the recklessness and cruelty exhibited in his handiwork. If, indeed, God is credited with omnipotence, then the slightest pang that is suffered by any animal is wanton cruelty, since omnipotence could have achieved its purposes otherwise.

The late Professor Romanes felt this difficulty. In his essay on "The Influence of Science upon Religion," after speaking of the agonies of a rabbit panting in the iron jaws of a spring trap, he says: "What are we to think of a Being who, with yet higher faculties of thought and knowledge, and with an unlimited choice of means to secure His ends, has contrived untold thousands of mechanisms no less diabolical?" What instances of "providential design" are the serrated jaws of the shark, the talons of the tiger, and the fangs of the rattlesnake? Mr. A. R. Wallace, in his work on Darwinism, has sought to mitigate this objection by representing deaths, however apparently cruel, as usually sudden and unconscious. But is this always so? The abominable barbarity of the "sportsman," who shoots birds and lets the wounded ones flutter away to a lingering death, is paralleled by the wolf, who will rend more sheep than he can possibly eat, and the cat, who, having disabled the mouse, will delight in apparently giving it a chance of escape that it may once more have the pleasure of pouncing upon it. Even monkeys have been noticed at the Zoological Gardens to sport with spiders before swallowing them, allowing them to descend by a thread attached to their fingers, and then suddenly jerking them back into their hands.

Professor Henry Drummond, in his Ascent of Man, has an even jauntier way of dealing with the long, remorseless process of the struggle for existence, a struggle in which the many are absolutely crushed out for the benefit of the few. Because the unprotected infancy of man has necessitated the evolution of love for the preservation of the race, he calls the story of evolution "a love story."

Belief in Evolution, coupled with Theism, is responsible for one of the most immoral theories ever put forward in the guise of a philosophy. Those who accept evolution, and at the same time seek to justify the ways of God to man, say that the remorseless crushing out of the unfit made room for the fit. The countless species that have passed away since "dragons in their prime tore each other in their slime," all prepared the earth for man, the heir of all the ages and crown of creation. What of the misery of the many when it results in the benefit of the few? It is notable that optimist defenders of Theism and advocates of vivisection take the same ground. The sufferings of A, B, and C are to be compensated by the happiness of X, Y, and Z. This cheerful optimism I characterise as villainously immoral. Logically carried out, it would justify any crime. Who shall estimate whether the happiness of Jack the Ripper in putting unfortunates out of their misery is a compensation for the brief agony of finding a knife at their throats? The view that the suffering of one living creature is compensated for by the delight of another is as immoral as the police-magistrate's theory of God's government, which represents all suffering as punishment for sin, and which, consequently, makes all efforts to relieve suffering but attempts to thwart the purposes of deity.

J. M. WHEELER.

* Sir John Lubbock, in his Prehistoric Times, relates that E'honqui (a New Zealander) evidently considered that the whole analogy of nature was in favor of cannibalism. He was surprised at the horror of it felt by D'Urville. "Big fish," he said, "eat little fish; insects devour insects; large birds feed on small ones; it is in accordance with the whole analogy of nature that men should eat their enemies."

"I went to Sunday-school yesterday," said a little girl to her aunt, "and the teacher asked me who made me. So I just told her nobody made me. I wonder if she thought I was a rag doll?"

Miss Kitty—"Mamma, will we know folks in heaven, same as we do here?" Mamma—"I think there is no doubt of that, my dear." "Will I know Jane Gopplins?" "Who is Jane Gopplins?" "She's the big freckled girl that lives over the grocery store down the street." "If you are both good enough to go to heaven, my dear, you will certainly know her." (After some moments of profound cogitation)—"I won't have to speak to her, will I, mamma?"

Digitized by Google

TACTICS OF SOME CHRISTIAN DISPUTANTS.

DURING the past thirty years I have met in public discussion many Christian disputants who were fair in controversy; such as the Rev. A. J. Harrison, Dr. McCann, and Dr. Sexton. But I have also met opponents who appeared to have peculiar views as to what is right and honorable in their dealings with Secularists. In 1872 I held a four nights' debate with the Rev. A. Stewart, of Aberdeen, who, not content with publishing the debate as it was taken down, added to the printed report a long list of notes, either explaining his own statements which he had made during the discussion, or answering points that I had urged upon the platform, and which the rev. gentleman had failed to answer. On ascertaining that he was doing this, I requested the same privilege for myself; but it was not granted, upon the ground that the Christian Committee, who were issuing the debate, could not "publish new sceptical matter." The result was that the readers of the debate had a one-sided report presented to them. Such is the love of justice and fair play that is sometimes inspired by Christianity. Truly, "the tree is known by its fruits." Mr. Foote was treated in the same dishonest manner by the Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, who adopted similar tactics in reporting a debate he had with my colleague. Such Christian disputants evidently recognise, after the debate is over, their controversial shortcomings, and then they try to cover their defects by replying to their opponents when no rejoinder is allowed.

The same kind of tactics has been resorted to by Dr. A. Jamieson, of Glasgow, with whom I debated last year. Several months after the discussion took place the Doctor published a report of it, accompanied by an Appendix of sixteen pages, wherein he manifests a sad bitterness of temper, and indicates his disappointment at the part he played upon the platform. In the Appendix he urges several petty charges against me, and adds considerable matter to his side of the discussion. His foolish personal attacks upon me I shall deal with elsewhere; but his supplementary replies to the positions I laid down in the debate, and his boasted "new argument" for the existence of God, are given with such an air of confidence and defiance that readers of the Freethinker will no doubt be interested in seeing the Doctor's fallacies exposed. Here are a few specimens of how he deals with my arguments after having had months of study to consider what he should say.

In reply to my statement, that I believed in one existence which I called the universe, the Doctor says: "The universe is not one, but is composed of a multiplicity of different existences, as the sun, moon, stars, animals, plants, gold, silver, etc., each of which has an existence of its own." Now, the Doctor must be reminded that the composition does not affect the unity. Its forms and appearances—in other words, its phenomena—are numerous; but its noumenon, which underlies all external aspects, is one, hence its name. Why is it called the universe? Surely every one knows that this name is derived from unus, one. The very word itself, therefore, implies all that I contend for. The separate existences referred to by Dr. Jamieson, such as suns, stars, animals, plants, etc., are simply different modes of the one existence. They are all phenomenal, and will pass away by changing their forms; but the one existence, of which all things are simply modes, must remain to all eternity, as it has been from all eternity. Besides this there can be no other. This is the doctrine of Monism, which is now every day becoming more and more widely accepted by men of the profoundest intellect. His quibble about the impossibility of an infinite whole being made up of finite parts just goes to show what Sir William Hamilton so clearly pointed out, that no human conception can be formed of the infinite at all, and hence any attempt to theorise about it will involve one in a contradiction.

During the debate I used the following argument, which the late Mr. Charles Bradlaugh frequently employed, with the view of showing that the universe could not have been created by an intelligent power extraneous to itself:—

> "The fact I start from is the fact that something exists Now, this existence is either infinite in duration—that is, unlimited in duration; that is, eternal—or else it has been created or brought into existence. If created, then it must have been by some existence the same as itself, or different from it; but it cannot have been created by any existence the same as itself, because that would have been but a continuation of the same existence; and it cannot have been created by any existence differing from itself, because things which have nothing in common with each other cannot be conceived in relation to each other, and cannot be the cause of or affect one another."

Not once throughout the discussion did Dr. Jamieson notice this, but in his Appendix he elegantly remarks:—

> "This argument (?) is not only weak, but it is supremely silly, and by it it could be easily proved that Mr. Watts himself is infinite, both in extent and duration, and, consequently, that he himself is the 'one existence.' If we substitute the words, Mr. Watts exists, for the phrase 'something exists,' throughout the argument, we will at once see the absurdity of which both Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. Watts are guilty. The argument would then read thus: The fact I start from is, that Mr. Watts exists. This existence (Mr. Watts) is either infinite in duration, which is unlimited in duration—that is, eternal—or else he has been created or brought into existence. If created, then it must have been by some existence the same as himself, or different from himself; but he cannot have been created by an existence the same as himself, because that would have been but a continuation of the same existence; and he cannot have been created by any existence different from himself, because things which have nothing in common with each other cannot be conceived as having any relation to each other, and cannot be either the cause or effect of each other. The argument carried out in the same way with regard to extent would prove Mr. Watts to be infinite in that respect as well. An argument that leads to such an absurdity must itself be the very essence of absurdity. In face of the statement quoted, I think I may safely say that Mr. Watts's position is 'gone.'"

This is another of those sophisms which play so conspicuous a part in the Doctor's reasoning. Can he not see that Mr. Watts was not, and does not pretend to have been, "created," but to have been formed out of pre-existent material of the same nature as himself? What possible analogy is there between this process of moulding or forming and the calling into existence of a material universe from nothing? Mr. Watts was formed out of an existence the same as himself, and which existence, in one of its phases, is continued in him. The argument which I employed is irrefutable when applied to a supposed creation as I applied it; but, of course, it has no bearing upon the mere modification of things out of pre-existent material. It remains, therefore, in full force, and will remain until a better reason than Dr. Jamieson has furnished is forthcoming to set it aside.

Dr. Jamieson prides himself on having produced a "new argument," and no doubt he hopes to attain to a sort of immortality as its inventor. Strange that so many centuries should have passed before this marvellous proof of God's existence was made known to the benighted world. Paley may now hide his diminished head, and all the Bridgewater Treatises be consigned to oblivion, since a new natural theologian has arisen with a brand new argument, which must silence all Atheists, Agnostics, and doubters of the Divine. Here is this wonderful argument (?): "It is admitted that the universe in whole or in part is cooling. It is also admitted that cooling bodies contract. That which has contracted occupies less space than it once did. The material universe, in whole or in part, has contracted, consequently it now occupies less space than it once did. It must then be finite in extent. If finite in one way, it must be finite in all ways, and, consequently, in duration. If finite in duration, it must have had a beginning, and consequently a Cause. There must, then, be a Powerful Being distinct from the material universe upon whom it depends for its existence."

Such is this new argument (?), which the Doctor invites me to answer. I do so by pronouncing it as being the very essence of sophistry. The whole "argument" is based upon a mistake, and, upon this mistake, certain "ifs" are stated, and then the imperative there "must" have been "a powerful Being," etc., is assumed. This is a fair sample of the Doctor's metaphysics. Now, what are the facts? It is not true that cooling bodies always contract, for snow and ice occupy more space than water, although the temperature of the former is much lower than that of the latter. Cooling in this case expands, instead of contracting. Here is another sophism of the Doctor's. Thus it is stated, says he, "the material universe in whole or in part has contracted; consequently it [what?—the whole or the part?] occupies less space than it once did." If the whole has contracted, no doubt that is so. But the Doctor does not venture to assert that the whole has contracted, but that the contraction may have been in part only. Yet the conclusion drawn is on the supposition that there has been contraction of the entire mass. This is manifestly illogical. What do we know of distant parts of the universe as to whether the matter in existence there is cooling or not? In one part the temperature falls, and in another it rises, leaving probably the same amount of heat on the whole. No one can assert that the entire universe is cooling, and, therefore, undergoing contraction; hence the "new argument" that was to revolutionise the Theistic philosophy is not worth the paper it is written on.

Digitized by Google

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be concluded.)

BIBLE FICTIONS.

THAT the Hebrew scriptures contain some small amount of historical matter cannot now be denied. The cuneiform inscriptions place this fact beyond a doubt. We know, for instance, from the latter source, that there were kings of Israel named Ahab, Jehu, Menahem, Pekah, and Hosea; that Azariah, Ahaz, Hezekiah, and Manasseh were kings of Judah; and that these sovereigns reigned in the order in which they are placed in the book of Kings. It is unquestionable, then, that some very ancient historical records have been preserved in the Hebrew books. But we have at the same time proof that the stories of supernatural interposition of the Jewish God on behalf of his people—such as the destruction of the army of Sennacherib and the preservation of the three men in a furnace, as recorded in the Hebrew writings—are pure fiction. All the stories of Yahveh directing or controlling the affairs of the Jewish nation are, wherever it is possible to test them, found to be fabrications. In fact, the early history of the Israelites before the period of the kings, and much in later times, is, for the most part, nothing but fable. Many of the stories are, on the face of them, fictitious. No unprejudiced person who allows himself to be guided by reason can read the Biblical accounts of the Fall, the Deluge, or the Exodus without experiencing a feeling that these stories are mythical.

Many Christian apologists have expended a considerable amount of ingenuity in endeavoring to reconcile Bible contradictions, and only succeed in doing so by twisting the passages into meaning something which the context plainly shows was not that intended by the writer. But even with the advantage of this mode of treatment we find that only some oft-cited and comparatively insignificant passages are selected for reconcilement. The most incredible stories—those which most clearly prove the Biblical narratives to be fictitious—are ignored.

I will now briefly examine some of these stories, which show, beyond the possibility of doubt, that the narratives composing the early history of the Israelites are fabrications.

I.—THE PATRIARCH JACOB.

On the temple walls of Karmak is inscribed a list of towns in Syria and Palestine which submitted to the arms of Thothmes III. Among these we find Jacob-el ("the god Jacob") and Joseph-el ("the god Joseph"). The first of these also appears on the inscriptions of Ramses II. and Ramses III. In the latter reign we also find the record of a Canaanitish town named Levi-el. In other words, we learn from these ancient monuments that between B.C. 1600 and B.C. 1200 there were cities in Canaan in which Jacob, Joseph, and Levi were worshipped as gods. In this fact we have a clear intimation that the Biblical account of the reputed ancestors of the Jews is not history, but mythology. To obtain confirmatory evidence of this, we have but to examine the Bible stories for any indications which show them to be of a mythical character. These we find in plenty.

Now, with regard to the city Jacob-el, it is significant that, though this was undoubtedly a town in Canaan, the name is nowhere mentioned in the Hebrew books. Yet, strangely, the name of Jacob is associated with a city having the same termination, whose name he is represented as changing. This is the city of Bethel ("the house of God").

In Genesis xxviii. it is related that Jacob, when a single man and on his way to Padan-aram, "lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night. . . . and he took of the stones of that place, and set them for his pillow, and lay down in that place to sleep." Here, it is stated, he had a dream, in which he saw a ladder reaching from the earth to heaven, with Yahveh on the top, and angels ascending and descending. "And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the Lord is in this place. . . . and he called the name of that place Bethel; but the name of that city was called Luz at the first." Here it is to be noted that it is plainly implied in the narrative that Jacob slept in the open air in some uninhabited place; yet this place is (probably by inadvertence) called a city. It was, of course, a city when the account was written.

Twenty years later, so runs the story, Jacob returned to Canaan a married man with four wives and eleven children. Upon entering the land, we are told, "Jacob came to Luz, which is in the land of Canaan, that is, Bethel, he and all the people that were with him. . . . And God appeared unto Jacob again when he came out of Padan-aram, and blessed him. . . . And Jacob set up a pillar in the place where he talked with him. . . . and Jacob called the name of the place where God spake with him Bethel" (Genesis xxxv. 6–13).

Here we have two contradictory versions of the naming of Bethel. According to one account, Jacob called the place "Bethel" when unmarried and on his way to his uncle Laban's; according to the other, he so named it twenty years later when he returned with wives, children, and large flocks and herds. According to the first account, he called the place "the house of God" because he saw in a dream angels going up and down a gigantic ladder; according to the other, he named it "the house of God" because there "the Lord" appeared to him, blessed him, and conversed with him (of course in the form of a man) face to face. Which version are we to receive?

But both stories are, on the face of them, unhistorical. Jacob was but a stranger and a sojourner in the land, and had no power or authority to change the name of any place in it; neither would his saying, "Such a place shall henceforth be called so-and-so," effect any change in the name. We know from the Tell-el-Amarna and other inscriptions that the inhabitants of Canaan were both numerous and warlike. They would not be likely to alter the ancient names of places because a stranger chose to call them by another name. There is, however, evidence in the Hebrew books themselves that Jacob did not change the name "Luz" into "Bethel."

Two or three centuries after the time of Jacob, Joshua, we are told, divided the land among the twelve tribes. Now, the boundaries of one of the allotments is described as "going up from Jericho through the hill country to Bethel; and it went from Bethel to Luz, and passed along unto the border of the Archites to Ataroth" (Joshua xvi. 1, 2). Bethel and Luz were, therefore, separate places, and were doubtless in existence when the book of Joshua was written—viz., some time after the exile. We have also in the Book of Judges (i. 22, 23) a story to account for the fact that, notwithstanding Jacob's changing the name Luz into Bethel, a city named Luz still existed. According to this veracious account, when the Israelites captured Bethel a man who escaped from the city built another, and named it Luz.

Thus far we have evidence only of fiction. I turn now to another event in the life of Jacob. In order to account for the reputed descendants of this patriarch being called "Israelites," a story is invented of the name "Jacob" being changed into "Israel."

In Genesis xxxii. 27, 28, we have an account of a wrestling match between Jacob and an angel. This interesting event took place at night, on the eastern side of Jordan, near the river Jabbok. When day was about to break the angel desired to get away, but Jacob held him fast, and refused to let him go until the latter had blessed him. "And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said Jacob. And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel; for thou hast striven with God and men, and hast prevailed."

Digitized by Google

After this change of name Jacob crossed the Jordan, and took up his residence at Succoth and Shalem; then, some years later, came to the place which he is said to have renamed. Here an incident occurred which is thus described: "So Jacob came to Luz, which is in the land of Canaan (the same is Bethel). . . . . And God appeared unto Jacob again . . . . and God said unto him, Thy name is Jacob: thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name: and he called his name Israel" (Genesis xxxv. 6–10).

Thus, again, we have two versions of the same story, each independent of the other, in which the change of name is stated to have taken place at two different times, and in two places many miles apart. Both stories were, of course, invented to account for the name. As a matter of fact, we know from critical examination that the book of Genesis is composed of a number of stories, by at least three different hands, which a later editor has pieced together. This fact adds nothing to the credibility of the narratives. It must, at any rate, be obvious to the reader that the stories we have examined are pure fictions.

VERITAS.

(To be continued.)

THE EXISTENCE OF GOD.

HUMAN life cannot be occupied with a more important contemplation than the meaning of the universe. Recognising that human existence is but a tiny point, on each side of which stretch out immeasurable ages, it may well be doubted whether the longest life would suffice for a bare presentment, much less a solution of the enigma of the cosmos. But man is an inquiring animal. We are so constituted that our knowledge and our inquiries are never equal.

Knowledge solves a question only to give birth to another. In a certain sense it may be said that knowledge as well as ignorance prompts inquiry. But knowledge does not affect the primary question of the origin of the universe. The ever-abiding presence of nature, its continual persistence in human consciousness, compels the scientific and the ignorant alike to seek an explanation of its being. Science may widen the sphere to be explained, but it does not shift it. Methodised observation may dispel the crude and erroneous ideas of the ignorant man as to the vastness of the universe, but the universe is still the problem to be solved.

We are born into this world, and live a few short years without being able to realise our surroundings; but when we come to the use of reason, human science and philosophy claim our attention. Some men are born into conditions where everything is present that ministers to their mental and moral development. Other less fortunate individuals are placed in surroundings where they know nothing but filth, disease, and crime. But still, it does not matter whether we are born in the palace of a king or the hovel of a peasant, it is our duty to examine the ideas which we have been taught, and to see if they have any foundation in fact.

The vast majority of mankind feel in no way disposed to question the theory of things which they have imbibed "with their mother's milk." This is why Theism is so widely accepted in the present age.

That hypothesis conceives the universe as the production of an "Infinite Mind." Theistic philosophers have studied the various departments of nature, and have endeavored to extract from them the evidence of a "Creator." Theologians have accepted these hazy conjectures, and have pretended that their clearness and force compel every honest mind to acknowledge an "Infinite, Intelligent Being" as the "Author" of the universe.

But what are the evidences upon which this theory rests? The variegated beauties which adorn the face of nature, though they fill the mind with a strange sense of wonder, do not reveal any other forces at work than material ones. When I throw my mind back upon itself, and contemplate the inscrutable modes of my own consciousness, I am unable to perceive any evidence that there is a God. Granted that we cannot give an ultimate explanation of the phenomena of matter and mind, does it necessarily follow from this that we are bound to accept Theism?

All the arguments which have hitherto been brought forward in favor of that hypothesis have not been able to stand the test of science and criticism. Many modern Theistic advocates recognise this. Dr. W. L. Davidson's Burnett Lectures and Professor Knight's Aspects of Theism are conclusive on this point. These writers have perceived the fallacies of the à priori and à posteriori arguments. Much discussion has taken place among theologians as to what position these two methods ought to occupy. The consequence has been that the "Design Argument," as presented by such apologists as Ray, Derhem, and Paley, has been completely ruled out of court. It will not do to say that the exquisite adaptations which we observe in nature indicate the existence of a deity.

The Materialistic explanation of the harmonious manner in which our earth revolves round the sun satisfies the mind equally as well as the Theistic view does. Nay, it is far more intelligible; for we can comprehend what is meant when it is said that the rotation of the earth is the necessary result of the action of two antagonistic forces; but we cannot grasp what is meant by saying it is the "handiwork of God." It is a scientific canon that any explanation of phenomena must be couched in terms of the known. The forces of attraction and repulsion are known, but "God," if he exist, is absolutely unknown. There is no analogy between the adaptation seen in man's works and that we observe in nature. In the one case we see the adaptation and its author, but it is not so in the other case.

It is quite true that the adaptation in man's works is the only proof we have of his intelligence. But it does not follow from this that adaptation is always proof of intelligence. A river always adapts itself to its bed; but this is the result of the law that water always seeks its own level, and not the contrivance of any intelligence.

I cannot agree with the late Dr. Romanes when he writes that with the "negation of God" "the universe has lost its soul of loveliness." On the contrary, viewing the universe from an Atheistic standpoint, its "loveliness" is increased a hundred fold. Though the universe be godless, the Atheist is not impervious to its beauties. While it is true that the rolling orbs which bespangle the boundless sky are subject to the same mechanical law as the swing of a pendulum, their grandeur is none the less for that. Born on a twinkling point called earth, Atheism enables me to realise the fulness of life; therefore, the theological assertion that God is necessary in order to retain the beauties of nature is untrue.

In dealing with the question of design, Theists have been extremely shortsighted. They select all the good and beneficial arrangements of nature as proofs of the intelligence and goodness of the deity. The Atheist does not deny that certain conditions are good and beautiful. Water is beneficial for man, but it was not made for him. If it was, how do Theists account for the sad fact that millions have died of thirst? It is the same with every other thing in nature. Man makes use of many things because experience has taught him that they are useful; but where is the proof that they were designed for the uses they are put to? Theism cannot give any rational explanation of the moral and physical evil which everywhere abounds. If there be "a something not ourselves that makes for righteousness," there is also a something not ourselves that makes for unrighteousness. How can the Theist explain that fact? How account for the unqualified indifference of nature? The earth cares as much for a parasite as it does for a Newton or a Darwin. In the physical world pain and suffering are often visited upon the innocent. In the moral world things seem chance directed. Honesty and truthfulness often go to the wall in the struggle for existence, while the sneakish and unscrupulous live in luxury. How can these things be harmonised with the belief in an almighty God who carefully governs the world? The state of the moral and physical worlds to-day does not speak of an "Infinite, Intelligent Mind" ruling all. Such is the argument of experience against Theism.

P. SHAUGHNESSY.

(To be concluded.)

Freddy—"Why do they have those big eagles in the church?" Tom—"'Cause they're birds of pray, of course."

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Mrs. Besant has given the faithful Theosophists a full, and of course true, account of her experience of Mahatmas. Some extracts from this curious address were printed in the London Star. As luck (or the printer's devil) would have it, the extracts were interrupted by the space reserved for the "Latest" sporting news; so that in the very middle of the sublime Mahatma business there was a list of horses running at Warwick races. And some of the names were devilishly apropos. There were Mother Shipton, and May Mischief, and Conjuror, and Sophism. Really the imps of laughter were on Mrs. Besant's track that day.

Madame Blavatsky's successor states that her experience of the Mahatma world began in 1889, early in the year, before she joined the Theosophical Society. Mrs. Besant may believe this. There is no limit to some people's self-delusion. But it is utterly irreconcilable with her former accounts of how she became a Theosophist.

It appears that she was "making desperate efforts to pierce the darkness," and "seeking with passionate earnestness to obtain some direct evidence of the existence of the soul and of the superphysical world." Here again she may believe she is telling the truth—"Such tricks hath strong imagination." All we can say is that she was then writing every week in the National Reformer, and her readers were not vouchsafed a single hint of all that "passionate earnestness" and all those "desperate efforts."

One evening Mrs. Besant was sitting alone, concentrating her mind on this longing, when she "heard the Master's voice," telling her that she should soon find the light. She did not know Who spoke to her (the printer must please mind the capitals), but it was something to go on with.

This sort of thing is familiar to the students of superstition. Enthusiasts, whether Catholics or Methodists, have always been prone to hear voices. Ears, and especially long ones (no offence to the lady), are handy organs for superstition to play upon. They are generally abused first, and the eyes afterwards; the hearing of voices being followed, unless the patient gets better, by the seeing of visions.

Mrs. Besant did not get better. She got worse. And in due course she had her vision. It appeared to her at Fontainebleau in the summer of 1889. She was sleeping in a small room "by herself" (why, of course!), and the Master paid her a visit, just as J. C. visited the eleven in that upper chamber in Jerusalem. "I was waked suddenly," says Mrs. Besant, in defiance of grammar. And then, she says, the "air of the room was thrown into pulsing electrical waves"—which is very curious physics; and there "appeared the radiant astral Figure of the Master (capitals, please), visible to my physical eyes." And after that she often saw the Master. Why, certainly.

"Sight, hearing, and touch," all shared in these "experiences"; so we assume that Mrs. Besant shook hands with the Master, unless he gave her a "superphysical" embrace. Nor was this all. A fourth sense gave its attestation. Mrs. Besant speaks of "the exquisite fragrance" which generally accompanies such manifestations. So that the Master is something like old Polonius: "You shall nose him as you go."

Now, it is noteworthy that the Catholic and Methodist enthusiasts not only heard voices and saw visions, but smelt an exquisite fragrance. Many instances are given by Bishop Lavington in his minute and racy study of these wondermongers; and some day or other we may give our readers a few samples in this line of delusion. Let it suffice for the present to say that Mrs. Besant is suffering from an ancient malady. It doesn't matter whether the enthusiasts are Pagans, Catholics, or Methodists; they all go through the same experiences, for they all suffer from the same disease. And when they are skilful and fluent of speech they all go the same way to work in practising upon the credulity of others. They trade under different names, but they are all in the same business, and their wares are all alike, though bearing a variety of labels.

Our readers will note Mrs. Besant's use of capitals. The Master has one, and his very pronoun takes one too, just as the Christians print "Him" and "He" of Jesus Christ. It is a common trick to impose upon the groundlings, and we recollect the rage the pious got into when the late Professor Clifford took to writing "god" with a small g.

But the funniest part of the affair is, that the Mahatmas are quarreling amongst themselves. Mrs. Besant has her Mahatma, and Mr. Judge has his. Mrs. Besant's "Master" tells her to turn out Mr. Judge. Mr. Judge's "Master" tells him to cut off Mrs. Besant. As the Irishman said, 'tis a pretty quarrel as it stands, and a pity to spoil it.

Paul's "Master," in the same way, was in opposition to Peter's "Master," and the two inspired Apostles had an open quarrel. There is no "unity of spirit" even in the realm of inspiration.

For our part, we have not the slightest doubt that Mrs. Besant will go on with this business, and get convenient tips from her Mahatma, to serve her own interest and frustrate the designs of her enemies. When you dabble in mystery, unless you are a born fool, you soon come to this alternative: you must either denounce the swindle or take a part in it. Mrs. Besant has not chosen the better part.

The Italian poet, Olindo Guerrini, who writes with the pseudonym of "Lorenzo Stecchetti," has written his Creed, which he begins with the words, Primo di tutto non Credo in Dio—"First of all, I do not believe in God." Had he lived a century ago, the creed would have brought him trouble. In the last century an Italian musician named Porpora was brought before the Inquisition for having composed a Credo, the beginning of which he was alleged to have lengthened, in order to suit his measure, by adding a "non." He was only let off on proving that he did not understand Latin.

The Railway Signal, "A Journal of Evangelistic and Temperance Work on all Railways," has a choice story about a nameless "Stratford infidel" who was ill and visited by the writer. He was converted by the evangelist taking him a basket of strawberries, which he had wished for on the morning of that day. The infidel said it was the hand of God, and burnt all his infidel books and papers. "A few weeks later he passed peacefully away." The hand of God, it appears, brought him strawberries, but did not preserve him to tell his conversion, or even his name, to any fellow "infidels."

In the case of Mr. J. B. Wise, of Kansas, prosecuted for obscenity for writing the words of Isaiah xxxvi. 12 on a postcard addressed to the Rev. Mr. Veumum, Judge Foster has reserved his decision, which will be made known some time during the present term. Should it be adverse to Mr. Wise, an appeal will be entered, so that the United States Supreme Court shall also have an opportunity of declaring that the Bible is obscene. The case will act as a rare eye-opener, and we are glad to see that our American friends are fully alive to its importance.

The Bible Society report having given a copy of their fetish book to every officer in the Japanese army and navy, "a better bound edition being at the same time handed to the Royal Body Guard." We should like to hear the opinions of the Japanese upon their reading.

A Shanghai correspondent of Modern Society has a tale to tell of missionaries in China. He says: "I have taken a great interest in mission work, and have made many inquiries, having asked the people engaged in that work to take me to the meeting places of their Chinese converts: the answer has been, 'Oh, we have no converts here, they are inland; only a few rice Christians, who say they are converted for their food.' I have been up the Yang-tsi Kiang River as far as Tchang, which is approximately 1,300 miles; the same tale is told at every place: it is only labor in vain to try and convert these people in large towns. I would like to ask why it requires fifty people of different denominations engaged in mission work in a place like Hankow."

The missionaries, says this correspondent, live in luxury and almost idleness. "Nearly all these gentlemen holding these splendid appointments are related to the headquarter staff in London." He says in conclusion: "I would advise all poor men who have an ambition to become gentlemen to come to China as missionaries. I think it is a cruel shame that there are thousands of children in a state of semi-starvation who, when they go to Sunday-school, have to squeeze out their pence for the missionary box, which helps to support these people in idleness and luxury. I strongly condemn the practice of sending young girls out here on mission work. The result of such has lately developed in Shanghai. The defendant was tried and acquitted; he objected to marry her on the ground that the poor girl was a loose character. When this good man saw her weakness would it not have been more to his credit to protect her than to take advantage?"

The London Aquarium people have got hold of a clock "made by a pious Scotchman." The peculiarity of the timepiece is that at midnight on Saturday it stops short, never to go again till Monday morning. In the old days the maker would have been held inspired, if not burnt for witchcraft.

Digitized by Google

This clock is as nothing to the famous Sabbatic river, which, according to the veracious Jewish historian, Josephus, flowed six days, and entirely ceased to run on the Sabbath.

The London City Mission Meeting passed a resolution of regret at the neglect of public worship of the majority of the working classes in London. Resolutions are of little avail now; the days are gone when the injunction could be followed, "Compel them to come in."

The Governors of the Worcester Infirmary would make fit denizens of heaven. They declined to receive the proceeds of a cricket match played on Good Friday. Of course the governors did not themselves suffer by this display of piety. Had the offer been made to the inmates of the infirmary, it would probably have been accepted gratefully.

The Hungarian Government has demanded explanations from the Vatican on account of Mgr. Agliardi, the Papal Nuncio, having exceeded his functions by going on tour denouncing the Civil Marriage Bill. This statement, made to the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet by Baron Banffy, the Premier, was greeted with enthusiastic cheers by the Liberals, while the Clericals loudly expressed their indignation.

The twentieth-century woman is a girl to-day. She will be pretty sceptical if like a four-year-old girl of whom we read lately. After saying her evening prayer, she added: "Now, God, I have talked to you often enough. If you hear me, why don't you talk back?" Her question was to the point, and all the men of God in the world could not explain why, if God was so familiar and communicative two thousand years ago, he is not equally so to-day.

A church in course of repair in the little mountainous town of Buonalberger partly fell in the other day. The people who ran to ascertain what had happened found the statue of St. Donato intact and erect on the causeway of the street, with its face turned to the ruins. The glass case under which the figure had stood was smashed to pieces. Immediately the people cried out that a miracle had happened, and the day after the saint was carried in procession through the streets.

According to a report of the Kasan Consistorium just issued at St. Petersburg, no fewer than 11,034 heathens, among whom were 5,690 women, last year relapsed from the orthodox faith into their original idolatrous beliefs and practices. During the same period, and in the same government of Kasan, 12,188 Tartars, including 5,767 women, abandoned the State Church for Islam. These are official figures. The Eparchial authorities further state that a large section of the proselytised orthodox Christians are at heart either Mohammedans or heathens.

All Christians are called on at their baptism and confirmation to renounce the devil and all his works. They have done so most effectually, for they keep him and all pertaining to him most carefully out of sight. Satan is superannuated or looked on as an allegory, even while his divine antagonist and the nebulous Holy Ghost are warranted to be persons. "We cannot so much as believe in a devil," says Thomas Carlyle. Mr. Wheeler, in his pamphlet on Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible, shows that Christians cannot so easily escape from the evil one. To get rid of the devil is to pull down the whole fabric of Christian theology.

Light, the "journal of Psychical, Occult, and Mystical Research," remarks that "the truly awful case of 'witch-burning' in Ireland will do some good if it helps to still further open the eyes of people to the possible effects of pinning their faith to the past and its so-called 'revelations.' It is time for plain speaking about this matter. The Bible explicitly says (Exodus xxii. 18), 'Thou shalt not suffer a witch (or sorceress) to live'; and that atrocious command has been responsible for thousands—perhaps millions—of cruel murders. Will the good people who quote the Bible against Spiritualists look this matter squarely in the face? Are they prepared to put into practice the supposed divine commands they so glibly quote?"

The sainted Jabez has returned just in time for the May meetings. At Bow-street he must remember the good old times in the nearly adjacent and more congenial building of Exeter Hall.

The Dean of Norwich, speaking at the Exeter Hall meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, said: "We are asked now to think of the possibility of the first chapter of Genesis being mythical. My Lords, ladies and gentlemen, I cannot regard as mythical what Christ regarded as fact." So we must credit that Moses wrote the account of his own death, the story of Jonah and the whale, and the possession of devils, because they were believed in by a Jew of a long bygone generation.

The Pioneer of Wisdom is "a newspaper devoted to the Ingathering of Israel." Its conductors believe in the revelation of the Flying Roll made to James White, otherwise known as Jezreel. They also hold, if we apprehend rightly, that the English are Jews and should be circumcised, and that God is feminine, and about to put in a speedy reappearance to gather the faithful circumcised ones together. A number of the Pioneer sent to us has "A Message to the Welsh," printed in the Welsh language. We found this portion almost as intelligible as the rest of the paper.

Christian apologists often tell us that evil exists in the world because man is a sinner. If he were not infected with original sin, he would be perfectly happy, and the world would be a paradise. Reason, however, shows it would be nothing of the kind, unless nature were altered as well as human nature. Volcanoes would still belch their fires, earthquakes would shake and shatter cities, storms would destroy ships and men, disease would bring agony, and death inflict sorrow. Even the pests of life would remain. Snakes would bite and mosquitoes sting, and fleas would worry saints as well as sinners.

What do our Christian friends make of a cyclone such as the recent one at West Sioux Falls? How do they reconcile it with Providence? Houses and trees were whirled about like straws; men were lifted off the ground and carried for half a mile; and little children, hurled against wire fences, were reduced to bloody masses of dead flesh. There are millions of men on this planet who would have risked their own lives to save those little ones. Providence did not save them; in fact, Providence murdered them; that is, if there be a Providence—which we very much doubt.

The Rev. Llewellyn Howard Davies, Vicar of Steeple Claydon, Bucks, was brought before the Chancellor of the Diocese of Oxford, at Aylesbury, charged with acts of incontinence with his female servant, and other offences. He was found guilty of four out of five counts, and the case, in accordance with the Clergy Discipline Act, will be reported to the Bishop, who may or may not suspend him.

An article on "Chaldean Magic" in the Echo strongly suggests that baptism was originally a form of exorcising devils. It says: "We find the phrase, 'The witchcraft of the witch may it not approach, may it disappear before the lustrous water from my hands.' This expression would almost point to the ceremony of sprinkling, a custom which we know was in use in Assyria at a very early date."

A spring van proprietor in Kentish Town has painted up the inscription: "Gods removed in town or country." We hope this iconoclast will soon cart away all the defunct deities whose putrefaction has become offensive.

The Bolton dissenters have been much enraged at the Rev. T. T. Verger, vicar of St. James's Church, and with some cause. The scholars of the Primitive Methodist Church were on their annual procession, when the man of God drove up in his carriage. He could easily have taken another road, but drove through the crowd, which opened to let his vehicle pass. When among the children they were alarmed, and two young men sprang at the horse's head and swerved it out of the way. The man of God lashed out with his whip, and struck several of the children. A mêlée ensued. The whip was taken from the reverend gentleman, while some attempted to drag him from the vehicle. He has since been hissed all over the town.

The Spiritists do not agree in their descriptions of the world of spirits. Swedenborg tells one tale, Allan Kardec an entirely different one; while A. J. Davis and Hudson Tuttle differ from both, and from one another. This difference is not on trivialities, but on such root questions as Is there sex among spirits? Are they re-incarnated or not? etc.

There is as much difference among them religiously. Some believe in Satan, a personal chief of evil spirits. The majority do not. A writer in Light declares a high spirit says: "Christ is your Savior. He gave himself a ransom for many." Most American Spiritists consider Christ a myth, and regard the doctrine of the Atonement as immoral. This Light writer contradicts Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace, who says: "The Evangelical Dissenter, who died in the firm conviction that he should certainly 'go to Jesus,' never describes himself as being with Christ or having seen him." He declares: "My guide says: 'Jesus is always present; I long for you to be here, and to feel that you are with Jesus.'" He says: "As a rule, the Roman Catholic is a Roman Catholic still, and the Unitarian and the Churchman retain the same views they held on earth." We have even heard of some spirits who are Atheists. But these are very advanced spirits. Quite in the seventh sphere, we should say.

Digitized by Google

Of course these differences as to the spirit world come from having different "mejums." And the trouble is, that no information comes except through the "mejums," who are usually such a shady lot that they attract all kinds of lying spirits, who delight in befooling their dupes. The person who looks to Spiritism for a solution of all mysteries finds he has "got no forrader."

The Royal Academy Banquet omitted "Literature" from the toast-list. However, the Duke of Cambridge spoke for the Army—the umbrella speaking for the sword; and the Archbishops of York and Canterbury took a turn on behalf of the Church. We did not know these gentlemen had anything to do with Art, in the ordinary sense of the term. They practise an art, but it is the art of hamboozling.

Mr. George Bernard Shaw was one of the speakers at the May Day Demonstration in Hyde Park on Sunday afternoon. As usual, he indulged in some plain speaking. For instance, he said that the average working man cared for little else beyond party politics and religion. There is too much truth in the observation; but that is partly Mr. Shaw's own fault. He confesses himself an Atheist, but his brilliant powers are not at the service of Freethought. Surely it would be possible for him, without deserting his social propaganda, to do a little towards extirpating that "religion" with which so many of the workers are besotted.

The Boston Sunday Globe has had a symposium on the subject, "Is Christianity Practicable To-day?" A lot of sky-pilots contribute. The Rev. John Cuckson says: "It is practicable, but not practised." Father Bodfish says it is a strange question to put before a Catholic. The Rev. Septimus Hanna, a Christian scientist, says Christianity is practicable, but requires to be studied in the light of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy's Key to the Scriptures. The Rev. C. Eliot says Christianity is an ideal, and an ideal should not be called impracticable because unrealised. The only discordant voice is that of C. W. Mowbray, the Anarchist, who says: "Let us have done with cant and hypocrisy; let us recognise that, if mankind are to fill their proper places in human society, we shall have to rely, not upon Christianity, but on changing the whole basis of society, by abolishing private ownership in the means of life, together with the abolition of government of man by man."

The Rev. I. J. Lansing, D.D., pastor of the Park-street Congregational Church, Boston, has drawn upon himself the odium of all parties in America by falsely charging President Cleveland with having been intoxicated at the Naval Review in New York. A lying spirit from the Lord seems to have afflicted the man of God, who is an intemperate temperance fanatic.

The Boston Transcript, an Independent Republican paper, opposed to Cleveland in politics, says: "Deplorable as is the passionate prejudice which blurts out such charges as the Rev. Mr. Lansing's, it is infinitely less degrading and less pernicious than is the whispering of scandals concerning domestic life at the White House, such as have been at times circulated by clergymen behind the back of the hand with express instructions to the listener to avoid getting them into the newspapers, where they might be run to earth and refuted."

Catholics call May the month of Mary. They do not tell the reason. May was by the old Pagans consecrated to Cybele, the mother of the gods. When Pope Boniface IV. dedicated to the Virgin Mary and the martyrs the Pantheon at Rome, which had previously been dedicated to Cybele and the gods, he held the feast of All Saints in May, as of old; but Gregory IV. transferred this feast to the first of November, because its celebration was so similar to that of the Pagans. May Day festivals, however, preserved the ancient Floralia of the Romans, and the month of the Mother of God has appropriately taken the place of that of the Mother of the gods.

Pope Sixtus V. built a superb chapel in honor of the cradle of J. C. in the Church of St. Marie Maggiore at Rome. The historian who relates this says it was for the honor the Pope had for this cradle, which has been preserved for ages in a spot adjacent to the chapel. Jerome says he saw it at Bethlehem, but how it got to Rome is a mystery.

In Ontario, Canada, there were committed to the various prisons in 1891: Catholics, 3,744; Episcopalians, 3,134; Presbyterians, 1,368; Methodists, 1,413; other denominations, 770; Infidels, 0. In 1892 the figures were: Roman Catholics, 4,359; Church of England, 3,631; Methodists, 1,624; Presbyterians, 1,498; other denominations, 698; Infidels, 0.

At Lavant, near Chichester, Charles Richard Lever was found in his bedroom with his throat cut. He had been regularly attending chapel, and reading the Bible and religious works. Just before his suicide he said: "I have found the Light, and was never happier." A verdict of suicide during temporary insanity was recorded.

When a Bishop has £4,500 a year, he ought not to grasp at perquisites. So thought the Wigton Burial Board, which entered a protest on its minutes against the Bishop's exacting £12 15s. 10d. for consecrating the new cemetery. We would undertake a job like that for a guinea when we happened to be in the neighborhood. We would also give a written guarantee that the corpses would never detect the difference. No extra charge for that.

Dean Farrar has "gone up higher." The Holy Ghost has called him to Canterbury. Somebody else will have to say prayers in the House of Commons, but we dare say it will be all the same. One humbug will procure the House as great a blessing as another.

At a recent Exeter Hall missionary meeting Dean Farrar remarked (unless the Christian World misreports him) that "three centuries after Christ only one in every 150 of the world's population were nominally Christian; now they were one in three." And this was "a complete answer to those who affirmed that missions had been a failure." Well, it may be a complete answer at Exeter Hall, but it is no answer anywhere else. Christianity converted one in 150 in three hundred years by the power of the Holy Ghost; it has converted all the others in its fold by the unscrupulous use of authority and oppression. "Missions" have had no practical effect upon its statistics.

Dean Farrar should explain why the Holy Ghost is such a bad missionary. Even at the very best, it is a poor achievement for God Almighty to spend nearly two thousand years in converting a third of the world's inhabitants. If conversion is any good to them, he should convert them all immediately; if it is no good to them, he should stop the missionary business altogether.

The secretary of the Printers' Laborers' Union calls attention in another column to some of the methods of that great trading establishment of which William Booth is proprietor. We understand that it is not compositors that Booth wants, but workers of the Linotype machine, which is displacing "compositing" in his establishment.

Booth now sells everything, from bicycles to biscuits, and, moreover, pressure is put on all converts to buy all their goods only from the Army.

The Rev. H. T. Briscoe, formerly chaplain of King's College, Cambridge, has been remanded on a charge of appropriating to his own use £493, charity money, of which he was trustee.

The Rev. Walter Hind, of St. Peter's Clergy House, London Docks, is also remanded on a charge of indecent behavior with two little girls in the recreation ground, Stepney Green.

The wanderings of Mrs. Besant's daughter, Mabel Besant Scott, appear to have been early ended, for it is announced that she has been baptised and received into the Roman Catholic Church. Oh, the pity of it!

The Archbishop of Canterbury recommends a general prayer for the unity of Christendom to all the members of the Church of England on Whit-Sunday. This is the official answer to the Pope's letter, ad Anglos, asking them to pray to the Virgin for re-union. Mr. Athelstan Riley also writes to the Church Times urging associated prayer for reunion. In the good old days the Church obtained unity by crushing out all dissentients. When it only relies on prayer, verily its days of power are over. Could its prayer be answered, it would doubtless, as of old, maintain unity by other means than prayer.

Dr. John Clifford's sermon on the Bible was reported at some length in Monday's Daily Chronicle. The sum of it all may be expressed in a quotation from Hamlet—"Words, words, words." There is the "infinite" this, and the "infinite" that; in short, the infinite slush of modern Christianity. Dr. Clifford says that "the Bible survives." Of course it does. And why? Simply because you force it into the hands of little children, and tell them lies about it before they are able to think for themselves. Dr. Clifford is as keen on this imposition as the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Wednesday and Thursday, May 15 and 16, Temperance Hall, Derby: Debate with Mr. W. T. Lee, of the Christian Evidence Society, on "Atheism or Theism: Which is the More Reasonable?"

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—May 12, Dundee; 19, Camberwell; 26, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Elfra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

T. E. M.—Received.

Alpha.—You are quite right; it has been a hard time with many.

J. M. Jones.—Balance paid to Mr. Forder. Glad to have your sympathy. We tender you ours in return. It is unpleasant to be cut off from contact with persons of similar views and sentiments.

J. H. W.—Cannot see what your note refers to.

T. Hopkins.—We never "lose heart." If one street is closed to us, we walk down another.

S. E. Easton has removed to 49 Walterton-road, Harrow-road, W.

J. Oram.—Many thanks. See paragraph.

H. Hughes.—Never believe what Christian Evidence lecturers say about Colonel Ingersoll or any other leader of Freethought. We really cannot stoop to contradict such rubbish. The reverend gentleman who would like to hear Moses on the mistakes of Ingersoll has an easy way of gratifying his desire. Let him go off to kingdom-come and hunt up that ancient Jew. We don't suppose the world at large has any great objection to his going. We haven't, anyhow.

N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—Chatham Branch, 7s. 2d.; East London Branch, 3s.; T. Carne, 6s.; F. Sanatts, 1s. 6d.; Henley Branch, 2s. 6d.

E. H.—(1) You are quite wrong about Calvin. He hunted Servetus down; went out of his way to do so, out of sheer malignity; and had him handed over to his enemies, to be burnt to death at a slow fire. (2) You are wasting your time over that metaphysical juggle about "finite" parts of an "infinite" universe. To man, at any rate, infinite is not a positive, but a negative term; simply meaning without known bounds. As a poetical expression it may pass; as an assertion, in theology or metaphysics, it is simply irrealisable. When a man asserts that there cannot be finite parts of an infinite whole, he asserts what, from the very nature of the case, he cannot know; and what wise man will argue about conjectures?

Mr. Sam Standring, who writes from a hydropathic establishment in Yorkshire, informs us that his health has completely broken down, after five months' lingering illness. His doctor orders him to cancel all engagements, and neither to study nor write letters for some time. Mr. Standring adds that his brain and heart are both affected. We hope he will obey his doctor's orders, and give himself a thorough rest for several months.

S. Lebson.—Duly received. Only holding to see the issue.

A. Hubben.—Miss Vance showed us your letter. Pleased to hear that you are helping, though farming prospects are so bad.

C. H.—The secretary has received your application.

V. Roger.—See paragraph. Delighted to see you are going to resume the outdoor propaganda in Kennington-park.

Observer.—We have not yet published an Index to the Freethinker. Thanks for the cutting.

M. Christopher.—Acknowledged this week.

Papers Received.—Derbyshire Courier—Remarks—De Dageraad—South Shields Free Press—Western Mail—Der Lichtfreund—Church Reformer—Two Worlds—Islamic World—Crescent—Post—Reading Observer—Light—Public Opinion—Literary Digest—Morning Leader—Railway Signal—Pioneer of Wisdom—Hobart Mercury—Gravesend Reporter—Boston Guardian—Truthseeker—Western Figaro—Ironclad Age—Secular Thought—Twentieth Century—Open Court—Liberty—Liberator—Pearson's Weekly—Progressive Thinker.

Friends who send us newspapers would echance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Sale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE.

Mr. R. O. Smith did not think it worth while to answer my letter, asking whether the time of his offer could be extended to the end of May, by which time there was a reasonable prospect of raising the £600. I was therefore obliged to wire him on Monday that if I did not hear from him on Tuesday I should regard his answer as a negative. This brought me a reply. "When you have the money," Mr. Smith says, "I am willing to consider your offer. I do not intend to bind myself again after the two failures."

I once waited twelve months for a door to open, and I have been patient ever since; so I refrain from saying what I think of Mr. Smith's communication. It is quite possible, however, that I may have a good deal to say in next week's Freethinker. There comes a time when the only wise method is one of open publicity. When I disclose all, it will be seen what a trouble I have had in this matter.

Meanwhile I have to say that I (at any rate) do not "intend"—that is Mr. Smith's word—to go on indefinitely without an understanding. I will keep this matter open, so far as I am concerned, until next Tuesday, and not a minute longer. The Freethinker goes to press on Wednesday, and on that morning I will write what I may think necessary. I will only add that I am prepared for whatever can happen, and am remaining in London so as to be ready to deal with any emergency.

Apart from conditional promises, which are considerable, applications and donations have been received for about 330 shares. Those who intend to help in this crisis must do so, if at all, by next Tuesday. I have already stated that all money received will be returned unless the matter is carried to a successful issue.

The South Shields Branch writes that it will take ten shares on condition that the other shares are taken up. I shall be glad to hear from other Branches, or from individual friends, to a similar effect.

I have received the following fresh donations: R. Richards, £3 3s.; T. E. M., 1s.; Alpha, 1s. 6d.; J. M. Jones, 2s.; T. Hopkins, 1s.; T. Almond, 1s.; A. W. Marks, £1; Mrs. B. E. Marks, £1; Edaw, 5s.

The following subscriptions have been received by Miss E. M. Vance: B., 5s.; M. Christopher, 10s.; Mrs. Penny, 10s.; E. Self, 2s. 6d.; G. Tabum, 2s. 6d.; E. H., 1s.; E. Brighten, 5s.; Bath Friend, 2s. 6d.; Annie Embleton, 2s. 6d.; Florence Embleton, 4s.; G. B., 7s.; Collection at the Hall of Science, 10s. Shares for N.S.S.: Le Diable, £1; J. Proctor, £1.

There is no need to dwell any longer upon the general subject of this appeal. I have said all that I wish, and all that is necessary. The Secular party are in possession of the facts; I must leave them to decide what they will do, and to decide it by next Tuesday.

G. W. FOOTE.

The Bible God.

"Moreh Nebuchim," whose name shows he is a Hebrew scholar, if not a Hebrew, has the following in the Truthseeker: "Can I worship him? No! They have made a God who is less good, less moral, and less intelligent than the average man. Can I love him? No! They have a God who likes blood, who incited a pack of brickmakers to plunder and rob nations on whom they had not the least claim, to kill the men, slaughter their innocent babes, and take the surviving wives home—a God who favored the bad and condemned the good. He despised the innocent offering of Cain, fruits of the earth, and respected that of Abel because there was blood! A God who made a patriarch of that tricky, defrauding, cheating, rascally Jacob, and ignored the manly, generous, and forgiving Esau! A God who punished the gentle and noble King Saul, and chose that adulterer, murderer, and hypocritical fiddler, David, the son of Boaz and Ruth, of cornfield fame, descendant of Judah and Tamar, who struck a bargain on the road to Timnath. He is the David who begot Solomon, the licentious, both masters of the art, and the God of the Bible set them aside for the purpose of making himself a son! This is the Bible's God, who is father of Jeshu ben Joseph Pandra, the carpenter, fool and knave of Jerusalem, redeemer of the world. Selah."

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

WHIT-SUNDAY is drawing near, and Freethinkers all over the kingdom should be making preparations for the Bristol Conference. We hope the Branches—even the smallest and poorest of them—will make an effort to be represented this year. Individual members, too, will find Bristol a nice city to visit. There is some fine scenery in the neighborhood. Our next issue will contain the Conference Agenda.

Mr. S. P. Putnam, the President of the American Secular Union, who is now on a visit to England, lectures this evening (May 12) at the Secular Hall, Camberwell. Mr. Robert Forder will preside. South London friends, who could not hear Mr. Putnam at the Hall of Science, should make a strong rally on this occasion. They should also tell their Christian friends, who might be tempted to see a wild Atheist from America.

The Hall of Science Libel pamphlet is now on sale at threepence. When the present edition is exhausted, it may be issued in a cheaper form for more general distribution. Several friends have expressed a wish that it could be circulated like the Atheist Shoemaker pamphlet. Mr. Foote will be glad to hear from Branches and individual Freethinkers on this point. He is prepared to spend some money on a cheap edition if it is really desirable.

Mr. Charles Watts lectured three times in Glasgow last Sunday. He had good audiences, although the Labor Demonstrations were held on that day. In the evening eight professors from the University attended to hear Mr. Watts, whom they highly complimented at the close of the meeting. This week our colleague is busy debating in Glasgow with Dr. Jamieson.

To-day, Sunday, May 12, Mr. Watts lectures three times in Dundee.

An article on Charles Bradlaugh in the May Westminster Review, by Clarence Waterer, opens by saying: "For Charles Bradlaugh the Atheist every one who values religious equality and liberty of conscience must feel that gratitude and admiration which are due to the man who, casting himself into the breach, bears the brunt of the struggle, and leaves the path clearer and easier for those who follow." A sympathetic account of his life is given, and Mr. Waterer concludes with the remark: "Whatever his contempararies may have thought of him, posterity will assuredly recognise in Charles Bradlaugh one of the foremost champions of liberty, and his life will ever remain a sad object-lesson of the evils that spring from bigotry, intolerance, and injustice."

We notice in the Hobart Mercury that at the Tasmanian International Exhibition the "Artisans' Section" contains a "Charles Bradlaugh" musical cabinet, contributed by Mr. James Hall.

We commented in "Acid Drops" last week on the Birmingham coroner who remarked that a man who could not find God must be mad. Mr. Stephen Urquhart writes a letter, to much the same effect as our paragraph, in the Daily Gazette. It is well to see this foolish coroner rapped over the knuckles in his own city.

Imitation is the sincerest flattery. The title of Mr. Foote's essay on war, "The Shadow of the Sword," is borrowed by Mr. W. Evans Derby, LL.D., secretary of the Peace Society, who has been advertising "a popular and striking lecture" under that heading at Spitalfields. Mr. Foote's essay, which has been revised, is now in the hands of the Humanitarian League, and will shortly be issued as one of the League's propagandist pamphlets.

Mr. C. Cohen had a warm experience before leaving Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was announced to give an outdoor address on the Quayside, and a whip-up was made for opposition by the blackguard who uttered that filthy libel at Leeds upon the London Hall of Science. This fellow and his supporters had a van of their own, and finding that Mr. Cohen had a better meeting than theirs, they deliberately pushed their vehicle right into the Secularists' meeting. This caused a serious disturbance, and at one moment it looked as though the Christian Evidence van would go over into the liquid that engulphed the Gadarene swine. Mr. Cohen was invited to ascend that van, but he replied that he would not stand amidst filth. He went on with his lecture, and held the field long after the aforesaid blackguard had bawled himself hoarse. The Newcastle friends are delighted with the way in which Mr. Cohen acquitted himself on this occasion.

The Christian World devotes an article to Canon Cheyne's new work on Isaiah. Our contemporary says that his conclusions "will be sufficiently startling to the average reader." Hitherto the Higher Criticism has taught that two writers were concerned in the book of Isaiah, but Canon Cheyne declares it to be the work of several hands in collaboration, and that the original writing of the real Isaiah is not larger than that of Haggai. Much of the contents of the book is post-exilic, and it received its final form in the second half of the third century before Christ.

The Presbyterian Synod at Newcastle-on-Tyne listened to a committee report, which was read by the Rev. W. Hutton, of Birkenhead, on the State of Religion and Morals. This document confesses that "the tone of religious life is at present very low, that there is a painful lack of interest in ordinances, and a general feeling of weariness and languor pervading the Church." It is also admitted that "the numbers outside of the Church are on the increase," that "our young men are not being drawn to the fellowship of the Church," and that political movements and popular sports are playing the very devil with religion. All which is excellent good news. There is real hope for the world when Presbyterianism is dying.

In the Islamic World Salah-ud-Deen, writing on "Mosawish and His Conquests," says that the early Kaliphs of Islam always inculcated toleration. He declares: "No dogma was enforced, no edicts prohibiting religious practices were issued, no church or synagogue was demolished, but throughout freedom and liberty were in eminence. Mr. Buckle lays great stress on the word 'scepticism' in his History of Civilisation, and remarks that it was the chief and vital agent which overthrew the miserable fetters of religious fanaticism, and which taught the people to march a little way out from the camp of old and antiquated ideas which for a long time dwarfed into insignificance the growth of civilisation. Assuredly such has been the case, and both the European and Mohammedan histories amply testify its truth. In the golden period of Mohammedan history the society was infected with scepticism."

The Islamic World will do a real service to literature if it induces competent Arabic scholars to give us Arabian accounts of history which may be compared with the Christian accounts, mostly derived from ignorant or unscrupulous monkish chroniclers.

Mr. Frederic Harrison severely criticises Mr. A. J. Balfour's Foundations of Belief in the May Positivist Review. He complains of misconceptions and ambiguity, and he declares that, as far as Positivism is concerned, Mr. Balfour's criticism of Naturalism, which he says is another term for Positivism, "has not the slightest application or meaning, because his so-called Naturalism and true Positivism have not a single belief in common." He describes Mr. Balfour's book as pervaded with the spirit of universal scepticism, a kind of despairing quietism. "It is a prose and fin de siècle version of Omar Khayyam, that all we do and think vanishes into air like the wind. And so, since Man is a bubble and Life a jest, let us—doubtingly and mockingly—put up with the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Thirty-nine Articles; for these can hardly be greater shams and fallacies than anything else in heaven and earth."

The Humanitarian League has issued a telling leaflet by Edward Carpenter on the humanising of our prisons. The present system of treating criminals is simply damnable, and Edward Carpenter's burning words ought to be widely circulated. Copies of the leaflet can be obtained of the Humanitarian League at its new office, 79a Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

Through the efforts of Mr. A. F. Bullock, the Freethinker is now included in the literature taken by the Tiverton Liberal Club. At a recent meeting the Committee decided by 14 to 2 to place it in the reading-room. Mr. Orsa, the Bath Branch secretary, informs us that efforts will now be made to get the Freethinker introduced in the Walcot and Larkhall Liberal Clubs.

The Bristol Branch opened its outdoor lecture campaign on Sunday evening in Eastville Park. Mr. Treasure presided, and the lecture was delivered by Mr. Keast. There was an excellent meeting, but no discussion, though it was strongly invited. Several lady members were present, and busied themselves in distributing copies of the Freethinker and other literature.

Lambeth Freethinkers willing to assist in conducting an open-air lecture-station in Kennington Park on Sunday evenings during the summer are invited to meet at Mr. Victor Roger's, 114 Kennington-road, to-day (May 12) at 4 o'clock.

Dr. Daniel G. Brinton, noticing in Science the paper of Dr. Eugene Dubois describing his discovery in Java of three skeletons which form missing links between man and the higher apes, says: "The material is sufficient for a close osteological comparison. The cubical capacity of the skull is about two-thirds that of the human average. It is distinctly dolichocephalic—about 70°—and its norma verticalis astonishingly like that of the famous Neanderthal skull. The dental apparatus is still of the simian type, but less markedly so than in other apes. The femora are singularly human. They prove beyond doubt that this creature walked constantly on two legs, and when erect was quite equal in height to the average human male. Of the various differences which separate it from the highest apes and the lowest men, it may be said that they bring it closer to the latter than to the former."

Digitized by Google

When Christ Ruled.

The literature of Europe, shortly before the final dissolution of the Roman Empire, fell entirely into the hands of the clergy, who were long venerated as the sole instructors of mankind. For several centuries it was extremely rare to meet with a layman who could read or write; and, of course, it was still rarer to meet with one able to compose a work. Literature, being thus monopolised by a single class, assumed the peculiarities natural to its new masters. And as the clergy, taken as a body, looked on it as their business to enforce belief rather than to encourage inquiry, it is no wonder that they displayed in their writings the spirit incidental to the habits of their profession. Hence literature, during many ages, instead of benefiting society, injured it by increasing credulity, and thus stopping the progress of knowledge. Indeed, the aptitude for falsehood became so great that there was nothing men were unwilling to believe. Nothing came amiss to their greedy and credulous ears. Histories of omens, prodigies, apparitions, strange portents, monstrous appearances in the heavens, the wildest and most incoherent absurdities, were repeated from mouth to mouth, and copied from book to book, with as much care as if they were the choicest treasures of human wisdom. That Europe should have ever emerged from such a state is the most decisive proof of the extraordinary energy of man, since we cannot even conceive a condition of society more unfavorable to his progress.—Buckle, "History of Civilisation," i. 221.

The Ritualistic disturbance at the re-marriage of a divorced person is likely to have several good results. It is accentuating the differences of opinion among Churchmen themselves on a most important point. It has shown the secular world how priests will brawl in church and interfere scandalously to prevent people doing what they have a legal right to do. It shows that the Canon law of the Church is in conflict with the State, and emphasises the fact that what "God" has joined together Sir Francis Jeune can, and does, put asunder. It will probably lead to the repeal of the Canon law, and possibly to the general rule of civil marriage for all, and extra Church ceremonies for those who want them, which is already the practice of most civilised States.

Viscount Halifax, the head of the English Church Union, has already brought a Bill into the House of Lords to repeal clause 58 of the Divorce Act, and not allow any marriage for divorced persons, innocent or otherwise, except by the civil registrar. The Duke of Newcastle also has written to the Church Times announcing, like a monarch, that, if the bishops do not support the Canon law of marriage, "I shall change my attitude towards Disestablishment."

The bishops, however, know on which side their bread is buttered. They may brag about the authority of the Church, but when it comes to a real conflict with the State they will quietly give in. The Church has only to consent to Disendowment, and, of course, it can do as it pleases about marriage; but while it is a State institution it must do as the State orders. The Ritualistic clergy all want the wages without acknowledging the mastership of the State.

It is not generally known that, by the Church Building Acts, it is illegal to let pews in churches to other than parishioners. In London, however, this very often is done, and the churches derive funds absolutely prohibited by law.

The Reports of the Commissioners on the subject of the Aged Poor show that the Commissioners were all at loggerheads for want of a workable scheme of pensions. It looks as if the question would remain in abeyance until some statesman discovers that tithes appropriated to this purpose will be fulfilling the most important of their original functions.

BOOK CHAT.

Those who regard the Puritans as pioneers of liberty should read The Emancipation of Massachusetts, by Brooks Adams. The book is one long indictment of the bigotry and barbarism of the early settlers who sought to found a kingdom of God near Massachusetts Bay. Mr. Adams shows that their men of God were responsible for persecutions, punishments, and executions as iniquitous and abominable as those of the Inquisition. Under the reign of Christ, free thought of any kind had no chance. Antinomians, Anabaptists, Quakers, and alleged witches were ruthlessly crushed by imprisonment, scourgings, tortures, and hangings. Mr. Adams quotes some of the contemporary denunciations of the Quakers. Thus the Rev. John Wilson said he "would carry fire in one hand and faggots in the other to burn all the Quakers in the world." These Puritan protesters against Popery and Church of England tyranny would have made model Popes and tyrants themselves.

* * *

The account of Robert Owen in The Dictionary of National Biography, vol. 42, is written by Leslie Stephen, who carefully digests the chief sources of information. He says: "His system at New Lanark showed much sense and benevolence. . . . . His infant school was imitated by Lord Lansdowne, Brougham, and others." He thus relates Owen's famous declaration at the City of London Tavern, August 21, 1817: "Owen had been challenged to give his religious views. He had discovered that the religions of the world were the great obstacle to progress, and he resolved to announce this piece of news to the meeting, though expecting to be 'torn in pieces.' He made the statement in the most dramatic fashion, and thereby, he thought, struck the death-blow of bigotry and superstition. A pause was followed by a few hisses, when an 'electric shock' seemed to pass through the audience, and a burst of 'heartfelt applause' drowned all dissent."

* * *

Mr. Stephen makes the following remarks on Owen's social experiments: "Owen's schemes had failed, as might have been expected, even upon his own principles. He had laid the greatest stress at New Lanark upon the necessity of 'forming character' in infancy, and he might have inferred that miscellaneous collections of unprepared people would not have the necessary qualities for success in new undertakings."

* * *

Mr. Stephen smartly describes Owen as "one of those intolerable bores who are the salt of the earth." . . . . "Personally, according to Robert Dale Owen, who no doubt speaks the truth, he was most amiable. His ruling passion was benevolence; he was exceedingly fond of children; spent a fortune to promote the welfare of his race, and had a command of temper which enabled him to conciliate opponents. He had, apparently, all the obstinacy without the irritability generally attributed to his countrymen."

* * *

The Westminster Review, noticing Dr. Wildeboer's Origins of the Canon of the Old Testament, regards it as "finally disposing of the traditional theory of the supernatural origin and unity of the Old Testament."

* * *

The Life of Adam Smith, by John Rae, published by Macmillan, is got up with a care and minuteness which will probably render it the standard biography of that great political economist and moralist, the friend of Hume and one of the most typical Scotsmen that ever lived.

* * *

M. Alfred Fouillée, the distinguished French exponent of the philosophy of idées-forces, has selected extensive extracts from the writings of his able nephew, J. M. Guyau, the author of The Irreligion of the Future, whose early death in 1889 was a loss to philosophy and Freethought. They are issued in a volume entitled Pages Choisies de J. M. Guyau. The volume forms part of a collection of "Choice Pages from Great French Authors." It will add to the fame and influence of a noble writer, who is too little known in England.

Sir Henry Tyler, the pious "guinea pig" and instigator of the prosecution of the Freethinker, has resigned, or, it would be more correct to say, been kicked out of, his presidency of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.

The Western Mail gives an illustration of the Nonconformist Conscience in the fact that the "Lucky Sportsman" at Neath who netted £4,000 at a coup has been solicited for donations and investments by various chapels in his vicinity.

Digitized by Google

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

May 12, Camberwell, 19, Bradford; 26, Liverpool.

June 2, N.S.S. Conference; 9, Glasgow; 16, Edinburgh; 23, Manchester; 30, Sheffield.

July 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14, Bristol; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York in August, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

Arrangements are being made for him to speak in Derby and Stockton-on-Tees during the weeks following his being at Manchester and Newcastle-on-Tyne. Dundee should be visited when he lectures in Glasgow and Edinburgh.

AN INTERVIEW WITH INGERSOLL.

These are a few among a list of questions submitted to Colonel Ingersoll by a recent interviewer, with the Colonel's answers:—

Q. Considering Sunday simply as a day of rest and quiet, aside from its religious significance, do you think the saloons should be open all that day, part of that day, or not at all that day?

A. I do not think that Sunday is better than the other days. I do not believe in prohibition. Lots of reformers in New York care but little about murder and crimes of that kind, provided no beer is sold on Sunday. All the temperance legislation has done harm.

Q. Granting that the Christian religion is faulty and deficient, is not the world indebted to it for much of the enlightenment and beneficence which characterise the nineteenth century?

A. No. Orthodox Christianity has done harm, and only harm. It has poisoned the foundation of learning, and misdirected the energies of the world.

Q. In your estimation, what percentage of Christians are, or try to be, good for the sake of reward in the next world?

A. I have never known one.

Q. What percentage because of fear of punishment in the next world?

A. I have never known one.

Q. And what percentage are good for the sake of being good?

A. All that are really good are so without the hope of heaven or the fear of hell.

THE TRUE RELIGION.

"Religion is not of the brain."—"General" Booth, speaking at Boston, U.S.A.

Down on your marrows and pray to the Lord;
Whoop hallelujah and glory;
Bang with your Bible and call it the Word;
Rave on the old-fashioned story;

Out with your banjoes, and tambos, and bones;
Don your red jerseys and bonnets;
Flout the philosophers living and dead;
Damn every writer of sonnets.

Down on your marrows, and do a knee drill;
Crawl up the stairs into glory,
For if you do not you'll land on the grill,
In spite of the gentle Lamb gory.

Blow like the Devil through brassy trombones;
Skip like a lunatic raving;
March with a dozen of Janets and Johns
If your ha'penny soul you'd be saving.

You ask why you should, for it goes 'gainst your grain.
Why, the "General's" just been a-saying
That his blessed "religion is not of the brain,"
So start to the whooping and praying.

The Gaberlunzie.

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION.

The Council met at the Hall of Science, May 2; Mr. G. Ward in the chair. Present: R. Forder, G. Standring, J. Neate, F. Schaller, M. Loafer, A. Wheeler, W. Clogg, W. H. Baker, W. G. Renn, C. Durant, Miss Vance, and the Secretary. Minutes of previous meeting read and confirmed. Treasurer's report received.

Grants were made to the Battersea and Westminster Branches, and a further payment made to Mr. G. Standring off the outstanding printing account. The date of the Annual Excursion was fixed for Sunday, July 14, and the hope expressed that all Branches will this year co-operate with the Federation. Clacton-on-Sea, Littlehampton, and Southend were each suggested, and the Secretary was instructed to make the necessary inquiries.

Branch secretaries are reminded that delegates' fees are much overdue, and that all matter for the monthly list must reach the undersigned not later that May 20.

Annie Brown (Hon. Sec.).

Obituary.

It is with deep regret that we learn of the sudden death, on April 21, of Lulie Monroe Power, the editress of the Ironclad Age, at her residence, 50 Fayette-street, Indianapolis. The Indianapolis Sentinel recently spoke of her as "the only woman in the world who edits a paper which has for its mission the denial of God's or a future existence." A daughter of Dr. Jasper Roland Monroe, the founder of the Ironclad Age, she worked at the case in her father's office, setting in type his Freethought articles, and sharing his opinions. Upon his death she bravely determined to carry on the paper, keeping its old proclamation of "Goodness without God," and the motto: "In the brief time of life, love; in the long night of death, oblivion." The Freethinkers' Magazine said of her: "She loves humanity, even of the most degraded character. She goes further than that. She loves even the dumb animals. No horse, cat, or dog ever suffers at her hands, but she treats them with the greatest kindness. She abhors cruelty in gods or men, and, if she could have her way, no child would ever receive a blow, but would be governed by love. She is a worthy wife, an affectionate mother, a noble woman in all the relations of life, was the tenderest and kindest of daughters to her parents when they were living, and nothing gives her so much pleasure as to say or do something that will honor their memory. She loves the flowers and the birds, and worships nature, and, above all else, loves the truth 'wherever found, on heathen or on Christian ground.'" Her portrait shows a woman of fine appearance, sharp-cut features, square chin, high forehead, and bright eyes. Her loss will be greatly felt by all the readers of the Ironclad Age.

Leontine Nicolle, who died last week at Brévannes, was a Freethinking woman who devoted her life to the idiot children at the Salpétrière Hospital. The Paris correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says: "She retired four years ago at the age of sixty-eight, and was given an asylum for the rest of her days at Brévannes. She brought hundreds of her charges to health and relative intelligence. The Academy in 1887 gave her the Montyon prize and the palms of the Academy. President Carnot went to the idiots' hospital to fasten the Cross of the Legion of Honor on her breast in the presence of the whole of the staff. She was obliged by broken health to leave her idiots, but she had shown younger women how to treat them. Mademoiselle Nicolle was a Freethinker and an Altruist."

A distinguished Italian Freethinker has passed away in the person of Professor Luigi Ferri, editor of the Revista Italiana di Filosofia, and author of The Psychology of Pomponazzi and a History of Philosophy in Italy.

Excommunicating Insects.

In 1479 the inhabitants of Lausane were much vexed by the number of insects who completely spoiled their crops. The matter was brought before the bishop, Benedict de Montferrand, who solemnly issued a writ that they should appear before him and answer for their trespasses. He gave them an advocate to plead their cause, and, after hearing his plea, gravely pronounced anathema and sentence of excommunication against the insects. It is a pity that M. A. Ruchat, who, in his Abregé de l'Histoire Ecclesiastique du Puis de Vaud, p. 87, relates this interesting survival of an old superstition, did not also record what the advocate had to plead for the insects. Certainly he might have said that God, having given them life, also allowed them to sustain it, though at the expense of human kind.

Digitized by Google

THE JEW'S CONVERSION.

A jeu d'esprit.

(Founded, like Tennyson's "Voyage of Maeldune," on an Irish legend.)

A sailor at the hour of death
  At last repented of his sins.
A priest is called, and in his ear
  A long confession Jack begins.

A grievous tale it was to hear—
  The priest he listened to the end.
"If one good deed thou hast done," he said,
  "Perhaps the Church may still befriend."

"I have," said Jack. "My sins are great;
  My righteous acts are very few.
But once, my father, grace I had
  To make a convert of a Jew.

"This cheating knave and usurer
  Had plundered Christians many a year.
One day, when none beheld but I,
  By chance he tumbled from a pier.

"I seized an oar, put off a boat,
  And close beside old Moses brought her;
Stretched out my hand, caught his grey hair,
  And held his head above the water.

"'I'll save your life! O Jew,' I cried,
  'If your false creed you will forego;
Become a Christian, be baptised.'
  He shook his head; I let him go.

"Twice he sank and rose again.
  At length my argument prevailed—
The truth had dawned upon his mind,
  Or else the rascal's courage failed.

"'I am a Christian, Jack!' he cried;
  'My evil creed I have forsaken;
Henceforth I'll feed on pork and ham,
  Except in Lent. Pray save my bacon!'

"In name of Father and of Son,
  And Holy Ghost, I—by immersion—
Baptised that wretch, who, but for me,
  Had lived and died without conversion.

"Thus did I force an infidel
  To take a pious resolution;
And for this righteous deed I pray
  That you will grant me absolution."

"How fared the Jew?" inquired the priest.
  "O, holy father, do not frown;
I feared, if saved, he might relapse;
  To save his soul I let him drown."

The priest has issued from the door,
  And Jack, with all his sins forgiven,
First drank a dram, next sang a psalm;
  Then quickly died and went to heaven.

J. A. Richardson.

WHAT IS BLASPHEMY?

What is blasphemy according to the latest authorities? We do not know. It used to be blasphemy to question the inspiration of any part of the Bible; now you can question the inspiration or godly origin of the entire book, and not blaspheme. To doubt if Moses and others named in the Bible wrote as per appearances there was once blasphemy; but it is nothing of the sort now. To call the prophecies in question was awful blasphemy in former days, and how many immortal souls were damned on that count it is impossible to tell; now it is almost blasphemy to believe the prophecies. In former times he who doubted Hell and questioned the reality of Satan was not far from blazes, and within arm's length of the Devil; but now it is a positive sign of grace to laugh at both Nick and his den.

When we were young it was rank blasphemy to deny the Trinity in Unity or the eternal sonship of Jesus; but now the blasphemy is all on the other side, and people are growing ashamed of what was formerly most necessary to salvation.

The divine and adulterous birth of Jesus was once insisted upon with an unction not to be described; now an ancient Syriac Gospel comes to light and tells us Jesus was begotten by his mother's husband!—the most terrible calamity that ever befel the Church. Now, which is blasphemy, to say Jesus was the son of Mary by the Holy Ghost, who was not her husband, or to say he was her son by Joseph, who was her husband? We wish divines would answer us that question, for we have no wish to misrepresent anybody's family affairs.

And here another question starteth up. Only twenty-five years ago the unchangeable Church of Rome dogmatically affirmed the Immaculate conception; and now this ancient Syriac Gospel comes to confound them. The Syriac Gospel, we presume, must go to the Index—that is, the Popish hell for honest books. But still the question is, Who is the blasphemer—he who says Mary was an honest woman, or he who says the contrary?

What is blasphemy? A cowardly cry raised by cowardly priests to frighten people away from their consecrated trumpery, to keep the public from investigating the holy mysteries and tricks of their trade; a cry raised in defence of the most rascally conduct, the most rascally imposture and tyranny that could be conceived.—Liberator.

CORRESPONDENCE.

METHODS OF SALVATION.

To the Editor of "The Freethinker."

Sir,—Many of your readers have doubtless seen the advertisement in various papers for printers' laborers and other workmen, with a condition attached that "applicants must be Salvationists or willing to become such." On behalf of the organised printers' laborers, I recently interviewed Colonel Bremner, of the Salvation Army printing department, and learned from him that their printing office was not a business house, but a "religious" undertaking, and that it was their intention to discharge such hands as were not Salvationists.

That a wholesale reduction of wages is the real object sought appears to be established by the fact that a number of half-trained compositors, gathered from provincial towns, are at present engaged in the Army's packing warehouse awaiting the discharge of the present staff, who, to quote from Colonel Bremner, "will be got rid of one at a time."

There are, too, in the warehouse department men taken from the "Social Wing." For the heavy work of packing these men receive but 2s. 6d. per day. Cases where men profess Salvation at the behest of Colonel Bremner are frequent—its refusal means the loss of their bread.

One objection raised by Colonel Bremner was that the non-Salvationist laborers were apt to go into public-houses when their work was done—a thing he would not tolerate. Now, sir, these men frequently work forty-one hours at a stretch, from 6 a.m. on Monday morning till 11 o'clock on Tuesday evening. After that time their liberty to have a glass of beer is not admitted by Colonel Bremner, who, by-the-bye, does not perform the work of a printers' laborer.

Those workmen who have recently been discharged to make room for inexperienced Salvationists have, for the most part, been in the Army employ for periods ranging from seven to thirteen years. Altogether, the present management of the Salvation Army printing office ill accords with the past traditions of the Army or the present professions of its founder.—Yours, etc.

T. O'Grady
(Secretary, Printers' Laborers' Union.)

PROFANE JOKES.

A clergyman at a wedding addressed the congregation—"If any here present can show just cause why this man and this woman may not lawfully be joined together in holy wedlock, let him now speak, or for ever after hold his peace." The groom casually laid a pair of revolvers on the railing in front of him, and the ceremony proceeded.

One Saturday morning two little boys were playing marbles on the steps of Trinity Church. The pastor, coming out and seeing them, said: "My little men, don't you know it is wrong to play marbles on the steps of the house of God?" One of the little fellows answered: "Oh, God isn't here to-day. He's over the way at the Jewish synagogue."

Dimbleby—"So you believe in the efficacy of prayer uncle. But suppose a neighbor's chicken should hop by your kitchen door, and you should get down on your knees and pray for that chicken to enter; do you think your prayer would be granted?" Uncle Elson—"I mos' sartinly do, sah. But, o' course, I'd have to sprinkle a few grains o' co'n on de step, sah."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30, Touzeau Parris, "The Resurrection: Fact and Fiction."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, Harry Barnes, "The Independent Labor Party." Tuesday, at 8, dancing.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, S. P. Putnam, "The Bible and Modern Thought."

EAST LONDON (Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile-end-road, E.): 8, Dr. C. R. Drysdale, "Low Wages, Want of Work, and the Population Question."

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "John Ball's Rhymes and Fourteenth-Century Socialism."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, Dr. Stanton Coit, "The Aims and Claims of the Ethical Movement."

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Son in Splendor," Portobello-road, Notting Hill Gate): Monday, at 8.30, business meeting.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, a lecture.

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, C. James will lecture.

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, F. Haslam, "How I became a Secularist."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, C. James will lecture.

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, Stanley Jones, "Miracles and Science."

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, E. Calvert, "Christianity and Secularism: which is the Savior of Man?" 3.15, E. Calvert, "Religious and Scientific Hypotheses"; 6.30, A. Guest, "A Freethought Sermon from a Pious Text."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, W. Heaford, "God and the Problem of Evil." Thursday, at 8, S. E. Easton, "Some Old Tales Re-told."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, W. Heaford, "God and the Problem of Evil"; 3.30, W. Heaford, "Why we do Not Believe in Christianity." Wednesday, at 8, F. Haslam will lecture.

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, A. Guest, "A Freethought Sermon from a Pious Text."

KILBURN (High-road): 6.30, S. E. Easton, "Under which Flag?"

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, a lecture.

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, A. B. Moss, "The Brain and the Bible."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "The Atonement."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, W. J. Ramsey, "Salvation by Proxy"—Part II.

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, a lecture; 3.15, A. B. Moss will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future"; 7, S. R. Thompson, "Is there a Life Beyond the Grave?"

COUNTRY.

BLACKBURN: 3, members' meeting at secretary's house.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 7, Children's entertainment.

GLASGOW (Ex-Mission Hall, 110 Brunswick-street): 12, Business meeting; 6.30, social re-union.

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, A. Monro, "Christ and Ally Sloper."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, L. Small, B.Sc., "Darwinism and Socialism."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, Leonard Hall, "Trade Unionism and Socialism"; 3, "The Irish Question and the I.L.P."; 6.30, "The Case for the I.L.P."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 11, C. Cohen, "Darwinism and Democracy"; 3, "Is the Belief in God Reasonable?" 7, "Scepticism: its Meaning and its Value." Tea at 5.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Captain Duncan's Navigation School, King-street): 7, An address.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (82 Dovecote-street): 6.30, Mr. Yates, "God and the Bible."

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Librarian, "The Delusion of Prayer."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, J. W. Treasure, "Christianity and Labor."

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside—weather permitting): 11, C. Aarstadt will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London.—May 12, Sheffield; 19, Manchester; 23, Wood Green; 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—May 12, m. Wood Green, a. Tottenham, e. Edmonton; 19, m. Finsbury, e. Deptford; 22, Hyde Park; 26, m. Wood Green, a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 30, Hammersmith.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—May 12, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park; 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, m. Clerkenwell.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—May 19, m. Kingsland. June 2, m. Finsbury Park; 19, m. Kingsland. July 17, m. Kingsland.

Christ's Malthusianism and the Traces of His Wife and Sons. Twopence.
London: W. REEVES, 185 Fleet-street, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Now Ready, Price Twopence,

IS SUICIDE A SIN?

BY COLONEL INGERSOLL.

Together with the Reply of MONSIGNOR DUCEY.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE

A Reply to the Critics of "Is Suicide a Sin?"

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.
THE GODS. 6d.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.
ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.
CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.
ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.
ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.
PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.
HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.
ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.
TRUE RELIGION. 2d.
THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.
LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.
GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
THE DYING CREED. 2d.
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.
ART AND MORALITY. 2d.
DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.
SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.
MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.
SKULLS. 2d.
THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.
LIVE TOPICS. 1d.
MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.
REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.
REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.
CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.
CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 9s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

360 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendell" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 8s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

302 pp., superior paper, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. post free,

FLOWERS OF FREETHOUGHT

[Second Series]

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

CONTENTS:—

Luscious Piety
The Jewish Sabbath
God's Day
Professor Stokes on Immortality
Paul Bert
Converting a Corpse
Bradlaugh's Ghost
Christ and Brotherhood
The Sons of God
Melchizedek
S'w'elp me God
Infidel Homes
Are Atheists Cruel?
Are Atheists Wicked?
Rain Doctors
Pious Puerilities
"Thus Saith the Lord"
Believe or be Damned
Christian Charity
Religion and Money
Clotted Bosh
Lord Bacon on Atheism
Christianity & Slavery
Christ Up to Date
Secularism and Christianity
Altar and Throne
Martin Luther
The Praise of Folly
A Lost Soul
Happy in Hell
The Act of God
Keir Hardie on Christ
Blessed be ye Poor
Converted Infidels
Mrs. Booth's Ghost
Talmage on the Bible
Mrs. Besant on Death and After
The Poets and Liberal Theology
Christianity and Labor
Dueling
An Easter Egg for Christians
Down Among the Dead Men
Smirching a Hero
Kit Marlowe and Jesus Christ
Jehovah the Ripper
The Parson's Living Wage
Did Bradlaugh Backslide?
Frederic Harrison on Atheism
Save the Bible!
Forgive and Forget
The Star of Bethlehem
The Great Ghost
Atheism and the French Revolution
Pagottism
Jesus at the Derby
Atheist Murderers
A Religion for Runnohs
Rose-Water Religion

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s., post free,

SATIRES AND PROFANITIES

BY

JAMES THOMSON (B.V.)

(Author of "The City of Dreadful Night").

Contents:—The Story of a Famous Old Jewish Firm (Jehovah, Son, and Co.)—The Devil in the Church of England—Religion in the Rocky Mountains—Christmas Eve in the Upper Circles—A Commission of Inquiry on Royalty—A Bible Lesson on Monarchy—The One Thing Needful.

"It cannot be neglected by any who are interested in one of the most pathetic personages of our time."—Academy.
"As clever as they are often profane."—Christian World.
"Well worth preserving."—Weekly Dispatch.
"Reminds one of the genius of Swift."—Oldham Chronicle.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Digitized by Google

LOT 11

One Pair All-Wool Blankets.
One Pair Sheets.
One Quilt.
One Table Cloth.

MARVELLOUS SALE.

872 PARCELS REDUCED TO 423 IN 14 DAYS.

Send at Once, or you will be too Late.

ONLY 19/- PER PARCEL TO CLEAR.

Not more than Two Parcels will be Sold to One Person.

NEW SPRING PATTERNS NOW READY.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4, UNION STREET, BRADFORD.

3d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 64pp.

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

132 pp., price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d., post free,

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES.

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The only Complete Edition published in England.

ACCURATE AS COLENSO, AND FASCINATING AS A NOVEL.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 20. SUNDAY, MAY 19, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

A JOLLY JAPANESE RELIGION.

INTEREST in Japan and things Japanese has grown immensely since the war, and occidentals are beginning to discover that they may perhaps learn something, if not in science, at any rate in art and the arts of life, from the land of the Rising Sun. Possibly it may be so in religion. I, at any rate, have been much interested in Shintoism, the old religion of Japan, ever since I visited M. Guimet's "Musée des Religions" at Paris, and Monsieur Guimet pointed out that a piece of white shaving or paper was their symbol of deity. That, I thought, will just express my creed. Keep it white. Others may write on it what they like and call it God, which is what those who utilise deity always do.

Everybody knows that Shintoism is older than Buddhism in Japan. The Japanese call Buddhism "the way of the Buddhas," but Shinto means "the way of the gods." At the best, Buddhisatvas are only godlings or god-germs on their way, after long processes of reincarnation, to become Buddhas, merely maintaining a vague kind of personality by manifesting themselves for the redemption of inferiors ere evaporating into everlasting Nirvana. The process is wearisome, and the result disappointing. Buddhism attracted me once. But charlatan Theosophists, with their esoteric nonsense, have discounted its attractions. It is too like Christianity to retain permanent interest. Doubtless it is more philosophical than Christianity in taking account of other manifestations of animal life besides the human. But it is, after all, like Christianity, a miserable sort of faith, and devils as naturally belong to both as fairies to Paganism. Like Christianity, Buddhism grew up among outcasts, and is founded on a sort of despair of this world. The vaunted morality of both these systems is essentially self-effacement. Both Christianity and Buddhism look down on women and marriage, for both are monkish in their origin, and are better fitted for emasculated monks than for men.

But Shintoism, "the way of the gods," is a creed of jollity, a system of health and happiness for life here and now. It believes, says Mr. Nobuta Kishimoto, M.A., who describes his faith in the Popular Science Monthly, in "enjoying this life to the utmost extent." He defines it, indeed, as "a religion of merry-making." In this it resembles Paganism ere the man of sorrows brought the worship of agony into fashion among women and slaves, already too acquainted with grief. In the Bible records we can see that the Jews were a jollier race when they were polytheists, and, prophetically, danced round the Golden Calf. Austere Phariseeism followed in the wake of dogmatic Monotheism. Yet is there a secular make-the-best-of-this-world element in Judaism entirely wanting in the genuine old brands of Christianity, though since the advent of Secularism the school of Kingsley has tried pouring the new wine into the old theological bottles.

Shintoism is not altogether a do-as-you-like religion. It utters the supreme mandate, "Be happy"; but it also says, "Obey the conditions of happiness." Chief among these it places purity—physical and intellectual. The pure, white paper shaving, or white mark, is its symbol. It urges the utmost physical purity and cleanliness upon its adherents. The dirt no less that the cant of a Christian always disgusts a Japanese, who has learnt to be scrupulously clean. This regard for purity has led to a number of superstitions, very similar to those among the Jews, as, for instance, the uncleanness of blood, of touching a dead body, etc. No doubt the idea of danger originally led to a taboo, which has got to be considered, as with the Jews, a main point of religion. So, too, purifications with water, salt, or fire are held to be of religious efficacy. But the main thing is health as a means of happiness, and rites and ceremonies are subordinate thereto. This elevation of the secular side of conduct above creed is well expressed in some lines of a Shinto poet, who is now, indeed, one of the Shinto gods:—

> Only if our inner heart is
> In harmony with the true way,
> The gods will protect us,
> Even though we do not pray.

These lines are as well known among the Japanese as "He that believeth not shall be damned" are among the Christians.

The Shintos, says Mr. Nobuta Kishimoto, strive to be happy with gods and men, by eating, drinking, singing, and dancing, and cherishing cheerfulness and courtesy. The Japanese sake, or rice beer, that cheereth the hearts of gods and men, flows at their religious festivals as wine evidently did at those held at Shiloh (1 Samuel i. 14). Music, too, is religious. They say the gods or spirits are fond of music, and even delight in wrestling matches. This is not curious, when we remember their gods are much like Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table, Caractacus, King Alfred, Robin Hood, Sir Francis Drake, Sir Walter Raleigh, and Shakespeare are to us.

Just as monkish Christianity, in displacing Paganism, had to keep up some of the old merry festivals like Christmas and Easter, so monkish Buddhism has not been able to displace the rites and festivals of the old Shinto nature worship. Shintoism and Buddhism, being both tolerant, exist side by side, members of the same household being often of various creeds, in which temperament probably counts for something; optimists naturally turning to Shintoism, while pessimists gravitate towards Buddhism. The joyous faith of old Japan has always held its own as the national religion, though Buddhism is allowed to be more philosophical; and when the Mikado, or Spiritual Emperor, was restored to temporal power in 1865 Buddhism was practically "disestablished," and Shinto worship reinstated as the State religion.

Shintoism has over 3,700 gods with shrines, and each of these gods or saints has an annual festival or merry-making. These gods are not reverenced like Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, but are regarded as national heroes. Indeed, for the most part, they are deified men. The Mikado pretends descent from the gods. Some, however, are nature gods, the chief being Amaterasse, the "sun goddess," in whose worship flowers abound. A round steel mirror, the only object in some temples, is her symbol, or rather the emblem of nature herself deified and personified in the sun-goddess.

There are about a hundred thousand Shinto shrines in Japan. The priests are married, and do not shave their heads like the Buddhists. The traveller in Japan meets continually bands of pilgrims on their way to Isé, the centre of Shinto worship. Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop says: "Dismiss from your minds the idea of austerity, penance, privation, worship, sanctity, and vows which the word pilgrimage conjures up. 'A pilgrimage' to Isé is the greatest frolic and holiday of the year or the lifetime, a prolonged picnic, a vast merry-making. In spring the roads are thronged with bands of girls and companies of men in holiday costume, singing and laughing; bowing to every high hill and every large tree, visiting theatres and shows; and, after throwing their coins on the white cloth in front of the Isé temples, surrendering themselves to the pleasures of Jamada, a city abounding in vicious attractions."

Digitized by Google

Shintoism is less a religion than a bundle of old customs. But in the East ancient custom is religion. Though it has a Valhalla of deified heroes, it has, properly speaking, no heaven, no hell, no purgatory, no organised worship, no sacrifices, and no priestcraft. No doubt it has faults like other faiths; but in its cardinal doctrine it hits the bull's eye. It recognises that joy is the magnet to which human lives naturally turn. Perhaps, when we have got rid of a religion which has for its basis human depravity, bloody atonement, and infernal damnation, we shall recognise this also. J. M. WHEELER.

TACTICS OF SOME CHRISTIAN DISPUTANTS.

(Concluded from page 292.)

DR. JAMIESON persists in his contention that "the effect can never be superior to the cause," and upon this assumption he gives what he terms "a fatal blow to the Atheistic hypothesis." In the debate I quoted J. S. Mill, who said: "How vastly nobler and more precious, for instance, are the vegetables and animals than the soil and manure out of which they are raised up." "But," says the Doctor, "the soil and the manure are not the cause either of vegetables or animals," but the cause is "a living germ" which is there. Granted; yet surely it will not be urged that this simple unicellular germ is greater than the oak tree which springs from it, or the animal—perhaps man—into which it developes. That germ has no intelligence, yet from it comes a Milton, a Bacon, or a Shakespeare. Was not the effect greater than the cause in such a case? A man and woman are surely the cause of their offspring, yet the parents may both be ignorant blockheads, and the child an embryonic genius. What about the effect always being superior to the cause here? Or take another case of an opposite character. A baccilus, almost inconceivable in its minuteness, several millions of which could pass at the same time through the eye of an ordinary sewing-needle, enters the body of a strong man and sets up an action which stops all the vital forces of the powerful and well-knit organism. The cause here was this tiny thing, composed of just a single cell; the result, the death of a man of great vigor of body and strength of mind. Surely no one out of a lunatic asylum will maintain in such a case as this that the effect was inferior to the cause.

Dr. Jamieson's statement, that life precedes organisation, is so startling that one can hardly imagine it possible for anyone to make it who is acquainted with the merest rudiments of biology. Can we even imagine life apart from organisation? Will the Doctor tell us where it is to be found, and what it is like? That organisation and life are always found associated no one, we presume, will deny, just as force is always found in connection with matter. But it would be no less absurd to say that force was the cause of matter than that life was the cause of organisation. Most of the quotations given by Dr. Jamieson from men of science are quite beside the question, and only show that the writers held life to be something distinct from organisation, which no more proves life to have been the cause of organisation than the holding that electricity is something distinct from the battery proves it to have been the cause of the combination of metals and acids employed. However, the quotations themselves are from books written long ago. The one most in harmony with the views under consideration is that from the "Reign of Law" by the Duke of Argyll. And this book was written nearly thirty years since, and its author was certainly never considered an authority upon questions of biology. Huxley most assuredly holds a view diametrically opposed to this, as anyone can see who will take the trouble to read his "Physical Basis of Life." In that discourse he ridicules the notion that life is anything more than a result of organisation, by comparing it with the old theory that aquaosity was something added to the hydrogen and oxygen in the formation of water. For instance, the Professor says: "It will be observed that the existence of the matter of life depends on the pre-existence of certain compounds—namely, carbonic acid, water, and ammonia. Withdraw any one of these three from the world, and all vital phenomena come to an end. They are related to the protoplasm of the plant, as the protoplasm of the plant is to that of the animal. Carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen are all lifeless bodies. Of these, carbon and oxygen unite in certain proportions, and under certain conditions, to give rise to carbonic acid; hydrogen and oxygen produce water; nitrogen and hydrogen give rise to ammonia. These new compounds, like the elementary bodies of which they are composed, are lifeless. But when they are brought together under certain conditions they give rise to the still more complex body, protoplasm, and this protoplasm exhibits the phenomena of life" ("Physical Basis of Life," Lay Sermons, p. 135).

In my debate with Dr. Jamieson upon the soul question I said, "Diseased brain impaired thought." In reply to this the Doctor, in his Appendix, gives a long string of authorities to prove the contrary. But they do nothing of the kind. I am reminded that Professor Ferrier said that "the half of the brain has been diseased, and that the intellectual powers of the patient have not been interfered with." Well, what of it? So a man may have a disease in one eye or one ear, and yet see or hear very well with the other. The brain is double, like the eye or the ear. There are two hemispheres, and if one is affected with disease the other can act healthily. And it was to illustrate this very fact that Dr. Ferrier introduced the case. Then there is a reference to cases in which mental derangement has occurred, and after death no lesion of the brain has been found. Doubtless; yet I suppose there is no physiologist who does not believe but that there was some brain disease which escaped detection, in consequence probably of its minute character. But if the Doctor thinks differently, will he kindly inform us what was diseased if the brain was not? Can the immortal soul suffer from derangement? Is the immaterial spirit liable to disease and decay? For, if so, would it not be a fair deduction that death also might be the culminating point of such an abnormal condition? Then, what would become of the supposed immortality?

Dr. T. Cromwell, in his work upon The Soul and a Future Life, says: "Immaterialists have dwelt much on cases of considerable, though always partial, injury to the brain, with which no perceptible mental disorder was associated. But to this there are adequate replies. 'Many instances are on record in which extensive disease has occurred in one hemisphere (of the cerebrum) so as almost entirely to destroy it, without any obvious injury to the mental powers, or any interruption of the influence of the mind upon the body. But there is no case on record of any severe lesion of both hemispheres, in which morbid phenomena were not evident during life' (Carpenter's Human Physiology, p. 775). 'In every instance where there exists any corresponding lesion or disease on each side of the brain, there we are sure to find some express injury or impairment of the mental functions' (Sir H. Holland's Chapters on Mental Physiology, p. 184). 'There are no cases on record in which the mental faculties have remained undisturbed when the disorganisation has extended to both sides of the brain' (Sully on The Human Brain, p. 349; 1836). Dr. Maudsley, in his Physiology of Mind, p. 126, observes that he has come to the assured conviction that mind does not exist in nature apart from brain; all his experience of it is in connection with brain. Lawrence, in his Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, p. 112, says: 'I firmly believe that the various forms of insanity, that all the affections comprehended under the general term of mental derangement, are only evidences of cerebral affections, disordered manifestations of those organs whose healthy action produces the phenomena called mental—in short, symptoms of diseased brain'" (quoted by Cromwell, p. 97).

The Doctor accuses me of ignorance because I spoke of scars in connection with anatomy, which, he says, belong to the province of physiology. Let me tell my learned opponent, who informs me that he has "successfully passed examinations in two universities," that it would have been still more correct to have relegated scars to the region of pathology, or the wound which caused the scar to the domain of surgery. Anatomy is a general term applied to the human body, and is not always limited to a cut-and-dried description of the bones, muscles, nerves, etc.

Digitized by Google

Strictly speaking, the word anatomy is derived from a Greek word which signifies to cut up; but it is used by all persons—except, perhaps, first-year students in a medical school—in a much broader sense. And no man who is not bent on hair-splitting would have accused me of ignorance in consequence of my applying it to scars. Then we are told that sometimes scars disappear. That is true, but not always, for I have now a scar upon my forehead that has been visible for over forty years. In my debate with the Doctor I gave scientific reasons why scars could remain, notwithstanding the many changes the body undergoes. But the disappearance of some scars does not in any way prove the Doctor's contention. Ideas sometimes disappear, especially late in life. Memory fails almost invariably at advanced age, and even childishness supervenes. If that be not due to brain decay, then to what is it due?

CHARLES WATTS.

LYING FOR JESUS.

"Blessed are ye when all men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."—Jesus.

If Jesus had the gift of prophecy, no doubt this blessing was intended for the infidels, who for Jesus' sake have been reviled, persecuted, and had all manner of evil said against them falsely, by Christian ministers, who do it all for Christ's sake, as they say, though it is evident that their main motive is the money they can make by it. Jesus must have foreseen that this class of preachers would arise, that they would have no scruples about making false assertions for his sake; and, being an infidel himself to the religion of his country, he knew how it was: he knew that the scribes and pharisees were a class that belonged to no time or people, but sprung like weeds from the soil, the natural product of human creeds and human selfishness.

One of this class of preachers lately held forth in a Christian church—commonly called Campbellite—in Austin, as the star evangelist of a week's revival meeting. I know an infidel who attended that meeting. As he is sufficiently ashamed of the act, I will not mention his name; but he was persuaded to attend by a pious brother of the church, who assured him that he would hear a very able preacher, one of the ablest in that church, and that he would consider it a personal favor to him if the said infidel would go.

The sermon was largely devoted to infidelity, but there was no statement of the infidel's argument, nor was there argument on the other side. It was just another case of reviling and saying all manner of evil against the infidel, falsely, for Jesus' sake. There was a rehash of all the old lies about the horrors of the infidel's death-bed, and a story about an infidel who carried a rabbit's foot in his pocket for luck. The story may or may not be true—most likely the latter; but the superstitious infidel had, at least, a tangible object upon which to hang his superstition, while the preacher hung his upon spooks that have no existence whatever. I never knew an infidel who believed in the occult virtue of a rabbit's foot, but when I look around the world and see the crowds of people who give credence to the silly stories of the Bible, and the efficacy of lamb's blood to wash out the stain of evil deeds, I can easily conceive it possible that there may be a man who has outgrown the latter superstition, but has not yet evoluted so far as to give up his rabbit's foot. The last seems to be only a silly superstition, harmless, at least; but the Christian religion is not only as silly as the other, but it is also the most malignant scourge that has ever afflicted mankind.

The preacher declared that he could tell an infidel as far as he could see him, that he could go through the audience and pick out any infidel that might be there, by the droop of his lip, and the drawing down of the corners of his mouth; he could walk the streets of Austin and tell every man he met, whether he was an infidel, by the same signs.

The infidel looked around the audience, and mentally concluded that, if that sign was true, he must have gotten into an infidel meeting. Four-fifths of the crowd bore the marks, and those in the amen corner all had it in what might be called an excessive degree. "It may be true," he said, "and these people are just ready to weep over the ignorance and folly of the preacher, as exhibited in his speech. I can imagine a sensible, level-headed infidel feeling very sad over such an exhibition, though ordinarily a cheerful man with a smile upon his face."

When the infidel got home from the meeting, the corners of his mouth were all right, as usual; but there was a mild look of disgust on his face, and when asked by his friends about the meeting his answer was: "Sold again!"

Anybody may be fooled once, but he is a fool, indeed, if he allows himself to be taken in the second time by the same trick; what, then, shall I think of myself when I have been fooled over and over again, at least half-a-dozen times, by itinerant, mountebank evangelists, who come to town, advertising that they have a special mission to convert infidels, who are specially invited to attend their meetings. Then comes some pious, calf-faced youth—who knows no more about infidelity than my puppy does about conic sections—with an urgent personal appeal to attend the meeting. Remembering former experiences, I mildly suggest to the young man that he is deluded by the blustering advertisement of the evangelist; that he don't want any real infidels at his meetings; that he is only talking for the effect it may have upon green Christians, who swallow it all, fully believing that he will convert all the infidels in the world if they will only listen to him. But, the young man says, this preacher is not an ordinary man. His fame is as wide as the country, as an eloquent speaker, a deeply learned man, and a profound reasoner.

It is not necessary to repeat the whole of the conversation. Having no engagement for the evening, I allow myself to be led "like a lamb to the slaughter," and placed in a conspicuous place among the sheep in the pews. I hear the same old whining prayers, and the same out-of-tune-and-time singing that I can remember so well in the days of my childhood, that even then, when my ears were uncultivated, used to grate harshly upon them. And then I heard the same old pulpit lies over again that I had heard so many times before: the awful deaths of infidels; the despair of Voltaire, and his declaration that he was going to hell; though, if there is any truth in the Christian religion, he needn't go there without he wanted to—a few words of assent to the hocus-pocus of the priest and a little holy water would have atoned for all the wit and wisdom he had uttered for the benefit of poor, abused humanity. But, perhaps, he meant to say it was his choice to go to hell; many a wise man would make that choice, rather than go with the crowd of rascals and imbeciles that are wearing crowns of glory in "Kingdom Come."

It is not necessary to repeat the whole nauseous dose of ignorance and superstition; suffice it to say, it was the regular stereotyped display of malice and mendacity. Everybody who has gone to church half-a-dozen times has heard it. It is not intended for infidels, but for those Christians who do not know what infidelity is. It is to show them how easy it is to demolish infidels when they are not allowed to reply to the dunderhead preacher who abuses them.

I noticed in the newspaper this morning that a certain preacher in Houston was going to preach upon the subject of "Lying, in all its Varieties." I do not know the preacher, nor what are his particular hobbies; but it is safe to say that his sermon will contain no reference to pulpit lies about infidels. It would be worth a trip to Houston to hear him, if he would tell the truth about his professional brethren. Upon that subject he might preach for a week without exhausting the subject. A full account of the lies of the clergy about infidelity would make a work as voluminous as the Encyclopædia Britannica or the Lives of the Saints—which last work might, perhaps, be largely included in it.

The more I think of it the larger grows the subject that the Rev. ———, Houston gentleman, has taken to preach upon—"Lying, in all its Varieties." Surely the one variety of lies, those that are told for Jesus' sake, would be enough to occupy all his time. St. Paul congratulated himself that the grace of God abounded through his lies; and he thought nobody had any right to call him a sinner on account of his lies. This example of the great founder of Christianity has been followed by the clergy from his day to the present time, and every little whipper-snapper of a preacher seems to think he is making the grace of God to abound by lying about infidels. Lying comes easy and natural to him, but whether the grace of God abounds in consequence of it is problematical; the grace of God cannot be a very desirable thing to have if it is promoted by such means.

Digitized by Google

What a blessing it would be if the grace of God would only make ministers truthful, honest, and chaste; if it would so fill their hearts as to crowd the Devil out of them; but, unfortunately, such is not the case. To a worldly man it would seem that as soon as a person gets the grace of God in him he begins to act like the devil; and this leads one to suspect that either God and the Devil are acting in co-partnership, or that the Christians have, by mistake, substituted one for the other. The co-partnership would seem to be the most probable, otherwise why should God tell us that we might serve the Devil all our lives, and then, by believing and being baptised, make ourselves acceptable to God, who would give the saints a special holiday in heaven in honor of our arrival in that blessed mansion in the sky? Jesus tells us that there is joy in heaven over one sinner who repents, more than over ninety-nine just persons who need no repentance.

But, seriously, why don't these ministers of grace try to find out something about Infidelity? Why don't theological institutes teach something of the scientific discoveries of the last two hundred years? Why don't Christians study geography, geology, astronomy, physiology, and all the modern sciences, and thoughtfully compare all they find in them with the Bible and the teachings of the old dogmatists of the dark ages of the world? Why don't they read what the Infidels have to say for themselves, and the reasons they have to give for the faith that is not in them? But no; they are afraid to do anything of that sort. They confess that they are afraid it may "weaken their faith" (and bless their souls, so it will), and they have been taught that their faith is to be kept as much more precious than the truth, and shut their eyes to all the evidences of it, as the ostrich hides his head in the sand so that he may not be convinced that the hunter is after him.

The greatest sin a Christian can commit—in the estimation of the priests—is to examine candidly the grounds of his faith, with a conscientious desire to know the truth. The saddest thing that can be said of human nature is, that so many people do not see the absurdity of priestly imposition.

J. P. RICHARDSON.

—Independent Pulpit.

THE EXISTENCE OF GOD.

(Concluded from page 293.)

THE "design argument" fails also when we examine it in the light of reason. The fundamental axiom of Theism is that the universe is finite. If this be so, the existence of God cannot be established. For the universe is finite, and from a finite we cannot deduce an "Infinite." If God exists, why did he create the universe? Why did the unchangeable God change his mind and become a "creator" six thousand years ago? If the existence of the universe was necessary, why was it created so recently? If it was unnecessary, why was it created at all? The creation of the universe either added to goodness or it did not. If it added to goodness, then God could not be all-good before he created it. If it did not add to goodness, then God could not be all-wise in creating that which did not add to goodness. The very manner in which the "design argument" is often stated clearly shows its fallacy. It is said that God "adapts means to an end." But this is a sign of weakness, not of power. Why do we use means to an end? The answer is, Because we cannot accomplish the end without the means. If we could, we would not be troubled with them. Will any Theist say this of God? If God be all-powerful, he could have realised his ends without the means. If this be so, where was the wisdom in employing them?

The metaphysical arguments in favor of Theism are almost as various as the minds of theologians. This fact alone is a sufficient reason for doubting their validity. It is argued that the universe is composed of parts; and as "composition is limitation," therefore the universe is limited in extent. It is further maintained that, if the universe be finite in extent, it must also be finite in duration, and therefore must have had a beginning, and, consequently, a "Creator." This argument, under the garb of logical precision, does nothing more than fill the ears with words for which the mind has no corresponding ideas. It proceeds upon the assumption that a finite mind can know the infinite. It also assumes that the mind can form an idea of infinite duration. The infinite, if it exist, cannot be an object of thought. A fundamental law of all thought is distinction. Whatever we think of we distinguish from ourselves. If this be true, the "Infinite" is beyond the sphere of human cognition. For, if we distinguish the "Infinite," we limit it, and it consequently ceases to exist.

The creation of the universe is unthinkable. Something originating out of nothing is beyond our grasping-power. If the universe was created out of something, then that something must have been material, else it could not give rise to a material existence like the universe. How could a spiritual God create a material universe? The more closely Theism is examined, the more difficult becomes its defence. Theism obliges us to believe that a deity existed everywhere before he created anywhere; that this deity eternally knew all things, which things only began to exist recently; that he occupied all space, and yet found room for the universe when he created it; that, being omnipotent, he can do all things, and that, being all-good, he can do no evil; that, being an intelligent existence, he possesses judgment, and that, being eternally all-wise, he does not require that faculty; that, being infinitely merciful, God must always forgive; and that, being infinitely just, he will always punish, and never forgive.

In conclusion, a philosophy the teachings of which this is a sample ought to be dismissed from men's minds as a rational solution of the material cosmos. The Atheist starts from the undeniable fact that the universe is. He believes that it is eternal in substance, varying in mode. He seeks to discover the laws of that nature of which he is a part. By investigating natural phenomena he knows that he will gain knowledge, the application of which to the affairs of life will make brighter, happier, and nobler men than all the inane speculations of theology, from St. Paul to Cardinal Newman, have succeeded in doing. Theism is chargeable with having darkened men's minds with the monstrous error that everything happens for the best. No statement could be more untrue or more dangerous. If God exists, the present condition of the world must be in accordance with his will; for, if he desired to alter it, nothing could withstand his omnipotence. It follows from this that every reformer who endeavors to change the unfair conditions of life is doing so in opposition to the will of the alleged deity. Every man who desires to clear the world of pain, misery, and crime gives the lie to the Theistic assertion that all things happen for the best. Though Atheism does not teach men to look beyond the skies for the abode of their future happiness, it takes their heaven from the clouds and places it in their midst, and says unto them: "The time to be happy is now, the place to be happy is here." Not believing in God, what has the Atheist to fear at death? Instead of making men fear death, Atheism gives men a courage that even annihilation cannot rob them of. Nothing is surer than that all human kind are visited by death. The only manly course, then, is to submit to the inevitable. Far better at death to be resolved into the various chemical elements of which we are composed, and to mingle with the rippling waters, the tinted flowers, and the golden sunshine, than to twang a harp in praise of a being who has created a hell for the vast majority of our brothers.

P. SHAUGHNESSY.

This is philosophy: to make remote things tangible, common things extensively useful, useful things extensively common, and to leave the least necessary for the last.—W. S. Landor.

Physics and metaphysics are the natural enemies of religion, and therefore she is the enemy of those sciences, always trying to suppress them, as they are ever trying to undermine her. It is ridiculous to talk of peace and concord between them; it is a bellum ad internecionem. Religions are children of ignorance, and do not long survive their mother.—Schopenhauer.

Digitized by Google

BIBLE FICTIONS.

II.—Abraham and Abimelech.

In Genesis xx. we have a story of Abraham denying his wife. According to his account, that patriarch came to live in Gerar, where Abimelech was king, and, fearing that men might slay him in order to take his beloved Sarah, he asked that lady to call him her brother, and he himself spoke of her as his sister. The result was that Abimelech, believing Sarah to be an unmarried woman, sent and had her brought into his house. Abraham's God, however, watched over her, and warned Abimelech that night in a dream that the woman he had taken was another man's wife, and commanded him to restore her to her husband. Fortunately for Abimelech, though the lovely Sarah was sleeping under his roof, he had not come near her, so no harm was done. In the morning the king sent for Abraham, and reproved him for his lying and deceit, whereupon the latter, to justify his conduct, said that Sarah was his half-sister. Abimelech then, after restoring the wife, presented Abraham with sheep, oxen, men-servants, maid-servants, and a thousand pieces of silver.

Now, this occurrence is stated to have taken place after "the Lord" had promised a son to Abraham, on which occasion Sarah was ninety years of age (Genesis xvii. 17). Yet the writer of this veracious history represents this woman of ninety as so attractive in appearance that men who saw her were likely to be ensnared by her beauty, and he actually makes a king place her in his harem.

But we have not yet got to the end of the story. After receiving Abimelech's presents, Abraham, it is said, "prayed unto God, and God healed Abimelech and his wife and his maid-servants, and they bare children" (xx. 17). From this we are to understand that up to that time all the women-folk of Abimelech's household had been barren, and that Abraham, in gratitude for the return of his wife and the king's substantial gifts, prayed for the removal of this barrenness. The next verse, however, damns the whole story. Abraham prayed for the women of Abimelech's household, we are told, because "the Lord had fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech because of Sarah, Abraham's wife" (xx. 18). Now, Sarah was only in Abimelech's house for one night, and was restored to her husband the next morning. Yet in these few hours all the women of Abimelech's house are represented as having become barren. It would seem that the writer of this narrative thought that women were in the habit of giving birth to children every hour, and that Sarah's coming into the house caused these interesting labors to cease. The inspired writer does not appear to have had the sense of a child. The writer also, it would seem, saw no injustice in punishing the females of Abimelech's house for what happened through Abraham's own falsehood.

The whole story, then, amounts to this: That in a country and climate where women reach maturity at an early age, and appear old and faded at middle age, the King of Gerar, who, if he desired another wife, had only to choose from amongst the most comely young women in his kingdom, was fascinated by the charms of a wrinkled old woman of ninety, and so sent and took her away from her so-called brother. The story was probably invented in order to show that the Jewish God protected Abraham in all his acts, however foolish or insane.

The conduct of Abraham in this affair does not, however, come out well. Both he and his wife knew perfectly well for what purpose Sarah was wanted; yet he allowed her to be conducted to Abimelech's house without speaking a single word to prevent what seemed certain dishonor. Sarah, too, does not appear to have been much concerned. She could not know that the king would keep aloof from her, or that he should be warned concerning her in a dream. She herself gave him no intimation that she was another man's wife. The author of the story evidently gave no thought to these matters. To him all was well that ended well.

Shortly after this occurrence Sarah gave birth to a son, and the day upon which the child was weaned was celebrated by a feast. Just after this feast, we are told, Abimelech came to Abraham to make a covenant with him. "And it came to pass at that time that Abimelech and Phicol, the captain of his host, spake unto Abraham saying, God is with thee in all that thou doest: now, therefore, swear unto me by God that thou wilt not deal falsely with me . . . . . but according to the kindness that I have done unto thee. . . . . And Abraham said, I will swear . . . . . and they two made a covenant" (Genesis xxi. 22–27). Thus, instead of Abraham, who was a stranger in a strange land (inhabited by a fierce and warlike people), being in need of the protection of Abimelech, the writer represents the latter as believing that his welfare and prosperity were dependent upon his being on friendly terms with Abraham.

Time went on, and Abraham's son Isaac grew to manhood. When forty years of age, Isaac became the husband of Rebekah, and when he reached sixty his two sons, Esau and Jacob, were born (Genesis xxv. 20–26). In process of time these sons also grew to manhood, and shortly after the affair of the birth-right an event happened which is thus recorded: "And there was a famine in the land . . . . . and Isaac went unto Abimelech, king of the Philistines, unto Gerar. . . . . And Isaac dwelt in Gerar: and the men of the place asked him of his wife; and he said, She is my sister; for he feared to say 'My wife,' lest, he said, the men of the place should kill me for Rebekah: because she was fair to look upon" (Genesis xxvi. 1–7).

In this case Abimelech did not take Rebekah into his house, as he discovered in time that she was Isaac's wife. But he sent for her husband, and rebuked him in the same way as he did Abraham some ninety years before. Rebekah at this time had been a wife for half a century or more, and must have reached the allotted age of three-score and ten. There was, therefore, no occasion for fear that men who saw her might fall in love with her. But, as must be obvious to all, this story was suggested to the writer by that of Abraham's denial of his wife in the same place. The writer varies the narrative a little, that is all.

Thus, if we believe the inspired writers, Abraham, when at Gerar, called his ninety-years-old wife his sister because he feared her beauty might endanger his life. Nearly a century later his son Isaac visited the same place and did the same thing. Both were reproved for their falsehood by the same king, Abimelech, who thus enjoyed an extraordinarily long reign. Of course, Christian commentators and apologists tell us that there were two Abimelechs, one probably the son or grandson of the other. This, however, according to the Bible narrative, was not the case. The author of the history of Isaac copied not only the story of Abraham's denial of his wife, but also that of Abimelech making a covenant with that patriarch.

Says this veracious writer: "Then Abimelech went to him [i.e., Isaac] from Gerar, and Ahuzzath his friend, and Phicol, the captain of his host. . . . . And they said, We saw plainly that the Lord was with thee. . . . . Let there be now an oath betwixt us. . . . . and let us make a covenant with thee; that thou wilt do us no hurt, as we have not touched thee, and as we have done unto thee nothing but good. . . . . And he made them a feast, and they did eat and drink. And they rose up betimes in the morning, and sware one to another" (Genesis xxvi. 26–31).

There cannot be the smallest doubt that this event in the "history" of Isaac was taken from that already noticed in the life of Abraham, or vice versa. In both accounts Abimelech, king of Gerar, comes of his own accord to make a covenant. His reason for doing so is the same in both cases—"God is with thee in all that thou doest," "We saw plainly that the Lord was with thee." Abimelech is on both occasions accompanied by the same man—Phicol, the captain of his army. That there was nearly a century between the time of Abimelech's covenant with Abraham and that of his league with Isaac did not apparently occur to the writer of the second story, or, if it did, the fact did not trouble him. People were not critical in those days; they readily believed anything—as many Christians do now. In this narrative, as in that relating to Jacob, it will, I think, be admitted, we have had to do, not with history, but fable.

Veritas.

Tommy—"Paw, is worms worth more than sparrows?" Paw—"I guess not. Why?" Tommy—"Then what makes the Sunday-school teacher tell us that man was worth more than a hundred sparrows, and the preacher tell us that we was nothing but worms?"

Digitized by Google

VANINI IN ENGLAND.

THOUGH decidedly inferior to Giordano Bruno, Giulio Cesare Vanini resembles that great hero and martyr in representing the spirit of revolt against Christian theology, in the wandering life he led, and in his tragic martyrdom. Their lives and deaths alike display the attitude of the Church to Freethought. Born at Taurisano, South-Eastern Italy, in 1585, he attended the University of Naples, and took a doctor's degree in 1606. Philosophy and the physical sciences were his favorite studies, and he acknowledged as his masters Baconthorpe and Pomponazzi, probably coming under the influence of these philosophers at Padua, where he graduated in theology. He became a Carmelite friar, but, like Bruno, soon outgrew the cloister, and entered on a wandering life, visiting Switzerland, France, Holland, and Germany. Father Garasse* declared Vanini set out to convert the world to Atheism. But this is pure nonsense. He returned to Italy in 1611, but the Inquisition was on his track, and he took refuge at Venice, whence he came to England with a friend and an introduction from our Ambassador, Sir Dudley Carleton, to Archbishop Abbot, as two Carmelite friars, whom, he understood, wished to be Protestants.

The visit of Vanini to England, mentioned in Vanini's works, was in 1878 elucidated by Signor Raffaele Palumbo† from State papers in our Record Office. Mr. Richard Copley Christie, whose work on Etienne Dolet, the Martyr of the Renaissance, is the standard biography of that great Freethinker, in the current number of the English Historical Review gives a fuller account of Vanini's English visit, from the correspondence between Sir Dudley Carleton and John Chamberlain, found in the Court and Times of James I., and the correspondence of Archbishop Abbot.‡ It appears that Vanini and his friend were induced to publicly abjure Catholicism, and they were received into the Reformed Italian Church in the chapels of Mercers' Hall on July 5, 1612. The proceedings made some stir, and we may be sure were very distasteful to the authorities at Rome. Their movements were henceforth carefully watched. Vanini at first was located at Lambeth Palace, while his friend, Giovanni Maria de Franchis, was sent to York. Like Bruno, who visited England twenty-eight years previously, Vanini visited Oxford. Mr. Christie surmises that, had he obtained a benefice instead of perishing at the stake at Toulouse "he might have lived and died a member of the Church of England"! But he soon outgrew his welcome. The narrow-minded Archbishop discovered that Vanini read Aretin and Macchiavelli, and was considerably scandalised thereby. Both considered themselves deceived. Vanini discovered that the freedom he expected was not to be had in the Church of England. It was in the very year of his visit that Bartholomew Legate was burnt at Smithfield, and Edward Wightman at Lichfield, for anti-Trinitarianism. Vanini was kept an entire dependent, in very straitened circumstances. Small wonder if he desired to return, and accepted the offer of Catholics to obtain his pardon from Rome; and it was said of him, "The dog has returned to his vomit." The Archbishop not only withdrew his protection, but proceeded to deal with him after the methods of the English Inquisition, the Court of High Commission, in which Abbot presided, ex officio.

He was imprisoned in the Gatehouse at Lambeth for a fortnight, and then brought before the Ecclesiastical Commission. There he was censured, excommunicated, and sentenced to imprisonment during the King's pleasure; and the help of the temporal sword was implored "that he might be banished to the Bermudas, there to dig for his living." Fortunately for Vanini, or perhaps unfortunately, for the Bermudas might have been better than the flames at Toulouse, he made his escape, probably through the good offices of Morari, chaplain to the Venice Ambassador.

Mr. Christie says: "He was certainly disappointed with the result of his visit to England, but in neither of his printed works is there an unfriendly word relating to this country, or to those with whom he came in contact here. On the few occasions that he mentions England in his writings it is always with goodwill, and sometimes with admiration. . . . Even when he speaks of his imprisonment he utters no word of complaint." Vanini went from England to France, where he published the works which drew attention to his heresy, and led to his martyrdom at Toulouse in his thirty-fourth year.

J. M. W.

(To be concluded.)

* In La Doctrine Curieuse, 1623.

† Giulio Cesare Vanini e i suoi Tempi. Napoli, 1878. My copy is inscribed: "To Charles Bradlaugh, with the author's kind regards."

‡ Nineteen letters in the Record Office refer to Vanini's visit, of which Signor Palumbo only refers to ten.

WHERE IS GOD?

WHEN early man, impelled by fate,
Pursued his kind with savage hate,
Made slaves of some, and others ate,
Where wert thou, O God?

When devastating robber bands
Invaded peaceful, fruitful lands,
And steeped in blood their ruthless hands,
Where wert thou, O God?

When priests and kings and other knaves
Made human minds and bodies slaves,
And gloated o'er their victims' graves,
Where wert thou, O God?

When humbugs quote from lying books
By Moses and by other "crooks,"
And trade on fools' belief in spooks,
Where art thou, O God?

When pious preachers loudly yell
Of endless fires and tortures fell,
And frighten feeble folk with hell,
Where art thou, O God?

When British bullies send their might
To foreign lands to steal and fight,
And make their strength their only right,
Where art thou, O God?

When starving children vainly cry
Beneath a helpless mother's eye;
When foodless sparrows fall and die,
Where art thou, O God?

Though smiling fields and flow'rs are bright,
And sunlit eyes express delight,
If one poor wretch has lost his sight,
Where art thou, O God?

Though hills and dales are decked in spring,
And sighing woods prepare to sing,
If pain has reached one living thing,
Where art thou, O God?

When feathered songsters eat their fill
And voice their joy with silv'ry trill,
We ask, in name of those they kill,
Where art thou, O God?

G. L. MACKENZIE.

Obituary.

IT is my painful duty to record the death of an old Bilston Freethinker, Charles Prince, who died on May 8, and was interred in Bilston Cemetery on May 11, in his 68th year. Knowing some days before of his certain death, he calmly awaited its arrival. Asked if he was afraid to die, he smilingly answered: "No, I have lived a man." The Secular Burial Service was well read by Mr. A. Holland. It caused two gentlemen to ask me for information about a party owning such a Service.—S. WALKER.

IT is with deep sorrow that I record the death on Wednesday, the 8th inst., of my little son, Harold Ingersoll, at the age of one year and four months. The funeral, which took place on Saturday last, was attended, at my request, by Mr. C. Cohen, who delivered at the graveside an address remarkable for its quiet and unaffected eloquence.—W. PAYNE (Manchester).

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Dr. R. F. Horton is one of the big wigs of Nonconformity in London. He preaches at Hampstead to what we understand is a well-to-do congregation; and of course he preaches without any liability to correction. In the course of his sermon on Sunday, May 5, he delivered himself as follows: "The love of money is the cause of Atheism. Atheism has never been accepted as a creed except in great wealthy societies, where men have allowed the love of money to be the rule of life—accepting it as a motive, praising it as a virtue. It is the love of money in England to-day which feeds all the unbelief."

Dr. Horton deserves a medal for this discovery. We see it all now. Wright and Hobbs and Jabez Balfour, and that sort of people, are Atheists. They would have been members of the National Secular Society, only they joined the Church by mistake. On the other hand, the poor men who labor at Freethought propaganda are really Christians, only they have somehow got on the wrong label. We thank Dr. Horton for this luminous explanation. Yes, it is all clear now.

God is no respecter of persons, and Providence is no respecter of buildings. The beautiful chapel attached to All Hallowes College, near Dublin, has just been completely destroyed by fire. The city fire brigade fought against the flames, but Providence was too many for them. The chapel's days were numbered, and it had to go. In future it would save fire brigades some trouble if Providence would furnish a list of places it is absolutely bent on destroying.

"General" Booth appeared at the annual May meeting of the Salvation Army and held forth on his Social Scheme, which he grandiloquently called "the most gigantic success of any voluntary beneficent scheme that had ever been propounded to the British public." There was no more likelihood of his Social Scheme stopping than there was of the Bank of England. Still, we guess the Bank of England won't stop first.

The great boss and the little bosses of the Salvation Army don't explain why they are so persistently accused of "sweating." Booth says it is the fundamental principle of his Social Scheme that those it is designed to benefit should earn the larger part of the cost of their own regeneration. But it is alleged that the Army often makes an unfair profit out of the labor of men in its Shelters; that they are kept working long hours for common food, poor accommodation, and the veriest trifle of pocket money. This allegation, of course, may be perfectly untrue; but, considering the frequency with which it is made, it deserves some other answer than absolute silence.

Robert Westguard, a painter, gives, in London for May 9, his experience at Booth's Farm Colony. He says: "I was there sixteen weeks, and worked for a fortnight for no wages at all. Then I received a grant of 1s. 6d. per week; two weeks after that I had my grant raised to 2s. per week; six weeks after this my grant was raised again to 2s. 6d. per week, and of this sum I received one-third in cash weekly, the other being placed to my account. I think this proves that I am not a lazy man. If I had worked for a man outside, I should have earned about £20; but at Hadleigh Colony I only earned £1 10s., and out of that I had to pay 1d. weekly out of every shilling I earned; for washing and for soap ½d. per week, whether I got the soap or not, and for the sixteen weeks I was there I only received 2½d. worth of soap, and 1½d. worth of blacking, although I was stopped a ½d. each week for the sixteen weeks."

All this time the Guardians of Camberwell were paying Booth 5s. a week for him. Thus Booth had £4 down, out of which he paid less than £1 10s., getting for it £20 worth of work. William Booth is as much entitled to the designation, Napoleon of Finance, as Jabez Balfour.

This farm colonist also complains that he had to sleep in a dirty bed, and was compelled to leave through vermin. And this is the scheme that was to redeem darkest England. It looks more like a contrivance to further exploit the workers for the benefit of Booth.

The dangers of Spiritualistic séances to weak-minded people have been shown by a sad occurrence at Gubbio, in Italy. A lady named Manolava, the wife of a professor in a public school in the town, was persuaded that she could, by attending a séance, communicate with the spirit of her deceased son. The "medium" made certain preparations, and when the moment came for the spirit to appear flames and sulphurous fumes were seen issuing from a black cabinet. The lady felt so persuaded that her son was suffering for his sins in the lower regions that she became stark, staring mad, and it is thought she will not recover. The medium is to be prosecuted.—Daily News (May 10).

The Hindoos of Poona have petitioned the Government against the prohibition of music in the streets of that city after certain hours. Noticing the immunity of the Salvation Army, they say that theirs is religious music, and ordinary rules should not apply to them.

Mrs. Besant, like Mr. Judge, has a Mahatma of her own, called "Master Morya." A gentleman writes to the Westminster Gazette from Dublin, under the appropriate signature of "Fudge," stating that "Morya" is an Irish word, meaning something like "Tell that to the marines."

The Rangoon Times appears to be a very liberal paper. It inserts freethinking articles on such subjects as Christianity in Japan, the Revolt of Christian Karens in Burmah, Religious Revivals, Religious Lunacy, etc., and it even copies from our paper—it says "from a London weekly"—some lines on Mrs. Besant's transformations, entitled "Transmigration Up to Date."

One writer in the Rangoon Times calls attention to the fact that the pastor of one church could get no congregation because the curate's wife organised a picnic to a pagoda to witness the heathen festivities of a Burmese feast.

Another writer, commenting on this, says: "Why, Mr. Editor, on a certain Friday in Advent, the very Venerable Archdeacon Chard himself was among the audience at the Assembly Rooms to witness the high kicking and listen to the comic song-singing of the Snow White Minstrels. This, doubtless, was the lady's precedent."

Yet another writer in the Rangoon Times declares "that the Church of England clergy will not sit at the same table with Eurasians. The natives they cherish; they are our 'brothers.' It is the poor Cousins whom they will not see as fellow men. Why not? Because they themselves would lose caste with the high and mighty few who, under no circumstances whatever, would associate with Eurasians though these few have, as regards their men, no objection to keeping up the supply of that much-abused community."

The Rev. H. T. Biscoe, rector of Great Greenford, Middlesex, has been charged at the Brentford Police-court with having appropriated to his own use £493, being charity money of which he was trustee. The money was left by Mr. S. Bennett, of Ealing, in 1856, and invested in consols, the dividends of which were to be distributed every Christmas among twelve poor families. It is alleged that Parson Biscoe, who became sole trustee in 1892, regarded himself as twelve poor families rolled into one, and sold the stock and paid the proceeds into his own bank account, which is now overdrawn. Prisoner was undefended, but the case was adjourned, as the prosecutor on behalf of the Treasury stated that other charges might be preferred. The case will be tried at the June Sessions at the Central Criminal Court.

The Rev. Dr. A. G. McAuley, Presbyterian pastor at Philadelphia for forty-one years, has been proved to have been living a double life, visiting resorts of an unsavory character in disguise.

At the Liverpool Assizes William Browne, described as a Baptist minister, was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude for bigamy. Browne pleaded guilty to two charges. In one case prisoner married a Miss Marchant at Acton, on the representation that he was a clergyman of the Church of England. She had £500, with which they went to New York, where prisoner abandoned her, taking the bulk of the money. She had since become insane in consequence.

The Rev. H. G. B. Lemoine has been committed to prison, in default of bail, on a charge of obtaining fish and game under false pretences from dealers at Norwich.

The girl Emma Hall, who belonged to Birmingham, and disappeared in company with the Rev. Jonathan Bell of the Blackheath district, Worcestershire, has come to a mysterious death, and the persons arrested in connection therewith have a number of letters signed "Jon."

The Rockford court has given judgment against Christ Schweinfurth in favor of G. W. Coudrey, who pursued the prophet and imitator of Jesus for alienation of his wife's affections. No defence was made, the reason given being, "Christians should not defend the attacks of men, but should go like the lamb to the slaughter." This, without doubt, will be followed by a long term of imprisonment, and the probable closing of the Rockford religious harem forever.

Digitized by Google

Converting the Jews appears to be a very good line of business. We believe there are several Societies on the job. One of them held its annual meeting on Monday evening. Its name is the Barbican Mission to the Jews, and its secretary is Mr. Christlieb T. Lipshytz. Its income was reported to have increased, and there was much blowing of trumpets by Archdeacon Sinclair, who presided, and who made the funny observation that "Jews already went two-thirds of the way with Christians." But what we do not see anything about in the report is the number of converts. The money is spent, the secretary is satisfied, the trumpets are blown, but where are the converted Jews?

The Church claims that its opposition to divorce is all on account of its protégés, the women. But, despite the difficulty of having to prove cruelty as well as adultery, the majority of cases for divorce are brought by women; and in America, where divorce is easier, 65·8 per cent. of all the divorces in the United States during twenty years were asked for by women who found their husbands unendurable. Thus women's interests appear to lie in the direction of easier, freer divorce. If the Church really holds otherwise, let the women themselves have a voice in the matter.

The Rev. Mr. Matley, a Brooklyn Baptist, is reported as asking: "Did you ever read in the Bible of a woman being in heaven?" Certainly the angels were all males. But Mr. Matley must have forgotten Rev. xii. 1: "There appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman clothed with the sun." She must have been a mighty woman, and warmly clad. Yet we grant that, according to the account, the appearance of this solitary big woman was a great wonder.

Mr. Matley went on to say: "I don't believe there is a woman there now, or ever shall be. They will go back into their original state, whence they were taken by the Creator. When Christ said that there were no marriages in heaven, but that all should be as the angels, I believe he meant that there were no such creatures as women in that world of blessedness and song. Women are made for the glory of man, and man for the glory of God." Mr. Matley seems to suppose that women will all become spare ribs again. His heaven crowded with male murderers and no women must be a delightful place.

An Australian poet, who has been pondering the proceedings of Providence, bursts out as under:—

> God moves in a mysterious way,
> His wonders none can tell;
> Sometimes he makes a silent move,
> Sometimes he raises hell.

The Lord has been again riding on a storm in South Dakota, with the result of destroying three schools, at each of which a number of children were killed and injured. Two of the children, just as they left the school-house, were caught by the wind and dashed with such violence against a wire fence that they were killed on the spot. Fifty-two persons are now known to have been killed in Iowa alone, and the loss of life is estimated by some to be far greater.

Thirteen hundred Japanese were swept off by the outbreak of cholera at the Pescadores Islands. "His tender mercies are over all his works."

The Puritans have long quoted against fashionable ladies the text in that dirty old prophet, Ezekiel, xiii. 18: "Thus saith the Lord, woe to the women that sew pillows to all armholes." Ladies, however, do not sew their own sleeves, and they are as wide as ever. They are not new, however, and in 1639 the authorities of the town of Dedham, Massachusetts, enacted that no one should wear sleeves more than half an ell in the widest part.

The Rev. Father Stick, of Pana, Illinois, is reported as saying: "There are members of my congregation who allow their daughters to go to high-toned balls and dance in full dress—no dress at all. Only indecent Roman Catholics, Protestants, and heretics go to such places. . . . . I wish from the bottom of my heart that the girls who attend these places may be ruined. I hope that every boy and man who attends them will become diseased and rot, and that the generation will soon be exterminated." Who says the pulpit has lost its vigor, the old serpent its venom?

A Fort Worth telegram says that Moody's congregation were singing "All hail the power of Jesu's name!" when the roof crashed down upon them. They had prayed for rain, and were rejoicing over its coming. Only one woman is dead so far as the result of the accident, but a large number are seriously injured.

Mr. Symes wants to know why the Jews do not unite with Freethinkers in the work of exposing Christian superstition. He says: "The Jews do not need to be told that they never got the least justice from Christians so long as Christians could refuse it. No, nor will their brethren in Russia and other lands. It is impossible for a Christian to grant justice to an opponent. It must be wrung out of him. And the Jews in free countries are very remiss in their duty not to help to break up the horrible superstition which persecutes their race wherever that is possible. The only cure for persecution is the exposure of religion and the destruction of its social and political power. True, many Jews are as superstitious as their neighbors; and thousands who are as free from superstition as I am keep up the form of religion and fall in with the old senseless practices, just as if they believed in them. How is it enlightened Jews fail to see that by keeping up their old superstitions they encourage Christians to continue theirs? If they properly respected their own race, they would openly renounce all superstition, make war upon the monster that persecutes and insults them, and help to destroy all persecution by destroying the root of it—religion."

In Light Mr. Arthur Lillie really does throw light on the proceedings of the Luciferans of France by showing that it represents a remnant of Manicheism. The parody of Catholic rites he compares to the "Feast of Fools," which in the old days was carried on even with episcopal sanction.

Count Paul von Hoensbronck, the Prussian Jesuit, who has been converted to Lutheranism, writes in the Preussische Jahrbücher, of Berlin, to show that Catholicism is unable to stem the tide against Socialism and Atheistic Liberalism. He points to Belgium, "the land of cloister and the clergy," as an instance that where Catholicism has had most play there the forces of social revolution are also most rampant.

Colonel Olcott, in the current Theosophist, unequivocally gives up, not only the infallibility, but the credibility, of "H. P. B." He says that it is a "monstrous pretence" to say that she was "the transmitter of only genuine messages from the Masters." On the contrary, she was "as human and fallible as either one of us." Of course, he goes on to say, "it does not follow that H. P. B. consciously falsified." Such a statement might involve Colonel Olcott himself in a graver charge than that of credulity. He falls back on "evil influences" and "hypnotic science." For Theosophists to write like this of H. P. B. is like Christians admitting the charge of the Jews, that Jesus had a devil.

An evangelist was at Hucknall Torkard on a mission. He came from London. Speaking at an open-air meeting, he said he had been on the road to heaven for twenty years. A voice was heard to say: "Good God! and only got as far as Hucknall!"

According to the Glasgow Weekly Herald (May 11), the mind of the Free Presbytery of Inverness is sorely exercised by a relapse into Paganism which is apparent within their bounds. Last Sunday—the first Sunday of May—three thousand persons visited a well on Culloden field, threw a coin into the water, took a drink, and then hung a bit of rag to a tree!

The writer of "Chit Chat," in the same paper, says: "A London correspondent tells me that a Scotch divine, who is up for the 'May meetings,' having got tired of what Macaulay named the 'bray' of Exeter Hall, turned into the Empire Theatre one night about half-past ten, and, whilst walking in the swell promenade, stumbled against his ruling elder. After the first shock of embarrassment, the minister said: 'It's no' for the sake o' the entertainment I've come, or to look at the women, but just to see what this Chant business really means.' 'That's exactly my case,' replied the elder. They adjourned to Gatti's, and were mutually sympathetic on the way."

Sabbath desecration has extended as far north as the Granite City, and the Aberdeen Evening Gazette gives a cut representing the astonishment of the Links overseer at an enthusiastic golfer daring to play on Sunday.

Joseph Canning, who murdered Jane Youall in Bermondsey, in his statement made in the dock said: "God is good and merciful, and perhaps I will meet her in the next world, and may the Lord in heaven have mercy on her soul."

The blackguard who uttered that filthy libel on the London Hall of Science, for which the printer and publisher have had to pay damages and costs amounting to £250—of which he has not paid a single halfpenny—is circulating a leaflet which states that he has "heard and read much of Atheistic boulasat, and their challenges to Almighty God to strike them dead in a given time." This, of course, is another lie. The fellow has never read any such "challenges" in his life. It is really not a case of bad memory; the fellow is simply an unscrupulous liar.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, May 19, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London, E.C.: 7.30, "Riddles of the Sphinx."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—May 19, Camberwell; 26, Manchester.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

A. Dempster (Glasgow).—The man is an inveterate and reckless liar. It is utterly untrue that he asked Mr. Foote what was the origin of life, and that Mr. Foote said it probably came from some other planet. Mr. Foote has always declared that this idea, which was mooted by a well-known scientist, only puts the problem a step further back.

A. Adams (Hull).—Lecture notices should be addressed to the editor.

Albert Broadbent, 9 Peter-street, Manchester, will send our readers vegetarian recipes and literature upon application.

T. G. (Carlisle).—Mr. Forder will attend to your letter. It is annoying, and often disgusting, to see how certain newsagents try to damn the circulation of the Freethinker. At one time they objected to our illustrations. We have not printed any for several months, yet they still do us every possible injury. It is nonsense to say they cannot obtain it. What they mean is that they won't supply it. Customers who are treated in this way should change their newsagents. What right has a paltry little ignorant tradesman to set up as a censor of the press? If he does so, he should (if possible) be taught a salutary lesson, in the only way that reaches his feelings.

A. J. Marriott.—Duly to hand. We note your instruction, and thank you for your expression of confidence.

J. F.—We have not printed a list of applications for shares. It would have taken too much of our space. We saw your name in the secretary's list, and were glad to observe it there. Mr. Foote will write to you shortly.

F. Jones.—Pleased to learn that you were so delighted with Mr. Putnam's lecture at Camberwell, and that you thought it worth double the cost of your journey of seventy miles to hear him. We note your reference to a certain enterprise. It is easy to do nothing successfully.

T. E. M.—Canon Wilberforce's Trinity of Evil is not a new book. We criticised it on its first appearance, several years ago. It is hardly worth a second criticism.

E. T. B.—Thanks for your offer to take up five shares if the effort is successful.

Dublin friends, or others who happen to be visiting that city, can obtain the Freethinker and other Secular literature at Mrs. Kavanagh's, 1 Cottage-place, Belvedere-avenue, North Circular-road.

P. Kavanagh.—Glad to hear from you again, and hope your prospects will soon improve. If all did their fair share, our movement would make more headway.

G. Dixon.—Kindly fill in an application form, which you will find in our advertisement columns, for the two shares you will take.

Recruit.—Thanks for cuttings. No one knows who was the Pharaoh of the Exodus. Assertions on this point are all guesswork. Egyptian records do not corroborate any part of the Exodus story. There is really no historical trace of the Jews, as a separate people, ever inhabiting any part of the Nile valley.

T. Clark.—There is no Branch near South Streatham. Certainly there should be one at Croydon. Mr. Foote will soon make an important announcement concerning the whole matter of propaganda. Thanks for your appreciation and good wishes. The verses shall appear.

H. Fleming would like to know if there are any Freethinkers in Barnstaple, North Devon; if so, will they communicate with him at 23 Alsen-road, Holloway, London, N.?

W. Payne.—All communications for the Freethinker should be sent to Mr. Foote, not to Mr. Forder. There is no charge for such insertions. We much regret to hear of your loss.

J. G. Bartram.—We do not see that the corrections amount to much. Still, we note what you say as to the Newcastle rumpus—namely, (1) that Mr. Cohen had not the larger meeting, but it was rapidly increasing by desertions from the other side; (2) that it was not the libeller who made the whip up, but his satellites, who pressed him to come.—Thanks for the leaflet. We have seen it before. The fellow has not a gleam of humor. He even lies with solemnity.

J. G. Dobson.—Your letter is melancholy reading. Glad to see, however, that you retain all your old interest in the movement. We note your promise to take two more shares on the same conditions as the South Shields Branch.

W. J. Heath.—We never saw or heard of the pamphlet you mention. Those who have read Mrs. Bonner's "Life" of her father, and the Hall of Science Libel case, will naturally disbelieve anything that W. R. Bradlaugh says about his dead brother. In any case, we are unable to say what it has to do with Robert Cooper's pamphlet on the Soul. Arguments are independent of personalities. They stand or fall on grounds of fact and reason.

A. French.—The article on "The Inimitable" in the Secularist was not written by James Thomson, but by another regular contributor, whose name cannot be mentioned without his consent. The writer is still living.

Papers Received.—Vegetarian Messenger—Liberty—Solidarity—Light—Progressive Thinker—Land and Labor—Freidenker—World's Advance Thought—Der Arme Teufel—Two Worlds—Rangoon Times—Homœopathic Review—Homœopathic World—Newcastle Daily Leader—Pearson's Weekly—Public Opinion—Church Monthly—St. George's Parish Magazine—Ironclad Age—Isle of Man Times—Liverpool Weekly Post——Twentieth Century—London—Echo—Secular Thought—Las Dominicales del Libre Pensamiento—Truthseeker—Boston Investigator—Open Court.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE.

I am writing this on Wednesday morning, in a brief time snatched from other business; and in an hour or so I shall be off to Derby to debate with Mr. W. T. Lee.

The sudden hot weather, on the top of too much work and anxiety, has somewhat impaired my general elasticity of mind and body; and I take this as a warning that I had better be careful for a few days. I shall therefore leave what I have to say about the history of this Hall of Science affair until next week. There is really no desperate hurry, and I want to be perfectly accurate.

Mr. R. O. Smith's answer to my further query, whether he would extend the time of his offer to the end of May, reached me this morning. "I adhere," he says, "to the terms of my last letter published by you in the Freethinker." I think I know what Mr. Smith has in his mind, and I will deal with the situation accordingly.

Meanwhile I have to thank the few friends who have applied for fresh shares during the past week. Mr. S. Seal, who early sent me a cheque for thirty shares, writes that he will increase the number to one hundred if the full amount can be made up. Mr. George Anderson, who has been waiting to see what the party in general were prepared to do, writes that he is not inclined to assist unless there is a complete revolution in our policy at the Hall. "If the management," he says, "were in your own hands, you employing your assistants, I would be inclined to help, but under committee management I fear it is too cumbersome." With regard to this, I may say that it is my intention to take all power and responsibility—at least for a considerable time—or else to have nothing to do with the enterprise; and I intend to pursue this policy whether we settle down at the Hall of Science or have to go elsewhere.

I have received the following fresh subscriptions: J. Hayes, 1s.; Dundee Friend, per C. Watts, 10s.; J. Hume 2s. 6d.; J. Close, 2s. 6d.; T. E. M., 1s.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote is overwhelmed with other work, and is unable to write his usual article for this week's Freethinker. Fortunately there is a good supply of interesting matter from other pens.

Mr. Foote lectures this evening (May 19) at the London Hall of Science, from which he has been absent for some time, except on the occasion of his taking the chair for Mr. Putnam. His subject will be "Riddles of the Sphinx." After the lecture Mr. Foote will have something to say of great importance to London Secularists.

Mr. Charles Watts has held another four nights' debate with Dr. Jamieson at Glasgow. We hear that the Christians became fewer at each meeting, which is a poor compliment to their champion, who seems to have more self-conceit than capacity. Mr. J. P. Gilmour sends us a long report of this debate, but it did not arrive until our arrangements for this week's Freethinker were completed. It will appear in our next issue. Mr. Watts lectures this evening (May 19) at Camberwell.

Mr. Touzeau Parris, who has for some time been absent from the platform through illness, lectured at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening. There was an excellent audience for the time of the year, and Mr. Parris delivered a fine discourse, which was much applauded.

Mr. S. P. Putnam, our American visitor, lectured on Sunday evening at Camberwell. Mr. R. Forder presided, and there was a large attendance. Of course the lecturer had an enthusiastic reception. He was opposed by the Rev. C. L. Engstrom, secretary of the Christian Evidence Society. Mr. Putnam lectures three times to-day (May 19) at Bradford, in the Oddfellows' Hall, Thornton-road. We hope there will be a strong rally of Leeds, Huddersfield, Halifax, and Bingley friends on this occasion.

The Rev. C. Lloyd Engstrom, secretary of the Christian Evidence Society, was present at Mr. Putnam's lecture at the Hall of Science. He did not, however, offer any opposition; and he appears to have been under the impression that Mr. Foote "deprecated" discussion. Mr. Engstrom has just sent us a long letter in reply to Mr. Putnam. We are unable to find room for it this week, but it will appear in full in our next issue. Mr. Engstrom is going to reprint the letter in pamphlet form, and distribute it in places visited by leading Freethought lecturers. We are glad to hear it.

Our friends in London have prosecuted certain nasty Christians for an extremely nasty libel, and won, the defendants being fined £30 and costs. The latter will amount to over £250, it appears. Christians are extremely nasty and violent just now in England. Probably they have received a fresh assignment of Holy Ghost—the genuine, fiery, furious article. Just as the Catholics cover Luther and Co. with loads of their own filth, so do the Christians endeavor to cover Freethinkers with their garbage. My own experience tells me that nothing can beat a genuine Christian for nastiness and undiluted spite. I have the right to say that—a right arising from over eighteen years' experience—an experience that must have been bitter indeed if my own nature and employments had not made me more than oblivious to most of it. A man who is going to attack the popular superstition needs to be of a philosophic turn of mind, and of a capacity to enjoy life in spite of its awful drawbacks. We congratulate our friends on their victory.—Liberator.

We publish in another column the business Agenda of the National Secular Society's annual Conference, which takes place at Bristol on Whit-Sunday. A special item, which is not included, is the letter which Mr. S. P. Putnam will read from Colonel Ingersoll. This will be taken at some stage of the proceedings, where it will be most refreshing. A Conference gets jaded occasionally, and at such a moment a message from Ingersoll will be like an Atlantic breeze blowing in upon a crowded assembly.

Mr. Foote has put nothing upon the Agenda himself this year. Should he be re-elected as President, he will take the opportunity of having a straight talk on some matters of considerable interest to the movement, which have been occupying a good deal of his attention.

We hope the N.S.S. Branches will all do their best to be represented at this Conference. Mr. J. P. Gilmour is coming all the way from Glasgow to represent the premier Scottish Branch of our Society, and this should put the English Branches upon their mettle. Individual members will also be very welcome at the Conference. We should like to see two or three hundred, at least. They are just as much entitled as delegates to take part in the discussions. The difference between an individual member and a delegate comes in only on the question of voting. A delegate, of course, votes for all the members in his Branch.

Branches that positively cannot send delegates are at liberty to entrust their votes to any member of the Society in whom they have confidence. The President does not hold any proxies, but other persons are available. Mr. Charles Watts will attend the Conference. We understand, also, that Messrs. A. B. Moss, W. Heaford, and C. Cohen will be present. There is some doubt about Mr. Touzeau Parris. He has not yet fully recovered from a severe illness, and the sight of one of his eyes is still affected.

The Manchester Branch commences its open-air propaganda in Stevenson-square this afternoon at 3 o'clock, when Mr. C. Cohen will lecture on "Why are Men Religious?" The local Branch of the C.E.S. has recently occupied the Square on Sunday afternoons, and it is requested that as many of our friends as possible will make it convenient to attend. Mr. Cohen will lecture in the hall morning and evening.

The German Parliament has thrown out the Government Coercion Bill, one clause of which provided that any person who attacked "religion" should be liable to fine and imprisonment. "King-deluded Germany" has taught pious Emperor William a much-needed lesson. It will probably not make him less of a religious bigot, but it will show him the unwisdom of expecting the people's representatives to join him in a crusade against Freethought.

Dr. Martineau, replying to the congratulations from South Place on his ninetieth birthday, made the following very just observations upon orthodox religion: "The attempt to find infallible records in canonical books, and permanent standards of truth in ecclesiastical votes, has so hopelessly failed that honest persistence in it has become impossible to instructed persons; and, therefore, in all competent guides and teachers of men a continual sanction and profession of it is not simply an intellectual error, but a breach of veracity. And this tampering with sincerity on the part of instructors who know better than they choose to say, not only arrests the advance to higher truth, but eats, like a canker, into the morals of our time."

The Freethought Magazine for May gives a portrait of Mrs. Josephine K. Henry, a leading Freethinker and woman's advocate, who is known as the "woman Henry Clay of the South." Mrs. Henry is a granddaughter of John Kirby, of Leeds, who, with James Watson, became a salesman in the shop of Richard Carlile when the English Government tried to suppress the sale of Paine's Age of Reason.

The Boston Investigator for March 16, which only now reaches us, has a symposium on the Bible, to which Judge Waite, Lucy Colman, Rabbi Schindler, J. R. Charlesworth, E. J. Bowtell, J. H. Cook, and other writers, contribute.

The question of the mythical character of the Jewish patriarchs, which is being ably dealt with by "Veritas" in another column, is exciting much attention in Germany, where theologians feel themselves somewhat more free in dealing with the myths of the Old Testament than with those of the New. The recent work of Professor Stade, who questions all the early Jewish stories and doubts if ever the Jews were in Egypt, has been followed by the publication of a lecture to his students, by Professor Meinhold, on The Origin of Israel's History of Religion. He declares that, "In order to furnish an historical sketch of the beginning of Israel's religion and history, we must discard the age of the patriarchs altogether." That age merely represents "Ideal Israel."

Professor Meinhold says: "It is beyond belief that we can give a picture of the religious development of Israel in a period the documentary evidences for which are removed at least one thousand years from the events they profess to record. What would we say of an historian who would give a picture of Charlemagne on the basis of a document on that ruler written in our own age, and would know nothing of the contemporaneous sources? Still more out of place is it to base a history on a mosaic of contradictory sources such as we have in the records of the Patriarchs."

"Nobody among scientific scholars now-a-days ventures to assert that we have any literary remains from the period before Moses; and between Abraham and Moses, according to the statements of the Pentateuch, there is a chasm of 400 years, a period which, even for the most determined prominence given to oral tradition, does not suffice to awaken a spark of confidence in these reports."

Digitized by Google

Professor Meinhold also argues, while the neighboring peoples in Babylonia, Syria, and Assyria, at this period, 2200 B.C., already exhibited a marked degree of culture, Canaan, "the bridge between Egypt and Babylonia," could not have been, with its many cities and settled population, open for a nomadic family or tribe, as is claimed in Patriarchal history.

Again, he argues that the names of the Patriarchs are not those of individuals, but collective terms for tribes. He says: "If we must, as is done in the case of Ishmael, the collective name for the different Arabic tribes, take 'Edom' collectively, why must we not do so in the case of his brother Jacob?"

NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY'S CONFERENCE AT BRISTOL.

JUNE 2, 1895.

AGENDA.

1. Minutes of last Conference.
2. Executive's Annual Report. By PRESIDENT.
3. Reception of Report.
4. Financial Report.
5. Election of President.

   Notice of Motion by Finsbury Park Branch: "That Mr. G. W. Foote be re-elected President for 1895-6."
6. Election of Vice-Presidents.

   (a) The following are nominated by the Executive for re-election: Dr. T. R. Allinson, G. Anderson, D. Baker, N. B. Billany, J. E. Brumage, Prof. L. Büchner, M.D., W. W. Collins, R. Forder, S. Hartmann, Wm. Heaford, G. J. Holyoake, P. A. V. Le Lubez, A. B. Moss, T. Parris, S. M. Peacock, W. Pratt, J. H. Ridgway, V. Roger, J. Samson, Dr. E. Schlaeger, Robert Owen Smith, Mrs. T. Smith, J. Swaagmann, J. Symes, E. Truelove, J. Umpleby, Miss E. M. Vance, C. Watts, J. M. Wheeler.

   (b) The following are nominated by the Executive for election: E. Bater (London); J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh); J. P. Gilmour (Glasgow); S. P. Putnam (America).
7. Election of Honorary Secretary.

   (a) Motion by Rochdale Branch: "That the office of Honorary Secretary be abolished."

   (b) Motion by Executive: "That Mr. Robert Forder be re-elected Honorary Secretary."
8. Election of Auditors.
9. Motion by Rochdale Branch re Presidency:—

   "That on and after Whit-Sunday, 1896, no member shall be eligible for re-election as President until three years have elapsed from his vacating such office, provided always that in the event of the office becoming vacant at any period between two Conferences the member chosen to fill that office for the remainder of the year shall be deemed eligible for re-election at the Conference next ensuing."
10. Motion by West London Branch:—

    "That no person be eligible as Vice-President who has not been a member for five years."
11. Motion by Rochdale Branch:—

    "That from this date no member shall be permitted to take part in and vote at the meetings of the Executive Council but the properly-appointed delegates from the Branches, the President, Treasurer, and Secretary alone excepted."
12. Motion by Rochdale Branch:—

    "That this Conference instructs the Secretary to issue monthly to the Branches an official document stating the numerical and financial position of the Society, full details of all resolutions carried by the Organisation and other Committees, a nominal roll of persons receiving grants from the Benevolent Fund, with the amount granted, and all other matters concerning the Society; such paper to be issued during the first week of each month."
13. Motion by Finsbury Branch:—

    "That no Vice-President shall henceforth hold any paid office in the Society."
14. Motion by Finsbury Park Branch:—

    "That an Organising Secretary be appointed by the Society, who shall devote his time to interviewing persons known to be in sympathy with Secular principles, with a view to securing their adhesion to the Society or their financial support, obtaining, as far as possible, the renewed support of lapsed members, and furthering the interests of the Society in any other manner the Executive may deem expedient."
15. Motion by Mr. C. Cohen:—

    "That properly-qualified speakers be sent by the Council of the N.S.S. into different districts for organising and lecturing purposes, and that a Committee be appointed by this Conference to draw up a scheme to that end, and submit the same to the Executive Council."
16. Motion by Islington Branch:—

    "That a Total Abstinence section be formed in connection with the Society."
17. Motion by Nottingham Branch:—

    "To add the following to the Society's 'Immediate Practical Objects':—(a) The promotion of the fullest inquiry into all matters affecting the well-being of Humanity, especially in regard to topics (e.g., the Population Question) which it may commonly be the fashion to evade or suppress. (b) The encouragement of a more general interest in social and political problems."
18. Motion by Battersea Branch:—

    "That the N.S.S. shall engage in real Secular work by advocating political and social reforms, with a special view to ameliorating the wretched condition of our fellow men."
19. Motion by the Executive:—

    "That in all elections to public bodies Secularists should endeavor to put forward candidates in distinct sympathy with Secular principles."
20. Motion by Mr. A. B. Moss:—

    "That strenuous efforts be made to get the Education Department to change the code so that the three quarters of an hour now devoted to Scripture instruction in Board schools be utilised in teaching elementary science."
21. Motions by Manchester Branch:—

    (a) "That this Conference take energetic measures for the repeal of the Blasphemy Laws."

    (b) "That this Society cease to issue members' certificates."

    (c) "That no place for the holding of the Annual Conference be included in the list sent round to the Branches for voting upon, unless it first complies with all the necessary conditions."

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

May 19, Bradford; 26, Liverpool.

June 2, N.S.S. Conference; 9, Glasgow; 10 and 11, Aberdeen; 13 and 14, Dundee; 16, Edinburgh; 23, Manchester; 30, Sheffield.

July 6, Chester-le-Street; 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14, Bristol; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York in August, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

Arrangements are being made for him to speak in Derby and Stockton-on-Tees during the weeks following his being at Manchester and Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Sceptic—"You have given me many messages from departed friends, but not one of them has told me anything I didn't know." Medium (with dignity)—"I would have you understand, sir, that the spirits of the dead have something better to do than to come back to earth and teach school."—New York Weekly.

An old negro minister was preaching from the text that "the Lord Jesus Christ walked abroad, curing divers diseases." In the course of his sermon he said: "Yes, bretheren and sisteren, you git sick and you send for Dr. Whitehead or Dr. Wilson, and they can cure 'most any disease that flesh is heir to, but when it comes to these here divers, 'tain't nobody but God a'mighty hisself kin cure 'em."

Digitized by Google

INGERSOLL AND SAM JONES.

THE visit of Colonel Ingersoll to St. Louis on the concluding day of the Sam Jones revival was a coincidence which suggested to the Globe-Democrat the interest which would attach to an interchange of views as to the motives and influences of the two men, each of whom possesses in so marked a degree the power of attracting and interesting large crowds. That each is sincere in his belief is generally admitted, and it is worthy of note that, while each criticises the other freely, neither attributes to the other any but the best of motives. The idea was to present both sides of the question fairly, and to reflect the opinions of the exponents of theories so diametrically opposed; and this has been accomplished with the co-operation of the two gentlemen. Mr. Jones was seen first. He was unwilling to say anything calculated to hurt the feelings of a man against whom, personally, he had no grievance. When it was explained that the Globe-Democrat wanted a review of Colonel Ingersoll's lectures and their influence on the community, rather than the lecturer himself, Mr. Jones submitted cheerfully, leant back in his chair, and told the reporter to "fire away." His argument that Ingersoll's teachings are calamitous because they are apt to encourage utter recklessness is given in his own words, some few of which were subsequently quoted to the lecturer whose reply was desired.

To interview Colonel Ingersoll at length was less easy. The Colonel is known to have an occasional antipathy to interviewers, claiming that in more than one instance he has been incorrectly reported. It was also ascertained that he would not reach St. Louis before Sunday morning. He has so many old friends in St. Louis that he holds a series of receptions all day when in the city, and it would obviously be impossible to secure his undivided attention for an hour. Hence it was resolved to intercept him on the way to St. Louis, and a telegram was sent to Cincinnati as to his route, it being his custom to visit that city when on a lecturing tour and map out his route from that point. The only reply was a reference to New York, and from the lecturer's home it was learned that he was due at Springfield, Ill., Saturday evening. A reporter was accordingly sent on to the Illinois State capital to await Colonel Ingersoll's arrival and obtain the desired interview.

JONES ON INGERSOLL.

"What do you think of Ingersoll and of the influence of his lectures?" asked a reporter of the Rev. Sam Jones as he sat in his room at the Southern Hotel, evidently only partially recovered from the exertions of preaching to 6,000 people the preceding evening.

Mr. Jones thought for a moment and then said: "The question is a very broad one, and cannot be answered in two or three words. Personally, Mr. Ingersoll is no doubt a genial gentleman. Physically he is fat, intellectually he is bright, morally there may be worse men; but theologically he is a bad egg."

"You have seen the picture of Ingersoll nursing his grandchild?"

"Yes, and I could not help feeling mighty sorry for the grandchild."

"Apart from his personality, what do you think is the moral influence of Mr. Ingersoll's lectures?"

"That is very easily answered. A visit of Mr. Ingersoll to any community is calamitous to all whom he reaches, and the worst of it is he generally reaches the very class of people upon whom his teachings have the most baneful effect. No God, no Bible, no heaven, no hell, catches the masses of non-church-goers, and turns them over to recklessness. The lecturer forgets that they were not all reared in Christian homes, and brought up under the cultivating influences which he himself enjoyed. They were not trained up in the virtues as he was by his godly father and mother. Whatever virtues Mr. Ingersoll possesses is a gift of grace or Christianity. Many parade his charity, his liberality, and his love for home. He never got these elements as the gift of Infidelity. They are but the expressions of Christian elements that live in his character in spite of his Infidelity, and when he throws his teaching of no God, no Bible, no heaven, and no hell into the hearts and lives of others who have not been blessed by the help which Christianity gives us, he turns the whole human life into utter rot."

"How do you account for Mr. Ingersoll's power to attract large audiences?" was a question which the above criticism naturally suggested.

"His power to attract lies in his ability to shock," replied Mr. Jones, with more force and earnestness than he had hitherto displayed. "He is the devil's dynamo, and when a man stands upon the damp soil of a sinful life old Bob can turn a current on him that will almost make him leap out of his hide. Men love to be shocked. I have often thought of Colonel Ingersoll in his disclaimer of Christian virtues and his disbelief in God, and the Bible as putting him pretty much in the attitude of a drummer's little girl, of whom a commercial traveller once told me. He said he found his little girl, on one of his visits home, sitting on the floor playing with her kitten. While loving and caressing it she said: 'Kitty, you are a sweet little kitty. I love you, and I know who your mommer is. Old pussy is your mommer. She's a good old cat, and I love her too. But, kitty, I don't know who your popper is, 'cause I never saw him. I 'spect your popper is a travelling man.' We all know from Mr. Ingersoll's doctrine who his mother is, morally speaking. Earth is his mother. I expect his father is a travelling man. Certainly nobody has ever seen him in these parts. They all say that Colonel Ingersoll is a jolly fellow. I don't know him personally, but I don't doubt that he is."

"How about Mr. Ingersoll's arguments?"

"He hasn't any. He is an orator of the first water. I know no man alive to-day who can put English together like he can. His words put into sentences look like streams of pearls; but they are merely bracelets and necklaces for swine. His philosophy and his religion do not build colleges, almshouses, or asylums. Neither do they take care of the poor, the maimed, and the halt. They are powerless to reform the drunkard and the outlaw. They do not make a man more kind in his home, or more respected in the community where he lives. He clamors for free thought and moral liberty. Establish the fact that men can think as they please, and with that you establish the fact that they can act as they please. There are boundary lines to thought, just as there are boundary lines to actions. With his wit and intellectual cunning, aided by his illogical reasoning, he may play upon the weaknesses of religion, and by his flights of eloquence upon the duties of life which he steals from Christianity; but, after all, a thoughtful, substantial man sees the cunning of his method and detects the direful effect his words have upon the gang that flock to hear him. Lord Salisbury said that, but for the Salvation Army in the streets of London, the police force would have to be increased four thousand in number in a single day. Remove Infidelity from the world, and you lessen the police force by one-half. Christianity is the great conserving and preserving force of the age. Anarchism and outlawism are legitimate children of Infidelity, and whatever and whoever contributes to these dangerous elements in society should be fought and outlawed by every true American citizen, whatever his creed may be."

"In other words, you mean that the influence of Mr. Ingersoll's lectures is, from your standpoint, entirely bad?"

"I see no good that can possibly come from his lectures on Infidelity. I see much harm that may result from them. I also see why Mr. Ingersoll delivers his lectures. There may be $1,000 a night to him in the job; but why a Christian community will suffer such a thing, and why men will pay for the privilege of hearing him abuse their mother's God and their father's Bible at a dollar a head, and then turn out and be Infidels like him for nothing, and board themselves, is one of the mysteries I never could solve. Personally, I have never met Colonel Ingersoll. He may have many charming characteristics; in fact, he must have. Reared, as he was, in a Christian home, he cannot be utterly depraved. The question is often asked as to whether Ingersoll is sincere in his denials, and in his negations, and in his Infidelity. Suppose we give him credit for all sincerity; he may be in that class of whom the Bible speaks when it says: 'Given over to a delusion that he may believe a lie and be damned.'

"I believe a man can reach such a condition and attitude that, in the moral world, a lie is to him the truth, and the truth a lie. As to whether Colonel Ingersoll is sincere or not makes no difference when you look at the tendencies of his lecture. I see no reason why a profane swearer, or a liar, or a drunkard, or a whoremonger, or a voluptuary should find fault with Mr. Ingersoll, just as I see no reason why the good and true and beautiful and noble should champion his cause or approve his lectures. A man who starts out from the storm centres of Infidelity would become a cyclone in the moral world. The orator we are talking about is a cyclone, funnel-shaped and full of wind. I suppose he will die as he lived. But after death he will no longer be a disbeliever or an unbeliever. My Bible tells me that the devils believe and tremble."

"Do I understand you to say that Colonel Ingersoll really uses no argument?"

Mr. Jones tilted his chair back, deliberated longer than is usual with such a remarkably good conversationalist as he is known to be, and finally said: "That is about so. I have never thought that Mr. Ingersoll treats the subject in hand fairly. He starts in by making his own statement as to what Christianity is, and he then proceeds to demolish the man of straw which he himself has set up. He would burn down my cabin, and then offer me no shelter for myself and wife and children. He would destroy the old ford and build no bridge in its place. He would extinguish what he calls my tallow candle of hope, and leave me in despair and darkness. He would make me what he calls a free man by giving me licence of thought and action, when any sensible man knows that licence is simply power to do wrong. True liberty, on the other hand, is simply the privilege of doing right. The Ten Commandments make the boundary lines within which liberty is given. Infidelity would change these so that they would read: 'Thou shalt not steal—if there is any probability of being caught.' 'Thou shalt not commit adultery—but you may find two or three wives more convenient than one.' 'Thou shalt not break the Sabbath—but bend it double as occasion offers.' 'Thou shalt not covet—but get all you can and keep all you get.' 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me—but if you don't like the God of heaven, be one yourself and run things to suit yourself.' What a man does is at least a test of what he is. Will Mr. Ingersoll show us what he has done to make the world better or happier; where he has reformed a single drunkard, reclaimed a single reprobate, purified a single life, or elevated a single community? Mr. Ingersoll seems to be the product of hyper-Calvinism, for Infidelity is nothing more nor less than hyper-Calvinism gone to seed. God will reign, heaven will endure, the ministry will live, the churches will flourish, morality will be taught and practised, and Christian virtues will be embodied in men long after Mr. Ingersoll and his company have passed from earth, and received the reward of their doing."

Digitized by Google

(Next week we shall give Colonel Ingersoll's opinion of Sam Jones.)

HOW TO USE THE BIBLE.

To prove a given thesis on the lines of Holy Writ
You've but to search the Scriptures till you find a text to fit;
A very little practice will enable you to quote
A verse or two for any view you're anxious to promote.
But bear in mind this golden rule—if you a text descry
That proves the very opposite, then quietly pass it by
And choose another.

To take a few examples: If to children you would give Advice to love their parents all the days that they may live,
To honor and to trust them, be submissive to their will,
To cite the Great Authority requires but little skill.
But if you stumble on the place where Jesus says to win
The title of disciple we must hate our nearest kin—
Why, choose another.

Suppose, again, you wish to show that slavery is wrong,
And want a godly platitude to help your case along,
You easily may find one that will suit you to a t,
And may freely quote the Scriptures, but you mustn't be too free.
So if you find the verse in which God let his people know
That they might beat a slave to death if but his death were slow—
Why, choose another.

Perhaps you are opposed to war, and hold that strife should cease;
You can work the Holy Bible in the interests of peace,
But be careful how you do it, or you'll carry it too far.
So when you find Jehovah boast himself a man of war,
Or come across a passage where the offspring of the Lord
Avows he came on earth to send division or a sword,
Why, choose another.

If with cruelty to animals you fain would do away
By claiming God for patron of the R.S.P.C.A.,
You've a choice of pretty sentiments that never seem to pall,
Say the eight-a-penny sparrow that he watches in its fall.
But if you strike a chapter that refers to Pharaoh's cattle,
Or God's command to Joshua to hough the horse in battle—
Why, choose another.

If you'd proselyte a little in the theologic line,
And want to prove conclusively that Jesus was divine,
You readily can manage it; but if you chance to see
A narrative relating to an isolated tree
On which in vain he sought for figs, and cursed it for that reason,
Since, being God, he didn't know that figs were not in season—
Why, choose another.

If at cruel vivisection you would have a pious prod,
By maintaining that the practice is detestable to God,
There are many charming verses you may turn to good account—
E.g., a gentle precept from the Sermon on the Mount.
But if you meet the doctrine as to God Almighty's hell
And its everlasting torments, it perhaps would be as well
To choose another.

E. H. B. Stephenson.

A country churchwarden, on wishing to inform a visitor that the vicar was a loving shepherd, only succeeded in saying that he was "a shoving leopard."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DEVIL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

Sir,—I have read Mr. J. M. Wheeler's interesting pamphlet entitled Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible. I believe in a personal devil and witches. The belief in a devil not only prevails among orthodox Christians, taught by a pious and disinterested clergy, but also exists among savages at the present day. When travelling in Western Equatorial Africa, I received an invitation from a trader to spend a few days with him up the river Rokelle, where, beyond the pale of civilisation, he occupied an advanced station, in partibus infidelium—the only white man among sable heathens. I arrived in my six-oared gig just before midnight. The moon shone bright, and several negroes, who greeted my kroomen, caught a glimpse of me, dressed in a blue serge suit and wearing a tropical felt helmet. After a smoke and a glass of grog I retired to rest in a humble negro cottage which my friend occupied in the small village. I rose at daybreak and strolled towards a well, where two negro women were about to fill their gourds. As soon as they perceived me they yelled and fled into the bush, followed by several men. My friend came up and asked what had happened. I could not tell. He went in search of the fugitives, and, after a long palaver, gave the following explanation: "One of the head men who saw you arrive last night says that you are the Devil (sic). Asked for his reason, he said that you were like him.* In a dream he saw you walk to the well, lie down on your belly, and drink all the water. A la bonne heure!" "What did you say?" "Oh, you damned fool, this is the only white man I know, who never drinks water." True, the water in West Africa contains the tænia solium, or tapeworm—a nice devil that to have in one's entrails. That is one of my devils. I have been frequently called the Devil, and begin to fancy that I am a relative; but I do not go about roaring and devouring. I leave that to my Christian confrères, who often prey upon their fellows. Among my French acquaintances I was generally addressed as "Diable de Laporte," and I dare say they were quite right. My belief in witches is restricted to Lancashire witches, one of whom I married. I have never regretted it, for she made me very comfortable.

Charles Kroll Laporte.

PROFANE JOKES.

Evangelist—"Young man, do you really want to go to hell?" Hardened Sinner—"Why, do you want me to go with you?"

Rhoades (as he and Mrs. Rhoades are leaving church)—"What a refreshing sermon that was, wasn't it?" Mrs. Rhoades (sharply)—"I don't know; I didn't get to sleep."

Millicent—"Did you enjoy the services to-day?" Mildred—"Immensely! The minister wore a new lace surplice, with the most stylish puffed sleeves I have ever seen."

Nurse—"Bertie, you naughty boy, leave off playing with your soldiers directly! Haven't I told you that you mustn't play with them on Sunday?" Bertie—"Yes, nurse, but this is a religious war."

"Madam, would you kindly subscribe something for the missions in Africa? The money will be used for the conversion of heathen children." "Very well; you may have a few Christian children converted, and send the bill to me."

Tommy—"Do you say your prayers every night?" Jimmy—"Yep." Tommy—"And does your maw say hers?" Jimmy—"Yep." Tommy—"And does your paw?" Jimmy—"Naw. Paw don't need to. It's almost daylight when he gets to bed."

Little Jack prays every night for all the different members of his family. His father had been away at one time for a short journey, and that night Jack was praying for him as usual. "Bless papa and take care of him," he was beginning as usual, when suddenly he raised his head and listened. "Never mind about it now, Lord," ended the little fellow; "I hear him down in the hall."

New York Life gives the following: The deacon (to the cowboy, who has just dropped in to see what a revival was like)—"Young man, have you made your peace with your Creator?" The Cowboy—"I ain't never had no trouble with him." This is another version of the true story told of Thoreau, who, when asked if he had made his peace with God, replied: "I did not know that we had quarrelled."

* The black man's devil is white. How true! Have we not reduced the negroes to bondage and cruelly tortured them?

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30, G. W. Foote, "Riddles of the Sphinx."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, debate between B. Shaw and E. Smith, "The Liberal Party versus the Independent Labor Party." Monday, at 8, entertainment and dance. Tuesday, at 8, social gathering. Thursday, at 8, members' meeting to discuss Conference agenda and elect delegates.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Charles Watts, "Theism Tested and Found Wanting."

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "Sir Thomas More and the New Spirit."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, F. Haslam, "Secularism and Social Problems."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, A. G. Herzfeldt, "The Holy Book Dissected."

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, J. Fagan, "The Apostles' Creed." Members' meeting after lecture to consider Conference agenda, etc.

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science."

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, C. James, "The Brain or the Bible"; 3.15, "God at the Bar of Humanity."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, Arthur B. Moss, "Two Revelations." Thursday, at 8, W. J. Ramsey, "Our Home Above."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, Arthur B. Moss, "Ancient Saints and Modern Sinners"; 3.30, "Ancient and Modern Prophets." Wednesday, at 8, Stanley Jones, "The Origin of the Bible."

KILBURN (High-road): 6.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Where Angels Dwell."

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, T. Thurlow will lecture.

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "The Curse of the Cross."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, W. Heaford, "The Social Implication of Secularism."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, S. E. Easton will lecture.

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, St. John will lecture; 3.15, W. Heaford will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, George Standring, "Christianity versus Humanity"; 7, a lecture. Thursday, at 8, C. Cohen, "Sixty Minutes with the Devil."

COUNTRY.

BRADFORD (Oddfellows' Hall, Thornton-road): 11, S. P. Putnam, "Christ and the Nineteenth Century"; 3, "Evolution and Creation"; 7, "Freethought and Morality."

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 11, A Guest, "The Attitude of the Bible towards Woman"; 7, "Prayer: What and Why?"

HULL (St. George's Hall, Storey-street): 7, Gustav Smith, "How the Workers are Slandered, Fooled, Robbed, and Murdered."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Tontine Society; 7, Mr. Miller, "The Sun." Committee meeting after lecture.

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, C. Cohen, "Science and Man"; 3, "Why are Men Religious?" (Stevenson-square—if weather unfavorable, in the hall); 6.30, "Scepticism: Its Meaning and Value."

NOTTINGHAM (Woodland Hall, Woodland-place, Parliament-street): 7, Robert J. Murray will lecture; committee meeting after lecture.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, Willie Dyson, "The New Secularism: A Defence of the Old."

SOUTH SHIELDS (Captain Duncan's Navigation School, King-street): 7, W. Cook, "The History of Rationalism—A Review."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, J. Kent, "Was Christ a Reformer?"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside—weather permitting): 11, C. Aarstadt will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London.—May 19, Manchester; 25, Wood Green; 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—May 19, m. Finsbury, e. Deptford; 22, Hyde Park; 26, m. Wood Green, a. Hyde Park e. Hammersmith; 30, Hammersmith.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—May 19, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 26, m. Clerkenwell.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—May 19, m. Kingsland. June 2, m. Finsbury Park; 16, m Kingsland. July 17, m. Kingsland.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

FOR CIVIL SERVICE and ALL OTHER EXAMINATIONS.—Freethinkers will find BEST GUIDANCE AND INSTRUCTION—FULL SOLUTIONS, MODEL ANSWERS, ETC., at the CITY CIVIL SERVICE COLLEGE, Fenchurch House, Fenchurch street.—Apply, Principal, CYRIL BEDE, M.A., 4 Victoria-terrace, Tollington-park.

Christ's Malthusianism and the Traces of His Wife and Sons. Twopence.
London: W. REEVES, 185 Fleet-street, E.C.

MALTHUSIAN LEAGUE.

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

Of the League will be held in the Large Hall of the SOUTH PLACE INSTITUTE, Moorgate-street,

City, E.C.,

On TUESDAY, MAY 21, 1895, at 8 p.m.; DR. C. R. DRYSDALE, President, in the chair.

Speakers—J. H. Levy, Esq., G. W. Foote, Esq., Dr. T. R. Allinson, Dr. Alice Vickery, Mrs. Thornton Smith, A. B. Moss, Esq., T. O. Bonser, Esq., M.A., G. Standring, Esq., Mrs. Heatherley, Mr. St. John.

ALL SEATS ARE FREE, and the public are invited to attend, that they may be informed as to the principles and objects of the League.

The Malthusian, the organ of the League, published on the first of each month, price One Penny, may be obtained through any bookseller, or direct from the Secretary, W. H. Reynolds, Publisher, New Cross, S.E.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS

(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleeplessness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumours and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.

RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.

DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.

CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 9s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,

4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 31. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free,

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

LOT 11

One Pair All-Wool Blankets.
One Pair Sheets.
One Quilt.
One Table Cloth.

MARVELLOUS SALE.

872 PARCELS REDUCED TO 423 IN 14 DAYS.

Send at Once, or you will be too Late.

ONLY 19/- PER PARCEL TO CLEAR.

Not more than Two Parcels will be Sold to One Person.

NEW SPRING PATTERNS NOW READY.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4, UNION STREET, BRADFORD.

3d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 64pp.

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 21. SUNDAY, MAY 26, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

CHRISTIAN CHARITY.

In another part of this week's Freethinker our readers will find a long letter from the Rev. C. L. Engström, secretary of the Christian Evidence Society. Very few Christian journals, if any, would have inserted such a letter from a Secularist; and in this respect, at any rate, we think we have an advantage over orthodox parties. We even go to the length of asking our readers to break off at this point. Let them peruse Mr. Engström's letter carefully, and then return to our reply.

Our first intention was to let Mr. Putnam reply to Mr. Engström, and to leave the matter with the two disputants. But many of the points raised are such as Mr. Putnam cannot deal with, as they relate especially to Secularism in England. We shall therefore answer Mr. Engström at once, as far as seems necessary; leaving Mr. Putnam to supplement our reply from his own standpoint.

The secretary of the Christian Evidence Society rather parades his generosity towards Freethinkers, but we do not feel particularly grateful. He does not sin himself against the laws of good-breeding, but his underlings in London—whom he hires and pays—are notorious for their ghastly ill-manners, and their addiction to the worst vices of controversy, including reckless lying and unscrupulous slander. Mr. Engström has often denied this impeachment; but as he has never restrained his underlings, nor even taken the trouble to ascertain what they do say in public, it is impossible to hold him guiltless.

We have another complaint against Mr. Engström. He is constitutionally inaccurate. It is not true that we "discouraged" discussion after Mr. Putnam's lecture. We distinctly said that our American visitor was "yearning" for debate. It is true that we rebuked an auditor who called out Mr. Engström's name, but it was on the express ground that gentlemen should be able to visit the Hall of Science without being "spotted." There was absolutely no reason, so far as we are concerned, why Mr. Engström should not have mounted the platform and battled for his faith.

What we may call the American part of Mr. Engström's letter will be answered by Mr. Putnam. But we must say, in passing, that the lecturer did not affirm bluntly that "faith was, for Christians, everything, and conduct and character nothing." He admitted that plenty of Christians were good men, and said he rejoiced to find the Churches engaging in secular work. What he asserted was, that Christianity, as such, was a creed, and not an ethical system; that morality was only "tacked on to it" because no creed could get along without something of that kind; and that, under the disguise of morality, Christianity carried on an infamous war against the rights of reason, beginning at the cradle and ending at the deathbed.

Mr. Putnam is well able to answer Mr. Engström with respect to Christianity in America. With regard to England, it is beyond dispute that the leading divines and the Church standards have, with the rarest exceptions, taught the very doctrines which Mr. Putnam called the essence of Christianity. No doubt they are growing ashamed of those doctrines, but it is too transparent a trick to repudiate them and then to reaffirm them in different language. For instance, the difference between "total depravity" and a "universal Fall" is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. Mr. Engström admits the vicarious atonement, and he admits eternal damnation, subject to his interpretation of "what the New Testament says."

What the New Testament says on hell and damnation was never much in dispute among Christians until they felt the necessity of making their creed presentable to the enlightened morality of the present age. Even now they cling to "eternal punishment," only they contend that it is not so long as we are apt to imagine. This is the contention of Dean Farrar, but it was not the contention of Dr. Pusey. Mr. Engström must surely know that Dr. Pusey's book, to which he refers, was written expressly in reply to Dean Farrar. It was only with respect to whether the fire of hell is literal or metaphorical that Dr. Pusey allowed any latitude of opinion. He concluded his preface by declaring that "if we know anything at all, we know that the doctrine of Everlasting Punishment was taught by Him Who died to save us from it."

Mr. Engström turns good Atheists into Christians in spite of themselves. It is kind of him, no doubt; but the good Atheists will prefer to wear their own ticket. And, after all, Mr. Engström does not hold the keys of heaven.

We put this question to the secretary of the Christian Evidence Society: If an honest unbeliever may go to heaven, what is the use of taking the trouble to be a Christian? It will not do to reply that there is no trouble. Christians must believe mysteries, and reconcile contradictions; and that is a lot of trouble to a man of common sense.

Mr. Engström is but superficially charitable in his observations on the Hall of Science. He is well aware—or, if he is not, his ignorance is inexcusable—that the Christian law of England is dead against the natural rights of Freethinkers. They may dodge the law to some extent, but this is not very satisfactory. The time comes, sooner or later, when the dodge fails. Money can be devoted to Christian purposes without any fear of alienation. It cannot be so devoted to Secular purposes. And this is a tremendous hindrance to our movement, which has lost thousands of pounds in this way during the last four or five years.

It is not true that the Churches subsist on the funds they raise annually. They flourish largely on endowments. They have their roots in graves. They live on dead men's money. But they deny us the same advantages, and after robbing us by their own law, which they refuse to alter, they sneeringly ask us why we do not spend as handsomely as themselves.

Architecture and decoration are simply questions of money. Christianity does not produce genius. Nature does that. Christianity merely employs it. How many fine churches could Christianity boast in the first two hundred and fifty years of its existence? When it became respectable and wealthy, mainly through the patronage of the State, it was able to employ architects, sculptors, and painters. Brahmanism, Buddhism, and Mohammedanism did the same thing. And when Secularism is respectable and wealthy—or at least when it no longer suffers from legal stigma and robbery—it will be able to erect large, noble, and splendid buildings.

Mr. Engström flaunts the ten to fifteen thousand places of worship of the Church of England. How rational! How considerate! Is not the Church of England established and endowed? Does it not subsist on the revenues of national property? Are not the very Freethinkers taxed to support it? Even the Nonconformist places of worship are recipients of a State subvention. Secular halls have to pay rates and taxes; churches and chapels pay none.

Digitized by Google

It will be time enough for Christians to boast of their "charities" when they relinquish all their privileges and accept an equality of opportunity with Secularists. Let them give up State endowments; let them forego State subventions; let them enjoy no more right than the Secularists to legacies and trusts; and then let us see what they will have to spare for their much-trumpeted work amongst "the poor."

Mr. Engström plays the Pharisee in asking to how many mourners we speak words of comfort. We do not keep a register of these little kindnesses. Our own poor we relieve; we do not send them to Mr. Engström. We do not build hospitals, but probably we subscribe to them, without bawling it from the housetops. Certainly we do not try, as the Christians do, to make the hospitals sectarian institutions. We have no special agencies for reclaiming drunkards and prostitutes. We are laboring to bring about a state of society in which drunkenness and prostitution will die a natural death.

Mr. Engström winds up with an inaccuracy. He speaks of "the Secular Cromwell Club" at Plaistow. The Cromwell Club was not "Secular." It was a political Club. The Secularists engaged its lecture-room occasionally for a meeting. But suppose it had been a "Secular" Club. What is proved by stating that the building is now used by the Christian Evidence Society? Two chapels, at Manchester and Portsmouth, have been turned into Secular halls.

G. W. FOOTE.

VANINI'S MARTYRDOM.

(Concluded from p. 306.)

THE story of Vanini in England ends with his escape from the tender mercies of Archbishop Abbot. His subsequent short career and tragic fate must be briefly sketched in illustration of the way in which free inquiry was welcomed by the Church in the seventeenth century of the teachings of the one divine religion.

At Paris Vanini set to work on a book probably designed to promote inquiry, while removing suspicions of his own orthodoxy.* It was magniloquently entitled Amphitheatrum Æternæ Providentiæ divino-magicum Christiano-physicum, nec non Astrologo-Catholicum, adversus veteres Philosophos, Atheos, Epicureos, Peripatheticos et Stoicos, Lugduni, 1615. This defence of Eternal Providence Durand regards as ironical, and Cousin as suspicious. Although usually set down as an Atheist, and burnt as one, Vanini's mind may have been only partly emancipated on the God question. In setting forth the various opinions of philosophers on the subject, he probably designed to induce doubt and inquiry, though it must be remembered that he wrote with the fear of the Sorbonne and the Inquisition before his eyes.

His next work, De Admirandis Naturæ, Reginæ Deæque Mortalium, Arcanis: Dialogbi, 1616, showed a bolder front in its very title of The Admirable Secrets of Nature, the Queen and Goddess of Mortals. He had now obtained a patron, the Marshal Bassompierre, to whom this book of dialogues is dedicated. It purports to be the record by his disciples of conversations with Vanini. Whomever written by, it certainly had his revision; and this form of writing enables him to put heretical questions and sentiments into the mouth of the interlocutor, "Alexander"; while "Julius Cæsar," the teacher, remains comparatively orthodox. His doctrine essentially is Pantheism, which, as Earl Beaconsfield said, is "Atheism in domino," while in ethics it is Epicurean. Vanini, in short, teaches Naturalism, and he says plainly that there were things in the Amphitheatre he no longer believed, and that "infants born with weak minds are so much the fitter to become good Christians." Asked his opinion of the immortality of the soul, he says: "I have sworn to my God not to treat of that question till I am old, rich, and a German." The work was certified by two doctors of the Sorbonne, but it is said to have been, soon after publication, re-examined, and condemned to be burnt by that body.

Vanini removed to Toulouse, where he lived by teaching. It was not long ere he roused the clergy against him, and in August, 1618, he was arrested for Atheism and blasphemy.* Vanini was then only thirty-three years old. The chief evidence against him was "a pious gentleman"—one de Francon, who played the same Judas-like part that Mocenigo did towards Giordano Bruno. We have no particulars of the trial, but it is said that, in answer to the charge of Atheism, he took up a straw and said that would suffice to prove the existence of God. Gramond makes out that he argued for Theism from fear, not from conscience. The judges preferred the testimony of de Francon that Vanini had, in the intimacy of friendship, admitted to him his utter disbelief in the being of a God, asserting that Nature was the sole ruler of the universe, and her laws the supreme standards of action, to which all things must conform. He was found guilty, and condemned as an Atheist to have his blaspheming tongue cut out, to be strangled at the stake, his body afterwards to be burnt and scattered to the winds. This truly Christian sentence was duly executed before the Church of St. Stephen—Mr. Owen says on the same day, February 9; but Signor Palumbo and other authorities say the 19th. That Vanini died heroically is certain. Le Mercure François said "he died with as much constancy, patience, and fortitude as any other man ever seen." He said in Italian: "Come, let us die cheerfully like a philosopher." It adds that he declared, in the presence of thousands, that there was neither God nor Devil.

The pious Gramond writes: "I saw him in the tumbril as they led him to execution, mocking the Cordelier who had been sent to exhort him to repentance, and insulting our Savior by these impious words: 'He sweated with fear and weakness, and I, I die undaunted.'" Gramond relates, with evident approval, the brutal operation which forced a shriek of pain from the poor martyr to Free-thought. "Before putting fire to the stake," he says, "Vanini was ordered to put forth his sacrilegious tongue for the knife. He refused. It was necessary to employ pincers to draw it forth, and when the executioner's instrument seized and cut it off, never was heard a more horrible cry. One might have thought he heard the bellowing of an ox which was being slaughtered."†

The abbé Ladvocat, the learned librarian to the Sorbonne, in his biographical and historical dictionary, issued in the middle of last century, says that Vanini was burnt alive,‡ and adds: "Were justice equally severe at present, many persons would have met with Vanini's fate." Oh, these good Christians, how merciful they have been made by their beautiful creed!

J. M. WHEELER.

DEBATE IN DERBY.

UP to last week many of the good people of Derby had been for some considerable time in a high state of excitement, through the announcement of a public discussion which was to take place between Mr. G. W Foote and Mr. T. W. Lee, of the Christian Evidence Society, upon the question, "Atheism or Theism: Which is the More Reasonable?" The anticipations thus raised were realised on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, May 15 and 16, when the debate was held in the Temperance Hall, a fine building capable of holding a thousand persons. On this occasion it was crowded. Of course by far the great majority of the audiences were Christians; still, upon the whole, they listened fairly well to Mr. Foote. At times, when heavy and well-aimed blows were dealt at the popular faith, the more orthodox present manifested signs of uneasiness; but Mr. Foote's tact and the Chairman's kindly admonitions speedily allayed the theological irritation.

* Gramond, in his History of France from the Death of Henry IV., says: "He pretended to teach medicine; in reality he was a misleader of youth. He made a mockery of sacred things. He blasphemed the incarnation of Christ. He did not acknowledge the existence of God. He attributed everything to chance. He worshipped Nature as the excellent mother and source of all beings. This was the chief of all his errors, and he had the audacity to teach it in Toulouse, that holy city."

† Calvin similarly wrote of the cries of Servetus as "stupid bellowing."

‡ In the Abbé Migné's Catholic Dictionnaire de Biographie it is also said, "Il fut livré aux flammes." The Mercure François heads its account, "Un Athée Italien brulé vif à Thoulouse."

Digitized by Google

Mr. Piper, editor of the Derby Daily Telegraph, presided on both evenings, and an excellent chairman he made. His brief addresses at the commencement and at the close of the debate were models of concise and appropriate comment upon the proceedings. He spoke of the ability of the disputants, and of the attention paid by the crowded audiences to statements which, to many of them, were no doubt new and startling. This, he remarked, was a striking contrast to what had happened under similar circumstances in that town ten years ago. He thought this pleasant change was an encouraging proof of the progress of liberal ideas upon theological questions. It occurred to me whether the Christians present understood to what we are indebted for this improvement. Certainly it could not be to the influence of Theism, for that was more powerful in the past than it is at present. In my opinion, this advancement is the legitimate result of the Secular tendencies of the age. The spirit of inquiry is abroad, bigotry has more than ever to yield to fair play, and the tempest of theological passion is supplanted by the influence of calm reasoning.

As to the ability of the disputants as debaters, I desire to express my opinion frankly and honestly. Of Mr. Foote I need say but little, inasmuch as his polemical skill is well known. Personally, I was exceedingly pleased with his methodical and dignified mode of conducting his side of the controversy. His thorough examination of, and effective replies to, all that was relevant in his opponent's plea on the first night were, to my mind, grand specimens of perceptive power and readiness of argumentative resort. On the second night, when Mr. Foote led the debate, he, avoiding the puzzle of metaphysics, made a brilliant attack upon the Theistic position, showing how the misery, the suffering, and the inequalities of existence, together with the sadness, cruelties, and injustice recorded in history, contradict the theory that the universe is governed by a God who has unlimited power, wisdom, and goodness. Mr. Foote was in splendid form, and his earnest and eloquent expositions were frequently so powerful and commanding that he won the enthusiastic applause even of a large portion of the Christian audience, including the Chairman.

Mr. W. T. Lee is a good debater and a gentlemanly opponent, judging from his manner in the Derby debate. I regard him, apart from Dr. Harrison and Dr. McCann, as being by far the best advocate the Christian Evidence Society have on their staff. A less able debater than Mr. Foote would find in Mr. Lee a difficult opponent. He knows much of the art of debate, and he has sufficient tact to overlook the strong points against him, and to make much of minor features that seem to tell in his favor. Before an audience mainly in agreement with him, he spoke with a confidence that, probably, would be wanting were he addressing a hostile assembly. While not wishing to deprive him of any credit to which he is entitled, I would, in all kindness, suggest that he should not assume, as he did throughout the debate, that he has all the truth on his side, and that those who differ from him are necessarily in error. If that were so, all debating would be useless. Still, it appeared to me that, as a rule, Mr. Lee managed his difficult task much better than others on his side would have done.

I am pleased to know that the discussion is to be printed verbatim, and it is to be hoped that it will have a large sale, as the reading of it cannot but prove of great benefit to the Secular party. I shall be much disappointed if the local society does not increase its members in consequence of the discussion.

After the conclusion of the debate on the second night a large deputation, composed of Secular friends, waited upon Mr. Foote to thank him for the admirable fight he had made. Mr. Whitney delivered a neat little speech, in which, on behalf of the Derby Branch of the N.S.S., he assured Mr. Foote that all the members felt proud of their President, and congratulated him upon "the efficient and dignified manner" in which he had defended their position in the debate which had just finished. They were, indeed, more than satisfied; they were "delighted." Mr. Foote made an appropriate reply.

Mr. S. P. Putnam and myself accompanied Mr. Foote to Derby, and our American visitor was delighted. In America they seldom have such debates, and, therefore, to Mr. Putnam it was a treat which he fully appreciated.

CHARLES WATTS.

SECULARISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

THE GLASGOW DEBATE.

On the evenings of May 6, 7, 8, and 9, in the North Saloon of the City Hall, Mr. Charles Watts debated with Dr. A. Jamieson, Glasgow, the proposition for the first two nights being, "That Secularism is Superior to Christianity," and on the following nights the converse of this. Owing to the lateness of the season, the attendance suffered somewhat, although the meetings were fair throughout, and the audiences behaved with exemplary patience and decorum.

At the outset of his opening speech Mr. WATTS warned his hearers against confounding what was loosely called "Infidelity" with Secularism. By the first term was generally understood any form of revolt against the authority of theology; but Secularism was something more, inasmuch as it represented a body of ethical truths, and so claimed to set up a new discipline of life. As most of them knew, the word "Secularism" was first used, in its specific sense, as a doctrine-name by G. J. Holyoake; and both he and those who co-operated with him in establishing Secularism were constrained to that course alike by a lively belief in the soundness and salutariness of Secularist principles, and by a clear recognition of the fact that as Christianity, after nineteen centuries of power, had not only failed to better, but had positively worsened, the world, it was high time some different plan should be tried. It was a common idea among religious people that belief was voluntary, and that, therefore, anyone who disowned all religion must do so through sheer wantonness. But it was now an axiom in psychology that the act of belief in itself was purely automatic. Men did not command their convictions, but were commanded by them. Did any sane person imagine that, if the individual could persuade himself of the truth of anything, he would deliberately elect to become an outcast for opinion's sake. Yet that was what many Secularists had reluctantly done. It went without saying, then, that, conviction being determined, it was monstrously unjust to penalise the opinions of minorities. So much for the intellectual and moral prerequisites of Secularism. Members of all schools of thought were at one as to the need for some authoritative rule of life; but there the agreement ended, for every school has a different standard. The Secularist alone proclaims the supremacy of reason, overtly and unreservedly; for, while some Christian divines like Hooker, Chillingworth, and Butler feel themselves logically bound to own the sovereignty of reason, the vast majority of Christians assign it an inferior place, setting the authority of the Church or the Bible above it, although, by an unconscious yet whimsical inconsistency, it is actually by an exercise of their reason that they discover what seems to them to be the true Church or revelation. He would now proceed to recite the articles of the N.S.S.—Declaration of Principles and Objects, defining all the capital terms, like "reason," "happiness," "duty," "utility," etc. Having gone over the various items of the Declaration, and enlarged upon the practical bearings of the principles there set forth, Mr. Watts concluded with a quotation from Mr. Holyoake, vividly contrasting Christianity with Secularism, with especial reference to the absence from the latter of the detestable dogma of exclusive salvation, with all its inevitable horrors of religious strife, social confusion, and moral suffering.

Dr. JAMIESON complained that his opponent had not instituted any real comparison between Secularism and Christianity. To do so, they must be brought into opposition; but Mr. Watts had kept strictly to Secularism, and as long as he did so there could be no valid application of the comparative method, and consequently no settlement of the question of relative merit. What he proposed to do was to go through the N.S.S. principles one by one, and demonstrate that they were all anticipated in the New Testament. They had heard from Mr. Watts that he approved of some phases of theology, while condemning theology as a whole. What a shocking example of stultification! Then it appeared that Secularism only came into existence with Mr. Holyoake. But what did he find in one of Mr. Watts's own pamphlets? That Secular principles existed long before Christ. Yet in all these centuries Secularism had been dormant or obscure, while Christianity spread and flourished. And to-day, when Secularism was pining away, the banner of the Cross was being planted everywhere. If the principles of Secularism were so far above those of Christianity, how did it come that Christians won all the prizes in the race of life? Even Charles Bradlaugh himself once admitted that they had all the wealth, talent, and power. Where were the Atheistic men of science, of letters, of genius? His opponent could not give a solitary name of a man of the first rank in these walks who was an Atheist—not one. Mr. Watts emphasised the Secularist doctrine of the equality of the sexes, and notably of husband and wife; but the New Testament nowhere declared the inferiority of women. The injunction, "Wives, be subject to your husbands," meant no more than did the subjection of himself and Mr. Watts to their present chairman. Surely no one in his senses would argue that they, as disputants, were necessarily inferior to the chairman, because they were subject to him for the time being. Similarly, the Pauline prescription implied subordination in function merely—not degradation. They had been told that the only sanction requisite for truthfulness, etc., was that the practice of lying, and vice or crime generally, militated against social stability and well-being. In other words, the Secularist set the observance of good morals on the low ground of expediency; and, as an illustration of the practical outcome of this grovelling opportunism, he would prove to them that Mr. Watts himself would permit lying and hypocrisy in certain circumstances. Concerning the dogma of exclusive salvation, over which Mr. Watts waxed so indignant, Christianity did not create hell. It simply warned men of the existence of a place of punishment for sinners beyond the grave, and since it pointed them the way of escape from that doom, Christianity was really man's best friend. Mr. Watts evinced great anxiety to dissociate Secularism from "Infidelity"; but, after all, they were one at bottom. Holyoake (quotation from Reasoner, vol. vi., p. 270), Bradlaugh, and Mrs. Besant, all contended for the substantial identity of the two; and Dr. Sexton, who knew more about the secret history of Secularism than anyone living, asserted positively that "Secularism begins and ends in Atheism." Now, what is Atheism?—a blank negation, an intellectual nihilism. And yet, forsooth, we are told that Secularism is a philosophy of life. As if any philosophy deserving of the name could be based on zero. He would now, by an appeal to the New Testament, make it clear that all the principles of Secularism were derived thence. The remainder of Dr. Jamieson's speech consisted of the reading of a series of texts from the Gospels and the so-called Pauline Epistles, to show that these authorities enjoin the free exercise of Reason, the diligent pursuit of knowledge, the doing of good works, the aspiration to happiness—recognise the legitimacy of utility as a test of principles and conduct, and the necessity of liberty as the concomitant of progress. While the Christian view of the interdependence of liberty and progress is rational, the Secularist tenet is absurd; for the Christian is a libertarian, but the Secularist is a necessitarian, who, in Mr. Watts's own words, regards "virtue and vice as being as much the consequence of natural laws as the fall of a stone." What has Secularism done for progress? If it boasts of martyrs, it will be a necessary, if painful, task to say plainly why they were put in prison or buffeted. Then Secularists pride themselves on their freedom from superstition, but "Saladin" actually wrote a poem in which he deified the late Charles Bradlaugh. Finally, what had Secularism done for education, and where was its Bible?

Digitized by Google

In his second speech Mr. WATTS traversed most of the topics introduced by Dr. Jamieson. So far from having omitted to systematically contrast Secularism with Christianity, that was the last thing he did in his first speech. The poem of "Saladin's," which had been quoted as a proof of Secularist superstition, was plainly ironical; but, to remove all possible doubt, he had "Saladin's" own assurance to that effect. Dr. Jamieson had labored to make out that Secularism was a poor imitation of Christianity, but his citations were lopsided. What of the numerous passages putting the alternative of belief or damnation, of those setting a premium upon improvidence, or of those expressly disparaging and anathematising knowledge? When he said that Secular principles existed before Christ, that was a widely different thing from saying that Secularism itself was pre-Christian. The taunt that Secularism had achieved nothing came with ill grace from those who supported Christian-made laws that robbed Secularists of dead men's money, interfered with their meetings, and intimidated public opinion. Besides, it would be time enough to reproach Secularism with failure when it had enjoyed the same terms of existence and opportunity as Christianity. It might be true that most men of science were nominally Christians, considering the political and social power of Christianity that was to be expected; but what of men like Darwin, Tyndall, Huxley, and others?—no one dare claim them as Christians.

In his subsequent speeches Dr. JAMIESON reverted repeatedly to the subject-matter of his previous ones. Secularism begins and ends in Atheism. It encourages dissimulation by admitting "passive members," who may at the same time continue to masquerade as believers. It never does more than prate about science and education; for they had it on the authority of Dr. Sexton that the so-called "Halls of Science" were no better than drinking and dancing clubs, and Secularist lectures were as ignorant of science as their hearers were indifferent to it. If Secularists could not bequeath their money at death, let them hand it over to their Societies during life. Secularism struck at the very root of marriage. Mr. Bradlaugh had expressly laid it down in the King debate that if a woman lived with a man and bore children to him she was his wife; and he had also practically countenanced polygamy when he addressed as Mrs. Sharples Carlile the woman with whom, while his legal wife was still living, Richard Carlile consorted. Secularism pretended to have as one of its objects the promotion of peace; yet representative Secularists were at continual strife with one another. The truth about Secularism is that it is all talk, talk, and nothing but talk.

On Tuesday evening Mr. WATTS opened by reaffirming and reinforcing the case for Secularism, recapitulated the points of contrast between Christianity and Secularism, and enumerated the six articles in the Secularist Bill of Rights, summing up the whole in the aphorism that Secularism proclaims freedom for all and persecution for none. Having completed this work of exposition, he would now assume the defensive. The night before his opponent had frequently quoted from "Saladin's" writings, describing him as a Secularist. He (Mr. Watts) had denied the accuracy of that description, but Dr. Jamieson seemed to doubt his word. He now read "Saladin's" answer to a correspondent from a number of the Agnostic Journal for 1894, in which "Saladin" states: "We are not a Secularist." He had thus vindicated his veracity.

Dr. JAMIESON'S contribution to this evening's debate was such skimble-skamble stuff that, in mercy to him, the most of it is better left unrecorded. There was the old fatuous insistence on trivialities, the almost monomaniacal harping on the sterility of Secularism in the matter of education, benevolent institutions, etc., on its demoralising doctrine of marriage, copious quotations from old journals like the Shield of Faith and the Secular Review to prove that Secularists are all that is vile and contemptible, the reading of a sentence from a correspondent warning Dr. Jamieson to watch Mr. Watts's quotations narrowly, with general observations, drawn chiefly from Dr. Sexton's Fallacies of Secularism, to show that Secularism is entirely destructive in its propaganda, and that, in fine, it is a godless, bibleless, unethical, and anti-social abortion. The overwhelming dreariness of this wilderness of drivel was only relieved by one or two far-sundered spots of green, and these patches were verdant with a vengeance. Referring to Mr. Watts's strictures upon the doctrine of eternal punishment, Dr. Jamieson exclaimed that, although it suited Secularists to raise a bruntum fulmen against it in public, they sometimes admitted sub rosa that that doctrine had its uses. For example, in an old N.S.S. Almanack he found, under the date of the anniversary of the Great Comet, "Populace panic-stricken. Seven hundred kept mistresses married." Here the fear of divine vengeance prompted seven hundred men to make reparation for the wrong inflicted on as many women. Surely this was a moral gain. Then, too, in appealing to Christians to be just to Secularists, Charles Bradlaugh sometimes urged: "If you believe that the heretic is doomed to everlasting misery hereafter, surely the thought of his awful fate should move you to tenderness towards him here." That is to say, Bradlaugh saw clearly that the logical consequence of a belief in eternal punishment ought to be that of awaking pity, and even love, for those in danger of it.

It was in vain that Mr. Watts struggled manfully to redeem the debate from utter frustration, by an eloquent appeal to his opponent to abstain from personalities, and a studied avoidance of all causes of digression. The spirit of divergation had smitten the protagonist of Christianity, and the voice of reason fell on unheeding ears. Whenever any scrap of argument did come his way Mr. Watts made short work of it. This was conspicuously the case with Dr. Jamieson's attack on the teaching of Secularism as to marriage.

Having first of all cleared Mr. Bradlaugh's memory from the charge that he sponsored Free Love, Mr. WATTS affirmed the Secularist view of marriage as essentially one of monogamic union, in which one man lived with one woman in true and lasting affection. But what of the Christian theory of marriage? There was not one word in the Bible which forbade polygamy, and Luther himself, in the case of the Landgrave of Hesse, authoritatively sanctioned that prince's bigamy. As for Dr. Jamieson's diatribes upon the characters of prominent Secularists, his rule seemed to be: If Secularists are bad men, Secularism is to blame; but if Christians misbehave, they cannot be Christians at all. However, what was sauce for the goose was sauce for the gander, and he could easily and abundantly prove that in all ages professing Christians had not only been accused, but had been convicted, of every imaginable vice and crime. Mr. Watts illustrated and enforced this indictment by conclusive quotations from Mosheim, Miall, Dick, Wesley, etc. J. P. GILMOUR.

(To be concluded.)

"I wonder why people persist in wearing squeaking shoes on Sunday?" "That is the day set apart for manifestations of the sole."

Digitized by Google

INGERSOLL AND SAM JONES.

(Continued from p. 317.)

INGERSOLL ON JONES.

AFTER obtaining the views of Rev. Sam Jones on Colonel Ingersoll and the influence of his lectures and teachings, the Globe-Democrat sent a stenographer to the latter, as already explained, with instructions to ask questions as nearly identical as possible with reference to views entertained as to the Georgia revivalist and his methods. It was impossible to carry out the instructions literally, as Mr. Ingersoll, after a little hesitancy, finally warmed to the subject, anticipated queries, and really delivered a very forcible lecture on the question of revivals past and present, with a very lucid definition of Agnosticism as compared with Atheism, and more especially immorality, or indifference as to right and wrong. The Colonel was in the best of humors, told each friend who was admitted to the room that he was in perfect health and was carrying his sixty-one years without an effort, and assured the interviewer that he had nothing of any particular interest to say about Sam Jones or any other religious enthusiast. When pressed for an answer to the question, "What do you think of Mr. Jones and of the influence of his preaching?" he at length said:—

"Assuming that the gentleman's sermons are correctly reported, and basing my opinion on what little of them I have read, I cannot say that I particularly admire the style, though the argument does not appear to differ very much from that which revivalists have used ever since I can remember. When I was a boy the people had very few amusements. There were no theatres in the smaller towns, no museums, and nothing in the way of entertainment except the travelling circus which came round once a year. This circus generally carried a few mangy-looking animals, so that religious people could have a satisfactory excuse for going. In the winter the little towns were cut off from the rest of the world. There were no railroads, the rivers were frozen, and the mail arrived about once in every week. As a result, the people amused themselves every winter in 'getting religion.' The towns would be invaded by two or three evangelists, who derived great pleasure from exciting their audiences by vivid descriptions of the future home of the unconverted. They would describe the caverns of hell into which rolled and dashed the waves of brimstone, and also the tortures and agonies inflicted by the worm that never dies. These meetings were held every evening, and the people were invited to come forward to the 'anxious-seat,' very much as they have been asked every evening for the last two or three weeks in St. Louis.

"I remember that the first to come forward were generally the little girls, who, recalling that they had pilfered a little sugar, or, perhaps, a piece of cake, felt conscience-smitten, and were hence the first to respond. Then some of the men would join in the procession, and some few would be converted every evening amidst great rejoicing. This thing would last about a month, and nothing was talked about except religion. The majority of the people were about half-crazy—the preachers altogether so. They would convert from fifty to one hundred, and then, when business brisked up in the spring and people began to resume their usual vocations, most of the converts would backslide. But, in justice to them, I must add that the following winter they would be on hand again, ready to reoccupy the anxious-seat. Nearly every town had what you might call a stock company of periodical converts, who went through the same experience every winter, told how wicked they had been, how happy they were, how ashamed they were of having backslidden, and how gratified they were to be again redeemed."

"Did they become better citizens?"

"I never knew anybody to become better by being what Mr. Jones and other orthodox preachers call 'converted.' On the contrary, I have known many young generous fellows who got religion, and immediately became sour, unsociable, and mean. There is a conversion, if I may use the word, which comes in the nature of things. There is a time in the life of a young man when he feels responsibility touching him, when he makes up his mind to leave the follies of youth and become a man, with a goal fixed in his mind. This often comes when he falls in love, and feels that he wishes to do something for somebody else. This is what I call genuine conversion, not born of excitement, or bad air, or an overheated room, or an idiotic impulse. We may go a step farther, and say that the same thing happens with animals. There comes a time when the colt quits kicking over the traces and goes to pulling and eating his oats like a well-regulated horse, and when the dog quits chasing his tail, begins to look dignified, and assumes an air of partnership with the proprietor."

"Do you think the influence of Mr. Jones's revivals is injurious?"

"Yes, I think the so-called religious revival is hurtful as well as useless. The methods used are calculated to excite, not to enlighten. There is no appeal to the judgment; the reasoning faculties are not called into play. The passions are aroused, and especially the fear of punishment and the hope of reward. Thousands and thousands of men and women have been excited to such a degree that they have become partially insane—many wholly so. Religious excitement has unsettled as many minds as any other cause, and the asylums to-day are filled with men and women who have lost their reason in consequence of these foolish revivals, conducted by orthodox ministers. Men and women are made to believe that they have offended an infinite God; that they have hurt the feelings of the Holy Ghost; that their actions here, and especially their beliefs, are to have eternal consequences; that they deserve to be eternally damned for what they have done, and that God is anxious to damn them, but is held back by his son, who seems to have a little more mercy than is credited to the old gentleman himself.

"They are also told that they can have an eternal reward of infinite joy if they only repent and believe in this son. In the conflict of emotions produced by these idiotic sermons many, as I said before, have lost their reason. If the sermons of Mr. Jones, or any other revivalist, could be answered from the same platform by a philosopher, by a humanitarian, or by a man of sense, no human being would ever be 'converted.' Such a proceeding would end forever the revival system.

"Another great fault of these revivals is, that people are told that those who do right have to carry a cross, while those who do wrong have the benefit of the pleasures of this world—that the wicked have their good time here, while the good suffer on account of their goodness and self-denial, but will be rewarded in another world. All this is not only idiotic, but it is positively immoral. The facts are exactly the reverse. Only those carry a cross who do wrong. On the shoulders of those who do right the cross changes, and the man is borne upward and onward.

"That is the true philosophy of life. Men should act right because right action pays; men should shun wrong because wrong inflicts and produce suffering. Everything is moral that tends to increase or to preserve human happiness and human well-being; everything is immoral that decreases or puts in peril human well-being. In other words, all that preserves or increases happiness is right. There is no necessity for being miserable here in order to secure happiness in this world; and if you are really happy in this life, happy by virtue of living consistently and doing right, there is no danger of being damned in another world. I know of no form of orthodox religion that contains any philosophy, and I never knew of a philosopher occupying a pulpit."

"In one of his recent sermons Sam Jones said that the terms 'Agnostic' and 'fool' were synonymous. What is your reply to that criticism or statement?"

Mr. Ingersoll laughed good-humoredly, and said: "Coming from the Georgia evangelist, I think the remark calls for no reply, and it is certainly no argument. It is a curious fact that the savages are perfectly certain about things that philosophers admit are beyond the limitations of the human mind. The savage of Central Africa knows all about his god or gods. He knows just how the world was made, and how the human race was started. He knows exactly where we are all going after death. He doesn't know anything about this world, but he does know all about the other two worlds. He doesn't know anything about man, but he knows all about the gods. Now, if the Rev. Sam Jones would just think for a few moments, he would probably admit that he doesn't know that any God exists at all. No doubt he believes it, but he certainly does not know it; and if he is honest enough to admit the truth, he admits that he is an Agnostic, or, to use the word he seems to prefer, a fool.

"I confess that I don't know whether a God exists or not. This is the only world I have ever lived in or have any memory of, so that I might be called a provincialist. That there may be other worlds, I don't deny. There may be a God. There may be many. If there is one, I hope there are more, for one would be so lonesome. I don't know the origin of the universe, having no evidence on the subject. It is beyond my mind. I cannot conceive of the creation of something from nothing, nor can I conceive of something being changed back again to nothing. In other words, I cannot conceive creation, and consequently cannot conceive a creator. I don't say there is no God—I simply say I don't know. So far as my acquaintance extends, I can truthfully say I never met a minister who did. Mr. Jones may be in the possession of facts of which I am ignorant, but if he knows there is a God I would like to have him tell his next congregation how he knows, and what his evidence is.

"Mr. Jones says an Agnostic is the same as a fool. The difference between an Agnostic and a fool is about this: The Agnostic doesn't know. He has sense enough to know he doesn't know, and honesty enough to admit it. A fool, on the other hand, says he knows, whether he really thinks he does or not. Now, I am not prepared to admit that Humboldt was a fool, yet he said he didn't know whether there was a God or not. Few men would call Louis Agassiz a fool, yet he said that science had not advanced far enough to say with any certainty whether God exists or not. I don't think Darwin was a fool, yet he stated distinctly that the questions of God and immortality were beyond the limits of his powers of reasoning. Ernst Haeckel, the greatest naturalist in the world, is no fool, yet he says he doesn't know. Does Mr. Jones suggest that Huxley was ever a fool? As a matter of fact, he is the man who invented this definition of Agnosticism as representing this certain stage of thought. As a matter of fact, the greatest thinkers and scientists of this century have adopted this position, and I don't think that the fact of the Rev. Sam Jones denouncing them as fools will have even a tendency towards dimming the splendor of their reputation."

Digitized by Google

The next question put to Colonel Ingersoll was the following: "What have you to say in answer to the contention of Mr. Jones, that the moral influence of your lectures is calamitous, especially among those who have not had the benefit of being reared in a Christian home, as you were?"

Without hesitating a moment longer than was necessary to shake hands with an old friend who entered the room while the question was being asked, the Colonel replied: "Mr. Jones evidently doesn't possess a clear conception of morality, or he would not insinuate that what I say has an immoral tendency. He seems to think that certain beliefs are essential to morality, that it is moral to believe in the supernatural, in the inspiration of the Bible, in the atonement, and in the scheme of redemption; and immoral to believe in absolute liberty of thought—immoral to advocate investigation and the use of the natural reasoning power that we possess. He seems to regard blind credulity as moral, and intellectual courage of thought as immoral. I, on the other hand, think morality lives in the domain of action rather than in the realm of belief. A man may accept a creed blindly and at the same time be a very immoral person; while, on the other hand, if a man is really moral, it makes but little difference what creed he may accept or deny. Every religion preaches ordinary morality, and, in addition to this, the necessity of belief in certain supernatural things and the observance of certain ceremonies. Now, if you were to take morality from religion, nothing of any value would be left: whereas, if you take from morality itself its religion, it would remain just as valuable as ever, and even more valuable.

"I deny having said anything in my lectures that is calculated to make people immoral. I have told them that the Bible is not inspired, but that what is true in it is just as good as if it had been; while the bad in it could not be made good by being inspired. I have told people that men wrote the book called the Bible, and that it is full of the ignorance of the times in which it was written. Also, that some of the things in it are noble and lofty, while it also contains things that are cruel, heartless, and even infamous. I have said that we should throw away the bad and preserve the good. I have told everyone to be honest with himself, and to express his opinions honestly. I have warned my hearers against being controlled by prejudice or educational influences, and I have also said that the world was for the living and not for the dead, but that each one should live in accordance with his ideal. I have said all in my power in favor of intellectual liberty; I have spoken in favor of all that is good and just and generous and noble. I deny that I have ever uttered a word calculated to make anyone immoral.

"I have not been guilty of the inconsistency of telling people they can act like devils for seventy years, and then be forgiven in a moment, and be carried up to heaven by hosts of angels. Such a doctrine is immoral. I don't tell the cashier of a bank that it is wrong to steal, and then add that if he steals every dollar in the vault he can repent and be forgiven as well in Canada as in the United States; neither do I tell him that when he repents there will be more joy in heaven than over ninety and nine honest cashiers who never stole a dollar. That doctrine is immoral, but it is not mine. Neither do I tell people that they are accountable for the sins of a couple of people who lived 6,000 years ago, and that they can be justly punished for offences they never committed. That would be immoral. Nor have I told people that they can get to heaven by the virtues of another man, or that another man or god can be good and they can get the credit for it. That, too, would be immoral.

"I have not told people that they ought to become heavenly paupers and enjoy the glories of another world purchased for them by another person. That would be immoral. But I have told them that if they would be happy they must earn happiness; that happiness cannot be received as alms; that, as a fact, happiness is the interest which decent actions draw; that they must be good for themselves. I have also told people that there is no such thing as forgiveness; that everybody has to bear the consequences of his own acts, and that these consequences are a universal police, whom nobody can bribe and no one avoid. That is moral, and in addition to being moral it is true.

"I have never told any one that a God of infinite wisdom and goodness could make hundreds of millions of people, knowing that they would be eternally damned. That would be immoral, because it makes the God revivalists talk about a monster. A God of infinite wisdom and power has no right to make a failure, and certainly a man who is born to eternal damnation can hardly be called a success.

"If I could change a stone into a human being, knowing that he would be a murderer and be hanged before he could get religion, and hence, according to orthodoxy, go to hell, I think I might far better leave the stone alone. If God makes people out of dust and knows they will be damned, he had far better leave the dust alone. I don't think that any God has a right to add to the misery of mankind. To think otherwise seems to me to amount to an insinuation that God is a monster and a savage."

"In other words, Colonel Ingersoll, while Sam Jones thinks the tendency of your lectures is immoral, you think the criticism applies more accurately to his preaching?"

"I don't want to criticise any one man in particular," was the reply. "The religion of our day is immoral. Most of the sermons preached are immoral, and, as a rule, they are subversive of the aims and ends of justice. I do honestly think that if we had a few less sermons and a few more lectures of a sensible kind, the world would actually grow better, brighter, and happier."

"Do you think the revivals of to-day are as useless and hurtful as those you have described as being held when you were a boy?"

"In answer to that I would say we are passing through a change. People are slowly becoming more and more thoughtful, and I think the evangelist will, in consequence, soon become a thing of the past. The preacher of the future will be a teacher. He will be one of the high priests of nature, and he will tell people how to live in this world, and how to enjoy the sunshine of this life. The sensational exhorters will have to go to the rear. They are no longer useful, if they were ever so. They are, indeed, a hindrance. Only a little while ago, in Spain, the people who were afflicted with cholera mobbed the doctors, looted the drug stores, and relied upon religious processions to stay the pestilence. They were behind the times, just as is the revivalist who tries to stay the onward march of crime by appealing to heavens or hells. He is pursuing the same course, with a certainty of achieving the same results. The world is beginning to see that people act and think for themselves under the circumstances of the hour, and to realise that to improve people their condition must be changed. This can be done only by developing the brain and civilising the heart. We must convince the people that wrong-doing is an ignorant blunder, that to get right is an effort of intelligence, and when these thoughts are firmly embodied in the minds of the people there will be no further use for medicine men, for augurs, or for evangelists. To appeal to the supernatural will be useless.

"When that time comes man will cease to think that a God controls the forces of this world, and man will become the providence of man."

—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

May 26, Liverpool.

June 2, N.S.S. Conference; 9, Glasgow; 10 and 11, Aberdeen; 13 and 14, Dundee; 16, Edinburgh; 23, Manchester; 24, Derby; 30, Sheffield.

July 6, Chester-le-Street; 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14, Bristol; 16 and 17, Plymouth; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York in August, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

In the Revue Scientifique (May 11) there is an interesting article by M. J. V. Laborde on "Microcephales and the Descent of Man." It is accompanied by portraits of microcephales and a chimpanzee. M. Laborde holds it as a biological law that the brain cannot be reduced below a certain weight and size without the intellectual functions being reduced. The microcephales mentioned approach in intellectual status to the chimpanzee. M. Laborde, however, repeats the saying of M. Broca: "I would rather pass for an intelligent ape than an imbecile man."

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

FLORENCE was shaken by an earthquake on Saturday night, May 18. Bells were set ringing in many houses, and people ran in crowds into the streets. Of course the performances were at once stopped at the theatres. Some persons were killed and a great many injured. At Grassina forty houses were laid in ruins; at Lapaggi several buildings fell in, burying some persons who were unable to escape. At San Martino the church was destroyed, the congregation being overwhelmed by the falling masonry. Several were crushed to death, and a large number badly injured. Believers in "Providence" should ask themselves why the worst mischief was wrought in a place of worship.

Thirty persons have been burnt to death in the Russian town of Brest-Litewski, which has been destroyed by fire. This, however, is a trifle to eternal hell hereafter. The buildings destroyed included three Russian churches and one Catholic church.

Our readers will probably remember our review of Mr. Kernahan's God and the Ant. It appears to us a worthless book, but the Methodist Times calls it "a very fine study." "It is really an apology for God," says the Methodist organ, "and the solution is that he suffers more than we do." Poor God! It is sad to know that he suffers so much, and all for nothing; but the saddest thought is that he has to leave his "apology" in the hands of little people who, on their own showing, are relatively like maggots crawling about in a mouldy cheese.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children held a meeting recently at the Mansion House. One of the speakers was Lady Ancaster, who stated that the Queen had said to her: "Oh, dear! to think that it should be necessary to have such a society in this country." It was a very natural exclamation. England often boasts of being the most Christian country in the world, yet savages would be ashamed to treat their children as thousands treat theirs in this Bible-reading land.

Mr. Price Hughes wants the Wesleyan Methodists to raise £100,000 for "missionary" purposes. One of these days the people to whom missionaries are sent will learn of our brutality, and send over some of their own missionaries to teach us the error and wickedness of our ways.

Mr. Waugh, secretary of the Cruelty Society, has never apologised for the monstrous lie he once uttered, that Secularists were the worst ill-users of children. He may choose to forget it, but we shall remember it against him. Unfortunately, from his point of view, some of the very worst cases his Society has taken in hand have disproved his lying assertion. The culprits have been Christians, and occasionally very pious Christians. Not one of them has been a Secularist.

We like to acknowledge any good work that Christians are engaged in, and we congratulate the Rev. W. Douglas Morrison, the chaplain of Wandsworth Prison, on the partial success of his efforts to improve our penal system, which is a scandal to our civilisation. We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Morrison at a recent Conference of the Humanitarian League, and he was certainly far more sensible and humane than another prison chaplain who talked nonsense with a God Almighty air.

Mr. Morrison is justly praised in the Methodist Times, which rather naively remarks that his "principles are all laid down by that great jurist, Jeremy Bentham, but have hitherto been disregarded." Our contemporary forgets that Jeremy Bentham was an Atheist.

The Methodist writer rebukes Lombroso, the great criminologist, for his low estimate of human nature. A little further on the Methodist writer states that "Christians believe that the image of God is even in a man or a woman predisposed to vice and crime." This is going a great deal beyond Lombroso, who regards the criminal as an abnormal specimen of humanity. According to the Methodist writer, we are all afflicted with the same evil predisposition; so that Christianity is more pessimistic than Science.

Talmage says that sceptics are always asking, Why? This is how he answers them: "There are so many things they cannot get explained. They cannot understand the Trinity, or how God can be sovereign and yet man a free agent. Neither can I. They say: 'I don't understand why a good God should let sin come into the world.' Neither do I. You say: 'Why was that child started in life with such disadvantages, while others have physical and mental equipment?' I cannot tell. They get out of church on Easter morning and say: 'That doctrine of the resurrection confounded me.' So it is to me a mystery beyond unravelment."

It is foolish to let the cat out of the bag in this fashion. Still, the folly has its compensations. For one thing, it saves Talmage the trouble of discussion. Why should he debate the Resurrection? It is a mystery. The sceptic who wants to discuss it mustn't apply to Talmage. He must apply to someone who is a little more foolish; someone who doesn't see that discussing Christianity only demonstrates its utter irrationality.

The New York Sun suggests that Talmage should get stereopticon views to illustrate his realistic sermons. It says that his verbal descriptions of the scenes in the skies of the New Jerusalem and those down in limbo, or deeper still, really ought to be translated from language into stereopticon pictures, which would have a hundred times the potency of his words, even with his widest mouth and wildest gestures.

Dr. Heber Newton, of New York, gave a sermon on the resurrection of Jesus, which he declared was spiritual, though his disciples mistakenly supposed it to be material. He has been denounced by many of his fellow sky-pilots, Dr. Tyler declaring that he denied in his sermon what he teaches in the service, for he repeats every Sunday the Apostles' Creed, which declared "the resurrection of the body." The Rev. Mr. Harsha accuses Dr. Newton of striking a blow at the Christian faith. He says, if the disciples were mistaken, all the Christian Church is, and has been, at sea. The Rev. I. M. Haldeman declares that Dr. Newton is a traitor to the Christian cause and worse than an infidel.

The Roman Catholic clergy are expressly forbidden to conduct the funeral service of any one who dies in the Orthodox Greek faith, so that Russian sailors, who happen to die in France, run a considerable risk, in spite of French enthusiasm for Russia, of being refused Christian burial.

The Abbé Lemire reports from Rome that the Pope was so painfully affected by the new tax on the religious orders in France as to shed tears. He would not counsel resistance, but says he was only prevented from breaking off diplomatic relations with the Republic because it might be detrimental to the Catholic schools and other missionary enterprises in the East. The pocket seems to be the vital point in all religions.

Apropos of the reception given by the Pope to the ex-Duke of Parma, the following anecdote is told: The Pope, wishing to console his deposed and melancholy visitor, said: "Never mind, one must be resigned to the decrees of heaven, which prove to us the iniquity of the world. I also, as you know, am the victim of the evils of the time." "Your Holiness," interrupted the ex-Duke, "is not so badly off, being in your own house, while I must seek for hospitality far away." The Pope changed the subject.

Mr. Carvell Williams asked a question in the House of Commons relative to the teaching of "The Children's Hymn Book," which is a Church of England production, "arranged in the order of the Church's year," by the School Board of Hambledon, Hants. The only satisfaction he received was the statement by Mr. Acland that the Education Department consider that School Boards will be wise to refrain from providing hymn-books for children which are connected with any particular church or denomination, and to which objection might be taken by some of the parents.

M. Pierre Courbet writes in Cosmos against Professor Max Muller for saying that, if the Buddhist Life of Jesus, brought forward by M. Notovitch is true, "It would demonstrate once for all that Jesus is a real historic personage." He says: "What! because there has been discovered in an obscure monastery of the Himalayas a manuscript that nobody knew about up to this day, do you pretend that this manuscript constitutes such an historic monument that it would smooth away all difficulties relative to the life of Jesus? When an historic work has not been known to its contemporaries, it is necessary, if we are to accord it serious belief, that its author should be known, and that we should be able to show that the work in question is really his."

M. Courbet thinks there is no need of any new document to establish the historic character of the life of Jesus; but he does not bring to the evidence the sceptical criticism which he brings to the work of M. Notovitch. He displays his own ignorance of the subject by talking as if the Gospels were demonstrated to be the actual work of eye-witnesses, and by quoting the palpable forgery in Josephus and the questionable passage in the Annals ascribed to Tacitus, as if these were decisive. He even makes out that the Toldos Jeshu says that Jesus raised the dead. What the Toldos Jeshu does say may be seen by any reader of The Jewish Life of Christ.

Digitized by Google

The following comes from America, and is not vouched for. Some may think that, if not true, it deserves to be: "A Congo native, who has been taught to read and write, has just sent a letter (his first) to the Archbishop of Canterbury. It reads as follows: 'Great and good chief of the tribe of Christ, greeting: The humblest of your servants kisses the hem of your garments, and begs you to send to his fellow servants more gospel and less rum. In the bonds of Christ. UGALIA.'"

The Holy Carpet has gone, as usual, from Cairo to Mecca; but many intending pilgrims have been scared by the early outbreak of cholera. Even Muslims are becoming too infected with rationalism to fancy that the holiness of the carpet will ward off disease germs.

Catholicism has been defined as a religion of candle-grease; but this definition will no longer serve, since the Pope has given his sanction to illuminating churches by electricity, except on the altars, which, as before, will only be lighted by wax candles or lamps with olive oil, the altar being specially dedicated to God, who is fond of the old fashions.

Mariano Gentile, the millionaire, who died recently at Messina, left his immense fortune to the Jesuits, although he had many poor relations. The fact has caused much indignation in Sicily.

The foundation-stone of the projected Roman Catholic cathedral for Westminster will be laid by Cardinal Vaughan on June 29. There is to be a great gathering of the faithful from all parts on this occasion. According to the prophecy of the leading Catholic organ in this country, the crowd will be the "biggest ever gathered for a single service since the time of the Reformation." Perhaps it will be, and perhaps not. In any case, the London Echo says, it will not be a bigger crowd than other religious bodies, "or even Secularists," could bring together, if they made as great efforts as the Roman Catholics have made to secure a gigantic display. Still, it is no use blinking the fact that the Catholic Church is making headway in England. It seems destined to absorb a large part of the Protestant Church; and, as Charles Bradlaugh predicted, the great fight of the future will be between Catholicism and Freethought—the two logical extremes of Faith and Reason.

The confession of Arthur Orton, the "Tichborne claimant," whose case excited so much attention about twenty years ago, ought to remind people of the little weight to be given to popular judgment of evidence. The mass held that the claimant, having been recognised by his mother, in the dark, must be the real Sir Roger, and, with his counsel, Dr. Kenealy, he was, for a time, one of the most popular men of the day. Such facts should serve as a warning against the too ready reception of strange stories of years gone by.

W. D. Howells, the American novelist, in a recent interview, said: "I do not go to church, because the sermons I am likely to hear make me antagonistic. I feel that I want to get right up in my seat and refute, then and there, many of the dogmas and arguments of the so-called Christian life."

The Messiah business is not as flourishing as in the old days. Mr. Christ Koresh Teed has suspended his Flaming Sword; the prophet, T. L. Harris, who captivated Laurence Oliphant, and was said to have been rejuvenated, is showing signs of age, and losing the regard of young lady followers; and Christ Schweinfurth, known as the Rockford Messiah, has been indicted by the grand jury of Winnebango county, with three of his "angels," who, it is said, have become mothers under his ministry, professedly through the instrumentality of the Holy Ghost. They are charged with living in open defiance of morality. It always was a risky profession.

At a banquet of ministers in Chicago, on the evening of May 1, Fred L. Chapman, editor of a church paper, said he had thoroughly investigated the cost of conversions in that city, and he found that each soul saved by the Baptists cost $285; by the Methodists, $384; the Presbyterians, $533, and the Congregationalists, $580, the average being $443. Under the law of competition it would appear that the Baptists will ultimately possess the earth.

Under the heading, "A Christianised Kafir," the Pretoria Press, of South Africa, reports the case of a native charged with rape and attempted murder. It says: "The accused was a member of a choir of Christian natives in this city. A hymn-book was found near the scene of the struggle, and, after being arrested, he asked for a Bible, which he said had been in his pocket." Perhaps he had been reading the choice stories in the book of Judges, how the Israelites took the daughters of Shiloh, and how the Levite treated his concubine.

It is reported that a son of Mr. Frederic Harrison, the famous Positivist, has just joined the Catholic Church. Our readers will remember that Mrs. Besant's daughter was recently reported to have joined the same community. Those who are tired of thinking, or incapable of it, find Catholicism a soft pillow for their poor heads.

In the case of the young lady librarian who sued a man of God at Los Angeles for a slander uttered in public prayer, the court decided that no prayer containing a slander, publicly uttered, can be exempt from the legal consequences, and that no communication made by a pastor to his congregation is privileged because of such relation.

On Sunday, at Clermont Ferrand, they celebrated, with a grand historical cavalcade, the eighth centenary of the First Crusade which Pope Urban II. preached at Clermont, and which the people received with shouts of "God wills it." The religious wars then began lasted for centuries, involved millions of lives, and finally left the hated Moslem in possession of the holy places at Jerusalem, while Turkish soldiers still have to keep the peace between rival Christian sects.

It is noted as a somewhat curious coincidence that, just as the Crusades are occupying the public mind in Paris once more, arrangements are being made for building a Mohammedan mosque in Paris.

In Paris there is now open a Buddhist Temple, so M. Lafont assures us in his new book on Buddhism. He also mentions that he knows of Christian missionaries, sent out to convert the Buddhists, who became adepts of the Buddhist faith.

Dean Farrar has just issued a book on The Lord's Prayer, which is advertised in the Spectator as "Most racy and readable." Has the new Dean been perusing the Freethinker, and has he caught its profane infection?

The Rev. Scott Hershey, of Boston, is reported as saying that there are two millions of young men in America "who are practical and theoretical unbelievers in the Christian religion, through the influence of Colonel Ingersoll." Let us hope it is true.

Four youths have been charged before the Dover magistrates with playing football on Sunday. The gravamen of the charge was that the game "was played during the hours of divine service." But as it was not played near a church the case was dismissed. Those four youths have much to be thankful for. In the old Bible days a man was put to death for picking up firewood on the Sabbath. Playing football would have meant roasting alive, at the very least.

Last Sunday evening a sermon on "The Use of Atheists" was preached at Westminster Chapel by W. Evans Hurndall, M.A. The chapel is a large edifice, and the preacher (as we are informed by a friend who attended) was a man of eloquence. But he knew little of Atheism. He admitted the brilliancy of the Atheistic attack on Christianity, and alluded in highly complimentary language to the late Charles Bradlaugh; but he told his congregation that Atheism was "sin in its most shocking form," and that the Atheist had "no reason to lead a moral life." Mr. Hurndall mistakes his little tabernacle for the illimitable universe. He doesn't understand any way of being good but his own; and he forgets that the most immoral men of the age are professed Christians.

Parson Collins, of Blisland, near Bodmin, in Cornwall, has mediæval notions as to the function and power of the Church. Four lads in his parish committed an assault on a servant girl, and the parson induced her to forgive them out of consideration for their parents. Two of the culprits agreed to go to church, confess their crime, and receive absolution. This they did, and after the service they distributed £2 worth of bread at the church gates, by way of penance. There was a great concourse of people and plenty of laughter and horseplay. One lad gave away the bread, and the other spooned out treacle from a big tin, while a member of the militia band discoursed upon a trombone. "Bread and treacle Sunday" will long be remembered in the parish. Whether morality has gained anything by the parson's interference we leave our readers to decide for themselves.

A "Christian Israelite" who has "served the Lord for forty years" advertises for some "kind Christian friend" to lend him £30. What on earth, or elsewhere, is Jesus Christ doing? Why doesn't he come to the relief of this servant? The streets of the New Jerusalem are paved with gold, and a few ounces might easily be spared (say when they are repaving) for a found sheep of the House of Israel.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, May 19, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London, E.C.: 7.30, "The Flight of the Jerusalem Ghost."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—May 26, Manchester. June 9, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

C. Dodd.—See paragraph. Liverpool is a big city, and should give Mr. Putnam big audiences. We note your memorandum re the old matter.

J. W. Gott.—Glad to hear the Bradford Secularists were so pleased with Mr. Putnam. He will make friends, and keep them, wherever he goes.

W. Witty (Hull).—Some comparative moral statistics of the religions in India appeared in the Freethinker of March 17.

A. McInnes (Glasgow).—As you are "a follower of Jesus," he may know something about you. We don't. It is kind of you to invite us to answer your letters in a Birmingham paper. Perhaps it is equally kind on our part to decline your invitation.

J. F. Haines.—Shall appear in our next.

Recruit.—Pleased to hear that you thought Mr. Foote's lecture "grand and instructive." Father Furniss's Sight of Hell, denounced by "Dangle" in the Clarion, has often been held up to abhorrence in Freethought journals.

James Neate.—See paragraph.

Pat.—Joseph Barker was for a brief period co-editor of the National Reformer with Charles Bradlaugh. It was more than thirty years ago. Joseph Barker did return to Christianity, and the English Freethinkers thought it was because he could not "boss the show." He was a man of frequent changes, and nearly boxed the compass of opinion.

G. Lovett.—Marchant is entitled to his opinion that he succeeded in closing Secular meeting-places. He is not cut out to do anything of the kind. Mr. Foote is perfectly indifferent to Marchant's opinion of him. He is content to let his pamphlets on the Atheist Shoemaker and the Hall of Science Libel Case speak for themselves. They will produce their effect on persons accessible to reason. Other persons must be left to their natural stupidity.

G. Sudley.—(1) We do not remember such a sentence in Mr. Holyoake's writings. He is an Atheist himself, and the author of a very interesting and instructive Trial of Theism. It is impossible that he can regard an Atheist as "one who is without morality," though he may have said, and said truly, that the vulgar generally regard an Atheist in that light. (2) Lord Bacon's views on Atheism are expressed in his two essays on "Atheism" and "Superstition." There is a careful article on his lordship's criticism of Atheism in the second volume of Mr. Foote's Flowers of Freethought. (3) Catholic monasteries and nunneries are not subject to government inspection. They are treated as private houses. (4) We are quite satisfied that such institutions have been the scenes of grave scandals, and that they should be subject to inspection, in the common interest of human liberty.

J. K. Maagaard.—Shall appear.

C. W. Smith.—The Chronicle correspondence on "Is Christianity Played Out?" appeared early in 1892, we believe.

J. Keast.—Sorry to hear there are threats of disorder at the Bristol open-air meetings. We hope the local Secularists will support the Branch platform.

J. Burrell.—Thanks. See paragraph.

Thor.—Shall appear.

S. H. Alison says he is in Scotland for an indefinite period, and cannot book any dates for London Branches.

A. Adams, secretary, desires us to state that the Hull Branch has decided to discontinue its meetings during the summer. They will be resumed on the first Sunday in October.

A. C. L.—Cuttings are always welcome.

Absalom.—Thanks for your interesting letter. The verses shall appear.

E. C. Smith.—We are obliged for the copy of the Theosophist pamphlet, but we think we have given sufficient attention to Mrs. Besant, unless we notice a fresh development in her meteoric career. We dare say there will be something to reprint from Mr. Putnam's letters when the Truthseeker arrives.

J. Saunders.—Next week. Thanks.

A. J. Woodward.—The joke is an old one. We told it and printed it years ago.

Papers Received.—Derby Daily Telegraph—Chat—Crescent—Accrington Advertiser—Islamic World—Twentieth Century—Post—Willesden Chronicle—Public Opinion—Open Court—Two Worlds—Birkenhead News—Light—Solidarity—Truthseeker—Progressive Thinker—Boston Guardian—Liberator—Leaves of Healing—Secular Thought—Boston Investigator—Echo—Isle of Man Times—Preston Guardian—Hull Times—Ilfracombe Gazette—Western Morning News—Morning—Builder's Journal.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE.

Since my return from Derby I have been ploughing through tremendous arrears of work. During my absence from London I left certain critical matters in the hands of Miss Vance, who carried out my instructions with tact and loyalty. I desire to express the highest appreciation of the energy and attention she has displayed during the recent trouble in connection with the Hall.

The audience, on Sunday evening, were comfortably seated, and everything looked as usual. They little knew the narrow escape we had run, or what labor and anxiety had been incurred.

Owing to my preoccupation with so much other work—to say nothing of other reasons—I must defer giving the history of this Hall of Science affair. But I am thoroughly resolved to give it before the N.S.S. Conference, and therefore I shall give it in next week's Freethinker, unless the paper or I should be dead before then.

And really a Secular leader is liable to curious dangers. I have met with several madmen in my time, and a week or two ago I met with one who is now in an asylum. He called at the office and wanted to see me alone for a few minutes. I did not grant him the interview, but advised him to go home and see a doctor. He left a basket at the office, which he would call for presently. When the police opened it they found several things, including a nice, sharp carving-knife.

With respect to the Hall of Science, it will be remembered that Mr. R. O. Smith would not promise to extend the time of his offer to the end of May. So far as the time is concerned, after what has just happened, he cannot help himself. I am therefore keeping the matter open. At the finish he will either come to terms or he will not, and in any case I presume he will consult his own interest and convenience, so that it is not so very difficult to make a reasonable calculation.

A Dublin friend, who promises to take ten shares, expresses his surprise that my appeal has to be continued. He imagined that the £600 would be raised in a few weeks at the outside. In his own mind there is no doubt whatever as to the necessity of maintaining headquarters for our party in London.

Some Lancashire friends, who have previously subscribed to various objects in our movement, say they do not understand why the London friends cannot raise the £600 themselves. "How is it," said one of them to us, "that a well-to-do Londoner doesn't come along and say, Here is the whole £600 for you?" There is some force in the observation. But, on the other side, it must be said that London has furnished the major part of what has been received from this appeal; and that, after all, the provincial friends are not uninterested in the maintenance of headquarters in London. The metropolis is really a national centre, and a success in it reacts favorably upon the entire country.

I want Secularists, in the provinces as well as in London, to regard this matter very seriously during the next week or so; and to apply for shares, or to forward donations, during that period.

A Christian opponent at the Hall of Science on Sunday evening declared that if I devoted what he called my

Digitized by Google

"brains and eloquence" to Christianity, I should not need to appeal so long for £600. Perhaps not. But I make allowance for the relative poverty and disadvantages of Secularists. Still, I do think that the amount should be more than realised by the end of May.

The few donations that have reached me since last week will be acknowledged in the next issue of this journal. I will also state the exact number of shares applied for, the total of subscriptions, and the amount of conditional promises. Reckoning these we are not far off the requisite figure, and a little fresh effort should carry us to the point of success.

I desire to correct a misapprehension of my closing remarks last week. I do not mean to act—indeed I cannot act—except in concert with the Board of Directors and the shareholders of the National Secular Hall Society (Limited). If they do not approve my plan, I shall be unable to carry it out. If they do approve it, I recognise no right on the part of others to any sort of objection. All our troubles at the Hall have arisen from conflicting powers and divided responsibilities. My own view is that an enterprise in which money is sunk should be conducted on business principles; and I shall be much astonished if that view does not commend itself to the Directors and the Shareholders.

G. W. FOOTE.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote occupied the London Hall of Science platform on Sunday evening, and lectured to a good audience on "Riddles of the Sphinx." He was listened to with profound attention, and tremendously applauded at the finish. Mr. Touzeau Parris, who kindly came and took the chair, said that such a lecture ought to have been heard in a hall twice the size and packed to the doors. He was glad to know that the President of the N.S.S. was one who could give real thought, as well as time and energy, to the work of the movement. Mr. Parris made an earnest appeal for support to the Hall scheme, which had his heartiest sympathy. His remarks on this point were supplemented by the lecturer; after which there was some good-tempered discussion. Mr. Foote lectures at the Hall of Science again this evening (May 26), taking for his subject "The Flight of the Jerusalem Ghost"—apropos of the Whitsuntide celebration.

The Derby Daily Telegraph devotes an editorial to the recent debate between Messrs. Foote and Lee. The following extract from this article will interest our readers: "For obvious reasons we shall make no attempt to report, even in summarised form, the arguments adduced; and we have the less hesitation in adopting this course because arrangements were made by the disputants themselves to have the debate reported at length and published in pamphlet form. But the considerations at which we have hinted need not stand in the way of our bearing testimony to the skill and ability with which the two opponents sustained their parts. Both men are born debaters. To earnestness of conviction, and the rare gift of submitting complex matter in an attractive form, they unite oratorical powers of a really brilliant type. Mr. Lee, despite his connection with the West of England, furnishes evidence, in moments of fervid declamation, of Hibernian origin. That he loves his work—that his heart and soul are in it, no listener to his eloquent appeals could fail to perceive. On Thursday he was manifestly suffering from weakness—he had, it transpired, been compelled to spend most of the day in bed—but he entered upon his task with an ardor which never failed him, and with a fascinating fluency which never for a moment flagged. Mr. Foote is more deliberate in his utterances, but his phraseology bespeaks the scholar no less than the elocutionist, and at times he rises to a very high level of oratorical expression. A more vivid and impassioned peroration than the one with which he brought Wednesday's meeting to a close it has rarely been our fortune to hear. We can pay its author no higher compliment than to say that it awakened recollections of Charles Bradlaugh in his best days. It is pleasant to be able to say the debate was marked by mutual courtesy. Mr. Lee gave to his conclusions the broadest basis. He made it clear, as may be imagined, that he was a whole-hearted believer in Theistic doctrine; but there was no suggestion, however remote, of the sectarian spirit. Mr. Foote, for his part, was studiously careful to avoid the aggressive style which debaters were accustomed to adopt a generation back. That he advanced many points and drew many conclusions which were distasteful to some of his hearers will, of course, be understood; but there was throughout a manifest desire on his part to uphold the dignity of the debate. The close interest with which the argumentative duel was followed was quite remarkable. On each evening the spacious building was crowded, many being unable to find sitting accommodation. Now and again there was a disposition on the part of a few sensitive listeners to interrupt the outspoken advocate of Freethought; but, in the main, Mr. Foote was well and patiently listened to, and his own sympathisers in the room did not fail to punctuate his more powerful arguments with hearty cheers. It is hardly necessary to say that the great majority of the listeners—who included a good many ladies—were favorably disposed towards Mr. Lee, whose reception was of a most enthusiastic description."

Mr. Charles Watts had a capital audience at the Secular Hall, Camberwell, last Sunday evening. His lecture was enthusiastically applauded. Mr. Roger made an excellent chairman. Mr. Clarke, of the Christian Evidence Society, offered some opposition, and invited the lecturer to a public discussion, which Mr. Watts declined. Our colleague wishes it to be understood that he cannot meet third- or fourth-rate men in set debate. He is quite ready to discuss with representative Christians, but with no others.

To-day, Sunday, May 26, Mr. Watts lectures three times in the Secular Hall, Rusholme-road, Manchester. Of course, he will have good audiences.

Mr. S. P. Putnam, our American visitor, delivered three lectures to good audiences at Bradford on Sunday. His addresses were highly appreciated, and all who were present look forward with great pleasure to the time when Mr. Putnam will visit England again. At the close of the day's work a very hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer. It was coupled with a request that he would try to induce Colonel Ingersoll to visit the old country.

Liverpool friends will note that Mr. Putnam lectures in their city to-day (May 26). They will, of course, do their very best to give him crowded meetings in the Oddfellows' Hall. Many friends within easy railway distance of Liverpool will probably take this opportunity of seeing and hearing the President of the American Secular Union. In the chances and changes of things some of them may never have another opportunity; they should therefore seize this one.

The Battersea Branch, in defiance of the "sanctity of the Sabbath," is going to have a special entertainment and dance this evening (May 26) at 8. Members of the N.S.S. and their friends are heartily welcome. The tickets (3d. and 6d.) can be obtained at the Secular Hall or at the outdoor meeting. The proceeds will go to the Branch exchequer, which is in a depleted condition.

The Bethnal Green Branch deserves great credit for the brave way in which it has carried on the open-air propaganda in Victoria Park. It has had to suffer a good deal from Christian rowdyism, but it has never been intimidated. Last Sunday afternoon, we regret to say, it had another painful experience. A man called Eltlein, who at one time asked assistance of Secularists on the ground that he was "a gentlemanly opponent of Atheism," has lately revealed himself in his true colors. He heads a band of rowdies who molest our speakers and disturb our meetings in Victoria Park. On Sunday afternoon this person's brutal tactics led to a scene of great disorder. We appeal to Freethinkers in the neighborhood to rally round the Victoria Park platform, and assist in maintaining order against these fanatical followers of the meek and lowly Jesus.

Delegates and individual members who will attend the National Secular Society's Annual Conference at Bristol, and who desire to have hotel accommodation secured for them, should communicate with the local Branch secretary, Mr. J. Keast, 32 Morgan-street, St. Paul's, Bristol.

Little time is now left to make arrangements for the Conference. The local Branch has everything ready as far as Bristol is concerned. All that now remains is for the Branches all over the country to see that they are represented. We hope to see a large gathering on Whit-Sunday.

The special Committee of the Bristol Branch will show the delegates places of interest on Whit-Sunday, as far as the time permits; and on the Monday they hope to have a pleasant outing with as many friends as can stay over.

The Manchester Branch has for some months supplied copies of the Free Review to the various Free Libraries in the city, numbering sixteen in all. The Libraries Committee have now undertaken to supply the magazine themselves. Up to the present the Branch has not been successful in its efforts to introduce the Freethinker, but it will make another attempt shortly.

Digitized by Google

REPLY TO MR. PUTNAM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Had you, as Chairman at the Hall of Science last Sunday evening, not deprecated (though you did not actually forbid) discussion after the lecture of the President of the American Secular Union, on "Freethought," I should certainly have at once offered myself as a speaker.

But though I considered Mr. Putnam's account of Christianity as a complete travesty of the facts, and therefore thought it called for some criticism from myself before the audience dispersed, I could not overlook your appeal to those present to spare the lecturer additional fatigue; especially as, when my name was called out, by someone unknown to me, your brief comment was a distinct discouragement of my being put forward as a representative of the Christian side: the instincts of a gentleman compelled silence on my part. Besides, whatever may be the views and utterances of American Freethinkers, they are men of like passions with Christians; and I could not help somewhat warmly sympathising with the very genuine friendliness of the reception of a Transatlantic cousin. Had I spoken, my first words would have been those of welcome from an Englishman to one of the great English-speaking—and, in the main, English-feeling—Republic, unbroken amity with which would almost mean peace for the whole world.

But, as my abstinence from the discussion was due only to the reasons already given, I think it is due to me, or rather to Christianity—actual Christianity, not Mr. Putnam's presentment of it—that I should be permitted to state my criticisms of his statements in your columns, especially as I desire mainly to name certain facts which it will be wise for him to take into account before he commences his lectures in the provinces.

I.—In the first place, then, he went out of his way to nail his colors to the mast, by defining what he understood by Christianity. He distinctly restricted it to—made it coterminous with—belief in these doctrines: (a) the total depravity of all mankind; (b) the vicarious sacrifice of Christ; (c) eternal damnation. And he added that faith was, for Christians, everything, and conduct and character nothing. And, further, he insisted that his definition was true of historical Christianity.

Under these circumstances, I need not go into the question whether the above-stated definition agrees with the New Testament or not; though my criticism would certainly not lose force by such an appeal. A reference to history (a) past, (b) present, will suffice.

(a) It is surely not unreasonable to appeal for the general Christian view of doctrine to what is, par excellence, the Christian summary of belief—the Apostles' Creed. Compare that Creed with Mr. Putnam's definition; and, though I am in no way desirous to minimise any common ground, I call upon the President of the American Secular Union to show any justification for substituting his statement for the Authorised Version. As to how far the doctrines, as defined by him, are in accordance with, or in antagonism to, those held by myself, I will state very briefly later on.

(b) For I will now pass from the Christian creed of the Ages to consider it in our own times. From the very nature of the case, unless he be a Don Quixote charging against windmills, the creed which Mr. Putnam devotes himself to opposing must be that which Christians actually hold now. He has surely not crossed the Atlantic to attack that which no longer exists! What, then, is the Christian creed as taught in all our churches and chapels?

It has occurred to me that Mr. Putnam may assert that in America the Christian creed is as he has defined it. I do not care at the moment to say what is or what is not the prevailing doctrine in his great country. I know that those of my own Episcopal Communion there are at one with us here. I know what was the general teaching of the two most-admired preachers in U.S.A. during the last quarter of a century—Mr. H. W. Beecher and Dr. Phillips Brooks. I know what is held by a great many leading American theologians, for I have read their books. And all this, which I know, is wholly against any very marked divergence of doctrine, such as could alone justify Mr. Putnam's statements.

But in England! Risum teneatis, amici? I do not ask Mr. Putnam to do it. But supposing some trustworthy English ally of his were to visit every church and chapel in London and large provincial city or town, not once, but many times, what proportion would the three doctrines with which he sums up Christianity bear to the general teaching of the preachers? At the most, a not large percentage.

Now I return to my own views. As to the "total depravity of all mankind," I entirely object to the phrase; but I entirely believe that the Fall is universal. As far as anything can be known by observation of all cases verifiable, every human being I have known has been sinful. As to the "vicarious sacrifice of Christ," I entirely believe in it, and believe it to be so much in accordance with the universe, as it is known to us, that, did Christianity not teach it, it might appear opposed to fundamental natural laws. As to "eternal damnation," I accept what the New Testament says, but take the words therein written in their natural sense, by which I mean their connotation in the minds of the original speakers, hearers, writers, and readers.

(1) Archdeacon Farrar—now Dean of Canterbury—in his speech at the Manchester Church Congress, October 5, 1888, brought forward a mass of details: (a) as to the meaning of such words as "eternal"; (b) as to various views on the subject of "eternal punishment" held by the Church of Christ at various times of its long history, which anyone, honestly desiring to form a just opinion, should know. I am in no way referring to Dr. Farrar's views. I am simply calling attention to what he named as his facts.

(2) I also spoke on the same subject at that Congress, and named the opinion which I have, for nearly fifteen years, constantly expressed—i.e., that belief is not at all the same as a creed, and that a so-called "infidel" may often be far more of a believer in God and in Christ than those intellectually accepting the Christian creed. I hold that it is natural and reasonable that the phrase, "belief in," in the Bible should mean what it means in ordinary life; and that, therefore, the man who shows every mark of the spirit of Christ is a believer in Christ. I fancy that many "infidels" will be in a future state (or, rather, are in the spiritual world now existing) far higher than multitudes of fairly sincere Christians; and everything I read about Christ in the Gospels, of which the latter half of St. Matthew xxv. is one remarkable instance, confirms me in this view. Nor do I recollect that any Christian to whom I have explained it has objected to it as un-Christian.

(3) But, as the name of Farrar may almost prejudice many against his views, and my opinion may be regarded as of little value, I will now bring forward the testimony of one whose ecclesiastical and theological learning was gigantic, whom no one could accuse of being Latitudinarian, and who, as his Life proves, was the last man to yield an iota of what he regarded as true dogma or Catholic truth in deference to the wishes or denunciations of the religious parties who might, at any given time during his career, be dominant in the Church. I mean Dr. Pusey.

In his volume, What is of Faith as to Everlasting Punishment? he states, as expressing the orthodox view of the Universal Church: "None will be lost whom God can save without destroying in them His own gift of freewill. None will be lost who do not obstinately to the end, and in the end, refuse God." Substitute in that quotation, for "God," "the ever-living Being Who is infinite Love and Truth and Equity and Holiness and Wisdom and Power," which sums up the Christian idea of God, and it would seem that the belief of the Church of Christ simply endorses the cry of Abraham, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

But to return to my main present thesis—viz., the immense difference between Mr. Putnam's definition of the Christian creed and the creed itself, both past and present. How did that difference come about? Well, the only person who can fully explain it is that gentleman himself. Still, one may conjecture that, for his own purposes, he has chosen to name as the true Christian creed that which undoubtedly was for a long time very dominant in America, though never in England or on the continent of Europe. He has, I presume, Calvinism in view; but even in America Calvinism has, I believe, ceased to be dominant. The present danger in America—I speak from the Christian point of view—is not that too much Calvinism is preached, but that its many noble elements are likely to be overlooked and forgotten—e.g., its splendid testimony to the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and to Christ being the only Savior from sin.

II.—But I have not yet done with Mr. Putnam's definition of the Christian faith. I have dealt with it as regards the Church's creed, but I have hardly touched at all so far on his statement—which it is difficult to quote without indignation—that "faith was, for Christians, everything, and conduct and character nothing."

I have already pointed out that faith in the Bible covers conduct and character; but it is better, because simpler, to ask whether any considerable section of the Christian Church has ever held a view so dishonoring to God and so lowering for man. Did Calvinists, when they were dominant in what is now the U.S.A., speak lightly of holiness? Were they indifferent to conduct and character? Was it not the very nobility of their lives which almost commended what was narrow and untrue in their setting forth of the creed? Is Mr. Putnam so ignorant of the history of his own people as not to recognise that, to their indomitable resolution and martyr spirit, and zeal for righteousness and abhorrence of falsehood, the American Republic, to a great extent, owes its very existence? Again, he has probably heard of Mr. Moody, a renowned American Evangelist, who has more than once visited our shores. Would it not be unjust to the last degree to say of Mr. Moody that he had not with burning enthusiasm declared the absolute necessity of a converted life, full of goodness in thought and word and deed?

Digitized by Google

But, taking the widest view possible, whom has the Christian Church ever honored the most? Why, the saints. And what does "saint" mean but an eminently good man—loving, humble, self-sacrificing, truthful, honest, just, temperate, pure?

III.—And this leads me, in conclusion, to contrast so-called "Freethought" and the Christianity Mr. Putnam has crossed the Atlantic to oppose. As he is a stranger here, he ought to be thankful to me for naming some facts emphasising the contrast.

(a) He was in the "Hall of Science." Is science taught there now? Not much, I think. I am not at all a likely person to be unjust to "Freethinkers." Often the sense of their extreme weakness in numbers, and in means, and in power, so appeals to my feelings of pity that I would fain abstain from drawing attention to that weakness. And so it was that, when three ladies of great intelligence and earnestness were, for a time, holding classes in the Hall of Science, I went out of my way in conversation with Christians, and in speaking to Freethinkers in the hall itself, to draw attention to the extraordinarily high percentage of honors attained by Mrs. Besant, Mrs. Bonner, and Miss Bradlaugh's pupils. But how long did this last? A few years only; then—I believe I am right in saying so—the classes ceased to exist in that hall. What had gained my sincere admiration turned out to be a mere flash in the pan; and I could not help thinking of the old Christian standard of "patient continuance in well-doing." And, because I was almost more than fair to Freethinkers, I am entitled to point to the hundreds and thousands of Christians who, with no desire for popularity, and out of pure love of their kind, continue, year after year, in ceaseless efforts for the intellectual (for I am not now speaking of the spiritual) improvement of their younger brothers and sisters. A single Christian man, Mr. Quintin Hogg, out of his own resources, has done more for the scientific education of the millions of our metropolis than fifty Secular Halls of Science (if they had existed!) would have done in a century!

(b) I repeat, Mr. Putnam was in the "Hall of Science." It is the cathedral of his English comrades. It does not strike one by its vast dimensions. It is not very noble in its architecture. Its adornments are not remarkable. In the same street is St. Luke's Church. It is in a poor neighborhood, with small resources. From mere curiosity I looked in last Sunday night, and was astonished at its dimensions, its architecture, and its adornments. I had anticipated nothing of the kind.

But, farther, how many "Halls of Science" or the like are there in the country? There is one at Leicester. Are there ten of any pretension in the whole of England? I trow not. But churches—why there are, I suppose, from 10,000 to 15,000; and in saying that I am speaking of the Church of England only.

Again, you, Mr. Editor, congratulated Mr. Putnam on the very large attendance. Well, the hall was crowded, but it was an altogether exceptional occasion, and there are many Nonconformist chapels which can boast a congregation far larger every Sunday in the year. Why is that? Have you, after all, made a mistake as to human nature, and have we blunder-headed Christians, by some happy piece of luck, managed to come into touch with the great heart of humanity?

(c) Once more, Mr. Putnam was in the "Hall of Science," the English headquarters of Secularism. If Secularism fails to be secular, where does it expect to succeed? Well, Mr. Putnam can inquire of you what Secularists are doing—of you, Mr. Editor, and all your lieutenants, who are for ever denouncing us for our lack of good deeds, as is natural, considering our creed knows nothing of "conduct and character." I do not mean "doing" on the platform or in the press, but I mean in good works. I urge him to inquire carefully how many children the members of the National Secular Society instruct, how many sick persons they visit, how many poor they relieve, how many hospitals they provide, how many drunkards they reclaim, how many of their fallen sisters they restore to the paths of virtue, to how many mourners they speak words of comfort. This is good secular work, is it not? I do not ask Mr. Putnam to inquire how much you talk about these works of mercy, but how many you do. And Christians—what of them? I will take but one single instance, though in my own experience I have known, and sometimes taken part in, scores of a like character.

Last Sunday morning I received by post the May number of the Plaistow Parish Messenger. I put it in my pocket to refer to when my opportunity came in the evening to reply to Mr. Putnam. That opportunity you did not offer, so I refer to that "Church Monthly" now. You will, I am sure, recollect that not so many years ago Secularism was jubilant in Plaistow, London over the Border. It had a local habitation (not always its good fortune elsewhere), the Cromwell Club. That Club, by the way, had rather a bad name in the neighborhood. It was not, I have been told, a centre of "light and leading." The Club has long departed from the building. The Christian Evidence Society gives lectures in it now, and Christianity is doing something for the 21,000 odd persons in that desperately poor parish. What is it doing? Of course, nothing as regards the improvement of "conduct and character," for Mr. Putnam is quite clear about that. That was what the Secular Cromwell Club existed for; Christianity, historically, never! However, I open Mr. Given-Wilson's "Church Monthly." In it are many things of a religious and spiritual character; but, as these are to the Presidents of the N.S.S. and the A.S.U. what a red rag is to a bull, I will not hurt your feelings by naming them. I will speak only of the secular undertakings it records. (1) "Our Labor Fund." (2) "Children's Annual Excursion." (3) "St. Mary's Day Nursery." (4) "St. Mary's Hospital for Sick Children." (5) "St. Mary's Medical Mission." (6) "St. Mary's Holiday Home for Children." (7) "St. Monica's Home of Rest for Women." (8) "St. Mary's Parish Sale Room." (9) "St. Mary's Garment Society." (10) "The Annual Parochial Tea." (11) "St. Mary's Gymnasium." (12) "Church of England Temperance Society." I observe, also, that there are acknowledgments of gifts from just 250 persons. You will pardon me for naming the saints so often; I must apologise for such hypocrites and fanatics having, by some sort of accident, got connected with secular works of mercy. It has just occurred to me that I am sadly mistaken. Mr. Given-Wilson is a Freethinker in disguise, and, had he not been Jesuitical, he would have omitted all the saints and put instead the "N.S.S.'s Day Nursery," the N.S.S.'s Hospital," etc. As to the 250 contributors, they must certainly be habitués of the Hall of Science, Old-street.

This is, indeed, a subject for inquiry. Should my surmise be justified by facts, these generous Freethinkers, who in their modesty pose as Christians, must no longer bring credit to that detested name, but avow themselves for what they are—the only honest men. But, in the meantime, I will ask Mr. Putnam to inquire whether all the adherents of the N.S.S., through the length and breadth of England, do as many secular good works as one vicar of a poor parish, and those who respond to his appeals.

C. Lloyd Engstrom,
Secretary of the Christian Evidence Society.
13 Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C., May 11, 1895.

DON'T RAKE UP OLD GRIEVANCES.

The spook of the Rev. H. P. Hue,
When expelled from Mother Earth,
With spookly speed to Paradise flew
To claim his abode with the saintly crew,
And join in their dismal mirth.

Saint Peter looked out, "Who the dickens are you Comes hammering thus at the gate?"
"I'm the spook of the Rev. H. P. Hue,
Who so long have harassed the infidel crew,
Come at last in a sanctified state."

"Nay, nay," said Saint Peter, "that story won't do;
Your lying is known too well.
If you are the Rev. H. P. Hue,
You know that all liars must get their due
With the fibbers that frizzle in hell."

But the spook of the Rev. H. P. Hue
Smole a Cheshire grimalkin's smile,
And shrilly he crowed "Cock-a-doodle-doo,"
And made St. Pete look exceedingly blue,
As he stirred up his heavenly bile.

"For God sake," he cried, "come in, Brother Hue;
Don't rake up that wretched old score;
My skin was at stake when that d—d rooster crew.
But just let it drop, and I promise you true
That I'll mention shoemakers no more."

T. Clark.

Here is a good specimen of honest prayer, said to have been made by a disappointed Scotch immigrant: "O Lord, we, thy disobedient children, approach thee this night in the attitude o' prayer (an' likewise o' complaint). When we cam tae Canady, we expectit to find a land flowin' wi milk an' honey. Instead o' that, we foun' a place peoplit wi' ungodly Irish. Scoor them oot, drag them o'er the mooth o' the bottomless pit, but ye needna let 'em drap in. Drive them to the uttermost pairts o' Canady. Mak' them but hewers of wood and drawers of water; but, O Lord, ne'er mak' them magistrates, members of Parliament, nor any kind o' rulers o'er the people. An', O Lord, gin ye hae got ony lan' tae gie awa', gie tae thine ain peculiar people, the Scotch. An' the glory be all thine ain. Amen."—Toronto "Secular Thought."

Digitized by Google

PROGRESS IN AMERICA.

As an instance of how the work of Ingersoll and the "infidels" is telling on American opinion, we cut the following from an article contributed by Mr. R. B. Marsh to the Non-Sectarian:—

"The Bible idea of the ways and times in which this earth and man began to be; of man's fall, and the curse upon him and the earth; of the need of an atonement, were all well enough when men knew no better, and could not see any higher; but when these ideas were used to check, to torture, and to kill those who tried to read God's real book, then it was harmful, and was the moving cause and justification of great injustice and wrong. We know there was no 'Fall,' no curse; that labor is the salvation, not the curse, of the race; especially that God could not have been circumvented, surprised, angered, or led to repent. We cannot believe that woman was an after-thought, nor that she was the author of man's sin, or the cause of his 'fall.' We do know that polygamy, slavery, wars of conquest, persecution for belief's sake, have been, and some of them yet are, excused and justified by many passages in the Bible. When men are so far inspired by the spirit of the truth that wherein the Bible and the creeds oppose facts and righteous acts they can say, 'All the worse for the Bible,' as the anti-slavery men said when told that the Bible taught slavery, all will then be well, and we will cease to object.

"The common view of the merits of Christ are based on the Fall and the Curse, though Jesus never referred to them. We do not believe that Jesus could have had as truthful a view of the laws of the universe as we have to-day. His idea of prayer, since he knew little of natural law, may not be true. If believers can have anything they ask for, we have had no true believers; and we can easily see that nothing would so quickly and surely ruin the race as that way of getting things done. We cannot believe that Jesus is the sole hope of the race, since but a small part of the world has ever heard of him, and the ages before his time could not have accepted him. If God is limited in his 'plan' by so narrow a 'scheme' as this, our belief in him and reverence for him would suffer such a shock that nothing but cowardly fear could induce us to worship him."

Witches.

"O. J. L." says—and says truly—that (theological) "Christianity decidedly holds that" communication between the seen and the unseen world "is not only a possibility, but an absolute, unquestionable fact"; and he might have gone on to add that it holds with equal decision the reality of demoniacal possession, of divination, and of sorcery generally. Now, is there one syllable in the entire Bible about the cessation of these supernatural or extra-natural phenomena? An ignorant man at the present day, who has faith in Biblical inspiration, is bound to believe in the existence of witches, sorcerers, evil spirits, diviners, media, and all the rest of it. Not the slightest hint is anywhere given that such persons are ever to cease out of the land as long as the world endures; and, this being so, the wretched creatures whose pitiful stories you narrate in your leading article had no small amount of justification for their belief that they were dealing with the powers of evil. If, instead of wasting time and money in attempting to make these poor creatures understand subjects which can scarcely by any possibility ever be of any use to them, they were taught that the so-called demoniacs were merely people afflicted with epilepsy and mania, and that the Witch of Endor was nothing but a fortune-teller and ventriloquist, and as big an impostor as any of the scoundrelly "media" who so cruelly and wickedly humbugged poor Miss Florence Marryat, the Clonmel and other ghastly tragedies might well have never happened at all.—A Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, in "English Mechanic."

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

OUR TASK.

Some people, not over wise, often advise me to let the parsons and theology alone. Why? We, the Freethinkers, began our open attacks upon the Protestant fetish, the Bible, considerably over two hundred years ago. If our attacks had been fruitless, we might have been discouraged, and even dropped the task. But has it been? Is there a single point upon which we have directed our guns which has not suffered? I know of none. We have been answered, refuted, imprisoned, ostracised, abused, slandered, refused the rights of citizens; but somehow the Christian scholars have been compelled to adopt our principal views and drop the principal ones they formerly held. The early unbelievers who attacked the Bible were very much milder than the Bible's defenders of to-day. They have lost the battle, and we have won. Our views are now in possession of foremost scholars and of the Universities. Then why should we cease to attack the Bible and theology? We must convert the masses, and rescue them from priestly and parsonic bondage. That is our task, and we shall certainly accomplish it.

Besides, people who bid us drop it are unphilosophical. It is only by canvassing the past and present notions of mankind that we can work improvement. All true education must take man as he is, study his present state, and teach him its defects. There is no other basis for true education for the individual or the world. Socrates took the Athenians as they were, canvassed their current and most familiar views and prejudices. So did Plato, Aristotle, and the rest of the philosophers. Not to multiply examples, if the Reformers had not discussed Aristotle and attacked at least the dominant post human folly had assigned to him, they must have labored in vain. Were Aristotle or any other philosopher at present dominating men as that name had done for ages before the Reformation, we should be compelled to attack him in the interests of human advancement. Ay! and if Aristotle had been all his worshippers averred, it was still necessary to attack him, for, right or wrong in his views, his name dominated and enslaved the European intellect. And let me say, an enslaved intellect, even if right in its views, is immensely worse off than a free intellect, even if its main opinions should be false. It is the dominance of an opinion or of a name that man has most to dread. And so now, if Jesus and the Bible were all their votaries say, it would be necessary to attack them both, to rouse thought and doubt and disbelief and keenest criticism, in order to emancipate the human intellect from the thraldom they have produced. Yes, we must begin with man as we find him, if we would work reform. We must canvass the views he holds, whether in politics, social life, or religion. There can be no improvement without this. I defy my critics to name any reform in the history of man which did not spring from a sifting of the prejudices and views before held. There never was, there never can be, a reform without this course being pursued. And our critics themselves see this plainly in other departments of life; but for some unexplained reason cannot see that it holds good in religion.—J. Symes, in "Liberator."

PROFANE JOKES.

"Your new servant girl is very pious, I hear?" "Yes. If she was as careful about the crockery as she is about the Ten Commandments, she would be a jewel."

Pulpit sensationalism has reached a climax in San Francisco, where a young preacher illustrated his sermon on dancing by waltzing through it. It was a very moving discourse.

Missionary—"Has the Lord been good to you since my last visit?" Native—"Yes, de Lord was bery good to us till last spring, when de Debil put it into de head of some man to build a lighthouse on dat p'int, and we hasn't had a wreck since."

Joe—"There goes a man who for ten years never drank liquor, used tobacco in any form, or stayed out after 9 p.m., and never missed a Sunday at church." Bill—"A model man, indeed. Is he a missionary?" Joe—"No; he's an ex-convict."

"I never take a lad into my employment who does not know his Bible, and know it well," said the smug individual in sombre black. "Quite right, sir," said the sky-pilot, warmly; "nothing like a knowledge of the Scriptures for fitting a lad for any walk in life." "I find it so," replied the sombre one; "I am a grave-stone cutter; and when Christians come to bury a relative they like to have a nice, smooth, fire-insurance text to put on the tomb. They never know where to find those texts, and I make the lads find 'em for 'em. It pays." "Er, yes," said the sky-pilot, as he moved away to think it over.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30, G. W. Foote, "The Flight of the Jerusalem Ghost."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 7.45, special entertainment and dance. Tuesday, at 8.30, social gathering.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7, conversazione for members and friends.

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Sun in Splendor," Portobello-road, Notting Hill Gate): Monday, at 8.30, business meeting to discuss the Conference agenda.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "The Workings of Conscience in Shakespeare's Plays."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, Councillor Ward, "'Nunquam's' Merrie England."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, "The Two Adams."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Is the Bible Man's Highest Guide to Morality?"

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, A. B. Moss, "Antidotes to Superstition."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, debate between W. J. Ramsey and H. Cheavers. "Is the Bible Account of Creation in Accordance with Science?" Thursday, at 8, C. James, "What Think ye of Christ?"

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, C. James, "God at the Bar of Humanity."

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, C. Cohen, "The Fruits of Christianity"; 3.15, W. J. Ramsey, "Salvation, True and False"; 6.30, J. Rowney will lecture.

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, Stanley Jones, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future." Thursday, at 8, a lecture.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science"; 3, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future." Wednesday, at 8, Arthur B. Moss, "Some Delusions of Theology."

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, J. Rowney will lecture.

KILBURN (High-road): 6.30, St. John will lecture.

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, T. Thurlow, "The Bible v. Science."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, F. Haslam, "Bible Stories: Are they True?"

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "The Kingdom of Heaven."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, a lecture.

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, W. H. Vining, "The Great French Revolution"; 3.15, C. Cohen, "The Existence of God."

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "Our Lord Jesus Christ"; 7, "What is there Left of Christianity?" Thursday, at 8, C. Cohen, "Christ as a Teacher."

COUNTRY.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 11, T. Garner, "Christian and Secular Redemption"; 7, "The Secret of England's Greatness."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, S. P. Putnam, "The Bible and Modern Thought"; 3, "Christianity and Woman"; 7, "Christ and the Nineteenth Century."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, Charles Watts, "Trust in God a Delusion"; 3, "Mohammed and Christ"; 6.30, "Man and the Universe—from a Christian and Secular Standpoint."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 11, W. Heaford, "God and Morality"; 3, "The Lord's Prayer Critically Examined"; 7, "The Creed of an Unbeliever." Tea at 5.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Seaman's and Fireman's Union Hall, Coronation-street): 7, C. Aarstad will lecture.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Secretary, "Brain and Soul."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, Mr. Smith, "The Creation."

DERBY (Market-place): 11, W. Dyson, "The Origin of Man"; 7, "Historic Man."

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside): 11, debate between Mr. Mitchell and the Secretary of the local C.F.S.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Market Place): 3, C. Aarstad will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—May 26, m. Finsbury Park, a. Victoria Park, e. Wood Green; 30, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—May 26, m. Wood Green, a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 30, Hammersmith. June 2, m. Kingsland; 9, m. Pimlico, e. Camberwell; 16, Wood Green; 16, m. Wood Green, e. Edmonton; 20, Hammersmith; 23, m. Victoria Park; 26, Hyde Park; 30, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—May 26, m. Clerkenwell. June 2, Camberwell; 9, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Tottenham; 16, m. Mile End; 23, m. Wood Green, e. Tottenham; 30, Clerkenwell, a. Finsbury Park.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—June 2, m. Finsbury Park; 19, m. Kingsland. July 17, m. Kingsland.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Handsomely bound in cloth, post free 7s. 6d.,

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

OF

FREETHINKERS OF ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

BY

J. M. WHEELER.

"The Dictionary has involved enormous labor, and the compiler deserves the thanks of the Freethought party."—National Reformer.

"The work will be of the greatest value."—Freethought.

"At last we have the long-wanted means of silencing those Christians who are continually inquiring for our great men, asserting that all great men have been on the side of Christianity."—Truthseeker (New York).

"The most important Freethought work published this year."—De Dageraad (Amsterdam).

"A good and useful work that was much needed."—Commonweal.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

FOR CIVIL SERVICE and ALL OTHER EXAMINATIONS.—Freethinkers will find BEST GUIDANCE AND INSTRUCTION—FULL SOLUTIONS, MODEL ANSWERS, ETC., at the CITY CIVIL SERVICE COLLEGE, Fenchurch House, Fenchurch-street.—Apply, Principal, CYRIL BEDE, M.A., 4 Victoria-terrace, Tollington-park.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION; ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendell" being specionsly and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Digitized by Google

A FEW LEFT.

LOT 11.

19/- CARRIAGE PAID.

3d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 64pp.

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address.....

Occupation (if any).....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 22. SUNDAY, JUNE 2, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

A Full Report of the Bristol Conference of the National Secular Society, with Mr. Putnam's message from Colonel Ingersoll, will appear in our next issue.

PRICE HUGHES ON ATHEISM.

THE editor of the Methodist Times has been doing a sensible thing. He has been reading the Freethinker. We hope he will continue this policy of self-improvement. It is too much to hope for any considerable change in his mental constitution, but a regular course of the Freethinker will produce some effect in time. And in such a bad case we must welcome the very smallest mercies.

Mr. Price Hughes does not at present show any signs of reformation; in fact, the medicine he has taken has made him a trifle worse; but we believe that this is a common occurrence in the early stages of medical treatment.

We noticed the following paragraph in the last number of the Methodist Times:—

> "Mr. Coulson Kernahan's last striking book, God and the Ant, recently reviewed in these columns, has created quite a storm in Atheistic circles. They rage furiously against the author and his brilliant book. But they are out of date. Atheism is a long-exploded piece of antediluvianism. These people, as we have often remarked, are two thousand years behind the time. They had better waken up and get acquainted with the facts of the last two thousand years."

It is difficult for Mr. Hughes to be accurate. We charitably assume that he sometimes tries to be. Perhaps he tried in this instance, but was betrayed by his unhappy preference for misstatement. At any rate, there is no truth in the observation that Mr. Coulson Kernahan's God and the Ant has "created quite a storm in atheistic circles." Our review of the booklet was perhaps sarcastic; it certainly was not "furious." And as for "raging," why the editor of the Methodist Times could give us fifty in a hundred at any time, and beat us easily.

Why, indeed, should we "rage" against Mr. Kernahan or his book? He is turning an honest penny by writing up Christian platitudes. Merely this and nothing more. There is not an argument in all his pages which any one of our open-air lecturers would not make mincemeat of in five minutes. Nor is there any particular grandeur or beauty in the way in which he presents his plea for God. It is a sign of the decadence of Christianity that such a volume should be praised at all. Cudworth and Charnock and Leighton lie neglected upon the library shelves while this feeble little apologist flutters round the arena, and all the Christians cry: "Bravo! Magnificent! Kernahan for ever!" We could almost drop a tear over the wretched degradation of our old enemy.

Mr. Hughes tells Atheists that they are out of date. But does he really think so? Will he meet one of them in public discussion? Has he faith enough to try the experiment?

Atheism is "a long-exploded piece of antediluvianism." This is a good mouthful, but we defy any man to realise its meaning.

We cheerfully admit that Atheism has survived many floods. It survived floods of persecution, floods of "confutation," and floods of calumny; and we dare say it will survive the flood of Mr. Hughes's flashy rhetoric.

Cardinal Newman was a far wiser man than Mr. Hughes. He did not regard Atheism as "exploded." He dreaded it as the natural and logical conclusion of "reason" when divorced from "faith."

Mr. Hughes says that Atheists are two thousand years behind the time. We presume he means that they are not Christians. If he means anything else, he is talking nonsense. Christianity does not pretend to prove God's existence. It starts with that assumption. Revelation does not precede, it follows Natural Religion, and is based upon its conclusions. Every text in the New Testament is addressed to believers; and it is noteworthy that Jesus Christ was too discreet to get into a discussion with the Sadducees—the men who denied the soul, the resurrection, and a future life; that is, nearly all that flatters the vanity and sentimentalism of the average religionist.

What new evidence of God's existence, of his wisdom or his goodness, has appeared during the last two thousand years? The problem is just where it was before the Christian era. New illustrations may be adduced, but it is impossible to invent a new argument. The human mind exhausted its capacity in that direction before the advent of Jesus Christ.

Atheists are acquainted with the facts of the last two thousand years. They know the arts by which Christianity rose to power; they know with what weapons it defended its privileges; they know the secret of its long usurpation. Atheists do not need to "waken up," as Mr. Hughes says in defiance of grammar. Christianity is waking up—to the fact that it is found out; and in its extremity it is following the tactics of the ostrich, as though that will prevent its destruction.

Atheism is not out of date. It is up to date. It uses to-day's science, to-day's history, to-day's humanity, and to-day's common sense. It challenges Theism in the light of the newest Evolution. And when to-morrow's truth comes, Atheism will be the first to welcome it; for truth is the natural enemy of lies, and the greatest lie in the world is the one that is preached from Christian pulpits. It is a lie that has eaten away manliness and integrity, and manufactured dastards and hypocrites.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

"A CONFESSION OF FAITH."

A NEAT little volume, choice both in appearance and contents, has this year been issued by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. It is entitled A Confession of Faith, by An Unorthodox Believer, and has as its motto a couplet from A. H. Clough:—

> Enough that in our soul and heart
> Thou, whatsoe'er Thou mayst be, art.

The author is a Theist of the school of Martineau and Professor Francis William Newman. His volume bears the stamp of thought, sincerity, and fine feeling. Love of truth and love of humanity are evident characteristics of the author, and, finding these in a book, I am little concerned at absence of agreement in matters of opinion. Only in confessions of faith learnt by rote, and coming, as Carlyle said, "from the teeth outwards," can there be unanimity of statement. When men set down what they really think with regard to themselves and the universe by which they are surrounded, their differences of faculty, of training, and of experience are sure to show themselves, and even when ideas are similar the terminology in which they are expressed is bound to vary. "Define your terms" is a mandate which the critic has constantly to lay before the author.

The writer of the book in question sets out by saying: "I believe that Nature is all-in-all, and that there is nothing above it or beyond it." In other words, he does not believe in the supernatural. He says: "The evidence of miracles—evidence which the believer in the supernatural regards as conclusive—leaves me where it finds me. Experience has proved that nine miracles out of ten are cases either of imposture or of illusion. For the tenth there may be a place amid the mysteries and infinities of Nature." He observes: "I hold myself free to deny the supernatural, without attempting to disprove it. The burden of proof rests on those who affirm it. If such persons refuse to argue for it, they put themselves, so far as I am concerned, out of court. If they consent to argue for it, they give judgment against themselves. For every argument that appeals to the reason bases itself on an implicit belief in the validity and sufficiency of Nature; and to ask Nature to sanction the supernatural is to ask it to discredit itself, and in so doing to falsify the faith that we repose in it, to stultify the appeal that we make to it, and to nullify the verdict that we profess to regard as final." He holds further that knowledge of ultimate realities is unattainable by man. Yet he follows this by saying: "I believe in God—i.e., I believe that there is a real object of human worship and a supreme end and centre of existence." Is this a definition? Most people would think that any definition of God which excluded the supernatural resulted in no God at all. For there is probably no word used with more various meanings, or more needing accurate definition, than this word "God." Truly, there be gods many. They are of all kinds, and many of them—the Christian owner of hell, no less than the Mexican god of war—are very ugly devils. What one man regards as the real object of human worship is a very different ideal from that of another. Our author says: "When I say that I believe in God, I do not necessarily mean that I believe in a Supernatural Being, or in a Personal First Cause, or in a Moral and Intelligent Governor of the Universe, or in a Great Unknowable. What I do mean is that I believe in the naturalness of the instinct that leads men to worship, and in the reality of its object." His God, if I read him rightly, is in Nature. Yet he believes in evolution. Does, then, God grow and develop? This seems the logical outcome of his position; yet I am not sure that I should ascribe it to him rightly. His reasons for believing in God, he says, are two: (1) "I believe in God because it is my nature, my private and personal nature, to do so." On this I have only to remark that the author admits that his nature is fallible. We all inherit superstitions, and most of us are trained in them also. (2) "I believe in God because it is my generic nature, my nature as a man to do so." He goes on to say: "A belief so widespread and so enduring as the belief in God must needs have a real object." Will he say so if you substitute for "God" the word "ghosts," from whom man's early gods probably sprung?

The writer says, "God is love;" and to the question, "How shall I know what is true?" as to the kindred question, "What shall I do to be saved?" says there is but one answer—namely, "Love." Will he then accept the converse of his proposition, and put it that "Love is God"? The real basis of his belief appears to be sentiment, and the "scunner" with which he writes of Atheists and Materialism seems to indicate that, despite considerable candor of mind, he is still the victim of prejudices about words. He says: "Feeling is all-in-all." Need I remind him of the succeeding lines in Faust?—

> Name ist Schall und Rauch
> Umnebelnd Himmelegluth.

Like Kant, who, in his Critique of Pure Reason, shows the illusiveness and illogicality of all demonstrations of deity, yet brings God back in his Critique of Practical Reason, in order, according to Heine, to console his servant, old Lampe, our author appears to bring the supernatural in, with prostrations, immediately after having dismissed it, without any blessing. So with the doctrine of immortality. He says: "I believe that I shall live hereafter, and that I shall be happy or unhappy in the next life according as I have done well or ill in this"; but he allows that "the arguments for immortality are doubtless inconclusive." Here again we appear to have a feeling that "spiritual" life is real and unending. His heaven and hell, he tells us, are states of the soul. But these are realities here now, irrespective of permanent continuance, and our author sees the absurdity of supposing we merit either unending happiness or unending misery.

With very much that the confessor has to say on duty and the conduct of life I am in hearty sympathy, while totally disagreeing with his terminology. He insists on what Matthew Arnold called "the secret of Jesus," but which I should call the open secret of life—a secret openly taught by Buddha ere Jesus was born—viz., that to live for higher aims, the lower must be resigned. What our author calls aiming at spiritual perfection I should prefer simply to name self-culture. And to this all who desire to get the best out of this life are bound to attend, whether they believe in any life to follow or not. Our author thus expresses the final article of his short Confession of Faith: "I believe that Love, as the triumph of self-sacrifice, is the supreme end of existence, the fulfilment of the law, the first and last of duties, the way and the goal of life, the real presence of the eternal God." Here, too, I feel that our differences are mainly of terminology, and "name is but sound and smoke." In reason and nature there is common ground for the devout Theist and the irreverent Atheist.

What, however, the orthodox believer will find notable in this Confession of Faith is, not its affirmations, but its omissions. There is nothing of the creeds and dogmas which have occupied so much attention in the past, and which, however dry and dead now, were vital points of Christian belief when it was flourishing. The Confession might have been written by a Jew, Moslem, or Buddhist, save that it contains nothing distinctive of any of them. It is faith whittled down by reason to the point of mere feeling, and with some slight alteration of terminology would be acceptable to the Secularist.

J. M. WHEELER.

THE PROGRESS OF FREETHOUGHT.

TAKING a retrospect of the history of the last hundred years, it is exceedingly gratifying to all friends of progress to contemplate the advancement Freethought has made. To the disgrace of the Church, be it said, the Statute-Book of England still contains enactments against free speech, and against the legal right of Secular Societies to receive bequests for the promulgation of their principles. But, notwithstanding this injustice, which is the legacy of a bigoted theology, we recognise that the efforts of the brave Freethought pioneers of the past have not been in vain. All honor is due to them for their persistent and heroic struggles in tilling and preparing the soil for the reception of the seed of freedom, which the toil of subsequent ages has caused to yield most prolific results. True liberty is not the offshoot of a day, but rather the growth of years. It has been truly said: "Our Eliots, our Hampdens, and our Cromwells, a couple of centuries ago, hewed with their broad-swords a rough pathway for the people. But it was reserved for the present century to complete the triumph which the Commonwealth began." When in 1662 the two thousand clergymen resigned their benefices, and gave up the national religion of the time, because they could not submit to the pet doctrine of the Church, which was "passive submission," they adopted the basis of Freethought principles. It is worthy of note that every reform that has taken place in connection with theology has been the result of adopting the principle of Freethought.

Digitized by Google

Freethought is, at the present time, making its impress upon all classes of society, and is exercising its influence in every section of the community. Glance at what phase of life we may, move in what circle we will, we shall find that Freethought confronts us more or less. It is prominent in our politics, in our poesy, in our philosophy, and in the various scientific expositions of the present day, and even in novels. It dominates the press, it agitates the pulpit, and it permeates our national seats of learning. As the Rev. W. Binns remarks: "Scientific men pursue their studies and proclaim their discoveries as if the old theology were non-existent. Owen extolled the serpent as perfectly formed, notwithstanding the curse pronounced; Lyell said there were men before Adam; ethnologists found races distinct in spite of original sin and the federal headship; philologists spoke of varieties of language long before the supposed time of Babel; and science everywhere asserted the universality and unfailingness of law, spite of traditionary miracles. General literature breathed the same healthy spirit, at once free, reverent, and inquiring. What natural depravity was taught in the muscular Christianity of Kingsley's novels? Dickens condemned cant, Sabbatarianism, and narrowness wherever found; and Thackeray, in the 'Newcomes,' looked for the salvation of honest James Binnie, though James was a disciple of that extremest of heretics, David Hume. As to poetry, it could only flourish where genius was unfettered by creeds. It needed to live in freedom, and when freedom was lost it sank into nursery imbecilities." The agitation of thought has proved to be the beginning of knowledge, and, when entirely unfettered, it is the surest guarantee for the perpetuation of wisdom.

A remarkable instance of the progress of Freethought occurred during the reign of Charles II., when the Royal Society was instituted in London. The object of this association was the promotion of science by experiment. According to its charter, it was "established for the improvement of natural science." The term natural was intended to imply a meaning that few persons to-day fully realise. In the Life of Davy we read: "At the period of the establishment of the society, the arts of witchcraft and divination were very extensively encouraged; and the word 'natural' was therefore introduced in contradistinction to 'supernatural'" (vol. ii., p. 178). It is related that this new movement drew to it most of the principal intellects of the nation, and that the clergy were so alarmed at its progress that they almost unanimously worked to bring science into contempt and to discredit its study. This attempt upon the part of the "servants of the Lord" proved one of the greatest failures of the Church recorded in history. For, in spite of all theological machinations, science has triumphed, and now its truths can be no longer successfully opposed. It is to be deplored that, during the advancement of science, it has had to encounter a continual conflict with religious fanaticism and priestly intolerance, and many of its exponents have been tortured and made to deny the evidences of their own senses. As Colonel Ingersoll says: "Theology has always been in the way of the advance of the human race. There is this difference between science and theology—science is modest and merciful, while theology is arrogant and cruel. The hope of science is the perfection of the human race. The hope of theology is the salvation of a few and the damnation of almost everybody."

In the seventeenth century Freethought made considerable advancement in the form of Deism. The belief in the Bible God received at that time a blow from which it has never recovered. From 1646 to the end of the century, writers mention that heretics were growing greater and greater in numbers and in importance, that "sectaries began to swarm." Boyle, writing at that period, said, if anyone wanted a new religion, let him come to London, and if he had one already he would soon lose it. Men became indifferent to the authority of the Church, and they put forth the claims of reason, instead of adhering to the demands of the orthodox faith. The late Dr. Newman referred to the "melancholy" fact that the only English ecclesiastical historian "is the infidel Gibbon." It was about this period that the battle for the freedom of the press was begun. This noble Freethought struggle cost such heroes as Paine, Hone, Wright, Carlile, Williams, Hetherington, Watson, and many others, their liberty, and imposed upon them privations which were keen to endure. For selling the Poor Man's Guardian upwards of five hundred persons were thrown into prison. For publishing the Age of Reason, in 1797, Williams suffered twelve months' imprisonment in Coldbath Prison. In 1812 Daniel Isaac Eaton was sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment and the pillory for the same grave offence; and the following year Mr. Houston was sentenced to be imprisoned for two years in Newgate, and fined £200, for publishing his book called Ecce Homo. In October, 1819, Carlile was tried for publishing Paine's Theological Works and Palmer's Principles of Nature, and condemned for the first to Dorchester Gaol and a fine of £1,000, and for the second to one year's imprisonment and a fine of £500; and he had to find security for good behavior for himself in £1,000, and two securities in £100 each. His wife and sister were afterwards convicted of similar acts, and suffered heavy sentences.

Archbishop Whately points out that before the last half of the eighteenth century neither attacks upon religion, nor evidence in its support, were to any great extent brought forward in a "popular form." This, no doubt, was one of the reasons why Paine's Age of Reason and Rights of Man met with such signal success. He wrote for the people in a tone of common sense to which they had not been accustomed. These works caused a complete revolution in the theological and political world. Writers of that time described the situation as alarming, and the prospects dreadful. Even the philosophical Priestley dreaded a physical revolution as inevitable, and he thought a peaceful reform beyond all hope. In 1795 Fox declared that the laws proposed for stopping free inquiry and general reforms were such as to justify the people in forcibly resisting them. Still, theology was then strong enough to enact, and, as we have shown, to enforce, such laws. From that period to the present it has been necessary for Freethinkers to devote much of their time and energy to the task of securing that freedom and those rights which the Church destroyed and took from the people. That to a large extent we have succeeded in our work is an unanswerable proof of the progress of Freethought.

CHARLES WATTS.

REPLY TO MR. ENGSTRÖM.

I DESIRE to answer Mr. Engström in the shortest possible space, and, therefore, I shall not take up all his matter in detail.

He affirms that I am wrong on four general points as to definitions. First, my affirmation that the Christian religion is not essentially a moral system; secondly, that its belief is total depravity; thirdly, vicarious atonement; fourthly, eternal hell-fire.

I propose to show that on all these points I am correct.

In the first place, however, as to authority. I deny the right of Mr. Engström, or Henry Ward Beecher, or Phillips Brooks, or Dean Farrar, to give an individual definition of Christianity. I define Christianity by the Bible and the authorised creeds of the Christian Church. If Mr. Engström will not accept these, there can be no debate with him; for I do not concern myself with his individual definition of Christianity, but with the universal, world-wide, historic definition.

Mr. Engström tries to dodge the question by confining the definition of Christianity to the Apostles' Creed. As an Episcopalian, he cannot do this; for the Thirty-nine Articles distinctly declare: "The three creeds, Nicene Creed, Athanasius's Creed, and that which is commonly called the Apostles' Creed, ought thoroughly to be received and believed."

As a member of the Episcopalian Church, Mr. Engström cannot make the Apostles' Creed the sole definition of

Digitized by Google

Christianity. He must take the Nicene, the Athanasian, and the Thirty-nine Articles. I take these creeds for my definition, together with the Westminster Confession of Faith and Catechism.

Now, on the point, Is morality essential to the Christian religion—that is, will the morality of a man save his soul? does it count for anything?

The Thirty-nine Articles say: "We are accounted righteous before God only for the merit of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ by Faith, and not for our works or deservings."

The Confession of Faith says: "Works done by unregenerate men, although for the matter of them they may be things which God commands, and of good use both to themselves and others, yet because they proceed not from a heart purified by faith they are therefore sinful."

One may be absolutely perfect in moral conduct, and yet be eternally condemned simply because he does not believe.

The Athanasian Creed says: "Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic Faith. Which Faith, except one do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he will perish everlastingly."

The Christian Creeds thus teach that morality, simply as such, counts for nothing. Morality is insisted upon merely as an accompaniment of religion, but not as its essence. The essence is faith, and not morality; and it is faith only that saves a man.

As to total depravity, the Thirty-nine Articles say: "Original sin is the fault and corruption of the nature of every man; and, therefore, in every person born into this world it deserveth God's wrath and damnation." "Wherefore we have no power to do good works without the grace of God by Christ preventing us, that we may have a good will, and working with us when we have that good will."

The Confession of Faith says: "Man, by his fall into a state of sin, hath wholly lost all ability of will to any spiritual good accompanying salvation; so as a natural man being altogether averse from that good and dead in sin is not able by his own strength to convert himself to prepare himself thereunto."

As to salvation only through the merits of Christ—the doctrine of Atonement—the Thirty-nine Articles I again quote: "Works done before the grace of Christ, and the inspiration of his Spirit, are not pleasant to God, forasmuch as they spring not of faith in Jesus Christ, neither do they make men meet to receive grace, or (as the school-authors say) deserve grace of congruity: yea rather, for that they are not done as God hath willed and commanded them to be done, we doubt not but they have the nature of sin."

And again in the eighteenth Article: "They also are to be had accursed that presume to say, That every man shall be saved by the law or sect which he professeth, so that he be diligent to frame his life according to that law, and the light of Nature. For holy Scripture doth set out unto us only the name of Jesus Christ, whereby men must be saved."

The Confession of Faith says: "They who, having never heard the Gospel, know not Jesus Christ, nor believe in him, cannot be saved, be they never so diligent to frame their lives according to the light of nature."

As to eternal hell, or punishment of unbelievers, says the Athanasian Creed: "And they that have done good shall go into life everlasting; and they that have done evil into everlasting fire."

Says the Confession: "By the decree of God for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestined unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death."

There is no need of further reference. I could quote from all the creeds of the Churches to the same effect. The question between Mr. Engström and myself is simply this: Will he accept the creeds of the Churches or not? If he does not accept them, then, of course, we have no quarrel; for I did not undertake to define Christianity according to Mr. Engström's notion. I know not, and I care not, what his notion may be. I take historic Christianity; I take the Church's own words. How can one define Christianity except by its own authoritative documents?

Now let Mr. Engström say whether or not he accepts the documents. Will he deny the Thirty-nine Articles? Will he go back on his own Church and trample its creed in the dust? If so, then Mr. Engström is an Infidel; he is an unbeliever, and he will be damned. He is in the same boat with me, and where I go there will he be also; for Infidelity is not a set of opinions, but unbelief of authoritative creeds. If Mr. Engström won't accept these creeds, if he throws them to the wind, if he says: I'll think for myself, I'll define Christianity to suit myself, I'll take what I please and reject what I please, then he commits the unpardonable sin of heresy; and if it were not for Freethought, he would be burned at the stake. Mr. Engström has a right to be a heretic, but he has no right to sail under false colors. He is not an orthodox Christian if he makes the Apostles' Creed the sole definition of Christianity. If he is an Episcopalian, he must also accept, as part of that definition, the Nicene and Athanasian Creeds, and also the Thirty-nine Articles. If a Presbyterian, he must accept the Confession of Faith and Catechisms. If a Methodist, he must accept the Book of Discipline. If a Churchman of any kind, he must accept the Church's documents. If he is a non-Churchman, if he rejects the Church's authority, its definitions and declarations, let him say so; but the issue between us then ceases, for he is simply one kind of an Infidel and I am another kind. He is a Christian Infidel, a Christian unbeliever, and not a Christian orthodox, or Christian believer.

If Mr. Engström does accept the authority of the Church's declarations, then he must admit that I am right; that I have not given a travesty of Christianity, but the Church's own definition. I know that Mr. Engström does not want this skeleton of the Christian religion brought forth to the light of the nineteenth century. He is ashamed of it. He wants to cover it up with flowers of rhetoric, and sentimental poetry and pious gush. He is dodging the question. Like the devil fish, he makes the waters so muddy that you can't see the devil fish that is in it. But it won't do. History is history, and it can't be changed. The meaning of Christianity is written all along in blood and fire on the pages of time. It can't be blotted out or covered up. I ask Mr. Engström to take his stand fairly, and not ride two horses at once. If he does, he will get an awful wrench, and perhaps a broken neck. If you reject these old creeds, say so like a man. Be honest; don't shuffle and wriggle. I have defined Christianity by its public, universal, and historic documents. That is the true critical and scientific method. You would make Christianity merely sentimentality; I make it a body of doctrine as defined by the greatest intellects of the Church, who had the courage to say what they meant.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

As an example of utter inconsistency, probably nothing can be found to-day or in the history of the past which can equal the institution known as the Christian Sabbath. It cannot claim the respect commonly paid to antiquity. It is a modern invention, not yet three centuries old. It does not come to us recommended by the general acceptance of even Christian people. To the great majority of them it is unknown. Only in Great Britain and her colonies, and in the United States of America, can it be found in the form in which we have it. The Protestants of these countries have selected a day appointed by the Church of Rome for a weekly festival, have bestowed upon it a name essentially Jewish, and endeavor to compel all who will submit to the compulsion to observe it in the manner which they judge to be most proper and becoming.

These Protestants claim that the Bible is their sole rule of faith and practice. Let us see what this Bible has to say upon the subject.

In all other matters they tell us that the ceremonial law of the Old Testament has been entirely abolished under the new dispensation. This they assert at least in one case, in which the New Testament repeats and confirms the more ancient law. The eating of the blood of animals was forbidden by Moses. In the New Testament it is just as strictly prohibited. "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things: That you abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication" (Acts xv. 28, 29). According to the only possible sense of this passage, the obligation of keeping the Sabbath is not included among "necessary things," but the duty of abstaining from blood was re-enforced. Yet Christians all over the world eat the blood with the flesh of the beast, and Protestants in English-speaking countries insist upon keeping a Sabbath, although the day they keep is not that called Sabbath in their Scriptures, and the hours at which they commence and terminate the day are altogether different.

Digitized by Google

"The evening and the morning were the first day" (Genesis i. 5). And so with all the other days. No one doubts that the Biblical day was from sunset until sunset recurred again. "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it" (Genesis ii. 3). The original Sabbath, if we accept the Bible for our authority, was from sunset Friday until sunset Saturday, and during these hours our more consistent Hebrew friends still observe it.

In Exodus xx. 10, 11, we read: "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord, thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son nor thy daughter, thy man servant nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it." Here we have the time appointed, the manner of observance prescribed, and the reason given for both. This reason has no application whatever to any other day of the week. Yet, if the Protestant be asked why he makes a special observance of the hours between Saturday midnight and Sunday midnight, this is the text to which he always refers, and in most cases it appears to be the only one with which he is acquainted as having any bearing upon the subject.

Another and totally different reason for this institution is given in Deuteronomy v. 15. "Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched-out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." This may be because a Bible text, without another contradicting it, might feel lonely and out of place. It still, however, refers to the same day, for in the preceding verse we read: "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

In the New Testament there is not, any more than in the Old, one sentence ordering or advising special practices for the first day of the week. That day is never mentioned in its pages except where the resurrection of Jesus is said to have occurred on it, and in one or two places where it is incidentally stated that the apostles were "together on the first day of the week," which might equally well have been the case on the second, third, or fourth. When Christianity had obtained sufficient influence in certain parts of the earth, and had become thoroughly organised as an ecclesiastical system, the Church authorities, recognising that all their power was derived from the belief of the people in the resurrection of Jesus, instituted a weekly festival in memory of that supposed event. The idea was as far removed from the Jewish Sabbath as possible. The one was a day of enforced rest from labor, out of sympathy with an over-worked God, who had exhausted his omnipotence in creating a world with a man and woman to inhabit it. The other was for the purpose of worshipping a man-God, who had triumphed over death and the grave, and for indulging in sports and general festivities appropriate to a season of rejoicing. Rejoicing did not suit the grim old Calvinist, with whom fear was the beginning and the end of religious worship, and in whose mind piety and gloom were identical; so he went back to the Old Testament, where he found in the terrible Jehovah a God after his own heart, and in his Sabbath a day exactly suited to his mind. He restored the Jewish observance, with some added horrors; but he forgot that the time he was keeping was not the Bible time. It altogether escaped his notice that it was the time appointed by his great enemy, the Roman Church. This hybrid monster is now presented to us under the name of the American Sabbath. The Protestants will compel us to accept it, if, we will submit to their compulsion; and the Catholics, who have already ridiculed its absurdity, will lend them their aid in order that, by their united efforts, freedom may be crushed out of the land and ecclesiastical dominion established. This once accomplished, they will feel at liberty to crush out the Protestants.

The observance of Sunday as an Old Testament Sabbath has no foundation in history, in policy, in general acceptance, even among Christian people, nor in the Bible from which they profess to derive their law. It is a mere tool for the tyrant bigot, to whom oppression of his fellow man is a ruling passion. To call it the American Sabbath is worse than blasphemy against a million gods; it is blasphemy against a free people.

It is the Sabbath which has made England and Scotland one day in every seven the laughing-stock of nations. Americans, it is begging for admission into your constitution. Once there, it will clutch your liberty by the throat. It dares already to parade before the world under your name. For the preservation alike of your national honor and of your personal freedom, disown it.

—Boston Investigator. E. J. BOWTELL.

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—VIII.

JULIAN HIBBERT.

On the 28th of November, 1833, a scene was enacted at the Old Bailey which may serve to measure the distance from that time to this. It was deemed worthy of some prominence in the papers, and is thus reported in the Annual Register for that year (p. 169). It was in the case of a young man named Berthold, who was tried for stealing a boa:—

The first witness who presented himself for the prisoner gave his name Julian Hibbert, but, on being tendered the book to be sworn, he said he had no belief in its contents. The Recorder: "Is it the Old or New Testament?" Witness: "It does not matter; I have no belief in either. I made the same objection here two years ago, and was rejected." Mr. Phillips: "Then, sir, why do you come here now?" Witness: "Because I was subpœnaed." Mr. Phillips: "Are you of any creed at all, sir?" Witness: "No, sir." Mr. Phillips: "Are you a Deist?" Witness: "No, sir." Mr. Phillips: "Are you an Atheist?" Witness: "Yes, sir, I am." (Strong marks of disapprobation and disgust from all parts of the court followed this declaration.) Mr. Phillips (to witness): "Go down, sir; I will not ask you a single question." Witness, with the most perfect nonchalance, replied, "Very well, sir," and descended from the witness-box amidst loud hisses. Mr. C. Phillips, however, called him back, and, addressing him, said: "Perhaps, sir, you misunderstand the question, or we have mistaken or misunderstood you; I hope you did not mean to say that you are an Atheist?" Witness: "Yes, sir, I do." Mr. Phillips: "Do you know what an Atheist is?" Witness: "It is a negative term." Mr. Phillips: "What does it mean, sir?" Witness: "It means a man that does not believe in the existence of a God." Mr. Phillips: "And do you mean to say, sir, that you are such a person?" Witness: "Yes, sir." (Disapprobation manifested by every individual in court.) Mr. Phillips: "Witness, I will not disgrace myself by asking you another question." The witness then retired amidst the strongest manifestation of disgust and execration from all present.

Within two months of this scene, on January 23, 1834, the execrated Atheist was dead. He was but thirty-three years of age. Richard Carlile, who knew him well, and who at that time did not call himself an Atheist, wrote of him in the Gauntlet: "Though avowedly an Atheist, he was the best specimen of human nature that I have seen, read, heard, or thought of." Julian Hibbert came of a wealthy family, whose fortune had been made in the West Indies. He was a second son. Educated at Eton and Cambridge, he closely pursued studies all his life. This, possibly, acting on a delicate constitution, may have contributed to his early death.

Hibbert probably was attracted to Freethought by the prosecutions of Richard Carlile and his shopmen. Of Carlile he was a munificent supporter. Learning that a distinguished political prisoner had received a gift of £1,000, he remarked that a Freethinking prisoner should not want equal friends, and gave Carlile a cheque for the same amount. Julian Hibbert also spent nearly £1,000 in fitting up Carlile's shop in Fleet-street. Mr. G. J. Holyoake says: "Mr. Carlile said to us on one occasion, that Mr. Hibbert, from first to last, gave £7,000 in furtherance of his advocacy of free discussion in religion." He contributed "Theological Dialogues" to the Republican, and of these articles I possess the original MSS. In some sort also I may, perhaps, consider myself as having inherited his work, inasmuch as he commenced and published in 1826 A Dictionary of Modern Anti-Superstitionists, or "an account, arranged alphabetically, of those who, whether called Atheists, Sceptics, Latitudinarians, Religious Reformers, etc., have during the last ten centuries, contributed towards the diminution of superstition. Compiled by a searcher after truth." He refrained from giving his name through modesty, and the philosophy which loses the individual in his work; for we have seen he was ready enough to expose himself to execration when he thought the interests of justice demanded it. The Dictionary evinced great scholarship and research. It was, however, conceived on too extensive a scale, and in 128 pages, all that was issued, it only reached to the name of Annet.

Digitized by Google

Julian Hibbert also compiled "Chronological Tables of English Freethinkers," which were published in the Reasoner for 1855. In my Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of all Ages and Nations I have expressed my acknowledgements to Hibbert, whose idea I carried out on a more modest scale, and I only hope that in another fifty years my own work will be superseded by a better. Julian Hibbert set up a private printing-press at No. 1 Fitzroy-place, Kentish Town, and had, at great trouble and expense, special founts of type cast in uncial Greek, with which he was never satisfied. He was, indeed, as Carlile wrote, "as scrupulous and accurate as a classical scholar as he was noble in nature, punctual in morals, and amiable in manners." In his preface to The Book of the Orphic Hymns, the first work published in this type, he thus humorously defends his fad, not only as a matter of taste, but also as a matter of religion: "If orthodoxy or heterodoxy (salvation or perdition) depend upon the appearance of part of a single Greek character* in the faded writing of some half-a-dozen mutilated old books, surely every true believer ought to devote a considerable portion of his mortal existence to the study of those letters, the right or wrong understanding of which will, no doubt, equally open to him the gates of Heaven or of Hades."

We may be quite sure the book of Orphic hymns, though now valuable, never paid for the type-founding. His next work in uncial Greek was of more general interest, being the treatises of Plutarch and Theophrastus on Superstition, which he edited with notes, a life of Plutarch, and learned appendices "On the Supposed Necessity of Deceiving the Vulgar," "Of Persons Falsely entitled Atheists," "Various Definitions of an Important Word"—viz., the word "God," and a catalogue of the principal modern works against Atheism.

In 1831 Julian Hibbert, being in ill-health, gave his press and types to James Watson, who had been his printer. James Watson, while working on Carlile's Republican, was attacked by cholera, which terminated in typhus and brain fever. He said: "I owe my life to the late Julian Hibbert. He took me from my lodgings to his own house at Kentish Town, nursed me and doctored me for eight weeks, and made a man of me again. After my recovery Mr. Hibbert got a printing-press put up in his house and employed me in composing, under his directions, two volumes, one in Greek, the other in Greek and English" (Memoir, by W. J. Linton, p. 31).

Hibbert also wrote in, and helped to sustain, Hetherington's Poor Man's Guardian, taking much interest in the fight for an unstamped free press up to the month of his untimely death. His will was proved, and the personal effects sworn under £8,000 by his executors, two good Freethinkers—William Devonshire Saul, of Aldersgate-street, wine merchant; and J. Brooks, of Oxford-street, bookseller. He directed his body to be given to an anatomical school, and requested that no person should wear mourning for him, or take any further notice of his memory. He bequeathed £492 to Carlile's printers, being the sum Carlile was indebted to them, in place of a legacy. To Henry Hetherington and James Watson he left £500. He had bequeathed a like sum to the Rev. Robert Taylor, but this he revoked by a codicil, in consequence, as he states, of Taylor having married a lady of large fortune.

The obituary notice in the Annual Register (p. 217) says: "Hibbert never partook of animal food, but lived in a rigid and abstemious manner. He had some landed property, and the residue of his estates becomes the property of his sister." A portrait of him is extant, and was engraved in the Reasoner for July 1, 1855. His face is a very attractive and sweet one, closely resembling that of the poet Percy Bysshe Shelley.

J. M. WHEELER.

A Yankee tells us of a man who went to church on one of the days when souls may be bought out of purgatory for a trifling fee. As the priest came round he deposited his dollar on the plate. "Is my friend's soul out of purgatory now?" "Yes," replied the ghostly man. "Are you quite sure?" repeated the affectionate inquirer. "Quite sure," answered the priest. "Wal, then, they won't be able to put him back again?" responded the relieved friend. "Certainly not." "Wal, in that case I may as well tell you, reverend friend, that that there dollar is a bad one."

* A note refers to the controversy whether it is ος or θς in 1 Timothy iii. 16.

ACID DROPS.

"Lord, how the world is given to lying," said Jack Falstaff. Yes, it is given to lying. It is also given to romancing. If you listen to any ordinary person narrating a conversation or an experience, you will find that he (or even she) puts in a lot of dramatic touches, and unconsciously rounds the thing off after the fashion of a born story-teller; for the fact is, we are all more or less novelists, whether we know it or not. And if you only take this key in your hand, you will be able to unlock many a secret in history, ay, and even in religion. A great deal of the New Testament was written by conscious or unconscious novelists. They felt what would make a good story, or round off an incomplete one, and they put it in without hesitation.

We cannot check the ancient novelists who wrote what has come down the ages as history, but we can see how the same sort of thing is done now-a-days; and done, too, before the very eyes of people who are in a position to check the narrator, only they are too lazy, or too much lovers of a good story, to do so.

Here is a case in point. Mr. Hall Caine, the novelist, was recently "dined" by the Vagabond Club, and in the course of his speech he told a dramatic story of the death of James Thomson—the Freethought poet who wrote as "B. V."—in the house of the blind poet, Philip Bourke Marston. Mr. Caine stated that the two poets were alone all night in the house, and the blind poet was unable to see what was the matter, or to tell whether his friend was really dead or alive. This was a highly dramatic situation, and Mr. Caine told it well, and the gentlemen of the Vagabond Club listened to him with rapt attention.

But the story was untrue. Thomson was taken ill in Marston's rooms, but he did not die there. He was removed to University College Hospital, where he died two days afterwards, from loss of blood through the breaking of an internal blood-vessel. These facts were long ago given to the world authoritatively by Thomson's editor, Mr. Bertram Dobell, and subsequently by his biographer, Mr. H. S. Salt. Yet the dramatic (and false) story told by Mr. Hall Caine crept into the newspapers without a word of contradiction, and perhaps it will figure in literary anecdote books for several generations.

And now comes something still more surprising. Turning over the pages of that excellent little monthly, the Literary Guide, we noticed a paragraph on Mr. Hall Caine's speech to the "Vagabonds." After narrating Thomson's death in Marston's rooms, Mr. Caine added, "I do not know if ever that story has been told." Whereupon the writer in the Literary Guide remarks that "Mr. Bertram Dobell and Mr. H. S. Salt, as well as other cultured liberals, will afford to smile." Not a word of denial is given; even this writer lets the false story pass unchallenged, and only sneers at Mr. Caine for reading nobody's books but his own.

Really, it is a question whether anyone can "afford to smile" when history is written in this fashion. The world still swallows what satisfies its imagination. Science has not purged it of this weakness, and perhaps it will never do so. And in the face of it we can understand why history, and especially religious history, which is so concerned with the emotions, should be called "a Mississippi of falsehood."

One hundred and fifty-three thousand copies are stated to have already been published of a "Protest" by the Rev. Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, which bears the rather alarming title of The Devil's Mission of Amusement (Banks and Son). Mr. Brown charges the Church with having "gradually toned down her testimony" instead of "speaking out as the Puritans did," and with having then "winked at and excused the frivolities of the day." "There is," he tells us, "little, if anything, to choose between church, chapel, or mission hall. However these may differ in some respects, they bear a striking likeness in the posters that figure upon and disfigure their notice boards. . . . . 'Amusement,' he adds, 'is ousting the preaching of the Gospel' as the great attraction. 'Concerts, 'entertainments,' 'fancy fairs,' 'smoking conferences, 'dramatic performances,' are the words honored with biggest type and most startling colors."

It is not generally known that Scripture is one of the strictest subjects of examination for admission to the Navy. A gentleman, whose son is a candidate, only learned this fact at the last hour. He had spent a good deal of money in "coaching" the young man in algebra, French, and such like, but had omitted the Scriptures. When he was informed that this was really the most important of all—lapses in the others being passed over lightly, but lapses in

Digitized by Google

Scriptural knowledge never—he telegraphed at once to the lad to "read up" in all haste for this most important department, and to secure the best ecclesiastical coach possible. He was much gratified and relieved to receive next evening a letter from the young hopeful to the following effect: "Dear Dad,—Don't worry. Had heard about the Scriptures from a chum. Know all about them. Have been reading up the 'Burning Bush,' which is the favorite here. Am sure to pass." It was a curious subject for a nautical examination; but there is no accounting for the idiosyncrasies of examiners.—Liverpool Echo.

A correspondent writes to the Vossische Zeitung, from Jaffa, that at the Easter festival in Jerusalem, during the ceremony of unsealing the Holy Tomb, two Armenian priests were attacked and thrown to the ground by Orthodox Greek popes, and a scene of violent conflict took place. The Armenian priests, on the intervention of the Turkish police, were carried senseless from the spot. These quarrels of rival Christian sects at the "holy places" have long been familiar all over the world, and afford matter of serene satisfaction to the Moslem, who not only possess the Holy Land, but keep the peace there. It is a beautiful illustration of how these Christians love one another.

The Religious Tract Society publish a good story of how, in some nameless place in Japan, a shop was discovered papered with leaves of the Bible. The woman who owned the shop had picked up a pile of waste paper thrown aside as useless, and papered her walls with it. This was not the most extraordinary part, for it had converted and made a Christian of her. The story does not say what parts of the Bible were pasted up, but if it had been such portions of the precious volume as the story of Lot and his daughters we should imagine it would disgust the Japanese with the fetish book of the Christians.

Sometimes the Bible gets put to very strange uses. The Chinese obtain copies of the holy Scriptures to wrap up their small groceries, and some have been known to use the paper as wadding for their guns.

Mr. John Haffenden, the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society in the Straits, said that up to last year 140,000,000 Bibles, or portions thereof, had been distributed; but what was this amongst the 1,400,000,000 of the world's population? "Millions must still be entirely without that Gospel which our Lord more than 1800 years ago commanded to be preached to every creature." If Jesus Christ had only invented printing, it would not have taken so long to distribute Bibles to all the world's inhabitants. But just fancy the state of mind of those who consider this the one thing needful!

We should fancy that, if Jesus knew the result of Christian conversions among the heathen, he would repeat to the British and Foreign Bible Society the very unpolite language he used towards the Pharisees of his own day: "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves."

A friend just over from South Africa, to whom we mentioned the case of the Christianised native of Pretoria who outraged and murdered a girl and then asked for his Bible, said it was the universal opinion out there that a Christianised native was a native spoilt. The one doctrine of Christianity which lays hold on their minds is that Jesus pays for all. He says that they never make collections for missions at the churches in South Africa, all the money coming from fools at home, who would do better to look after their own heathen population.

The Rev. E. E. Jenkins, ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, and hon. secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, went down to Audley to officiate at a memorial service in connection with the recent colliery disaster at Diglake. He took for his text, "Be still, and know that I am God"; but, instead of being still, he proceeded to vindicate the Almighty at considerable length. He said: "Those marvellous escapes, which are familiar to the narratives of the mine, of the railway, of the city, of the ocean, reveal the interventions of the Unseen Arm which is always present mighty to save. And in addition to single acts of deliverance, God takes the calamity itself and uses it for his glory." So God's goodness is proved both by his saving some and by his killing others. For, Mr. Jenkins went on to say, "men who despise every other reasoning will often yield to the argument of misfortune, especially when they are in the presence of a catastrophe like the Diglake disaster; revealing the touching spectacle of absolute helplessness, the wisdom, foresight, and strength of men cast to the ground, and swept aside like the vilest refuse. Then the despised prayer for help rises to lips that never uttered prayer before, and those who would never have discovered it on the Mount of teaching, or in the Temple of Worship, find Him in Gethsemane." What a charming Deity Mr. Jenkins has got. He kills peoples wholesale, leaving widows and orphans, just to get a prayer for help from lips that never uttered prayer before. We doubt if one of the entombed miners would have behaved like this to a dog.

Of course, Mr. Jenkins falls back at last on the sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection. But what if the miners died cursing instead of praying? And what reasonable assurance could they have that a God, who acted in that demoniac fashion to them in this world, would act any differently in any other? Mr. Jenkins tries to clear up one mystery by another. Preaching "Be still, and know that I am God," is offering a drug for consolation, instead of the real help which springs from human sympathy.

A valet out of employment was charged at the Westminster police-court with stealing two pieces of old Mechlin lace, valued at £50, from an altar at the Brompton Oratory. The poor devil tried to pawn the articles for four shillings, and was "nabbed" in the attempt; so that all he got by his enterprise was an introduction to a magistrate.

Cardinal Manning declared, in a magazine article during the great "unemployed" agitation in London, that according to Catholic teaching it was no crime for a starving man to steal to satisfy his hunger. Why, then, was this wretched and destitute valet prosecuted? Was it because he stole from the Church? Is Catholic teaching only to be carried out at the expense of the laity?

Surely, if a man must steal out of mere self-preservation, he had better steal from the Church than from elsewhere. Church property belongs to God, and what does God want with £50 worth of Mechlin lace? He cannot wear it, nor should it decorate his altars while his children are in want of bread. What should we think of a human father who wore costly jewellery while his children were crying for food?

A writer in the Church Times says that the Archbishop of Canterbury does not take £15,000 a year; he is merely "entrusted by the Church with £15,000 a year to spend in its service and the service of the nation." Surely this alters matters very much. Only it is not the Church which entrusts him, but the State through its ecclesiastical commissioners. No doubt he has to pay a good deal for working expenses, but the nation has no control over him if he refused to spend a single farthing. As a matter of fact, the archbishops have contrived to save goodly fortunes out of their salaries.

Three weeks ago the Guardian proclaimed that "the law of the Church of England knows nothing of dissolution of marriage except by death." Now it says: "If anyone says that the living voice of the Church of England gives no certain sound on the question whether marriage is indissoluble, we cannot deny it." The explanation is simple. The bishops know on which side their bread is buttered, and that they must not come into collision with the State on such a ticklish question as Sir F. Jeune putting asunder those whom God has joined together. When divorce was first permitted by law, the so-called divine law of the Church became effete.

Christian Re-union has so far advanced that the Protestant Bishop of Derry has refused to allow the Church Congress to be held there, not because it might be offensive to the Romanists, but because the Protestants of Derry do not wish Ritualistic Anglicans among them. They do love one another.

The Weekly Register says it has been prophesied that the Pope will reign twenty years. As he has already occupied the papacy over seventeen years, they can safely say that any way he is not very far short of fulfilling the prophecy. But how is it we only learn of it just now?

The log-rolling British Weekly declares: "The infidel camp is much disturbed by the challenge in defence of the Christian faith which Mr. Coulson Kernahan has thrown down in his booklet, God and the Ant." It mentions Mr. Foote's article in the Freethinker; but if it takes this as a sign that the infidel camp is much disturbed it is amusingly mistaken.

The Church Times never allows its loyalty to overcome its Churchism. It boldly says that her Majesty, in relinquishing her rights of patronage in the Welsh Church, violates her solemn Coronation Oath, taken in response to the Archbishop's questions, the last of which was this: "And will you preserve unto the Bishops and clergy of England and Ireland, and to the Churches thus committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges as by law do or shall appertain to them or any of them?" The C. T. does not notice that the oath says nothing about the law being altered. It was altered in the case of the Church of Ireland, and it may be in regard to the Church in Wales and England also.

Digitized by Google

The Church Times is horrified at the appointment of Ascension Day for the polling at Warwick and Leamington. It says this arrangement is greatly to be deplored. For people to exercise their rights of citizenship when they ought to be contemplating how a dead Jew overcame the laws of gravitation is really too awful.

The Archbishop of Canterbury stated at the meeting of the S.P.C.K. that the ancient Assyrian Church was almost on the verge of extinction, and, without help from the English Church, the Assyrians might join the American Presbyterians, the Roman Catholics, and might even become Mohammedans. Apparently this ancient Church, like other ancient Churches, is in want of cash, and the authorities are prepared to transfer themselves to the body offering the most dollars. Why don't the Jews make a bid to incorporate the ancient Assyrian Church?

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge also claims to have issued eight millions of volumes, 500,000 Bibles and Prayer Books, and four millions of tracts. A small per cent. of these may be of some value, but, on the whole, what a deluge of waste paper to be sure.

The B. and F. Bible Society and the S.P.C.K., having much wealth, prevent the circulation of erroneous copies of the Scriptures. But in early days some curious mistakes happened. Thus John i. 1 was made to confirm Buddhism, being translated "In the beginning was the Buddha, and the Buddha was with God, and the Buddha was God." In one of the South Seas the words, "where the wild asses quench their thirst," were rendered, "where pigs that eat men drink against their hiccoughs."

Samuel Letters, a laborer, of Charles, North Devon, has been fined 2s. 6d. and costs for ploughing a field on Sunday. He pleaded that he did not know it was Sunday, and was let off lightly. If, however, only half-a-crown was taken from all the people who work in their own gardens on Sunday, a very considerable income might be raised. We commend the project to the Lord's Day Observance Society.

Wicked Jessie Ireland, a Dundee lassie of sixteen, pursued her minister, the Rev. J. A. Simpson, for £500 for an indecent assault while on a pastoral visit. The judge left it to the jury to decide if a girl who worked in a factory was as innocent as Jessie pretended to be, and the defendant was acquitted. He has had a narrow escape from the toils of the wicked one who is always going about seeking to devour the men of God.

In Robertson County, North Carolina, an extensive underground whiskey still has been unearthed on the land of the Rev. Baylis Hamrick, a Baptist minister of fifty years' standing. The Excise officers have been baffled for many years, ever since the time of the war, but a few weeks ago were successful in discovering the still. Preacher Hamrick, a great exponent of faith in regeneration by water, has been one of the most successful whiskey smugglers of modern times.

Macaulay said that the Puritans objected to bear-baiting, not so much on account of the pain given to the bear as for the pleasure of the spectators. Something of this feeling may have animated the men of God who went to the race-course near Birmingham to publicly pray against the iniquity they are not inclined to.

Mr. W. J. Courthope, in his History of English Poetry, says that the legend of Robin Hood's piety was suggested by the tale of a knight in the Legenda Aurea, who was in the habit of robbing everybody who passed by his castle, but never allowed any business to come in the way of his devotions. But the union of religion with disregard of other people's rights has been a common observation from the days of David to those of the latest swindling director.

Herbert Spencer, in his Principles of Sociology, § 646, says: "Robbery as well as murder has had, and has still in some places, a religious sanctification." Says Burton of the Beloochis: "These pious thieves never rob, save in the name of Allah." Of a robber tribe among the Chibchas, Piedrahita writes: "They regard as the most acceptable sacrifice that which they offer up out of the robbery to certain idols of gold, clay, and wood, whom they worship. And at the present time in India we have freebooters like the Domras, among whom 'a successful theft is always celebrated by a sacrifice' to their chief god, Gandak." The modern method is to build a church and subscribe to missionary funds out of the proceeds of iniquity.

The Dublin Evening Herald says that the teacher in the National Schools, while they are ruled over by clericals, "can be little better than a sort of superior flunkey, whose politics and opinions—and not unfrequently even domestic affairs—are determined by another mind than his own. This state of things, it is needless to say, is not only prejudicial to the teacher, but also to the best interests of the country. Apart from the injustice inflicted on a large body of public servants, there are higher and broader grounds on which the country should demand a radical and a sweeping modification of present arrangements."

The Rev. W. M. Barrow, vicar of St. Clement's, Liverpool, runs some Church schools, and evidently with a keen eye to business. On May 20 he sent a circular to the parents of his school-children, stating that "the Managers have decided to charge no School Fees next week." But the vicar did not mean to let the parents have the benefit, if he could help it; so he asked them to send the amount of the weekly fee "at least" to his Mission Hall on the Monday. Surely this sort of thing is not one to be encouraged by the Education Department.

The English Churchman gives the following list of places where the Confessional is at work:—Ampthill; St. Andrew's, Worthing; St. Andrew's, Newcastle; Chiltlehampton; Holy Trinity, Leytonstone; St. Stephen's, Dorchester; Deal; St. Catherine's, Liverpool; Shernanbury; St. Andrew's, Plaistow; St. Margaret's, Liverpool; Stroud Green; All Souls, Harlesden; Holy Cross, St. Pancras. The E. C. hopes that Protestant parents in these parishes will make careful inquiries as to whether any children are admitted to Confession without the knowledge of their parents. It points out that the party urging confession also urge a celibate priesthood, and says: "In some cases clergymen have brought the utmost possible pressure on young people to induce them to go to Confession before, or immediately after, Confirmation."

Mr. Gladstone is an old-fashioned theologian. In a recent letter to the Rev. W. Spiers, who has written a volume on the Pentateuch, the G.O.M. says that he views with "special satisfaction" every effort to "abate the pride and rashness" of the Higher Criticism. Once upon a time these proud and rash gentlemen would have shared the fate of Uzzah; now they have only to dread the anger of Mr. Gladstone, and we guess they can smile at that.

Buddhists, as well as Christians, are capable of economy in religion. It is reported that they are getting into the habit of offering hollow candles on the altars to earn remission of punishment hereafter. The candles look all right, but they weigh badly. And as Buddha hasn't found out the fraud, the trade in make-believe candles is flourishing; indeed, says a correspondent of the Manchester Evening News, two or three millions have been contracted for within the last few weeks. But let the pious economists beware when the Boss wakes up to the imposition. To stint him of wax may make him waxy.

Satan was always a scapegoat. All the sins of the saints fall on his head, and he is now credited even with those of his divine protagonist. A Mr. Thomas Young, of Birmingham, has put out a pamphlet, Christ or Satan, in which he contends that hell is a work of the Devil, and as such must be destroyed. To make Satan the builder of the prison in which God punishes him is really too bad.

The Printing Trades Federation organised a demonstration in Trafalgar-square last Sunday afternoon to protest against "the tyranny of the Salvation Army, in discharging wholesale efficient Trade Union workmen in the printing department, because they would not join the Army, and supplanting them by underpaid Salvationists." Several Trade Unions were represented at the meeting; the speeches were tolerably warm, and the resolution that was carried wound up by stigmatising "the Salvation Army as only another name for a gigantic trading concern, conducted on a sweating system."

The Army, through "Colonel" Bremner, denies all the charges of sweating, but it denies them generally, and does not venture to contradict specific statements. Miss Morell, of the Hammersmith Branch of the Independent Labor Party, referred to an advertisement in the War Cry offering from six to eight shillings per week for "young girls used to tea-packing." At such a low wage some of these young girls would be tempted to join the class that Booth is "rescuing." The Salvation Army ought to pay higher wages to tea-packers; and it can afford to do so, for the tea it sells at two shillings a pound can be beaten in any shop in London for eighteenpence.

The name of God is spelled with four letters in almost every known language.—Yonker's Gazette. Including the American language. It is usually spelled with an "I."—Brockton Times.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

June 2, N.S.S. Conference; 9 and 16, Hall of Science.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

A. French.—We do not believe a word of it. James Thomson was too proud to claim the authorship of another man's writing; and he was well aware who wrote that article in the Secularist. The author was a personal friend of his, and is still living, though no longer connected with the Secular party. With the exception of paragraphs, Thomson never wrote anything in the Secularist which he did not sign. It was a point on which he was extremely punctilious.

A. B. Moss.—Thanks for your genial letter. Mr. W. T. Lee must have improved immensely since the time when he proposed to debate with you at Bermondsey. A man of faculty does improve in twelve years, especially when they are the prime years of his life.

H. Malson (Longton).—Thanks for paper. See paragraph.

L. Levine (Charleston).—Many thanks for papers. Mr. Foote will write on the existence of Jesus when he can find time.

S. Hatten (New York).—We are always pleased to receive American papers.

L. Peck.—You should read the work of M. Solovyoff before replying to his statements.

T. E. M.—The Inniscarra desecration case does not call for any comment in our columns. Thanks all the same for the cuttings.

G. Nidd writes: "I am receiving subscriptions towards the purchase of sixteen shares. That number you can depend upon. I have also promises of some more." This correspondent has our heartiest thanks.

W. H. Harrap.—Glad to learn you were so pleased with our criticism on Grant Allen's The Woman Who Did.

E. G. Taylor.—See paragraph.

We have received, too late for insertion, a letter from the Rev. C. L. Engström, secretary of the Christian Evidence Society, in reference to our last week's leading article. Mr. Engström does not deal with the points we raised as to the legal disabilities of Secularism and the legal privileges of Christianity. He only deals with the question we put to him: "If an honest unbeliever may go to heaven, what is the use of taking the trouble to be a Christian?" Upon this question he expends a good deal of what we cannot help calling verbiage; the sum of which is that, apart from heaven and hell (a very big apart), the man who is not a Christian loses the greatest inspiration to self-sacrifice. In reply to this argument, we venture to say that there are Secularists who work as hard for their cause as Mr. Engström does for his, and for a much smaller "consideration."

J. Upton.—Thanks for your good wishes. See paragraph. Glad to know you were "delighted" with Mr. Putnam's lectures at Liverpool.

C. W. Potter.—Pleased to hear you had such a good meeting at Edmonton. If you send us full particulars of the Teetotalism lecture, including time and place, we will give it a paragraph next week.

Papers Received.—Builder's Journal—Referee—Nya Sanningar—Truthseeker—Open Court—Derby Times—Twentieth Century—Dublin Evening Telegraph—Crescent—Liverpool Mercury—Western Figaro—Liberator—Straits Times—New York Sun—Isle of Man Times—Liverpool Echo—Staffordshire Sentinel—Boston Investigator—Las Dominicales—Freidenker—Liberty—Secular Thought.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

THE HALL OF SCIENCE.

During the past week I have received very few responses to my appeal. It is impossible to say just now what will be the upshot of this business, but some decision must be taken immediately after the Bristol Conference.

According to my promise, and to avoid future misunderstanding, I proceed to give a succinct history of this affair. My space is limited, and perhaps that is fortunate.

Some time ago I gave a partial explanation, and I will endeavor not to repeat, at least unnecessarily, what is already in the mind of attentive readers.

I am obliged to go back to the very beginning; that is, a few months after the starting of the Bradlaugh Memorial Hall Company, of whose oirginal Board of Directors I was chairman. Mr. R. O. Smith proposed that the Company should acquire the lease of the Hall of Science for £2,000, this sum to include the fixtures and furniture. I laid his proposal before the Board, and I could have carried it by using my casting vote, which I refrained from doing. At the shareholders' meeting, in August, 1891, I plainly stated that in my judgment it was impossible to raise sufficient money to build a Bradlaugh Memorial unless the project was immediately connected with the life and work of the National Secular Society. This view was flouted by those who were bent on opposing me at any hazard, but subsequent events have proved that I was right. The Bradlaugh Memorial Hall Company has made no real headway since I left it in the control of those who defeated my policy. According to its last annual report, which was not sent me, although I am a shareholder, I see that the Company allotted one fresh share in 1894.

When I turned my attention to a fresh method of acquiring the Hall of Science, I found that Mr. Smith's terms had risen. He said he was annoyed at his treatment by the Memorial Company, but I and my closest colleagues were not responsible for that. At any rate he wanted £3,000 instead of £2,000. I never could understand this increase, though Mr. Smith has since given an explanation which he thinks sufficient. Had he kept to his original offer, which he now sees to have been just enough to himself, he would long ago have had his £2,000, and we should have been in full possession of the premises.

It was reported by my enemies, who were very reckless, that I had a private arrangement with Mr. Smith, by which I was to receive a handsome slice of the purchase money. Some of them specified the precise amount. Well, I should imagine that the silliest and most malignant of them must now perceive the gross folly of their accusations.

My principal reason for closing with Mr. Smith was the impossibility of doing anything else. In a certain sense we were cornered. Those who talk glibly about getting another hall do not understand the difficulties. I know not where we could go, with money in our hands, to hire a suitable hall for pronounced Freethought lectures in the heart of London.

There was another reason. I never liked the Club at the Hall, but it was tolerated in Bradlaugh's time, and I believed it would at least pay a large share of the ground rent and other expenses. Unfortunately it declined steadily. The first year it contributed less than half the estimated amount, the second year a good deal less than that, and the third year a ridiculously small figure. Meanwhile the N.S.S. had been paying its contracted rent for its partial use of the building, although this was done with considerable difficulty, and partly by the many free lectures I gave on Sundays and on Wednesday evenings.

I am not blaming the Club committee in any way for this state of things, although perhaps some economies might have been effected in the management. But that, of course, is a matter of opinion. Anyhow, it was obvious that such a state of things would have to terminate; and what I have to complain of is, that when this did become obvious, the Club committee assumed an attitude of hostility to the Board of Directors and to the N.S.S. Executive. During the bother over the letting of the hall for an entertainment which, whether rightly or wrongly, the Directors and the Executive regarded as highly discreditable to the institution, the Club committee was simply defiant. It stood upon its technical right as tenant, without recognising any corresponding obligation in regard to rent; and as this was a difficulty that had not been foreseen, the Directors were obliged to give the Committee three months' notice to quit.

Constant friction followed, and it culminated one Wednesday evening when I went down to lecture and found the hall closed, owing to an alleged "misunderstanding."

Before the expiration of the notice to quit, Mr. R. O. Smith, himself a member of the Club committee, served it with a notice to pay him any rent, and to give him possession. I learnt of this by sheer accident, and I had much trouble in convincing the Committee that Mr. Smith's notice was perfectly illegal; indeed, I could only do it by the aid of the Hall Society's solicitors.

Digitized by Google

Some other incidents I would rather bury. I do not wish to relate them unless I am compelled.

I must now go back to the early part of the year, when Mr. Smith first agreed to take £525 in cash and £75 in shares to extinguish his claim as vendor and mortgagee. Mr. Smith stuck out for the odd £25 beyond the £500 that was first offered him, and the prolonged negotiation gave the friend who was to advance the money an opportunity of changing his mind. I then saw Mr. Smith, and offered to raise the money in another way, if he would say whether he would accept it, and what time he would allow. Instead of answering these questions, he sent us a lawyer's letter, stating that he meant to take steps to obtain what was owing to him and to realise his security.

I told Mr. Smith that this was an extraordinary way of treating his colleagues (for he was a Director) and the party generally (for he was an N.S.S. vice-president). But he was stubborn, and I came to the conclusion that he had private views as to the future of the Hall of Science; a conclusion which was strengthened by the fact that nearly three months elapsed before he condescended to renew his offer.

This state of uncertainty was a great hindrance to us. We could not go on building on what might turn out to be a quicksand. And as the Club had ceased to be a source of income, while still hanging on to its technical right as tenant, we fell into financial embarrassments, which it was useless to contend against without a clear understanding with Mr. Smith.

What I have now to state I should prefer to leave unsaid, but so many people know of it, some of whom report it in a peculiar fashion, that I think it best to publish the facts.

The superior landlord put in a distraint for rent; and knowing that this was coming, I authorised Miss Vance to remove the National Secular Society's library, which she did. The London Branch, of which several of the Club committee are members, have been very anxious to know where the books are; but the Executive is satisfied, and the Branch will know in good time.

We kept the distraint going in order that the Hall might at least be fit for Mr. Putnam's reception; and, having lived through that, we let the landlord take his course. The sale took place, and persons who should have known better were there running up the prices of the very things we wanted to secure for our own use. One of them even told the auctioneer that the platform could be removed, and was therefore saleable. However, a friend bought from the bailiff, at his own risk, the articles necessary to the Hall as a meeting-place, and the audiences have perceived little, if any, difference in the aspect of the institute.

It was in the midst of all these troubles that Mr. Smith told us he was ready to listen to an offer when we had the money in our hands.

This story is a brief one to tell, but it covers many months, and the whole time has been one of great anxiety, and full of unpleasant incidents.

Personally, I am very tired of this business; and I sympathise with Miss Vance, upon whom it has entailed much extra labor, which, however, she has borne cheerfully. A meeting of the Directors will be held next week, and the result will be duly announced.

Fresh Donations.—A. Beadle, £1; A. Clarke, £1; W. W., 2s. 6d.; W. H. Harrup, £1.

G. W. FOOTE.

SUGAR PLUMS.

In spite of the hot weather, there was a good audience at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "The Flight of the Jerusalem Ghost." Mr. George Ward, who is so assiduous in his voluntary attention to the bookstall, was pressed into acting as chairman for once. He invited discussion, and some was forthcoming; but the speaker was young and inexperienced, and his remarks had little to do with the lecture.

Mr. Harry Snell, who is coming up from Nottingham, will lecture at the London Hall of Science this evening (June 2), his subject being "Christ and Socialism." Whit-Sunday is not the best time for a good audience, but we hope the London friends who are not out of town will drop in at the Hall as an encouragement to one of the most promising of our younger lecturers.

Notwithstanding many counter attractions, Mr. Charles Watts had good audiences last Sunday at Manchester. In the evening all the seats were filled. The lectures were enthusiastically received.

Mr. S. P. Putnam delivered three lectures at Liverpool on Sunday to first-rate audiences, the hall being crowded in the evening. The Liverpool friends are delighted with him, and he appears to be delighted with them. He writes us that he had "a fine time." Mr. George Wise, of the local Christian Evidence Society, offered opposition to Mr. Putnam's lectures; and we understand that a debate on something or other (we are not informed what) is to take place between these gentlemen during the summer.

Mr. Putnam has been "doing" North Wales since his Liverpool lectures. He will attend the National Secular Society's Conference at Bristol to-day (June 2), being billed to speak with Messrs. Foote, Watts, and others, at the evening (public) meeting.

Bristol Christians have been going about saying that Secularism was dead, and there is naturally some astonishment at the placards announcing the N.S.S. Conference and the public meeting, which is to be addressed by such a variety of speakers. The Rev. J. M. Logan, who debated with Mr. Foote, has engaged the St. James's Hall for his Sunday afternoon Bible Class while his chapel is undergoing alteration. But this afternoon (June 2) the Bible Class has to stand aside for the Secular Conference; which is a curious commentary on "the death of Secularism."

The Bristol friends will be happy to meet delegates at the station and take them to their hotels. All they require is to be informed of the time of arrivals. Delegates, or other visitors, who have not yet written to secure accommodation should communicate at once with Mr. J. Keast, 32 Morgan-street, St. Paul's, Bristol, who will be pleased to attend to their requirements.

It is customary for the delegates and visitors from a distance to sit down to a common dinner at one o'clock, between the morning and afternoon sessions of the Conference. This year's dinner will be at the "Crown and Dove," in Bridwell-street. The whole expense will be defrayed by one of the N.S.S. vice-presidents, Mr. George Anderson, who does not attend Conferences himself, but likes to be hospitable to those who do.

A cheap excursion runs from Paddington to Bristol on Saturday at 12.35 noon. Fares, 9s. to return June 3, 10s. to return June 4, and 11s. to return June 10 or 17. If a sufficient number will notify their intention to avail themselves of this excursion to Miss Vance, a saloon carriage will be provided. There are also excursions from Swindon, Reading, and Bath by the same train. There is likewise an excursion at the same prices leaving Paddington at 11.10 p.m.

Mr. A. B. Moss, who is a member of the Camberwell Vestry, has been defending the right of open-air meeting. He was supported by Mr. Dobson, another Secularist, but the "Moderate" majority carried the day. It appears that tradesmen had complained of a "nuisance" caused by the "obscene language" in connection with the business of costermongers, and "political, atheistical, and other speakers," on the Triangle, at the juncture of Rye-lane and Heaton-road; and the Vestry Committee had placed the matter in the hands of the police. Mr. Moss naturally objected to political and atheistical speakers being made responsible for the language of costermongers; but the majority of the Vestry seemed to think that they were properly lumped together.

The Lambeth Branch commences a series of Sunday afternoon lectures in Kennington Park on Sunday, when Mr. Jones will lecture on "The Soul and Science."

Mr. E. G. Taylor, of Manchester, has for a considerable time been deeply interested in the Blasphemy Laws. An article from his pen upon this subject appeared in the February number of the Westminster Review. This article is now abridged and issued as a penny pamphlet by the Liberty of Bequest Committee, under the title Shall Thought be Fettered in England? Copies can be obtained of Messrs. Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. Mr. Taylor's statement of the law is done with knowledge, care, and self-restraint. In some points, perhaps, it might be improved; but even as it is we heartily recommend it for circulation by N.S.S. Branches, and also by individual Freethinkers who wish to see the odious Blasphemy Laws swept out of our jurisprudence.

Digitized by Google

SECULARISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

THE GLASGOW DEBATE.

(Continued from p. 324.)

On the third night Dr. JAMIESON affirmed "That Christianity is superior to Secularism." In spite of all his opponent's protestations to the contrary, it was quite clear that Secularism was negative and iconoclastic, and nothing more. Its pretence to satisfy all the needs of mankind, and in particular their religious aspirations, was farcical. G. J. Romanes, for long a Freethinker, but who returned to the bosom of the Church some years before his recent lamented death, had left it on record that the loss of religious belief left the world desolate for him, so that nothing in the creed of Science could reclaim the waste. Secularism, then, was a gospel of despair. He had already demonstrated that the New Testament forestalled all the so-called principles of Secularism, so that it was useless to maintain that the latter was superior to Christianity. Mr. Watts had painted for them a roseate picture of the idyllic home-life cherished by the Secularist theory of marriage and social purity. At the best, that was an impudent travesty of Christian prescription. Besides, Christianity inculcated purity of thought not less than of action, whereas Secularism was silent upon that all-important aspect of the subject. It was now his duty to disclose the real doctrine of Secularism respecting sexual morals. He regretted to see ladies present. By an inadvertence he had failed on the previous evening to warn them to stay away from this meeting. As it was, he should have to omit the vilest and most damning counts in his indictment, as utterly unfit for a mixed audience; but even with this limitation they would gain some idea of the hideousness of it all. His chief authority was a book which, to avoid advertising so vile a thing, he would call "The Beggarly Elements." If Mr. Watts insisted on having its actual title, then (with a melodramatic flourish) he would divulge it. This infamous production, he was ashamed to say, was written by a member of his own profession. Having read passages from it, which he construed as meaning that universal prostitution would be preferable to the present system of sexual relations, and added extracts from Owen, Harte, and "Dr. Agate," Dr. Jamieson declared that it must now be plain to all of them that the sexual morals of Secularism were those of the poultry-yard and the pig-sty. For let them mark well the fact: Bradlaugh, Holyoake, Foote, and all the Secularist leaders, had set their imprimatur upon the beastly "Beggarly Elements."

Mr. WATTS again commented on the failure of his opponent to deal with the case for Secularism. There had been no attempt to countermine his positions. It had been said that Christianity built hospitals, whereas Secularism had none; but they had overwhelming historic proof that there were systems of medical aid long before Christ. In answer to the chronic demand, "What had cold scepticism done for mankind?" it could easily be shown that scepticism was the precursor of progress. Thus the scepticism of Bacon opened up a new world for Science, and that of Hume the boundless field in which modern thought expatiates. He must recur to the Christian dogma of exclusive salvation, with its correlative of persecution. Dr. Jamieson had not even parried that thrust. Then what of the anti-social effect of the commandments of Jesus, who called upon his disciples to forsake all—kindred, home, and property—to follow him; of the injunction that they should shake the dust from off their feet against the cities that would not receive them, with the doom pronounced against such cities in the Day of Judgment; and what of the awful announcement that a man's foes would be those of his own household? The only pertinent question addressed to him during the debate had been, "Whether anyone who acted up to the teachings of the New Testament could be a bad man?" and he had now proved that that teaching incited to persecution, and tended to subvert the whole fabric of social order and happiness. Again, they had the witness of history for it that, when Christianity was primitive, and therefore pure, presumably Christians did literally carry out the behest of Jesus and renounce all worldly ties. His opponent ridiculed the notion that Secularists should posit the principle that Progress sprang from Liberty, because Secularists did not believe in free-will. He wanted to know whether Dr. Jamieson meant absolute or partial free-will; but, in any event, the New Testament specifically denied free-will, and he now proceeded to give chapter and verse to verify this.

For the rest of the evening the controversy raged round the centres thus indicated. Dr. Jamieson continued to bore diligently into the muck-heap of nastiness, from which the itinerant Christian Evidencer draws his chief inspiration, with spasmodic allusions to his opponent's arguments. Thus he gravely asserted that, although there had been pre-Christian hospitals, they were not for indoor patients, and that, at any rate, an unnamed "infidel" writer had admitted that the earliest mention of a hospital was to be found in the leper-houses spoken of in the Old Testament. Thus, it seemed that hospitals arose under the religion out of which Christianity emerged. The fact that Christianity could constrain a man to leave all for its sake struck him as a manifestation of its power. Why, he even admired Secularists who had gone to prison for conscience sake! When Mr. Foote went to prison had he not to forsake his wife and kindred? (Shouts of ironical laughter.) It was not true that the New Testament begat persecution. The shaking of the dust from off the feet was merely a symbolical act, and all the threats of vengeance referred to the end of the world. The fact is that the persecuting spirit is in human nature. When Jesus said that he came to bring not peace, but a sword, and that every household would be divided against itself, he meant no more than that the apparent apostacy of those who became Christians would give offence to the non-Christian members of the family; just as when in a Christian family one of its members turns Secularist there is certain to be some friction and unpleasantness.

Mr. WATTS said he was quite satisfied with the concession that hospitals were pre-Christian; the character of the institution was a mere detail. He gave the lie direct to the assertion that The Elements of Social Science ever received the official or unqualified recommendation of Messrs. Bradlaugh, Holyoake, and Foote; and it was a wicked calumny to say that it represented the Secularist teaching on sexual questions. There were portions of the work of which he heartily approved; but there were others that he categorically repudiated. It had been alleged that in its positive form the Golden Rule was the exclusive property of Christianity; but he would now produce three Christian authorities of the first rank—namely, Sir William Jones, Mr. George Matheson, and Mr. Grant—who concurred in avowing that the Golden Rule of Confucius was word for word the same as that attributed to Jesus of Nazareth, and that the ordinary negative form into which the Confucian aphorism is Englished is a mistranslation. It was charged against Secularism that it had done nothing for education; but what in its palmy days had Christianity done in the same regard? Absolutely nothing. And when the march of civilisation forced learning to leave the cloister and enter the university, and later the public school, the Church still insidiously or openly sought to taint and drug the springs of knowledge. They had heard it said that the Bible moralised society; but that was not always so. Statistics which he now placed before them indicated that crime had actually risen in some cases pari passu with an increased circulation of the Bible, and in proportion to the number of churches. His opponent talked of science as if Christianity had a monopoly of it; but, in truth, science was non-Christian, if not anti-Christian, as when it substituted a pathological theory for the Jesuine belief in demoniacal possession. It might be that the persecuting spirit did inhere in human nature; but that was not the point. Christianity stood condemned because, so far from eradicating or even controlling this spirit, it had, in the main, fomented and propagated it. Uniformity of belief was morally impossible, and yet Christianity insisted upon it in theory, and endeavored to force it in practice. Over and over again he had been mockingly called upon to produce the documentary standards of Secularism, and to point to its Bible. Secularists did not tie themselves down to any Bible-fetish; they gathered the treasures of wisdom and goodness and beauty from all ages and all sources, adding fondly to their store from the Book of Nature as well as of life, and leaving blank pages to be inscribed by the wiser and greater generations that are to come.

On the fourth night the proceedings came to little more than a rehash of what had gone before. Dr. JAMIESON again clamored for the production of the Secularist Bible. Mr. Watts's silly hypercriticism, that Jesus encouraged improvidence when he said "Take no thought for the morrow," sprang from a misconception, from which he might have been saved by consulting Nuttall's Dictionary, where one of the meanings of the word "thought" was given as "not to be anxious." Mr. Watts denounced predestination as an abominable doctrine, but that it had the reverse of a demoralising influence on its votaries appeared from the fact that three of the world's greatest benefactors—Knox, Howard, and Spurgeon—were uncompromising Predestinarians. Let his opponent give three names of unbelievers to match them. Galileo—a Christian, by the way—was molested more by his fellow philosophers than by the Church, since the former bounded on the theologians against him. Christ had been described to them as a bitter persecutor. What a monstrous aspersion on the character of him who bade Peter put up his sword, and exclaimed upon the cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do"! Freethinkers far more distinguished than Mr. Watts had expressed the warmest admiration for the person and teaching of Jesus of Nazareth. Dr. Jamieson then read a series of well-known tributes to Christ from Rousseau, Paine, etc.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Watts, in response to the challenge that he should name three Freethinkers whose benefactions could compare with those of Knox, Howard, and Spurgeon, went over a long list of British and American Freethinking testators to various benevolent objects, beginning with Girard, Smithson, and Lick. He did so under protest, for this process of counting heads and weighing purses was childish in the extreme. Benevolence was not the exclusive property of any sect, but an universal human instinct. The personality of Christ was depicted under two aspects in the New Testament—the gentle and the severe. The first was naturally the choice of the sentimentalist; but they could not reasonably take the one and leave the other. Both aspects were correlated to the same subject. As for the tributes of sceptics to Christ, the homage was paid not to the god, but to the man Christ Jesus; and on these terms Dr. Jamieson was welcome to them. He (the speaker) was not alone in thinking of the Jesus of the Gospels as a vindictive dogmatist; the Rev. Charles Voysey also thought so—seeking to explain the rancorous language and insensate conduct of Jesus by the hypothesis that latterly he became insane; and M. Renan also animadverts on the unlovely side of the character of his hero.

Of the many whimsical or surprising assertions made by Dr. Jamieson, towards the close of the debate, it will suffice to select the following: Benevolence is a distinctively Christian virtue, since non-Christian races generally are addicted to every form of cruelty. It is quite true that Christ could be stern as well as mild and loving, for it behoves every good man to be austere towards vice, not less than to be gracious towards suffering virtue or the repentant sinner. If Secularists lead the van of Progress, where are their representatives in science, etc.? Here was a galaxy of illustrious names in natural science, literature, art, etc. Where were the Secularists to set against them? Speaking of the practice of charity, while Christians had charities innumerable, Secularism had not a solitary one. A few years ago the total contribution of the Secularists of London to the Metropolitan Hospital Fund reached the magnificent sum of 30s. Christians went into the slums to carry succor to the needy, the sick, and the dying. Could Secularists point to their missions of comfort and mercy? Tennant in his work on Ceylon, and Darwin in The Voyage of the Beagle, acknowledged the marvellous change wrought by Christian missions in the minds and morals of races whose improvement had been despaired of by the most competent anthropologists. Finally, if Secularism satisfied all the needs of mankind, how came it that in the hour of death Christianity could often administer consolation, when Secularism was dumb and impotent? Joseph Barker had described a deathbed scene at which this helplessness was vividly impressed upon him, and "Saladin" had made a similarly abject confession.

Having dealt with most of these statements and exposed their inaccuracy, Mr. Watts, in his final speech, summed up and gave his impressions of the debate. Strictly speaking, as it required two to make a debate, there had not been any real encounter at all. His opponent had spent most of his time in picking up the filth collected by scoundrels with which to bespatter Secularism, and if ever a man was disgusted with this mode of controversy, he (Mr. Watts) was that man. Indeed, he felt obliged to stigmatise the debate as nothing short of a fraud upon the public. Not one of the theses which he advanced had been so much as touched. If this was the entire result of twelve months' preparation on the part of a man who did not believe in taking anxious thought for the morrow, it was evident his course of study would require to be indefinitely extended. In conclusion, Mr. Watts made a rapid survey of the whole field of the debate to show that all his positions remained unshaken, briefly recounted the services of Secularism to the freedom of the press and of speech, and, in a brilliant peroration, adjured his hearers to cleave to the truth, to be just and fear not; since, God or no God, heaven or no heaven, the consciousness of duty well done, and the assurance that the world had been bettered, even in an infinitesimal degree, by our presence in it, was the highest satisfaction which we could attain.

The perusal of the preceding report will give a better idea of the character of the debate than any systematic appraisement could convey. Mr. Watts exhibited characteristic amenity of temper, handled his material skilfully, and exercised all that alertness of apprehension and swiftness and directness of execution which great natural aptitude for polemic and long practice alone confer. We are sorry we cannot congratulate Dr. Jamieson upon any refinement, either in method or manner, since his first meeting with Mr. Watts a year ago. Probably his infirmity of temper is incurable, but he might, at least, have made some effort to rise above the combined bluster and chicane of an Old Bailey lawyer, united to the gentle art of the "baser sort" of sewage-vending Christian Evidence emissary. Although the debate as such must be described as a miscarriage, there is room for hope that Mr. Watts's well-digested and forcible exposition of the case for Secularism may not prove altogether unfruitful.

J. P. Gilmour.

A BIBLICAL BALLAD.

It wuz in the land uv Shinar thet this happened long ago,
Whan the water thet hed drowned the world hed gone off like the snow
Thet thaws upon the mountain side whan warmer days come round,
An' trickles to the valley with a ripplin', laughin' sound.

It wuz then the sons uv Noah journey'd westward wi' the sun,
An' lit upon a valley, whar they thought a rest they'd won,
For they'd done a bit uv trampin', an' their wives war gettin' cross,
So they reckoned they'd just stop an' hev a game at pitch an' toss.

Whan they'd done a bit uv loafin', an' as things war gettin' slow,
One feller casually remarked thet Jahveh played it low
Whan he soused the blessed world wi' a ruther longish shower,
An' he moved thet they in self-defence should start an' build a tower.

They called a gen'ral meetin', an' they gave the crowd their plan,
An' every mother's son uv them went for it to a man;
But es this story's gospel ye hed better understan'
Thet thar wuz jest one language to express the thoughts uv man.

Wall! they started on their contract, an' were doing fairly well
Till the Lord one day went walkin', an' wuz tickled wi' the smell
Uv the bricks thet they war firin'; so he hed a look around
At what the crowd wuz doin', an' wuz skeered at what he found.

"This kinder thing won't do," he said, "fer if they pull it through They'll get too high an' mighty; no, this kinder thing won't do!"
Fer he wuz a trifle jealous uv the men he'd made from dust,
An' reckoned ef they built thet tower his bossin' job wuz bust.

He squatted down upon a rock, an' slowly scratched his wool
While thinkin' how to stop their game, an' bring them under rule.
He did a lot uv scratchin', but he figured out a plan:
He made them chin in different tongues instead uv only one.

This kinder played the devil wi' the job they hed on hand,
Fer every feller chucked it up, an' bust the blessed band;
And it's this way thet they 'count fer all the languages men speak—
Fer Roosian, French, an' Turkish, fer Fijian and Greek.

But it looks a trifle limpy to my unbelievin' eyes,
An' ef I wuz to tell the truth, I'd call it whoppin' lies.

The Gabbelunzie.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

June 2, N.S.S. Conference; 9, Glasgow; 10 and 11, Aberdeen; 13 and 14, Dundee; 16, Edinburgh; 23, Manchester; 24, Derby; 30, Sheffield.

July 6, Chester-le-Street; 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14, Bristol; 16 and 17, Plymouth; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

This Decoration Day (May 30) a party of American Freethinkers have an excursion to the monument of Thomas Paine at New Rochelle, where they will orate and decorate the monument.

Digitized by Google

MURDER IN A CHURCH.

Two murders have recently been committed in a San Francisco church, the victims being girls who were lured into the edifice, assaulted, and killed. A young man named Durrant, the librarian and assistant Sunday-school superintendent, is under arrest, and the pastor is under suspicion. The ministers of San Francisco have been officious in agitating for the passage of an ordinance to close the side doors or family entrances to the saloons, and now the saloon keepers are getting back at them. They have laid before the supervisors a petition, in which they set forth that, in view of the heinous crimes just committed in a church of that city, it is high time to call the attention of the authorities to the use to which buildings occupied as churches are put, and to suggest a remedy. While there are many such edifices in which no immoralities or murders are known to occur, yet for the general public safety the petitioners are of opinion that an ordinance should be passed closing all side and rear entrances to all churches in the city and county, and forbidding therein partitions, separate rooms, bedrooms, or bed-lounges; that no person but the authorised sexton shall have a key to the buildings, and that he shall be at all times under the immediate supervision of the police; that no church shall be opened without the consent of adjacent property owners; that no licence shall be granted to any minister who has not a good moral character, and that the signatures of at least twelve citizens and taxpayers shall be attached to the application for such licence. In this way, it is hoped, the church business will be brought under control until such time as a quickened public conscience shall abolish it altogether. The petitioners add that their memorial is not conceived in malice, but with the honorable and lofty purpose of protecting the lives of young girls, and to prevent the turning of church edifices into shambles, brothels, or houses of assignation. And the petitioners will ever pray.

It is a soberly-written document, its points are well sustained, and it was gravely argued before the supervisors by the attorney for the signers. The prompt squelch it got from the board was to be foreseen, but it reached the public through the newspapers, and has therefore done the work it was intended to do. It travesties with fine irony the slap-dash, hit-or-miss, dragnet methods of a big lot of reformers who have not been able to view themselves in the clear light in which they stand before others.

—"Truthseeker" (New York). GEORGE MACDONALD.

BABYLON AND PROPHECY.

In Judge Strange's work on The Light of Prophecy, written when he was a Christian, there are some observations on the prophecies concerning Babylon, which are of interest because Judge Strange personally visited the site of Babylon. He says: "The desolation of Babylon, as foretold by Isaiah and Jeremiah, has not yet been accomplished." It is written: "The burden of Babylon. . . . . Behold, the day cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate" (Isaiah xiii. 1-9). "The word that the Lord spake against Babylon and against the land of the Chaldeans, by Jeremiah the prophet." "It shall no more be inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation." "As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighboring cities thereof, saith the Lord, so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell there" (Jeremiah l. 1-14). "Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness where no man dwelleth" (Jeremiah li. 43). Babylon is at present inhabited by some seven thousands of people, dwelling in a town called Hillah, situated on a part of the very site of Babylon. There are also some villages. Neither has Babylon been overthrown, like Sodom and Gomorrah.

It is prophesied: "Neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there" (Isaiah xiii. 20); but they do. Again: "Behold, the day cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners out of it" (Isaiah xiii. 9). This has not yet been done. Rich. p. 12, says: "The inhabitants of Hillah bear a very bad character." Another prediction is, that Babylon is to be "a land where no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man, pass thereby" (Jeremiah li. 43). Many travellers have journeyed through Babylon and described it. Again: "They shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations" (Jeremiah li. 26); but this has very freely been done.

Nya Sanningar, the new organ of the Swedish Freethinkers, continues its illustrations from the French Comic Bible. It also has given portraits and biographies of Darwin and of Voltaire in its recent issues.

GOD'S DAY v. MAN'S DAY.

DREARY and dull the morning breaks;
And why, we pertinently ask?
Why comes this day in sombre guise,
Whereon in gladness we should bask?

Traffic is o'er, the streets are void
Of careless throngs on pleasure bent;
And in their stead, en route to church,
In stiff puritanism pent,

A motley crowd of sober souls
Plod steadily with ne'er a smile:
For mirth perchance is sinful, and
May be but Satan's deadly wile

To draw our thoughts to earthly things:
Instead of harps and viols above,
We may be led to much prefer
The joys and sweets of human love.

The great Museum's door is closed;
On this day none can enter in:
Church and hotel together vie,
Dispensing sanctity and gin.

Now rouse, ye men! and protest make;
Let not your leisure thus be lost.
This day was set apart for you:
Take ye it then, nor count the cost.

Go, seek fair Nature on this day;
There, far from priestly sophistry,
Fraternise with all other life
Beneath the azure canopy.

Return ye, then, to town again,
Body and mind rejuvenated;
Welcome the advent of that morn
Which formerly ye almost hated.

THOR.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEWSAGENTS AND THE FREETHINKER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Permit me to say a word in apology for the much-bullied newsagent. I agree that "it is annoying, and often disgusting, to see how certain newsagents try and damn the circulation of the Freethinker," when such is the case. But is all the blame due to the newsagents? Do Freethinkers do their duty? Do they, as a rule, make it a point to deal with a newsagent, who supplies them with the Freethinker, for other literature than Freethought? I have a personal friend who has been established thirty years, and for over twenty years he has made it a point to expose contents bills of Freethought journals, and always has exposed the pamphlet literature. Yet during the whole of that time there has not been a dozen Freethinkers who have taken the slightest trouble to go to him for morning, evening, or weekly papers or serials. And, while Freethinkers will thus starve those who sacrifice themselves to serve them, they must not be surprised if newsagents, whose only desire is to do business, refuse to do that which will result in absolute ruin.

Often have I seen the advice in your columns for Freethinkers to get their newsagents to take an additional copy and expose it in their window, engaging to pay for it if not sold. But this very act will probably lose them six or more customers, so you see the inducement is not good enough.—Yours truly,

J. F. HAINES.

Obituary.

BY the death of Professor Karl Vogt, Switzerland and Germany have lost one of the foremost Freethinking scientists. Karl Vogt was born at Giessen in 1817, and came into notice as a collaborator of Agassiz. In 1848 he was elected as Radical deputy, but was afterwards deprived of his chair at the university of his native town; and in 1852 was appointed Professor of Natural History at Geneva. His bold Lectures on Man made a sensation by their endorsement of Darwinism and their attacks on theology, which had a further thrust in his work on Blind Faith and Science. He also wrote Investigations into Animal Communities, A Manual of Geology, and several biological works.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30, Harry Snell, "Christ and Socialism."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 8.30, social gathering for N.S.S. members and friends. Tuesday, at 9, dance.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Stanley Jones, "The Origin of the Bible."

ISLINGTON (19 Alwyne-road, Canonbury): 8, quarterly meeting.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "Milton and Liberty."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, W. H. Smith, "Land and Ocean: Are they Morally Governed?"

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Our Home Above."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, Arthur B. Moss, "The Bible and Evolution."

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, C. James, "God at the Bar of Humanity."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, C. James, "The Brain or the Bible?" Thursday, at 8, C. James, "By their Fruits ye shall Know Them."

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, W. J. Ramsey, "Our Gospels."

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, T. Thurlow, "Jesus v. Home"; 3.15, St. John, "Miracles."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, S. E. Easton, "Is the Bible Man's Highest Guide to Morality?" Thursday, at 8, St. John will lecture.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Is the Bible Man's Highest Guide to Morality?" 3, "Prayer." Wednesday, at 8, S. E. Easton, "Christ's Teachings."

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, H. Courtney, "If Christ Came to London?"

KILBURN (High-road): 7, F. Haslam, "The Exodus from Egypt."

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "The Origin of the Bible."

LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, Stanley Jones, "The Soul and Science."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, St. John, "Christianity and Progress."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, F. Haslam, "Mohammed and his Koran."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, a lecture.

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, Mr. Spiller will lecture; 3.15, W. H. Vining, "The Great French Revolution"—part iii.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, a lecture; 7, a lecture. Thursday, at 8, C. Cohen will lecture.

COUNTRY.

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Tontine Society; 7, L. Small, B.Sc., "The Antiquity of Man."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, entertainment.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quaysides): 11, Hall Nicholson will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—June 2, m. Kingsland; 9, m. Pimlico, e. Camberwell; 13, Wood Green; 16, m. Wood Green, e. Edmonton; 20, Hammersmith; 23, m. Victoria Park; 26, Hyde Park; 30, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—June 2, Camberwell; 9, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Tottenham; 16, m. Mile End; 23, m. Wood Green, e. Tottenham; 30, Clerkenwell, a. Finsbury Park.

T. THURLOW, 550 Old Ford-road, E.—June 2, m. Finsbury Park; 9, m. Kingsland; 23, Chatham. July 17, m. Kingsland.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 3s.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Price Twopence,

Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

A Demonstration of the Biblical Doctrine of Devils, suitable for circulation among Christians.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s. 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 2s., post free.

The Bible Handbook

FOR FREETHINKERS & INQUIRING CHRISTIANS.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND W. P. BALL.

Sold also in separate parts as follows:—

1.—Bible Contradictions. The contradictions are printed in parallel columns. 4d.

2.—Bible Absurdities. All the chief absurdities from Genesis to Revelation, conveniently and strikingly arranged, with appropriate headlines, giving the point of each absurdity in a sentence. 4d.

3.—Bible Atrocities. Containing all the godly wickedness from Genesis to Revelation. Each infamy has a separate headline for easy reference. 4d.

4.—Bible Immoralities, Indecencies, Obscenities, Broken Promises, and Unfulfilled Prophecies. 4d

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.

RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 9d.

DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 9d.

CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 9d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,

4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Pulley's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 2s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s., post free,

SATIRES AND PROFANITIES

BY

JAMES THOMSON (B.V.)

(Author of "The City of Dreadful Night").

Contents:—The Story of a Famous Old Jewish Firm (Jehovah, Son, and Co.)—The Devil in the Church of England—Religion in the Rocky Mountains—Christmas Eve in the Upper Circles—A Commission of Inquiry on Royalty—A Bible Lesson on Monarchy—The One Thing Needful.

"It cannot be neglected by any who are interested in one of the most pathetic personages of our time."—Academy.

"As clever as they are often profane."—Christian World.

"Well worth preserving."—Weekly Dispatch.

"Reminds one of the genius of Swift."—Oldham Chronicle.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS

(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

DON'T MISS THIS.

SOME GREAT BARGAINS

LOT 1.—1 Tweed Suit Length, 1 Tweed Dress Length, 1 Lady's Umbrella, 1 Gent's Umbrella ... ... for 20s.
LOT 2.—4 Trouser Lengths, 2 Tweed and 2 Worsted ... ... for 20s.
LOT 3.—1 Black Cashmere Dress Length, 1 Navy Serge Dress Length, 3 Blouses ... ... for 20s.
LOT 4.—3 Scotch Tweed Dress Lengths ... ... for 20s.
LOT 5.—1 Serge Suit Length, 1 Serge Dress Length, 1 Blouse, 1 Umbrella ... ... for 20s.
LOT 6.—30 yards of Remnants (double width) for Children's Dresses ... ... for 20s.
LOT 7.—15 Fashionable Blouses [you can sell these among your friends for 40s.] ... ... for 20s.
LOT 8.—1 Dress Length, 1 Under-Skirt, 1 Umbrella, 1 Blouse, 1 Mackintosh, 12 yards of Flannelette ... for 20s.
LOT 9.—1 Dark-Brown Bear Victoria-shaped Fur ... ... for 20s.
LOT 10.—50 yards of Flannelette (fine quality) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 11.—1 pair of Blankets, 1 pair of sheets, 1 Quilt, 1 Table Cloth ... ... for 20s.
LOT 12.—2 Dress Lengths and 2 Trouser Lengths ... ... for 20s.
LOT 13.—20 yards of Cotton Shirting, 10 yards of Flannel, 10 yards of Flannelette ... ... for 20s.
LOT 14.—1 West of England Suit Length ... ... for 20s.
LOT 15.—6 Sailor Suits (to fit boys up to 7 years of age) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 16.—3 pairs of Trousers (made to measure) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 17.—1 Good Melton Overcoat Length and 1 Suit Length... ... ... for 20s.
LOT 18.—3 Real Scotch Tweed Trouser Lengths (all-wool) ... ... for 20s.
LOT 19.—1 Gentleman's Scarboro'-shaped Mackintosh ... ... for 20s.
LOT 20.—1 parcel of odd lots, including Suit Length, Dress Length, Blouses, Umbrellas, Aprons, Braces, Belts, etc. for 20s.

1s. must be added for carriage. We cannot send Patterns.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

3d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 64pp.

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

New Ready, 12 large pages, 1d., by post 1½d.,

THE JUNE NUMBER

OF

THE LITERARY GUIDE,

Containing a lengthy "Literary Chat" with

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Just issued, 16 pp., price 1d., by post 1½d.,

Shall Thought be Fettered in England?

SHOWING THE DISABILITIES UNDER WHICH FREE-THINKERS AND SECULARISTS SUFFER.

BY E. G. TAYLOR.

Abridged, by permission, from an article in the "Westminster Review," February, 1876.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 23. SUNDAY, JUNE 9, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

HERBERT SPENCER'S REPLY.

MR. BALFOUR'S Foundations of Belief has already been reviewed in our columns. We thought it clever, well-written, and sophistical. Some positions that Mr. Balfour attacks are imaginary, in the sense that they are not the real positions of his opponents. In other words, he knocks down men of straw, and slays mere effigies. This, indeed, is clearly shown by Mr. Herbert Spencer, whose "Agnosticism" and "Naturalism" are so often the object of Mr. Balfour's assaults. Mr. Spencer's reply appears in the June number of the Fortnightly Review, and it is certainly very damaging. No doubt Mr. Balfour will pen a readable answer, the literary composition of which will be superior to Mr. Spencer's; but he will probably find it prudent to evade the chief difficulties of his task, and to substitute dialectical thimble-rigging for serious argumentation.

Mr. Spencer opens with a hit, a palpable hit, at Mr. Balfour's distinguished uncle, the Marquis of Salisbury, who demolished Darwinism in his address to the British Association, though his demolition of it has not disturbed the serenity of a single scientific Evolutionist; which is saying, by implication, that Lord Salisbury played to the gallery, and suggesting that Mr. Balfour is guilty of a somewhat similar performance.

Mr. Balfour is very strong on man's "needs and aspirations," which, of course, the universe is bound to satisfy, according to the familiar reasoning of our modern sentimental religionists. Mr. Spencer replies that this is arguing in a circle. The religionist is really assuming the existence of a Ruling Power which has arranged the universe to "minister" to man's requirements. Setting aside this assumption, how does the theory stand the test of examination in the light of fact? Tell a North American Indian that there is no "happy hunting-ground" after death; tell a Mohammedan that there is no unlimited supply of houris for him hereafter; tell the half-starved and over-worked Hindoo that he will not ascend to heaven after throwing himself under the wheels of the car of Juggernaut; and one and all of them will tell you that your information is "unsatisfactory" and devoid of true "consolation." Mr. Balfour's needs and satisfactions are of a higher order; but, as Mr. Spencer observes: "The question is whether the comforting character of a belief is an adequate reason for entertaining it; and the answer to this question is not to be determined by the quality of the comfort looked for, as high or low."

Mr. Balfour's view is only a refined form of the primitive view that all things were arranged for human benefit.

> "But the anthropocentric view does not appear acceptable to one who contemplates things without foregone conclusions. When he learns that millions upon millions of years passed during which the Earth was peopled only by inferior brutes, and that even now three-fifths of its surface are occupied by an ocean-basin carpeted with low creatures which live in darkness, utterly useless to man, and only lately known to him; and when he learns that of the remaining two-fifths, vast Arctic and Antarctic regions, and vast desert areas, are practically uninhabitable, while immense portions of the remainder, fever-breeding and swarming with insect pests, are unfit for comfortable existence, he does not recognise much adjustment to the wants of mankind. When he discovers that the human body is the habitat of thirty different species of parasites, which inflict in many cases great tortures; or, still worse, when he thinks of the numerous kinds of microbes, some producing ever-present diseases and consequent mortality, and others producing frightful epidemics, like the plague and the black death, carrying off hundreds of thousands or millions, he sees little ground for assuming that the order of Nature is devised to suit our needs and satisfactions. The truth which the facts force upon him is not that the surrounding world has been arranged to fit the physical nature of man, but that, conversely, the physical nature of man has been moulded to fit the surrounding world; and that, by implication, the Theory of Things, justified by the evidence, may not be one which satisfies men's moral needs and yields them emotional satisfactions, but, conversely, is most likely one to which they have to mould their mental wants as well as they can."

Mr. Balfour's chapter on the relative claims of Reason and Authority, according to Mr. Spencer, is "characterised by philosophic grasp, clear discrimination, and unusual lucidity of statement." Mr. Spencer agrees with Mr. Balfour—as, indeed, every man does outside a lunatic asylum—that life would be impossible if all our beliefs had to be formed by Reason without the aid of Authority. But he points out that we cannot really get behind Reason, for we must exercise Reason even in choosing our Authority. And here Mr. Spencer neatly turns the tables on Mr. Balfour. He remarks that there are two great authorities, Theology and Science; one accepted by Religionists, and the other by Rationalists. Science has been ever progressing, and now presides over "all the developed arts of life." Theology, on the other hand, has ever fallen more and more into discredit. Hebrew religion has really gone the way of Egyptian and Assyrian religion. Nor has there been any success in the guidance of theology.

> "After nearly two thousand years of Christian teaching and discipline, how near are we to that ideal life which Christian leading was to bring us to? What must we think of the sentiment implied in the saying of a glorified prince, repeated by a popular emperor, lauding 'blood and iron—a remedy which never fails'? Among the peoples who socially insist on duels, what advance do we see towards the practice of forgiving injuries? Or, turning from private to public transactions, what restraint do we find upon the passion of international revenge—revenge by the great mass insisted upon as a duty? How much moralisation can we trace in the contrast between the practice of savages, whose maxim in their inter-tribal feuds is—'Life for life,' and the practice of Christian nations, who in their dealings with weak peoples take as their maxim—'For one life many lives'? Towards the foretold state, when swords shall be beaten into ploughshares, how much have we progressed, now that there exist bigger armies than ever existed before? And where are the indications of increased brotherly love in the doings of Christian nations in Africa, where, like hungry dogs round a carcase, they tear out piece after piece, pausing only to snarl and snap at one another?"

Mr. Spencer argues that all the "certitudes of religion" lack the essential characteristics of true thinking, which is nothing if not definite and self-consistent. Religion gives us "multitudinous conceptions of gods," which are out of all harmony with each other. Even when we come to the higher Theism, we find its "rational Author" of the universe to be but a bundle of "abstractions of human attributes existing unlocalised and multiplied by infinity." They are, indeed, unthinkable, and the "assertion of their existence becomes nothing but a blank form of thought."

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

THE ORTHODOX THEORY OF CREATION.

PREVIOUS to the present century orthodox believers had no difficulty in getting from their "spiritual guides" a satisfactory answer to the question: "By whom, and how, and when, was the universe created?" To-day the answer will be much the same as it was in former times, if given by believers in Bible Christianity; but it will not be so readily credited. Orthodox literature, specially prepared for pious folk, re-echoes again and again the old Mosaic story, regardless of the fact that it has long been pronounced by men of science to be utterly false. Even Mr. Gladstone's pen has been employed in the vain endeavor to sustain "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." Those who accept the statement that "in six days God created the heavens and the earth, and all that therein is," and that the period when this occurred was about six thousand years ago, never appear to consider what may be termed the previous question—namely, Was the universe ever created? This would be the first point, we should think, that ought to claim the attention of an unbiased and inquiring mind. Scientific men do not waste their time in trying to discover how or when certain events took place, until they are assured that such events did actually take place. They endeavor to obtain as many facts as can be discovered bearing upon any given problem, before attempting to offer any solution thereof.

Of course, the orthodox view is, that God did perform the alleged act of Creation; but those who believe this theory seem to disregard what the terms God and Creation really imply, and also the inability of the human mind to conceive the existence of the one or the performance of the other. If orthodox believers were to carefully study such writers as Herbert Spencer, they would see that, under analysis, the very terms of their statement, as interpreted from Genesis, are not even mentally conceivable, being merely symbols of thought. It is, we know, contended that God was a designer, and therefore a personal being. While, however, we have no doubt that there is a connection between a designer and a personal being, as we understand these terms, it is a totally different thing when these phrases are applied to what is termed God. The word "person," we believe, originated in the age of dramatic literature, when the actors were called personators. They represented upon the stage individuals who were in some way distinguished either for their position or their peculiarities. Hence the word meant dignity and importance, and thus angels and gods had the word applied to them. A similar idea is conveyed by the employment of the phrase in Shakespeare's time of "divers of worship," who were said to have been the poet's admirers and acquaintances. To apply, however, the word "person" to such a being as God is represented to be, appears to us the very essence of incongruity. Why should we allow ourselves to be deceived by imagining that we have a conception of a thing or a being, when we have only a conception of words which are supposed to represent an entity that is entirely unknown to us?

Creation is a word used to denote things that exist; it is also employed to indicate the mode or process by which things came into existence; but it is only with the latter use of the term that we have here to deal. The orthodox party have made concessions to Freethought upon three very important matters that were long held to be not only credible, but absolutely true, being, it was said, attested by the divine authority of the Bible. These were: (1) that all things came into existence at the command of God; (2) that the event took place in six days; and (3) that the time when it happened was coincident with the first appearance of the human race, whose successors we are. All these positions have now been practically given up by the majority of the more intelligent Christians. Science and the higher criticism have destroyed these orthodox theories that were once firmly held to be as solid as the "Rock of Ages." We do not assert that all orthodox writers concede these points; we do, however, allege that but few competent authorities now insist upon their acceptation.

With reference to the first-named position, the language of Genesis has always been open to doubt as to whether things said to have been created meant other than that they were made. It is obvious that the meaning which is applied to the fashioning of Adam out of the dust of the earth was not the same as that which refers to the exclamation, "Let there be light, and there was light." The first is a description of a mechanical process, while the second resembles the action of a modern conjurer tapping some object with his magic wand. Still, one thing appears evident, and that is, the writer of the Bible account, whoever he was, intended to convey the notion that all things appeared for the first time, at the period stated, in working order, and endowed with reproductive powers. The clearness of the statements made upon these subjects enables us to show their utter inaccuracy, as tested by observation and experience. The idea that the earth was one vast theatre of incessant change never, we presume, occurred to those who sought to explain the "how" of the eternal worker. Whether a man can be honest who accepts the theory of modification as now generally adopted, and at the same time professes to believe in the teachings of the Bible upon these topics, can only be determined by the amount of knowledge he may possess.

Probably those who possess little or no knowledge of the history of animals and plants may be credited with sincerity in adhering to the Bible account; but we fail to understand how men who have studied such writers as Charles Darwin can still believe in the fallacious and conflicting story of Creation given in Genesis. The materials there furnished are singularly deficient for the purpose of maintaining the theory of the original perfection of man. It is overlooked by the orthodox party that primitive man, as we call him to-day, is found to be in much the same condition as Adam is alleged to have been—that is, ignorant, naked, and without shelter. The peculiar point about the matter is, how the concocter of the Bible tale could imagine that the original state, which he describes our so-called first parents to have been in, was that of the highest human existence. It is equally remarkable that individuals with modern knowledge should regard that story as being true, and that they should deem the creation of man from "the dust of the ground" as being more sacred and dignified than his emanation from any other source. The very people who are fond of enlarging upon the beauty and marvellous construction of animal mechanism are those who consider it derogatory to think they have descended from one of them. Surely it is a more exalted idea to entertain the theory of Darwin than to believe that we were made from dust, which, by the way, science has shown to have been impossible.

Taking a broad and rational view of man's origin and history, we cannot escape the reflection that the orthodox theory presents an example of a gigantic failure. To suppose that a once perfect man could become the degraded savage that he has been found to be is one of the greatest possible incongruities; and, moreover, that this degenerated condition was designed by an omnipotent and omniscient being is an appalling reflection upon the "Most High." In the Fortnightly for January, 1894, Professor Büchner, in writing upon "The Origin of Man," quotes the following from a pamphlet by Hovelacque: "If God created man in his own image, as the Bible asserts, then the likeness has turned out as little favorable as the likeness that inversely, at different times and places, men have made of God and their gods."

Of course, these Bible fables may serve their purpose for a time by deceiving the uninformed and misleading the uninquiring. But for the intelligent and logical inquirer a study of the Hebrew records themselves is quite sufficient to discredit the orthodox theory of Creation, and to show, beyond all reasonable doubt, that the Bible and science do not agree: the one is stationary, the other is progressive; the first is bound by the ignorance of the past, the second is guided by the knowledge of the present. Modern thought has neither hesitation nor regret in giving up the Bible as a monitor in the practical duties of life; for we have science remaining, and its light will shine with an ever-increasing brightness as the years roll on, until theological ignorance and folly shall be replaced by a knowledge of natural forces and a wisdom based on the experiences of a more unfettered intellectual development.

CHARLES WATTS.

An anthropomorphic God is the only God whom men can worship, and also the God whom modern thought finds it increasingly difficult to believe in.—J. Cotter Morison, "Service of Man," p. 49.

Digitized by Google

BIBLE FICTIONS.

III.—The History of Isaac.

The Bible "history" of Isaac may, with confidence, be pronounced fictitious. A careful examination of the sacred narrative shows no other conclusion to be possible. In the first place, this mythical patriarch is said to have been born when his mother, Sarah, had reached the advanced age of ninety. This event is, of course, stated to have been the result of a special act of divine power; but for the truth of the statement we have no other evidence than the bare word of an unknown writer who lived in an age of unreasoning credulity and gross superstition. In the next place, the stories related to account for the name are in the highest degree improbable, and bear the unmistakable stamp of fiction.

The name "Isaac" in the old, unpointed Hebrew was Itz-kh-k, and the word "laughter" was tz-kh-k. This fact suggested to the minds of the ancient Jewish writers an obvious derivation of the name of their reputed ancestor. Isaac was consequently said to have been so named because somebody laughed, and stories were invented narrating the event. These, like the fictions already examined, show clear evidence of fabrication.

According to the first recorded account, the Jewish God commanded the name to be given when he promised Abraham a son, and the name was suggested to that deity by hearing the incredulous "father of the faithful" laugh at the idea of his age-stricken partner becoming a mother at ninety. "And God said unto Abraham, As for Sarah, thy wife. . . . I will give thee a son of her; yea, I will bless her, and she shall be a mother of nations: kings of people shall be of her. Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years, and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear? . . . . And God said, Nay, but Sarah, thy wife, shall bear thee a son; and thou shalt call his name Isaac" (Genesis xvii. 15–19).

It is implied that Abraham was alone when this promise was made; but the communication was of such an important nature, and so deeply concerned Sarah, that (assuming the account to be true) the worthy patriarch would, upon reaching home, have immediately acquainted his wife with the great honor that awaited her. Of this there can be no doubt; nor can it be doubted that from that hour Sarah would have lived in daily expectation of the fulfilment of the promise. Such an event—the most momentous in a woman's life—would, in an age when to be childless was accounted almost a disgrace (Genesis xxx. 23, etc.), be regarded as the greatest possible blessing. The promise of being the ancestress of nations and of kings would, in fact, never be absent from Sarah's mind, so that no repetition of the promise would ever be necessary, or cause her any surprise.

Turning now to Genesis xviii., we find another story written, like the first, to account for the name "Isaac." In this second story Abraham is represented as entertaining three heavenly visitors in the form of men, one of whom is said to have been "the Lord" himself. These spiritual beings, we are told, partook of a substantial meal of cakes, veal, butter, and milk, under a tree in front of Abraham's tent. "And they said unto him, Where is Sarah, thy wife? And he said, Behold, in the tent. And he (the Lord) said, I will certainly return unto thee when the season cometh round; and lo, Sarah, thy wife, shall have a son. And Sarah heard in the tent door, which was behind him. . . . . And Sarah laughed within herself, saying, After I am waxed old shall I have pleasure, my lord being old also? And the Lord said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh? . . . . Then Sarah denied saying, I laughed not. . . . . And he said, Nay, but thou didst laugh" (xviii. 9–15).

Now, in this account, it will be seen, the promise of a son comes upon Sarah as a surprise; she is incredulous, and laughs at the idea of the occurrence of such an unlikely event; the conception is altogether new to her; clearly she hears the promise for the first time. The "Lord" also, in this second story, speaks as if he had never made such a promise to Abraham before, or as if the fact of having done so had quite slipped his memory. It is evident that, if one account be true, the other must be fictitious. In these two accounts it is also to be noticed that "the Lord," who is said to be unchangeable and no respector of persons, administers no reproof to Abraham for his incredulity and laughter, but is not quite so lenient to Abraham's wife.

I come now to the "history" of Isaac. Now, it is to be remarked that if from the life of this patriarch we omit the stories of the Birthright and the Blessing, which belong more properly to the "history" of Jacob, there remain (besides the short accounts of his marriage and death) but three recorded events. These are: Isaac's denying his wife, his making a covenant with King Abimelech, and the naming of Beersheba; and all three were taken from the "history" of Abraham. Abraham denied his wife when living at Gerar, and some time later made a covenant with Abimelech. Isaac also denied his wife at Gerar, and at a later period made a league with Abimelech. These have already been noticed; we have, then, but to consider the third event.

The inspired writer of Genesis xxi. tells us that, immediately after the making of a covenant between Abraham and Abimelech, the place where the agreement was made was named by the former Beer-sheba, "the well of the oath." "And Abraham reproved Abimelech because of the well of water which Abimelech's servants had violently taken away. And Abimelech said: I know not who hath done this thing. . . . . And he (Abraham) said: These seven ewe lambs shalt thou take of my hand, that they may be a witness unto me that I have digged this well. Wherefore he called that place Beer-sheba because there they sware both of them" (xxi. 25–32).

Here we have an account of the origin of the name "Beersheba." It was called "the well of the oath" because of an agreement entered into between Abraham and Abimelech respecting a well which Abraham's servants had digged, and also because on the same day a covenant had been made between the same two persons which had been ratified by an oath. This being the case, it is somewhat surprising to read that before the place was named by Abraham his discarded wife Hagar was found wandering "in the wilderness of Beersheba" (Genesis xxi. 14), though how there could be a wilderness so designated before the place was named passes all understanding.

Leaving the solution of this problem to ingenious Christian apologists, I turn to Genesis xxvi., which contains a narrative of events nearly a hundred years later. According to the veracious writer of this chapter, the same king Abimelech, with his chief captain, made a covenant with Isaac, and the place where the two confirmed the agreement by an oath was named Beersheba. "And they rose up betimes in the morning, and sware one to another; and Isaac sent them away. . . . . And it came to pass the same day that Isaac's servants came, and told him concerning the well which they had digged, and said unto him, We have found water. And he called it Shebah: therefore the name of the city is Beer-sheba unto this day" (xxvi. 31–33).

Here we are told that Isaac named the place Shebah, "an oath," because there he and Abimelech had made a covenant, and had taken an oath to observe it; and also that on the same day his servants had digged a well (beer). Hence, connecting the two circumstances—the digging a well and the taking an oath—the place was called Beer-sheba.

Thus, it will be seen, we have two accounts of the origin of the name Beersheba. In the first, it was so named by Abraham when Isaac was a child just weaned; in the second, it received its name from Isaac when that patriarch was nearly a hundred years old. In both cases the name originated in an oath and a well; one of the parties, Abimelech, King of Gerar, was the same in both accounts. In both cases Abimelech took with him Phicol, the captain of his army, as a witness.

It does not require much discernment to perceive that one narrative was derived from the other; nor is it too much to assert that, had the three stories we have examined in the life of Abraham never been invented, the same three stories which, in a slightly altered form, constitute the chief events in the "history" of Isaac would never have been written.

VERITAS.

Boy (to his sister)—"The preacher said there is no marrying in heaven." Sister—"Of course not. There wouldn't be enough men there to go round."

Digitized by Google

NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY'S CONFERENCE.

CONSIDERING the distance of Bristol from the North, there was a goodly gathering at the St. James's Hall, which had been tastefully decorated with plants, flags, and mottoes from Paine, Ingersoll, etc. Among the Societies represented were the following:—Aberdeen, J. P. Gilmour; Bethnal Green, C. Cohen; Blackburn, J. Umpleby, N. Ashworth; Bolton, W. Collins, C. N. Atkinson; Bradford, J. W. Gott, J. Sunderland; Bristol, K. Hunt, J. Keast; Bath, J. Oram; Birmingham, R. Taylor; Bedlington, R. Forder, C. Cohen; Cramlington, C. Cohen; Camberwell, Mr. Egan; Chatham, F. J. Boorman; Derby, Messrs. Briggs, Whitney, Swain; Dundee, C. Watts, J. P. Gilmour; East London, E. Bater; Edinburgh, C. Watts; Finsbury Park, G. Ward, Miss Robins; Finsbury, J. Anderson; Glasgow, J. P. Gilmour; Hull, R. Forder; Huddersfield, W. Spivey; Islington, A. Guest; Manchester, Mrs. Pegg, C. Pegg, E. C. Taylor; Nottingham, S. W. Thompson; North-West London, Miss Brown, G. Brown; Rochdale, J. Sunderland; Sunderland, A. B. Moss; South Shields, J. T. Horseman; Westminster, R. Forder; West London, F. Todd, F. Schaller; Wood Green, S. R. Thompson; Ox Hill, J. Keast.

Individual members attended from Bath, Blenavon, Cardiff, Merthyr, Gloucester, London, etc. Many of the Vice-Presidents, including the veterans Truelove and Umpleby, were present on the platform.

Mr. FOOTE briefly opened the Conference by expressing the hope that all the proceedings would be animated by the single desire of advancing the cause.

The minutes of the last Conference having, on the motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. TAYLOR, been taken as read, Mr. J. ANDERSON asked if he would be in order in asking some questions, to which Mr. FOOTE replied that, when the Agenda was disposed of, there might be an opportunity to introduce any other business.

The PRESIDENT then read the Executive's Annual Report, as follows:—

Your Executive, in presenting this report for the year 1894-5, feels it to be one with which the Society may, on the whole, be fairly well satisfied. Considering the general and prolonged depression in industrial circles, it is gratifying to know that there has been little falling off in the amount of members' subscriptions, and that certificates have been issued to more than three hundred new members, while new Branches have been formed at Rochdale and Stockton-on-Tees, and another so far away as Kokstad, in South Africa.

It is also pleasant to note the abiding honor in which the Society's late President is held in this country. A statue of Charles Bradlaugh was unveiled at Northampton in the month of June. A tremendous, and perhaps unprecedented, concourse of people filled the square in which it stands, together with all the approaches; and the enthusiasm of the crowd, both then and at the evening meeting indoors, beggars description. A considerable number of Freethinkers were present from London and the Midlands, and your President represented your Society officially at both gatherings. Some months afterwards a fine marble bust of Charles Bradlaugh, presented by the donor of his portrait at the bar of the House of Commons, was unveiled at Manchester; on which occasion your President had the honor to officiate as chairman.

During the late School Board elections in London, which were of immense importance, owing to the great struggle between Church and Chapel, your Executive did what was possible in support of the cause of Secular Education. Mr. Charles Watts was put forward as a special "Secular" candidate in Finsbury. He made a gallant fight, and was well backed by industrious friends; but the press boycott rendered success impossible in such a vast constituency, numbering more than eighty thousand electors. Unfortunately there was a Social Democratic candidate in the field, also in favor of Secular Education, who polled a good many votes, though considerably less than Mr. Watts. Mr. Watts will fight again, and sooner or later he will win, and represent our cause with dignity and efficiency on the greatest School Board in the world. (Applause.)

One incident in this struggle is worthy of special mention. The Rev. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, wrote a long and able letter to the Times in favor of Secular Education as the logical outcome of Nonconformist principles. This letter was printed as an election leaflet by Mr. Watts's committee, with an invitation to "Vote for Watts, the only candidate running on Dr. Parker's lines."

Your Executive has decided to initiate the formation of a Secular Education Council for the whole of London, and next winter will present a favorable occasion for attempting this important project. (Hear, hear.)

Secularists have engaged in School Board contests in other parts of the country, notably Mr. John Grange at Bradford, and in some cases they have been successful. It is also a matter for congratulation that so many Secularists have been elected under the new Parish Councils Act. One of your vice-presidents, Mr. A. B. Moss, was elected with Mr. Dobson, another member of your Society, at Camberwell; and during the brief time he has been sitting as a vestryman he has done some good work in a Secular direction. Another vice-president, Mr. Victor Roger, has also been elected at Lambeth, in spite of bigoted opposition.

Owing to reasons which will probably be discussed by this Conference, the past year has not been one of special activity in platform propaganda outside London; though Mr. C. Cohen has done excellent and highly appreciated work on the Tyneside. Curiously, however, there has been more than the usual number of public debates, which are always of the highest value to our movement. Your President has debated before crowded audiences with the Rev. J. Waldron, at New Brompton, and with W. T. Lee, at Derby. Mr. Charles Watts has also held debates with Dr. Jamieson, at Glasgow; with the Rev. David Macrae, at Dundee; and with Mr. George Wise, of the Liverpool Christian Evidence Society.

The open-air propaganda has been well maintained in London, where Sunday lectures are delivered in the Parks and other public places. Very large audiences are addressed by your Society's speakers, such as Messrs. Moss, Heaford, Rowney, Guest, Haslam, Jones, and St. John; and the meetings are almost invariably peaceful and attentive, except when disorder is deliberately created by vulgar and disappointed opponents, who are unable to attract audiences of their own. It may also be mentioned that the London Secular Federation—fortunate in its new secretary, Miss Annie Brown—has weathered all its financial troubles, and wiped out a heavy indebtedness which, for a year or two, had crippled its energies.

The Society's Almanack has not had the sale that might be expected. Seeing the number of Almanacks that have entered the market since your Society's was first published, and the impossibility of competing with ventures addressed to the general community, it may possibly be prudent either to publish a smaller Almanack at a reduced price, or to issue the necessary information it contains in some other form.

The most important feature, perhaps, of the year's work has been the vindication of Secularism against its most malignant libellers. It was mentioned in the last annual report that legal action was being taken against the printer and the publisher of an unspeakably vile calumny on the London Hall of Science. That action was carried to a successful issue. The libellers were condemned in a court of law, and their indulgency in the unrestrained luxury of defamation has cost them nearly £300. It was impossible to take action against the men of straw for whom the printer and publisher were acting. Such scoundrels will never be weaned from their dirty business, but it is something to teach Christian printers and publishers that they cannot reckon on impunity if they put the filthy lies of low Christian Evidence advocates into general circulation. (Applause.)

The full report of the trial of this case, with a long and important preface by your President, is published in pamphlet form; and members would do well to circulate it as extensively as possible amongst their orthodox friends and acquaintances.

Your Executive is still responsible for the Freethought propaganda at the Hall of Science. How long its tenancy will continue depends on several circumstances, some of which are beyond the purview of this Conference. An opinion may be elicited, however, as to whether the continuance of the tenancy is desirable; and in order that the expression of it may be unbiassed, the Executive refrains from giving a special opinion of its own.

Among recent changes at the Hall of Science is the disappearance of the Club, to which your Society was affiliated. That affiliation was suspended by the Executive some months ago, as it was deemed necessary to disavow all moral responsibility for a certain class of entertainment, which, though not illegal, was regarded as discreditable. The Hall was sublet for this purpose without consultation with the Executive, and persisted in, despite the Executive's protest. The whole matter was laid before a special members' meeting, which overwhelmingly endorsed the action of the Executive; and the suspension of the affiliation was only removed when the Executive was satisfied that the Board of Directors of the National Secular Hall Society had taken ample precaution against any similar unpleasantness. Now that the old Club has ceased to exist, it is morally certain that whatever social element exists in future at the Hall of Science will be strictly confined to the members (and friends) of the National Secular Society. (Hear, hear.)

An invitation was given to your Society to send delegates to a Conference representing the principal advanced societies of the kingdom, as well as such religious societies as the Salvation Army Social Wing, the Christian Social Union, etc. The Conference was called by the Humanitarian League to discuss the Criminal Code, the public control of hospitals, slaughter-house reform, and cruel sports such as the hunting of tame animals. Your President and Mr. Wheeler attended. On the first and most important question, that of the Criminal Code, a resolution, proposed by the Rev. W. D. Morison and seconded by the Rev. W. Horsley (both prison chaplains), simply asking for inquiry into the working of the criminal law, was overridden in favor of an amendment, proposed by your President, declaring the Conference in favor of "the substitution of the idea of reform for that of punishment in the treatment of criminals, so that gaols may no longer be places of brutalisation, or even of mere detention, but places of physical, intellectual, and moral elevation for those who are afflicted with anti-social tendencies." As this amendment, which was carried almost unanimously, was in the very terms of the Immediate Practical Objects of this Society, the result so far was highly gratifying. The other resolutions passed at this Conference were also in accordance with the Principles of the National Secular Society.

Digitized by Google

The Bill to Abolish Prosecutions on account of Religious Opinions, which was introduced last session by Mr. Samuel Storey, M.P., and which is substantially identical with the Bill that was carried to a division by Charles Bradlaugh, has been introduced this session by Mr. Gourley, M.P. Being backed by some influential Radical members, it should obtain considerable support if it comes up for the second reading; but few private Bills have much chance in the present state of public business, and already the air is full of rumors of dissolution.

Your President states from his own personal knowledge that during the past four or five years many thousands of pounds have been lost to this Society through the infamous Blasphemy Laws. (Shame). He is convinced that Secularism will never take its proper place, and never attain to its proper strength and organisation, until the Blasphemy Laws are abolished. It is absolutely essential that Secularism should be able to hold property in trust for its maintenance and propagation; property which could never be alienated, except by a special Act of Parliament, from the purposes of its dedication.

Unfortunately there is little prospect of the Blasphemy Laws being abolished in the immediate future. The growing toleration of the age is too apt to take the line of indifference, while the bigots of every sect fight tenaciously for the last relics of their evil privileges. The worst of good people, as Voltaire said, is that they are such cowards. They allow themselves to be terrorised by the enemies of liberty and progress. How else is it possible to explain the rebuff which has just been experienced by the Sunday Societies? Owing to the late verdict in the case of the Leeds prosecution, men like Sir Robert Ball, the great astronomer, no longer feel it safe to deliver lectures on Sunday. A Bill introduced into the House of Lords by a layman is challenged by the Archbishop of Canterbury; and although the Home Secretary, in the House of Commons, says that the law appealed to by the Sunday bigots is absolutely indefensible, and an outrage on rational freedom, he declares that the Government has no intention of doing anything to remedy the mischief. Happily the Secular party has always defied the Sunday bigots and the Sunday laws; whenever threatened, it has put on a bold front; and this has generally convinced the bigots that they had better turn their attention to easier victims.

In glancing abroad, it may be noted that Mr. Joseph Symes at Melbourne is still maintaining his weekly journal, the Liberator, which a few months ago was threatened with extinction. Mr. Symes is a man of great energy and perseverance, and it is not surprising that he has tided over a great difficulty. Mr. W. W. Collins and Mr. Wallace Nelson, also at the Antipodes, are laboring with zeal and success. A field for Freethought propaganda is also opening in South Africa. There is no special news from India. In the West Indies there is a Freethought Society with a journal called Progress, ably conducted by Emanuel dos Santos, a member of your Society.

In Sweden, where the cause of Freethought received a considerable impetus through the imprisonment of Mr. Lennstrand for blasphemy, the subsequent illness of this gentleman led to the relinquishment of his paper named Fritankaren, or Freethought. Early in the present year a provincial paper, the Soderkoping's Posten, has been prosecuted for blasphemy, on account of an article on the clericals and the schools, and the editor of the paper sentenced to two months' imprisonment. But the sentence has not been allowed to pass unchallenged, and a new Freethought paper, entitled Nya Sanningar, or New Thoughts, has been started in Stockholm, edited by Petrus Aspland, and promises to worthily uphold the Freethought cause in Scandinavia. The veteran Captain Thomson has also translated some of Ingersoll's lectures into Swedish.

Secular principles have also been advanced in Hungary by the discussions upon the clerical opposition to the Civil Marriage Bill; as in our own country the recent Ritualistic disturbance at the marriage of a divorced person has accentuated the Secular position that marriage, being a civil contract, should have a civil celebration, while allowing all who desire a religious ceremony, in addition, to have the same, whether in church, chapel, or other building.

Up to the present no intimation has been received from the International Federation of Freethinkers as to the date of its next Conference, though a postcard has arrived stating that circulars upon the subject would be sent. There is reason to suppose that the Congress will be held at Brussels, and your Society will doubtless wish to be represented.

Since the last Conference death has removed three of your Vice-Presidents: Mr. Thomas Slater, of Leicester, and formerly of Bury, a veteran worker in the cause of Secularism; Mr. Charles James Hunt, a younger but also well-known public advocate, whose death was probably accelerated by his exertions in the cause of political and social reform; and Mr. Joseph Brown, the indefatigable secretary of the North-Eastern Secular Federation. Mr. Daniel Baker, the second oldest of your Vice-Presidents, has suffered a dangerous illness, but has happily recovered. (Applause.)

There is a name dear to British Freethinkers, though its bearer is an American. (Applause.) Col. Ingersoll has lately entered upon a fresh campaign. For some months he has been addressing crowded audiences in various American cities, great excitement being caused by his new lecture, About the Holy Bible. At Hobboken, in New Jersey, the clergy petitioned the mayor to prohibit Colonel Ingersoll from lecturing, but the official attorney advised that this was impossible; the lecture would have to be delivered first, and a prosecution for blasphemy might come afterwards. Detectives attended the meeting, which they probably enjoyed, and took down the Colonel's "blasphemy"; but the authorities shrank from a prosecution. It is noteworthy that the bigotry of the Hobboken clergy elicited a general protest from the American press. Even the religious journals thought it would be more discreet to let Colonel Ingersoll alone.

America is represented at this Conference by the President of the American Secular Union, Mr. S. P. Putnam. (Applause.) Mr. Putnam has been warmly welcomed in London, and in the few provincial cities he has already visited; and doubtless the most cordial reception will be given him by this Conference. Upon this, at least, there may be thorough unanimity. Secularists in this country honor Mr. Putnam as the elected chief officer of their brethren across the Atlantic. He comes from the land where the body of Thomas Paine was laid in its humble grave, to visit the land where that great Freethinker first saw the light of day. He brings with him a message of encouragement from the noblest of Americans, from one whose splendid brain is equalled by his generous heart. And when our American guest returns to his own people, with what we may hope will be delightful memories of the mother country, we trust that he will do his utmost to gain us a visit from Colonel Ingersoll. (Much applause.)

Mr. BOORMAN (Chatham) moved, and Mr. THOMPSON (Wood Green) seconded, the adoption of the Report, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. C. WATTS then moved as a resolution arising out of the Report: "That the members of this Conference hail with unqualified pleasure the presence among them of their able American co-worker, Mr. S. P. Putnam; and they wish to convey to him their appreciation of the great services he has rendered, and is still rendering, to the cause of mental freedom. Further, all present wish to assure Mr. Putnam of their earnest desire to have a visit from the great orator, Colonel Ingersoll; and they hereby kindly request Mr. Putnam to use his influence to induce the Colonel to cross the Atlantic at an early date, and to assure him that he would receive from the Freethinkers of this country a most genuine and enthusiastic reception."

Mr. PUTNAM said it had been the dream of his life to visit England, and when he returned to America he should report the work that was going on under the same flag here. It filled his heart with joy to hear the applause that greeted the name of Colonel Ingersoll. He belonged to the whole world; a citizen of the whole earth. His dominant thought was the sentiment of Thomas Paine inscribed on the walls, "The world is my country, mankind are my brethren, and to do good is my religion." Colonel Ingersoll had constant calls on his time. He had a great law practice, and, in addition, he devoted himself to Freethought. He had listened to Colonel Ingersoll's lecture, "About the Holy Bible," at Chicago with an audience of six thousand persons. He had up to the present only received a brief message, but one full of heart and sympathy for the English Freethinkers. Ingersoll loves and admires England. It would be a pleasure for him to come here, but there are great demands on his time. He, however, felt sure the time was not distant when the great Freethought soldier of America would greet the English Freethinkers.

The adoption of the Financial Report, moved by Mr. KRAST (Bristol), and seconded by Mr. SUNDERLAND (Bradford), was carried after various questions by Mr. J. Anderson had been disposed of.

Mr. Foote having vacated the chair, which was taken by Mr. Watts,

Mr. G. WARD (Finsbury Park) moved the resolution standing in the name of his Branch: "That Mr. G. W. Foote be re-elected President for 1895-96." Mr. PEGG

Digitized by Google

(Manchester) seconded, and Mr. FORDER read a letter from Mr. George Anderson. Mr. Anderson said he had long felt that the President of the N.S.S. should be recouped for his loss of time and money in serving the party's interests. It was unfair that heavy burdens should be laid upon those who were doing such valuable work. Of course it might be said that Presidents had asked for nothing. But that was no answer. Mr. Bradlaugh had died several thousand pounds in debt, owing to this state of things. Christian congregations looked after the worldly wants of their ministers, and Secularists should do the same; and Mr. Anderson believed the congregation was large enough to do it. He hoped the Conference would appoint a committee to consider the matter and to report upon it forthwith.

Mr. FOOTE said that he doubted whether the suggestion was feasible in the present condition of affairs, but it was a matter on which he could say little, except that he often felt it hard to bear his heavy out-of-pocket expenses. Some discussion followed, and ultimately, in accordance with Mr. Anderson's suggestion, a committee were appointed. They were Messrs. Anderson, Forder, Watts, and Ward.

Mr. FOOTE was unanimously re-elected, and, on re-taking the chair, was received with applause. He said it would be but the pride which aped humility if he said this was unexpected. Nevertheless, he felt the honor done him. He would rather be the President of this poor, struggling, oppressed society of devoted men and women, working in a great cause, than to enjoy a post of cheap and easy honor in any walk of life. If there be any better man the party preferred, he hoped he should be sensible enough to render him as loyal support as he himself desired. The place was not a bed of roses. Some seemed to regard the President as a sort of Aunt Sally, against whom they must shy all their sticks. He did not complain. Freethinkers have a larger share of individuality than others, or they would not be Freethinkers. He had done his best. No man could do more. He had never been of opinion that the Society wanted a dummy President. When Mr. Bradlaugh spoke to him about taking the post, he said if it was for the good of the Society, he would stand aside. Mr. Bradlaugh said: "No, Foote, I will be no party to having a dummy President. You must either take it or leave it, as I mean to nominate you." Experience had more than ever convinced him that a firmness was necessary. What is our condition? We are outlaws. We have to fight the whole world, living from hand to mouth. A fighting party must submit to some kind of discipline. Blows were only effective when struck with the power of the whole party, and organisation substituted for guerilla warfare. Going about from place to place, he had a more extensive view of the wants of the party, and he felt that the lecture system was chaotic, and required a vigorous concentration and guiding hand from the centre. Money was wasted for want of this. Often circumstances arose rendering it desirable to have at once special lectures or to meet opposition in some place; but it could not be carried out because of our elaborate paper machinery. He had decided to see what he could personally do to organise the lecture system, and intended to put his hand to the task. In conclusion, Mr. Foote pledged himself that he would follow, however feebly, in the footsteps of his predecessor, and he trusted that, when they met again, they would have no cause for regret.

Upon the motion of the Executive, the following Vice-Presidents were nominated for re-election: Dr. T. R. Allinson, G. Anderson, D. Baker, N. B. Billany, J. E. Brumage, Prof. L. Buchner, M.D., W. W. Collins, R. Forder, S. Hartmann, W. Heaford, G. J. Holyoake, P. A. V. Le Lubez, A. B. Moss, T. Parris, S. M. Peacock, W. Pratt, J. H. Ridgway, V. Roger, J. Samson, Dr. E. Schlaeger, R. O. Smith, Mrs. T. Smith, J. Symes, E. Truelove, J. Umpleby, Miss E. M. Vance, C. Watts, J. M. Wheeler.

Mr. J. ANDERSON called attention to the absence of the name of Mr. G. Standring, who, it was explained, had resigned.

Mr. BRIGGS (of Derby) objected to the name of Mr. R. O. Smith, and a motion that it be omitted was seconded.

The PRESIDENT, as on another occasion, asked them not to be hasty at the risk of being unjust. Unless in the case of criminal conduct, it was generally best to let a man decide for himself whether he should remain or resign.

This was done; Mr. BRIGGS having stated that his object had been attained in drawing attention to the matter.

The following were also nominated by the Executive for election as Vice-Presidents: E. Bater (London), J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh), J. P. Gilmour (Glasgow), and S. P. Putnam (America). Carried unanimously.

Upon the motion of Messrs. PEGG and TAYLOR, the standing orders were suspended, and the name of Mr. Cohen added to the list of Vice-Presidents.

The motion by Rochdale Branch, "That the office of Honorary Secretary be abolished," was lost; and the motion by Executive, "That Mr. Robert Forder be re-elected Honorary Secretary," was carried unanimously.

Messrs. W. B. Thompson (Chatham) and Arthur Wheeler (London) were elected Auditors.

Mr. SUNDERLAND (Bradford), on behalf of the Rochdale Branch, moved: "That on and after Whit-Sunday, 1896, no member shall be eligible for re-election as President until three years have elapsed from his vacating such office." He jocularly asked, "When shall I come in?" The motion fell through for want of a seconder.

At this stage of the proceedings the Conference adjourned for dinner, since "'tis mete that those should meat who meet at meetings." The repast provided for the delegates at the "Crown and Dove" was a capital one, giving general satisfaction.

(Continued on page 363.)

ACID DROPS.

JOHN WALSH, of Liverpool, is dead, and the coroner's jury has returned an open verdict over his corpse. John went to a "wake." There was plenty of drinking and the usual row, and John got hit over the head with a poker. According to the coroner, the whole affair was "most disgraceful." There was gross perjury, he declared, on one side or the other; and it was shocking that such things could occur in a Christian country. Very likely! But there will be more wakes, more drinks, more quarrels, and more broken heads. Popular religious ceremonies will not die out in a hurry. The Liverpool coroner must wait.

Sir Daniel Lysons' recent book on the Crimean War gives a pathetic little story showing how little "funk" at the thought of death there is in reality, as compared with pulpit representations. General Lysons found a soldier lying on the ground, and asked if he were wounded. "No, sir; cholera," was the soldier's reply. The general dismounted and offered him some brandy. "Thank you, sir," he said, "it would be wasting it; I am dying."

Now that Arthur Orton is making a clean breast of it, and confessing how he passed as Sir Roger Tichborne, it is worth remembering that the late Charles Bradlaugh took a very decided stand in opposition to "Sir Roger's" counsel, the late Dr. Kenealy. Bradlaugh's open letter to Kenealy in the National Reformer caused a good deal of excitement, and sold very largely when it was reprinted in pamphlet form.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is priest enough to sympathise with the Church clergy who object to marrying divorced persons. This is all very well, from the priests' point of view; but as long as the Church clergy are State officers, in the religious department, they must conform to the law; and the law says that divorced persons may marry again, even when the divorce was brought about by their own misconduct.

Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen, lecturing at the British Museum on the Folk-lore of Babylonia, spoke of King Sargon as the Moses of Chaldea. He was born of a princess, who placed him in a basket of bulrushes and entrusted him to the waters of the Euphrates. He was rescued from the water by an irrigator, who adopted him as his child, and instructed him in the art of gardening. He was so prosperous that he became king of the city of Agadé, and the founder of the first Babylonian empire. Mr. Boscawen considers that Sargon was undoubtedly a historical character, which is probably more than can safely be affirmed of Moses.

Another semi-mythical hero was Etanna. It was he who built the great tower to reach to heaven, which the gods threw down as fast as he built it; and finally they changed the speech of man and caused the work to cease. This legend is doubtless the origin of the Bible yarn of the Tower of Babel. Mr. Boscawen affirmed as much himself, and said in conclusion that the field of Babylonian folk-lore promised a rich harvest for the students of comparative mythology.

The Rileyites have revived their tactics on the London School Board. They go there to obstruct and hinder the work of education. Repairs were absolutely necessary to put some dozen schools in poor neighborhoods into fair sanitary condition, but these good Christians opposed the motion tooth and nail.

There is not so much humanity, after all, in this Armenian atrocity agitation. The zeal of English Christians in this matter is very largely sectarian. It is also stimulated by the fact that Turkey is a weak power. You never can be quite sure of a Christian in any good cause. He is so apt to be a Christian first and a man afterwards.

Digitized by Google

The Arbitration Alliance is "an association of Christians founded last year on behalf of international arbitration," and one day last week it held its annual meeting. One of the speakers was Dr. Brooke Herford, but this reverend gentleman's ideas of arbitration are rather peculiar. "The kind of arbitration he desired to see at the present moment," he said, "was the dispatch of English war-ships to Constantinople, to distinctly show the Turkish powers that we meant business with regard to the future protection of Armenian Christians." It appears from this that arbitration is all right until "Christian" interests are at stake; and then, especially if you are strong enough, you must go in for blood and blazes.

According to report, a Christian has actually been found in Russia in the person of Prince Dimitri Khilkov, who has been influenced by Tolstoi to divide his estates among his peasants. Perhaps humanity is the motive rather than Christianity. At any rate, we hope the Prince will not join the sect of Skopski, the only Christians who follow out the teachings of Matthew xix.

Mr. Mark H. Judge, honorary secretary of the Sunday Society, in giving evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Lords, stated that his Society "did not encourage lectures or entertainments on Sundays for commercial profit." This is true in a certain sense, but to some people it may be misleading. The Sunday Society pays its lecturers, and it is as "commercial" to take money for lecturing as to take money for making chairs. Would it not be better if the Sunday Society did its own work without touching outside matters? For our part, we do not see why the proprietor of a hall should not be free to organise Sunday lectures and musical entertainments just as well as religious or philanthropical committees. Surely a thing which is right in itself cannot become wrong when it is done for a profit; and if lecturers and musicians are paid, why should not other persons devote their time, skill, and experience to the enterprise, and take their legitimate share of the financial results?

Mr. Gavazzi King, in giving evidence before the same committee, made some humorous observations. "There was difficulty," he said, "in getting subscriptions in Yorkshire. Yorkshiremen would pay for their seats, but it was difficult to get money after the event. They did not care to contribute to a collection, because they had got in then. Of course, that was a Scotch characteristic as well." Yes, and we fear it is a common characteristic of human nature.

An inquest has been held at Nottingham on the body of Mrs. Long, a widow, who died suddenly as she was entering the Tabernacle, Mansfield-road, Nottingham, of the congregation of which she was a member.

James Canning, the ex-soldier, sentenced to death for the murder of his sweetheart, expresses his wish to die and be with the murdered girl in heaven. Truly the Christian religion is a very consoling one.

The Rev. J. H. Sheldrake, D.D., of Cincinatti, is being tried before the Pittsburg Presbytery on the charge of adultery, which is made by the Rev. G. W. Chalford.

Charlotte Cooper, a servant living at Southsea, was found dead in her bed-room, laid out ready to be placed in her coffin, with her hands folded and her face tied up. On the table was a bottle containing carbolic acid, and a note saying: "My only dread is that I am not taking enough poison. God grant I may, for I want to be out of all these petty worries, for his dear Son's sake, Jesus Christ. Amen." We pity the poor girl, but then, as Talmage says, those Atheists are always committing suicide.

Rev. Alfred Barber, vicar of Burton Fleming, Hunmanby, E. Yorkshire, who has been in holy orders since 1877, and whose present living is worth £282 a year, has been before the Filey magistrates on a charge of indecently assaulting John Pogmore, a boy aged eleven. Enough evidence was taken to justify a remand, and the bail was fixed at £400.

The Rev. Charles Joseph has for some time been looking after the morals of Portsmouth. He does not seem, however, to look properly after his own congregation. One of the members has just been figuring in a nasty paternity case, and has been ordered to pay up by the magistrates. The "father" of the girl's baby, however, has appealed against the magistrates' decision, and it is probable that the reverend gentleman himself will have to appear as a witness.

Mr. Joseph has to pay £75 damages and costs for slandering a local publican, all in the interest of morality. His appeal has been dismissed at the Law Courts, the Master of the Rolls incidentally remarking that Mr. Joseph's speech was the dullest nonsense ever heard.

The Rev. Benjamin Waugh, secretary to the Society for the Protection of Children (salary £800 per annum), is pushing a Bill through the House of Commons to prevent parents insuring the lives of their children for a sum sufficient to meet funeral expenses. The insurance agents stigmatise his accusations against the working classes as calumny, and are actively opposing the Bill.

Even the pious New York Herald, after noting that there are only 50,000 professed Christians among the 45,000,000 inhabitants of Japan, reckons that "there will be few Japanese statesmen who will be inclined to look with favour on the introduction of more of the sort of Christian civilisation that has made itself so selfishly prominent during the last few weeks. We have seen during that time the most powerful European nations, professing the glories of the Christian religion, striving, not to assist Japan on her pathway to the highest civilisation, but exerting all their influence and menacing her with diabolical threats to the end that they, in their stupendous greed, may still gain a few more decades of years to milk the bloated cow of Confucius for their own pecuniary benefit."

A correspondent of the New York World sneers at Ingersoll for getting information out of encyclopedias and "such like handbooks." Suppose he does. Ingersoll's encyclopedias are up to date. The sneerer's encyclopedia is an antiquated Jew book, compiled by men who made up in assurance for their want of information.

The Rev. James Hunt, the Rector of Donegore, in Ulster, who said he would like to dynamite the Protestant chapel at Madrid, when brought before the Court of the General Synod last week, made a recantation "because ordered by the Court." Mr. Campbell, Q.C., contended that the recantation was insincere, and ought to be refused; but Lord Justice Fitzgibbon held that the Court could not enter into the question of sincerity or insincerity without trying the defendant for a new offence. The Belfast News-Letter says: "There must be some defect in the legal procedure of the Church which enables Mr. Hunt to continue to hold the position of Rector of Donegore."

The steeple of St. Nicholas's Cathedral, Newcastle-on-Tyne, needs repair, and counsel says that the Corporation is responsible for the expenses. It seems to us that St. Nicholas should repair his own church, or induce his friends to raise a subscription.

Rev. A. I. Steylter loudly complains in the Cape Argus of the growing desecration of the Sabbath. People out there are actually going in for entertainments on the Lord's Day. "Cannot they rest satisfied," asks this sky-pilot, "with six days for the pursuance of wealth and pleasure?" Which, being interpreted, means: Can't they let the clergy have one day all to themselves? Free Trade won't do in religion, anyway.

In a prominent position on the wall of a house of refreshment in North London is displayed the following: "Happy is the people whose God is the Lord." The effect is somewhat spoiled by the proximity of this warning in large type: "Patrons are requested to keep a sharp eye on their overcoats and umbrellas."

The priests of the shrine at Bansi (India) found one morning recently that the god, Mahadeo, was missing. Search was made, and the god discovered in a shawl beside a tank. Their first impression was that a miracle had been vouchsafed, which would bring grist to the priestly mill. This idea was dispelled when it was discovered that the god had lost his gold cuirass, his silver throne, and all his jewellery.

A Kansas "mejum" has published a pretended letter from the spirit of Horace Seaver, late editor of the Boston Investigator, addressed to the former proprietor of that paper, Mr. J. P. Mendum, telling him his wish to make that paper the organ of spiritual philosophy. The joke is, Mr. Seaver died in 1889; the message came on March 3, 1895, Mr. Mendum having died on January 11, 1891. The spirit message says: "Keep a more determined will on your health. The longer you remain on earth the better will I be pleased, and the better will it be for you." Evidently the Kansas "mejum" had not heard of the death of Mr. J. P. Mendum.

A terrible cyclone passed over a portion of Kansas, in the vicinity of Wichita, on the 1st inst., leaving death and desolation in its trail. The horrified people saw the approach of the destroyer, and prayed most fervently for deliverance; but the demon of the storm, the instrument of God's wrath, as churchmen call such afflictions, swept right on over their prostrate forms. A teacher in a district school saw the impending danger. With the little brood under her charge she fled from the line of destruction. Looking back a minute later, the school-house had utterly disappeared; but, relying on her own strength and energies, the dear children were safe. Moral: Don't stop to pray to any God when danger threatens, but, in Western parlance, "get up and get."—Progressive Thinker.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. Mr. Macaskill, of Dingwall, brought the heresies of Professor Drummond's Ascent of Man before the Free Church Assembly at Edinburgh. He showed that the teaching of Professor Drummond, who, he said, would send us to look for our ancestry among "vile baboons and horrid gorillas," was quite incompatible with belief in the Bible. A motion for a judicial investigation into the teaching of the book was negatived, the Assembly being well aware that an investigation means badly in the long run for their own claims and those of their fetish book.

The Presbyterians in America, in their General Assembly at Pittsburgh, have also been troubled with the heresy of Dr. Briggs; but they shrink from expulsion, and the body is virtually deserting the Westminster Confession of Faith.

The Boston Investigator says: "A country judge in Hungary gave a decision a few days ago of which Solomon himself might be proud. Members of the Nazarene sect in the town of Gyoma requested his Honor to be allowed to crucify one of their number, 'who was a Messiah, and had been called by heaven to save men.' The judge for a moment was dumbfounded. 'Friends,' he replied, after recovering his senses, 'I do not wish to interfere with your religious practices. If your Messiah wishes to be crucified, let him prepare for death. Remember, however, that if he does not rise again in three days, I shall cause every one of you to be hanged.' The Nazarenes, it is needless to add, allowed their chief to live."

The example of Solomon and the patriarchs continues to operate in America, even though Mormon polygamy is stamped out. The Boston Investigator says: "The following list of witnesses to the saving power of Jesus' name is sent us by a Georgia correspondent:—Rev. F. B. Taylor, of Alabama, left his wife and ran away, and is now in Bullock county leading a false life; that Rev. Tombs Thomas has three living wives in Alabama, and one in Georgia; that one Sherwood, who goes around selling song books with a band of boys, has several wives; that Rev. S. B. Henderson quit the A. M. E. Church because the bishop would not agree for him to marry again while his first wife was alive; he married again, and now has quit wife No. 2 and gone off with another woman; that Rev. E. J. Smith has deserted his wife in Alabama and gone to the red hills of Georgia."

The same paper mentions that Sam Wah Kee, a converted Chinaman of this city, recently visited China and returned with his third living wife. This came to the ears of his former teachers, and they went to his place in Harrison-avenue to protest. Sam was surprised that exception should be taken to his polygamous tendencies, and he tried to explain that his action was in accordance with the dictates of true religion.

The Baltimore Herald says: "Hypocrisy is undoing religion. The scandals in the lives of ministers, particularly, occupy an inordinate amount of space in the daily records of events. In extenuation it may be said that men of the cloth are exposed to greater temptations than others, and that a much higher standard is set for them. But it is also true that they pretend to the attainment of a superior degree of grace, which ought to make them proof against the pitfalls and snares in their path."

A so-called Story of the Life of Jesus has been put out, for the young, by Mr. W. L. Sheldon. Mr. Sheldon is the lecturer of the Ethical Society at St. Louis, and the story is "told from an ethical standpoint." This means that the whole of the supernatural and miraculous elements of the Gospels are carefully eliminated. The angels that appeared to Mary and Joseph, to the shepherds, and to Jesus himself, the temptation of Jesus, the appearance of the risen Jesus to his sorrowing followers, all were dreams, illusions. The darkness at the crucifixion was simply the oncoming of night. When Jesus said "Peace, be still," it was the troubled minds of his disciples, not the waves of the sea, that were quieted.

This may be an "ethical" rendering of the Gospel stories, but, assuredly, it is not a rational and fair one. Public Opinion, of New York, remarks: "It is simply impossible that the New Testament record should be even approximately correct unless it is inspired; and to reject the theory of inspiration, and then proceed dogmatically to relate, in matter-of-fact detail, what Jesus did and said and thought, is certainly anything but reasonable and consistent. And such a course is the more to be deprecated because the book is especially designed for children, who will, of course, take everything in its most literal sense, and will never regard it, even if the author so intended it—though he evidently does not—as a historical and biographical romance, a 'Ben-Hur' sort of story from an ethical standpoint.

"Moreover, viewed in its purely secular and educational aspect, the book must be even more strongly condemned. To give the child his first important lesson in biography and history after this fashion is to risk vitiating his whole attitude towards history. It is demoralising to the youthful mind to treat it in this way. Every sort of teaching that tends to give the child a wrong attitude towards facts, everything that does not directly tend to cultivate and strengthen his ability to weigh and sift evidence and to reach a reasonable conclusion, is both unjust to the child and dangerous to the social order."

A similar work has been put out here by the Rev. Walter Lloyd, entitled The Galilean. It is founded on the altogether false assumption that the truth can be obtained from ancient records by simply omitting from them all that is inconsistent with modern knowledge. Mr. Lloyd ascribes to the Church, and not to the Gospels, all that he objects to, forgetting that we derive the Gospels themselves from the Church.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

June 9, Glasgow; 10 and 11, Aberdeen; 13 and 14, Dundee; 16, Edinburgh; 23, Manchester; 24, Derby; 30, Sheffield.

July 6, Chester-le-Street; 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14 Bristol; 16 and 17, Plymouth; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth; 18, Leicester.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

Did Christ Predict his Resurrection?

If one conclusion from the records be more certain than another, it is that Christ's most intimate friends and disciples, even the twelve, looked upon his Crucifixion as the termination of his career, the prostration and crushing of all their hopes, the end of all things as far as their faith and future were concerned. They not only had no expectation of their Lord's Resurrection; they had plainly never dreamt of such a thing—the bare idea of it appears never to have crossed their minds; the rumor of the occurrence, when reported to them, "seemed to them as idle tales"; nay, they had the greatest difficulty in realising the fact even when Jesus appeared to them. Now, is it credible—is it even conceivable—that this should have been their state of mind if the Resurrection had been repeatedly foretold to them by their beloved Master, and specifically as the sequel of the Crucifixion? Could the previous announcement of so astounding an event have failed to create the most intense excitement at the time, and the most vivid expectation, after the Crucifixion had already three days previously so impressively recalled those (alleged) predictions of his sufferings and death, with which the prophecy of his rising from the dead was, according to the Evangelists, so inextricably mingled? I confess it appears to me simply inconceivable. If Christ did so utter himself, wishing thereby to prepare the minds of his disciples, the least that can be said is, that he entirely failed in his purpose.—W. R. Greg, "Miscellaneous Essays," pp. 235, 236.

For aught I see, though the Mosaical part of Judaism be abolished among Christians, the Pharisaical part of it never will.—Rev. Robert South, D.D.

If there were no preachers, we would know nothing of God; if no mediums, nothing of spirits. Our knowledge in this line is strictly limited to terrestrial beings.—Otto Wettstein.

In Italy the Bible is just this: for priests, a sacred text; for infidels, a book full of obscurities and contradictions; for the learned, an historical document, to be used with great caution; for lovers of literature, a collection of very fine specimens of Oriental poetic eloquence. But it never has been, and never will be, a fruitful inspirer of men's life.—Professor Angelo de Gubernatis.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, June 9, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London, E.C.: 7.30, "The Romance of the Twelve Apostles."

June 16, Hall of Science.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—June 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London. July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

E. Smedley.—(1) The quotations from Gibbon in Crimes of Christianity are taken from the best edition—Milman's, re-edited by Dr. Smith—in 8 vols. (Murray). Perhaps your reference is to another chapter, or another part of the same chapter. (2) The quotations from Justin and Tertullian are from the translations in the Ante-Nicene Library. Yours is a different translation and would not correspond verbatim, though the substance should be the same. (3) Mr. Watts's quotations from Renan's Life of Jesus were taken from the old Trübner edition. The cheap translation to which you refer is one that we have not examined. Trübner's books can generally be relied upon.

O. N. Wild.—We commented on the case as it stood, and could not well foresee what was to be disclosed at the next hearing. And our comment stands good, for the Catholic prosecutors were then no wiser than we. Thanks for your trouble.

John Smith.—We do not know Mr. W. Mawer's present address.

A. Liddle.—Thanks. We agree with you that letters like "Aldebaran's" in the Glasgow Weekly Herald are most serviceable to the Freethought cause. The appearance of such letters, in such a paper, is indeed a pregnant sign of the times.

Beelzebub.—Sorry we cannot find room for letters on Mr. Engström's unsatisfactory reply. Thanks for cutting. We note that the Portsmouth Branch was twitted with giving nothing to hospitals just when it was taking up a collection for them.

T. Riley (Halifax).—Sorry to hear that you endorse Mr. Haines's letter.

H. G. Shepherd.—Thanks. It shall have a paragraph in our next.

E. Howard.—See paragraph.

Owing to the holidays, our correspondence this week falls within narrow limits.

Papers Received.—Truthseeker—Crescent—Liberator—Western Figaro—Church Reformer—Newcastle Evening Chronicle—Cape Argus—Bristol Mercury—Western Daily Press—Freidenker—Secular Thought—Isle of Man Times—Freedom—Liberty—Two Worlds—Progressive Thinker—New York Literary Digest—Bolton Journal and Guardian—De Dagersad—Light—Belfast News-Letter—Post—Christian Globe—Anti-Gambling Bulletin—Twentieth Century.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. G. W. Foote occupies the London Hall of Science platform this evening (June 9). His subject will be "The Romance of the Twelve Apostles."

The National Secular Society's Annual Conference was a great success. It was pleasant to meet delegates who had come all the way from Glasgow, though it was strange to see no representative from Plymouth. The large St. James's Hall was tastefully decorated with flags and flowers, thanks to the forethought and exertions of the local Reception Committee. Several ladies graced the platform with their presence.

As we predicted, there was a great supply of speaking talent. Messrs. Foote, Watts, Putnam, Moss, Cohen, Heaford, and Gilmour were all in fine form at the evening meeting, when addresses were delivered to the general public. One of the best speeches was that of Mr. Touzeau Parris, whose attendance had been doubtful until within a few days of the Conference. Mr. Watts was last on the list of speakers, and as the hour was getting late he had to speak too briefly, much to the regret of his many admirers. Mr. Foote had to be equally brief. Mr. Putnam had the most time allowed him, as was natural, and he kept the audience well alive to the end.

All the old Vice-Presidents were re-elected. The new ones are a welcome accession to the list. Mr. Foote was re-elected President with unanimity and enthusiasm. In the next number of the Freethinker he will address the Secular party, and explain what he briefly sketched at the Conference as to his immediate intentions with respect to the organisation and conduct of our propaganda.

A good report of the evening meeting appeared in the Bristol Mercury, and a briefer report in the Daily Press. This is an improvement on last year, when the Conference was practically tabooed by the Liverpool press.

Mr. Putnam delivers three lectures to-day (June 9) at Glasgow. During the week he visits Dundee and Aberdeen, and next Sunday he lectures at Edinburgh. We have not the slightest doubt that he will receive a splendid welcome from our Scottish friends. The hope we have to express is that they will bring their more orthodox friends to his meetings.

The Truthseeker (New York) for May 25 has arrived at our office. It contains the first of Mr. Putnam's letters, giving an account of his voyage across the Atlantic, and ending with the following sentences: "Yesterday at Southampton I was met by Watts and Foote. It was truly like a wonderful dream. It was a royal day, indeed, and I can only suggest the grand inspiration of the occasion. Next week I shall have much to write of our splendid English allies. My heart is full of this beautiful welcome to new shores and new work."

Our "sub," Mr. J. M. Wheeler, had rather a bad time on Monday night, in common with a good many other London friends returning by excursion train from the Conference. The Railway Company landed them on the Paddington platform about one o'clock on Tuesday morning, when the metropolitan traffic had all ceased. Mr. Wheeler had to walk to Holloway, and get up in the morning to write the Conference report. Before breakfast, as luck would have it, the postman brought him a Mahatma letter from India. It is written in Sanskrit, and our "sub" has to get it translated. This is rather rough. Mahatmas, who know everything, should at least condescend to be intelligible.

The envelope of this Mahatma letter is a common English one, and the handwriting, which is disguised, is English too. No doubt the envelope was sent out addressed to India, and posted there by the Mahatma—with his letter inside.

We have been pressing our "sub" to start a new Theosophical section himself. Everybody does that who gets Mahatma letters, and we don't see why Mr. Wheeler shouldn't have his share of the business while there is any money left in it. But somehow he doesn't take kindly to the idea. Ah, Mr. Wheeler, you'll never make a fortune; not in this world, anyhow.

Our gallant contemporary, the Church Reformer, edited by the Rev. Stewart D. Headlam, is a paper we admire, though we are opposed to most of its principles. Mr. Headlam is such a "good fellow" that you cannot help liking him, and respecting him, even when you think him wrongheaded. It was an act of generosity on his part to go bail for Oscar Wilde. "I was surety," Mr. Headlam writes, "not for his character, but for his appearance in court to stand his trial." Mr. Headlam knew little of Oscar Wilde, having only met him twice; but he felt that the man's chance of a fair trial was imperilled, and he resolved "on public grounds" to let him have an opportunity of self-defence.

The Failsworth Secular Sunday-school will "procesh" on Whit-Friday (June 7). Headed by the Sowerby Bridge Friendly Brass Band, the young people and their teachers will start from the school at 10 o'clock. There will be singing by the choir as usual. In the afternoon the party will adjourn to a field, where sports, games, etc., will be provided. In the evening there will be a tea party held in the school. Some of our readers in the Manchester district will probably go to Failsworth to "assist" at this interesting function.

Digitized by Google

We see, not from an official source, but from our foreign exchanges, that the International Congress of Freethinkers is to be held at Brussels on September 22, 23, and 24. The secretary of the Federation is M. J. Dons, 42 Rue du Fort, Saint Gilles, Brussels.

Mr. Moncure D. Conway, the latest editor and biographer of Thomas Paine, contributes a letter to the Athenæum on the Junius controversy. Mr. Conway refers to the curious theory of a certain school of American Liberals, headed by Colonel W. H. Burr, that Paine was Junius; a theory which is utterly untenable on the face of it, for the styles of the two writers are very different, and it is pretty certain that Paine did not possess the exact classical scholarship of the writer of the famous Letters. Besides, as Mr. Conway points out, Paine wrote of the "brilliant pen" of Junius, which he could hardly have done if he had been the author. He also wrote that the pen of Junius "enraptured without convincing; and though in the plenitude of its rage it might be said to give elegance to bitterness, yet the policy survived the blast." Neither the praise nor the censure is such as a man could well pass upon himself; and it is noticeable that when Paine is writing about Junius his style is as different as possible from that of the Great Unknown.

Félicien David, the composer of "Lalla Roukh" and "Le Desert," and one of the Saint Simonian forerunners at Suez of De Lesseps, has now, our Paris correspondent says, a monument in the cemetery of Le Pecq. His last wish was that no priest should officiate at his funeral. The monument, unveiled yesterday, is by M. Chapu. Few persons were present at the ceremony, but the pedestal of the bust was covered with roses, placed there by some friendly hand. —Daily News.

The English Mechanic (May 24), in a leading article, estimates the age of the earth at about twenty millions of years, and says that "the age of man runs into three hundred thousand years, and probably a hundred thousand or so more."

The proposed New Utah Constitution not only prohibits Bible-instituted polygamy, but provides for woman suffrage.

Under the heading "Literary Notes," the Conservative Morning devotes considerable space to Colonel Ingersoll's Home Life. It says: "Colonel Robert Green Ingersoll, the American Agnostic, lives in Fifth-avenue, New York, with his wife and two daughters, Eva and Maud. The elder daughter is now Mrs. Ralston Brown, and she has two children. Mrs. Ingersoll's mother is a member of the family, as are also her sister, Mrs. Farrell, and Mr. and Miss Farrell. This makes a family of eleven, and, excepting the two little children who are not yet old enough to solve the problems, they are followers of the Ingersoll anti-religious idea."

A correspondent, who recently visited Colonel Ingersoll, thus describes his daily habits: "He always rises at seven o'clock, shaves himself, and takes a cold bath with the regularity of clockwork. The breakfast hour is eight o'clock, and usually the whole family sits down at the table. There is no end to the conversation at that family board. All there are readers and thinkers. The Colonel enters into all of the family talk, whether it be about politics, music, the stage, some new actor, a recent book, a question in finance or law, or the doings of his baby grandchildren. Half an hour is usually given to the morning meal, and the next thirty minutes the Colonel spends in looking over his letters and glancing at the papers. He is an astonishingly rapid reader. Half-past nine finds him in his law office at 45 Wall-street."

Colonel Ingersoll holds the belief that no man's life should be written while he is alive. A record of the man's daily life is kept by his private secretary, as well as his important utterances and writings upon notable subjects. Scarcely a day goes by without bringing to the surface someone who desires to convert the Colonel. Whether the caller be a gentleman or a lady, the Colonel is always ready to be seen, and he listens politely.

It is usually five o'clock in the afternoon when the Colonel starts for home. The dinner hour is six, and the two daughters are invariably attired in white for this meal. Two or three times in the week the Colonel and some of the family go to the theatre. During the opera season they are regular attendants, both of the girls being musicians of exceptional ability. The Colonel is a great music-lover, although he is no musician himself.

The Colonel is a great admirer of Shakespeare. He has a collection of various editions of Shakespeare's works which rivals any private collection in the country. Hugo and Dickens are his favorite novelists. Les Miserables he regards as the greatest novel ever written, and A Tale of Two Cities is second in his affections. Wagner is his favorite composer.

Mr. Herbert Spencer has been elected an honorary member of the Philosophical Class by the Vienna Academy of Sciences. Dr. Mommsen, the great German historian, who gave the coup de grâce to the "history" of the third Gospel as to the birth of Christ, has also been elected an honorary member by the French Academy of Letters and Inscriptions. This is a welcome sign that the bitter feeling in France against Germany is abating, at least enough to permit recognition of the fact that science, like art, is international.

Humanity, the journal of the Humanitarian League, edited by Mr. H. S. Salt, is now in its fourth number. The June issue contains an important article on the "Report from the Departmental Committee on Prisons," and a stimulating appeal in relation thereto by Edward Carpenter. A paper on Public Control of Hospitals is contributed by Edward Maitland. We wish this modest little journal every success. Should any of our readers desire to become members of the Humanitarian League, they can address their communications to its office, 79A Great Queen-street, London, W.C. The minimum subscription is half-a-crown per year.

A written debate "About the Holy Bible" is to take place in the columns of the Freethought Magazine, of Chicago, between the Rev. J. R. Kaye, Ph.D., and Professor Felix L. Oswald. The latter gentleman has been for years a contributor to the Popular Science Monthly, and is author of The Secret of the East, The Bible of Nature, and other works. He can be trusted to worthily uphold the Freethought position.

The Blue Grass Blade, of Lexington, Kentucky, edited by C. C. Moore, an Infidel Prohibitionist, gives a good portrait of Mrs. Helen Gardener, the authoress of Men, Women, and Gods, and of several Freethought novels.

Alluding to his prosecution, Mr. Moore says: "They didn't merely 'threaten' me with a prosecution for blasphemy, but they put me in jail for blasphemy before they prosecuted me, and then prosecuted me; and when I beat them in the lower court, they took it to the Court of Appeals, and it's there now; and as soon as they can get to my case, some time in forty or fifty years from now, they will probably send me to jail, or the penitentiary, or hang me. In the meanwhile, however, I shall continue to blaspheme."

The Independent Pulpit, of Waco, Texas, in its May number, reprints from our columns Mr. Wheeler's article on "The Moral Claims of Christianity." The other contents of Mr. J. D. Shaw's paper are good, Mr. J. P. Richardson writing on "A Change of Heart," and Mr. C. L. Abbott on "The Philosophy and Development of Religion."

The Italian Freemasons and Freethinkers will make a special celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the entrance of the Italian troops into Rome. The poor Pope, who has never reconciled himself to the Papacy losing the temporal power, although the States of the Church were a standing disgrace to Roman Catholicism, will, it is said, resent the national celebration as "injurious and insulting to the Pontiff and the Holy See."

The American Protective Association, a body formed to protect the interests of native-born Americans against foreign Catholics, has decided to go in for the taxation of all Church property and the absolute separation of Church and State.

The separation of Church and State in America. Some will say, Why, there is no connection. There is no established Church in the States, but there is State patronage of religion in many ways, one being the appointment of chaplains.

In Texas, for instance, the Waco Daily News says, "each branch of the State legislature is allowed a chaplain who gets $5 per diem for opening the daily sessions with prayer. That makes $10 a day which the taxpayer puts up for the good of the legislative soul—with cotton at 4 cents and a half million dollar hole in the treasury that must be plugged by his pocket-book. The average length of these invocations is two minutes. That is at the rate of $1,500 a day for ten hours' work."

The teacher was impressing upon her class her notion of the design argument. Providence had given feathers to birds, wool to the sheep, fur to the beaver. "Now, children, tell me what has a dog got?" Tommy held up his hand, and then answered: "Our dog has got pups."

Digitized by Google

THE N.S.S. CONFERENCE.

(Continued from p. 358.)

AFTERNOON SITTING.

Mr. SHALLARD moved, on behalf of his Branch: "That no person be eligible as Vice-President who has not been a member for five years," and accepted an addition suggested by Mr. Cohen, "except on the express recommendation of the Executive," with which the motion was accepted by the Conference.

The motion of the Rochdale Branch, "That from this date no member shall be permitted to take part in and vote at the meetings of the Executive Council but the properly-appointed delegates from the Branches; the President, Treasurer, and Secretary alone excepted," fell through for want of a seconder; and its fourth motion for a monthly official statement was also, after some discussion, rejected in favor of the previous question, moved by Mr. GILMOUR, who characterised the proposal as costly and impracticable, while the demand for the list of persons receiving grants from the Benevolent Fund was "abominable."

Mr. JAS. ANDERSON moved: "That no Vice-President shall henceforth hold any paid office in the Society." Mr. BOORMAN seconded, as a matter of form, though he did not see any particular harm in the present arrangement.

Mr. FOOTE said obviously one person was aimed at by the motion. That person was the lady on his left. Miss Vance was Vice-President before she was appointed Secretary. She was rather more than less qualified on that account, and would rather forego the post of Secretary than her honorable position as Vice-President. He thought the motion hardly decorous.

Mr. S. R. THOMPSON, Mr. E. G. TAYLOR, Mr. COHEN, and Mr. BAKER having spoken against the resolution, it was lost, one hand only being raised on its behalf.

Mr. WARD moved on behalf of the Finsbury Park Branch: "That an Organising Secretary be appointed by the Society, who shall devote his time to interviewing persons known to be in sympathy with Secular principles, with a view to securing their adhesion to the Society or their financial support, obtaining as far as possible the renewed support of lapsed members, and furthering the interests of the Society in any other manner the Executive may deem expedient."

Mr. GILMOUR said the motion in the abstract was excellent; but how was it to be carried out? In London itself there was a field large enough for such a man, while in the provinces a week in each town would not cover each of the Branches.

Mr. FOOTE thought that the motion might be allowed to stand as a suggestion to the Executive. Mr. WITHY, of Bath, said he thought this motion a most progressive one, and would relieve the President of some of his work. (Mr. FOOTE dissented.) If adopted, he should be prepared to make a substantial contribution to the fund.

Mr. WARD having acceded to his motion being taken as a recommendation only, it was carried with but one dissentient.

Mr. COHEN, in moving "That properly-qualified speakers be sent by the Council of the N.S.S. into different districts for organising and lecturing purposes, and that a Committee be appointed by this Conference to draw up a scheme to that end, and submit the same to the Executive Council," said that at present there was plenty of chaos and very little system. Hotel keepers and railway companies profited, but little lasting good was done by spasmodic efforts. He dwelt on the advantages of a lecturer having a district where he understood the local needs, and of being able to meet emergencies at once as they arise. This he illustrated by his Tyneside experience. He thought the scheme would bring both men and money to the Society. Mr. KEAST (Bristol) approved of the resolution, but wished to add the words, "and Branches."

Mr. WATTS asked if this would not clash with the President's scheme.

Mr. BOORMAN (Chatham) would like to have more of a detailed statement; generalities were not of much use. Mr. Foote had intimated his intention of dealing with the whole subject. He was at a loss to see how the motion would prove of benefit.

Messrs. TAYLOR and PEGG both considered the motion valuable.

Mr. COHEN observed that he had not given details to avoid discussion on exterior issues. He thought the place for details would be a committee. They should work not to get big special audiences, but steady congregations.

The motion was carried, and Messrs. Cohen, Forder, Ward, Pegg, and S. R. Thompson elected on the committee.

The motion of the Islington Branch, "That a total abstinence section be formed in connection with the Society," was withdrawn on the explanation of the President that a similar motion had been carried at the Newcastle Conference, only the testotalers had failed to carry it out.

It was proposed and seconded that numbers 17 and 18 on the Agenda be taken together.

The first was the motion by Nottingham Branch: "To add the following to the Society's 'Immediate Practical Objects':—(a) The promotion of the fullest inquiry into all matters affecting the well-being of Humanity, especially in regard to topics (e.g., the Population Question) which it may commonly be the fashion to evade or suppress. (b) The encouragement of a more general interest in social and political problems."

The second was the motion by Battersea Branch: "That the N.S.S. shall engage in real Secular work by advocating political and social reforms, with a special view to ameliorating the wretched condition of our fellow men."

These having been briefly proposed, Mr. THOMPSON (Wood Green) held that Branches should confine themselves to their own Freethought work, leaving other questions to other societies.

Mr. E. G. TAYLOR said he should speak "Yes," though instructed by his Branch to vote "No." The Manchester Branch had widely circulated a leaflet showing their relation to social matters. The Church, and even General Booth, was doing this; and he urged the Conference to show that their attitude was a positive and constructive one.

Mr. WATTS proposed, as an amendment: "That it is desirable that this Conference should appoint a committee of three, or more, persons, to draw up an authoritative and more elaborate statement than the one we possess at present, dealing with the human needs, and with the relation of Secular teachings to the social, political, and religious questions of the day."

Mr. BOORMAN said he should like to see elaborated something like a creed upon which all could agree.

Mr. PEGG (Manchester) thought that what we have in our Immediate Practical Objects rendered this not necessary. The immediate work—and there were too few to do it—was anti-theology, and he thought that work better kept distinct.

Mr. TOUZEAU PARRIS said that, though anti-theology was our object, we fought that the world might be better. There were many views as to how to do this; but let each of us try to make the world better our own way. We go against theology because we find it a hindrance to progress. We fight the Bible because we want a better world, and he thought we should make this known.

Mr. COHEN thought that, as with teetotalism, they might form Socialist sections.

The PRESIDENT: Which might break the Society up.

Mr. SHALLARD (West London) held there was great danger unless we adopt the plan of keeping to our Freethought work. His experience was that, when other questions were brought in, it was to the neglect of Freethought, and he contended that all the power we have should be thrown into the subject of anti-theology.

The PRESIDENT said our bond was a Freethought bond, and it was understood that in drawing up the list of immediate practical objects nothing should be incorporated which was any matter of contention in the party. It was rather late in the day to ask the Society to pay attention to the population question, on account of which it had suffered so much odium. He thought Mr. Watts's idea of a document showing how the Freethought view contrasted with the religious view might be useful.

The amendment was then put and carried, becoming the substantive resolution, and Messrs. Watts, Parris, Moss, and Wheeler were appointed as committee.

The motion by the Executive, "That in all elections to public bodies Secularists should endeavor to put forward candidates in distinct sympathy with Secular principles," was spoken to by Mr. Moss, who adverted to the advantages of having men who held our views and are proud to hold them upon public bodies, and mentioned his having been proposed as a people's churchwarden on the Camberwell Vestry, which gave him an opportunity of declaring his sentiments.

The next resolution, "That strenuous efforts be made to get the Education Department to change the code so that the three quarters of an hour now devoted to Scripture instruction in Board schools be utilised in teaching elementary science," was also moved by Mr. Moss, who thought it possible that some modification might be obtained from Mr. Acland. Mr. SAMSON seconded, and the motion was carried.

On the motion of the Manchester Branch, "That this Society take energetic measures for the repeal of the Blasphemy Laws," Mr. E. G. TAYLOR read the following letter from Mr. S. Storey, M.P.: "DEAR SIR,—In an ordinary year we might have done something with the Bill, but the Government demands upon the time this year are, and are likely to be, so great that all I can fairly promise is to keep it before Parliament, and await a better time for carrying it into law. To promise more would be to mislead you, and I cannot do that, nor would you desire it.—Yours very truly, S. STOREY." Mr. TAYLOR thought the whole Society should take this matter up. Each candidate should be interviewed and written to. Public opinion was ripe, and he thought it would only need a favorable election to carry the ship right over the bar. The resolution was carried.

Digitized by Google

The next, that the Society cease to issue members' certificates, was spoken against by Mr. THOMPSON and Mr. PARRIS, who alluded to how prized they were by some members, and was negatived by a large majority. The final motion about arrangements for the Annual Conference was allowed to drop, as founded on a misconception.

The time allotted having already been exceeded, the President declared the Conference closed.

EVENING MEETING.

A large number of ladies graced the platform at the public meeting, and there was a good attendance in the body of the hall.

The PRESIDENT, in a few brief words, introduced each of the speakers, who proved themselves fully entitled to the American designation of orators.

First came Mr. A. B. MOSS, who dealt with the indefinite character of modern Christian teaching and its modifications under the doctrine of evolution. "Do away with the fall of man," he said, "and there is no need for atonement by the blood of Christ. Let the people understand science instead of theology, give them facts instead of fiction, and then we can rear a race fit to make the earth the dreamt-of Paradise."

Mr. J. P. GILMOUR followed in a capital speech, at once humorous, sensible, and, at the close, poetic. He showed the progress of Freethought in Scotland, from the time when even the Rev. Robert Taylor did not cross the Tweed for fear of being shipped off to the hulks at New Holland for fourteen years, to now, when bicycles were a great agency in breaking the Sawbath. They saw in the everyday life of the people a freer and more courageous spirit, and for the state of things Buckle had depicted they had ever a desire for enjoyment, for rational recreation and pleasure. Mr. Gilmour concluded with a fine description of the breaking of the sun through the mist on Goatfell in Arran, which he compared to the progress of the cause in Scotland.

Mr. PARRIS, introduced as a Bristolian, made a fine rousing speech, urging that Freethinkers in good positions in Bristol should express their opinions, not only privately, but openly. The thoughts of our forerunners were now spreading in the Church. Christianity was seventy-five per cent. of orthodoxy kept in the background and twenty-five per cent. of Freethought stolen from us. The Freethought Holy Ghost had enlightened them. He contended that the work of Freethought was joyous and glorious, and urged his hearers to go for the truth, go for the reality, get away from the illusions of the childhood of the world kept up by authority, and to realise true human freedom.

Mr. COHEN spoke of the theological spirit as still venomous. It no longer burns, but bars; no longer fights, but slanders. He fought Christianity because he knew it and its history. It weakens man's intellect by teaching him to depend on revelation. It made the divorce between creed and conduct. To those who could discern the signs of the times, Christianity was passing away like the faiths that had preceded it.

Mr. PUTNAM, President of the American Secular Union, spoke of the work in America in regard to Church taxation, public schools, the attempt to place God in the Constitution, and the Sunday laws. He had hoped to read a letter from Colonel Ingersoll which was on its way. He ventured to prophesy that in the near future they would have the opportunity to welcome the Colonel. Mr. Putnam dwelt on the inefficacy of theology, and closed his address by reciting his poem, "Why Don't He Lend a Hand?"

Mr. HEAFORD, in a brief but energetic speech, spoke of the work of Freethought in hewing the way as pioneers for all classes of thinkers.

Mr. C. WATTS answered the questions, What are we as Secularists? and What we hope to be in future. He extolled the struggle for mental freedom in the past, and drew a contrast between the two armies—one with the banner, "Ignorance is the Mother of Devotion," and that with the inscription, "Knowledge is Power."

The PRESIDENT concluded the proceedings. He spoke of the disabilities of Freethinkers. In America they were striving for complete separation of Church and State. Here they had a bigger Church in a smaller State. To his own personal knowledge, thousands of pounds that would have come to this society had been lost because it was an illegal body. We are robbed, and the robbers insult us afterwards, asking what we do with what is stolen from us. He alluded to Mr. Bradlaugh's prediction that the great fight of the future would be between Catholicism and Freethought, the logical extremes of faith and reason. They, as Freethinkers, must be a fighting party and go on fighting, confident that reason would triumph in the end.

On Monday morning many of the delegates assembled at the hall, and were shown the lions of the city and neighborhood, visiting Clifton Downs, with the camera obscura and caves, or taking a Channel cruise, or going to Cardiff, Weston, Bath, and other places in the vicinity. A general feeling of satisfaction with the Conference, and the arrangements made by the Bristol friends, was expressed.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

IT is unfortunate that so many good causes are impeded in some instances, and in others rendered futile, by the thoughtlessness and perversity of their adherents. Not a few estimable movements that have been originated with grievances to redress, or rights and privileges to gain, have failed to accomplish their objects, breaking up hopelessly ere the goal is in sight, owing to the injudiciousness of well-meaning advocates and the misplaced ardor of hair-brained enthusiasts. Particularly true is it that the practical success of what is known in England as the Temperance Movement has not been as extended as it might have been, and that what it has accomplished has been far less than what its early promoters anticipated; the present condition of the country respecting sobriety even evidencing the fact that what improvements in the drinking habits of the people have taken place are traceable to agencies other than, and in some cases in complete contradistinction to, the methods held in favor by teetotal reformers. This is not tantamount to questioning that during, say, the last twenty-five years the temperance army has assumed enormous proportions; that it has been the means of rescuing many inebriates from their folly, and of implanting in the minds of numberless children the virtue of temperance. It has done all this. Moreover, men and women of all shades of opinion give it their sympathetic support. The sight of so many people banded together with such an object undoubtedly exercises a moral influence on the nation, while it has become so potent a political factor in the land that Ministers of State have taken many of its principles and embodied them in legislative proposals. Further, it is not necessary to controvert the contention that, by means of an intricate and far-reaching organisation, the relation of the Temperance Movement to all forms and developments of social life is a critical and important one; nor would it be safe to deny that it has not outlived calumny, and is now enjoying the smiling sanction of the respectable classes. And yet, when all this is readily granted, there remains much to be noticed of the absence of any great and permanently elevating element in the mission of reformation. The party's program betrays the hand of the amateur, the disposition of the coercionist, and the exclusiveness of the narrow-minded. Its propagandists are but little more fortunate in their mode of spreading its gospel, for if they are not committing blazing indiscretions they are often flagrantly disregarding the laws of logic, and they not infrequently allow their ostentatious fervor to carry them from the domain of reason and truth. For much of the abuse showered on temperance advocates to-day they are, in the main, responsible themselves; and their lack of success is attributable to their lack of sense and ingenuity. Having chosen to found their movement on illogical and very controvertible grounds, it is small wonder that their principles are so discredited and the cause pulverised with ridicule.

Like religion, the temperance folk think that temperance should have "foundations," and in their anxious search for authority they have unluckily chosen that text-book of every creed, doctrine, fad, and craze—the Bible. Following the example of apostles of liberty, who have sought in its pages the gospel of freedom, and of slave-owners, who have found their traffic in human bodies sanctioned by the same holy writ; of lovers of peace, who declare that the precious volume breathes the spirit of brotherhood, and of fierce militarists, who gain satisfaction from the contemplation that its God was a god of war, who trumpeted his mission as being that to bring the sword; of the poor, who seek solace in its blessing, and of the rich, who aver that the Lord is on the side of the mighty; of the modern saviors of womanhood, who see salvation in the motherhood of Jesus, and of their opponents, who cite St. Paul's condemnation of woman, the high priests of temperance have gone to this book and built upon it the temple of their creed. No more striking evidence of inanity is needed than their incongruous attachment to the Bible on the ground of its injunctions to abstemiousness. Why, from drunken Noah, who imbibed so deeply that his sons were compelled to envelope him in a cloak, down to the New Testament Jesus, who turned brewer at the Galilean feast, and St. Paul, who advised his young friend Timothy to "take a little wine for his stomach's sake," there is absolutely nothing in the book enjoining the benefits of abstinence from intoxicants; nothing advocating the morality of sobriety and the desirability of temperate habits. On the other hand, its leading characters are intemperate men and women, full of greed for wine, loving dissipation, and rejoicing in freaks of intoxication. When a body of would-be reformers wish to be taken seriously, and given an attentive audience, they must make their premise at least reasonably legitimate; their foundations must be strong, and their deductive contentions logical. To try to advance temperance on scriptural or religious grounds is as nonsensical as it is paltry; it is playing a game which can be only witnessed with mixed amusement and contempt.

Digitized by Google

In other ways have the temperance people signally failed to turn to good account an unprecedented opportunity. By their alliance with the clerical party they have robbed their movement of no small part of its sincerity, and imported into it a spirit of hypocrisy and deception. Clergymen of all denominations are appealed to for support to the cause. They lend their kindly patronage, attended, it is true, with beneficent results in many cases, but too often accompanied with the flavor that attends the advocacy of their religion—the flavor of mere professionalism, and consequently there are many preachers of total abstinence whose lives are in complete variance with the principles they teach. Since the assumption of sympathy with the Temperance Movement has become an affair of respectability, it has placed many wine-bibbing people in awkward situations. Thanks to the Church, they are heroically rescued from the dilemma, provision being made by that august body for their membership in the Church of England "Temperance" Society as passive adherents to temperance principles, which is to say that they extend their pity and condemnation to the unfortunate poor, whose intemperate habits are often the effects of unfavorable environment, while they themselves indulge in endless guzzling without injury to their consciences. When what should be an unsectarian movement is bound up with religious organisations, it becomes contaminated, its energy is sapped, and its power for good rendered impotent.

Recent developments should certainly convince those in authority that the assistance of the clergy is not an advantageous help. In following their ordinary avocations, these professors of religion acquire such a cultured disregard for truth, and such a supreme taste for calumny, that when they are called to figure in other departments of life their distinguishing characteristics still cling to them. Thus, during the last few weeks, we have seen a publican named Pitt bringing to book a parson named Josephs for a libellous attack on him and his business house. Of course, as one satirical journalist has already pointed out, it was not altogether unnatural that a Joseph should exhibit antipathy to a Pitt; but, for all that, most rational people would think that his hatred might have stopped short of an attempt to ruin the man and his trade. And the humble apology that another clerical, the Rev. G. Wakeford, of Liverpool, was compelled to make the other day, withdrawing his accusations against a political club of that town, which he had described in his pulpit as a drinking and gambling hell, shows again that clergymen are far more likely to do harm than good to the temperance crusade, which, at any rate, should be conducted with seeming decorum. Beer and Bible, and the Church and "the trade," have been long enough in close alliance to beguile an ordinary observer of the real sincerity of the Church on matters concerning temperance. Nor are the actions of those men of God who in the late severe weather forbade their parishioners to go to a public-house for free soup calculated to enhance the confidence of the general public in the teetotal party. While so much time and effort are being worse than wasted in rancorous contests with publicans, who, after all is said, are tradespeople in a legal occupation, and in other petty disputes, a glorious opportunity of accomplishing something is being neglected. The excessive indulgence in strong drink continues a blight on the health and prosperity of the country, in spite of the prevalence of religion and its alleged wondrous properties of redemption. From their seats of authority the judges are reiterating their declarations that four-fifths of the crime of the country is directly traceable to drink. Social reformers state that, were it not for the degradation of the people by the demoralising influence of intoxicating liquors, the social problem would be less cumbrous and better able to be dealt with. There is scarcely an adult in the land who cannot bear some testimony to the pernicious effects of the consumption of the fluid; for, without borrowing the language of the temperance tub-thumper and speaking of the "wretched homes," "brutal fathers," "beaten wives," "starving children," etc., it can be averred that much misery and much crime are brought about by this cause. And yet the temperance folk do little but spin arguments and talk words; they delight in shadowy dreams which will never be realised, and create an Utopia which will never be effected.

Impracticable ambitions are but hindrances to a radical movement like that of temperance. To secure success, cant and hypocrisy must be cast off; wisdom must be accepted from the learned, whose knowledge of human kind and natural laws has been acquired by life-long labor, and has not been shapened by the emotions; and more account must be taken of circumstances. The whole question is a deep and perplexing one. Inebriety is now getting to be more regarded in the light of a disease, and the less the idea is current that people get intoxicated for the fun of the thing, or mere cussedness, and the more the evil is dealt with from a matter-of-fact and scientific standpoint, the sooner will there be a perceptible diminution of the national drink bill. The tendencies of education and enlightenment are against all manner of intemperateness. Salvation may, perhaps, be nearer at hand when the sciences of physiology and hygiene are taught the children in the schools in place of the "instruction" in the book which may be called the guide to drunkenness, and when the ceremonies of the Churches are abolished that require special brands of wine for their proper performance.

F. WILSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WHERE IS GOD?

"The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" (Psalms xiv. 1; liii. 1).

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Mr. G. L. Mackenzie, and other writers in the Freethinker, want an answer to the above momentous question. I only desire a brief space to vindicate David's answer. David, if we have any belief in Scripture history at all, was in a position to know. David had himself brought the deity from Baale to Jerusalem (2 Samuel vi.). God was in the ark "dwelling between the cherubims" (verse 2). When David had got him safe there he "danced before the Lord with all his might." His wife reproved him for uncovering himself in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, but never thought of questioning the existence of God, or David might have called her a fool indeed. God at that time was safe in an ark. What has become of him since? The only information I have been enabled to gather is from Bishop Wilson, who thinks that Jeremiah, at the destruction of Jerusalem, carried the ark to the halls of Tara, in Ireland. Who will subscribe to dig it out?

ANGLO-ISRAELITE.

PROFANE JOKES.

Aunt—"If you are a bad boy, you won't go to heaven." Tommy—"But I want to go where you go!"

Jack—"Well, Nellie, what book is that you are reading?" Nellie—"The Brand of Cain." Jack—"Oh, a very able book that."

Clara—"Your new minister is a much younger man than the old one, is he not?" Phœbe—"Yes. What made you ask?" Clara—"I heard you had applied for a front pew."

"Jonah," expostulated the whale, "do keep quiet." "Certainly," answered the famous man, "now that I know where I am. I wasn't sure but I had been caught in a folding bed, doncher know."

"What is the meaning of a backbiter?" asked a gentleman at a Sunday-school examination. This was a puzzler. It went all round the class until it came to a simple urchin, who said: "Perhaps it's a flea."

Penelope—"Well, Bishop, it seems to me there is not much difference between salvation and perdition; only a syllable." Bishop Hellmuth—"My dear young lady, how can you say that?" Penelope—"Why, it's either eternal bliss or eternal blisters."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30 G. W. Foote, "The Romance of the Twelve Apostles."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 8.30, social gathering for N.S.S. members and friends. Tuesday, at 9, dance.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Stanley Jones, "Miracles and Science."

EAST LONDON (Swaby's Coffee House, 103 Mile-end-road, E.): 8, F. Lavenais, "Arbitration or War?"

ISLINGTON (19 Alwyne-road, Canonbury): 8, adjourned quarterly meeting.

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Sun in Splendor," Portobello-road, Notting Hill Gate): Monday, at 8.30, special general meeting.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "John Bunyan and Puritan Thought."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, E. E. Sims, "The Case against Theism."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, A. G. Hertzfeld, "Belief and Morals."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, C. James, "The Philosophy of Atheism."

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, F. Haslam, "Mohammed and the Koran." Members' meeting after lecture to receive Conference report.

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, C. James, "The Soul and Immortality." Thursday, at 8, C. James, "Still it Moves."

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, A. B. Moss, "The Bible as a Guide."

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, W. J. Ramsey, "The Curse of the Cross"; 3.15, F. Haslam, "Bible Stories: Are they True?"

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, W. Heaford, "Spiritual Consolations." Thursday, at 8.30, F. Haslam, "Bible Stories: Are they True?"

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, W. Heaford, "Bible Lessons in Morality"; 3, "The Power of Prayer." Wednesday, at 8, St. John will lecture.

ISLINGTON (Pretend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, A. Guest, "Bible Tragedy and Comedy."

KILBURN (High-road): 7, W. J. Ramsey, "How Christ Came."

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, T. Thurlow will lecture.

LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, M. Park, "God's Favorites."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, A. B. Moss, "Design and Natural Selection."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, Stanley Jones, "Stories from the Bible."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, a lecture.

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, St. John will lecture; 3.15, A. B. Moss will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "From Christianity to Secularism, and What I Saw on the Way"; 7, "Moses and the Exodus." Thursday, at 8, Stanley Jones, "The Social Aspects of Christianity."

COUNTRY.

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, C. Boeg, "Christianity and Paganism Compared."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 6.30, Sheikh Abdullah Quilliam, "Buddha, Christ, and Mohammed: A Reply to Dr. Marcus Dods."

SOUTH SHIELDS (Free Library Hall, Ocean-road): 11, C. Cohen, "An Old Attack upon Religion with Modern Appliances"; 3, "Do we Need a Religion?" 7, "Jesus Christ: God, Man, or Myth?"

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): Members and friends meet at the tram terminus, bottom of Suig Hill, at 2.30, and will go by car to Hillsboro' for Little Matlock.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (32 Dovecote-street): 6.30, business meeting.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, R. Weightman, "Priestcraft."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, J. Kent, "The Philosophy of Secularism."

DERBY (Market-place): 11, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside): 11, Mr. Mitchell will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—June 9 m. Pimlico, e. Camberwell; 13, Wood Green; 16, m. Wood Green, e Edmonton; 20, Hammersmith; 23, m. Victoria Park; 26, Hyde Park 30, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Ovedon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—June 9, m. Mile End, a. Victoria Park, e. Tottenham; 16, m. Mile End; 23, m. Wood Green, e. Tottenham; 30, m. Clerkenwell, a. Finsbury Park.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—June 9, m. Kingsland; 23, Chatham. July 17, m. Kingsland.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout: Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 2d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 2d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 2d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. FULLER, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell
No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 8s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters: — 1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 182 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

DON'T MISS THIS.

SOME GREAT BARGAINS

Lot 1.	1 Tweed Suit Length, 1 Tweed Dress Length, 1 Lady's Umbrella, 1 Gent's Umbrella	for 20s.
Lot 2.	4 Trouser Lengths, 2 Tweed and 2 Worsted	for 20s.
Lot 3.	1 Black Cashmere Dress Length, 1 Navy Serge Dress Length, 3 Blouses	for 20s.
Lot 4.	3 Scotch Tweed Dress Lengths	for 20s.
Lot 5.	1 Serge Suit Length, 1 Serge Dress Length, 1 Blouse, 1 Umbrella	for 20s.
Lot 6.	30 yards of Remnants (double width) for Children's Dresses	for 20s.
Lot 7.	15 Fashionable Blouses [you can sell these among your friends for 40s.]	for 20s.
Lot 8.	1 Dress Length, 1 Under-Skirt, 1 Umbrella, 1 Blouse, 1 Mackintosh, 12 yards of Flannelette	for 20s.
Lot 9.	1 Dark-Brown Bear Victoria-shaped Fur	for 20s.
Lot 10.	50 yards of Flannelette (fine quality)	for 20s.
Lot 11.	1 pair of Blankets, 1 pair of sheets, 1 Quilt, 1 Table Cloth	for 20s.
Lot 12.	2 Dress Lengths and 2 Trouser Lengths	for 20s.
Lot 13.	20 yards of Cotton Shirting, 10 yards of Flannel, 10 yards of Flannelette	for 20s.
Lot 14.	1 West of England Suit Length	for 20s.
Lot 15.	6 Sailor Suits (to fit boys up to 7 years of age)	for 20s.
Lot 16.	3 pairs of Trousers (made to measure)	for 20s.
Lot 17.	1 Good Melton Overcoat Length and 1 Suit Length	for 20s.
Lot 18.	3 Real Scotch Tweed Trouser Lengths (all-wool)	for 20s.
Lot 19.	1 Gentleman's Scarboro'-shaped Mackintosh	for 20s.
Lot 20.	1 parcel of odd lots, including Suit Length, Dress Length, Blouses, Umbrellas, Aprons, Braces, Belts, etc.	for 20s.

1s. must be added for carriage. We cannot send Patterns.

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

3d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 64pp.

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

A Demonstration of the Biblical Doctrine of Devils, suitable for circulation among Christians.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Just issued, 16 pp., price 1d., by post 1½d.,

Shall Thought be Fettered in England?

SHOWING THE DISABILITIES UNDER WHICH FREE-THINKERS AND SECULARISTS SUFFER.

BY E. G. TAYLOR.

Abridged, by permission, from an article in the "Westminster Review," February, 1895.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 24. SUNDAY, JUNE 16, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

WRIGGLING.

WE recently printed a long letter from the Rev. C. L. Engström, Secretary of the Christian Evidence Society. Our reply to it appeared in the same number of the Freethinker, and in the following number there appeared a supplementary reply by Mr. S. P. Putnam, whose lecture at the Hall of Science had been brought under discussion. Mr. Engström now reprints his letter in the form of a pamphlet, under the title of Christianity and Secularism. He does not reprint our reply and Mr. Putnam's, and let the controversy tell its own story. That is too much to expect from even the most plausible Christian. Yet it is the course we prefer, and always endeavor to follow. During our controversy with the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes with regard to the "Atheist Shoemaker" we gave both sides of the case, leaving our readers to form their judgment upon the facts; while our opponent studiously kept every word of our side of the case from appearing in the Methodist Times.

Mr. Engström has chosen his own method. In front of his reprinted letter to the Freethinker he puts some "Last Words" on Mr. Putnam's reply, and after it some "Notes" on our own article. Thus his letter is neatly sandwiched between two slices of vindication.

Mr. Engström wastes a whole page over a trifle, and the way in which he wastes it throws a strong light upon his theory of evidence. He stated in his letter that, as chairman at Mr. Putnam's lecture, we discouraged discussion. This we denied, and Mr. Putnam denies it too. Mr. Engström adduces the corroboration of an anonymous friend of his who was present, and with two against two he thinks he has proved his assertion "up to the hilt." We quite understand, after this, how Mr. Engström is satisfied with the evidences of Christianity. What we do not quite understand is why he conceals the fact that questions were asked after Mr. Putnam's lecture, and that two persons did speak in opposition. It is true that five minutes was offered to each speaker, and perhaps true that this is not enough for a man of Mr. Engström's "representative position." But it is customary to extend the time for a representative opponent, and if Mr. Engström had risen he would have had a sufficient opportunity.

We said that Mr. Engström was constitutionally inaccurate, and his "Notes" confirm our opinion. He states that at the Christian Evidence lectures at the Hall of Science (very ancient history this!) my followers—whoever they are—have "never been satisfied with less than half an hour for their criticisms." An ingenuous reader would conclude that they had half an hour each, whereas they had half an hour altogether. And if there were five or six of them, as there might be, it did not amount to many minutes apiece. But, after all, this is skimble-skamble stuff for a deliberate pamphlet.

Mr. Engström is still unsatisfied, and works in another paragraph on the same topic. He has a curious way of insinuating his own merits in tones of humility. He does it often in a kind of aside, as though his fine qualities could not be suppressed; and the self-eulogy falls unobtrusively like a casual feather from a rich plumage. Mr. Engström complains of the "inadequate time" allowed him in replying to Mr. Putnam at Camberwell, which was "accentuated by the extreme latitude I had allowed that very afternoon in Regent's Park to a Freethinker, who had not even heard my lecture!" This is more than a profession of fair-play. It is a confession of folly. There is absolutely no sense in letting a man answer you who has not heard you.

In his letter to the Freethinker the Secretary of the Christian Evidence Society charged Mr. Putnam with having said that "faith was for Christians everything, and conduct and character nothing." This we thought it necessary to deny immediately. Mr. Putnam's assertion was not about Christians, but about Christianity. He took the ground that Christianity, as such, was a creed, and not an ethical system; that morality was only "tacked on to it," because no creed could get along without something of that kind. Mr. Engström was guilty of a gross misrepresentation, but he does not apologise for it. He affirms that Mr. Putnam "did not say it in his lecture." Well, we affirm that he did, and more than once. And when Mr. Engström's anonymous friend says that "the qualification which Mr. Foote makes in the Freethinker about there being some good things taught by Jesus, only came out after opposition"—we can only reply that there was no such qualification, and that there were no such words, in our article. If there were, let Mr. Engström produce them. Until he does so, we must regard his anonymous friend as being about as accurate as himself.

Mr. Engström used much vague language about certain Atheists standing a better chance than certain Christians in the hereafter, and we ventured to ask him this plain question: "If an honest unbeliever may go to heaven, what is the use of taking the trouble to be a Christian?" Mr. Engström replies that "the believer in Christ has an inestimable advantage over the (intellectual) unbeliever, however moral he may be, in regard to the capacity of growth in goodness." How justly did South observe that, if Judaism died out of Christendom, Pharisaism never would! There is nothing more nauseous and detestable than comparing the "goodness" of the devotees of rival systems. "We are holier than you" never came from the lips of self-respect. But since Mr. Engström issues a sort of challenge, we beg to tell him that Atheists experience as much "growth in goodness" as Christians. We will not imitate his example, and say more. How many Christians does Mr. Engström know who are morally superior to Jeremy Bentham, Robert Owen, or John Stuart Mill? How many morally superior to William Kingdon Clifford? How many morally superior to Charles Darwin, who combined the intellect of a Newton with the tenderness of a woman and the innocence of a child?

With regard to Dr. Pusey, we never said that his views were "in the main opposed to those of Dean Farrar," since it is impossible for any man to say what Dean Farrar's views really are. What we said was that Dr. Pusey wrote in opposition to Dean Farrar's argument that "everlasting punishment" means something short of "everlasting punishment." We quoted Dr. Pusey's own words, which are far more to the point than Mr. Engström's inferences.

Mr. Engström notices what we said as to the legal disabilities of Secularism. "I think," he remarks, "there is a good deal in what he says, and I am glad to take this opportunity of stating very publicly [why very?] that I think those inabilities are very unjust, and that they ought to be at once removed." Good! though they are not *in*abilities, but *dis*abilities. But fine words butter no parsnips, and pleasant sentences redress no wrongs. We shall expect Mr. Engström to translate this language into deeds. Will he induce the Christian Evidence Society to send in a petition in favor of the Bill which is now before Parliament? Probably not, for he guards himself by a reference to the "methods of Freethinkers of the N.S.S. type," which make it so "difficult for the Legislature to deal fairly with their principles"—as though the Legislature had shown a great anxiety in this direction!

Digitized by Google

Our party ought to have endowments, if it can get them. Mr. Engström makes us that concession. But he denies that the Church of England subsists on the revenues of national property. Does he mean that tithes, the payment of which is enforced by the law, are not national property? Does he mean the same of Church Rates where they are still collected? Has he the coolness to say that the sum levied on the Freethinker publishing office every year is a voluntary offering to his Church? Anyhow, we beg to tell him that when the Church of England gets disestablished, like the Church of Ireland, it will not matter a straw whether he believes its revenues arise from national property or not. Disendowment will settle the question in a terribly practical manner.

Mr. Engström is good enough to say that the "greater part" of his comments on the "hopeless failure of Secularism as a system of doing good" is "utterly unaffected" by our strictures. Christians always say that; it is a stereotyped expression. But with respect to "doing good" it is just possible that Mr. Engström does not understand us. He "sincerely hopes" that our leaders are "paragons of goodness"—which is the language of cant; but he is sure that Secularism does not abound in good works, like Christianity. "When Atheism is reached," he says, "it is an historical fact that the spring ceases to flow, the life of philanthropy is dead." Is it? Well, it all depends on what you mean by "philanthropy." We hear a lot about the reclamation of drunkards and the rescue of "fallen sisters," but it makes no appreciable difference to the sum-total of drink and prostitution. The causes of these evils remain untouched. And it is just here that the Secularist parts company with the Christian. "Rescue" those you call "fallen sisters" if you will; but what if, when you rescue one, another takes her place? What permanent good have you effected? Sensuality is not the cause of prostitution, as you imagine; the one is natural, however lamentable—the other is artificial. The cause of prostitution is the difficulty of earning an honest livelihood. And unless the economical conditions of society are changed for the better, your "reclamations" and "rescues" are like the wail of an infant against the roar of the northern blast.

Mr. Engström concludes his "Notes" on our reply to his letter by stating what he believes, and what he teaches. But this is extremely unimportant. Mr. Engström is only a man, and only one man. Christianity is a great historical system. It cannot be defined, any more than it can be judged, except in the light of history. It is interesting, of course, though not important, to learn that Mr. Engström believes our "position in eternity will depend on our loving or unloving life"—though it seems to us that the loving lives have the best of it here, apart from any hereafter. But when Mr. Engström seeks to pass this off as pure and simple Christianity, he is flying in the face of the Bible, of history, and of the teaching of his own Church. And this brings me to his "Last Words" in answer to Mr. Putnam, who is well able to reply for himself, only he is away in Scotland, and the matter is scarcely worth another article.

Mr. Putnam said that Mr. Engström had no right to "dodge the question by confining the definition of Christianity to the Apostles' Creed." Mr. Engström replies that if he adds the Nicene and Athanasian Creeds it makes little difference, except against Mr. Putnam; for one of them distinctly states that "they that have done good shall go into life everlasting; and they that have done evil into everlasting fire"—which, according to Mr. Engström, proves that Christianity is essentially a moral system. That is, Mr. Engström takes the sentence about evil and good as though it were the whole of the Creed, without the slightest reference to the sentences which declare that those who do not hold all the "incomprehensible" doctrines "cannot be saved." And this is what Mr. Engström regards as honest argument.

But the most curious part of his "Last Words" is the one relating to the Thirty-nine Articles. Subscription to them, he says, is not required of laymen. Quite true. But what the clergy are required to teach the laymen are expected to believe; at any rate, it is the doctrine of the Church. Mr. Engström further observes that the Thirty-nine Articles have "existed only a few centuries." But what of that? They ought to be true to exist so long. Besides, Mr. Engström is bound by them, whether they are ancient or modern. It is likewise urged that these Articles might be "increased, decreased, or abolished." But they have not been; and what is the use of "might be's" in a serious discussion? Mr. Engström is quite right in saying that "the only persons they can possibly bind are members of the Anglican Communion." But then he belongs to that Communion, and he is a party to this controversy.

It is idle for Mr. Engström to attempt to ride off on the old quibble that "good works" are the fruit of "faith." Nor is that the point at issue. The point is this—Is there salvation in honesty without belief? Mr. Engström appears to hold that there is. But we repeat that he is only Mr. Engström. He says that he was brought up in a theological school, which he hopes he will never depart from—the school of Hooker, Butler, Barrow, and Pearson. Very well then; we will appeal to these divines against the Secretary of the Christian Evidence Society.

The real doctrine of historic Christianity is taught with great plainness by Thomas Watson, a seventeenth-century divine of considerable fame, known by his Body of Practical Divinity. "A man may go to hell," he says, "as well for heresy as adultery." Mr. Spurgeon took this text and amplified it into a famous passage, declaring that adultery and murder might be forgiven, but there was no forgiveness, in this world or in the next, for unbelief.

The Church of England, in the old days of Elizabeth, issued a Book of Homilies, which is still printed and annotated, and published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The Homilies are mentioned in the Church Articles as containing "godly and wholesome doctrine." They were meant to be read aloud by ministers who could not write their own sermons. Let us listen to these Homilies:—

> "If a heathen man clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and do such other like works; yet, because he doth them not in faith for the honor and love of God, they be but dead, vain, and fruitless works to him. . . . . All the life of them that lack the true faith is sin, and nothing is good without him that is the author of goodness; where he is not, there is but feigned virtue, although it be in the best works. . . . . Jews, heretics, and pagans do good works; they clothe the naked, feed the poor, and do other good works of mercy: but because they be not done in the true faith, therefore the birds be lost."

Now let us take the great Hooker. This is from the eleventh chapter of the twelfth book of his Ecclesiastical Polity:—

> "Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men saving only a naked belief (for hope and charity we may not exclude); but that without belief all other things are as nothing."

Butler, so far as we are aware, has no express declaration on this point. Barrow, however, has a whole sermon on Infidelity, which he sets down as the "chief" cause of "all the sin and all the mischief in the world." It is not a mistake of the head, but "a sinful distemper of the heart." A divine law says that we should believe, and unbelief is disobedience to God. Barrow points out that Scripture gives "unbelievers" a "first place" in the "lake burning with fire and brimstone."

Pearson, in his famous book on the Creed, rejects the opinions which Mr. Engström rejoices to see entertained by Dean Farrar. Not for a moment will he shorten "the eternity of hell's hot jurisdiction." With diabolical callousness—feeling sure of heaven himself—he remarks that "it were not perfect hell, if any hope could lodge in it." Dean Farrar does not believe that "every form of retribution beyond the grave is necessarily endless." Bishop Pearson expressly says that it is. He is equally emphatic as to there being no salvation outside Christianity. In his chapter on the second Article about Jesus Christ, he writes: "The necessity of belief in this part of the Article is not only certain, but evident: because there is no end of faith without a Savior, and no other name but this by which we can be saved, and no way to be saved by him but by believing in him."

Mr. Engström will probably indulge in more controversial wriggling, and quote passages from his favorite divines about our being judged "according to the works done in the flesh." But he cannot get over the fact that, elsewhere, they distinctly couple belief with works, as necessary to salvation. Nor can he find so much as a hint in any one of them that an honest Atheist may go to heaven. On the contrary, they do not so much as allow the existence of an honest Atheist. When they speak of "works" generically, they include belief. They are blind to the great truth that belief is entirely intellectual, and absolutely independent of volition. They regard faith as an act of the will; and, if it be so, we are as justly punishable for a wrong belief as for theft, adultery, or murder. On their own principles they are strictly logical. Mr. Engström is only a sentimentalist. He is a fair specimen of the smooth and plausible Christian apologist of the present age. Such men are always wriggling away from the logical consequences of distinctive Christianity. Their definitions are born of exigency, and not of principle. They seek to make Christianity respectable in the eyes of people who are ignorant of its history. The venomous old serpent that once devoured its holocausts of victims, now wreathes and glances alluringly, like the tempter in Paradise Lost. Those to whom history began yesterday may be deceived; many of them are deceived. But those who know history, understand principles, and appreciate logic, will be on their guard. The fangs are there, though concealed; the cruel jaws are ready to gape; the ravenous maw still yearns for prey. Fools may play with it, till their hour comes. Wise men will beware.

Digitized by Google

G. W. FOOTE.

WITCHCRAFT.

THE trial of Irish peasants for burning Bridget Cleary as a witch should bring home to everyone the horrible character of this Bible superstition. There is every appearance that ignorance and superstition are alone to blame for the atrocity. Had the accused persons believed that the poor woman was really herself, and not in the possession of some evil spirit, they would never have thought of injuring her. Under such circumstances, it seems as if to condemn to death the victims of ignorance and superstition is but to add a legal atrocity to that already perpetrated. What is needed is, that such instruction shall be given as shall remove the causes of superstition. These causes are to be found in the popular religion. The belief in witchcraft is a legitimate and logical outcome of that religion, and it may be doubted if it will be wholly extirpated while that retains unquestioning belief.

The delusion of witchcraft is the natural result of a religion that rests on terrorism, for, as Lecky remarks, the panic which its teachings create overbalance the faculties of the multitude. The belief in a devil who is the head of an organised kingdom of evil spirits (Matthew xii. 24–26), and who goes about seeking whom he may devour, contains in itself the essence of witchcraft. The theory is founded on, and supported by, the Bible, as I have fully shown in my recent pamphlet on Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible. Fear is at the foundation of all religion. One of its chief manifestations is fear of the dead, fear that they may return to plague the living, and the belief that all hurtful phenomena are the result of such action by evil spirits. Animism, the belief in spirits, is, in the words of the renowned anthropologist, Dr. E. B. Tylor, the groundwork of the philosophy of religion, from that of savages up to that of civilised man.

In his article on "Demonology," in the Encyclopædia Britannica, Dr. Tylor says: "No record shows the ancient theory more clearly than the New Testament, from the explicit way in which the symptoms of the various affections are described, culminating in the patient declaring the name of his possessing demon, and answering in his person when addressed. The similarity of the symptoms with those which in barbarous countries are still accounted for in the ancient way may be seen from such statements as the following, by a well-known missionary (Rev. J. L. Wilson, Western Africa, p. 217): 'Demoniacal possessions are common, and the feats performed by those who are supposed to be under such influence are certainly not unlike those described in the New Testament. Frantic gestures, convulsions, foaming at the mouth, feats of supernatural strength, furious ravings, bodily lacerations, gnashing of teeth, and other things of a similar character may be witnessed in most of the cases.'"

"Among the early Christians," continues Dr. Tylor, "the demoniacs or energumens formed a special class under the control of a clerical order of exorcists; and a mass of evidence drawn from such writers as Cyril, Tertullian, Chrysostom, and Minutius Felix shows that the symptoms of those possessed were such as modern physicians would class under hysteria, epilepsy, lunacy, etc." (See their works, and references in Bingham, Antiquities of the Christian Church; Maury, La Magie et l'Astrologie, part ii., chap. ii., etc.).

Though the belief in sorcery has existed from the earliest times, its palmiest days were those of credulous Christianity. Sorcery and saints, miracles and magic, grew and flourished together. If unanimity could turn fancy into fact, witchcraft was a stern reality. Divided on so many other points, here Christians were at one. Possession by devils, one of the chief features of the Gospels, gave occasion for the display of that prime token of orthodoxy, the power of exorcism. So the thunders of the Vatican against witchcraft were re-echoed from Lambeth and Geneva. Indeed, the spread of the Bible in the sixteenth century vastly contributed to the renewed persecution of alleged witches. The Puritan was as bad as the Inquisitor, and in godly Scotland and pious New England some of the latest and most horrid atrocities took place. The men of God constantly preached about the devil and his agencies of evil, and, as a consequence, nervous terrors of witchcraft abounded. The accusation was, moreover, a specious plea for getting rid of all sorts of objectionable people. The witches of the Middle Ages were but the votaries of the ancient proscribed religion. There is abundant evidence that Paganism survived in Europe until close upon the time of the Reformation. The witches' Sabbaths were the orgies of Sabazios, a development of Dionysius or Bacchus. In stamping out witchcraft the Church was really suppressing the remnants of a rival faith. The charge was afterwards levelled at heretics, political and religious opponents, and was also a means of extracting the property of the wealthy. Mr. James Russell Lowell, in his essay on "Witchcraft" (Among My Books, First Series, p. 128), remarks:—

> "I have already said that it was religious antipathy or clerical interest that first made heresy and witchcraft identical, and cast them into the same expiatory fire. The invention was a Catholic one, but it is plain that Protestants soon learned its value, and were not slow in making it a plague to the inventor. It was not till after the Reformation that there was any systematic hunting out of witches in England. Then, no doubt, the innocent charms and rhyming prayers of the old religion were regarded as incantations and twisted-out evidence against miserable beldames who mumbled over in their dotage what they had learned at their mother's knee."

It has been computed that the witchcraft mania cost the lives of over nine millions of people, mostly women. The Bible text, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live" (Exodus xxii. 18), has truly been written in blood and fire.

The case in Tipperary may, in some measure, enable us to realise the horrors connected with this Scripture-warranted belief. We may be sure, however, that all the cruelties inflicted by witch-torturers were thrown into the background by the inner agony of those victims of credulity and hysteria who were looked on as sold to the devil, and who often themselves believed that they had entered unwittingly into a contract whereby they would be eternally lost. Mr. Lecky, in an eloquent passage, points out that no class of victims endured sufferings so unalloyed and intense.

> "Not for them the wild fanaticism that nerves the soul against danger, and almost steels the body against torments. Not for them the assurance of a glorious eternity, that has made the martyr look with exultation on the rising flame as on the Elijah's chariot that is to bear his soul to heaven. Not for them the solace of lamenting friends, or the consciousness that their memories would be cherished and honored by posterity. They died alone, hated and unpitied. They were deemed by all mankind the worst of criminals. Their very kinsmen shrank from them as tainted and accursed. The superstitions they had imbibed in childhood, blending with the illusions of age, and with the horrors of their position, persuaded them in many cases that they were indeed the bond slaves of Satan, and were about to exchange their torments on earth for an agony that was as excruciating, and was as eternal."

Digitized by Google

How was it that men could, without pity or compunction, see their fellows writhing amidst blazing fagots for an imaginary crime? The case of Bridget Cleary helps us to see that it was their religious belief, their Bible-supported superstition, which made them regard these as agents of an evil spirit. Is it not an anomaly that a Government which authorises the Bible as the word of God should yet try for the crime of murder, and perhaps condemn to death, the poor fanatics whom it has left in ignorance, and who read in the Bible the awful words, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live"?

J. M. WHEELER.

DID CHRIST WORK MIRACLES?

IN asking the above question, it must not be inferred that we believe in the reality of miracles. Neither must it be assumed that we for one moment believe that Christ did perform any of the wonderful things recorded of him in the New Testament. Further, whether what is termed a miracle was ever performed or not does not concern us at present. We prefer the more practical inquiry: Are the miracles, as ascribed to Christ, true? and, if they are, what is their value as evidence of the truth of the claims set up on his behalf by his enthusiastic devotees? It is not here overlooked that the belief in miracles, as evidence of the validity of such claims, is now to a great extent abandoned by the modern school of Christian exponents. They have discovered that, like many other arguments that were once regarded as being indispensable to the Church, the one based upon miracles has to be given up. As Professor Huxley says, "every new discovery in science pushes the supernatural further from us, by enlarging the boundary of human knowledge."

Still, no doubt there are many Christians who retain the belief that the miracles ascribed to Christ prove him to have been more than man, and that they establish the truth of Christianity. We hope to show that this belief is not supported by fact. The latter assumption is false upon the very face of it, inasmuch as, if it were true that Christ raised the dead, it would not therefore follow that he was correct in denying the facts of physiology, or in making poverty a test of perfection. The New Testament being right in advising children to honor their parents is no proof that it is equally right in saying Christ was in two places at one time, or that he was born without a human father. Neither does it corroborate the statement that Christ the son was as old as God the father, and that the Devil was more potent than either of them. The most that miracles can prove, supposing them to be true, is that those who worked them possessed what is called miraculous power. But this is no evidence of the divinity of the whole of the Christian doctrines and precepts.

Against the alleged truth of Christ's miracles is the admitted fact of the "stability of nature," and the observed law of cause and effect. We only know of existence as it is, and we judge of its nature and power from experience and investigation. From these sources of knowledge we learn that at certain degrees heat will burn, water will drown, and poison in given quantities will destroy life. To believe otherwise is for man to leave facts and reason, and to revel in fancy and credulity. The forces in nature, so far as we have discovered them, are regular in their order, and "constancy of succession marks their operations." It has been truly observed: "Look upon any class of phenomena in the world, and what do you see? You see certain phenomena always followed under the same circumstances or conditions by certain other phenomena, without the least variation. . . . This constancy of following—of sequence—is called a law; and when the constancy of following embraces a great number of phenomena, possessing very different characteristics, it is called a general law. But all we know is, and all we mean is, when we speak of the constant order of nature, that all the facts or phenomena we have examined are always found following the same order of succession." These are truths that science has made known in modern times, and, if they were always relied upon, the reality of miracles would not be perceptible.

It is alleged that Christ's miracles are superior to any others, and are supported by better testimony. This is not true; and, if it were, it would deteriorate their value. For then they would be subordinate to reason and judgment, whereas, theologically, they are intended to command absolute subjection. But have we any trustworthy evidence at all for Christ's miracles? Paley's famous proposition upon this point is, that we are bound to believe the testimony of twelve men of good character, who could not possibly have been deceived as to any supernatural event, and who changed their lives in consequence of their belief, and suffered, or were content to suffer, torture and death in attestation of their sincerity. What special pleading! Where is the testimony of "twelve men of good character" to vouch for the Christian miracles? Where are the eye-witnesses who are supposed to have seen the miracles? The argument of martyrdom is worthless in this case. Many instances may be given of men being content to suffer death and torture in attestation of their belief of the wildest superstitions.

F. J. Foxton meets Paley on his own ground, and tests his argument thus: "I will simply apply the terms of the proposition to actual circumstances in real life. I will imagine that a report that a man was raised from the dead yesterday, at Hampstead or at Highgate, was circulated to-day in the City of London. I will suppose the exact testimony assumed by Paley (though such, I believe, never was produced in attestation of a miracle) was really at hand in verification of the event—i.e., twelve honest witnesses who changed their lives from the moment they witnessed it, and who, rather than confess themselves deceived, were content to suffer torture and death. I will suppose this testimony and these witnesses fairly produced to twenty indifferent persons of sound minds taken indiscriminately from the streets of London, between Hyde Park Corner and Whitechapel, and I contend that not one of them would believe the miracle on the evidence produced, or on any other evidence whatsoever; and this simply for the reason assigned by Hume, that every one of these persons would at once conclude that, as a question of probability, it was more likely that the witnesses should be deceivers or deceived than that the miracle should be true; and this natural conclusion would be founded on the general principle laid down by the philosopher that, whilst miracles are contrary to experience, the falsehood and the perversion of testimony are matters of almost daily occurrence. A frivolous attempt to fasten upon Hume a logical inaccuracy in the use of the word 'experience' will not succeed in mystifying the common sense of mankind."

If the miracles of the New Testament were true, they would destroy the attributes of an omnipotent, good, all-wise, and impartial God. Further, they would render the perfection of his government impossible. A miracle, as understood by the Church, implies a special act upon the part of God, and his interference with natural sequences. Now, all acts of God, supposing him to be the being Christians regard him, must be good acts. If, therefore, it were wise for God to perform certain acts eighteen hundred years ago, it would have been equally wise for him to have done so four thousand years previously. So long, therefore, as he abstained from performing those acts, so long did he withhold advantages from his children, and thereby deal unjustly towards them. To urge that an act of God may be good and necessary at one time and not at another is to reduce the government of God to a level with that of man, and to admit that the "divine" economy is neither uniform nor perfect. Again, granting the existence of God, all sequences were arranged by that God. If arranged by him, they were so arranged from eternity. Anything which acted contrary to that arrangement was either the result of an after plan on God's part, in which case he is not all-wise and immutable, or the arrangement took place in spite of God, and in that case God is not all-powerful.

It should be borne in mind that events which are termed "miraculous" may be superhuman, but it does not therefore follow they are supernatural. All forces in nature that are more powerful than those possessed by man are superhuman; still, they are natural. If it is urged that Christ's power to perform miracles proved him to be divine, how is it that the Bible records that miracles were worked through an agency the very opposite to that termed "divine"? In Deuteronomy (xiii. 1–3) we read: "If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass," etc. Here the children of Israel are warned against the miraculous power, though the sign and wonder came to pass. In Matthew (xxiv. 24) we also read: "There shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Further: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?" (Matthew vii. 22). In the Acts of the Apostles we have an instance given of a "child of the devil" commanding the attention of the multitude, through his supposed miraculous power, to a far greater extent than Christ is reported to have done. The record is: "But there was a certain man, called Simon, which before time in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one, to whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest" (Acts viii. 9, 10). Is not this evidence sufficient that, according to the Bible, the working of miracles was not confined to "divine" influence? The New Testament admits that devils could be cast out by the children of the Pharisees (Matthew xii. 24-27). Does that prove their "divinity"? If not, why is Christ casting out devils cited to prove him more than man? Well might Archbishop Trench say that "a miracle does not prove the truth of a doctrine, or the divine mission of him that brings it to pass." Before the miracles of Jesus can be of any evidential value, it must be shown, not only that they took place, but that such events could not have occurred without the aid of "divine" influence.

Digitized by Google

However extensive the belief in Christ's power to work miracles may be at the present day, it appears from the New Testament that many of the people, before whom it is said the miracles were performed, did not believe in them. It is clear that even in those days much faith was necessary to the belief in miraculous power. Where Scepticism existed Christ's occupation as a thaumaturgus was gone. Matthew (xiii. 58) informs us that in one place Christ "did not many mighty works there, because of their unbelief." But had the object of miracles been to prove the divine mission of Christ, it was in the midst of unbelief that they should have been wrought. It is a noteworthy fact that Jesus seems to have succeeded tolerably well with his wonders among the ignorant, the insane, and deaf and dumb people. When, however, he came in contact with thoughtful unbelievers, his prestige was gone. Hence we read in Matthew (xi. 20): "Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not"; and in John (xii. 37) it is said: "But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him." Here, then, is a clear admission that in Christ's time his miracles were disbelieved and rejected. Is it expected that to-day we are to be more credulous than were our predecessors eighteen hundred years ago?

It now remains to be ascertained, supposing Christ did perform the miracles ascribed to him, what was their nature, and did they substantiate the claims set up for the supernatural character of Christ?

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be concluded.)

THE CHARACTER OF "GOD."

IT has often occurred to me, when reading articles or listening to debates or addresses on the greatest subject which civilised mankind has ever had to consider—viz., the belief or non-belief in the Christian doctrines—that the arguments adduced are of too learned a character to be thoroughly understood by the majority of people. The simpler the argument the better, say I. Of course, such a state of affairs has been entirely brought about by the "believers." Your Christian is as slippery as an eel; you never know when you have got him; he dodges about from one corner to another, and, of course, the Freethinker has to patiently follow him, and, by common-sense argument, drive him from his latest position. The Freethinker knows perfectly well that it is not at all necessary for him to enter into a lot of abstruse verbosity in order to prove his opinions. Two or three, aye, even one of his arguments, are quite sufficient. But naturally, as he is the attacking party, he is compelled to fight his opponent on the latter's own ground, and consequently has frequently to argue about matters which have but very little to do with the question at issue. In fact, it is remarkable how loth a Christian is to enter into any discussion whatever on the vital theories of his belief; he prefers to beat about the bush, as it were.

To those who are in doubt I would say: Listen not to the voice of the charmer, but close your eyes to all superstition; reason with yourself in a sensible and practical manner, and abide by whatever your own common sense dictates. There is no necessity whatever to go very profoundly into the subject, for if the principles will not bear close examination, one need not bother oneself very much about the mere details.

It is quite unnecessary for me to say anything particular re the Biblical account of the miraculous birth of Christ, the various miracles which he wrought in his ministry, and the various other extraordinary events—far more extraordinary than any contained in the Arabian Nights, which the "Book of Books" tells us of, because all this absurdity has long ago been fully exposed in all its nakedness by those who refuse "to become as little children." This absurdity has evidently been long apparent to some of the branches of the Christian Church, for they have once more been asking themselves whether the story of Mary's virginity is correct, or whether, in their "little understanding," they have not been mistaking the allegorical for the real.

There is, however, one great principle of Christianity which is most glaringly false, and which I wish to once more point out to the readers of this journal, for I am fully aware that far abler pens than mine have previously dwelt upon this particular subject. I refer to the character of the God we are asked to worship.

We are told that God is almighty, just, merciful, meek, gentle, and everything else that is noble. Let us see what truth there is in all this.

If God is almighty, he has absolute control over the whole universe, and everything that happens must therefore be entirely brought about by his will. An individual's mind is part of the universe, and therefore he controls that, putting every thought therein, good, bad, and indifferent. For, if he does not do so, he is not omnipotent. God, therefore, puts the thoughts of theft or murder into the minds of some of his children, and then, because they do as he tells them, plunges them into eternal torment and damnation. Is this just or merciful? But I have frequently been told, in answer to this, that it is the Devil (or, in other words, man's own evil thoughts), and not God, that does the tempting. But then God made the Devil, and therefore he made sin. And if it is the Devil who tempts us, then the Devil is merely a servant of God, who does all his master's dirty work. No Christian would ever acknowledge that God is not stronger than the Devil, for God is almighty; therefore the truth, even from the Christian point of view, must be one of two things—viz., that God either tempts us directly himself, or else is coward enough to stand by and look on while the Devil pummels poor weak mortals to his heart's content. Again I ask, Is this justice or mercy? The good God, the gentle God, he to whom we are beholden for such tremendous gifts and mercies, brings us into the world with a natural tendency to do evil, sets traps of temptation all along our Path of Life, and then, should we transgress, as is more than probable, visits upon us a punishment so great that we, in our poor intellects, are scarcely able to comprehend it.

We are told that this deplorable state of affairs has been brought about by the sin of our first human parents. But that is a poor consolation to us. What have we to do with our first parents? Why should we have to pay the penalty of their sin? When this question is asked of a Christian, he generally replies by quoting that infamous text, "The sins of the father shall descend upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." This is one of nature's most unjust laws, but it is certainly not a law which any just God would ever have created.

Again, what satisfactory explanation can be given of the fact that one man is born in the purple, endowed very highly with intellectual and physical advantages, whereas another is born in some den of filth, neglected and ill-treated in his childhood, learns nothing but vice, associates with nobody but drunkards, thieves, and harlots, and whose whole life is one long struggle for existence? What justice is there in this? Christ said, "Blessed be ye poor"; but where the blessedness of their state comes in I, for one, am not able to divine. I suppose the explanation is that in "the world to come" they will receive far more favors than the unfortunate inheritors of wealth, who are doomed, on account of their wealth, to perdition. Therefore it is perfectly evident that if we do not suffer the most dreadful misfortune and cruelty in this world, we are certain to do so in the next; and vice versa. And all this, forsooth, because of the transgression of our first parents. Again I ask, Where is the hand of reason or mercy to be found here?

Digitized by Google

Another thing, flattery is not at all compatible with meekness or gentleness. One would imagine that a good God would have been quite satisfied in seeing a man lead an honest and unselfish life. But no. The Christian's God "is a jealous God," whom it is absolutely necessary to bow down to and worship, and to metaphorically grovel in the mud before, if anything but damnation is to be expected. Is not the whole business disgusting? Is not the idea of cringing, fawning, and flattering opposed to all the better feelings of our nature? Yet this is what we are told we must do.

How long are people, who boast of their practical common sense, going to continue professing belief in a religion whose great doctrines are totally opposed to reason? Fortunately there are many signs that the dark cloud of superstition is rising, and will eventually give place to light; that man, looking back through the vistas of nearly two thousand years, seeing that Christianity has brought in its train intolerance, bigotry, nameless cruelty, famine, and bloodshed, and that it is false in practice as well as theory, is eventually awakening to the truth. That Christianity is at variance with the sciences is a notorious fact, and it is almost equally well known that scientists and philosophers—the profoundest of all thinkers—are opposed, almost to a man, to its doctrines. The clergy are no longer taken seriously except by a small minority of the population, and no longer is a sceptic looked upon as a social leper, unfit to be personally known. There is no mistaking these changes; even a straw is sufficient to show the way the tide flows. Christianity is slowly but surely losing its hold of the people, for, to use the words of Pope, they are beginning in earnest to "take nature's path, and mad opinions leave." C. H. S.

ACID DROPS.

A week or two ago we printed an exclamation of the Queen's to one of her ladies in regard to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Her Majesty was surprised and shocked to learn that such a Society was needed in a country like England. We have now to record a noteworthy declaration by Mr. Rider Haggard, the novelist, who is well acquainted with South Africa and its "heathen" population. Speaking at a meeting of Mr. Waugh's society, Mr. Haggard said that savages practised polygamy and fought in Homeric fashion, but they had their good points. "So far as I am acquainted with them," he said, "and so far as I know, there has never been amongst them any instance of the maltreatment of a child. They love their children, and I think they would rather die than injure them; and I will go further and say this, that if any enemy of the Christian faith could go amongst those savages and could translate to them the record of the cases which come before this Society, could convince them—which I think would be impossible—that those things were true, and that these things were done by the white lords in every class of society—if that could be done, then I say the chances of Christianity, as a religion, among these savages would come to an end; they would reject it; they would have nothing to do with a creed which was followed by the men and women who did such things."

Mr. Rider Haggard then told a pathetic story of a Matabele who was chased by two English scouts. He was a fine fellow in the prime of life, and was carrying a lot of things, all of which he cast away in his flight except a bundle upon his back. At last, seeing escape hopeless, he turned round, as savages do, to be killed. But the scouts re-assured him, and asked him what he had in the bundle, and why he did not throw it away with the other things. He took down the bundle, opened it, and showed them a baby a year old. "It is my daughter's child," he said; "I was taking it to her." He could have saved himself from what he thought certain death by forsaking the child, but he stuck to it, though it was not his own.

Just fancy the infamous hypocrisy of Englishmen and women, so many of whom ill-treat their own children, sending out missionaries to "save" savages like that splendid Matabele! It is enough to make honest people vomit.

The Catholic Church does not allow divorce in a general way. Special dispensation for it has to be obtained from the Pope, and only very rich or powerful persons are favored by his Holiness. It is also well known that the Catholic Church, while not forbidding second marriages, has always discountenanced them; and in this respect it is true to the common doctrine of a future life. If a man marries often—say like the Duke of Argyll, who, at the age of seventy-two, is leading a third bride to the altar—how are his domestic affairs to be settled in Kingdom-Come? Which of the women he lived with on earth will be his wife in heaven? And what are the others to do? This dreadful puzzle, the other way about, was put to Jesus Christ, and it was too much for him. He answered it, as he generally did when he was cornered, by a subterfuge. So the puzzle remains to this day. If there be a future life, in which we shall recognise each other and consort together, a second marriage is simply abominable, and sets up a source of bickering and quarrelling for all eternity. How could a man hurry off with a second wife to church if he really believed that his first wife had only emigrated to a country where he would soon have to join her? Second marriages are one of the many proofs that the belief in a future life is more profession than reality.

We find the following definition of the Christian Missionary Society in the columns of the Behar Times, India: "An electeosynary agency for the encouragement of canting hypocrisy amongst low-caste people."

Gambling is a woful vice, according to the Rev. Mr. Barnes and his friends of the Anti-Gambling League; but rattling for Bibles in the parish church of St. Ives is quite in accordance with God's will. Did not they fill up the apostle-ship by drawing lots? As Solomon says (Proverbs xvi. 33): "The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord."

A Jew at Trieste, named Paolo Lipsich, has been accused by the Church of having made a crucifix, and of having afterwards fired a shot at it. For this alleged offence he has been sentenced to fourteen months' imprisonment with hard labor. He is to have no food but what he can pay for; at stated intervals he is to be compelled to fast; he is to be ultimately expelled from Austria; and he is to pay all the expenses of his trial.

This charge is probably as absurd and false as that of spitting on prisoners, or of the Sanhedrim trying Jesus by night and without giving full opportunities of defence, or as the malicious charge everywhere brought against the Jews of using Christian blood at their Passover.

About fifty years ago a number of Jews were put to death on this charge at Damascus. In earlier days it was the constant resort of the Christians when they wanted to plunder the race from whom they obtained their God and Savior. Early in the fourteenth century all the Jews were expelled from France on pretence of having crucified a Christian boy. Dean Milman says: "In one day all the Jews were seized, their property confiscated to the Crown, and the race expelled the realm. The clergy, in their zeal for the faith and the hope that their own burthen might be lightened, approved this pious robbery."

A cloudburst in the Wurtemburg Black Forest district last week destroyed whole villages and drowned at least one hundred persons. In Northern Hungary and Galicia also upwards of a hundred persons have been killed by a water-spout, and hundreds of houses were swept away.

Three lives were lost on a boating expedition in connection with the Bible-class excursion from St. Margaret's Church, Rochester. Of a party of twelve only two of these Bible students had the practical knowledge of swimming. The curates of the church made a gallant but unsuccessful attempt to recover the missing bodies.

In the Punjab alone as many as 1,037 deaths from snakes occurred last year. In every province, except Bombay, mortality from this cause is on the increase. The people are apathetic, and the superstitious respect in which the snake is held is a part of the religion of a great many of them. All their gods do for them is to allow their superstition to destroy them.

Digitized by Google

"Providence" has drowned a lot of persons by floods in Germany, and terrified Florence with a fresh earthquake. Mr. Gladstone says that "Providence" fitted up the earth for man's habitation. Nothing of the kind, says Mr. Herbert Spencer; man has to accommodate himself to his environment as best he could. The facts are with Mr. Spencer.

Moody's congregation were singing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," at Fort Worth, when the roof fell. They were rejoicing that their prayer for rain had been answered. One woman was killed as a result of the power of Jesus' name.

God is no respecter of persons. The Rev. W. R. Shepherd, of Hartburn, near Morpeth, went shooting in the vicarage grounds. He shot a rook, but did not kill it. However, he killed himself. In going after the rook he fell over a precipice. There is a moral in this somewhere, only we haven't time to dig it out.

George Owen Orpet has been sentenced at the West London Police-court to six months' imprisonment with hard labor. He was a very religious man, and preached on Sundays. His firm found him £30 wrong last June, but forgave him and raised his salary. But he went wrong again, and this time he has to pay the penalty. Wallace Brothers will probably fight shy of preaching employees in future.

Rev. J. R. Cappe, of Mt. Vernon, Kentucky, who slings hell-fire and brimstone according to the Baptist creed, on last Sunday murdered his wife by shooting her five times, because, he said, she gave more pie to her own children than to his, the two having raised separate crops of children, before they became partners in the baby-raising business.

Is it true that a Christian Evidence lecturer at Liverpool is in the habit of asking opponents their names and addresses? Is it true that an opponent gave his name and address a few Sundays ago? Is it true that on the following Tuesday he was dismissed from his employment on a certain railway?

A way in which the public are taxed to support religion was indicated at the Horwich District Council, where the secretary of the Ænon Baptist Chapel claimed that land belonging to the trustees should be exempt from street-making expenses, as it was intended for the erection of a chapel. It was resolved that the application be entertained when the building was erected.

The officials of the Printing Trades Federation have given instances of sweating by the Salvation Army. They say: "Repeated efforts have been made to get you to pay the rotary hands in the machine department the union rate during the last twelve months, but you have declined each time. That you do not and never have, in the warehouse department, paid the union rate; and we challenge you to produce your books to refute this. We do know that you have paid 2s. for a full night's work; and we ask, 'Is this union rate?'" They give further instances of persons who have been discharged and replaced by others, to whom are given less than half the rate of wages. They say: "We defy you to point to another case in which a newspaper is produced on such low conditions as your War Cry, Gazette, and Little Soldier are now produced by you."

The truth seems to be that the Salvation Army is a large business firm, which utilises religion in order to buy cheaper and sell dearer than other firms whose business it absorbs. The blood and fire, bands and banners, are the advertisements for Booth & Co.'s S.A. tea and S.A. clothing.

The Blue Grass Blade, edited by an Atheist teetotaler, has some lines on "The Sin of the Sacrament." Here is the first verse:—

If Jesus, whom the pious ones believe to be divine,
Had never made His thaumaturgal blunder
Of turning aqua pura into poison-tainted wine,
While the people stood agape with awe and wonder,
But had taught that holy banquets, with sacramental toasts,
Paved the way for making drunkards in His name,
He might have made the lesson more impressive to the hosts,
By proclaiming wine the leading-string of shame.

The Rev. G. L. Perin has been picturing Jesus as a newspaper man. He asks what would Christ have done had he been an editor? Possibly he would have accepted crucifixion with relief.

There are no liars in the world like Christian liars. In the first place, they take to it naturally; in the second place, they have had such a lot of practice. Take that "Atheist Shoemaker" story, by way of illustration. Although it has been thoroughly exposed, so that its pious author has apparently withdrawn it from circulation for ever, the Christians go on declaring that it is as true as Gospel. Opening the Nottingham Argus, we notice a letter from a pretentious, ungrammatical individual, called William Lewin, who writes himself down as secretary of the local Christian Evidence Society. This person "begs to state," as though he knew all about it, that the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes "placed the whole of the proofs in the hands of Mr. George Jacob Holyoake," who has "entirely supported Mr. Hughes." Now the "proofs" were not placed in Mr. Holyoake's hands, nor did he take the trouble to discover them. Mr. Hughes simply produced his own witnesses. It was subsequent to Mr. Holyoake's investigation that Mr. Foote discovered the Atheist Shoemaker's father and brothers and shopmates, and the house where he last lived in London; and it was this fresh evidence that proved the falsity of Mr. Hughes's story.

The Islamic World has an article on "The European Liquor Traffic with Africa," which it shows has developed to an enormous extent. The Muslims preach temperance to the natives, but the Christians bring gin, rum, and ruin in their train. The writer says: "No wonder the late Captain Burton preferred for Africa a repetition of the slave trade in its worst form to the liquor traffic and its terribly blighting influence, if we must choose the lesser of two evils."

In 1665 the Bible Society published, for the benefit of the Pequot Indians, located in Massachusetts, a translation of the Bible into their tongue, by Rev. John Elliot, known as the "Apostle to the Indians." The Sunday at Home says: "The book has lasted longer than the people for whom it was made; the tribes to which Elliot preached have vanished, and their language is extinct."

Savages and semi-civilised nations can always understand the Bible to the extent of knowing that it countenances polygamy and drink. They can appreciate such texts as "Bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after; for oxen or for sheep or for wine or for strong drink," and they understand Christianity just well enough to know that it promises to wipe out all their sins.

Duguid, the "mejum," produced a spirit photograph, which turned out to be a reproduction of a continental picture. Now an apologist says: "A medium may, on passing through a picture gallery, become impressed by some picture which, although forgotten soon after, may yet make a persistent appearance on his negative on subsequent occasions." This is almost as good as the explanation of the medium's hands being black when the spirit pulled the hair of a sitter, who, aware of the spirit's proclivities that way, mixed lampblack with his hair-oil. So intimate is the contact between mejum and spirit that what happens to one affects the other.

The Daily Chronicle (June 8) notes a case of belief in witchcraft in Lincolnshire. The witch is a quiet, harmless old lady who lives in an almshouse. One of her neighbors had pigs who wouldn't fatten, hens that would not lay, and cows who gave little milk. Evidently the fault was with the witch, who had been seen to cast an evil eye over byre and poultry-yard. The farmer and his wife took counsel how to allay the malign influence. It was believed that if a bone could be broken or blood drawn all would be well; and it is affirmed that this was done by the woman, who fell on the old lady, pushed her over a fence, and broke her arm. The D. C. says "it seems almost incredible in these days of Board schools." It would be strange, however, if the belief in witchcraft did not survive while the fetish book which countenances it is so absurdly reverenced.

The Liverpool Courier asks, How many Agnostics and Atheists have we in the House of Commons? It says: "This question is exercising the minds of some excellent Churchmen and leaders of religious thought. Their idea is that the number is not less than seventy. Of course there is no accurate information on the point, because the professors of Agnosticism and Atheism are generally careful to conceal their opinions. However, it is doubtful whether concealment will be possible in the future, for with a view to the general election these Christian gentlemen are organising themselves into a body whose purpose it will be to give the electorate information as to the religious opinions of every candidate." We expect a number of candidates will be simply members of the Church of England, which there is high authority for saying that every member of the English nation legally is.

There is a deal of method in most madness. The most enthusiastic preacher of hell-fire will eat, drink, and grow fat; and revivalists, who are so preoccupied with the next world, generally manage to rake in the shekels in this world. We are not surprised, therefore, that the mad fellow who went to Balmoral (with a revolver) to take the place of the Queen had written a letter to Vanderbilt, the American millionaire, offering to marry his daughter.

Digitized by Google

"Canterbury" is no fool, nor is his brother Archbishop of York. The report of their Committee upon the new Scheme for the Relief of Voluntary Schools is well summarised by the Westminster Gazette as "How to Dip into the Public Funds while Dodging Public Control." England, however, is not blind enough to fall into such a trap.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has among its functions the determination of some Church questions here. It also determines the rights of property in Indian idols, and is, on that said account, said to be worshipped in some parts of India as a supernatural agency.

There was a nice little quarrel over the gods at Buddha Gaya, the Jerusalem of the Buddhists, where Gautama Buddha is said to have meditated under a fig tree, not cursing it. The temple erected there is in the hands of the Brahmins, and those in custody removed the statue of Buddha, substituting their own idols instead. The Viceroy, however, visited the temple, and made the Mahout produce the statue of Buddha, which he had hidden. The Maha Bodhi Society are now going to restore the sacred temple, and to found a college there to be the centre for the propaganda of Buddhism all over the world.

The real Christian spirit is not extinct. It burst out in something like its old force at the celebration of the eighth centenary of the first crusade held in Clermont, Ferraud. A famous Dominican preacher, Father Montfabre, broke into a fury of speech. He declared that France must once more undertake a crusade, this time against the godless, the usurers, and the Freemasons. He made a vehement appeal to undertake the work to the two Cardinals and forty Bishops present. The congregation received his utterances with loud applause, clapping their hands, and crying out "God wills it!"

No doubt there are plenty of fanatics who would dearly like to see a crusade against the enemies of the Church. To lop off the heads of the leading Freethinkers would be a work of merit like that of Elijah slaying the four hundred priests of Baal. Kill but the boldest scientists, thinkers, writers, and speakers, and the Church might once more dominate and bring back the Middle Ages.

Prebendary Harry Jones, in his reminiscences, entitled Fifty Years, tells of some interesting communicants. He says as one instance of many: "On the first occasion of my officiating as rector at St. George's, a string of tottering old people ostentatiously filed up to the altar rails and received the Holy Communion. Next morning they presented themselves in a body at the vestry door, asking that their names and addresses might be put down, obviously expecting to be paid for their devout attendance the previous day. On my declining to recognise this claim of these poor old folk, the party never presented itself again at the Table of the Lord; but one morning a crippled leader among them came to me and said confidentially that he had lately gone to St. Peter's, but that if I would occasionally give him something he would communicate at St. George's."

The requisition of a dole for taking the sacrament is a striking contrast to the good old times, when the magical efficacy of the Savior's body and blood, and the fear of being debarred from the holy table, brought much grist to the priestly mill. Now the very paupers want to be paid to act as communicants. The darkey loved his Jesus for the sake of the wine, but they think such a slender meal requires a little cash along with it.

In the ancient Thargalia of the Athenians a man was annually sacrificed to expiate the sins of the nation. The man was not, as in the Christian scheme of atonement, the worthiest and most innocent person, but the most worthless person known, and the custom was to reserve certain of the criminal classes, who, in case of plague, famine, or other supposed visitations from angry deities, were thrown into the sea in the belief that the sacrifice of their lives would cleanse or wipe off the guilt of the nation.

Mrs. Besant has adopted the Swedenborgian method of making an allegory of the Christian atonement. This is putting new wine into old bottles with a vengeance. The historic facts are that the doctrine arose from savage belief in the efficacy of blood, and savage customs of paying for crimes committed.

The Daily News of Friday, June 7, in reviewing an important sociological work by the Vicomte G. D'Avenel, writes as follows with respect to slavery and its abolition in France: "M. D'Avenel convincingly proves that the oft-cited edicts of Louis le Hutin effected little with regard to the emancipation of serfs. What really, though very slowly and partially, did liberate these bondsmen of Church and noble was, firstly, the influence of the communes, the contagion of municipal liberties; secondly, and chiefly, the condition of the country. Wars had depopulated and devastated entire regions. The problem was to get corn sowed, harvest reaped. Thus, towards the close of the thirteenth century the most precious commodity in France, the source of all wealth and power, was the husbandman—the laborer. Scarcity of hands had so much increased a man's value that he was haggled for, was enabled to make a good bargain for himself, to acquire not only his freedom, but a concession of land. Sentiment, benevolence, Christian charity, had little or nothing to do with the movement. Thus, neither the clergy nor the monastic orders showed any alacrity in manumitting their serfs. Even in 1376 the austere monks of St. Bruno, a brotherhood vowed to poverty and penance, sold a number of these white slaves, as they might have done a flock of sheep, to the Duke of Burgundy. Nevertheless, here and there we come upon manumissions of favorite serfs made by individual owners 'in the name of Christ.'"

The whole subject of Christianity and Slavery should be treated by a first-rate historian. It is not too much to say that the real facts have been obscured or suppressed by orthodox historians. Slavery existed in Europe right down to the fifteenth century; not serfdom, but complete slavery, and the Church owned slaves just like other proprietors. Vicomte D'Avenel shows that Languedoc and Gascony, for instance, swarmed with slaves little more than four hundred years ago—Turks, Egyptians, and negroes. A "black Saracen" sold for about £25, and a little negro fetched twice the price of a parrot. This was fifteen centuries after the advent of Jesus Christ.

In an article on "Ancient Egyptian Ideas of Immortality," Mr. Boscawen says: "The Ancient Egyptian thought the dead composed of four parts—viz., Sah, the mummy; Ba, the soul; Khu, intelligence; and Ka, the double."

The Ka, or spirit, could not exist without its rations of bread, beer, wine, meat, oxen, and geese, which were supplied for its sustenance. When a person died it was considered that he became absorbed into the spiritual body of the chief deity—Osiris. The body could exist without the Ka, but the latter could not exist without the body. Hence the Ancient Egyptians went to so much trouble and expense to preserve their carcases.

Rudyard Kipling's new poem, "Mulholland's Contract," is an amusing production. Mulholland gets in a dangerous position among the cattle that had broken loose on the lower deck in a gale of wind; so he makes a "Contract with God," something like Jacob in the old Jew Book.

> An' by the terms of the Contract, as I have read the same,
> If He got me to port alive I would exalt his name,
> And praise His Holy Majesty till further orders came.

Mulholland gets his orders from "God" to go back to the cattle-boats, after his recovery in hospital, and preach the Gospel to his drinking, swearing, and fighting pals. Then comes this delicious verse:—

> I have been smit and bruised, as warned would be the case,
> An' turned my cheek to the smiter exactly as Scripture says;
> But following that, I knocked him down an' led him up to Grace.

Mr. Hall Caine, the novelist, has written a Life of Christ. Could anything be more appropriate? Those other novelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, wrote a long time ago, and are somewhat behind the taste of the present age. Mr. Hall Caine has taken their material, which is all that exists, and worked it up in a more fin de siècle fashion. No doubt it will pay him as well as The Manxman.

We read that Mr. Hall Caine will re-write his Jesus Christ now after a prolonged stay in the one-horse country which is facetiously called the Holy Land. Perhaps he wishes to put in the necessary local color; perhaps he hopes to receive an infusion of the Holy Ghost.

Poor Lord Rosebery! He has had his chance and lost it. Keeping race-horses, and winning the Derby, have been his ruin. The editor of the Methodist Times says so, and he ought to know. In funereal tones, and with an expression of an undertaker, Mr. Hughes deplores "the moral downfall of that unfortunate man." But while the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return. It is to be earnestly hoped, therefore, that his lordship will repent before it is too late, and "give his heart to God" on an early Sunday in St. James's Hall. By doing so he will secure the premiership for a whole generation. Still, we trust that Mr. Price Hughes will not write a book about his "turfite" convert. That would be a greater punishment than he could bear.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, June 16, Hall of Science, 142 Old-street, London, E.C.: "Mrs. Besant's New Views of Christianity."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—June 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London. July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

S. Howard.—We rank with the admirers of Robert Browning as a poet, but his Christianity seems to us but little above the level of common Methodism. Its redeeming feature was its Universalism. Browning thought that all would be saved somehow and at some time. Of course we say this in view of his published work. In private, according to Robert Buchanan, he declined to be called a Christian at all. Perhaps the truth is that he grew out of Christianity in later years. We know the poem you refer to—"Gold Hairs." It is fine in its way, and is complete without the last two verses. The "lie" referred to in the fourth line of the last verse is, of course, the doctrine of natural human goodness, which Christianity has always combated, and must combat to the end of the chapter.

Subscriber.—Thanks for cuttings.

T. Millar (Belfast).—It is a Christian trick to call Joseph Barker "late infidel lecturer and co-editor of the National Reformer with Charles Bradlaugh." People who read it are led to believe that they are reading recent history. Joseph Barker started the National Reformer with Charles Bradlaugh thirty-five years ago. They soon parted, and Joseph Barker, finding he could not "boss" the Freethought movement in England, went back to Christianity. He was a most unstable man—everything by turns and nothing long.

E. Smedley.—(1) Christianity is nothing without reference to a future life. Secularism has nothing at all to do with a future life. Hence the sanctions of the two systems are entirely different. Christians never talk about making the best of this life until they are shaky about the next life. Christianity does not mean doing the best for humanity; it means saving your soul through the blood of Christ. Take that away, and its ethical teaching, so far as it is true, belongs to humanity at large, having existed before Christianity was born. (2) If the God of the Bible meant to recommend teetotalism, he could have said so plainly, like the God of the Koran.

J. Little.—Your order handed to Mr. Forder. We regret to hear of the prolonged depression at West Auckland. These industrial problems are vastly more important than the problems of kingdom-come.

J. M. Headley (Yarmouth).—Freethinkers certainly ought to deal with newsagents who are liberal enough to supply Secular literature. We thank you for displaying our contents-sheet, which is a help to our circulation.

T. Birtley has again accepted the secretaryship of the Chester-le-street Branch. There are scores, perhaps hundreds, of Freethinkers in the district, and we hope they will rally round Mr. Birtley and the Branch.

N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—Collected at Bristol Conference, £2 12s.; J. Withey, 5s.; J. Proctor, 5s.; A Friend, 5s.; Mrs. Henderson, £1; Huddersfield Branch, 7s. 6d.; I. Tapp, 6s.

W. Cabell points out, with reference to Mr. Engström's letter, that Jesus Christ appears to have known nothing about the doctrine of original sin, which is a speciality of Paul's. Jesus Christ spoke of "ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance"—an expression which is opposed to all the teaching of the Churches.

B. Bendl.—Thanks. See paragraph.

C. Dodd.—Mr. Putnam would probably not enter into a public debate in this country except after consultation with Messrs. Foote and Watts. It is scarcely fair to leave him at the mercy of every Christian Evidence lecturer who wants an advertisement.

J. P. Gilmour.—Glad to hear you were all so pleased with Mr. Putnam at Glasgow. The American Secularists will prize the hospitality you showed their representative.

E. D. H. Daly.—Thanks for cuttings.

Papers Received.—Truthseeker—Boston Investigator—Liberal—Open Court—Liberator—Twentieth Century—Freidenker—Isle of Man Times—Liberty—Two Worlds—Progressive Thinker—Light—Horwich Advertiser—Liverpool Courier—Harbinger of Light—Echo—Morning Leader—Essex Telegraph—Crescent—Secular Thought—Islamic World—Birmingham Daily Mail—Western Figaro—Manchester Courier—Nottingham Guardian—Jerusalem Star—Reading Observer—Blue Grass Blade.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

AFTER THE CONFERENCE.

Conferences are very useful gatherings. They enable workers in various parts of the country to meet and get acquainted. They excite a certain amount of moral enthusiasm. They also lead to the comparison of ideas as to the best way of promoting the success of the movement; and although these ideas are sometimes very crude, and more imaginative than practical, there is sure to be some advantage in their open ventilation and discussion.

At the Bristol Conference one or two Branches desired to add to the N.S.S. Immediate Practical Objects, but the proposal was negatived. We have already a pretty extensive program, about which there is, in the main, practical unanimity. But if we go on adding planks, after controversy and division, we shall weaken rather than strengthen our Society. It should never be forgotten that our primary bond is Freethought, and that our chief object is to fight Theology, which, in education, politics, and social life, still exercises an oppressive and reactionary influence.

Mr. Watts's proposal, which was adopted, seems to me a very useful one, if it is carried out with sufficient thought and care. A little volume, plainly written, and showing how Freethought conflicts with Theology in public and private life—in politics, sociology, and ethics—would be of inestimable value. It is not enough to offer inquirers a catalogue of Principles and Objects. The skeleton must be clothed with flesh, or it will not be attractive.

Mr. George Ward's proposal, on behalf of the Finsbury Park Branch, was also good intrinsically, though the Conference did not think the time had arrived for carrying it into effect. It would involve a heavy expense to send an organising secretary through the country to do what was contemplated. The proposal, however, being remitted as a recommendation to the Executive, can be taken up without further discussion at the psychological moment.

Mr. Cohen's proposal was also excellent, but it has been carried before. It is a capital idea to send lecturers into the country, but the difficulty is how to do it. Personally, I do not believe it can be done by our present organisation; and I am reluctantly and painfully driven to the belief that our organisation cannot be much improved while we lie under legal disabilities. Brains and energy cannot work without means. Enthusiasts may think otherwise, but they soon get undeceived if they condescend to practice. The bigoted Christian law is the secret of all our difficulties. We have lost thousands of pounds during the brief term of my presidency, and we shall go on losing until the law is altered. Meanwhile, we may dodge the law, but we have no real security; for even if property itself is secure, there is no guarantee that it will not be alienated from its original purposes. Mr. Joseph Symes built a hall at Melbourne, and other people are in possession. He denounces them as tricksters and thieves—as they are from a moral point of view—but they laugh at him, for the law is on their side. Yes, we shall never do great things, as an organisation, until property can be dedicated to, and held in trust for, our special objects—that is, until we enjoy the advantages of endowment like other bodies.

While our organisation remains as it is, in consequence of our disabilities, I see little use in the means by which Mr. Cohen's proposal is sought to be carried out. A committee must sit somewhere, and if it sits in London what does it really know (as things now are) of the provinces? Only a person who goes all over the country is in a position to know what is wanted. Accordingly I told the Conference that I had resolved to take this matter in hand myself. I have worked out my plans, and in a month or so I shall put them into a circular. All the lecturers I have spoken to believe in my idea as the only one that is practicable in the circumstances, and I shall be happy if I can utilise their services, as they should be utilised, in the propaganda of our principles.

I have no doubt that the Committee appointed to report to the Executive will fall in with my scheme when they come to talk it over with me. I have given the matter much thought; I have taken it to bed with me and got up with it in the morning; and so far as our lecturing system is concerned, I see no alternative between my plan and chaos.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote occupies the London Hall of Science platform again this evening (June 16). His subject will be "Mrs. Besant's New Views of Christianity." After the lecture Mr. Foote will announce the decision of the Directors of the National Secular Hall Society with respect to the institution.

Mr. Putnam lectured at Glasgow last Sunday, and, in spite of the midsummer weather, to capital audiences, the evening meeting being phenomenal for the time of the year. His lectures were highly appreciated, and a general hope was expressed that he would soon revisit the "tight little island." A collection for the Glasgow Infirmary realised £3 15s.

The day before his Glasgow lectures, Messrs. Gilmour and Black took Mr. Putnam down the Clyde, and he was enchanted with the spectacle, first of human industry, and then of natural beauty. Mr. Putnam was in good hands that day, and, as the Yankees say, he had a good time all through. To day (June 16) he lectures at Edinburgh, and of course the "saints" will give him a first-rate welcome.

We have received the New York Truthseeker containing the first of Mr. Putnam's letters after his reception in England. Our American guest is very warm-hearted, and it is with considerable hesitation that we decide to reproduce some portions of his letter for the benefit of our own readers, who will not be able to see the blushes of those he eulogises. The extracts will appear in our next issue.

Mr. A. B. Moss was very busy on Sunday. Three open-air lectures make a big day's work. His afternoon meeting in Victoria Park was a very large one. A certain Christian rowdy was there, with his lambs, intending to create a disturbance. Their interruptions, however, were dealt with by Mr. Moss with good humour. After the lecture, however, there was a very ugly rush for the platform; but the members around it stood firm, and they were supported by six stalwart policemen, who meant to stop the little game of those

> Who prove their doctrine orthodox
> By apostolic blows and knocks.

Thanks are due to the County Council police for their prompt action in stopping disorder.

Bristol Christians are annoyed. They went about saying that Secularism was dead, and lo! the N.S.S. held its Conference at Bristol, and reports appeared in the local newspapers. This was too much for Christian flesh and blood to bear with equanimity. Accordingly, a Christian Evidence lecturer, named Grinstead, went to Eastville Park to lecture on Secularism—the thing that was dead; and gravely informed his hearers that all Freethinkers were pot-house men. It is a wonder he did not say he had met them there. On the following Sunday, the N.S.S. Branch secretary, Mr. Keast, lectured on the same subject, taking the precaution to have a police officer handy, much to the surprise and disgust of a few Christians who came for a row. Mr. Keast put some questions which the Grinsteadites could not answer. They could answer in one way, but they feared that policeman.

In mentioning the Bristol papers that reported the N.S.S. Conference, we overlooked the Times and Mirror. A correspondent who sends us the cutting writes: "When I saw it I thought the days of miracles had returned. So orthodox has the Times and Mirror been hitherto, that for several years it would not notice, except by inserting their advertisements, such mild heretics as the Bristol Sunday Society. Secularism is clearly becoming respectable even in Bristol."

The Wood Green Branch is doing good work at its open-air station. Unfortunately it has to meet unscrupulous opposition. We hope the local Freethinkers will rally round the platform and support the lecturers. It will never do to have any of our meetings broken up by bigots.

The International Congress of Freethinkers will be held this year at Brussels on September 22, 23, and 24. All the arrangements are being undertaken by the Belgian Rationalist Federation. Four subjects are definitely placed on the agenda for discussion: (1) The Abolition of War, (2) The Relations between Church and State, (3) The Equality of Men and Women, (4) The Religious Emancipation of Women. Some groups also propose to discuss the Attitude of Freethought towards Christian Democracy. The circular will be laid before the National Secular Society's Executive at its next meeting, when a delegation to the Congress will no doubt be decided upon.

"A Freethinker" protests in the London Star against the narrow sectarianism of the Anti-Vivisection Society. Its annual meeting opened with "prayer," and most of the speakers talked a great deal about "religion." The Star correspondent says that all this is in spite of the fact that "the modern humanitarian movement is largely the work of Freethinkers, while on the other hand many vivisectionists are unimpeachably orthodox in their creed." We may add, for our own part, that the noblest denunciation of the vivisectors came from the pen of Colonel Ingersoll.

Mr. Herbert Spencer has had to decline the Prussian Royal Order "Pour le Mérite," as he holds that certain opinions of his, often repeated and strongly expressed, debar him from accepting it. After all, he can afford to dispense with orders and decorations. It is better to remain plain Mr. Herbert Spencer. That name will be enough on his tombstone.

The Manchester Branch desires us to announce that its Annual Picnic will take place on Sunday, July 14, at Chester. Friends intending to join the party are requested to apply for tickets at once, so that the necessary arrangements may be made without delay. Full particulars will be given later on. Address—Joseph Seddon, 83 Upper Lloyd-street, Moss Side.

The Boston Investigator, now in its 65th volume, copies Mr. Stephenson's poem, "Fiend or Fool," from our pages, to the first position in its own.

The 24th Judicial District Court of Kansas, in Barber County, has just decided that the reading of the Bible is not compulsory in the public schools of that State. A Freethinking father, whose son was expelled for refusing to take part in devotional exercises, obtained a mandamus compelling the board to reinstate his son as a member of the school.

"Christ is the Head of this House; He is the unseen guest at meals," is a motto inscribed on the walls of a temperance restaurant at Bristol. It is quite usual for the head of the house to put in an appearance at meal-times; but at this particular restaurant the provender was not of the savory character expected when so distinguished a guest puts in his appearance. The Bishop of Bristol would probably have elevated his nose at the meals.

A CABINET COUNCIL IN HEAVEN.

Time: The beginning of our era. One Sabbath morning. Eleven o'clock by the celestial chronometer. The Holy Ghost flaps its wings and coos aloud. Yaveh, waking, rubs his eyes: "What's up?"

Holy Ghost: "News from the earth."

Yaveh: "What news? Si je conçois comment on s'y comporte Je veux bien que le diable m'emporte. How is my only begotten Son getting on below?"

Holy Ghost: "He has become a D.D."

Yaveh: "What's that?"

Holy Ghost: "Devil Dodger."

Yaveh: "Don't understand Latin turned into bad English."

Holy Ghost: "Well, Yaveh, you are the boss of the show, and created everything (Yaveh nods), devils included."

Yaveh: "Certes—to plague mankind. Pour nôtre bon plaisir."

Holy Ghost: "You sent devils into men, and your dutiful son—enfant terrible—is having some rare fun, ha! ha! He is driving them out. A pack of poor devils has just entered the bellies of pigs!"

Yaveh (in a rage): "Sacré nom de la Trinité! My lightning apparatus! I'll smash the damned coon!"

The apparatus is set up, but the Holy Ghost gives it a slight turn, and the lightning strikes an island, yclept Santorin, which disappears with thousands of innocent people. There was joy in heaven! Chorus: "The heavens are telling." Charles Keoll Laporte.

The church doors throughout the capital of Madagascar have been covered with placards inciting the people to kill the Queen and her husband, and welcome the French. This is the effect of the new Catholic crusade.

Evangelist Wharton says: "I believe in a free country, the freedom of the press, and free speech; but I am in favor of shutting the mouth and gagging the tongue of every person who goes around defaming God and undermining the teachings of God's Church." Brother Wharton is living a century or so behind his time.

Digitized by Google

MAN'S DUAL NATURE.

THEOSOPHY, I think, is now the only system which teaches that man's nature is of a sevenfold character. So far it is universally apprehended that human nature is divided in two phases. The metaphysician's terms are "mundane and supermundane," or "natural and transcendental." The Spiritists call it "material and spiritual." The Christian employs the expression, "body and soul." The newest of new Spiritualists divide our nature in three; they distinguish between "soul" and "spirit," or the ethical and the intellectual plane. Leaving the unquestionable material element out, however, we have undoubtedly still a twofold nature left. We have the sentiment or emotion, and the intellect or reason. The former is the animal instinct refined, our motive power, the incentive stimulus to action; the latter is the second thought or reflection, the guiding power of utility. Each has its own function to perform, and where the line is not drawn in its proper place, there mischief is the result. Where the sentiment is unguided by reason, it assumes the form of superstition, and where misplaced it culminates in frantic passion.

Hence it is that we stand, as it were, kicking with one foot on the moist soil of superstition, and the other on the dry land of reason. The former draws us back towards religion, as the latter pulls us up towards common sense. As the one prevails, so the other recedes; as the first is neglected, so the last flourishes. We are referred to statesmen. These believe in Christianity. Why cannot you? The nearest and simplest answer to this question, which is the very embodiment of absurdity both in form and spirit, would be, first, because my brain is differently constructed, of course; besides, my education and experience have been different from theirs. But I should further like to ask, Has their religion anything to do with their statesmanship? Does the statesman, in his capacity as such, live out his Christianity? Does he refrain from contributing to the maintenance of the army, or the furtherance of implements of war? If not, he does not assist to keep the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." Or does the Christian physician pray over the sick or exorcise devils, like Jesus did, instead of giving them medicine? Or does the Christian Judge sanction the commandment, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live"? Nay, only recently, in Ireland, a poor woman who was suspected of witchcraft was held over fire and otherwise maltreated in order to effect a cure; but the ultra-religious bigots were secured, and an inquiry was opened. Or do great Christian judges believe in the Bible, when it teaches the art of anointing as a remedy for illness? Nay, last year two parents in London were imprisoned for that offence. Why, by the argument of greatness we might prove anything. We might as well say there are great preachers who believe in Roman Catholicism, therefore that is right; or there are great Freethinkers who disbelieve in Christianity, therefore Christianity is wrong. The fact is, statesmen are politicians when in Parliament on week-days, and on Sundays they are Christians and go to church. They are politicians when dealing with politics, and Christians when writing in religious magazines.

Here again, then, are we confronted with another phase of the duplicity of human nature. And what is the cause of it? It may be said, not without valid grounds, that human kind is only just emerging out of its infancy. The coat of the ape is worn off, but the animal instincts are not yet outgrown. Again, there have been more centuries of natural, or rather unnatural, selection, in which all those who exhibited even the slightest symptoms of mental independence were killed off, and only the religious and half-developed were permitted to survive, than there have been years of religious freedom. But is there not another reason near at hand? Could a clearer and more logical way of thinking not be established in one generation?

The facts are, that the plastic, susceptible mind of the child is muddled and crippled in the school by the mixing together of irreconcileable theories—scientific facts and theological errors, facts and fancies, knowledge and guesswork, science and superstition. In one hour the pupil is taught that our earth is the centre of the universe, and that the sun, moon, and stars were put in the heavens to give light to its inhabitants; in the next hour he is taught, with as much fervor and gravity, that the globe itself is only an infinitesimal part of the universe, an insignificant speck in the heavens, moving through space with an inconceivable rapidity, its movements depending upon the sun, and, in turn, compelling the moon to follow it. In one hour he learns that man was once created perfect, but fell, and that he is now a depraved, corrupt being, who is helplessly lost to an irrevocable doom, unless he gets someone else to atone for him; and, in the next, he learns from history that man has gradually developed from a lower type, working out his own salvation, and he knows from experience that there are good qualities in the worst, and bad in the best men, and that everybody has to face his own guilt, suffer for his own transgressions, and bear his own responsibility, and that no personal sin can be atoned for by another. At one time he is told that maladies are the result of the possession of devils, at another that they arise through natural causes. In one lesson he is brought to believe that witchcraft is a crime to be punished by death; in another, that it does not exist. One day he is taught to rely on prayer; another, to help himself. One day that killing is a crime; another, that he who will not risk his life to exterminate the heathen, in order to convert them, is kindling the wrath of God.

Is it a wonder, then, that reason is impeded, the intellect stifled, and judgment perverted? Is it a wonder that passion is fostered, that superstition and bigotry flourish, and that the instincts are sustained? The time thus spent is wasted, and so is the longer time which is required to unlearn these pernicious errors. When we consider that these precious years—the years that should be utilised to give the child a foundation for a lifetime—are thus lost, never to return, and that the energy which should be given in the service of mankind is thus swallowed up in the quibbling of theological controversy, we must admit that it is a scandal and a disgrace, and it is enough to raise the indignation of any right-minded philanthropist. Stealing money is a crime, but thieving time and energy from the weak and unprotected child is the most abominable theft of all; and I would fling back into the teeth of those who are responsible for this state of affairs the saying: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

But I look forward to a time when this sort of thing shall have ceased; when the Unknowable shall be left out of the field of education till the child has a mind of its own to judge for him or herself; when he or she is able to sift the chaff from the wheat and discern the truth from falsehood; when the little minds shall no longer be tortured by the fear of hell, and charged with the impossible task of uniting the incompatible; and when the time of learning shall be wholly devoted to the sphere of the realm of science. Then, and not till then, will spring up a noble race to bless humanity, which has long enough been held in bondage by the cursed and baneful influence of religious strife and tyranny, and to establish a paradise upon earth, which has too long been the scene of all the horrors of a hideous hell. Then, and not till then, shall bigotry, tyranny, and irrational brute-passion subside, and Reason, with her train of noble servants, reign supreme.

J. K. MAGGARD.

Obituary.

OUR London friends will hear with regret of the death of Mrs. Mary Hartmann, wife of the much-respected Vice-President, Mr. S. Hartmann. It was my painful duty to conduct the last offices for the deceased at the Crematorium, at Brookwood, on Sunday last. The sad event was accentuated by the fact that Mr. Hartmann was away in Germany, just recovering from a severe illness after undergoing operations for an internal complaint; and he was prevented, by distance, from arriving home until a few hours after his wife's death. Several friends were present from the Camberwell Branch who, after the cremation, visited the ground where the ashes are to be buried, which is immediately behind the grave of Mr. Bradlaugh. This spot is becoming quite a "Freethinkers' corner." One inscription on a very old lady simply says: "She led a good life without hope of reward or fear of punishment." In the name of the whole of the Executive and of the many members who know our good friend Hartmann, I tender our sympathy and respect to him and the only daughter in their bereavement.—ROBERT FORDER.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

A Life's Experience is a good title for a treatise on Hydraulics and many other matters, by James Emerson, of Willimansett, Massachusetts, who, besides much pertaining to his business of testing water wheels, has some plain speaking directed against law, doctors, and priestcraft.

* * *

The Essentials of Logic, by Bernard Bosanquet (Macmillan & Co.), consists of ten lectures given under the Oxford University Extension system. Beyond the technical instructions on the art of judgment and inference, some sound advice is given; for instance, the following: "Determine always to know the truth; welcome all information and all suggestion; but remember that truth is always systematic, and that every judgment, when you scrutinise it, demands a fuller and fuller connection with the structure of life. It is not cleverness or learning that makes the philosopher; it is a certain spirit, openness of mind, thoroughness of work, and hatred of superficiality."

* * *

It is a reproach to European histories of philosophies that hitherto they have overlooked the profound systems of thought long current in the East, and which ages ago anticipated nearly all that the Germans have advanced in a transcendental direction. This reproach Dr. Paul Deussen removes in his Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie. Professor Deussen begins by discussing Indian philosophy, with which he is thoroughly at home, before proceeding to that of Greece, that of the Bible, that of the Middle Ages, and Modern Philosophy.

* * *

Perhaps, when the Germans find that transcendentalism has been tried and found wanting in India, they may fall back on practical experience. Some sign of this may be seen in the publication of Immanente Philosophie, by Max Kauffmann. The immanent philosophy is a German form of Positivism, discarding ontology and all metaphysical hypotheses, and concerning itself alone with the demonstrable and real.

* * *

Dr. Allan Menzies has issued through Murray a sketch of primitive religious beliefs and practices, and of the origin of the Great Systems, under the bold title of A History of Religion. It goes somewhat on the lines of C. P. Tiele's work, and gives a useful list of authorities.

* * *

Joseph Jacobs, noticing in the Jewish Quarterly Review Dr. James Drummond's Hibbert Lecture on "Christianity in its Most Intelligible Forms," says: "The Christian scheme is Individualistic in tendency; the Jewish was largely Socialistic. The primary care of the Christian is his own soul; that of the Jew, his own nation."

* * *

Mr. Jacobs says, further: "The ideal personality of a mystic Christ is the real differentia of Christianity from other religions. A real personality, like the Jesus of the Synoptic Gospels [?], could not be made into an ideal for all humanity. He himself was conditioned by the historic circumstances of his time, and those who would follow him would be limited to his authentic acts and utterances. But in the ideal figure of the Christ, as created by Paul and John, each generation of men could read their own ideals, and have done so. The historic problem of Christianity is to trace how this purely ideal figure of Christ became attached to the name and life of the Jewish peasant of Galilee."

* * *

Thomas Paine in a New Light is an address by M. M. Mangasarian, who is a lecturer of the Chicago Society for Ethical Culture. The new light is not at all new to Freethinkers, nor on the whole do we think it a very true one. M. Mangasarian, like some other Ethical Culturists, seems very fastidious, and objects to pioneer work that it was not done in kid gloves.

* * *

When Did Paul Live? by "Scholasticus," is another American pamphlet, sent us by Mr. L. Levine, to whose courtesy we are indebted for many American papers. "Scholasticus" argues that, as Josephus knew nothing of Paul or other Apostles, the story of the Jewish Life of Christ may be incorrect, and Paul antedate the Christian era.

* * *

Dr. Hamburger, the head Rabbi in Berlin, has put out a book entitled Jesus of Nazareth. His object is to exonerate his race from the charge of crucifying Christ. He urges that the power was in the hands of the Romans, and that he was put to death as a political agitator. That the people of Jerusalem received Jesus with joy was sufficient to rouse the Romans, who were wont to crucify the Jews by hundreds and thousands if they removed the votive tablets and statues of the emperors.

Dr. Hamburger contends that Jesus could only have been put to death by the Jews as a blasphemer, if he had cursed Jehovah, and such a charge or any could only be heard by a full Sanhedrim, and in the day time. Moreover, the verdict could not be given until three full days had passed. All this is inconsistent with the gospel story of the trial of Jesus by night, with grave Jewish judges spitting upon him, and the execution early the next morning.

THE CRIMES OF CLERGYMEN.

A CORRESPONDENT takes us to task for giving so much prominence to the shortcomings of the clergy, which he characterises as a waste of valuable space and of no earthly importance to the furtherance of the principles of Freethought. It is quite true that we have not hesitated to place before our readers the delinquencies of this class of people; and for all we can see to the contrary it is in the line of our work to continue to do so.

It is not that we are disposed to rejoice over the evil conduct of our fellow-men, or that we have any taste for the recital of their dishonorable doings, that we open our columns to such news. This class of men occupy an entirely erroneous position in the eyes of the community. They are held in places of esteem and trust, irrespective of their individual merits, and solely on account of their profession; and it is because of this fact that we deem it our duty to expose their crimes whenever and wherever they are committed, so that the public may the more quickly realise the lack of moral force which there is in religion, and the danger lurking in the mawkish sentiments which surround the sacerdotal class with a false halo of purity and honor.

When the public learns that it is not the profession of faith which makes the man; when it truly realises that he with the high choker and the ministerial air may be, nevertheless, a villain, and is the more to be watched on that account; when Christian wives have the courage of one bright young lady dwelling not a hundred miles from this city, who told one of these pious hypocrites on the occasion of his second or third visit that, if he intended to call again, she would prefer to have him come in the evening when her husband would be at home, then may we be amenable to our correspondent's criticism; but then there will be little to criticise, as we shall have little to report.

The Investigator believes that there is nothing higher than a pure moral character, and that nothing is more conducive to this ideal attainment than honest, legitimate, and self-respecting employment. This clergymen lack, as their profession is one of ease, affording opportunities and temptations for wrong-doing, to which the man engaged in daily labor is not subjected. The calling is one of an immoral tendency, and should be painted in its true colors, so that honest men and women may know the wolf even when he is disguised in sheep's clothing. For these reasons we shall continue to expose the crimes of the clergy as one of the highest duties which we owe to society.

—Boston Investigator.

Utilising the Bible.

The saloon-keepers are supplying themselves with mottoes to hang in their bar-rooms, with choice quotations from the Holy Bible, to stimulate the tippling habit. Here are specimens:—

"Give . . . . wine unto those that be of heavy heart; let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more" (Proverbs xxxi. 6, 7).

"Thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after . . . . for wine or for strong drink" (Deut. xiv. 26).

"Drink thy wine with a merry heart, for God now accepteth thy work" (Ecclesiastes xi. 7).

"Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities" (1 Timothy v. 23).

What other book can equal the Bible in contributions to encourage the drinking element?

It was just at the portal of a church as the congregation were coming out. Two nice-looking young men were leaving, breathing grand sentiments of piety and sound theology regarding the sermon they had just listened to. One of them slipped on a piece of ice, and his arms and legs flew around in eight or ten different directions at once. As soon as he recovered his equilibrium, he ripped out: "J. C. (not John Collins), a little more and I'd have gone to h— sure." Then a deep and dark-blue silence fell on all the place.

Digitized by Google

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam :—

June 16, Edinburgh ; 23, Manchester ; 24, Derby ; 25, Nottingham ; 30, Sheffield.

July 6, Chester-le-Street Branch (lecture held at West Pelton Co-operative Hall at 6.30) ; 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne ; 14, Bristol ; 16 and 17, Plymouth ; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth ; 18, Leicester ; 25, Liverpool.

Special Note.—Through an error Mr. Putnam has July 28 at liberty. Any Branch requiring that date should write to Mr. Watts at once.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

BALLAD OF THE BOLTED BONES.

Miss Sarah Adeliza Jones,
A ritualistic maid devout,
Possessed a box of holy bones
She couldn't get along without.

Full many a finger that, for alms,
Cash down, had erst absolved and blessed ;
Full many a toe whose saintly charms
Devotion's pious lips had pressed.

Ascetic was the maiden's bent,
And in her self-devotion vast,
Vicariously keeping Lent,
She set her poodle dog to fast,

And bade him live on cold, raw hope,
The inner dog to mortify.
Ah ! maid devout, 'twas rash to ope
The relic-chest when he was by !

In vain the blow—the warning tones—
For ere she bolted down the lid
The dog had bolted down the bones,
And bolted down the street and hid.

Current Christian Creeds.

From the fable of Eden to the imagination of the last trumpet, the whole story of the Divine order of the world is dislocated and deformed. The blight of birth-sin, with its involuntary perdition ; the scheme of expiatory redemption, with its vicarious salvation ; the incarnation, with its low postulates of the relations between God and man, and its unworkable doctrine of two natures in one person ; the official transmission of grace through material elements in the keeping of a consecrated corporation ; the second coming of Christ to summon the dead, and part the sheep from the goats at the general judgment, are all the growth of a mythical literature, or Messianic dreams, or Pharisaic theology, or sacramental superstition, or popular apotheosis. And so nearly do these vain imaginations pre-occupy the creeds that not a moral or spiritual element finds entrance there except "the forgiveness of sins." To consecrate and diffuse, under the name of Christianity, a theory of the world's economy thus made up of illusions from obsolete stages of civilisation, immense resources, material and moral, are expended, with effect no less deplorable in the province of religion than would be, in that of science, hierarchies and missions for propagating the Ptolemaic astronomy, and inculcating the rules of necromancy and exorcism.—Rev. James Martineau, "The Seat of Authority in Religion," p. 650.

At a recent Salvation Army meeting it was announced that a "tea-meeting" would be held on the following week. A printed circular gave the day and hour of the meeting, and concluded : "Salvation is free, but not the tea."

The minister having finished his talk about the song of creation, and intending to make a climax, turned towards an open window, and, with an appropriate gesture, exclaimed : "Let us pause a moment, and listen to the song of praise that nature is sending up, at this moment, to the throne of the Creator." Everybody listened ; but just then an old ass outside of the church rent the air with its "!!!!!!"!

I HAVE SEEN DEATH !

In my strength I denied God ; his wisdom, his goodness, I scorned.

In my weakness still I denied him ; nor learned I any new thing.

Vaunted believers : "Death's coming will bring thee discernment."

I have seen death, but not the wisdom of God.

Vaunted believers : "Death's coming will bring thee discernment."

I have seen death, but not the goodness of God.

Vaunted believers : "Death's coming will bring thee discernment."

I have seen death, but still I know not God.

Yea, I have seen the blackness of Sheol and feared not.

I have felt the chill of death and was unafraid.

I have lain in the stillness of night with death and darkness.

Alone have I lain near death, with peace at my heart.

I looked into dread Sheol, and Sheol is Nothingness.

To the grave went I and listened, and all was still.

Deep darkness is there, and silence unbreakable.

The quiet of night, immutable, possesses the grave.

Harry H.

Dressing a Saint.

Pearson's Weekly (May 11) has an account of a visit to a Saint Manufactory in Paris, which is known as Paradis, for they turn out thousands of saints for all parts of the world in plaster, stucco, pasteboard, wood, and metal. The head of the establishment said : "Do you see that great shapeless mass of wood ? We are going to make a Saint Rose of Lima out of it. In the face, tinted in a manner which you would look upon as glaring, but which is demanded by the natives of the country, we will insert two enamelled eyes. We will place a wig upon her head, and then dress her in all kinds of rich materials. The red velvet mantle, studded with gold embroidery, which will cover her shoulders, will cost £90. The robe caught in at the waist by a paste girdle will come up to £36, and add to that £15 to £20 extra for the linen under-garments."

"What ! under-garments ?'

"Why, certainly. This Virgin has underclothing exactly the same as a flesh-and-blood woman. She has a whole trousseau of chemises and chemisettes, and a wardrobe of white skirts, which will be used in profusion on feast days to give amplitude to her dress. Her stockings are of pink silk, and she has some black silk ones also. Her feet will be encased in satin shoes."

PROFANE JOKES.

"I don't like Willie," said one youngster of another. "Why not ?' he was asked. "'Cause every night he goes and blabs everything to God."

Dr. Litany, on the way home from Easter service, remarked : "Ah, Miss Van der Mode, Easter-tide is truly a joyous occasion." "Yes, one does feel so happy in new clothes."

An old chief gave his experience of Indian agents this way : "S'pose agent heap bad man, heap swear, steal half Injun blanket, Injun flour ; s'pose agent lovum Jesus, steal all."

A Tennessee Methodist class leader had before him a six months' probationer, whom he was questioning for admission to all the privileges of the Church.

"Well, Sambo," said the class leader, "I hope you are prepared to live a Christian life in accordance with your profession. Have you stolen any chickens during the last six months ?'

"No, sah ! I done stole no chickens."

"Have you stolen any turkeys or pigs ?'

Sambo looked grieved. "No, sah !"

"I am very glad to hear this good report," continued the class leader, "and I trust you will continue to live an honest, Christian life."

After church Sambo hurried home with his wife, who had overheard the catechising. When they were fairly out of everybody's hearing, he drew a long breath of relief and turned a self-approving glance to his better half. "Golly," he said, in a half-cautious whisper, "ef he'd er said ducks I'd be'n a lost niggah, suah."

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30, G. W. Foote, "Mrs. Besant's New Views of Christianity."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 8.30, social gathering for N.S.S. members and friends. Tuesday, at 9, dance.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, St. John, "Are Acquired Characters Inherited?"

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "Edmund Burke and Law."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, Miss Vallance, "Future Rewards and Punishments."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, F. Haslam, "The Fall of Man."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, St. John, "Christianity and Progress."

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, R. Forder, "Religion and Progress."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, A. G. Hertzfeld, "The Real and the Ideal Jesus." Thursday, at 8, C. James will lecture.

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, Stanley Jones, "Social Aspects of Christianity."

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, C. Durrant, "The Resurrection"; 3.15, "Heaven and Hell."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, Lucretius Keen, "Can we Follow Jesus?" Thursday, at 8.30, Stanley Jones will lecture.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, Lucretius Keen, "Can we Follow Jesus?" 3.30, "Prophecy." Wednesday, at 8, F. Haslam will lecture.

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, A. Guest, "Bible Comedy and Tragedy."

KILBURN (High-road): 7, J. Fagan, "The Apostles' Creed."

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, W. Heaford, "Why we do Not Believe in Christianity."

LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Gospel Fairy Tales."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, A. B. Moss, "Antidotes to Superstition."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Fairy Tales from the Bible."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, W. Heaford, "Holy Faldes."

TOTTENHAM (corner of Angel-road): 7, Stanley Jones, "Social Aspects of Christianity."

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, S. R. Thompson will lecture; 3.15, Stanley Jones will lecture. (Collections in aid of Hospital Sunday Fund.)

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "Christianity and Civilisation"; 7, W. J. Ramsey, "God so Loved the World." Thursday, at 8, Robert Forder, "The Gospels: By Whom and When Written?"

COUNTRY.

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Tontine Society; 7, C. Doeg, "Christianity and Paganism Compared." Adjourned annual meeting after lecture.

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, E. Marx Aveling, "The Materialistic Conception of History"; 3, "Child Labor"; 6.30, "Religion and Morality."

NOTTINGHAM (Woodland Hall, Upper Parliament-street): 7, Business meeting.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 3, Ernest Evans, "Immortality from a Biological Point of View"; 7, "The High Infantile Death-rate, and How to Prevent it." Tea at 5.

SOUTH SHIELDS BRANCH: 1.15, brakes leave North Shields for picnic at Holywell Dene.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

CHESTER-LE-STREET (Grave, Old Pelton): 7, a lecture.

BARNSLEY (May Day Green): 11, W. Dyson, "Religion and Morality"; 7, "A Trinity of Infidels."

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, J. Kenst, "Is Christianity True?"

DERBY (Market-place): 11, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

MIDDLESBRO' (Market-Place): Thursday, at 7, C. Cohen, "The Existence of God." Friday, "Christianity and Morality."

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside): 11, C. Cohen will lecture.

STOCKTON (Market Cross): Monday, at 7, C. Cohen, "Christianity: Can it Last?" Tuesday, "Christ as a Teacher." Wednesday, "The Meaning of Secularism."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—June 16, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 17 to 21, Stockton-on-Tees; 23, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 27, Wood Green; 30, m. Victoria Park, a. Regent's Park, e. West Ham.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—June 16, m. Wood Green, e. Edmonton; 20, Hammersmith; 23, m. Victoria Park; 26, Hyde Park; 30, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—June 16, m. Mile End; 23, m. Wood Green, e. Tottenham; 30, m. Clerkenwell, a. Finsbury Park.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—June 23, Chatham. July 17, m. Kingsland.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Just issued, 16 pp., price 1d., by post 1½d.,

Shall Thought be Fettered in England?

SHOWING THE DISABILITIES UNDER WHICH FREETHINKERS AND SECULARISTS SUFFER.

BY E. G. TAYLOR.

Abridged, by permission, from an article in the "Westminster Review," February, 1895.

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great New Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

A Demonstration of the Biblical Doctrine of Devils, suitable for circulation among Christians.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 3d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—C. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.

"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.

"The book has a purpose, and is entitled to a fair hearing."—Huddersfield Examiner.

"The work should be scattered like autumn leaves."—Ironclad Age (U.S.A.).

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

FRIENDS,—

My message to you this week is brief, but full of truth and very important. I have just secured over 10,000 yards of Trouserings in First-class Worsteds and Woollens. It has been a rather big speculation, but the goods were extremely cheap, less than two-thirds their ordinary value.

I have now some grand bargains to offer you. Don't delay, but send in your orders at once. I know the goods will please you, and you cannot spend your money on clothing to greater advantage.

PRICES.

Trousers to Measure 9s. per pair.
Three Pairs Trousers to Measure for 25s. 6d.
Six Pairs Trousers to measure for 48s.
One Trousers' Length for 5s. 6d.
Three Trousers' Lengths for 15s.
Six Trousers' Lengths for 27s.

TROUSERS.

INCHES
A, Round Waist over Trousers .....
B, Round Seat.....
E to D, Inside Leg Seam .....
F to G, Full Length of Trousers.....
H, Round Thigh .....
I, Round Knee.....
J, Round Bottom .....
Please say Lined or Unlined.....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Side or Cross Pockets.....

Solicit orders from your friends; you will not only be doing them a good turn, but you can make profit for yourself. Send on your cash, and I promise you a most wonderful bargain.

Yours very truly,
J. W. GOTT.

2 and 4 Union-street, Bradford.

3d. ☞ NOW READY ☜ 64 pp.

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

COALS! COALS! COALS! at 14s. PER TON.

MESSRS. FRANCIS WOOD & CO. supply a thoroughly good Kitchen Coal as above. Parlor Coal at 16s. 6d. per Ton.
Mr. R. Forder says: "They are remarkably cheap and good."
Orders to 142 York-road, King's Cross. Depôts all over London.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

THE JERUSALEM STAR. A Novelty in Journalism.
Reports of Biblical Events Up to Date. No. 1 Now Ready. Original Report of Noah's Flood; "Milk and Honey" by Le-vitty-cus; Etc.
One Halfpenny. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 25. SUNDAY, JUNE 23, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

MRS. BESANT'S NEW GOD.

NINE months ago, in the pages of the Nineteenth Century, Mr. Gladstone wrote an article on the Atonement, with special reference to views expressed in Mrs. Besant's Autobiography. Mrs. Besant was abroad at the time, and she says that reply was impossible. But now that she has returned to England, and settled (as she thinks) the Judge difficulty, she answers the Grand Old Man in the pages of the same magazine.

Mr. Gladstone is no fool; on the contrary, he is a shrewd dialectician, with a keen eye for an opponent's weak points. Accordingly he touched Mrs. Besant on a very sore spot. He pointed out that, although her changes had been frequent, and even startling, she was always cocksure that she was right. Recognition that she had been misled brought with it no modesty or diffidence. Every time she changed she had the utmost confidence in her new opinions being the panacea for the ills of humanity. Mrs. Besant "dismisses" what she is pleased to call Mr. Gladstone's badinage; remarking, by the way, that he has himself been subject to "vast and numerous changes" in his political career. This is true enough, in one sense; but Mr. Gladstone's changes bear little relation to those of Mrs. Besant. His changes have been practical, while hers have been speculative. And his changes have all been in one direction, from Toryism to Radicalism; while her changes have been in several, and sometimes in opposite, directions.

Mrs. Besant does not even discuss the Christian doctrine of Atonement, though she plainly rejects it as connected with "a merely historical event"—that is, with the Passion of Jesus Christ. Instead of defending herself—or rather her old criticism of the orthodox doctrine of Atonement—she prefers to submit to the thoughtful public a new conception that "may to some prove suggestive and helpful." Well, we have read what she has to say, but we have not found it helpful, though we have found it suggestive. It suggests to us that Mrs. Besant is bent on playing Theosophy for all it is worth, and that in doing so she is leaning more and more towards "advanced" Christianity. There are prophets who declare that Mrs. Besant's intellectual career will be a parabola, and that she will ultimately return to the point where she first started. Others even predict that she will become a Catholic. But they forget that the Catholic Church offers women only suffering and silence.

In presenting her conception of atonement to the "thoughtful public," Mrs. Besant starts out hand in hand with Mr. Gladstone. They agree for once, and when they do agree their unanimity is wonderful. This is what the lady writes:—

> "I need not here argue the question of the Divine Existence, whence is our world; for Mr. Gladstone as Christian, and I as Theosophist, can agree that our world and our universe result from the Will and Thought of the Logos, who was and is 'God.'"

Mrs. Besant, then, has a God. When she first put the case for Theosophy before Freethinkers, whom she now leaves to their abject destiny, she kept "God" very much in the background; in fact, she said she had no personal deity whatever. We smiled at the time, not because we thought Mrs. Besant was deceiving, but because we were struck by her surprising innocence. We felt sure that the personal deity would soon make his appearance; and here at length he is, with his attributes as well as his name dignified with capital letters. And having accepted the "God" of Theism, there is no reason why Mrs. Besant should not go to the utmost lengths of orthodox Christianity. Why strain at gnats after swallowing a camel? Nothing is hard to believe when you once have faith enough to accept the doctrine that the universe we know, with all the life of this world as it stands in the light of evolution, was planned by a wise and good Creator. If we believed that God slays people wholesale by earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, famine, and disease, we should certainly find it easy enough to believe that he ordered the massacre of the Canaanites. Yes, Bishop Butler was right. If you believe in a God of Nature, you are illogically scrupulous in rejecting the God of the Bible.

Having put her "God" in evidence, Mrs. Besant goes on to explain how he began business, at least with respect to the "universe," which she seems to confine within the bounds of human knowledge.

> "If the world be the work of the Logos, and the law of the world's progress in the whole and the parts is sacrifice, then the Law of Sacrifice must point to something in the very nature of the Logos; it must have its root in the Divine Nature itself. A little further thought shows us that if there is to be a world, a universe at all, this can only be by the One Existence conditioning Itself, and thus making manifestation possible, and that the very Logos is the Self-limited God; limited to become manifest, manifested to bring a universe into being; such self-limitation and manifestation can only be a supreme act of sacrifice, and what wonder that on every hand the world should show its birth-mark, and that the Law of Sacrifice should be the law of being, the law of the derived lives. Further, it is an act of sacrifice in order that individuals may come into existence to share the Divine bliss."

Mrs. Besant no doubt thinks she understands this metaphysical jargon. When she was an Atheist she laughed it to scorn, and pointed out that such phrases were unthinkable, and therefore unmeaning. Now she gravely asserts what she formerly derided. But she does not explain her assertions. She does not tell us what is the One Existence—whether it is the one of which (say) a pig or an idiot is a mode. She does not tell us how the Unconditioned could ever become Conditioned, or what it was conditioned by, or how an infinite being could possibly limit himself, or why he sacrificed himself for what he could achieve without any sacrifice. Could it be a sacrifice at all to create beings to share his bliss? Is not that the very height of enjoyment? Do parents sacrifice themselves when they bring children into the world? Do they not enrich their own lives by opening up fresh sources of happiness? It appears to us that Mrs. Besant's "God" is a thoroughly irrational conception. But all theology is at bottom irrational, Mrs. Besant's is no exception; it simply conforms to the universal rule.

G. W. FOOTE.

(To be concluded.)

Digitized by Google

OUR SUN-GOD.*

THE connection of Christianity with ancient sun-worship was elucidated exactly a century ago by Charles François Dupuis in his great work, entitled Origine de tous les Cultes (Origin of all Religion). This monument of the erudition of unbelief, as the work of Dupuis has been termed, is certainly out of date, so far as finding a universal explanation of religion in solar worship is concerned. Man is, after all, ever nearest to man. In his own needs, hopes, and fears, in his dreams and in his immediate surroundings, may be found the explanation of his faiths. As a time-measurer, the moon was for a long period yet more important than the sun, and Bastholm mentions tribes who worship the moon without worshipping the sun, though there are few, if any, who worship the sun without worshipping the moon. Yet must the sun in all parts of the world have attracted the curiosity and excited the admiration of early man. With its departure came cold and darkness, and the danger which attended darkness; with its return light, warmth, activity, and joy. He observed how nature blossomed with the strength of the sun and withered at its decline. His conclusion, that the Lord of the sky controlled the destinies of earth, was a natural one. The very essence of the old Egyptian faith was the assimilation of the worshipper to Osiris, and the belief that, as the sun rose and set and rose again, so man might live on through the darkness of the grave.

Max Müller remarks: "If ethnological researches prove anything, they prove that Heliolatry, not of course in the sense of a worship paid to a ball of fire, but as a recognition of the supernatural character of the sun as the source of light, warmth, and life, is the most widely-spread form of early faith, meeting us at the Equator as well as near the Pole, among the Indians of the West as well as among the Indians of the East, and therefore not so entirely strange, as classical scholars imagine, when it greets us again and again from behind the thin veil of Greek and Roman mythology." When it is understood that Daphne is a name of the dawn, as Phœbus of the morning sun, the story of the maiden flying from the embraces of the god becomes intelligible.

Can such traces be found in Christianity? Most assuredly they can. The Gospel miracles are all solar in character. The supernatural birth, in midwinter, heralded by a star, the adoration of shepherds and sages, the wonder-working of the god, his cruel death and glorious resurrection, are all features attributed to the sun and vegetation gods of antiquity. The late Mr. R. A. Proctor, in a paper on "The Beginning of Christianity," in Knowledge (January, 1887), remarked: "Because the sun brings light it has been taught that the sun-god causes the blind to see; because the sun restores winter's dead to life, the sun-god raises the dead; because the sun restores sickly and diseased vegetation to health, the sun-god heals the sick; because the sun turns the waters which fall on the earth into the rich juice of the vine, the sun-god turns water into wine; because the sun causes the seeds which fall on the earth to bear fruit, thirty, sixty, and even a hundred-fold, therefore the sun-god feeds the world richly out of little; because the sun kills feeble vegetation, the sun-god blasts the barren tree; because the sun rises above the sea-horizon, the sun-god walks upon the water; and because the sun reappears after the darkness of storm, the sun-god stills the tempest."

The principal festivals of the Christian Church are astronomical and regulated by the sun and moon. In the very name Sunday we preserve the central object of worship. Easter celebrates the crossing over the vernal equinox and the resurrection of nature from the power of winter and of death, the bursting of the leaf from the apparently lifeless branch. Whitsuntide represents the fuller outpouring of the divine spirit in bud and blossom; Christmas the reawaking of the new light, the dawn of the longer day. In the old pictures of Christ with a halo of glory, surrounded by his twelve apostles, and distributing the sun-fruits bread and wine, we are forcibly reminded of Apollo surrounded by the signs of the zodiac; and in the orientation of churches we may see another survival of the solar cult.

I have before now pointed to the important passage in a letter of the emperor Hadrian, not so often quoted as the questionable testimony of Tacitus, and with much more appearance of being genuine, in which the great emperor, having visited Egypt, expressly states that the Christians were worshippers of Serapis, a development of the sun-god, and that their chief priests were known as bishops of Christ. The worship of Mithras, another sun-god, was at the same time widely spread, and probably contributed many items towards the amalgam of Paganism and Judaism found in Christianity.

Mr. Parsons, in the little book before me, dwells on these items. He points to the evidence of the early Fathers, who declared that Christianity was no new thing, but, as St. Augustine said, existed in ancient times. St. Jerome says (in Amos vi. 14): "In our mysteries we first renounce him that is in the West, who dies to us with our sins; and, turning about to the East, we make a covenant with the Sun of Righteousness and promise to be his servants." Mr. Parsons devotes several chapters to showing that the ancient Jewish deity, Malachi's "Sun of Righteousness," was also of solar character. He alludes to his descent in fire, the symbology of the bull, and the serpent of brass, as confirmatory of his theory. His book, while perhaps making somewhat too much of this, contains much matter of interest to students of that great eye-opener, comparative mythology. J. M. WHEELER.

* Our Sun-god; or, Christianity before Christ; by John Denhan Parsons. Published by the Author, 7 Crawshay-road, London, S.W.

DID CHRIST WORK MIRACLES?

(Concluded from page 375.)

IN endeavoring to ascertain if the miracles ascribed to Christ are consistent with his alleged "divine" character, it must be remembered that acts performed by or through the dictation of an all-wise and good God should be in harmony with utility, justice, and wisdom. Furthermore, it must be borne in mind that, whatever miraculous works Christ performed, the power to perform them was, according to St. John, given to him by his father. "I can of my own self do nothing. . . . . I seek not mine own will, but the will of the father who sent me. . . . . For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will" (John v. 30; vi. 38). Thus, if it can be shown that certain miracles which are credited to Christ are not in accordance with wisdom, utility, or justice, the performance of them was no evidence of supernatural power. Let us see what are the facts of the case according to the "inspired" records.

It is stated in Mark (v. 2–13) that one man had "an unclean spirit," which meant that he was possessed with a host of devils; but Matthew, in relating the same circumstance, states there were two persons in this unfortunate position (viii. 28). Both statements are made upon the authority of "God's word," so it will be difficult to say which is right. Jesus, we are told, drove the devils from their human habitation; their departure, we should think, was sufficient to "play up" with the strongest constitution. Of course there could be no objection to relieving the man, or men, of the Satanic imps. But what followed? Instead of destroying the tormentors when they were outside the man or men, Jesus allowed the devils to enter "about two thousand" swine, all of which "ran violently down a steep place into the sea and were choked." This was a great injustice to the owner of the pigs, and a reckless waste of food. This miracle reflects no credit upon Jesus. We fully endorse Professor Huxley's words when he said, referring to this incident: "Everything that I know of law and justice convinces me that the wanton destruction of other people's property is a misdemeanor of evil example" (Nineteenth Century, February, 1889).

The case of Jesus cursing the fig-tree is an instance of wild passion and injustice. Matthew says Christ went to lodge in Bethany, and in the morning, returning into the city, he hungered; when, seeing a fig-tree afar off, he went to it, "if haply he might find anything thereon"; but when he came to it he found nothing but leaves, for the time of figs, observes Mark, was not yet. If Christ had been a wise man, not to mention his being God, he ought to have known the state of the tree before starting to ascertain. Then Jesus said unto the tree, "Let no fruit grow on thee henceforth for ever," and presently the fig-tree withered away. Is this an indication of divinity? If so, cultivated humanity is vastly superior. St. Augustine suggests, in one of his sermons, that it would have been better had Jesus, instead of cursing the fig-tree, caused it immediately to bring forth the desired fruit by the word of his mouth. Certainly it would have given a hungry man more satisfaction than the sight of a barren tree, besides exhibiting a greater display of "divine" power.

Digitized by Google

The miracle of turning water into wine, as related in John (c. ii.), was, to say the least, indiscreet and useless. Where is the moral lesson to be derived from this miracle? Has it tended to promote sobriety? Has it not rather afforded a pretence to weak-minded persons for them to indulge in that which, when immoderately used, "steals away the brains"? When Christ beheld his friends and relatives drinking freely, it would have been of more practical value to posterity if, instead of providing them with more wine for their use, he had given them a lesson either in moderation or abstinence. Evidently Christ did not believe with the writer of Proverbs (xx. 1) that "wine is a mocker." If he did, he ought to have known that it was wrong to provide temptation for his disciples. There are many members of the "fallen race" now living who, in this particular, are superior to Jesus the "divine."

The account in Matthew (xiv. 15–21) of feeding "about five thousand men, besides women and children," with "five loaves and two fishes," presents some curious features. If the event really occurred, one of two things must have happened: either the stomachs of the people were contracted (for we are told they "were filled"), or the provisions were more than stated. To have satisfied so many individuals, and then to have "twelve baskets full" left, the weight of the loaves and the size of the fish must have been extraordinary indeed. There is also to be considered the difficulty of dividing five loaves and two fishes into sufficient parts, to enable each one to have even a taste, to say nothing about all of them being "filled," and there being "baskets full" of fragments remaining after the repast. What a capital thing it would be if a similar event could take place to-day; and what a useful lesson it would have been if Christ had told the world how the thing was done. If professed Christians really believe what their master said, why do they not try to emulate him in such good works? He has told them (John xiv. 12–14): "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the father may be glorified in the son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." The fact is, no true believers can be found in this sceptical age, or else they are too indolent to ask "anything" in Christ's name. If this is not so, let them appeal to Jesus for power to do "greater works" than he did, and in time we shall learn the result. May it not be truthfully said to the vast majority of churchgoers to-day, "O, ye of little faith"?

The greatest miracle mentioned in the New Testament is the alleged resurrection of Christ; but, as we have fully dealt in a pamphlet with this subject, only a brief reference to it here is necessary. To substantiate such an improbable event as the alleged resurrection of Jesus, the evidence adduced to support it should be exceedingly clear, and above suspicion of fraud or imposture. This is not the case in reference to the allegation that Christ rose from the dead. While it is frequently affirmed in the Gospels that Jesus was seen after he was crucified, no one directly states that he himself beheld Christ in the flesh. Moreover, even those persons to whom it is supposed Christ appeared failed on those occasions to recognise him. Matthew (xxviii. 17) states that when he appeared to the eleven in Galilee some of them "doubted"; Luke says (xxiv. 16) that the two disciples with whom it is related Christ had a conversation did not know their Master; and, according to John (xx. 15), Mary Magdalene herself failed to recognise him. Where did Christ meet his disciples? According to Matthew (xxviii. 16, 17), by appointment at a mountain in Galilee; whereas Luke asserts (xxiv. 36) that it was at Jerusalem, where the eleven were gathered together, and whence, after he had partaken of fish and honeycomb, Christ was carried up into heaven. It is true against this supposition we read that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Corinthians xv. 50). Besides these slight difficulties, we are at a loss to know who the "eleven gathered at Jerusalem" were. Thomas, says St. John, was not present. Judas had hung himself, and Matthias was not chosen till after the Ascension.

The testimony of St. Paul is anything but satisfactory. His belief in the Resurrection was based upon faith and tradition, not upon knowledge and investigation (Galatians i. 11, 12; 1 Corinthians xv. 3). Moreover, his belief in the then speedy end of the world has proved to be wrong, which shows that he was by no means to be explicitly relied upon in his statements; while his reasoning in favor of the doctrine, as contained in 1 Corinthians xv., is fallacious in the extreme, opposed as it is to experience and the facts of science. St. Paul says: "Last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time." But this seeing of Jesus occurred in a vision; and what is a vision? The word is used in the New Testament to convey the impression of something otherwise imperceptible to human eyesight being rendered visible by the exercise of supernatural power or influence. It is differentiated from a dream, in so far as the latter is only a mental concept, or series of conceptions, engendered in a state of semi-somnolency—or, to put it plainly, in a state "between sleeping and waking."

These visions are not objective realities, but the result of impaired imagination. Recent experiments by psychologists show that persons in a certain mental condition frequently think they see and hear things which have no actual existence. The habit among scientists is, when they come in contact with any extraordinary event, to investigate the matter with a view of discovering its why and wherefore. It is far more reasonable to seek for a natural cause of phenomena than to attribute them to supernatural sources. The one is within human experience and observation, while the other, if it exist, is outside both. Those who have studied the human mind will probably have been struck with the fact that some of the greatest intellects in all ages have been influenced by the prevailing opinions of their time. This will somewhat explain why eminent writers have so rarely attacked the superstition of their own nation. Accordingly, few popular writers in this country deal with Christianity as they do with other religions. Simply because the prevailing opinion here is that the Christian faith is more sacred than any other, and to treat it lightly, or to criticise it too severely, would be offensive to Mrs. Grundy. Attacks upon the religion of other nations are applauded; but the home article must be let alone, or handled very tenderly.

Miracles are still believed in, and professed to be worked, by the Catholic Church; but Protestants denounce them as frauds, although there is quite as much evidence of their reality as there is of those ascribed to Christ. Dr. Middleton, in his Free Inquiry, speaking of miraculous events, writes thus: "If either part be infirm, their credit must sink in proportion; and if the facts be especially incredible, they must of course fall to the ground, because no force of testimony can alter the nature of things." If we apply this rule to the miracles of the New Testament, the unbiased reader will readily see that all the noise made about their truth is "sound and fury, signifying nothing." Certainly the following is most incredible: that a man was born without a human father; that Lazarus should come from the grave "bound hand and foot with grave clothes," after he was dead and decomposition had set in; that saints, who had been dead and confined in their graves, should rise and go into the city; that Christ did not work miracles in consequence of the unbelief of the people; that if the miracles really took place, his disciples would have lacked faith in his power; and that Jesus should be performing a miracle at Cana of Galilee while he was in the wilderness of Judea. These stories cannot be believed except at the sacrifice of reason and common sense, and, therefore, we reject them.

CHARLES WATTS.

If God could exist without a cause, then the universe could also. If you can imagine a God who existed without the world from eternity, then you can much easier imagine a world that existed from eternity without God. If I once assume that the universe, this great organism of suns and stars, could have arisen from nothing, then verily there is also nothing to prevent me from crediting that it arose without the assistance of a God.—Karl Heinzen.

Digitized by Google

BIBLE FICTIONS.

IV.—The History of Joseph.

The Bible "history" of the mythical patriarch Joseph thus commences: "Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his other children, because he was the son of his old age; and he made him a coat of many colors" (Genesis xxxvii. 3). This statement reads like the commencement of a fairy tale, and is, in fact, of the same character. If Jacob loved Joseph better than his other sons, it was not because he was the son of his old age. According to Genesis xxix. 20, xxx. 26, and xxxi. 41, all Jacob's sons, with the exception of Benjamin, were born during his second term of seven years' service with Laban. Zebulon was born in the same year as Joseph; Asher and Issachar were only one year older, and Reuben the eldest was but six years his senior. Yet the inspired writer represents Joseph as little more than a lad, and the other ten sons of Jacob as men of mature years.

We are next told by this veracious historian that Joseph had two dreams, which foreshadowed his occupying, at some future time, such a high position that all the members of his family should "do obeisance" to him. On relating to his father and brothers the second of these dreams—one in which the sun, moon, and eleven stars bowed down before him—Jacob is represented as saying: "Shall I and thy mother, and thy brethren, indeed, come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?" (xxxvii. 10).

Now, it is evident from the words italicised that Jacob believed his wife Rachel (Joseph's mother) to be then living with him, and it is equally evident that the writer intended this to be understood; the moon in the dream symbolised Rachel. But, according to Genesis xxxv. 19, Jacob's favorite wife had long been dead. Thus we read: "And Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath . . . . and Jacob set up a pillar upon her grave," etc. The inspired writer, when fabricating the story of the dreams, had forgotten this circumstance. The matter is not of much importance, but it serves at least to indicate that we are dealing with fiction, not history. Of course, if the story of the dreams, and of Joseph being the favorite of his father "because he was the son of his old age," be fictitious, that of the jealousy and hatred of his brothers, which caused them to put him in a pit and afterwards to sell him, may be set down as of the same character; one is represented as the result of the other.

Jacob's sons, we are told, sold their brother to a company of Ishmaelites, who carried him down to Egypt (xxxvii. 25–28). These Midianites sold him to Potiphar, one of Pharaoh's officers (xxxvii. 36), and Potiphar bought him "of the hand of the Ishmaelites which had brought him down thither" (xxxix. 1). To this there is nothing to be said, except that the Ishmaelites were not Midianites. In the house of Potiphar Joseph was advanced to a position of trust. Though but a youth, and without the smallest experience in business matters, his new master "made him overseer in his house, and over all that he had." Here an event occurred which renders his name proverbial. Being "comely and well-favored," his master's wife conceived a violent passion for him, and made certain overtures which, as a virtuous youth, he rejected with abhorrence. In revenge, the lady falsely accused him to her husband, and Joseph was cast into prison. Here, however, "the Lord was with him," and gave him power to foresee future events. Having correctly interpreted the dreams of a butler and a baker, he was subsequently released to interpret a dream of Pharaoh's, which having satisfactorily accomplished, he was made ruler "over all the land of Egypt." In this exalted position his brothers, several years later, came and bowed themselves down before him, as prefigured in his dreams.

So runs the story; but the presence of one word in it suffices to prove it a fabrication. After the rejection of her proposals to Joseph, Potiphar's wife calls the men of her house and tells them that her husband "hath brought in an Hebrew unto us to mock us; he came in unto me," etc. (xxxix. 14). Later, when accusing Joseph to his master, she says: "The Hebrew servant, which thou hast brought unto us, came in unto me to mock me," etc. (xxxix. 17). Again, Pharaoh's butler, when speaking of Joseph to the king, says: "And there was there a young man, an Hebrew, servant of the captain of the guard," etc. (xli. 12).

Now, these several statements imply that Joseph was of the Hebrew nation. The expression, "an Englishman" or "an English servant," presupposes the existence of an English nation, and could not be employed before such a nation had arisen. So the term, "a Hebrew," or "a Hebrew servant," clearly implies that the Israelites were at that time a separate people. The name is employed, too, as if the nation to which Joseph belonged was well known to every Egyptian. Potiphar's wife had heard of this nation; her servants had also heard of it; Potiphar had a knowledge of it; the butler knew of its existence; so did Pharaoh. Yet, it is scarcely necessary to say, there was no nation called "Hebrews" at that time. Jacob and his sons, who were unknown to the Egyptians, were the only persons in existence who might, perhaps, be designated "Hebrews"; but they had never called themselves by that name.

We have, however, a further proof of fabrication. The inspired writer represents Joseph as saying to Pharaoh's butler: "For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews," etc. (xl. 15). From this statement we can form a just estimate of the Bible word, "indeed." There was no "land of the Hebrews" in Joseph's time; there was no land of the Hebrews even in the time of Moses, who is said to have been the writer of the story. We know, also, from the Egyptian monuments, that down to the time of Rameses III. Palestine was called "the land of the Amorites" and "the land of the Hittites." The latter name further appears in Assyrian inscriptions several hundred years later.

We read in Genesis xiv. 14 that Abraham, after defeating four kings, "pursued them unto Dan," and again in Deuteronomy xxxiv. 1 that God showed Moses "all the land of Gilead, unto Dan." There was, however, no place of that name until long after Moses' time (Judges xviii. 29). A reconciliation is in this case attempted by ascribing the employment of the word "Dan" to a later writer or copyist, who is said to have inserted the name by which the city was known in his own day. But an explanation of this nature, assuming it to be satisfactory in the incident relating to Dan, cannot be applied to the matter under consideration. In the latter we have to do, not with the writer's own words (as in speaking of a place as "Dan"), but with the utterances of the chief characters in the story. If these be false—as they undoubtedly are—it must be waste of time examining the veritable "history" of Joseph further. It must not be forgotten, too, that "Joseph," like his reputed father, "Jacob," was the name of a Canaanitish deity, worshipped in Palestine as early as 1600 B.C. The fact is in itself a proof that the Bible stories of these two patriarchs are fictitious.

There remains to be noticed an Egyptian work of fiction, called The Tale of the Two Brothers, composed by a scribe named Enna, about 1400 B.C. This story is thought by some to have suggested to the sacred writer the incident of Potiphar's wife. Upon this point, however, I have some doubts. According to this narrative, a man, named Anpu, working one day in the fields with his younger brother, Bata, sent the latter to his house to fetch some "seed-corn." "And the younger brother found the wife of his elder brother occupied in braiding her hair." Having loaded himself with corn, he was about to leave the house, when "she rose up and laid hold of him and said to him, Come, let us enjoy an hour's rest. . . . . And he spoke to her and said, O woman, thou hast been to me like a mother, and thy husband like a father, for he is older than I, so that he might have been my parent. Why hast thou spoken to me of so great a sin?" In the evening, upon her husband's return, the lady accused the younger brother, saying: "When he came to take seed-corn for thee, he found me sitting alone, and he said to me, Come, let us make merry an hour and rest. Let down thy hair. . . . . And he used force with me, that I might not make a report to thee. Now, if thou allowest him to live, I will kill myself." Believing this tale, Anpu caught up a knife and went in search of his younger brother; but the latter, having been warned of his danger by the cows (whose language he understood), escaped. Later the elder brother learned the truth, whereupon he cut his wife in pieces, and gave her remains to the dogs.

The younger brother, after this, lived in a hut under a cedar tree, and received from the gods a most beautiful wife. The latter, after a time, left him to live with the king, who married her. Bata then transformed himself into an Apis bull, and afterwards into a tree. Lastly, he was born as the son of his former wife, and when he grew up became king of Egypt. VERITAS.

Digitized by Google

A CHANGE OF HEART.

THERE are two ways of influencing people to change their opinions. One is by an appeal to their reason, and the other by an appeal to their emotions. Upon all questions except that of religion, everybody concedes that the first is not only the best, but the only sensible and proper way; and Liberals make no exception in the matter of religion.

With them, when any proposition is offered for their acceptance, the only question is, Is it true? and the only way of settling that question is by reasoning upon the evidence for and against the truth of the proposition. If the evidence is strong enough to convince their minds of its truth, they believe in it. If it falls short of convincing evidence, then they reject it.

Christians, on the other hand, while recognising the validity of the rule of the supremacy of reason upon all other questions, ignore it entirely when they come to the matter of religion, and, through the influence of early teaching, shut off their reasoning faculties, and, giving way to emotional feelings, profess a belief in propositions that their reason would condemn as foolish and absurd, if they would but allow it to have any weight in the matter. It is for this reason that the clergy strive so hard to influence the young before their reasoning faculties are developed, well knowing that, if they can once bring these immature minds within the influence of the Church, it will be next to impossible for them to break away from it.

For this reason creeds and confessions of faith are constituted, most of them containing much that has no foundation in common sense or scripture, but which must be accepted through the fundamental principle of all religious faith. That is, suppress your reason and believe all we tell you, no matter what the evidence is; no matter if all nature and science cry aloud to your brains that it is absurd and impossible, believe it all by faith—another name for credulity.

> Open your mouth and shut your eyes,
> And I'll give you something to make you wise, is the old couplet by which school children used to fool the simple ones; and revival methods are but the counterpart of the same trick to fool the simple ones who trust in the promise; but there the analogy ends; for while the little child—by the exercise of his reason—finds out that he has been tricked by the nauseous dose that has been put into his mouth, the convert is made to believe that he or she has received the Holy Ghost, or something equivalent, and through life, by faith, continues to cultivate the delusion.

Under mesmeric conditions, or hypnotism, the victim may be made to believe the worst tasting things to be delicacies, and smack his lips as if they were good. So, by the same influence, the revival preacher, by suggestions, makes the convert believe that he or she has experienced a change of heart, and thus secured his or her salvation from the never-ending torments of hell-fire.

But what is this change of heart? The heart is but a muscle, and in no way the seat of sensation or feeling. It may be changed by ossification or fatty degeneration, but such changes signify nothing but disease, and in no way influence the opinions or character of the person who owns them. The phrase, "change of heart," was invented by ignorant men, who knew nothing of physiology, or any other science; who thought the heart was the seat of the soul, the centre of feeling, and the controller of character; but we now know that that function belongs to the brain alone, and that the heart is the least sensitive of all the organs of the body, and has less to do with the formation of the character, or manifestation of feeling, than any other. But supposing, for the sake of argument, that a change of heart means all that Christians claim for it; what is the benefit of it? and how does it influence the character and conduct of the person who has experienced it? Do they not have the same impulses and tendencies that they had before? It is true that for a time, while under the influence of religious excitement, they may fancy that they are changed, and one mental excitement overlays and draws all others; but nature re-asserts itself, and the victim finds that he or she is just what nature made them.

Look at the ministers, who must be supposed to have all experienced the change of heart; are they not human, and subject to the temptations of "the world, the flesh, and the Devil"? Yes; and is it not proved by the records of our courts that there are more clergymen in our penitentiaries than there are of Infidels, ten to one?

Women, from their more sensitive nervous organisation, unhygienic dress and habits, and superficial education, are, in nine cases out of ten, the victims of this delusion of a change of heart, especially those of immature age, just emerging from girlhood into maturity, when they are most sensitive to nervous and emotional excitement. The revival preacher paints in vivid colors the flames of hell and the never-ending torments of those who do not experience a change of heart. All reasoning power is smothered in the deluge of emotional excitement, and the one dominant passion, for the time being, is fear, overwhelming fear. The condition of the victim is analagous to that of the delirium of fever, or the extravaganza of nightmare. It is like the hot period of fever, and, like that, is succeeded by a period of exhaustion, when the victim sinks into a semi-trance, and imagines that the work of God in her heart is complete, and that that insensible muscle has been changed. It is like the breaking of a wild horse. The will has given way under the tremendous strain of feeling, and she resigns herself to a power that she feels to be uncontrollable. Henceforth she is the docile instrument of the church and minister, and helps to decoy other immature victims into the same trap.

But in what respect has she been changed by this mythical change of heart? If she was kind and good before, she will still be kind and good. If she was irritable, malicious, and quarrelsome before, the same character will be observed after the so-called change. In one particular, however, she is changed, immeasurably for the worse. She now dares not think—that is, she dares not question the truth of the tenets of her Church, or venture into any investigation of them. To her faith has interdicted any exercise of reason upon those subjects, and denounced damnation for her if she attempts to find out whether they are true or not. There is one chamber in her mind that she is forbidden to enter—the noblest and best of all the gifts of nature, the one that constitutes man the highest of all organised beings—the faculty of reason.

Like the fatal closet in the castle of Bluebeard, any attempt to discover what the faculty of reason has to say about religion is the unpardonable sin. Bluebeard is the great "I am," the mythical God of all religion, and his murdered victims were the martyred Freethinkers who had curiosity enough to look for the truth, without regard to consequences. Freethought is the genius that shall come in due time to kill this old Bluebeard of the sky, and prevent the further sacrifice of seekers after truth.

The doctrine of a change of heart—like a great many other doctrines of the Church—derives no sanction from the Bible. Jesus never taught it, nor did any of his disciples or apostles. The only place where anything like it is mentioned in the holy book is found in the story of Nebuchadnezzar being turned out to grass. God there says (Daniel iv. 16): "Let his heart be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart be given to him, and let seven times pass over him."

This is all that "the blessed Book" has to say about a change of heart, and this is the only case of such a change in all history. Such a case affords but little support for the modern notion of a change of heart through revival methods; but it is a fact that the revival change seems often to change the disposition to that of a beast, as it did Nebuchadnezzar's. That is, it banishes the victim's reasoning power, and leaves him or her to the operation and direction of the purely animal part of his nature; and, when such a change takes place, the proper place for the victim would seem to be, to be turned out to grass among the beasts, as was the King of Babylon in the story; or, better still, to be sent to a lunatic asylum, where scientific treatment might restore the patient to the use of reason.

Now, what is the remedy for this disease—for disease it is—of faith? It is a disease that paralyses the intellect, and interdicts the use of the only faculty that enables us to judge of right and wrong, of truth and falsehood.

Digitized by Google

As I have before shown, there is no such thing as a change of heart. From the nature of the human race the change must mean nothing but a change of mind; and such a change implies the right to change it again whenever we find that our former opinion is not true.

The brain is the organ of the mind, and its action results in what we call intellect. To the intellect, then, we must appeal to settle the truth or falseness of any opinions we have formed, hastily, under the pressure of over-excited emotion. It is the duty of everyone to hold the mind open at all times to the reception of truth; and that we may be enabled to recognise the truth, we must welcome all evidence that is convincing, whether it comes from a "Thus saith the Lord" or the speculations of men. Do this, and you shall find that peace of mind that passeth all the fabled joys of a paradise among the clouds.

—Independent Pulpit. J. P. RICHARDSON.

UP FOR JUDGMENT.

BY A. SCALLYWAG.

ST. PETER stood guard at the golden gate,
With solemn mein and an air sedate,
When up to the top of the golden stair
A man and a woman, ascending there,
Applied for admission. They came and stood
Before St. Peter, so great and good,
In hope the City of Peace to win,
And asked St. Peter to let them in.
The woman was tall, and lank, and thin,
With a scraggly beardlet upon her chin.
The man was short, and thick, and stout;
His stomach was built so it rounded out.
His face was pleasant, and all the while
He wore a kindly and genial smile.
The choirs in the distance the echoes woke,
And the man kept still while the woman spoke.
"Oh, thou who guardest the gate," said she,
"We come hither, beseeching thee
To let us enter the Heavenly Land,
And play our harps with the Angel Band.
Of me, St. Peter, there is no doubt;
There's nothing from Heaven to bar me out.
I've been to the meeting three times a week,
And almost always I'd rise to speak.
I've told the sinners about the day
When they'd repent of their evil way;
I've told my neighbors—I've told them all—
'Bout Adam and Eve, and the Primal Fall.
I've shown 'em what they'd have to do
If they pass in with the chosen few.
I've marked their path of duty clear—
Laid out the plan of their whole career.
I've talked and talked to 'em loud and long,
For my lungs are good, and my voice is strong;
So, good St. Peter, you'll clearly see
The gate of Heaven is open for me.
But my old man, I regret to say,
Hasn't walked in exactly the narrow way;
He smokes and he swears, and grave faults he's got,
And I don't know whether he'll pass or not.
He would never pray with an earnest vim,
Or go to revival, or join in a hymn;
So I had to leave him in sorrow there,
While I, with the chosen, united in prayer.
He ate what the pantry chose to afford,
While I, in my purity, sang to the Lord.
And if cucumbers were all he got,
It's a chance whether he merited them or not.
But oh, St. Peter, I love him so;
To the pleasures of Heaven please let him go!
I've done enough—a saint I've been.
Won't that atone? Can't you let him in?
By my grim Gospel, I know 'tis so,
That the unrepentant must fry below.
But isn't there some way you can see
That he may enter who's dear to me?
It's a narrow Gospel by which I pray,
But the chosen expect to find some way
Of coaxing, or fooling, or bribing you
So that their relations can amble through.
And say, St. Peter, it seems to me
This gate isn't kept as it ought to be.
You ought to stand right by the opening there,
And never sit down in that easy chair.
And say, St. Peter, my sight is dimmed,
But I don't like the way your whiskers are trimmed:
They're cut too wide, and outward toss;
They'd look better narrow, cut straight across.
Well, we must be going, our crown to win;
So open, St. Peter, and we'll pass in."
St. Peter sat quiet, and stroked his staff,
But, in spite of his office, he had to laugh;
Then said, with a fiery gleam in his eye:
"Who's tending this gateway—you or I?"
And then he arose in his stature tall,
And pressed a button upon the wall,
And said to the imp who answered the bell,
"Escort this female around to Hell!"
The man stood still as a piece of stone—
Stood sadly, gloomily, there alone.
A long-life settled idea he had
That his wife was good and he was bad.
He thought if the woman went down below,
That he would certainly have to go;
That if she went to the regions dim,
There wasn't a ghost of a show for him.
Slowly he turned, by habit bent,
To follow wherever the woman went.
St. Peter, standing on duty there,
Observed that the top of his head was bare.
He called the gentleman back, and said:
"Friend, how long have you been wed?"
"Thirty years" (with a weary sigh);
And then he thoughtfully added, "Why?"
St. Peter was silent, with head bent down;
He raised his hand and scratched his crown;
Then, seeming a different thought to take,
Slowly, half to himself, he spake:
"Thirty years with that woman there!
No wonder the man hasn't any hair!
Swearing is wicked, smoke's not good;
He smoked and swore: I should think he would!
Thirty years! with that tongue so sharp!
Oh, Angel Gabriel, give him a harp!
A jewelled harp with a golden string.
Good sir, pass in where the angels sing.
Gabriel, give him a seat alone—
One with a cushion—up near the throne.
Call up some angels to play their best;
Let him enjoy the music—and rest!
See that on finest Ambrosia he feeds;
He's had about all the hell he needs:
It isn't just hardly the thing to do
To roast him on earth and the future too."
They gave him a harp with golden strings,
A glittering robe and a pair of wings;
And he said, as he entered the realm of day,
"Well, this beats cucumbers, any way."
And so the old Scripture text stands fast:
The last shall be first, and the first shall be last.

ACID DROPS.

THE House of Commons has had a discussion over Oliver Cromwell, and the vote for the expense of a statue of the Great Protector was only carried by a narrow majority. It was no special business of the Irish members, but they rose to the occasion, and called Cromwell a liar, a hypocrite, and a murderer. Many other compliments were passed on the mighty dead, and altogether it was a good thing for a lot of brave members of Parliament that Cromwell was not handy with a company of his Ironsides. The most curious thing in the whole discussion was that nobody appeared to understand that Cromwell was the first great statesman in English history who understood, and as far as possible practised, religious toleration. Cromwell has his imperishable monument already in the history of England.

Since the above paragraph was in type the House has had another debate on this Cromwell statue, and a large majority has refused to honor the greatest of English rulers. Such is the wisdom of our National Palaver! There is some consolation for us in knowing that it was reserved for a Freethinker, Mr. John Morley, to rise above the squabble of parties and do justice to Cromwell, although he was a Christian.

A venerable professor, in moving a resolution at the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland anent the "Armenian Atrocities," wound up by saying that "Britain required to speak out with all her voice, and, if necessary, with all her guns as well." That's the style! Let the Christians keep it up, and we shall have a nice big war in the east of Europe—all for the glory of the Prince of Peace.

Christians can challenge the world in talking nonsense, but when it comes to talking with guns they take the first prize easily.

Digitized by Google

Paul said, "I suffer not a woman to teach," and "Let the women keep silence in the churches;" but some hundred and fifty of them were ready to orate in the churches last week. The sacred ministry, thanks to Paul and the Christian Church, was the last resort of male exclusiveness, and now the New Woman is capturing that.

It is well that women are taking up the cause of Temperance, but there is a danger of their resorting to impossible remedies. We do not believe they will ever force men into sobriety. They might lead where they cannot drive. A woman's smile is ten times more commanding than her frown. When she resorts to compulsion she is playing a game in which she is sure to be worsted.

The women who are orating at the International Temperance meetings in London are all in favor of "prohibition." That is, they want to sail by the north-west passage, to take a short cut to the millennium. Well, there is no short cut. It may be sad, but it is nevertheless true; and the lessons of history are, after all, better guides than the unrestrained enthusiasm of lady reformers.

The Temperance ladies had a "special service" last Sunday morning at the City Temple. They were strong on "prohibition," which has nothing very "spiritual" about it. They also talked a lot about "Christ"—a gentleman who turned a large quantity of water into wine at a social party, and drank wine himself at the last meal he ever took before his unfortunate decease.

Miss Belle Kearney, a Mississippi lady, said there were "scores of Christian young women earnestly longing to do something"—which is very creditable to them; only it is a pity they haven't something to do already. She begged them to take part in this work, and wield the dagger of prohibition to slay the monster of drink. Alas! that monster is too tough to be slain in this easy fashion. In the course of time these Christian young women may learn that drunkenness is less a symptom of personal immorality than of social disease. Let the Temperance ladies work ten hours a day in a depressing atmosphere, let them live in one or two rooms in a back street or a filthy slum, let them rest at night where sleep but half refreshes, and they will soon understand the attraction of the public-house. Men will have some excitement, if it is only the excitement of drink; they will have some cheerfulness, if it is only in the gaslight of a bar or taproom.

Miss Kearney spoke of the Temperance agitation as "the most blessed work ever known." Perhaps she will tell us, as a Christian, why Jesus Christ neglected this "most blessed work." Why did he leave it for the "impostor" Mohammed to establish a teetotal religion?

Lady Somerset did not say much about "Christ," but she said a good deal about "God," who is understood to be a near relation. She declared that their efforts would be futile without "a new baptism of the spirit of God." Well, if that is what the Temperance movement is waiting for, its success is not likely to be immediate. Christians seldom take up a good cause until it has made considerable headway, and then they generally spoil it with sectarianism, cant, and sentimentality.

A model newspaper is to be published at Chicago. It will have no Sunday issue, and that of Monday will be set up on Saturday night. It will give no record of crimes. The trouble is that the model people, who call for such a model paper, will go on buying its wicked rivals in order to learn the news.

Public Opinion, of New York, reviewing a book on the Emperor Julian by Miss Alice Gardner, says: "Miss Gardner has made a book which is at once accurate and readable. Some of the traditions about Julian are indeed ruthlessly swept aside as mythical; we note with some regret that the saying, 'Galilean, thou hast conquered,' has gone the way of most other famous death-bed remarks that were never uttered." Why should Public Opinion, which is a very ably-conducted paper, regret the exposure of a falsehood promulgated by priests in the interest of their own superstition?

Joseph Canning, who murdered his sweetheart in Bermondsey, has all along expressed his expectation of meeting her in heaven when executed. It is a consoling faith is Christianity.

At Newcastle Police-court Samuel Bryson was remitted to the workhouse as insane. He was charged with creating an obstruction in Brunswick-place by preaching from the Bible. A policeman asked him to desist, but he said he was working for God, and God should be obeyed rather than man. When examined by the doctor he quoted texts, and said that if locked up he would pray till the gates opened and let him out. The doctor said there was no doubt of his insanity, whereby he appears to have meant that he was a genuine believer. If the old prophets and apostles could return, they would stand a good chance of sharing the fate of Samuel.

The man who edits the "Monthly Record of the New Cross and Brockley Young Men's Christian Association" should really be more careful. Under the heading of "Personal" he writes as follows: "Congratulations to our friend, Mr. H. G. Hearn, on his marriage with Miss T. Ward, which has lately been consummated." This is personal, with a vengeance.

Rev. Henry George Benjamin Lemoine was found guilty at the Norwich Assizes of defrauding a local tradesman. The man of God said that the "still small voice of conscience" did not accuse him. The Lord Chief Justice remarked that the still small voice of the jury did. Sentence—twelve months' hard labor, afterwards remitted to six.

Another man of God, the Rev. Allen Zechariah Grace, got into trouble at the Bow-street Police-court, London. He was charged with stealing various articles from a restaurant. Prisoner wrote a "beautiful and affecting letter" to the magistrate, who generously remanded him to "see what could be done for him." If something is done for him, we hope he will do no more restaurants. Losing four children a few years ago is really no excuse for robbery to-day, even if the money is wanted for drink.

The Rev. William Jackson Holmes has been committed for trial by the Faversham magistrates on a charge of stealing a gold watch chain and jewellery from Miss Ellen Partes, whose father entertained him while conducting a Wesleyan Mission. Prisoner had to undergo a month's imprisonment at Manchester before the Faversham police could lay hands on him.

At Ludlow, Mr. John B. Wood Henley, a J.P., was charged with using threatening language to Sir Charles Henry Rouse Boughton, Bart., of Downton Hall. The evidence went to show that the dispute took place after church on the 26th ult. The defendant admitted calling Sir Charles a bully, a coward, and a liar, and said "he thought the words adaptable for the occasion." After a long hearing the Bench dismissed the case, and ordered each party to pay his own costs.

Christian sects go on multiplying. The latest addition is the Link of Love, or the Towel and Basin Circle. This refers to J. C.'s washing his disciples' feet. By-and-by we shall have a Dish and Finger-Fork Circle, with reference to the Last Supper.

The Presbyterian Synod of Tennessee, being anxious to set the Bible up properly, resolved "that the Bible is the inspired and infallible Word of God, and if there are any errors in it they do not affect its inspiration." Presently it dawned on them that they had made fools of themselves. How could an infallible book contain any errors? So the foolish resolution was rescinded.

The Rev. John Morrow, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, is the leader of what an American paper calls a novel religion, but which, in its main elements, is a very ancient and basic one indeed. He teaches that the work of sanctification should be carried out until shame is dead and men and women appear together in a state of nudity.

The Rev. C. W. Savidge, a rival religionist, has gone to some trouble to examine the female converts of the Rev. J. Morrow. Several ladies said they had heard of it, but did not follow it out, owing, perhaps, to not having attained sufficient holiness. A Mrs. Christenson, however, acknowledged being a follower of the faith of Morrow, having sat in sessions with him. The meetings were always held at the houses of the sisters, sittings having been attended by Mrs. Christenson at her own house, and at that of Mrs. Thomas Grocox, who is also a believer. The husbands of Mrs. Christenson and of Mrs. Grocox offered no objection to the service, but did not participate. Mrs. Christenson explained that Morrow taught that the services of nudity should be held only in private in the homes of the members. In all the instances she knew he was the only man who participated, no others, we suppose, having the necessary sanctification.

Dr. Horton was unkind to a brother clergyman, the late Rev. Mr. Malthus. How absurd, he remarked, was the prediction of Malthus of a time when the progress of population would exceed the growth of the means of subsistence. Dr. Horton has never read Malthus, or is incapable of understanding him.

Digitized by Google

We notice that the Methodist Times is going to have a special department for "personal Holiness." The first duty of the writers in that part of the paper should be to teach Mr. Price Hughes to tell the truth. If they cannot teach him to do it, they might at least remind him of its necessity.

For some time we have watched the advertising career of a gentleman in the W.C. district of London. When we first noticed his advertisements they were of moderate dimensions. He now takes half a page, and we see his big advertisements in the Christian papers; which is very strange, for he sells a cure for corpulency, and how on earth can the followers of Jesus Christ grow fat? This "corpulency" gentleman gives opinions of the press on his specific, and these opinions have a curious resemblance to each other. Occasionally they are almost word for word. For instance, Forget-me-Not says: "It is marvellous how this 'Pasteur' and 'Koch' of English discoverers can actually reduce as much as 14lb. in seven days with a simple herbal remedy." The Southport Visitor also says: "It is marvellous how this 'Pasteur' and 'Koch' of English discoverers can actually reduce so much as 14lb. in seven days with a simple herbal remedy." It is positively certain that these two "opinions" were written by the same hand. Whose hand it is not very difficult to judge. The curer of corpulency was ill-advised to let these identical expressions of unbiased editorial opinion appear in the same advertisement; but perhaps he thought it did not matter in a journal like the Methodist Times.

If a Christian wants to diminish his obesity, he need not try a corpulency-curer's specific. He has only to follow the Bible injunction of "fast and pray."

An American paper says: "A. J. Blackwell, the rich and erratic Indian, who owns the city of Blackwell and David City, in the Indian Territory, has donated $300,000 to build a temple at David City, of peculiar model, for the perpetuation of Indian religion. He says he saw God in a vision, who commanded him to erect the temple. It will be open to all Indians, but not to any other race, and will be furnished with an interior garden, to symbolise the Indians' love for nature." The Red Indian, like the white Christian or olive Jew, sees God in a dream, and leaves no description of his appearance. Probably he is not foolish enough to father another person's child on the strength of a dream, like Joseph.

The Spectator of last week, writing on "Herbert Spencer's Agnosticism," deals with his contention, that all our notions of deity are human, in the following manner: "It would be as reasonable to say that, because a child's conceptions must be childish, they cannot be shaped and directed and prepared for future development by the mind of the child's parent or tutor." Surely it is sufficient answer to this that the child has actual experience of his parent or tutor, while man has no such experience of God. When to this is added the fact that all notions of God betray their human origin, vary as men vary, and are of bad genesis, because springing from human animism and fetishism, the reflection follows that all interpretation of the universe in the terms of finite man must be futile and misleading, which, we take it, is Herbert Spencer's position.

Is it true that "Mr. Slater, the wonderful clairvoyant and psychometrist of California," who is now advertised in the Spiritist papers as giving séances in London, is identical with the medium Slade who was convicted of fraud and sentenced to imprisonment at Bow-street in 1876?

The spiritist who informed us that Slater was Slade must have been mistaken, and the spirit who told him must have been a Diakka, one of those mischievous, lying spirits from the Lord who so frequently haunt the poor mejums. For J. J. Morse, himself a leading trance mejum, says, in Light, that Mr. Slater is, "without doubt, the most wonderful test medium, psychometrist, and psychic that the United States or any other country possesses at the present time"; that he has known this "some ten years"; and that "Mr. Slater's record as a man and a medium is all that can be desired." Now, since Mr. Slade has not only been convicted of fraud, but has more recently been in an asylum for inebriates, clearly he cannot be the same as Mr. Slater. The spirit who suggested their identity must have been of the same species that Jehovah sent to deceive King Ahab.

Light, by the way, for June 15, contains some funny letters. One is from "the leader of the circle" at a certain notorious mejum's performances in the N.W. district. He sends a spirit photograph to the editor. Two signed letters immediately follow, calling the mejum a fraud. One says: "I distinctly noticed that the female spirits all had beards under the chin, corresponding exactly with that worn by the medium. The drapery used to disguise the face failed to disguise this from my eyes."

Sir J. W. Dawson writes to the New York Science from Montreal to give his opinion that the four rivers of Eden are the Kherkhat, Karun, Tigris, and Euphrates. The only trouble is that these four rivers are not one, and none of them flow through Ethiopia.

The publisher of a paper that is virulent in its abuse of the Freethinker issues a pamphlet on The High Church Confessional. Here is a specimen of its chastened language: "There is not a conceivable species of indecency in sexual intercourse which is not particularised in these 'Holy Fathers' as fit matter to pour into the ears of women of every age and degree, married and unmarried. Indeed, so minute, full, and loathsome are the instructions given to these ministers of lust in their intercourse with females that the most abandoned women in the dirtiest brothels of London would blush to read them in connection with the holy name of religion." While this is the way in which one set of religionists write of another set, we may reasonably hope that the days of Christian Reunion are still distant.

Rochefort's paper reports that the clericals are in very bad odor at the commune of Rimogne, an important place in the Ardennes. The clergy have all disappeared, and all ceremonies are conducted civically. Two Sundays ago a priest came by train from Taillette. One of the inhabitants asked him what he wanted, and he replied that he had some one to see. "That may be," was the rejoinder, "but if you are not out of the village in five minutes, the clarion will sound, and you will be conducted to the station by more than a thousand persons." The priest was off in a hurry.

It is reported that two infants, joined together like the Siamese twins, have been born at New York. Devotees of the Design Argument should try to explain this abnormality. Is the Great Designer liable to eccentric moods, or did he arrange these inseparable twins on purpose, so that their parents might earn money by exhibiting them? We might ask some more questions, but we should like to have these answered first.

The Koran forbids the use of alcoholic drinks. The Bible recommends them. How curious it is, then, to open a paper like the Methodist Times and to find it full of the Local Veto Bill and the best way to make the people of this country teetotalers. And the joke is that all this zeal in favor of teetotalism is manifested by Christians, and by the very Christians, for the most part, who persist in forcing their bibber's handbook into the hands of children in our public schools. Verily a Christian is a most extraordinary bundle of contradictions.

In deciding a case under the Welsh Sunday Closing Act, the judge declared that the amount of chicanery, prevarication, and perjury resorted to for the purpose of evading the law was demoralising to the country.

The Rev. John Robertson declares that, by his Ascent of Man, "Professor Drummond has damned the souls of thousands of young men throughout the country." This is his thanks for seeking to reconcile Evolution with Christianity by means of gush and imagination.

The Committee of the Canadian Senate, appointed to deal with the question of divorce, have resigned because nearly half of the Senate Final Court of Appeal have decided, for religious reasons, to vote against all applications for divorce, without hearing the evidence. The Senate Court consists of thirty-nine Protestants and thirty-two Catholics. All the latter, and some of the High Churchmen of the former, will have no divorce on any account whatever. The action of the committee will probably lead to the beneficial change of having a proper Divorce Court established in Canada, instead of the matter being left to the tribunal of the Senate.

Dr. Prestwich has just published a work on Geology and the Flood. He accepts what the Christian World calls "the now generally established view" that the Jewish story of the Flood was borrowed from Babylon. He thinks there was a big flood at the close of the post-glacial period, ten or twelve thousand years ago; and the original fact, in the course of ages, got overlaid with legends; amongst them, of course, being the story of Captain Noah and his wonderful sailing menagerie.

At a prayer-meeting in Brighton, New York, a young man got up and confessed to several forgeries. A few prayer-meetings of that kind seem to be wanted in England.

Dr. Horton, of Hampstead, has been addressing the St. Edmund's Guild—consisting, we believe, of Board School teachers, on "Earthly Joys." This is a subject which the clergy are beginning to take up with considerable zeal. They used to regard this earth as a vale of tears; but a good many of them now regard it as a big music-hall, with a fine variety entertainment, provided free, gratis for nothing by God Almighty.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

June 30, Camberwell.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—June 23 and 30, Hall of Science, London. July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

Grosse Wise.—We insert your letter. But why did you assume that the paragraph referred to you? Remember the French proverb—Qui s'excuse s'accuse.

A. G. Levett.—Thanks for cuttings.

F. Benay (Plymouth).—Mr. Foote could not possibly pay you another visit in the spring. It was not easy for him to foresee the recent development of affairs in London, with all its worries and anxieties. You may rely upon a visit from Mr. Foote in the autumn, and he will write in a few days offering you a date. With respect to letters, you must remember that Mr. Foote does not keep a secretary, that he has to do everything with his own hands, and that he has more than he can do, though he works seven days a week.

J. M. R. B.—All right, in the special circumstances.

G. Turner (Brighton).—Always glad of good jokes, original or selected.

F. C.—Thanks for cutting. The Freethinker tracts are sixpence per hundred.

C. Wright.—The proportion of criminals in India is, among native Christians, 1 in 799; Mohammedans, 1 in 836; Hindoos, 1 in 1361; and Buddhists, 1 in 3,787. You will find an account of Professor Newman and his family in the biographical sketch of C. R. Newman, prefixed to his Essays in Rationalism.

J. Grinstead (Bristol) denies that in his lecture at Eastville Park he stated that all Freethinkers were pothouse men. "I never," he states, "said or implied anything so foolish or untrue." We should be sorry to do Mr. Grinstead, or any man, an injustice, and we cheerfully publish his disclaimer. Perhaps our informant will have something to say on this matter.

Rev. C. L. Engström sends us a letter, which we do not insert, as it does not advance the controversy. If he has anything to say in reply to our last week's article, we shall be happy to insert his communication. Small personal matters will not interest our readers. We say this, not out of any disrespect to Mr. Engström, but in the interest of rational discussion.

B. Munton.—The Parson's Hymn, "Money, oh money, thy praises I sing," appeared in the Freethinker many years ago, and has been reprinted in our tracts.

E. D. H. Daly.—Thanks for cuttings.

The secretary of the Liverpool Branch wishes the workman who spoke to him at Leonard Hall's lecture to communicate, either by letter or personally.

L. Levine (Charleston).—We are much indebted to your constant courtesy.

E. H.—(1) It is for the Theist to define what he means by God before the Atheist undertakes to deny. The Atheist finds he cannot believe in God, as usually defined; but he does not therefore assert a universal negative. (2) The imaginations of a future existence are a prolongation of certain aspects of this one, and no more certify reality than imaginations of fabulous animals. (3) Certainly the Bible can be cited on the side of teetotalism, but the bulk of passages are on the other side. What is there the Bible cannot be cited for?

J. Keast.—Bristol Freethinkers should certainly attend and support you.

Papers Received.—Zoophilist—Animal's Friend—Eastern Daily Press—Yarmouth Mercury—Public Opinion—De Dagsraad—Vegetarian Messenger—Der Arme Teufel—Freidenker—Boston Investigator—Liberty—Glasgow Weekly Herald—Blue Grass Blade—Literary Digest—Philosophical Journal—Harbinger of Light—Progressive Thinker—Light—Two Worlds—New York Evening Post—Secular Thought—Forget-Me-Not—Crescent——Isle of Man Times—Liberator—Nottingham Argus—Dundee Advertiser—Johannesburg Standard and Diggers' News—Open Court—Berkshire Chronicle—Newcastle Evening Chronicle.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SPECIAL.

The Directors of the National Secular Hall Society (Limited) have left the Hall of Science matter in my hands, to do what I find possible in the peculiar circumstances of the case. It appears to me that the crisis ought not to be prolonged a moment more than is necessary, and there are special reasons why midsummer should be a turning point. My appeal for £600 has not yet been adequately responded to. Donations, applications for shares, and conditional promises, only amount to about £450. Surely it should be possible to make up the required sum during the next few days. If not, I must let the matter drop, for this is the last appeal I can make upon the present basis. I hope it is distinctly understood that all the money sent in any way in response to this appeal will be returned to donors and applicants if the project is not carried to a successful issue. I pledge myself personally to the fulfilment of this promise.

G. W. FOOTE.

SUGAR PLUMS.

There was a good audience at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "Mrs. Besant's New Views of Christianity." This evening (June 23) Mr. Charles Watts occupies the platform, and Mr. Foote will take the chair. As the occasion may be a very important one, we hope there will be a large attendance.

Mr. Putnam continued to have "a fine time" after leaving Glasgow. He had two good houses at Aberdeen, and the next day he went with a party of local "saints" to Balmoral, Mar, and Braemar. He describes it as "a magnificent trip."

The annual excursion of the London Secular Federation will take place on July 14. Clacton-on-Sea will be the place visited, per G.E. Railway. Tickets (3s. each) can be obtained from the local secretaries, from Miss Brown, 22 Pembridge Villas, Notting-hill-gate, or Mr. Forder at 28 Stonecutter-street. As the time is short, we hope this announcement will be spread widely and tickets circulated speedily. A special committee is appointed to look after details, and will probably arrange for a general tea, similar to the one provided last year at Margate. Messrs. Foote and Watts intend to join the excursion, and other well-known Londoners will no doubt be present. We want to see a good gathering at Clacton, and as the committee are reported to be powerful in prayer, there is a prospect of glorious weather for the outing.

The annual excursion of the West London Branch will take place on Sunday, June 23, by the steam launch "Countess," to Walton-on-Thames. Light refreshments can be obtained on board, and a string band has been engaged to enliven the journey. The launch leaves Hammersmith Pier at 9.30 a.m., and the tickets are 3s. for adults and 1s. 6d. for children, return. As the number of tickets is limited, and a large demand is anticipated, application for them should be made at once to the Branch secretary, F. Todd, 59 Tunis-road, Shepherds Bush, W.

The Bradford Branch has started an open-air campaign in the market-place, James-street.

A two nights' debate will take place on July 1 and 2 at the Temperance Hall, Leeds-road, Bradford, between the Rev. A. J. Waldron and Mr. John Grange. The subject for discussion is, "Christianity or Secularism: Which is the Better System for Man?"

The Battersea Branch has a brake excursion to Riddlesdown next Sunday, June 30. Adults' fares 2s. 6d., children 1s. 3d. A free tea and other refreshments will be given to the children, according to donations received. Tickets can be had at the hall, or at outdoor meetings on Sunday morning and evening. All seats must be booked to-day, Sunday, June 23.

The Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund acknowledge the receipt of £36 11s. 9d. collected by Miss Emmeline Robins and friends of the Finsbury Park Branch of the National Secular Society. This is an increase of £6 upon the amount collected last year.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Keast informs us that after his lecture in Eastville Park, Bristol, he, with his wife and little children and Mrs. Bracey, were attacked by a mob of the C. E. Society savages, and but for the prompt and brave action of the park-keepers would have been fit for the Christians' hospital. This is what Freethinkers have had everywhere to put up with in opening new ground in the open air, but by dint of tact and perseverance they overcome, and in several of our London parks the C.E.S. people now sing very small indeed. Bristol Freethinkers should unite to support Mr. Keast in his arduous task.

It has been decided that the annual outing of the Liverpool Branch shall be held this year on July 14, when it proposes fraternising with the Manchester Branch at Chester. Those who intend to take part are requested to give in their names as early as possible, in any case not later than the 30th of this month, in order that proper arrangements may be made.

The Liverpool Daily Post of June 15 devoted a leader to the career of the Emperor Julian, generally nicknamed "the apostate." It concedes that Julian foresaw in the triumph of Christianity, as it then was, the extinction of Hellenic culture and Roman discipline, to be inevitably followed by the Dark Ages.

Mr. G. L. Mackenzie's contributions to the Freethinker are appreciated in many quarters. The Boston Investigator, of May 25, gives his recent poem on Noah's Ark the first place in its columns.

Mr. J. A. Richardson's article on "Wonders in Gozo" is reprinted from our columns into the Liberator, of Melbourne.

Mr. Edward Clodd is about to put out a book on the story of "Joseph the Dreamer"—not the Joseph who dreamt he was to marry Mary, but the one dealt with in our columns by "Veritas." No doubt he will deal with the Egyptian Analogue in the Tale of Two Brothers; but, as the book is intended for children, the incident of Mrs. Potiphar will probably be lightly glided over.

The grave of Thomas Paine at New Rochelle was visited on Decoration Day by a crowd of Freethinkers. Dr. E. B. Foote, junr., presided, an ode to Paine by G. E. Macdonald was sung, and addresses were delivered by T. B. Wakeman, Henry Rowley, Henry Frank, and others. A subscription was opened for a bronze bust of Paine to decorate the Paine homestead.

Ingersoll is making a wide and deep impression on the public in America. This is shown by the criticism of the men of God. The more ignorant are everywhere denouncing him, while the enlightened, like the Rev. J. T. Sunderland, in the Non-Sectarian, confess that, "as an argument to show that the Bible is not a supernatural, perfect, and infallible revelation from God, Mr. Ingersoll's lecture is unanswerable." Of course Mr. Sunderland finds Ingersoll's view of the Bible inadequate, but he admits that Moses did not write the Pentateuch, that the Song of Solomon was almost certainly not written by Solomon, and that we do not know the author of Job, or Ecclesiastes, or Esther.

Mr. Sunderland says of Ingersoll: "He is entirely justified in saying that Genesis contradicts science. The story of the Flood is unhistoric. There never has been a universal flood. The story of the Tower of Babel, and of such an origin of the different languages of the world as is there represented, science declares to be myth, and not fact." What is this but admitting that the Christian Church has all along been in the wrong, and that, consequently, no wise God has had anything to do with it?

Signor Bovio's "St. Paul" caused great excitement on the occasion of its first performance at Naples. The local "Catholic Society" begged the Prime Minister to prohibit the performance "so as not to risk offending the Catholic sentiment of the immense majority of the citizens." A deputation also waited upon the Prefect, and asked him at the last moment to stop "this atrocious offence and serious insult to the religious sentiment of all Neapolitans." The authorities, however, felt unable to interfere. In the evening, says the Daily News correspondent, the theatre was crowded with students and professors, eager to do honor to Bovio and liberty of thought.

The Blue Grass Blade, of Kentucky, June 2, has a remarkably good article on Christianity by Miss May Collins, a Kentucky young lady, born May 1, 1876. She quotes Mill, Gibbon, Mosheim, Lecky, and Buckle, and comes to the conclusion that "if a man named Jesus really lived and spoke his thoughts, the most likely thing is that he was a monk in the College of Alexandria," and that the Christian Church has been the greatest enemy of her sex. Mr. Moore, the editor of the Blade, challenges all the clergy of Kentucky to meet this nineteen-year-old infidel girl in written debate.

MR. PUTNAM'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

EXTRACTS FROM HIS FIRST LETTER.

With banners floating, the "City of Berlin" neared its goal from across the waters, with its wondrous freight of human hopes and joys. Intently I watched the surging multitude along the wharf to discover the stalwart Watts, for without his genial face I should be a pilgrim and a stranger indeed. He was on hand, and by his side George W. Foote; and we waved a greeting from deck and shore. After some tedious preliminaries of landing, unloading, and examining baggage, etc., we finally made out to shake hands in true English and Yankee fashion. We were soon in the railroad coach, which seemed small compared to our ponderous American cars, but it was elegant and comfortable, and we had a compartment all to ourselves, which was certainly advantageous, for we could talk to our hearts' content, as if at our own firesides. It didn't take long to become acquainted with our noble comrade, George W. Foote, who is as open as the day, and greets you with the frankness and politeness of a man of the world. The journey of ninety miles to London was a delightful one. A fresh May day it was. The golden buttercups mingled with the green grass in wide fields. The trees were in blossom. The farmer was ploughing, and villages and cities gleamed upon the view. Soon we were in the heart of London, and I was as hungry as a bear, for it was about 3 p.m., and I had not eaten since the morning on board. There is nothing like a good square meal to spice the journey and to keep your footing on this solid earth, for really I was in such a sort of ecstatic, dreamy state of mind that I felt I could almost be disembodied and not know it. I was in London; just think of it. London! the marvellous city of the world, where you are "in the swim" of the wonder and joy of the universe. In London, without doubt, the red heart of humanity sweeps its swiftest, grandest tides. Well, we had a long and joyous dinner. It was an intellectual repast along with delightful material things. Foote is an excellent caterer. He is not a dreamy philosopher. With his intellectual vitality he has a keen comprehension of the reality of life, and is a wise and witty cosmopolitan.

After dinner Watts takes me to his own home on Effra-road, Brixton. Through what a bewildering maze we pass as the great omnibus rolls along. Over the Thames, with its crowded bosom sparkling beneath you; by the great parks and hundreds of gardens, miles and miles we go, and yet the multitude does not seem to diminish. The streets are full, the shops are shining with all manner of goods, and business is evidently driving. However, Effra-road, which stretches from the Brixton thoroughfare, is almost as quiet as a country lane. It is simply beautiful in the bloom of May, grass and flowers in front of every dwelling, and here and there almost a forest of trees. In this lovely and entrancing scenery glows the fireside of our Freethought friend, Charles Watts, known in both worlds for his able and brilliant labors. What a hospitable welcome I had! Mrs. Charles Watts will never be forgotten by her many American friends. . . . . What a joyous evening I had on Effra-road, where the murmur of mighty London is scarcely heard, though the great city heaves and tosses and thunders only a block away. I could scarcely realise that Watts and I, who had battled together on the frontier of the New World, were now again together in the heart of old England, thousands of miles from the scenes of our former companionship.

The next day, Saturday, I was busy writing a multitude of letters, and getting off my "News and Notes" for the Truthseeker, until noon. Then the hansom cab is ordered, and Watts and I take a long drive to Euston station, where he is to take the cars for Glasgow. For a week he is to lecture and debate in Scotland. We meet Mr. Foote at the station, and bid good-bye to Watts at 2 p.m.; and then Mr. Foote takes me to his own home for dinner. In going thither I catch a glimpse of the walls and towers of Holloway prison, where for twelve months Mr. Foote was incarcerated—the martyr of liberty—maintaining with unflinching courage the rights of a free press. . . . .

There are four pretty children, bright as jewels, and sparkling with health and happiness. Mrs. Foote is entirely congenial with her husband. After dinner we go aloft to the top story, where is the study and splendid library of my host. What an array of books he has, worth their weight in gold! What stores of wisdom, out of which are forged the thunderbolts of Freethought, and the "Acid Drops" and "Sugar Plums" that burn and sparkle in the pages of the Freethinker. What a memory and a promise in these hoarded treasures, the new ever flashing from the old at the magic touch of genius.

After a smoke and wide intellectual discursiveness among books, we take a trip to the Zoological Gardens. This is a very interesting place. We pass through beautiful scenery, and we witness all sorts of curious and wonderful things, dim suggestions of man himself in a vast variety of animal life. . . . .

Digitized by Google

From the "Zoo" we walked through Regent's Park—a magnificent park, vast in extent, with great sweeps of green and masses of forest. At times the city is lost in the stretches of foliage, and you can easily imagine that you are with shepherds and their flocks in some Arcadia far away from the "madding crowd."

From Regent's Park, on top of the tremendous omnibus, looking over all creation, as if from a moving tower, we thunder and rattle to our destination, and Saturday night spreads its moonlight splendors over the scene, and dreamland follows anon. . . . .

Sunday evening sparkled along, and with it one of the great occasions of my life. For the first time I was to address an audience of English Freethinkers. I trembled in anticipation of it—it meant so much. England and America were to shake hands, and I hoped there might be nothing to mar the glory of the union. And there was nothing. When I reached the Hall of Science there was a great crowd in front; and by half-past seven o'clock every seat was occupied, and people were standing. I guess there were about 1,400 present, for that is, I understand, the capacity of the hall. I like an English audience. They know how to cheer. They do it with a vim, a cordiality, a thunderousness which is truly enlivening. A man who can't talk after such a cheer as they give must be somewhat like a man who has no music in his soul. It is like martial music, this glorious welcome—when we enter the hall—when President Foote arises to address the people—when the representative of American Freethought is introduced—when the names of Bradlaugh, Foote, and Watts are mentioned—when the brief and cheery message of Ingersoll is read—when the magic words, Thomas Paine, are uttered, and when finally the speaker closes. It was, I must say, a magnificent occasion and a grand success, and with all my heart I thank Foote and Watts and other English friends for their generous, beautiful, inspiring welcome. The thrill of comradeship from England to America is indeed jubilant and far-reaching, and will make the labors of the future more glorious throughout the world.

I like George W. Foote. He is a born leader. He has a penetrating and independent judgment. He has clear insight. He understands the situation. He comprehends Freethought. There are no clouds or mists in his intellectual horizon. He has breadth as well as concentration and energy. He is an all-round man, level-headed, brave, determined, uncompromising, yet intellectually charitable; far-seeing, for he beholds in the principle the inevitable result; and therefore he is never swung off his balance. He does not fall into side issues. He keeps straight on to the goal. He is the man of the hour, and the movement in England is broadening and deepening and strengthening through his wise conduct.

America knows Watts, vigorous and splendid, and still in the prime of his powers. Fortunate it is that we have such men as Watts and Foote to lead forward the great Freethought enterprise in England. They are admirably adapted for co-operation; masterful in their way, and winning the confidence, support, and affection of the Freethought army all along the line. Amidst a thousand difficulties and disappointments, this great army is moving on. Robert Forder, Arthur B. Moss, and others, whose names I shall hereafter mention in connection with more full details of this great movement, are enthusiastic and talented co-laborers and standard-bearers, constantly pushing onward the banners of our hope, fearless and advancing at every point of the mighty conflict.

I do believe that Ingersoll would have an audience of 20,000 people the first night he spoke in London. The English people do love and admire him; and no man in the wide world would secure such a welcome as he. Everybody inquires, "When is Ingersoll coming?" It is in the air that America must contribute its noblest flower of genius to the struggling hosts of freedom in other lands.

Monday morning I find the office of Charles Watts the younger, who, as publisher, is doing a splendid work for Freethought, for culture and advancement, for science and literature. . . . .

I ventured into the wonderful Cathedral of St. Paul's—a sublime structure, indeed; gloomy, however, as a grave. A choral service was going on as we entered. The music was beautiful, but the prayers between were execrable, and the preaching—well, when it came to that dull stuff, we retreated. In such a place as St. Paul's there should be only music. That only can accord with the glory and vastness of its architecture.

So far as I can judge, London is the most beautiful city in the world. It is not simply immense, a huge bee-hive, a whirl of business, a rush of millions of people, a rattle and thunder of thousands of vehicles; it is a city of gardens, of flowers and grass and trees, entirely in contrast with Chicago, Boston, New York, or any other city that I know of. No other city can boast of so many and such large parks as London; and besides the parks there are innumerable gardens in front and rear of the houses on almost every street. Every Londoner wants a garden, and he will scarcely rent a house without a garden. There is, therefore, a charming mingling of country life with this great city. There are many quiet nooks where you are embowered with green foliage and flowers of all hue; and in the busiest streets verdant spaces flash upon the view. Wherever there is a chance to put a tree, there a tree grows. At this season of the year, with the glorious sunshine of May flooding all, the views are simply enchanting. The sweetness and beauty of nature greet you amidst the art and splendor of man's achievement. Along with the thousands of gardens and hundreds of parks and squares, there is the Thames river, with its ever-changing magnificent water views, its bridges, its boats, its ships and barges, the vast and splendid architecture on either side—historic buildings, towers and domes, far as the eye can reach.

I like the great omnibuses. How they roll along crowded with passengers on top. There is where I like to get. It is something of a climb, but you feel quite elated when you sit down twenty feet in air and go bowling along as if you were riding a comet. What sights are presented as you dash through the surges of London life!

The hansom cabs are fine, too—easy and cheap. There are thousands of them, and they glide merrily along like gondolas on a river. No matter in what part of the city you may be, these cabs are always at hand.

They keep the streets clean here. Boys and men are all the time at work with shovels, "dust-pans," etc. If a particle of dirt accumulates, it is instantly brushed away. The streets are like a floor.

The rush of traffic is enormous. Oftentimes, at a crossing, a long array of vehicles awaits the passage of another array. The police, by a simple motion of the arm, regulate the passage. There is no talk or dispute. Now one procession moves on, and then the other. You have to take a good look when you cross the street, and then make a dash. Every day in London you would think that nobody was at home, and that everybody was on the go. It is like an everlasting festival day. It beats New Jerusalem all to pieces. Nobody would want to go to heaven so long as he could stay in London and see the sights. The angel Gabriel might blow his trumpet, and it would not disturb a single soul. They are used to all sorts of noises here. Even the resurrection would not be a very surprising affair in such a cosmopolitan place as London. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

—Truthseeker.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

June 23, Manchester; 24, Derby; 25, Nottingham; 30, Sheffield.

July 6, Chester-le-Street Branch (lecture held at West Pelton Co-operative Hall at 6.30); 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14, Bristol; 16 and 17, Plymouth; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth; 18, Leicester; 25, Liverpool.

Special Note.—Through an error Mr. Putnam has July 28 at liberty. Any Branch requiring that date should write to Mr. Watts at once.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

Is Man a Religious Animal?

We do not share the idea that "man is by nature a religious animal," or that we have "a religious sense" that must be accommodated at the expense of the truth. Man is no more a religious animal than he is a whiskey-drinking animal. A little child possesses neither the fear of God nor the thirst for liquor, and but for certain environments would neither pray to God nor drink whiskey. He learns from association and example to do both. The most that can be admitted is that the habit of praying through a long series of generations has, by heredity, implanted in us some susceptibility to superstition, by means of which association, example, and persuasion may the more easily develop in our minds the religious sentiment.—J. D. Shaw.

It was on a Sunday afternoon, and the little boy had just come home from church. Seating himself in the chimney corner, he burst out crying, and would not eat his dinner. "What are you crying for, my boy?" asked his father. "The minister's text was, 'Ye must be born again,' and I am afraid that I shall be a gall next time," replied the precocious youngster.

Digitized by Google

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—IX.

JAMES WATSON.

THE subject of my present sketch was one of those quiet, unassuming, unobtrusive workers, whose services to the good old cause are too little known, but, where known, should be highly appreciated. Born of poor parents in an obscure town, Malton, in Yorkshire, September 21, 1799, a taste for reading led him in a Freethought direction. Employed at Leeds, he became acquainted with such Radical works as Wooler's Black Dwarf, Cobbett's Register, and Carlile's Republican. When Carlile was imprisoned with his wife and sister for selling blasphemous publications, he appealed to lovers of free discussion to serve in the shop. Humphrey Boyle was the first volunteer from Leeds. He was arrested, tried, and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment. When sentenced, May 27, 1822, Boyle remarked: "I have a mind, my lord, that can bear such a sentence with fortitude." Of similar stuff was James Watson, the second volunteer from Leeds. He, too, was arrested in February, 1823, for selling Palmer's Principles of Nature. His trial took place on April 23. In his defence he endeavored to prove from the Bible that Palmer was justified in what he had written, but the judge told him he "might quote from the Bible, but not comment upon it." He was convicted and sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment in Coldbath Fields Prison, and to find bail for good behavior for two years. In prison Watson read Hume, Gibbon, and Mosheim, which he said "would have made me a Freethinker if I had not been one before." He afterwards conducted Richard Carlile's business until Carlile's liberation from Dorchester Gaol in November, 1825, and then became a compositor on Carlile's Republican. Attacked by cholera, he was nursed by Julian Hibbert, who employed him on his own projects, giving him his own type and presses, and at his death leaving him a legacy of £500. In the meantime Watson suffered another six months' imprisonment for selling Hetherington's unstamped Poor Man's Guardian. With the legacy from Hibbert, James Watson constituted himself a sort of society for promoting useful knowledge. He set up as bookseller and publisher, issued many Freethought works, such as D'Holbach's System of Nature, Volney's Ruins of Empires, Paine's Age of Reason and Common Sense, Palmer's Principles of Nature, Francis Wright's Few Days in Athens and her Lectures, R. D. Owen's discussions and pamphlets, Shelley's Queen Mab and Masque of Anarchy, Byron's Cain and Vision of Judgment, J. Clarke's Letters to Adam Clarke, Godwin's Political Justice, Lamenais' Modern Slavery, Evans Bell's Task of To-day, Powell's Bible of Reason, Yahoo, Eece Homo, Human Origin of Christianity, Hume's Miracles, Diderot's Thoughts on Religion, Lawrence's Lectures on Man, Englefield's Physiology, Dr. T. Cooper's Rights of Free Discussion, T. Cooper's (the Chartist) Purgatory of Suicides, Southwell's Impossibility of Atheism, Holyoake's Rationalism, Logic of Facts, etc.

The list is a goodly one, though far from complete. It represents valuable works, tending in the direction of mental emancipation and of political and social reform; works tabooed by the privileged classes, and many of which they had sought to suppress. Let it be remembered, too, that the cheap publication of such works was the direct incentive to that rivalry of new cheap literature intended to counteract the supposed pernicious effect of the dissemination of "infidelity and sedition." I do not scruple to say that, by his publications, James Watson did more for the real education of the people than some vaunted societies and wealthy firms with all the influence of respectability at their back. His publications, though cheap, were not of the "cheap and nasty" order. They were neat, well printed, and showed throughout a publisher who loved sound thought and sound work in every department. Mr. W. J. Linton, his friend for forty years, says: "There was no mistaking an edition by J. Watson. To him life and all its circumstances were to be kept in wholesomeness, though means of beautifying might fail him. The pride of the poor man was his. His honesty should be clean skinned and pure, if his clothes were threadbare; his public appearance, as his home, ever dignified, made worthy of respect. Serving in his shop, he had pleasant and informing words for all who sought his wares; the character of this or that book about which you asked might be trusted to his judgment. His conversation, if you cared to make acquaintance with it, supplemented what he sold—what he had given, if apostles in his day had been able to print and live without death. . . . . He was of the stuff of those old martyrs who smiled when they were flayed alive; who thrust their hands into fire to pluck out unharmed their more tender souls. For the respect in which his probity and his business qualities were held, his name as treasurer of subscriptions in aid of political sufferers may be voucher enough. He was one to whom you might have trusted untold gold; he could not have wronged you of the smallest coin." Mr. Linton gives a pleasant instance of how principle was more than profit with Watson. In '38 Linton projected a cheap library, for the people, of extracts from works beyond the purchasing reach of working men. Watson laid before him the difficulties, and, finding him resolute, offered him (a nameless stranger) his books and services. When the account was made up he found there was no charge for folding and stitching. Watson had been sure the book could not pay, and he and his wife had folded and stitched every copy to save Linton so much expense.

By judicious investments in works of solid value, James Watson served the cause in perhaps the most effective way in which it can be served—by the spread of its literature. He did this more for the sake of propaganda than for profit, but by economy he was able to retire when between fifty and sixty. On January 23, 1854, a public tribute was paid to him at the Literary Institution, John-street, Fitzroy-square, at which Mr. W. D. Saull presided, and Messrs. T. Cooper, R. Moore, W. J. Birch, R. Le Blond, and G. J. Holyoake testified to his great services to the Freethought cause. He lived at Norwood until November 29, 1874, and in Norwood Cemetery a plain granite obelisk bears the following inscription: "James Watson, 1874. Erected by a few friends as a token of regard for his integrity of character and his brave efforts to secure the right of free speech and a free and unstamped press." A Memoir, by his friend, W. J. Linton, to which I am indebted for most of these particulars, has a copy of Watson's photograph as frontispiece, and is a modest, yet not unworthy, memorial of a sterling though little-known Freethinker.

J. M. WHEELER.

IS THE BIBLE A FIT SCHOOL BOOK?

ARE there really obscene passages in it, passages obscene and indecent that teach no moral? If it can be proved there are such, there can be no question as to its being unfit for a school book. If there are errors and contradictions that a thoughtful student can easily see, it is unfit for a school book, as it is a part of his education to be right and trace errors. If the book in all its parts is not instructive and decent—that is, if it cannot be read without dictation as to what parts, it is not a fit school book. For instance, if the book cannot be opened at random and read from, by and before an assembly of children of both sexes, it is unfit for a school book.

If any passage cannot be intelligently and satisfactorily explained to a pupil of inquiring mind, it loses its value as a school book. To say that certain passages were made purposely obscene to teach us a moral would be the same as giving a boy a lot of cheap detective and love stories in order that he might not follow in the steps of the characters in the stories. In young minds it is very often the reading of such that puts the wrong ideas in their heads.

That some of the Old Testament stories of wars, rapes, murders, etc., are more degrading than the cheapest of our novels, goes without saying. Was there ever a more degrading and obscene expression or command than that contained in Numbers xxi. 17, 18? I say that any man that would even have such thoughts in his head, not speaking of putting them in execution, is not fit to be copied, nor his writings read anywhere. To have such put in the way of pure and innocent children, whose minds are not matured, and whose reasoning powers are already dwarfed because of being compelled to believe the doctrines taught in this book, without any intelligent explanations, is an outrage that a really moral parent or guardian should forbid. Keep all indecent books from the schools; if the Bible has indecent passages, it should not be excepted.

BELMONT.

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Some English, French, and American missions in China have been wrecked, and the religious press are crying out for "a firm policy." Some of the apostles of the religion of peace do not contrive to commend themselves where they go, and always want the gospel backed up by gunpowder.

Digitized by Google

BOOK CHAT.

IAMBLICHUS ON THE MYSTERIES.

MR. BERTRAM DOBELL, of 77 Charing Cross-road, has published a second edition of Iamblichus on the Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians, translated from the Greek by Thomas Taylor. The first edition was issued in 1821 from the printer at Chiswick, "for the translator, Manor-place, Walworth." The work is worth some attention, both on account of the author, the translator, and the present publisher.

* * *

The author Jamblichus, of Chalcis, N. Syria, was one of those neo-Platonists who, about the time of Constantine, vainly sought to stay the progress of the Christian superstition by an eclectic Theosophic philosophy drawn from the earlier faiths. He was a pupil of Porphyry, one of the early opponents of Christianity, but did not altogether follow his master. His followers called him "wonderful" and "most divine" teacher, while the Emperor Julian said of him, in his fourth oration, that "he was posterior in time, but not in genius, to Plato." His Platonism was much mixed up with oriental ideas and speculations. He lets us see the philosophical notions with which the later Egyptian and Chaldean priests explained their religion. Jamblichus was probably more indebted to Pythagoras, whose life he wrote, than to Plato.

* * *

Jamblichus teaches a kind of Theosophy, but it is not the modern Blavatskyite Theosophy of "esoteric Buddhism," but the genuine ancient wisdom religion, the inner doctrine of the priests, to whom mysticism was philosophy. Its doctrine was essentially Pantheism. In the words of Thomas Taylor, the translator (pp. xii. and xiii. of Introduction): "All beings proceed from, and are comprehended in, the first being; all intellects emanate from one first intellect; all souls from one first soul; all natures blossom from one first nature; and all bodies proceed from the vital and luminous body of the world. And, lastly, all these great monads are comprehended in the first ones, from which both they and all their depending series are unfolded into light."

* * *

The Theosophy, or, as Taylor more properly calls it, Theurgy, of Jamblichus consists in his teaching how union with the divine is to be obtained. The work is prefaced by "The Epistle of Porphyry to the Egyptian Anebo," in which he inquires and expresses his doubts as to the relation of men to the gods. The work itself purports to be "The Answer of the Preceptor Abammon" to this epistle, and a solution of the doubts contained in it. The solutions of this Pagan decadent will hardly satisfy the modern mind; but they are most interesting as exhibiting a curious stage in human thought, combining an attempt to account for the gradations of being in the universe with the hope of obtaining a supernatural elevation to the powers of man, and with a defence of the principles and practices of Polytheism.

* * *

It is curious to note the attention given to Jamblichus at the time of the Pagan Renaissance. Editions of this work on the Mysteries were published in 1483, 1497, 1516, 1556, 1570, 1577, 1607, 1641, and at Oxford, with a Latin translation by Gale, in 1678. Giordano Bruno refers to it in his Heroic Enthusiasts, and Taylor, the translator of Jamblichus, says that his modern critics "perceive only his little blemishes, but have not even a glimpse of his surpassing excellence. They minutely notice the motes that are scattered in the sunbeam of his genius, but they feel not its invigorating warmth, they see not its dazzling radiance."

* * *

The translator, Thomas Taylor, the Platonist (1758–1835), was a remarkable man, both for his scholarship and his independence of thought. He professed himself a Pagan, and wrote an argument in defence of Polytheism, entitled A New System of Religion. He devoted his life to translating and defending the works of Plato, Aristotle, Porphyry, Plotinus, Proclus, and Julian; and is said to have been so thorough a Pagan that he sacrificed a bull to Zeus. This report is probably unfounded, for he was a vegetarian. Certain it is that he was a modern Pagan, and one of considerable powers of mind and elevation of character. He also contributed important articles to Valpy's Classical Journal. All his works are now extremely scarce and dear. The Dissertation on the Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries has been recently reprinted at New York, and the publisher of the present volume holds out the hope that it may be followed by the republication of other works by Thomas Taylor. We would especially commend to his attention The Arguments of Celsus and Julian against Christianity and The New System of Religion, upon which last Mr. Wheeler contributed some articles to the National Reformer.

* * *

Mr. Dobell, the publisher, is a bookseller of taste. He not only knows a good thing when he sees it, but the fact that it is caviare to the multitude does not prevent his trying to get the literature he appreciates before the fit, though few. This is seen in his publication of the works of James Thomson (B.V.), and the pains he has taken in many ways to make that gifted poet known. The present volume is a fac simile of the original edition, which is so rare that the British Museum copy is imperfect. It reflects credit on the publisher, and we trust it will meet such success as to encourage him to reproduce other, and, as we think, more important, works of Thomas Taylor.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A WISE DENIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Kindly do me justice by publishing this letter in the next issue of the Freethinker. In the present issue I find the following: "Is it true that a Christian Evidence lecturer at Liverpool is in the habit of asking opponents their names and addresses? Is it true that an opponent gave his name and address a few Sundays ago? Is it true that on the following Tuesday he was dismissed from his employment on a certain railway?"

If the above insinuations refer to myself, let me say that they are absolutely false. There is not an iota of truth in the whole matter.

GEO. WISE.

MUTUAL HELP.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—Mark Twain, or somebody else, said: "If you want to get on, join the Methodists and start a shop," the meaning of which is obvious. Let us Freethinkers learn of the enemy to help each other. I think we ought to go out of our way to put work in the hands of our brother and sister Secularists, and if they keep a shop a quarter of a mile farther away than the nearest of its kind we ought to deal there. Known Freethinkers are avoided by religious bigots, and their brothers-in-arms should endeavor to make up for what they lose in this way by their steady support.

A. GUEST.

PROFANE JOKES.

A clergyman, named Fiddle, refused to accept the title of D.D., because, as he said, he "didn't want to be called the Rev. Ichabod Fiddle, D.D."

Parker—"I would join the church if it wasn't full of hypocrites." Tucker—"Oh, you are mistaken about that. There's always room for one more."

Tired Child (at church)—"Mamma, how much did you put in the collection?" Mother—"A penny, my dear." Tired Child—"Well, the preacher gives an awful lot for his money."

School Teacher—"If you had your choice, Willie, would you rather be as wise as Solomon, as great as Julius Cæsar, as rich as Crœsus, as eloquent as Demosthenes, as tall as Goliath, or as good as the prophet Elijah?" Willie—"I'd rather be a drummer in a brass band."

THE LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION.

COUNCIL meeting held at the Hall of Science, June 13; the President in the chair. Present: Messrs. C. Watts, J. M. Wheeler, R. Forder, G. Standring, W. H. Baker, G. Ward, M. Loafer, W. G. Renn, F. Schaller, S. R. Thomson, G. J. Warren, A. Wheeler, Miss Vance, and the Secretary.

Minutes of previous meeting read and confirmed. Treasurer's report received. The information obtained by the Secretary re Annual Excursion was discussed, and on the motion of Mr. Renn, seconded by Mr. Forder, Clacton-on-Sea was decided upon, price of return tickets to be 3s., children half price. Messrs. Ward, Renn, Schaller, and Miss E. M. Vance were then elected as an Excursion Committee. It was decided that the Annual Collection by Branches in aid of the funds of the Federation should take place in July, the actual Sunday to be left to the discretion of the Branches. Monthly lists for July were ordered to be printed, particulars for which must be received by June 24.

N.B.—The President having kindly undertaken the responsibility of providing the heavy deposit required by the Railway Company on account of the Excursion, it is particularly requested that all secretaries will push the sale of tickets, and remit to the undersigned at their early convenience.

ANNIE BROWN, Hon. Sec.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," & not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

HALL OF SCIENCE (142 Old-street, E.C.): 7, musical selections; 7.30, Charles Watts, "A Christian's Delusions: Christ and Death."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 8.30, social gathering for N.S.S. members and friends. Tuesday, at 9, dance.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, R. Forder, "A Chat with the Devil and a Peep into Hell."

FINSBURY PARK BRANCH (91 Mildmay Park): Monday, at 8, Meeting of members.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY (Princes' Hall, Piccadilly): 11.15, Dr. Stanton Coit, "John Keats and the Sense of Beauty."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, Henry Spence, "Practical Evolution."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, J. Fagan, "Is there a God?" 7.15, A. G. Hertzfeld, "Secularism and Social Questions."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Tales from the Gospels."

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, C. James, "Christianity the Foe of Liberty and Progress."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, Stanley Jones will lecture. Thursday, at 8, C. James will lecture.

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, A. B. Moss, "Modern Shams and Delusions." (Collection on behalf of Sam Standring.)

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, George Standring, "Christianity v. Humanity"; 3.15, A. Guest, "Missions Unglorified."

HAMMERSMITH BROADWAY (Middlesex side): 7, J. Fagan will lecture. Thursday, at 8.30, S. E. Easton, "What must I Do to be Saved?"

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 3.30, F. Haslam will lecture. Wednesday, at 8, Stanley Jones will lecture.

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, A. Guest, "Recipes for Happiness."

KILBURN (High-road): 7, M. Pack will lecture.

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, S. E. Easton will lecture.

LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, a lecture.

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, F. Haslam, "Mohammed and his Bible."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, W. Heaford, "The Historical Basis of Christianity."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, a lecture.

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, Stanley Jones, "The Origin of the Bible"; 3.15, W. Heaford, "Christ and His Teachings."

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, A. B. Moss, "The Old Faith and the New"; 7, C. James will lecture. Thursday, at 8, C. Cohen will lecture.

COUNTRY.

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 2.45, Sunday-school; 7, T. Thurlow, "Jesus v. Home."

HULL: Monday, at 8.30, members' meeting at Mr. Simpson's, 131 Great Thornton-street, to arrange annual picnic

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, Mr. Hammond, "The Metamorphosis of Christianity."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, S. P. Putnam, "Freethought and Morality"; 3, "Christianity and Woman"; 6.30, "Christ and the Nineteenth Century."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 7, "Nunquam's Confession—a Criticism of The Hammer," by a Clarionette.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Sailors' and Firemen's Union Hall, Coronation-street): 7, R. Mitchell, "The Atonement."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, W. Treasure will lecture.

CHATHAM (corner of the New Brompton-road, High-street): 11.15, T. Thurlow, "The Unpardonable Sin."

DERBY (Market-place): 11, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside): 11, C. Cohen will lecture.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Market Place): 3, R. Mitchell, "The Fall."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—June 23, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 27, Wood Green; 30, m. Victoria Park, a. Regent's Park, e. West Ham.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—June 23, m. Victoria Park; 26, Hyde Park; 30, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—June 28, m. Wood Green, e. Tottenham; 30, m. Clerkenwell, a. Finsbury Park.

T. THURLOW, 850 Old Ford-road, E.—June 23, Chatham. July 17, m. Kingsland.

THE JERUSALEM STAR. A Novelty in Journalism. Reports of Biblical Events Up to Date. No. 1 Now Ready. Original Report of Noah's Flood; "Milk and Honey" by Le-vitty-cus; Etc. One Halfpenny. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Price Twopence,

Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

A Demonstration of the Biblical Doctrine of Devils, suitable for circulation among Christians.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

A CHAPTER FROM

Strauss's Original "Life of Jesus."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

G. W. FOOTE.

(A Most Thorough Analysis and Exposure of the Gospel Story by a Master Hand.)

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters: — 1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. B. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Digitized by Google

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 1d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 1d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 1d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 2s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

"*" In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell
No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

64 pp., price 3d., by post 4d.,

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) The Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 2d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d. (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 2d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

FRIENDS,—

My message to you this week is brief, but full of truth and very important. I have just secured over 10,000 yards of Trouserings in First-class Worsteds and Woollens. It has been a rather big speculation, but the goods were extremely cheap, less than two-thirds their ordinary value.

I have now some grand bargains to offer you. Don't delay, but send in your orders at once. I know the goods will please you, and you cannot spend your money on clothing to greater advantage.

PRICES.

Trousers to Measure 9s. per pair.
Three Pairs Trousers to Measure for 25s. 6d.
Six Pairs Trousers to measure for 48s.
One Trousers' Length for 5s. 6d.
Three Trousers' Lengths for 15s.
Six Trousers' Lengths for 27s.

TROUSERS.

INCHES
A, Round Waist over Trousers .....
B, Round Seat.....
E to D, Inside Leg Seam .....
F to G, Full Length of Trousers.....
H, Round Thigh .....
I, Round Knee.....
J, Round Bottom .....
Please say Lined or Unlined.....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Side or Cross Pockets.....

Solicit orders from your friends; you will not only be doing them a good turn, but you can make profit for yourself. Send on your cash, and I promise you a most wonderful bargain.

Yours very truly,
J. W. GOTT.

2 and 4 Union-street, Bradford.

"The Clacton Tea-Table,"

TOWN HALL BUILDINGS, CLACTON-ON-SEA.

Specialité—1s. ORDINARY, 12.30 to 3.

Tea fresh for every customer. Furnished Apartments.
Also "Brunswick Confectionery," Pier Avenue.
Proprietor, H. FOYSTER.

COALS! COALS! COALS!

MESSRS. FRANCIS E. WOOD & CO. are supplying good Parlor Coal, suitable for all purposes, at 16s. 6d. per Ton. Hot Kitchen Coal, 14s.

R. Forder says: "They are remarkably cheap and good."
W. J. Ramsey writes: "I am well satisfied with your Parlor Coal."

Orders to 206 York-road, King's Cross. Depôts all over London.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,

28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 26. SUNDAY, JUNE 30, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

ROME IN ENGLAND.

"I am aware that the art of printing will always present an insurmountable barrier to the total and absolute subjection of the human mind; but when I consider the cunning and the wiles which were successfully practised in former ages by a knavish and interested Priesthood to subject even thrones to its insolent domination, I am not without fears that the modern attempts to reduce mankind to that dreadful state of vassalage under which they groaned, particularly during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, may in some degree prove successful. Even should the Romish clergy succeed in obtaining half the power which they exercised at these periods, it would be a matter, in my apprehension, which every true friend of liberty ought to deplore; for I have universally observed in my perusal of history that the increase of ignorance and oppression always kept pace with the increase of clerical power."—William Cobbett, "Register," vol. xxvi., pp. 312, 313.

THE opening of the new Roman Catholic cathedral at Brompton this week calls renewed attention to the advance of Roman Catholicism in England. Measured by numbers, that advance is not alarming. A leakage from its membership to some extent compensates for its conversions, mostly made from those apists of papists, the Ritualists. But in wealth and influence it is constantly progressing. Its proselytes are mostly drawn from the well-to-do. Men like the Duke of Norfolk and the Marquis of Bute offer it almost unlimited financial resources. As an establishment it has grown vastly in half a century. In 1845 it had 776 priests in England; now it has three thousand. Then it had 622 churches, now three times that number; then eight nunneries, now two hundred and forty; then thirty-four religious houses, now close on five hundred; while its colleges have increased from two to thirty-six.

Considered as a divine institution, Romanism is abominably absurd. It is founded on obsolete dogmas and mistakes which civilised man has outgrown, and it has maintained its authority by the most detestable crimes and cruelties. But regarded as a human institution, Romanism is worth study. It represents the survival of the fittest elements of many ancient faiths. Its worst institutions had value in building up a powerful corporation. Sacerdotal celibacy centres the minds and affections of its ministers on their Church, and prevents the dissipation of their property to children. Confession gives it a hold over domestic life. Saint and image worship satisfy popular wants for the concrete and near, rather than the abstract and remote deity of Protestants. Purgatory offers an inexhaustible supply of wealth to the priest, and a more natural theory of after-life than eternal heaven and hell. The Virgin Mother unites symbols that come home to the affections, and gives woman a place in worship unsupplied by the bachelor Trinity. The Roman Church service appeals to the senses, and its boasted infallibility gives repose to the mind.

Above all, the Church has thriven by its perpetual readiness to compound with popular weakness and superstition for the sake of its own dominion. The Romish Church is the outcome of the cunning schemes of thousands of men who kept, as far as possible, all knowledge in their own corporation, in order that it might rule over the ignorant. Hence it is that, though stained with the blood of myriad martyrs, and laden with the frauds and forgeries of ages, it yet holds on; and Macaulay could look forward to the Church still existing in undiminished vigor, "when some traveller from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruin of St. Paul's."

Rome knows its power consists in the control of education; hence its unceasing fight for the schools. The Jesuits have everywhere bent themselves to the highest of tasks, that of moulding men. It was their schools opened in Germany after the Reformation that furnished the soldiers for the Thirty Years' Religious War. Everywhere the same men are now training the young for a new crusade, ostensibly against "Freemasonry, Libertinism, and Naturalism," whereby they mean Freethought and civil liberty. They talk now of the Christian State, and even of Christian Socialism; but they mean, as of old, the subjection of the world to the dominion of the Church.

Semper Eadem is the motto of Romanism. What it has done it would do again if it had the power. Nature chained is not nature changed. The root principles of religion not only justify the suppression of heresy, they demand it. If I am leading hundreds to eternal torment, it is a mercy to stamp me out as speedily as possible. A real change of circumstances has led to a pretended change of policy. Rome now speaks of toleration, but it means supremacy. It pretends to patronise science, but it encourages superstition. It exalts faith and discredits reason. Men like Mr. Benjamin Kidd and the Hon. A. J. Balfour are in this its unwitting allies. It presents the logical ultimatum of their depreciation of reason before authority. All priests find in Rome their instinct for sacerdotal sway embodied; and, as Protestantism breaks up, the more consistent Church, boldly proclaiming that there is no standing ground between Atheism and submission to herself, is bound to gather up those who, from whatever cause, prefer authority to reason.

England's conversion is now the dominant thought of Rome. England is, in the language of the Propaganda, "St. Mary's Dowry" and "the patrimony of Peter." The Pope's letter is being followed up by an organised attempt to bring Britain back to "the faith of our fathers." Should disestablishment come, a large portion of our Romanising High Church clergy will be prepared to accept Romish orders, in the hope that Romanism will become the reversionary legatee of the Anglican Church.

In the face of the advance of Catholicism, it behoves Freethinkers to close up their ranks and fight superstition, not simply with the guerilla warfare of free lances, but with compact and well-drilled organisation. With a tithe of Romish funds, Freethinkers would soon prevent any fear of Romish encroachments. Is it not a shame that, while a Church that has erected the worst despotism that ever bound and crushed not only the bodies, but also the minds of men, can draw immense wealth to itself by holding out threats of hell-fire, and by pretending to save the dead from purgatory, the endowment of Freethought halls, designed to unshackle the minds of men and to combat superstition, is not permitted by law? Surely Freethinkers should be up and doing. The days of struggle are not yet over.

J. M. WHEELER.

Digitized by Google

MRS. BESANT'S NEW GOD.

(Concluded from page 385.)

MRS. BESANT, as already explained, has a "God," like all the rest of the mystery-mongers; and she proceeds to "justify" her deity, who requires it as much as any other god or godling in the whole pantheon. And the justification of the god of Theosophy is remarkably like that of the common god of Theism. All these systems find themselves confronted with the problem of evil, and set about explaining it, but not until they are driven into doing so by sceptical opposition. The first explanation advanced had the merit of sublime simplicity. Divines declared evil to be a mystery. But sceptics retorted that this was only a confession of ignorance, and did not help in the least. It left the problem unsolved, and calling it by a grand name did not make it a bit plainer. Besides, the "mystery" was, after all, quite artificial; it was really no more than a flat contradiction between the theory of "God" and the facts of nature. When this point was pressed home, the theologians saw that they must somehow prove that evil is really good; and thus they reached the serene quackery of ultimate optimism, declaring that discord is misunderstood harmony, that a man groaning with the toothache is unconsciously sounding his note in the symphony of universal happiness. This theory still holds the field, only it is modified by a "wrinkle" borrowed from Evolution. Evil is not exactly good, the divines tell us, but it is good in the making; and when we get to the end of the process (if we ever do!) we shall look back, like Jehovah upon his six-days' creation, and pronounce it all "good." Of course the argument is based upon prophecy; it is like paying an account with a very long bill, due sometime after death or forty days after the millennium. Still, it serves the purpose; the Micawbers of theology exclaim, "Thank God, that's settled!" And the Micawber family is large, and Mrs. Besant is one of them. She meets her difficulties in relation to evil by resorting, not to the vindication of the day of judgment, but to the final disclosures of reincarnation. We shall not, however, follow her into that region, but stick to the prosaic world of things as they are now—the world of actual experience, of more or less exact knowledge, and of more or less approximate logic.

Let us examine Mrs. Besant's theory of the function of pain, apart from its apparatus and jargon of Theosophy.

> "By pain we learn when we have struck against a law, and the law which pierced us when we opposed it becomes our strength when we place ourselves in harmony with it. By pain we learn to distinguish between the eternal and the transitory, and so to strike our heart-roots into that which endures. By pain we develop strength, as the athlete developes muscle by exercising it against opposing weights. By pain we learn sympathy, and gain power to help those who suffer. Thus only is the Christ-soul developed and at length perfected, and when this is once realised pain is no longer grievous nor an enemy, but a sternly gracious friend, whose hands are full of gifts."

Now, we entirely dissent from this philosophy, which appears to us the very reverse of the truth. "Adversity (says George Meredith) tries us; it does not nourish us." Mrs. Besant has mistaken the trial for the nourishment. A child does not grow strong in darkness, privation, and suffering; it grows strong in sunlight, plenty, and happiness. When adversity comes, it does not give strength; it only tests the strength that has been acquired in prosperity. We do not deny that pain is useful in one way, as a warning against danger. But the danger is itself an evil, the proof being that we try to avoid it; and the usefulness of the warning depends on our ability to shun the danger. There is no use at all in pain when a little child falls against the fire, and is burnt in its helplessness; nor is there any use in pain when a man is cremated alive because he differs from other people on religious questions.

Mrs. Besant draws a fallacious analogy between the athlete and the sufferer. In the first place, the athlete does not suffer; generally speaking, he takes a pleasure in his exercises and performances. In the next place, no man gains any strength from bearing pain, although he may gain strength by exerting himself against the causes of pain. In the third place, the very idea of an athlete is active, while the very idea of a sufferer is passive. Man is the victim of pain, and if he bears it willingly, in a spirit of self-sacrifice, he bears it for the sake of some other victim.

Certainly we learn sympathy by pain. But that is only one illustration of a general law—namely, that we learn sympathy by experience. And the very fact that there is such a strong tendency to associate sympathy with suffering shows how pain and weakness have predominated in human experience. There are a hundred persons ready to help a child when it is in distress for one who will play with it and enter into its child-life. The sympathy of delight is far rarer than the sympathy of sorrow.

The final sentence of Mrs. Besant's panegyric on pain is wonderfully like the stock language of Christian divines. Pain, forsooth, is the great agency of moral and spiritual culture. Well, if it is, there is something wrong with its distribution. The poor, who have little time and means for sinning, get the most of it; and the wealthy, who have plenty of time and means, get the least. The "sternly-gracious friend, whose hands are full of gifts," is a pretty figure of rhetoric; but, as a matter of fact, pain is the colleague of death, and joy is the colleague of life.

This is clearly admitted, although not intentionally, in Mrs. Besant's final paragraph, wherein she declares that man is "to grow upward, to become the Christ in strength not in weakness, triumphant not crucified." Which is a confession that pain is an evil, although a necessary evil. But then the question arises—What made it necessary? And the only answer Mrs. Besant can give is—The will of God. The deity could have started man strong instead of weak; triumphant, instead of crucified. That is what every father would do for his children, if he could. God could, but he did not. Yet we have to listen to eloquent nonsense about his benevolence.

Mrs. Besant's philosophy of pain will not stand the test of criticism. She cannot justify her "God" by appealing to the past or the present. She is only safe when she appeals to the future. No one can contradict her then. At the same time, no one is bound to believe her. There may be reincarnation for all of us; but, also, there may not be. What we have to do is to judge by the known, not by the unknown; by experience, not by speculation. Bring theology down to the test of fact, and it fails miserably. All it can do at the finish is to exclaim, like the gentleman in the melodrama—"No matter, the time will come!" In other words, "God" is an object of faith—whether it be the god of Christianity or of Theosophy. To vindicate him at the bar of reason is to subject him to a painful humiliation.

G. W. FOOTE.

MORALITY WITHOUT RELIGION.

Is morality possible without religion? By morality we mean the principles which rule and regulate the actions, customs, and general habits of mankind; and the word 'religion" is here used in its ecclesiastical sense, as representing Theistic beliefs which are said to be professed by a majority of the human race. Considerable difference of opinion obtains among theologians as to whether the two—morality and religion—are necessarily identical. Some hold that man is born with a God-given capacity to distinguish right from wrong; others urge that it is only in the Bible that the proper guides to human action can be found. But many of the Professors at our Universities have discovered, during the past two decades, that it can no longer be consistently maintained that wisdom speaketh to her children only through the Hebrew or Christian records. The practical question, however, here to be considered is: Can moral conduct exist, and pure and noble lives be led, without the aid of the Christian religion? Of course we do not wish to convey the impression that, in our opinion, there is no morality taught in the New Testament; but we do contend that whatever is of ethical value in that book is not peculiar to Christianity.

Nothing appears to us more clearly demonstrated from history and personal experience than the fact that religion and morality were distinct in their origin, and that in many important instances they have remained so in their development. The first forms of supernatural religion of which we have any record originated in fear and the prostration of reason, while morality was the outcome of intellectual culture and thoughtful experience. This truth has been clearly shown in an able book, The Morals of Evolution, by the Rev. Minot J. Savage. On page thirty-one he observes: "Religion and morality were totally distinct in their origin. At first they had nothing to do with each other. Religion was simply an arrangement between man and his gods, by which he was to gain their favor or ward off their wrath. Morality, on the other hand, is a matter of behavior between man and man." On pages twenty-four and twenty-five Mr. Savage says: "Go far enough back into antiquity to come to the time when large numbers of men were fetish worshippers; when the object of their adoration, their reverence, or fear is a stick, or a stone, or a reptile. Of course, you will understand in a moment that the worship of an object like this cannot be associated in the mind of a worshipper with any necessity for telling the truth, with any necessity for being pure, with any necessity for being charitable and kind towards his fellows." The same principle is enforced in the case of the Indian devotee who fasts and torments himself, not that he may benefit mankind morally by his sufferings, but solely in order that he may acquire favor and power with the gods, Brahma, Vishnu, and Seeva. Such a man is very religious, but he is not necessarily a moral man; for, if his fellow men were to emulate his example, the human race would be enervated if it did not become extinct.

Digitized by Google

That religion does not always ensure the practice of morality, the Bible itself testifies. Take the conduct of Noah, with his drunkenness and injustice; of Abraham with his cruelty to Hagar and her child; of Jacob with his many wives; of Moses and his relentless wars; of Joshua and his merciless slaughters; of Samuel's cold-blooded murder of Agag; of David, whose career was one of incessant crime and hypocrisy; of Solomon with his licentiousness; of Peter, who was not particular to avoid falsehood, or of St. Paul, whose honesty was not unimpeachable. Now, all these men are regarded as having been religious; but who will attempt to defend their actions as being moral? And in our own time, under the very banner of the cross, Christians have defended the most immoral deeds. Who does not remember those iniquitous wars which took place in Zululand and Afghanistan a few years ago? Did not Christian bishops, from their seats in Parliament, openly express their approval of a cold-blooded and sanguinary policy, which brought down upon the nation the opprobrium due to the cowardly and uncalled-for attacker and despoiler of the weak, the unprotected, and the semi-savage; a policy which led to national suffering, national poverty, national degradation and humiliation, and which caused the blush of shame to mantle the cheek of every true-hearted Englishman? Even Mr. Gladstone publicly declared his sorrow at finding so many of his co-religionists going woefully, fatally wrong in matters of national morality. His words were: "To my great pain and disappointment, I have found during the last three years that thousands of Churchmen supplied the great mass of those who have gone lamentably wrong upon questions involving deeply the interests of truth, justice, and humanity. I should hear with much comfort any satisfactory explanation of this very painful circumstance."

These instances should be sufficient to convince any impartial mind of the fallacy of the theologian's assertion that we owe our morality to religion. The lesson of ecclesiastical history is that religion never did necessarily ensure moral conduct, or inspire useful deeds. If it be asked why Christians are more active at present in promoting the public welfare than were their predecessors; why Christianity is more humane than it was at the time of the Inquisition and the Star Chamber; or why to-day its professors deprecate offences which a few centuries ago the Church sought to condone, the answer is that a higher moral sense obtains now than in former times. The desire to practise love, benevolence, and mutual toleration (in a word, morality) has grown with our growth, and strengthened with our strength, until the theologian's statement as to the ethical force of religion has been reversed, so that we find it is morality that has purified religion, not religion that has purified morality.

As regards the contention that God originally endowed man with power to discover moral truth, it is open to the three following objections: (1) The case of Adam, as recorded in Genesis, contradicts the assumption, for it was not until after he went wrong that he found out what was good and what was evil. (2) If man already knew what to do and what to avoid, there was no necessity for the Old and New Testaments to tell him. (3) We have learnt only by experience and education what tends to the honor and welfare of our race. It is by these means that the human family have been able to emerge from their original state of barbarism. Experience and careful study have demonstrated that moral progress does not depend upon any theological belief, but rather upon the proper exercise and development of our intellectual powers. The great Roman statesman and philosopher, Cicero, taught that man's morality was the necessary result of reasoning built upon human necessities. Robert Owen gave practical meaning and force to this teaching by inculcating principles the legitimate adoption of which would probably end in the establishment of a world wherein human character should be formed upon principles based upon right-knowing and right-doing, upon the expulsion of ignorance and the removal of the causes of evil. The only religion of the future which will be worthy of the name as a binding system will be one in which the good of all faiths shall be retained, and from which their errors shall be eliminated; a religion based, not upon supernatural figments and allegories, but upon the eternal laws of nature and the laws of that great kingdom of human nature whose only monarch is man. It is he who must be regarded as the real actor in the great drama of existence, if we wish to adorn life with ethical value and practical utility.

The fact that human sympathy and affection are developed in all lands, under various systems of government and different forms of religion; that virtue in all its forms was practised by so-called "heathens" long before the time of Christ, ought to be sufficient to show that we are not dependent upon the Christian faith for the cultivation of the better part of our natures. It is said that Christianity introduced new motives and sanctions. But what were they? The motives were the hope of heaven and the fear of hell, which are selfish in the extreme, and far below many of the incentives offered by the ancient philosophers. As to supernatural sanctions, they have but little or no practical influence upon the majority of people, who are actuated in daily life more by mundane considerations than by what may happen "beyond the grave."

It is strangely overlooked, by certain students of history, that emotion without knowledge, feeling without reason, ruled the world when man was really in his intellectual infancy, and then morality was at its lowest ebb. When, however, the human intellect was cultivated, and mental freedom illuminated the mind of man, morality developed, and superstition and the power of the Church proportionately declined.

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be concluded.)

THE PRIEST IN POLITICS.

IT has often been remarked in these columns that the struggle in Ireland between the Parnellites and the nominally Nationalist party was one which was interesting to Freethinkers, in that it seemed to foreshadow the partial revolt at least of some of the more enlightened of Irishmen against the growing and ever-threatening arrogance of the Catholic Church. Revolutions at first are not always strictly logical, or at least are not thoroughly defensible on strictly logical grounds. Thus Protestantism is notoriously inconsequential. The claim for the right of private judgment up to a certain point, and the rejection of the claim beyond that point, is absurd. In the same way, the Parnellite claim, that priests have the right to dogmatise on questions of "faith and morals," but not on questions of politics, is indefensible. Yet, as the air clears, we see where we stand, and the pioneers are naturally less able to perceive the drift of their work than those who look back after a long time on what has been accomplished.

Some day the whole story of the priestly intrigue, which succeeded in driving Mr. Parnell from power into an early grave, may be told; and an interesting story it will be. But one thing stands clear in the matter. The Church, in one sense, chose her own ground. It was she who precipitated the fight. And really the Parnellites were forced into the conflict with the Church originally. Parnell was too diplomatic and too opportune a tactician not to avail himself of any help or of any force he could. As long, therefore, as the priests—by force of public opinion—were compelled to follow and aid him, Parnell accepted their services. And so, after the crisis of 1890, Mr. Parnell would not have been the man to commence a gratuitous fight against so powerful a body as the Irish priests. It was they, therefore, who made the fight a question of religion, and used every engine which such an organisation as the Catholic Church possesses to force clerical nominees on the electorate. Priests swamped the Federation meetings, priests blackened the political platforms, priests stood on the hustings, priests flooded the national conventions, priests patrolled the voting-stations, priests swarmed into the polling-booths—they almost stood over the ballot-boxes. Can it be wondered at that Parnell was beaten, that even he went down under such a weight as no man could bear? Great men can do much, but no man is equal to all the world. Napoleon could win battles against enormous odds over and over again. But Napoleon could not stand for ever against a world in arms. The world is greater than any one man. And Parnell—whose name there is nothing outrageous in bracketing with Napoleon's—learnt the same lesson. Parnell worked wonders in that nine months in '91. Another man would not have lasted a week; he stood for the best part of a dreadful year. Nay, if it had been possible for him to have taken care of himself more and husbanded his nerves, he would probably to-day be on the crest of a wave which would carry him back to his old position.

Digitized by Google

However, to come more directly to the way in which priestly influence is manipulated, there is a recent instance to hand which illustrates it admirably. But it is necessary to state a few circumstances first. It must, then, be explained that Dublin is strongly and, in fact, enthusiastically Parnellite. Four out of the nine Parnellite members sit for Dublin seats. The fact is noteworthy, inasmuch as Dublin is naturally less priest-ridden than the rural districts. But it remains—from whatever cause—Dublin is Parnellite. Now, it is an important thing for the Church to capture as many seats for Poor Law Guardians as possible. If there is a Catholic majority on the Board of the Union, they can get all foundlings registered as Catholics. Whether a child, therefore, will be damned or saved depends on the voting of Tom, Dick, and Harry at the elections. However, in Ireland every election down to town-commissioners, or petty local boards of guardians, is fought on questions of national politics. It was Nationalist versus Unionist at the Parliamentary election; it was Nationalist versus Unionist at the Municipal election; it was Nationalist versus Unionist at every election. This is but natural where the national issue overshadows all smaller local issues. But when the Parnell crisis came there was another sub-division. And we had Parnellite, Anti-Parnellite, and Unionist. Now, the Unionist as a rule was a Protestant; the Parnellites and Anti-Parnellites were Catholics. There were numerous exceptions, of course, especially on the Nationalist side, many Nationalists being Protestants. But, as a broad rule, the political division was also a religious division—perhaps the latter was really the cause of the former. Hence, though the Church denounced the Parnellites, it would prefer a Catholic Parnellite as Poor Law Guardian to a Protestant Unionist; for the Catholic Parnellite would serve the purpose of helping to make a Catholic majority on the Board, whilst his Parnellism would be, in the circumstances, merely academic.

And now comes the point. At the Poor Law elections in Dublin there were in some cases Catholic Anti-Parnellites running against Catholic Parnellites, the possible effect of which would be to let in the Protestant Unionist. And as the Parnellites, being in a great majority, as I have said, in Dublin, claimed the seats, it was necessary to draw off the Catholic Anti-Parnellites rather than let the seats fall into the enemy's hands. The Church, in short, had to choose the lesser of two evils. And so Archbishop Walsh addressed a letter to the press, from which the following are extracts:—

> "I am distressed to hear, in connection with the coming Poor-Law elections, that there is danger of some confusion being caused by the action of some apparently over-zealous persons in putting forward, in one or two instances, a number of Catholic candidates in excess of the number of vacancies to be filled. If the contest lay merely between Catholic candidates, the variety of choice thus offered to the electors would seem quite free from objection, and might even have its advantages. But I understand that the policy of starting rival Catholic candidatures is now being acted upon under wholly different circumstances, where it may expose the Catholic vote to the risk of ruinous division in face of a solidly-united vote at the other side."
>
> . . . . . .
>
> "In the peculiar circumstances of our Poor-Law Administration the religious interests of our Catholic poor are seriously at stake in almost every election of Poor-Law Guardians that takes place in Dublin. Therefore, I cannot but feel called upon to express my dissent from the mistaken action of those who, under the influence of zeal for the advancement of any political interest, would jeopardise the election of those candidates to whose care the religious, as well as all other, interests of the poor may safely be entrusted.
>
> "From some things I have come to know of, I can have little doubt that there are places in Ireland where the conflict, even as it now exists, turns largely upon issues that lie at the very root of Catholicity. But I have to do only with Dublin. As regards Dublin, so far as my knowledge of public affairs extends, the conflict, in the various forms in which it has made itself in any way seriously felt amongst us since the tragic day of Mr. Parnell's death in October, 1891, has turned upon issues that are either exclusively political or exclusively personal.
>
> "Upon such issues, as upon any others in the whole wide field of merely political or personal controversy, it surely is open to Catholics, in so far as regards their religious duty, to range themselves at one side or at the other, according as the one side or the other commends itself the more to their personal judgment. The one vital moral issue, the importance of which, as a matter of Catholic principle, necessarily outweighed that of all other issues in the case, has, through the course of events, long since disappeared from its old place of prominence in the dispute.
>
> "If the present disastrous political division amongst our people is to be kept up, I for one feel bound to see that no opportunity is given to keep it up here under cover of any appeal to religious duty."

This letter was dated March 8, '95, and the net purport of it all was that the Catholic Anti-Parnellite candidates were to be withdrawn. But, naturally, the Parnellite press trumpeted the letter as a vindication of their policy; they alleged that it was practically the capitulation of the enemy. And inasmuch as the Parnellites in the country had been greatly persecuted and thwarted by the priests, Archbishop Walsh's letter was circulated with its declaration that the issue is now "either exclusively political or exclusively personal."

Now comes the second act, or rather a sequel which casts a curious light on priestly diplomacy and priestly "honor." It is necessary again to explain. A few weeks ago Mr. John Sweetman, the Anti-Parnellite member for East Wicklow, created a sensation by resigning his seat because he was dissatisfied with the want of back-bone displayed by the McCarthyite party in the House. It is not necessary here to enter into his reasons, but in a singularly straightforward letter to his constituents he explained that he could not consent to keep trooping through the lobbies keeping a Government in office which had admittedly lost its mandate and was powerless to legislate for Ireland. Mr. Sweetman offered, however, to stand again as a Parnellite. The Parnellite party accepted him as their candidate, and the campaign in Wicklow—one of the most charming counties in the United Kingdom—commenced. It is to be presumed that the Parnellite electioneers—in order to disarm clerical intimidation—spread about copies of Archbishop Walsh's letter declaring that the issue was purely a political one. In this way it is possible that a great force which was used on the Anti-Parnellite side at the General Election would have been destroyed. But Archbishop Walsh may not be completely forgetful of past services. The Anti-Parnellites helped the Church before; the Church can return the compliment. The difficulty was the existence of the previous letter. So Archbishop Walsh addressed another letter to the papers. The important passages I quote:—

> "Dear Sir,—I had hardly arrived in Dublin this evening when I happened to hear of a mischievously misleading statement which, it seems, has been industriously circulated during the last few days throughout the eastern division of the County of Wicklow.

Digitized by Google

"The constituency so inopportunely plunged at this Easter time into the excitement of an electoral contest, by the resignation of its representative in Parliament, lies within this diocese of Dublin. The statement which I hasten to contradict is to the effect that it is my wish that the priests of the various parishes throughout the constituency should abstain from all interference in the coming contest.

"I am very far, indeed, from wishing anything of the kind. It has always been my desire that the priests of this diocese should exercise to the fullest extent their natural and legitimate influence in all public affairs.

"I trust that on the present most critical occasion the priests of Wicklow will not fail in their public duty."

The meaning of this letter is plain. A nod is as good as a word, as they say. The priests, of course, were not ordered to interfere; they were left free. The effect of the letter need hardly be dwelt on. The previous declaration of March had served its turn; it had captured the Catholic seats in Dublin, under cover of soft words as to the indifference with which the Church viewed the whole question. In April the muzzle was taken off the priests, the former letter was nulled practically, and it was trusted that the priests "will not fail in their public duty." This is the Church—higgling and bargaining in the political market, swallowing to-day what it said yesterday, like the lowest political charlatan—whose "honor" could not tolerate Parnell. Of course the object of it all is plain to any observant man. Now that Parnell is gone, it is not so much Parnellism or Anti-Parnellism the Church cares for. Practically it is six of one and half-a-dozen of the other. What she really wants is to get the control of Irish politics into her own hands. It is to be hoped that the Irish people will be sufficiently alive to their own interests, and sufficiently mindful of past history, to frustrate that design. For it would mean the "running" of Ireland in the interests of the clerical ring; and the welfare and aspirations of the Irish people would be wholly subordinated to the exigencies of the political ambitions of the papacy. Ireland, in fact, would become a mere counter in the game which the Vatican fondly desires to play in European politics. The triumph of the Church would be the final extinction of the hope of Irish liberty.

FREDERICK RYAN.

THE CHURCH AND MARRIAGE.

THE hold that the Church still keeps upon the minds of the people is due less to belief in its theological dogmas than to the laws and customs that bring the clergy into relation with the people in every great event of life. In birth, marriage, baptism, affliction, and death the priest or minister has to be sought to perform legal rites, give consolation, or administer sacraments. This makes the clergy indispensable to a respectable life; and, to avoid legal disability or social contumely, people who are secretly opposed to religion give their outward support to the Church. In the province of Quebec the State comes to the aid of the Church by refusing to permit the civil registration of births, or to allow marriage by a magistrate, making the clergy indispensable in these matters, even to those who would have the courage to brave social opinion and do without the ministrations of the self-styled ambassadors of God. In Quebec a child has no legal existence, and is not deemed to have been born, unless a minister of religion certifies that it has been baptised by him, or has been acknowledged before him by the father.

As belief in dogma subsides, the clergy realise the importance of maintaining these laws and customs to prevent people from falling off from their support of the Church. Hence we see a growing disposition to enforce Sunday laws, which give to the clergy a business monopoly of one day in seven, and to insist on the necessity of clerical aid in the important functions of life. Persons who marry without priestly sanction are stigmatised as "adulterers," and those who are buried without clerical ceremonies are abused as "infidels," by those who have lost the expected burial fees and missed the prestige of recognition.

That the marriage edicts of the Romish Church are not founded upon divine authority is shown by the fact that they can be set aside for money, which of course would not be the case were they commanded by God. There is no Bible saying that can be distorted into reading, "Thou shalt not marry unless thou payest to the priest five hundred dollars." Yet restrictions against the marriage of relatives are set aside upon payment of a fee "for kindred," as it is called. The evil effects of this priestly control may be illustrated by two examples. In a country village in Ontario a man became intimate with his cousin. Finding that a child was to be born, and desiring to protect his cousin from infamy, the man went to a priest to request him to perform the marriage ceremony. Learning that the parties were cousins, the priest refused his consent to the marriage unless he was paid $500 "for kindred." This it was impossible to do; and, to avoid disgrace, drugs were administered which resulted in the girl's death, the Church thus being the indirect cause of murder.

In another case in the same district a man desired to marry his brother's widow. He applied to the priest, who refused to perform the ceremony of marriage except upon payment of $500 "for kindred." Consulting a friend, a stratagem was suggested and acted out. The man waited upon the priest with the woman, who had adroitly enlarged her person. The man, with assumed shamefacedness, confessed "criminal intimacy," and, the eyes of the priest having verified the fact by a survey of the rotund form of the female, he kindly and humanely granted the dispensation. Fourteen months later the couple brought to the priest for baptism an infant of a few days. He performed the ceremony, but asked, in some perplexity, "What became of the other baby?" Then the man told him that the baby was a pillow, and he received such a lecture as the experience of a father confessor well enabled the priest to give. But the marriage had been secured, and the Church had caused the trick and lie. To protect morality, immorality had been caused. As long as the Church can secure legal and social recognition it will maintain its tyrannical control of the lives and fortunes of men, and it is necessary not only to disprove the dogmas of religion, but to destroy the legal prerogatives and social prestige of the clergy, before the "Church of Christ" will cease to be a hindrance to the progress of man.

To secure these results two courses are necessary. First, to work for repeal legislation, which will secularise the Church, make it pay taxes like honest people, and remove from it all civil authority, as has been done in France. Secondly, let men have the courage of their convictions and ignore the Church. If a man doesn't believe in baptism, let him refuse to have his child christened. If he doesn't believe in Jonah, let him not send his child to Sunday-school, where this fable is told as a fact. It is a shame that for the sake of entertainment or fashion children should be taught falsehoods that they will have to unlearn. If he is a Secularist, let him secure civil marriage, friendly consolation, and secular burial, and never acknowledge the existence of a class of men who, by a professional espousal of supernatural beliefs, are the enemies of mental advancement.

But it is useless as well as senseless to abuse the clergy personally for these evils. They are often sincere men, who are the victims of an erroneous education, or else they yield to the demand of the people, who offer them pay for services that the clergy know have no foundation in reason or natural right. It is the people themselves who are to blame, and the remedy is in their own hands. The Church would fall in a day should the people unitedly ignore its claims. Let those who are already so enlightened as to perceive the falsity of its pretences consistently refuse to lend their support. Their example will do more than any amount of teaching to deliver the world from the control of ecclesiastics.

In Les Ruines Volney imagines a judgment of the priests and rulers before a celestial tribunal. His words may be translated as follows:—

"'What, then, teachers of the people, is it thus that you have deceived them?'

"And the disconcerted priests answered: 'O legislator! we are men; and the people are so superstitious! They have themselves provoked our errors.'

"And the kings said: 'O legislator! the people are so servile and so ignorant, they have prostrated themselves before the yoke that we hardly dared to show them.'

"Then the legislator, turning to the people, said:

Digitized by Google

'People, remember what you have just heard. These are two profound truths. Yes, you yourselves cause the evils of which you complain; it is you who encourage the tyrants by a cowardly adulation of their power, by an imprudent exaggerated admiration of their false charities, by abasement in obedience, by licence in liberty, by the credulous welcome of all imposture. Upon whom will you punish the faults of your ignorance and your cupidity?'

"And the confused people remained in a sad silence."

—Secular Thought. ROBERT C. ADAMS.

AN OLD MALE FABLE.

I WONDER if we, as a sex, shall have always flung at us that fable of Eve plucking the apple! Yes, as long as the lean-visaged, be-whiskered gentry occupying the pulpit continue to hurl it at us. It is not long since that J. B. Simmons, before the Baptist Publication Society, said: "Beautiful as woman was when God created her, we cannot deny that in morals and religion she was a deplorable failure. From the day she turned her back upon God and God's word (both of which things she did without any influence from Adam) she became a heathen. Heathenism originated in her heart."

I presume Simmons was in the Garden of Eden at the time, and knows just how much influence Adam used! Of course, men have always believed that their sex possesses all that is good and noble, while it is women who are ever vile and depraved. Does not the Bible ask arrogantly: "How can he be clean who is born of woman?" Is not that sufficient for the world of men? How they have hounded us on to the bitter end. How they have flagellated us, scorned us, and bowed our heads in the dust, because of this Biblical statement, and the book's innuendoes concerning our moral lack! Oh, the bitter humiliation that some sensitive women have endured at the stigma! Some of them—not all! There are women among us who are so bound to the Bible, so attached to the Church and its sleek, broadcloth-coated preachers, that if the latter told them that women were made from the ribs or hoofs of the Devil, they would believe it. These women sit in the church and listen with equanimity to the clerical blackguarding of their sex. But you may be sure that something is lacking in their mental department—"rooms to rent," or something of the kind. I never see a bright-faced, quick-witted, brainy woman, with the faculty of penetrating the superficial mass dubbed religion, attending the churches to-day. None of it for them! They know that the Bible was written by men, and they will have none of it. The devout churchwomen of to-day are of the plastic order. They can sit in the pews and hear their sex libelled with impunity. The lineaments of their putty-faced physiognomy never change a particle under the fire. Why? Because they believe that Eve brought sin into the world through the plucking of the apple! They believe that women are depraved and born immoral. The minister has said so, and they believe it; poor creatures with petrified thinking faculties which would disgrace a stone image. EVA A. CASSELL.

An Irishman bought a cow from a Protestant, and proceeded to pour holy water (as he supposed) on the animal's back, making the cross with due solemnity. Having got a bottle of turpentine by mistake, the more he poured the more the cow kicked. He tried the holy water again, when the cow broke loose, kicked him over and dashed away, to the surprise of Paddy and his Bridget, who exclaimed: "Holy Vargin, and mither of Moses! isn't the Protestant strong in her yet?"

A lady in the North had asked her son, who was going up to town, to bring back with him a certain motto for the Christmas decoration in the parish church. On arrival at his destination, he found he had lost all recollection as to size and description of motto. Thereupon he telegraphed back, and received the following answer: "For unto us a child is born; unto us a son is given; 9 ft. long by 2 ft. wide."

Friend—"How are you doing now?" Scribbler—"First rate. Rev. Mr. Saintlie and I have gone into partnership. Making money hand-over-fist." Friend—"Eh? how do you manage?" Scribbler—"I write books, and he denounces them."

ACID DROPS.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH carried his Oaths Bill into law, but many judges are either ignorant of its contents or are bent on gratifying their bigotry at the expense of justice. A case in point has just arisen in the Towcester County Court. Mr. G. T. Smith, a juryman, claimed to affirm, on the ground that taking an oath was contrary to his religious belief. This was a perfect compliance with the terms of the Oaths Act, and the judge was bound to let Mr. Smith affirm; but, instead of doing so, he impertinently inquired what was Mr. Smith's religious belief; and on his declining to answer, as no part of his duty, he was ordered to stand aside, and another juryman was taken in his place. Judge Snagge may be a very good Christian, but he discredits the seat of justice by usurping illegal powers.

The only way to get this point raised in the Court of Queen's Bench is for some juryman, who is not allowed to affirm, to inform the judge that he respectfully denies the right of the court to detain him as a spectator, and then to leave the place and see what will happen. If anything does happen, we will see that the matter is fought out to the bitter end.

Some time ago "General" Booth expelled a lot of Salvationists at Camberwell for imagining they had any local rights. These castaways have organised themselves as "Free Salvationists," and advertise themselves as "All alive! Growing rapidly!" Yes, yes; that is all very well—in its way; but Booth gets the cash, and while he does that he will smile at disaffection.

At the annual meeting of the Nottinghamshire District of the English Church Union, held at Newark, the Rev. W. C. Leeper lamented the small attendance. He thought all Evangelicals should join his Romanising body, for the fight was not going to be between the Church and Dissent, but between Religion and Atheism. He said that even at the Wesleyan Chapel at Nottingham the minister burst into tears because he was overcome at seeing his chapel with only a handful of people, while he had met hundreds going out of Nottingham in brakes and pleasure-vans and on bicycles, intent on pleasure. That Wesleyan minister crying over other people putting their one day of leisure to some use must be a curiosity.

At Patterson, New Jersey, there was a Chinese Sunday-school, with over twenty male scholars, representing the Flowery Land. That school has come to grief. The scholars would have none but female Christian teachers; then the aspirants for heavenly wisdom wanted each a separate teacher. Finally, the head teacher issued an order to her young lady assistants not to take private walks with the Chinamen, lest scandals should arise. Denied these aids to Gospel knowledge, the heathen Chinee doesn't care to know anything further about Jesus Christ.

It was stated before the Bristol Baptist Association that at the village of Hanham two young people were married a little while ago at the Baptist Chapel, and the vicar had been pestering them ever since to marry over again in his church, as their union, he said, was a civil but not a religious one.

At the same meeting the Radstock Baptist man of God said that at Radstock the parish magazine, issued by the rector, bracketed the notice of the burial of a respectable Nonconformist with that of the burial of an illegitimate child as "Buried without the services of the Church."

Sir Gilbert Parker, Governor of Lagos, in a letter to the Times, refers to the failure of missionary enterprise in Africa. "It is not surprising," he says, "that the negro fails to comprehend the phenomena of the Trinity; many cultivated Europeans admit the same difficulty." He reminds Bishop Tugwell that the best remedy for the gin disease is Mohammedanism, which is a teetotal religion, while "Christianity and drink usually go together." "There is a dignity and self-respect about the Mohammedan negro," Sir Gilbert Parker says, "which is looked for in vain in his Christian brother. Compare his neat turban and decent flowing-robes with the stove-pipe hat and broadcloth of the semi-educated town native, labelled 'Christian' all over; and a very objectionable person this so-called Christian usually is."

The Westminster Gazette reads a lesson to that angel of light, the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who wants to weed the Liberal party of all but the teetotal section of the Nonconformists. Self-respect, the Westminster says, would "shine forth a little more pleasantly if not combined with reckless vilification of others"; and it protests against "foolish and irrelevant personalities" and the "intemperate language" of the more pious supporters of temperance. Such writing as this is little short of blasphemy. Only the irreclaimably wicked would find fault, especially in sharp language, with a saint like the editor of the Methodist Times.

Digitized by Google

Our London contemporary, the Morning, wants to know how it is that Mr. Price Hughes, who is a vice-president of the National Anti-Gambling League, inserts advertisements in his paper of excursions to the Manchester races. Can it be that the advertisements are for the benefit of tract distributors?

Professor E. Hall has shown the feasibility of the Red Sea miracle—at least to the satisfaction of certain members of the Victoria Institute. He asserts that a gale of wind on Lake Menzaleh was so strong as to sweep away the waters, leaving all sailing vessels resting on the damp bed of the lake. If Professor Hall had seen two millions of people crossing, with the "waters a wall unto them on their right hand and on their left," while the waters drowned others by the stretching out of a man's hand, he might have considered the miracle paralleled. But he seems to forget that a miracle explained is no miracle at all.

Dr. Henson, of Chicago, has been denouncing Mrs. Stanton and her Woman's Bible. He says the work is to be "issued at the dictation and under the supervision of a woman who is an avowed disbeliever in it," and declares "her strategic purpose, however, is to reach a class of women who as yet have not lost faith in the Bible, and under the pretence of revision she proposes to turn loose upon the Bible a horde of so-called revisers, who shall root around in it until they have effectually destroyed it." All that is necessary to disgust women with the Bible is to show them exactly what a beastly savage old book it is, and we fear the woman's revision will rather tend to cover this up than to expose it.

Adjectives, etc., from the lips of a lecturer for the Christian Truth Defence Society on Peckham Rye: "Dirty blowflies"—"Rats"—"Fools"—"Thick-headed"—"Starve-gutted"—"Humbugs"—"Dirty hounds." These are all we can condescend to print. The rest must be printed by the Christian Truth Defence Society.

The rector of Clifton, Beds., after having proclaimed the banns of marriage between Mr. Thomas and Miss Alcock, and after the arrangements for marriage had been made, declined to allow the marriage to proceed, on the ground that the lady had not been baptised. A question was asked about the matter in the House of Commons, and Mr. Asquith declared that the action of the rector was without legal warrant. This, however, is not much consolation to the parties insulted. Surely it is time marriage was made a civil ordinance, as in other countries.

The Marisberg Asylum in Germany, which was under the control of monks, was conducted on truly religious principles. Dr. Capellmann, the head physician, let the brothers tell him what the patients' symptoms were, and then began his treatment founded on what they said, the treatment being fasting, penitential girdles, flagellation, and other means of mortifying the flesh. The Asylum has been temporarily closed.

Kieff is the Russian Mecca, and pilgrims travel there from all parts, because it was there where the warrior, Saint Vladimir, first forced Christian baptism upon his heathen subjects. The peasants make the pilgrimage on foot, and it is astonishing to learn from what great distances these poor devotees come, often suffering incredible hardships on the way, and not unfrequently sinking under fatigue and hunger.

Larks (June 17) devotes a column to "An Atheist's Execution," giving an account of the death of the Chevalier Lefevre de la Barre, who was executed in 1766 for having insulted an image of the Savior. He behaved bravely, even flippantly, at the scene of execution. Voltaire interested himself much on his behalf, and mention of the incident is made in our little book on Voltaire. There is, however, no evidence that la Barre was an Atheist. As he boasted of having read Voltaire, it is rather probable that he was a Deist.

Travelling mediums, who materialise your grandfather, give you a portrait of your dead mother, and slate-writing from George Washington, for one dollar, and travelling evangelists, who convert sinners at fifty cents a head, in our opinion all belong to the same class of frauds and humbugs that every honest person ought to ignore. They are each and all guilty of obtaining money by false pretences. The woods are full of that class of criminals.—Freethought Magazine.

We see from Light that Mrs. Besant and Colonel Olcott have been visiting the great American test mejum, Mr. John Slater, who is said to be the person who, under the name of Henry Slade, was convicted of fraud on Dr. Ray Lankaster and Dr. Donkin in 1876. As the mejum's most renowned performances are with slates, his name seems rather appropriate, whether he be Slade or only a spiritual double of that worthy.

The English Churchman is much annoyed that at the Liverpool banquet to the Shahzada, "in spite of the presence of the Bishop of Liverpool, grace was said by the leader of the local Mohammedan community." It complains that "nothing has been done to remind the Shahzada that England is a Christian land, and that to her Christianity her greatness is due."

The Shahzada probably knows too much to credit this. He knows that the Christians of India are the most criminal of the population, and that Christianity has left the Abyssinians almost barbarians. He sees here that Christians act right in the teeth of the doctrines they profess.

"The Secret of England's Greatness" is the title of a well-known picture representing the Queen presenting a Bible to an Eastern chief. Sir Henry Ponsonby, the Queen's Secretary, was instructed to write that Her Majesty never made use of any such expression.

Two dead bodies were discovered on Sunday morning at Burley-hill, Allestree, near Derby. "Vermin killer" had been taken by the deceased, one of whom was a young lady named Naylor, the other being the Rev. A. E. Constable, of Guiseley, near Leeds.

George Schrofield Stanford, clerk, at Gurney's Bank, Yarmouth, suffered from religious mania. One evening he took his sweetheart for a walk, pushed her into the water, and knelt on her until she was dead. He then drowned himself. Another blessing of religion!

The Rev. Robert Barlow Gardiner cannot stand whistling. A lad named Cassal blew a whistle as he was walking in front of the man of God, who thereupon struck him with a walking stick. The magistrate fined him sixpence, with two shillings costs.

It is a Christian country. The Echo (June 24) says: "Within the last two weeks fourteen bodies of murdered infants have been found in London." Let us haste to convert the far-off heathen.

At a meeting of the Universities Mission to Central Africa, held at King's College, the Rev. Horace Waller, a missionary, dwelt on the spirituality of the natives, which was more marked than in European nations. A remarkable instance of this was related by Mr. Waller, when trying once to save the life of a man accused by the witch-doctor of raising a terrific storm. The missionary took the man by the arm, and exhorted him to go to the chief and state he did not cause the storm. When he got to the tent, however, he said, much to the confusion of the missionary, "I did it." The missionary is probably quite right in regarding superstition and spirituality as identical.

Buckle was ridiculed for including earthquakes among the causes of superstition. Yet, since the shocks at Florence, there is hardly a street in which there are not lighted shrines with a view to better protection.

To-Day publishes a sermon by the Rev. T. W. M. Lund, of Liverpool, on the late Sir John Seeley's Ecce Homo. Mr. Lund says it is the object of Christ's society to fuse mankind and minimise its selfishness. How beautiful! But what is the fact? Why, at this very moment, the Christians are engaged all over the world in stealing land from the "heathen," and snarling at each other, as Mr. Herbert Spencer says, while the theft is being perpetrated. And it is in Christian countries that the race for wealth is carried on with the utmost greed and recklessness.

"Peter Lombard," in the Church Times, says that mothers sometimes confound baptism with vaccination, and tells of a young man who did not attend confirmation, although he had been specially prepared for it, because he thought he should have to strip to be examined, and he did not relish the idea.

The Bishop of London thinks that clergymen should not refuse to marry divorced persons if innocent, but only if guilty. His theory seems to be that the innocent party in a divorce is so unmarried that he or she can remarry, while the guilty party is still so married that he or she cannot form a new union.

The Prince of Wales does not like long sermons; nor do the soldiers. The Rev. A Robins at Windsor is known as the "Soldier's Bishop," and the Prince is said to have told him once, when he promised to attend church, that the sermon must not last more than five minutes. The soldier's bishop ascended the pulpit, watch in hand, and completed his sermon in exactly three minutes; and the Prince congratulated him on the fact at the luncheon at the barracks after church.

Digitized by Google

Professor Chamberlain gives the following as a genuine piece of Japanese English, by a native who has visited England: "The Testimony [i.e., Testament] of English said that he that lost the common sense, he never any benefit though he had gained the complete world." The Jap, in secularising the gospel text, has certainly improved it.

A little while ago Austrian farmers were, like our own, praying for rain. Now floods have come in districts where the corn was nearly ripe, and great damage has been done. In some places houses have been swept away and people drowned.

The English Churchman is not satisfied with the late Government having hindered the band of the Coldstream Guards from playing at the elevation of the Host at the opening of the Roman Catholic cathedral. It asks that the Act of 10 George IV., c. vii., sec. 26, which prohibits processions with religious emblems, should be put in force against the Catholics. From its description it appears to be equally applicable to the Salvation Army.

The use of incense and vestments in his diocese has been vexing the Bishop of Exeter, who bids his clergy to cease these luxuries—at any rate until the law permits their indulgence.

Ibn Abbas, who some years ago explained in the North American Review why he prefers Islam to Christianity, now compares their effects on marriage and divorce from the Moslem standpoint. He says that there are fewer divorces in Cairo with 250,000 inhabitants than in the county of Ashtabula, Ohio, with but 37,000. He says: "Divorce is repulsive to Islam, and every writer of the Moslem faith has condemned it."

Ibn Abbas says: "The polygamy of Islam has come in for a full share of unrighteous indignation on the part of Christian writers. But there is no evidence that Jesus the Nazarene (upon whom be peace) prohibited polygamy." He declares that Moses sanctions, and Jesus never abrogated, what is essentially the Moslem rule.

Ibn Abbas further remarks: "History tells us that Napoleon the Great did, under the sanction of the chief Bishop of the Christian Church, divorce the wife of his youth to suit the ambitious aspirations of his destiny. This has no parallel in Moslem history. The divine laws of Islam, and its judicious licence of polygamy, have rendered such a condition of things unnecessary. It is in this, as in many other instances, that the religion of Islam is better suited to the demands of social and national life. Mr. Syud Ameer Aly, a judge of the Calcutta High Court, has stated that 'ninety-five per cent. of the Mohammedans of India are, either by conviction or necessity, monogamists,' and the late General Macgregor is responsible for the statement that 'only two per cent. of the population of Persia enjoy the questionable luxury of plurality of wives.'"

Parnellism without Parnell does not seem to be a very distinguished article. Its leaders are under a strong temptation, which they cannot resist, of playing to the gallery and damning everything that is British, whether good, bad, or indifferent. The Independent, for instance, in rejoicing over the fall of the Liberal Government, exclaims: "Away with them, down with them, especially that charlatan, John Morley—a wretched sneak, a tricky Agnostic," etc., etc. Surely it ill becomes those who cry out against the priest in politics to raise the odium theologicum against Mr. Morley. It is enough to damp the enthusiasm of many Freethinkers in this country who have stood up in the darkest hours for justice to Ireland.

Perhaps, after all, the Redmonite organ is not in the least sincere in this denunciation of Mr. Morley as a "tricky Agnostic." It may be only the natural gambol of the professional politician, who is becoming the curse of every democratic country. Talk about Cromwell! Why, to our mind, it would be far better to hand over the reins of power to one man of commanding intellect and character than to suffer the rule of hundreds of little ambitious office-seekers, who make a living by pandering to every prejudice and superstition of their clients.

A new sect of religious worshippers have made their appearance at Zalma, Mo. The Rev. Joseph Shrader is the shepherd of the new flock. The centre of attraction is a young girl, who makes periodical flights to heaven, so it is claimed, returning with messages for the believers. The Rev. Mr. Shrader claims the Bible to be out of date altogether, as it is not consistent with modern times, and proposes to establish a new code, obtained through the instrumentality of his "angel."

On Long Island, New York, there is a village named Babylon, and a local magnate has made himself ridiculous by issuing an order to the constable to arrest all persons caught riding bicycles through the village on Sunday. The constable says he cannot do it, for the cyclists come in hundreds, and he has no assistance.

A writer in Blackwood's says that "priests cannot change their priestly countenance if they wished. For some mysterious reason the subcutaneous tissue over the cheek-bones and under the jaws of the cleric's face gets an undue supply of nourishment, which leaves distinctive marks, while the consciousness of a share in the Apostolic legacy gives a muscular set to the lips."

The French Catholic papers are still harping on "the bankruptcy of science." They cannot possibly mean that systematised knowledge is bankrupt; but good phrases ever were commendable, and this is used to mean the hoped-for bankruptcy of a republic under which science and discussion are free. The reactionaries want to administer the estate—not of science, of which they know nothing, but of the body politic, which they hope to administer. Brunetière was induced at the Vatican, not to rehabilitate the story of creation, or of Joshua causing the sun to stand still, but to help restore the influence of the Church in the State.

God indulges in occasional freaks of monstrosity, even in fishes. A shark, recently washed ashore at Midian, British Columbia, had two distinct tails, three perfect eyes, and what appeared to be the rudiment of a fin or flipper hanging to the under jaw.

The Lancaster Spy charges Mr. G. R. Kirlew, of the Strangeways Boys Refuge, with indecent conduct under pretence of religion. Mr. Kirlew pursues the proprietor and editor for libel. They plead justification, and produce witnesses to show the charges are true, and made in the public interest. The case is not yet adjudicated.

His brethren of the Dundee Free Presbytery exonerated the Rev. J. A. Simpson, of Bonnet-hill Church, from the charges of indecency made against him, but affectionately admonished him to be more guarded in his conduct in future.

At Chelmsford Assizes the Rev. R. Temple, rector of Thorpemorieux, near Ipswich, consented to a verdict against him for £50 and costs for slandering Miss Emily Carpenter, a schoolmistress. On returning from a holiday, she found a rumor circulated in the village that she was a mother of two children. The rumor was traced to the defendant and his wife, the parsonage having an antipathy to the schoolhouse.

Ananias Again!

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has recently turned to lesslobbering Bradlaugh! This is atrocious. Let us have his venom in any form but that. Let the donkey kick and bray against Bradlaugh to his heart's content, but let him not praise him. That is loathsome to a degree we cannot describe. The lying Hughes says that Mr. Bradlaugh promised his constituents that "there would be no propagation of Atheism" in Northampton. Well, Mr. Symes was very intimate with Mr. Bradlaugh; he went repeatedly to Northampton to propagate Atheism, almost immediately after Mr. Bradlaugh's first election; and never heard or read till now that Mr. Bradlaugh objected to it, or that he had promised his constituents that such should not be done. The local papers will show that Mr. Symes lectured there twice in the Square to immense crowds, on "Christianity the Worst Foe of Liberty," and "Christianity the Worst Foe of Truth." Out of those lectures sprang a debate with a Mr. Barber, in the Town Hall, extending over four nights, we think. At a later date our editor lectured there again on "Lost! The Christian Heaven." And, on another occasion, he met the Rev. Stewart D. Headlam in debate in the Northampton Town Hall. The local papers will afford information as to dates, etc. The lectures and debates embittered the Christians, but we never knew that they called upon Mr. Bradlaugh to put a stop to them. Had Mr. Symes remained in England, it is extremely probable that he would have visited Northampton on many subsequent occasions. Mr. Hughes evidently finds it congenial to lie. That lying spirit which deceived Ahab's prophets seems now to be monopolised by the rev. gentleman.—Liberator.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, June 30, Camberwell Secular Hall, 61 New Church-road: 7.30, "All About Angels."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS'S ENGAGEMENTS.—June 30, Milton Hall, North London. July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

R. S. PENGELLY.—Many thanks. Such cuttings are extremely useful.

W. J. CHIVERS.—Thanks. See paragraph.

C. MORTON.—Were it not for the power of early association, the Bible would never hold its present place even as literature. Parts of it are sublime, and some passages are pathetic; and the authorised English Version bears the strong stamp of simplicity, having been executed when our language was in its youthful prime. But it is absurd to compare the Bible with Shakespeare. He is more sublime than the Bible at its best; and his intellect, imagination, fancy, wit, and humor have furnished the world with a great rich feast; whereas the Bible supplies only a few simple dishes. How a man appreciates Shakespeare is a fair test of his intelligence; we would even say, a fair test of his character.

DOUBTER.—Darwin on God, by G. W. Foote, contains all the important passages on religion in the great scientist's works and in his letters. Read that little volume, and you will see that Darwin was as much an Atheist as the editor of the Freethinker. We do not remember that the late Professor Tyndall ever made a direct avowal of Theistic belief. Mr. Herbert Spencer and Professor Huxley are Agnostics; that is, they have no "God"; that is, they are Atheists, as we understand the term.

W. FARMER.—We consider Lotze an immensely overrated thinker. He is lauded by the "advanced" Christians, who wish to obtain a new lease of life for their system, and who naturally cling to any eminent writer who countenances their general supernaturalism. Some day or other we will devote an article to Lotze's views on religion.

O. N. WELD.—Forming a company or a registered society is the only way to acquire property for Freethought purposes until the law allows us to hold property under a trust deed. Shareholders can receive interest if the enterprise succeeds financially; not otherwise. We know the Freethought party is not a wealthy one, and that there are many claims upon its generosity.

A. LIDDLE.—In our next.

G. NARWIPER.—We believe we noticed your pamphlet when it first appeared. It is not usual to notice the same pamphlet twice.

W. S. R.—Perhaps it is as well to leave the matter as it stands for the present. We certainly think that Freethinkers should, as far as possible, deal with newsagents who are liberal enough to supply Secular publications.

J. ROBERTS (Liverpool) wishes to ask Mr. George Wise whether it is the rule at his meetings to ask those who offer opposition their names and addresses; or whether, if not the rule, it has sometimes occurred; and, if it has occurred, what was the object of the inquisition?

J. J. R.—"The Lord hath need of them" is an excuse for many shady transactions.

W. H. MORRISH (Killarney).—Your example of distributing Freethinkers while on your holidays is a good one, and will, we hope, be followed.

X. Y. Z. and H. MALBONE.—The reference to Numbers xxi. 17, 18, on p. 396, obviously should be Numbers xxxi. 17, 18.

W. J. HOCKSON (Engcobo).—Thanks for paper. We are pleased to see there are Freethinkers in Zambuland.

C. WRIGHT.—Slade was sentenced to three months' imprisonment at Bow-street about the end of October, 1876. About the same time the Rev. Dr. Monck was convicted at Huddersfield. The revelations of the Fox sisters were made in the New York Herald, September, 1888.

J. KEAST (Bristol).—We accept Mr. Grinstead's disclaimer, but it is to be regretted that he did not express himself less ambiguously. Glad to hear that the Secular meetings in Eastville Park continue to be successful. Mr. Putnam is roaming the country, and we have not his address. No doubt, if this meets his eye, he will send you his subjects for July 14.

J. SIDDON.—See paragraphs. We pass by the libel on Colonel Ingersoll. It is bad policy to notice these beastly slanderers unless you can punish them. They have no sense of shame, and they glory in an advertisement.

JAS. NEATE (hon. sec.) reports that the Bethnal Green Branch, which is a poor one in a very poor neighborhood, collected £2 5s. on Hospital Sunday.

J. TOMLINSON—(1) It does not matter a straw whether Mr. Hughes owns the Methodist Times or partly owns it; he is its editor, and responsible for what appears in it. (2) Our extract was correctly taken from Light.

JAS. PAYNE.—See "Acid Drops." We fear that nothing will be done to check the contravention of the Oaths Act until one of our men gets into Parliament. Soliciting Christians is no use; you must frighten them to get any justice out of them, at least towards Freethinkers.

J. G. DOBSON.—See paragraph. We hope the rowdyism will be checked.

D. F. GLOAK.—Sky-pilot Campbell, of whom you speak, may be a zealous Christian, but he is not overburdened with veracity. It is utterly untrue that the Secularists put the bailiffs into Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh's house. He had no standing at all in the Hall of Science libel case. He asked to be included, but our solicitors treated his letter with silent disdain. You will find all the information in our pamphlet, a copy of which should be purchased and preserved by every Freethinker. Orders for literature should be sent direct to Mr. Forder.

N.S.S. BENEVOLENT FUND.—Miss E. M. Vance acknowledges:—T. Carne, 15s.; F. Swatts, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. Small, 2s. 6d.

W. SCRIVNER.—Received, but too late for notice this week.

A. LEWIS.—Your letter raises an interesting question. It shall appear in our next issue.

H. W.—Thanks; but we cannot use it without the name and date of the paper.

LIVERPOOL.—Of course we treat your letter as "private." See our reply to another correspondent on the same matter.

J. E. STAPLETON.—Thanks for your long (not too long) and interesting letter, with most of which we heartily concur. No doubt the course adopted at the Conference will give substantial satisfaction all round.

PAPERS RECEIVED.—Cape Mercury—Dundee Courier—Isle of Man Times—Truthseeker—Public Opinion—Liberty—Rangoon Times—Light—Crescent—New York Freeman's Journal—Manchester Courier—Progressive Thinker—Clarion—Justice—Finchley Free Press—Church Reformer—Bristol Mercury—Newark Herald—Northampton Daily Reporter—Essex and Suffolk News—Post—Two Worlds—Freidenker—Twentieth Century—Der Arme Teufel.

FRIENDS who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

LETTERS for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

CORRESPONDENCE should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

ORDERS for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

SCALE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

IT being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

LECTURE NOTICES must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

SPECIAL.

THE National Secular Hall Society is still in possession of the Hall of Science, but circumstances, into which I need not enter this week, render it inadvisable to hold our meetings there for the present. I have therefore had another hall engaged, in order not to break the continuity of our propaganda. It is not so large as the Hall of Science, but it is large enough for our summer meetings. The only difficulty is that we cannot charge for admission. We shall, however, make a collection at the entrance—a silver one for the body of the hall, and a copper one for the gallery; and in the special circumstances of the case Secularists will of course give as much as would in other circumstances be exacted.

Milton Hall is known to many Freethinkers already. It is situated in Hawley-crescent, Kentish Town-road. It is two minutes' walk from the "Mother Red Cap," three minutes' walk from the Camden Town Station of the North London Railway, and five minutes' walk from Camden-road Station of the Midland Railway. Tram cars from Hampstead and Highgate pass the door. Cars from Holloway, Islington, or King's Cross pass Camden Town Station. Persons coming by the underground railway, and getting out at Portland-road or Gower-street, can take a penny ride on the cars running from the corner of Euston-road and the Hampstead-road. Omnibuses run from Camberwell, Victoria, and Westminster direct to Camden Town. Milton Hall is really very accessible, and we hope it will be crowded this evening (June 30). North London Freethinkers should do their best to fill it to the doors.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Charles Watts will be the lecturer. His subject is to be "Cromwell and English Freedom," with special reference to religious freedom. The following Sunday the lecturer will be Mr. J. P. Gilmour, of Glasgow, and on that occasion I shall take the chair.

The whole subject of our propaganda in London is occupying my attention, and I shall shortly suggest some new developments. G. W. FOOTE.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote lectures in the Camberwell Secular Hall this evening (June 30), his subject being, "All About Angels." This lecture will be new to South London Freethinkers.

Mr. Charles Watts lectured at the London Hall of Science on Sunday evening. He was in excellent form after a recent brief holiday, and his lecture was very warmly applauded; indeed, he received an ovation on resuming his seat. Considering the time of the year and the heat of the weather, there was a capital audience. Mr. Foote, who presided, made an announcement with respect to future meetings, the particulars of which will be found in our "Special."

Mr. S. P. Putnam, our American visitor, lectured three times at Manchester on Sunday, to large and appreciative audiences. "His kindly and genial manner," the Branch secretary writes, "combined with his large store of humorous anecdotes, completely won the hearts of his hearers, and he was greeted time after time with rounds of applause." Several new members joined the Branch during the day.

The Plymouth secretary desires all members to be present next Sunday to make arrangements for Mr. Putnam's visit. The treasurer will be glad to receive quarterly subscriptions, which are now due.

Mr. C. Cohen has been having a lively time in the North. His first two meetings at Stockton were very large and orderly, and fair opposition was offered by a Methodist minister; but the third meeting was riotous, and Mr. Cohen and his friends were severely hustled; indeed, they had to be protected by the police, who guarded Mr. Thwaites's shop, where the little band of Secularists had taken shelter. Fortunately, the general public is much impressed with Mr. Cohen's ability and courtesy. At Middlesboro' there was a similar experience. The first open-air meeting was orderly, but the second had to be given up after Mr. Cohen had spoken for about twenty minutes. He is to visit the district again shortly, when we hope he will meet with a more civilised reception. Freethinkers in the neighborhood who wish to assist in carrying on this propaganda should communicate with Mr. J. G. Dobson, 33 Trent-street, Stockton-on-Tees.

Mr. Cohen held two large and successful meetings on Newcastle Moor last Sunday. A few followers of the man Powell tried to create a disturbance, but their efforts were a failure. Newcastle friends are to have Mr. Putnam with them on July 7, and a tea will be arranged for visitors from outlying places. Those who mean to sit down to that repast should communicate with the Branch secretary, Mr. J. G. Bartram.

Our readers will find on another page a full advertisement of the London Secular Federation's annual excursion on Sunday, July 14, to Clacton-on-Sea. The tickets are now on sale, and we hope they will speedily be bought up. We should like to see the special train well packed; and should there be any surplus, it will go towards Freethought propaganda in London. Messrs. Foote and Watts, as already announced, intend to join this excursion. Other lecturers who may be going will perhaps drop us a line, so that the fact may be mentioned.

"Nunquam" has been found out by a Midland correspondent, who accuses him of irreligion. He says, in reply, that good houses are more blessed than fine churches, and "if to cleave to one's fellow creatures be irreligious, then I am a very infidel. . I want to impress upon you that the boundaries of Slow's borough are included in the British Islands, that the British Islands are only two small dots on a big map, that there are several races of people in the world who do not recognise the Rev. Hopley Porter as their spiritual guide, and that in the mysterious deeps of the great sea of the past are buried nations as powerful, civilisations as perfect, creeds as true, heroisms as noble, and humanities as beautiful and as pathetic as any that the sun now shines on."

Mr. J. P. Gilmour, of Glasgow, who was elected vice-president of the N.S.S. at the Bristol Conference, is coming south for a month's holiday, and on the Sundays he will take the opportunity of lecturing to English audiences, who will find him well worth listening to. He is a deep student, widely read, fluent in speech, and by no means devoid of humor. Mr. Gilmour lectures at Manchester to-day (June 30), and we hope the local "saints" will give him a thoroughly hearty welcome. On the following Sunday he lectures in London, and on this occasion Mr. Foote will take the chair for him, partly out of personal esteem and partly out of compliment to the Scottish Secularists.

The Sheffield friends take an outing next Sunday, July 7, when they will visit the residence of R. S. Wilson, Esq., Tuxford Hall, where they are invited to tea.

There has been a controversy on "The Soul" in the columns of the Glasgow Weekly Herald, in which J. J. Brown, author of "The Eternal News," has sustained the spiritist standpoint, while "Aristipus," "Aldebaran," and "Lucretius" have written from a sceptical standpoint.

Professor Marshall Hall, a musician of some celebrity in Australia, has composed an overture, "To Giordano Bruno." The idea of the work was suggested by a perusal of the life of the great Freethinker and martyr to superstition and bigotry.

At the Battersea Park Gates on Sunday morning, at 11, Mr. Stanley Jones will debate with Mr. Cyrus Symons on "The Soul and Science." Mr. Symons is a Unitarian, and a very courteous opponent. Freethinkers in the district are asked to support the meeting, as the Branch excursion is on that day.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton, in the comment upon the Old Testament which she is writing for The Woman's Bible, says: "With our ideal of the great first cause, a God of justice, wisdom, and truth, the Jewish Lord, guiding and directing that people in all their devious ways, and sanctioning their petty immoralities, seems strangely out of place, a very contradictory character, unworthy our love and admiration. The ancient Jewish ideal of Jehovah was not an exalted one."

It has been decided to erect in Paris a statue to the memory of Victor Hugo. The situation selected is the square in the centre of the avenue called after the poet, and near the house where he died. The subscription list recently opened for this purpose has already reached a total of many thousand francs.

Reviewing the third volume of "the noble edition of Tom Paine's writings" edited by Mr. M. D. Conway, the Pall Mall Gazette admits that Paine was "a remarkable figure," that he "played a considerable part in the world's affairs," and that he "played it honestly." His influence is allowed to be "enduring," and "to wax rather than to wane."

The writer of "Medical Gossip" in the Glasgow Bailie states that the local Secularists, who complain of the inquisitorial treatment of Freethinking patients in hospitals, are raising money to enable them to subscribe for a certain number of beds, to which they will have a right. We shall be happy to hear, in due course, how this enterprise has succeeded.

Mr. Larner Sugden, a well-known Freethinker, of Leek, has been selected amongst twelve applicants for the post of Surveyor to the Stoke Council and Engineer to the Bucknall Sewage Scheme. His election was unanimous.

The resignation of the Liberal Government and the approaching dissolution of Parliament will put an end to any chance of bringing on either of the Bills for the legal relief of Freethinkers. Mr. Manfield's "Liberty of Bequest" Bill and Mr. Gourley's "Religious Prosecutions Abolition" Bill share a common fate. Perhaps it will make no great difference to the prospects of either of these measures whether the new House of Commons is Liberal or Conservative. Private bills have no assistance from Governments; they fail or succeed according to the zeal, vigilance, and influence of their friends.

During the last elections a leaflet, drawn up by the President of the National Secular Society, was extensively circulated, and after reading it a large number of Liberal candidates promised to vote for an alteration in the law as it affects those who are opposed to the Christian religion. A similar leaflet, brought right up to date, will be prepared for the coming elections. We appeal to Freethinkers all over the country to bring this question to the front at election meetings, and to extract straightforward answers from candidates. Merely to ventilate our grievance at public meetings is in itself a great advantage.

Digitized by Google

In Open Court (June 6) M. D. Conway writes of his visit to Dr. Martineau on his ninetieth birthday, and mentions the progress made by Unitarians and others during that period. He says: "The prosecution of Richard Carlile in 1819 for selling the works of Paine (a more orthodox man than Martineau) was conducted by a Unitarian. This went on till Carlile, and Jane Carlile, and Mrs. Wright, saleswoman in the bookshop, and even the store-boy, were all shut up in gaol for years. So far as I can learn, Mr. Fox, of the Society now known as 'South Place,' was the only Unitarian who denounced these persecutions."

Further on he says: "The vaunted freedom from creeds of Unitarianism has been something like the boasted absence of State religion in the United States—an absence which leaves us fettered by the Sabbath, taxed for an army of explicitly unconstitutional chaplains, and taxed to support all churches because church property is not taxed. Indeed, the absence of an authoritative Unitarian creed seems to have been once felt by many Unitarians as an incentive to secure conformity by tongue-lynching—of course I refer to their narrow wing, now very small: there was always a magnanimous Left, and under Martineau's leadership it has long been the Right."

Dr. Martineau, at the time when Theodore Parker was virtually kicked out and tabooed by the American Unitarians, extended sympathy to him, alluding to some "painful experience" of his own. Perhaps he remembered he had been over-much of a Christian, and far too little of a human brother, to his own sister, Harriet, when she went a little farther in heresy than himself.

Mr. F. H. Balfour, in a lecture given before the Japan Society, said Buddhism was making strides in Japan. "Among the priesthood," he said, "you will find men of the highest families and the deepest erudition, who are not only versed in Eastern and Western metaphysics, but know as much about Christianity as you and I do. Where do you think we shall find one of the completest libraries of Christian evidences in Japan—a library containing all the standard controversial works, from our old friend Archdeacon Paley down to Lux Mundi, and the latest volume of the fervent Farrar? In some theological training-school under missionary superintendence? No; but in the great Temple of Reformed Buddhism at Kyoto. All these are healthy signs. The Buddhists are fighting for their faith and for their lives; they do not regard Christianity with indifference, but attack it with honesty and boldness; they are foemen worthy of our steel, and every inroad that is made upon their ranks is a very hard-won victory."

The Freethought Magazine, of Chicago, gives, as frontispiece of its June number, portraits of the Rev. J. R. Kaye and Dr. Felix L. Oswald, who are conducting a written debate on the Bible in its columns. Hudor Genone has a feeble reply to "Corvinus" on the reconciliation of religion and science. Dr. Carus also replies to "Corvinus," but only pelts back hard names. Herman Wettstein gives illustrations of the heterodoxy of American divines and Rabbis; Mr. Hale writes on Alfred de Musset as illustrative of the French literature of despair.

November 12 will be the eightieth anniversary of the birth of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who, with Ernestine Rose, her senior by over five years, followed Frances Wright in pioneering the advocacy of Woman's Rights. All these were Freethinkers; and Susan B. Anthony announces that on that date all the women pioneers left in America will assemble at the great Metropolitan Opera House of New York to celebrate the occasion and the fact of Mrs. Stanton having called the first woman's convention together some fifty years ago.

Mary Proctor, daughter of the late R. A. Proctor, is doing something to popularise astronomy in New York. She lectured recently to the working classes at some grammar schools, and expected only a dozen or two, but had attentive audiences of over eight hundred.

Dr. A. J. Gordon has published How Christ Came to Church. If successful, it should be followed by How Christ Got Kicked Out and Run In.

Public Opinion, of New York, under heading "Religious," gives an extract from the London Freethinker. We are getting on.

AWAY WITH PARSONS!

AWAY with parsons and with priests!
But why?
Because they falsely claim to know
That God exists, and strive to show
That they're his agents here below!
That's why.

Away with parsons and with priests!
But why?
Because they hold a bunch of tracts
That tell of ancient monstrous acts
Of gods and beasts, and say they're facts.
That's why.

Away with parsons and with priests!
But why?
Because a man who binds his brain
Within a book can ne'er attain
To moral worth; his life is vain.
That's why.

Away with parsons and with priests!
But why?
Because these book-bound weaklings dread
The brains of ev'ry healthy head,
And preach dependence on the dead.
That's why.

Away with parsons and with priests!
But why?
Because they fill the infant mind
With thoughts of heav'n and hell, designed
The moral sense to warp and blind.
That's why!

Away with parsons and with priests!
But why?
Because with science they are wroth,
And ever try to stop the growth
Of all that conquers mental sloth.
That's why!

Away with parsons and with priests!
But why?
Because they've filled the earth with fears,
Dissensions, hopeless hopes, and tears,
Throughout a thousand wasted years.
That's why.

G. L. MACKENZIE.

Christian Virtue.

It has been the custom to label every virtue as Christian that has been evolved as human, ages and ages before our own era, at which time every good thing was re-dated, christened, and re-named, as if it were the result of an historical Christ! Indeed, one expects to hear of the elements of pure air, fresh water, and clear sunlight being christened under this name in the same way that the well-known healing by means of mental medicine, which was practised by the pre-Christian races, has been designated "Christian healing." We shall probably have Christian Lunacy or Christian Idiocy! Yet the fact remains that the direct enemies of the human race in Europe have been the most besotted supporters of the doctrines called Christian. It cannot be too often repeated that the foundations of the Christian faith were laid in falsehood and ignorance. The Fall of Man in the beginning was not a fact, and consequently there could be no curse. It is but a fable misinterpreted; and the redemption of the New Testament is based upon the fable in the Old. There is no virtue nor efficacy in a vicarious atonement, and no priesthood ever had or will have the power to forgive sin, to break the sequence between cause and effect, or to evade the Nemesis of natural law.—Gerald Massey.

He (earnestly)—"And now that we are engaged, Ethel, will you pray for me?" She (earnestly also)—"Oh, no, George. I've been praying for you for eight years; but now that I've got you, I'll thank the Lord for you."

Digitized by Google

MR. PUTNAM'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

Extracts from his Letters to the New York "Truthseeker" (June 15).

It was a grateful change, after all, to pass from the turmoil of London to the great, quiet, and beautiful country. London is a continual pressure, an everlasting excitement. There seems no end in time or space to its enormous activities. It is difficult to keep still long enough in London to write these "News and Notes." I desire to be on the go, in the swim, all the time. The electric currents possess the universal air, and you cannot escape the sparkling influence unless you take a long journey into the country. One must do this occasionally, I think, in order to recover his equilibrium.

Hence I rejoiced in the loveliness of English scenery as I dashed to Derby on the express, with Watts and Foote in the compartment with me. How delightfully the landscapes spread away from the rushing train; fields and meadows, forests and hills, dotted with villages and handsome dwellings of the rich and lordly, with now and then a towering church or castle, ancient relics of gloom, in the bourgeon of this glorious springtime, adorning the portals of the past, while the music and splendor of the future are bursting forth.

With these mingling feelings of reminiscence and hope, the end of our journey is reached at Derby, a stately village of one hundred thousand people; a village, it seemed to me, after London and in contrast with American cities of like size. An American city would hum from one end to the other, but here the people move along without hurry or tumult; and, honestly, it did seem to me, at first sight, as if I had struck a New England burg of about five thousand population. However, Derby is a handsome place, and the people are good-natured and accommodating.

There were bubbles of excitement, however, circulating through its streets. There was to be a clash of arms in the intellectual arena, and the religious and Freethought spirits were in a state of animated expectancy. The debate between Mr. Foote and Mr. T. W. Lee took place at the Temperance Hall. There were present, I should think, fifteen hundred people at each session. At any rate, the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. The Christians were on hand to witness the downfall of Infidelity. They composed at least three-fifths of the audience.

Mr. W. J. Piper, editor of the Derby Daily Telegraph, presided on both evenings. He is, I understand, a Unitarian, and he did his duty impartially and admirably, and held the reins of government so firmly that the perturbed theological soul must needs listen according to parliamentary rule—a thing which Mr. Piper said could not have been done ten years ago. Free debate was then impossible. Secularism has been training the people.

Mr. T. W. Lee is a representative of the Christian Evidence Society. He has been a disputant for about fifteen years. He was, at the beginning, I understand, bombastic and egotistical; and I can see some remains of the primeval strata yet. Occasionally, by his manner and the look of his eye, it appeared to my mind that he would like to demolish things by pure physical force, by the "sword of faith," and not by the clash of argument; but evidently he has learned his lesson, and holds his theological team under good control. He does not allow his temper to get the best of him. He is keen, shrewd, and well-equipped. He is a wily opponent. He knows when to dodge, and where to put in his hardest blows. He is a skilled dialectician. He manages his case with the adroitness of a lawyer. He has evidently studied the defences of modern theology. I must confess that I was pleased with his energy, his tenacity, and his determination not to be whipped, no matter how severe might be the blows upon his metaphysical cranium. Even if he was knocked down he wouldn't admit it, and he had a majority of the audience to shout victory while in the jaws of defeat.

Mr. Foote was the man for the occasion. He is imperturbable, no matter how furious the conflict. He does not get excited. He measures his opponent fairly. He knows what he has to do; that the majority of the audience is hostile, and he must handle his subject both carefully and courageously. He has the power both of eloquence and logic. The people are bound to listen to what he says. He constrains by his personal presence. He has physical vitality. He is like a soldier. His speech is persuasive, his method argumentative, with here and there a brilliant illustration or flash of humor. He appeals to the intellect. He is analytic and convincing. He made his hearers see differences where his opponent endeavored to confound them. Not until his closing address did he gather together in one thunderbolt the condensed logic of his incisive reasoning; and then he fairly captured his audience with his splendid peroration, and extorted applause even from the orthodox crowd. Once in a while the enemy showed his teeth and growled, and was just on the point of precipitating a mob; but Foote was in his element then, and quelled his audience by what they could not help but admire, his display of English grit.

Mr. Lee, in his argument, followed the usual metaphysical lines. He made a statement, not of facts, but of opinions. The question was, "Which is the more reasonable, Theism or Atheism?" Mr. Lee said, in substance: Something now exists, therefore something has always existed, for something cannot come out of nothing. What is this eternal something? It cannot be the universe as it now is, for that we know has changed. It cannot be the atoms which compose the universe, for they are conditioned and limited. The uncreated substance must be unconditioned and unlimited. Being unconditioned and unlimited, is it intelligent? It is, for the order and symmetry of the created universe declare this. Is it benevolent? It is, for the universe also declares that, on the whole, created existence is for good, and not for evil.

This is the substance of Mr. Lee's argument. It is the old argument from design; an argument which cannot be improved upon with all the artifices of modern theology. Through thick and thin, Mr. Lee stuck to his argument with manful resolve. It was his only salvation.

Mr. Foote did not endeavor to meet Mr. Lee with any metaphysical back-fire whatsoever. He wisely confined himself to facts. He stuck to the scientific method entirely. What are the facts of the universe, and what do these facts mean? In the original statement of the question Mr. Lee put it as follows: "Resolved, That Theism is a more reasonable theory of the universe than Atheism." Mr. Foote declined to admit the words, "theory of the universe;" for, said he, Atheism is not a "theory of the universe." It does not profess to explain things. It is simply an acceptance of facts as far as they go. Mr. Foote was right in this. He did not try to elucidate the universe, but simply the facts of human knowledge. These facts, if there is any validity in human knowledge, teach that it is impossible that the universe should be created by an infinitely wise, powerful, and good being. In the first place, we cannot conceive creation, and therefore it cannot be reasonable. But, allowing creation, the creative force, whatever it may be, is responsible for all that exists. It therefore creates the evil, and cannot, therefore, be infinitely good. It cannot be infinitely wise, for everywhere are marks of imperfection. Therefore, whatever the creative force may be, it cannot be God, as defined by Theism. God, so far as we know, is purely the creation of the human mind.

These were the points elaborated by Mr. Foote. He did not once get off his base. He did not try to

> Soar away
> And mingle with the eternal ray.

He let all speculation alone. He did not build up an airy fabric of Atheism as opposed to an airy fabric of Theism. He did not dogmatise about the unknown. He simply said: These are the facts; Theism does not fit the facts. No Theistic theory ever invented by man does fit the facts. What is the inevitable conclusion? Atheism, pure and simple. Agnosticism is practically the same thing. It rejects every known theory of Theism. Therefore it is "without God," and that is Atheism. No doubt the Christians saw the force of Mr. Foote's argument. They realised as never before the logic of Atheism; that, based on facts, it is impregnable, and that the only answer to it is the wail of faith and the gush of sentiment. Mr Lee knew how to wail and how to gush, and he sought applause by expressing the fervor of his belief. The Christians knew the point, and applauded his assumptions vociferously, while, when he attempted argument, they were dumb. His logical weakness was apparent even to his friends.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The other Monday morning, as Colonel Blank was walking in his garden, watching an old negro man doing some work which he had hired him to do, the following conversation took place:—

"We had powerful preachin' up at the meetin' last night."

"Ah! what was the sermon about?"

"De maracle, sah."

"What miracle, Sambo?"

"Dat ar maracle, sah, 'bout de loaves and de fishes."

"Well, what did the minister say about it?"

"Well, sah, you see old Marse Jesus had been preachin', and doin' a lot of teachin', and the 'postles went round wid him, and one day after dey hab tramp all day with nof'n to eat, dey went and got hungry; but dey could find notfin' to eat but two loaves and one or two little tiny bits of fishes, so de blessed savior he kindly blessed dem, and thar was five thousand fishes and five thousand loaves, and de good 'postles dey were oh so 'appy, and dey went and eat 'em all up."

"Why, Sambo, I think you have got that wrong."

"No, indeed, sah, no I ain't. You don't understand. De maracle was, dat de 'postles could eat all de loaves and all de fishes and they didn't bust."

Digitized by Google

FOLK-LORE AND SPOOKS.

On Tuesday, June 18, I attended, by invitation, the rooms of the Folk-Lore Society, Albemarle-street, W., to hear rival papers on Psychism and Folk-Lore from the ex-president, Mr. Andrew Lang, author of Myth, Ritual, and Religion, and Cock-Lane and Common Sense, etc., and from the present president, Mr. Edward Clodd, author of The Childhood of Religions, Myth and Dreams, The Story of Creation, etc. Both are eminent in folk-lore, and Mr. Gomme, author of Ethnology and Folk-Lore, presided.

The occasion of the debate was the presidential address of Mr. Clodd, wherein he had said of the Society for Psychical Research: "Analysed under the dry light of anthropology, its psychism is seen to be only the 'other-self' of barbaric spiritual philosophy 'writ large.' It disguises the old animism under such vague and high-sounding phrases as the 'subliminal consciousness,' the 'telepathic energy,' the 'immortality of the psychic principle,' the 'temporary materialisation of supposed spirits,' and so forth. The Society will sell you not only the Proceedings containing these precious phrases, but also glass balls of various diameters for crystal gazing, from three shillings upwards." These and some other remarks were not to the mind of the author of Cock-Lane and Common Sense, and I fully expected a smart debate. But, although Mr. Lang's paper contained, like his book, a good deal more of Cock-lane than of common sense, in the sense of giving unsupported testimony with no opportunities of cross-examination, he fairly climbed down, declared he said nothing about a spirit world, and only advocated the claims of the Society for Spookical Research as affording much matter for folk-lore study. Their provinces overlapped, the student of folk-lore being engaged in psychical research, and vice versâ. He encouraged the use of crystal balls, preferring those at four shillings, as a certain percentage of persons saw hallucinations in them. He referred to the distinguished names in the Spookical Society, some of whom, like Mr. Balfour, had science in their blood; and quoted some of the tall stories of Eusepia Palladino's "manifestations," such as boxing Prof. Lodge's ears and pulling his whiskers while supposed to be securely held, and of D. D. Home's levitation. He finally mixed up Shadrach, Meschach, and Abednego with a passage from Jamblicus, and the report of various savages walking through fire, and introduced a photograph taken by Mr. Thompson, son of the late Archbishop of York, showing the latter. This photo was passed round, and there was certainly nothing very psychic about it. The savage Shadrach & Co.—about as unspiritual a set as could be found—were certainly dancing in steam; but the steam came from a pit, the obvious purpose of which was concealment of how it was done.

Mr. Clodd, in reply, justified his attack on the Spookists by their pseudo-scientific attitude; thus, their authorities for the appearance of apparitions of death were founded on testimony 7 per cent. only of which was British, while 30 per cent. was Brazilian. The truth was they were trying to find proof of spirits, and those who went in that attitude were sure, like the Empress Helena when seeking the true cross, to obtain just what they wanted. He referred to other testimony about "the not immaculate Mr. Home," mentioned that Professor Lodge, though renowned as a physicist, held that psychical problems were best dealt with in a hazy and muzzy state of mind, and declared that the whole proceedings of the Psychical Society were vitiated by their unguarded methods.

Mr. Lang briefly replied, urging that the Psychical Society did collect a mass of folk-lore. Mr. Edward Maitland, author of The Soul and How it Found Me, then spoke of having heard in California at midnight a midnight axe, which he took to be the warning of spirits against bears. Mr. Alfred Nutt endeavored to minimise the difference between Mr. Lang and Mr. Clodd. A clerical stranger complained that scientific men did not give attention to spiritual phenomena, and the present writer replied that in the early career of the Royal Society, when belief in witchcraft abounded, it did give attention to such questions, but found it had to protect itself against fruitless talk as against plans for squaring the circle or perpetual motion. Spiritism was a survival of a once general theory. Mr. Gomme, the chairman, briefly but concisely summed up the debate.

There was one statement in Mr. Lang's paper I should have liked to have dealt with had there been time. He spoke of the eminent members of the Spookical Society as "not in the slightest degree superstitious." Now, there is no active member of that Society for whom I have more respect than Mr. Lang himself. But assuredly the statement is not true of him. Indeed, I question if it is true of anybody. We inherit superstitions with our blood. Mr. Lang has a strong strain of "special Scotch," and, as he told us, "a dilapidated liver." Brilliant, highly cultured, and erudite on some points, he is evidently no judge of the value of testimony. A man of science may be easily bamboozled by a tricky woman, as Mr. Crookes certainly was by Miss Florence Cook, and probably Professor Lodge by Eusepia Palladino. A man of letters, too, may be duped as easily as a scientist.

J. M. W.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

June 30, Sheffield.

July 6, Chester-le-Street Branch (lecture held at West Pelton Co-operative Hall at 6.30); 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14, Bristol; 16 and 17, Plymouth; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth; 18, Leicester; 25, Liverpool.

Special Note.—Through an error Mr. Putnam has July 28 at liberty. Any Branch requiring that date should write to Mr. Watts at once.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

WRONG CHANGES WITH LOCATION.

Palgrave, the Arabian traveller, when in Ri'ad, a central kingdom of Arabia, the seat of the Wahabee zealots of Mohammedanism, had an interview with Abd-el-Kereen, a member of the ruling family. He sought for information as to the peculiar teachings of this Wahabee sect. To that end, he asked the aged sheik to tell him the difference between great and little sins, for during their conversation all wrongs seemed resolved into one of these. The reply was prompt:—

"The first of great sins is the giving of divine honors to a creature. The second is drinking the shameful"—that is, smoking tobacco.

"Murder, adultery, and bearing false witness; what are they?" The reply:—

"God is merciful and forgiving; these are little sins."

Had the Mohammedan made similar inquiries of Mr. Palgrave, who was a Catholic Jesuit in disguise, it is probable the first of the great sins would have been the denying that Jesus Christ is less than God Almighty; the second, the denial that the Bible is the word of God; with a third added, rejecting Sunday as a holy day. The lesser sins would be the persecution of infidels and heretics, and lying for the glory of God.

Early education and environment seem to change our notions of right and wrong. The cannibal deems it no crime to roast and eat fat missionaries. We wonder whether the natives of Hawaii do not indulge a regret that their parents had not eaten the fathers of the sons of the missionaries who have lately usurped their government.—Progressive Thinker.

PROFANE JOKES.

"What did you learn at Sunday-school, Harry?" said his mother, after his first visit to that institution. "Nothing." "Nothing! What did the teacher talk about?" "Only that they put dandelions in the lion's den, and he wouldn't eat them."

"In the life to come," shouted the evangelist, "there will be no marrying or giving in marriage." Those who were sitting near the Chicago woman heard a low cry of horror as she arose from her seat. "In that event," she remarked to the usher, as she left the church, "I've got no time to be monkeying here."

The story of the Jew who thought God almighty was making too much fuss over his eating a bit of pork, because a storm occurred just then, is equalled by this from Scotland. A Peebleshire man was known to be in the habit of saying his prayers in a field behind a turf-dyke. One day some wags followed him to listen to his devotions, and as he prayed he told what a sinner he had been, and said that if the dyke fell upon him it would be only what he deserved. The wags on the other side could not resist the temptation, but pushed the dyke over him, when, as he scrambled out, he was heard to say: "Hech! it's an awfu' world this; a body canna say a thing in a joke but it's ta'en in real earnest!"

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, Charles Watts, "Cromwell and English Freedom."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 9.15, brake excursion to Riddlesdown. Thursday, at 8, members' quarterly meeting.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, G. W. Foote, "All About Angels."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, C. Cohen, "The Scientific Basis of Morals."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11, debate between Stanley Jones and Cyrus Symons, "The Soul and Science."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "The Plagues of Egypt."

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, A. B. Moss, "Modern Quacks."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, Stanley Jones will lecture. Thursday, at 8, C. James will lecture.

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, L. Keen, "What Must I do to Inherit Eternal Life?" (Collection in aid of the Federation.)

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, W. Heaford, "Spiritual Consolations"; 3.15, A. B. Moss, "Antidotes to Superstition."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, W. J. Ramsey, "The Atonement." Thursday, at 8.30, a lecture.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Shall we Live Again?" 3.30, "The Curse of the Cross." Wednesday, at 8, a lecture.

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, G. H. Baker, "Christianity a Plagiarism."

KILBURN (High-road): 7, St. John will lecture.

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, F. Haslam, "Modern Science and Revelation."

LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, F. A. Davies, "The Whitewashing of Jesus."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, St. John, "The Curse of Superstition."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, R. Forder, "Theology and Science."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 8, C. Cohen will lecture.

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, C. Cohen will lecture; 3.15, Stanley Jones will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, a lecture; 7, S. R. Thompson, "The Origin of the Gods." (Collection on behalf of Sam Standring.) Thursday, at 8, a lecture.

COUNTRY.

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, Tuntine Society; 7, L. Small, B.Sc., "The Antiquity of Man according to Science."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, J. P. Gilmour, "The Bible and Disease"; 6.30, "The Social Purity Sham."

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 7, musical evening.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 11, S. P. Putnam, "The Bible and Modern Thought"; 3, "Christ and the Nineteenth Century"; 7, "Christianity and Woman." Tea at 5.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Captain Duncan's Navigation School, King-street): 7, annual meeting, election of officers.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (32 Dovecote-street): 6.30, business meeting—urgent.

SUNDERLAND (Lecture Room, Bridge End Vaults, opposite Echo office): 7, The Secretary, "The Law of Population."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, W. Treasure, "The Old Testament."

CHESTER-LE-STREET (Grays, Old Pelton): 7, a lecture.

DERBY (Market-place): 11, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside): 11, Hall Nicholson, "The Origin of Man."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—June 30, m. Victoria Park, a. Regent's Park, e. West Ham.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—June 30, m. Battersea, a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London.—June 30, m. Clerkenwell, a. Finsbury Park.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—July 17, m. Kingsland.

TWO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. FOOTE. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. WHEELER. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 3d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

A Demonstration of the Biblical Doctrine of Devils, suitable for circulation among Christians.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

64 pp., price 3d., by post 4d.,

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

Colonel Ingersoll's Great Lecture
ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.
DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.
THE GODS. 6d.
REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.
ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.
CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.
ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.
ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.
PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.
HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.
ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.
TRUE RELIGION. 2d.
THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.
LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.
IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.
LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.
GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.
WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.
FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.
THE DYING CREED. 2d.
THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D Coudert and Gov. C. L. Woodford. 2d.
THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.
ART AND MORALITY. 2d.
DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.
THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.
SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.
MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.
SKULLS. 2d.
THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.
LIVE TOPICS. 1d.
MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.
REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.
REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.
CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.
CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Vol. I., cloth gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d., post free,

CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY

G. W. FOOTE AND J. M. WHEELER.

Hundreds of exact References to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

CHAPTERS:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades.

"The book is very carefully compiled, the references are given with exactitude, and the work is calculated to be of the greatest use to the opponents of Christianity."—C. BRADLAUGH, in National Reformer.
"The book is worth reading. It is fair, and, on the whole, correct."—Weekly Times.
"The book has a purpose, and is entitled to a fair hearing."—Huddersfield Examiner.
"The work should be scattered like autumn leaves."—Ironclad Age (U.S.A.).

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS

(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleeplessness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell
No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Digitized by Google

WELL WORTH YOUR ATTENTION.

SPLENDID TROUSERS

To Measure.

ALL WOOL.
LATEST PATTERNS.
PERFECT FIT.

800 DRESS LENGTHS

at barely Half Price.

Three Dress Lengths for 21s.

INCLUDING

TWEEDS, CASHMERES, FIGURES, SERGES,
DIAGONALS, DARK, LIGHT, AND MEDIUM SHADES.

PRICES.

Trousers to Measure 9s. per pair.
Three Pairs Trousers to Measure for 25s. 6d.
Six Pairs Trousers to measure for 48s.
One Trousers' Length for 5s. 6d.
Three Trousers' Lengths for 15s.
Six Trousers' Lengths for 27s.

TROUSERS.

	INCHES
A, Round Waist over Trousers	.....
B, Round Seat	.....
E to D, Inside Leg Seam	.....
F to G, Full Length of Trousers	.....
H, Round Thigh	.....
I, Round Knee	.....
J, Round Bottom	.....
Please say Lined or Unlined	.....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Side or Cross Pockets	.....

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Nine Hours at the Sea-side for 3s.

ANNUAL EXCURSION
OF THE
LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION
TO CLACTON-ON-SEA.

Tickets 3s. Children under 14, 1s. 6d.

G.E.R. SPECIAL TRAIN FROM LIVERPOOL STREET,

On SUNDAY, JULY 14, at 8.45 a.m.

Tickets will be available from any station between Liverpool-street and Stratford by local train, meeting special at Stratford at 8.50. Returning from Clacton-on-Sea at 8 p.m., calling at Ilford, where passengers can proceed to their respective stations by local service.

Tickets may be obtained from R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.; all Branch Secretaries; and at the lectures on Sundays.

"The Clacton Tea-Table,"

TOWN HALL BUILDINGS, CLACTON-ON-SEA.

Specialité—1s. ORDINARY, 12.30 to 3.

Tea fresh for every customer. Furnished Apartments.
Also "Brunswick Confectionery," Pier Avenue.
Proprietor, H. FOYSTER.

COALS! COALS! COALS!

MESSRS. FRANCIS R. WOOD & CO. are supplying good Parlor Coal, suitable for all purposes, at 16s. 6d. per Ton. Hot Kitchen Coal, 14s.

R. Forder says: "They are remarkably cheap and good."
W. J. Ramsey writes: "I am well satisfied with your Parlor Coal."

Orders to 206 York-road, King's Cross. Depôts all over London.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Freethought Headquarters

AND

BRADLAUGH MEMORIAL.

In order to provide Suitable Headquarters for the Secular Party in London, which shall also be a worthy Memorial of its late leader, CHARLES BRADLAUGH, the

NATIONAL SECULAR HALL SOCIETY (LIMITED)

has been formed under the Friendly Society's Acts. Of this Society MR. G. W. FOOTE, President of the N.S.S., is Chairman, and every one of the Directors is, and must be, also a member of the N.S.S.

This can only be done by the assistance of the whole Secular Party, who are hereby appealed to earnestly. The shares are £1 each, payable in easy instalments of 2s. 6d. on application, 2s. 6d. on allotment, and 2s. 6d. on each call, of which two months' notice must be given.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

GENTLEMEN,—

Please allot me.....Shares in the "National Secular Hall Society, Limited," on account of which allotment I herewith hand you the sum of.....pounds.....shillings, being a deposit of.....pounds.....shillings per share thereon. And I hereby agree that, if admitted a Shareholder in the above-named Society, I will conform to its rules, and to such of its bye-laws as may be from time to time in force.

Name (in full).....

Postal address .....

Occupation (if any) .....

CUT THIS OUT AND FILL IT IN,

and forward (with remittance) to the Secretary—

MISS E. M. VANCE,
28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. FOOTE, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

Phil 15.5 F

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 27. SUNDAY, JULY 7, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

ROME OR REASON.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY is dead. By the time this article is in print the grave will have closed over the remains of a valiant soldier in the great army of human liberation.

We have yet to see what the religious journals will say about Huxley. The secular press is almost, if not quite, unanimous in eulogy. The great Agnostic's character is praised as well as his intellect, his integrity as well as his accomplishments. All admit that he made his mark, as a teacher and a personality, upon the age in which he lived.

Huxley was the chief English champion of Darwinism. Darwin himself stood high above the controversies of his time. His intellectual atmosphere, so to speak, was as serene as the Kentish home in which he dwelt. He had no time for the debates in the market-place. The great mill of his mind ground slowly but surely. It made no noise, but at the finish there was bread of truth for the whole world—for his own age, and for all ages to come. He was a sublime discoverer, and not a fighter; although there was a certain magnificence in the steady forward movement of his genius. It pressed onward, as Tyndall said, with the quiet, irresistable force of an avalanche, breaking impediments to pieces and grinding them to dust. Huxley, on the other hand, was a born fighter. You could see it in his face. He was alwys alert, his powers and knowledge were always at command, he was always ready for a challenge, and he loved the keen air of battle. "What a man you are!" exclaimed Darwin, as he watched his younger friend and disciple flashing his bright sword, and slaying heaps of Philistines. It was Huxley, above all men, who pressed Darwinism upon public attention. And he was admirably equipped for the task. Great faculty for debate, a powerful and racy style, fine eloquence on fit occasions, and a rich allusiveness, the result of his immense reading—all conspired to make him the popular champion of the new faith.

Huxley thought himself out of Mosaism before he lighted upon Darwinism. Like his master, he also thought himself out of Christianity. His name was Thomas, and he humorously confessed to a particular sympathy with the Apostle who bore that name in Palestine. He likewise thought himself out of Theism. Yet he declined to call himself an Atheist—"for the problem of the ultimate cause of existence is one which seems to me hopelessly out of reach of my poor powers." Here, however, we think he was mistaken. Atheism is not a theory of the universe, in Huxley's sense of the words. "Atheist" means "without God." And does not "Agnostic"—a term which Huxley coined—mean precisely the same? The Atheist says he does not know of any God; the Agnostic says he cannot know of any God. Is not the difference rather metaphysical than practical? The only value of the term "Agnostic" lies in its being less offensive to orthodox ears. But will it continue to be less offensive if it beats "Atheist" out of the field?

There seems to us to have been a confusion of the metaphysical with the practical in Huxley's writing about the "possibility" of miracles. It is the practical possibility of miracles with which Christians are concerned. To argue the question à priori is trying to fly in vacuo. And just as Mill served the enemy by his ridiculous, and wildly rhetorical, eulogy of Jesus Christ, so Huxley served them—of course unintentionally—by his old panegyric on the Bible as a book to be read in Board Schools. It was a great mistake on Huxley's part. He praised the Bible for one reason, but he might have known that it was kept in the schools for another reason. The clergy do not care overmuch about its "exquisite beauties of mere literary form." They use it as a text-book of Supernaturalism.

But every man is entitled to make some mistakes. It is the bad privilege of our common frailty. Enough if they are as few as possible. Huxley was human like the rest of us; but, after all reservations, he was a bright scholar and an intrepid thinker, fighting valiantly for his convictions, and standing out boldly from the mob of cowards and hypocrites. He put his heart as well as his head into his work, and so it became fruitful work for humanity.

While this great apostle of Reason lay dying, within an hour or two of his last breath, the devotees of Faith were laying the foundation stone of a vast and costly cathedral at Westminster. Cardinal Vaughan officiated, dressed in the gaudy trumpery of his craft, and surrounded by hundreds of priests, who in turn were surrounded by thousands of laymen. It was a festal day, a day of triumph, for the Catholics. They were once proscribed, but now they lift their heads proudly, and talk of their future "conquest of England."

We do not believe that the Catholic Church will conquer England, but we do believe that it will continue to make headway. It is bound to profit by the rationalising movement which is going on in the Protestant Churches. Those who want pure, unadulterated Faith, without any mixture of Reason, will naturally go over to Catholicism, which teaches a dogmatic creed dogmatically, and spares its devotees the trouble of thinking. The Catholic Church borrows the language of Jesus Christ, and exclaims to those who are tired of harmonising Religion and Science—"Come unto me, and I will give you rest."

Charles Bradlaugh once declared that the great fight of the future would be between Catholicism and Freethought. We think he was a true prophet. Logical extremes have an eye for each other. Across the chaos of Christian sects, Reason and Faith recognise each other as natural enemies. They can never sign a treaty. They must fight it out to the bitter end. And before the end, it may be that Faith will gain power enough to oppress, to persecute, and to slay. But the martyr-spirit of Freethought will be roused to defy, and we believe to overcome, the great enemy of human freedom.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE.

I DEARLY love a crank. Not because "Great wits are sure to madness near allied, And thin partitions do their bounds divide," for the better opinion is that of Lamb, that "the greatest wits will ever be found to be the sanest writers," for which the names of Aristophanes, Lucian, Rabelais, Shakespeare, and Voltaire may suffice. But in your crank there are always vague possibilities. He gives scope for the larger hope. One who wanders out of the common road may open up new prospects. We may profit from his errors. Sanity is only the balance of the faculties, and the balance may be over-weighted by a preponderance of the higher qualities, as well as of the lower ones. When Dr. Max Nordau instances men like Tolstoi and Ruskin as types of "degeneration," we may say there is a kind of insanity which rises above the common level, as well as an imbecility that sinks beneath it. Jesus, Mohammed, Joan of Arc, Francis d'Assissi, Jacob Boehme, George Fox, Emanuel Swedenborg, were all insane. They were visionaries who, in varying degrees, contrived to infuse into others the contagion of their own insanity.

A madman of a different stamp is Dr. Friedrich Nietzsche, for he has had a training in science, art, literature, and philosophy. On that account his madness is the more dangerous to this age. That he is mad few could read his latest and greatest work, Also Sprach Zarathustra (Berlin; 1883-91)—"Thus spake Zoroaster" (which he calls "a book for all and none") without admitting. But it is the work of a madman of genius. The king says in Hamlet: "Madness in great ones must not unwatched go." That of Nietzsche is claiming much attention. At Jena, H. Tuerck writes on F. Nietzsche and His Philosophical Errors. At Berlin, L. Stein has a book on F. Nietzsche's View of the World and its Dangers. Even at Glasgow a German teacher announces a work, From Darwin to Nietzsche, showing that he regards the latter as summing up the doctrine of the survival of the fittest; while the Anarchists are calling for an English edition of Nietzsche's works.

Dr. Nietzsche is a Saxon of Polish descent, born at Rücken, October 15, 1844. His father was a clergyman in Naumberg, but he lost him while young, and was brought up by his mother and sisters—a spoilt child, evidently. He studied under the noted philologist, Ritschl, at Bonn and Leipsic, and was, by his recommendation, appointed Professor of Classical Philology at Basel, when but in his twenty-fourth year. He had early thrown aside Christianity for Paganism, and his well-attended lectures showed preference for such subjects as Greek literature, Greek tragedy, and the dawn of Greek philosophy.

He already displayed a tendency to scepticism, cynicism, and an intellectual self-exaltation, which I should call egomania—a disease which has finally sent him into seclusion; for in 1889 it was reported he was dead, the fact being that he was insane. In his portrait you can see the man of genius and the madman. His face is clear cut, of the German aristocratic type, with lofty forehead, heavy brows, deep eyes, wide nostrils; a head expressing proud, self-reliant hauteur, deep thought, and keen sensitiveness; the head of a musician, poet, philosopher, and crank. Nietzsche is all these. He gives the impression of a high-mettled, vicious horse, that will not bear the traces—a superb animal, but one that needs breaking in before he can run in harness. Alas, he is not broken in, but broken down. May he recover, having learnt the virtue of humility, the beauty of compassion, the worth of human service!

Nietzsche, like Schopenhauer and many another pessimist genius, was born out of due time into a world unworthy of him. Haters of modern society are usually conservative reactionaries, lamenting the good old times, when their class lived in secure comfort, because the masses were ignorant; or radical Utopists, contrasting the existing social state with their ideal of liberty, equality, and fraternity. Nietzsche is neither. He despises the old régime. Individualistic and aristocratic by birth, training, and temperament, this Neo-Cynic allows that democracy is a defence against the pest of tyranny; but his bête noir is der Pöbel, the mob, the crowd of vulgar, sordid canaille, glorified as "the people." Equality, he declares, is not a fact; fraternity is a dream; and the only liberty he cares for is the liberty to develop into the Superior Man, and to rule inferiors. He would not go back to monarch or priest rule, but forward to a new aristocracy developed through Anarchism—the rule of the Higher Men, the Uebermenschen. He announces the death of God, the birth of the Superior Man. God is dead. He died through compassion for suffering he could neither prevent nor cure. The trouble is that the Superior Men are not of age and power to step into His shoes and take up all His deserted functions. So we lie twixt two worlds—one dead, the other powerless to be born. Man is a cable over an abyss, along which the animal may pass to the Uebermenschen. What is great in man is that he is a bridge, and not an end. Our business is to push on, whoever falls over. Patient sedentariness (Der Sitzfleisch) is the sin against the Holy Ghost. We must keep moving. For Schopenhauer's "Will," or blind instinct for life, he substitutes Wille fur Macht—will for power. What is the strongest medicine? he asks. Victory. Only the great ones count, he says; the rest are der Pöbel. A people is but a circumlocution of prolific nature to arrive at six or seven great ones. It would be well to sweep away a whole species to produce one better specimen. "What," he asks, "causes more sorrow in the world than compassion?" "Among the cowardly it is bad form to say anything against bravado, and callous men cannot endure anything said against compassion."

Nietzsche is, frankly anti-Christian. He says, in effect: Blessed are the arrogant, for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are the strong, for theirs is the kingdom of man. Be strong, for to be weak is to be miserable. He dislikes philanthropists who cultivate the rotten potatoes of society. He scorns the weakness of compassion. Stamp out the unfit. Nothing has done us more harm than the extravagances of the compassionate. It is the petty men who are masters and preach up the petty virtues which enable them to thrive. The Superior Man disregards and disdains alike the petty morality and the petty immorality of mediocrities. "Who would be Creator must work in Good and Evil alike. He must first be a Negator. Evil belongs to the highest good—the creative." Nietzsche despises humility. Christian morality is that of slaves and the sick—the negation of life, the morality of the hospital. The morality of the Superior Man is affirmative, not negative. It is the symbol of prosperous, vigorous life, of the will for power become the principle of life. The one communicates of its fulness, enriches, brightens, and adds to the joy of the world; the other impoverishes, enfeebles, and disparages the world. Christianity is a malady, a denial of the Ego; but the morality of nature is a triumphant affirmation of the Ego. Christianity he regards, as Tacitus did, as a pernicious superstition; or with the aversion which Goethe expressed for "the cross and bugs." The cross is, in his expression, "the most venomous of the trees planted on earth." Priests are but invalids turned doctors, seeking to soothe their clients' sufferings by opiates and syrups, which never touch the root of the disease, and who would be promptly dismissed were the patients permitted to return to natural health. Christianity, he says, gave Love (Eros) poison. It did not kill, but turned it into Vice. In his hatred of hypocrisy, humbug, and conventionality, he appears, like Moses at sight of the golden calf, ready to break all the Decalogue. He extols the motto of the Assassins, "Nothing is true; all is permissible." He girds at "Cowardice which masks as Virtue." To the Philistine he appears a dreadful apostle of intellectual pride and moral anarchy—the conscienceless assailant of all that is holy. This is wrong. Nietzsche says: "Laugh warmly, mischievously; but with good conscience." Beneath his cynicism surges an earnest, restless seeking after the best. He contemns the Pharisaic hypocrisy of the "unco guid," but preaches sincerity, courage, and self-reliance. Be yourself, bad as you may be, this will be the first step onward.

Many of his utterances are mere sportive malice. He writes in oracular aphorisms, full of cynical wit and paradox. Thus he says that Messiahs always get to their kingdom riding on asses. He asks: "Is man but one of the mistakes of God, or is God but one of the mistakes of men?" "Where the tree of knowledge is, there is always Paradise—so says the oldest and the youngest serpent."

His characterisations of men are sharp and cynical. Pascal he calls the "self-murderer of Reason"; Rousseau "the return to Nature in quadrupedis naturalibus." Spinoza's Pantheism is "hocus pocus"; Kant he calls "cant"; Comte he terms "that clever Jesuit," Victor Hugo "the Pharos on the Sea of Insanity," Michelet "Ecstasy out of the Rock," Schiller "the moral trumpeter," Carlyle "the heroic moral interpreter of dyspepsia." Elsewhere he sneers at Carlyle as "an English Atheist who thinks it an honor not to be one." J. S. Mill is "clothed lucidity"; Renan represents "the loss of Reason through original sin" (his training as a Christian priest); Zola is "the love of stinks," Liszt "the school of feminine fluency." First a disciple of Wagner, Nietzsche afterwards preferred the author of "Carmen." Bizet, he says, is Mercury; Wagner, Thor or Zeus; and the gods have light feet. His favorite authors are Machiavelli, Voltaire, Galiani, Emerson, and de Stendhal (Henri Beyle), whom he calls "the last great physiologist," and whose saying, "What excuses God is that he does not exist," is after his own heart. Schopenhauer he called the last German worth consideration. But "the first duty of a philosopher is to get beyond his day;" so as soon as heroes become popular he gives them up. Schopenhauer gives way before Zarathustra Nietzsche, who proclaims that he has given the Germans the most profound books they possess, and adds that he has good reason to believe that the Germans do not comprehend a word of them.

Digitized by Google

I have been unable to find any mention of two writers who appear to me to have much influenced Nietzsche—viz., "Max Stirner" (Kaspar Schmidt), Anarchist, author of Der Einzige und Sein Eigenthum, and "Philipp Mainlaender" (P. Batz ?), pessimist, author of Die Philosophie der Erlösung. Both these are profound but little-known writers, who have scattered seeds bound to grow and fructify wherever they find fit soil. Nietzsche owes most to Stirner; but where Stirner is critical, even in proclaiming "I am the measure of Truth, and what I call my right is, in truth, only my might," Nietzsche is dogmatical—not the less so because he proclaims that his judgments are his alone, and need have value for no one else. In the saying of Mainlaender, "God is dead, and his death was the life of the world," we have the keynote of some of Nietzsche's own philosophy.

The higher race that is to take the place of the defunct deity hardly seems to include woman. Nietzsche, like Schopenhauer, appears a misogynist. In his paradoxical fashion he says "Man has created woman—whence, from one of God's ribs—his own ideal." "There is ever something deceptive in love," he says; "but, then, there is always some reason in deception." He couples "the eternal feminine" with "the eternal fool." Feminine love is a kind of parasitism, always costly to the host. The Higher Man is above all that. He is, in short, a god, above the common needs of humanity.

Such, if I understand it—which is doubtful, for Nietzsche is more a poet than a philosopher, and delights in paradox, phantasy, and the oracular opaqueness of a new revelation—is the gospel according to Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche. Its dynamite is not less dangerous because hidden in darkness. It seems to logically include the abolition of conventional morality, the elimination of the unfit, the erection of a system of caste, and the rule of a new aristocracy. The militarism of Germany has made this possible as the program of one of its most original though most cranky thinkers.

My voice can hardly reach Dr. Nietzsche in his seclusion, or I might say: My afflicted brother, are you not learning that we are all dependent on the offices of the humblest; that for us not only the great ones fought and thought, but the poor ones have toiled and suffered? Is a sick person necessarily a parasite on society who should no longer be let live? Was Cæsar Borgia, that type of the "will for power," really greater than the unknown fireman or nurse who dies trying to save others? We are not gods, but men, among men, dependent, from our first breath, upon others. Think of all we owe to the past. Dive we ever so deep, soar we ever so high, we cannot escape our duty to our kind. Surely humility, compassion, brotherly love, and brotherly service befit us. We all need to partake of the holy, human sacrament of sympathy. I, too, own ai Dieu ni maître; but let us not throw away the baby along with the dirty water. J. M. WHEELER.

DOES NOTHING.—I once said to him (Carlyle), not long before his death, that I could only believe in a God who did something. With a cry of pain, which I shall never forget, he said, "He does nothing."—Froude's "Life of Carlyle," vol. ii., p. 260.

MORALITY WITHOUT RELIGION.

(Concluded from page 403.)

So far from it being impossible to conceive morality existing apart from religion, it appears to us difficult to understand how ethical conduct, in its strictest sense, can be depended upon if it is regulated by the popular theological faith. To comply consistently with the requirements of this faith would tend to fetter human actions, and to deprive them of their true ethical value. Moral freedom cannot co-exist with compulsory belief, and the performance of all noble action is incompatible with the lack of power in man to do good. The Christian religion compels its adherents to believe that of themselves they are incapable of goodness; that uniformity of belief is absolutely indispensable to personal salvation; that one particular faith is of more importance than conduct; and that the ultimate personal consequences of an immoral career can be avoided by a death-bed repentance. Now, we submit that such teachings as these are not in harmony with the development of that morality which we should all aim to exemplify in our daily lives.

It is quite a misreading of history to attribute human progress to such transcendental views as are incorporated in modern orthodoxy. In so far as Christianity accomplished anything in its early history, it was the destruction of Greek and Roman civilisation, and the substitution for it of a thousand years of intellectual darkness and moral degradation. As Sir J. Mackintosh observes: "In that higher sense in which morality denotes sentiment, it is more exactly true to say that religion depends on morality and springs from it. Virtue is the state of a just, prudent, benevolent, firm, and temperate mind." Surely, with the records of the sublime ethical teachings of Buddha and of a host of ancient philosophers before us, it cannot, with truth, be asserted that these virtues depend for their manifestation upon the belief in any supernatural religion. Besides, the morality taught and practised by Atheists, Agnostics, and Secularists at the present day amply refutes such an assumption. Dr. Priestley, the Unitarian Christian, says: "General states of mind, turns of thought, and fixed habits, which are the consequences of them, arise from education and the circumstances men are placed in." Hence, an enlightened and cultivated society adapts its religion to the moral requirements of the age, which shows that morality, not religion, is the lever that regulates human improvement.

It appears indisputable to us, taking an impartial retrospect of history, that the development of morality has been the result of the cultivation of the intellect, the acquirement and diffusion of knowledge, and the improved physical conditions which science has enabled us to obtain. This fact has been fully established by such eminent writers as Buckle, J. S. Mill, and Professor Huxley. If, however, our contention be doubted, let it be shown that the secular agencies here mentioned were ever fostered and inculcated by the early advocates of the Christian religion. The very reverse is the fact, for when orthodoxy was supreme the intellect of the masses was neglected, knowledge was limited to the few, and physical training was comparatively unknown. As the result of this Christian apathy, immorality predominated, ignorance darkened the human mind, and disease robbed life of its vigor, rendering it useless for elevating enterprises. Thus we find that it is during the present century, the most sceptical period of the Christian era, that ethical culture has made its greatest advancement, and that morality has been placed upon a scientific basis. No one to-day, of any marked intellectual standing, would for a moment question that a moral character could exist independently of any theological religion. In all business transactions the mundane results of conduct are regarded as being of greater importance than its religious sanctions.

It strikes us as being peculiar that many writers, otherwise well informed, should never have made the discovery that man, apart from theological beliefs, has an instinctive love of life and happiness, and that, under favorable environment, his delight is in seeking to augment the comfort, and to promote the highest pleasure, of our present existence, irrespective of any considerations of an after life. This being so, why should it be thought that the contemplation of a future life, of which nothing is known, constitutes the sole foundation of virtue? It is a fact known to every thoughtful man that truth, honor, and general right-doing are just as essential to the well-being of society and the happiness of the individual, whether there be a God and a future life or not. Further, if these essentials are not duly observed, no belief in God and immortality will prevent society from becoming deteriorated. This fact is so obvious that in the commercial world it is acknowledged that the success of commerce depends, above all, upon the virtue of veracity. Hence we repeat that in business the practical observance of the elements of morality is looked for in preference to the profession of the creeds of religion. A moral man is always relied upon, while believers in religion have too frequently proved themselves destitute of ordinary honesty.

Digitized by Google

In this practical age the notion is rapidly being given up that the welfare of the human race depends upon the belief in God and in a future state of existence. In the words of the Rev. M. J. Savage, in his Morals of Evolution: "Are not the laws of society existing in themselves and by their own nature? These laws are essential in the nature of things; and they stand, and you live by them, whether there is a God or not." The same writer observes: "Suppose there is no future life, does morality fall? I think not. . . . . It does not make one particle of difference in regard to the validity of these laws [which govern human conduct] whether we are to live forever or only one hour." Here we recognise the superiority of Secularism to the many conflicting theologies of our time. These are symbols of intellectual poverty, mental despotism, and moral degeneration. Secular philosophy proclaims the necessity of seeking to make the best of existence as we find it; to learn the duties that devolve upon us, and to seek to discover the best mode of performing them, with a view of adding to the nobility of our own characters, and of augmenting the happiness of others. With us morality is not an importation from heaven; it is a growth of earth. It is inspired, not by love to God, but by solicitude for the benefit of man; not by the hope of heaven, but by a desire to make earth the home of justice, truth, joy, comfort, peace, and lasting love. We strive to have our reward in time, not in eternity; and our consolation consists in beholding the emancipation of men and women from the theological snares and allurements which during ages of ecclesiastical supremacy dominated the human mind.

CHARLES WATTS.

BIBLE FICTIONS.

V.—THE PATRIARCHS IN CANAAN.

THE ancient Egyptian monuments and the discoveries at Tel-el-Amarna now firmly establish the fact that the patriarchal "history" in Genesis is fictitious. We know from these sources that about 1630 B.C. Thothmes I. effected the conquest of Canaan and the greater part of Syria, and that some thirty years later Thothmes III. had long wars with the Hittites, Phœnicians, and Amorites, and other inhabitants of Syria and Palestine, and ultimately reduced to subjection all the cities of Canaan. Among the recorded victories of the latter king is a great battle at Megiddo, in which Thothmes defeated the combined armies of the Hittites and their Phœnician allies, after which he levied tribute on all the petty kings of Palestine. The spoils taken on this occasion prove the inhabitants to have been, not a number of savage tribes, but a comparatively civilised people. Among these are mentioned gilded war-chariots, coats of mail, gold and silver statues, vases, rings, jewels, tables inlaid with gold, thrones of cedar-wood and ivory, rich hangings, etc.

About 1400 B.C. the whole of Canaan was again overrun by Seti I., who reconquered all the revolted cities and provinces. Again, about twenty years later, Ramses II. invaded the country with a large army to bring the Hittites and Canaanites once more into subjection. A fierce engagement took place near Kadesh, in which, however, Ramses was only partially successful. A long struggle ensued, and many battles were fought; but in the end Ramses was glad to come to terms with his formidable antagonists. We know, further, from the record of an Egyptian military officer that in this reign the southern portion of Canaan was infested by bands of robbers and marauders.

The tablets of Tel-el-Amarna (about 1450 B.C.) prove that the land of Canaan contained a large number of petty kings, each envious of, and hostile to, the other, but all nominally subject to the king of Egypt. The king of Jerusalem, for instance, complains that the kings of Geser, Gath, and Keilah had occupied the country round about, and had intercepted his communications with other cities. The king of Babylon also informs the Egyptian king that his ambassadors had been murdered in passing through Canaan.

About 1210 B.C. a great confederacy of the kings of Western Asia, headed by the Hittites, overran Syria and Palestine, and, pressing on to the frontiers of Egypt, were about to invade that country, when they were met and defeated by Ramses III. Following up this victory, Ramses marched through Canaan into Syria, and reconquered one after the other all the revolted provinces. Having this accomplished, he returned to Egypt with a large number of prisoners, including thirty-eight kings or chiefs.

From the foregoing epitome of real history, it is manifest that Palestine, in the time of the Jewish patriarchs, was inhabited by a people who were both numerous and warlike, and well able to hold their own, and that for the weak and unprotected there could be no security for life or property.

Now, the description of Canaan in the days of these nomadic patriarchs, as given in Genesis, is that of a land perfectly peaceful. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are represented as living in complete security, and as leading about immense flocks and herds from one part of the country to another without the smallest interference from anyone. Moreover, from the Bible narrative it would appear that the land during this period (which was that of the Egyptian domination) was very thinly peopled, and that the few inhabitants were a primitive, law-abiding people, of peaceful disposition, who stood somewhat in awe of the Hebrew patriarchs.

Abraham, with sheep and cattle in such numbers as to give employment to 318 men, finds plenty of pasture land (belonging apparently to no one) wherever he chooses to go. So does his nephew, Lot; so does his son, Isaac; so does his grandson, Jacob. They even take upon themselves to change the names of places. No one ever questions their right to appropriate all the fields and meadows in any locality, nor attempts in any way to molest them. According to the statements in Genesis, the period during which Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob lived in Canaan was 215 years. Yet during the whole of this time—though the land was constantly plunged in the most sanguinary wars, with all their attendant horrors, and robbers and freebooters everywhere abounded—not one of these patriarchs suffered the slightest annoyance.

So far from this, two sons of Jacob are represented as massacring all the men and boys of a whole city with complete impunity. This incident furnishes a fit illustration of the fabulous nature of the whole patriarchal "history."

Jacob's daughter, Dinah, we are told, was taken and ravished by Shechem, the son of Hamor. The young man, however, desiring to make the girl his wife, he and his father waited upon Jacob to arrange the marriage. The latter appears to have left the matter in the hands of his sons, who made it a condition that Hamor and all his people should be circumcised. To this Shechem and his father agreed, and prevailed upon all the men of their city to submit to the operation. On the third day, when the Shechemites were in an enfeebled state, two of Jacob's sons, Simeon and Levi, "took each man his sword, and came upon the city boldly, and slew all the males. And they slew Hamor and Shechem his son with the edge of the sword." Further, "the sons of Jacob came upon the slain, and spoiled the city. . . . . They took their flocks and their herds and their asses. . . . . and all their wealth, and their little ones and their wives took they captive" (Genesis xxxiv. 25–39).

This story is almost too ridiculous for serious notice; but, since it is gravely related as an historical event by the sacred writer, some comments may not be considered unnecessary. Now, the statement that two young herdmen could, unaided, slay all the males of an entire city, even under the circumstances mentioned, is an outrage on common sense, and needs not to be twice considered to be rejected. We are to believe that the men of Shechem allowed themselves to be slaughtered, one after the other, like sheep, and that none of the women of that city had either the strength or the will to use a weapon in defence of her husband, brother, or son. One has, further, to imagine two young men leading away captive several hundreds of women and children, and also taking with them all the flocks and herds which they had collected from the fields adjacent to the city. To believe this story one must possess the blind faith and unreasoning credulity of a Christian apologist.

Digitized by Google

When the occurrence came to the ears of Jacob, that patriarch, it is true, censured the two murderers; but his chief concern was for his own safety. By the command of his God, who, even in the most criminal acts, watched over him and his sons, he removed to another part of the country. There would seem at that time to have been no one in the land—no friends or relatives of any of the murdered men—either able or willing to bring the murderers to justice. In fact, some short time afterwards Jacob's sons returned to the neighborhood of the massacre as if nothing had happened, and no one made the slightest attempt to lay a hand on them. They have then but their father's sheep and cattle, and are unattended. All the women and girls whom they are stated to have carried away from Shechem have vanished. The inspired writer, in continuing his veritable narrative, has forgotten all about them, and in the remainder of his history writes as if the event had never occurred. Clearly, even according to the Bible account, the story of the massacre is a fiction.

In Genesis xlix. 5–7 Jacob, when blessing his sons before his death, refers to this matter. He says: "Simeon and Levi are brethren; weapons of violence are their swords. . . For in their anger they slew a man. . . . Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel." From this it would appear that the two sons named had slain only one man—Shechem. The hundred dogs in the back garden have turned out to be but "our dog and another one." We may take it, then, that in the earliest account Simeon and Levi were simply represented as having assassinated the seducer of their sister, and that this story at some later date became transformed by the hand of some imaginative writer into the massacre of a whole city.

In any case, no rational person can repose the smallest faith in either narrative; for, apart from the numerous contradictions and discrepancies which prove a large number of the events recorded in Genesis to be fictitious, the Bible history of the patriarchs in Canaan, taken as a whole, is not only inconsistent with what we know was the condition of that country, but is under such circumstances manifestly impossible. VERITAS.

SAYCE ON THE BIBLE.

THE Rev. A. H. Sayce has been writing in the Christian Commonwealth upon "How the Bible was Written and Preserved." It is interesting to be told that "the oldest books at present known to us have come from Egypt and Babylonia," especially as the Christian clergy have always asserted hitherto that the Bible was the oldest book in the world. But Mr. Sayce gives us no information as to how the Bible was written or preserved. He has a lot to say about Egyptian and Babylonian writing; but as he admits that the Old Testament was written in Hebrew and in Hebrew characters, it is difficult to understand what Egypt and Babylon had to do with it.

The rev. gentleman's biblical criticism is, as usual, very remarkable. He admits that Isaiah ii. 2–4 has nothing to do with the context, and has been quoted from another writer; but objects that "chronology" is against the idea that the words were taken from Micah iv. 1–3, although in Micah they are perfectly in accord with the context; as though "chronology" could prevent any scribe that chose to do so from writing in the words of any prophet into the composition of any other. He has an elaborate theory about the ancient libraries of the Jews (if they ever had any) having been taken to Babylon; because the Book of Kings ends abruptly with the reign of Evil-Merodach. But if anyone will take the trouble to compare 2 Chron. xxxvi. 25 with Ezra i. 3, he will see that the Book of Chronicles terminates in the middle of a sentence; the explanation being that Ezra once formed part of Chronicles, and has been clumsily separated. Similarly, it is very probable that the Book of Kings has lost its end in much the same way, and the fact that it now concludes where it does is no proof that it was written at Babylon or in the reign of a Babylonian king. E. P.

MR. PUTNAM'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

Extracts from his Letters to the New York "Truthseeker" (June 15).

I WAS pleased to meet the Liberal friends of Derby. I expect to lecture at this place while in England. Mr. W. Westwell and Mr. Robert Ainsworth were present from Manchester. We were at the same hotel, and the hours outside the debate were enlivened with generous sociability. Under the guidance of Mr. Foote and Mr. Westwell, I discovered the superb beauties of English cooking. I don't understand Daudet when he speaks of the "coarse meat and horrible cookery" of England. I suppose I shall know more about it when I visit Paris, if I have the opportunity; but I really think at present that the English do know how to cook.

On Thursday we had a delightful drive together about Derbyshire, and the prospects were lovely indeed. Here is English scenery in its simple magnificence. Nothing like the wild and grand scenery, the prairies and mountains of America; but there were ample fields undulating and glittering in emerald glory; there were antique forests, over whose crumbling arches swept the splendor of the spring, decorating anew the immemorial columns; there were gentle declivities fading into the cloudy and luminous horizon, the green hedges, the hard and shining road, the snug hamlet, the lodge and stately gateway, the elegant park, the gardens just beginning to bloom, the great mansion, half hid by trees and shrubbery; the wandering herds following the dog, the horseman in the distance; the white flocks, the shimmering lake embosomed in the hills; the town, splendid on the verge between earth and sky, like a fairy picture, gorgeous and illuminated with the slanting rays breaking from floating cloudlands; while, mingling with these scenes, burst and quivered and rolled the sweet singing of the birds. And how shall I describe the delicious lunch—milk and soda, bread, butter, and cheese! That was all we could find in the remote village, amid whose quaint and picturesque precincts we seemed to be flung back a hundred years, far from the haunts of civilisation. I did not know that so secluded and venerable a spot, where the din of the world is lost amidst gray and mossy walls and blackened rafters, could be found in the bustling England of to-day. But England, after all, stretches wide and far, and has an infinite variety of aspect, and the old continually mingles with the new.

After the debate on Thursday night a large deputation of Secular friends waited upon Mr. Foote, and thanked him for the admirable fight he had made. Mr. W. Whitney spoke in behalf of the Derby Branch of the National Secular Society, and congratulated Mr. Foote upon the efficient and dignified manner in which he had defended their position. The American visitor also received a cordial welcome. So the Derby meeting closed with enthusiasm and courage in the Freethought ranks at this important point.

Saturday morning Mr. Foote, Mr. Watts, and myself visited Nottingham for a few hours. This is about fourteen miles from Derby, a manufacturing town of 240,000 inhabitants. It has a much more business-like appearance than Derby. The passers-by are more alert, and there are crowds occasionally. The great castle looms on a precipitous height as we approach the station. We did not have time, however, to mount its frowning walls, around which so many battalions have surged and crowded in bleeding masses. We visited the Arboretum, in which there is a beautiful display of flowers, with walks amid blooming foliage and dazzling carpet of grass, from the crest of which, where the monument and cannons gleam, is spread a vast and splendid panorama of the city. Returning, we pass through the cemetery, in whose shadowy majesty white death mingles with many-colored, blossoming life. We witness the memorials of those who have served humanity, and whose names are in the annals of Freethought. Among those shines the name of William Nowlan, the father of Mrs. Charles Watts. He was one of the champions of the Secular cause in Nottingham years ago. Nottingham is noted as one of the old camping-grounds of Watts. Here he has borne the lance in the arena of intellectual debate, and made Freethought victorious. Therefore there are pleasant and noble recollections connected with this place. I was pleased to meet Mr. Chater, and also, at his house, Mrs. Charles A. Watts, daughter-in-law of my veteran comrade. She was sojourning here for a few days on account of her health. Nottingham will brightly abide in the memory of the Secular Pilgrim, though but a few hours were passed amid its charming associations.

Digitized by Google

At Nottingham my comrades bid me good-bye, after having seen me safely into the cars bound for Bradford. At this place, where I arrive at early candle light, I am met by J. W. Gott, John Grange, H. Smith, and James Sunderland, and their cordial greeting makes me ready for any fate in this somewhat frontier post of English Freethought, for Freethought is not by any means in the swim here at Bradford. It is a constant struggle to keep above water, but there are strenuous and noble workers. The Truth Seeker is a monthly publication, and it is doing good service to advance organisation. It is a useful pioneer journal, sold for only a penny, and one gets more than his money's worth every time. Such a journal in America would cost at least five pennies. By means of the Truth Seeker Bradford forges ahead and keeps the light of reason sparkling abroad. I have fair audiences for the three lectures on Sunday, May 19, and they are appreciative and enthusiastic; and I must say that I like Bradford, whatever the fortunes of war may be. I enjoy the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Gott, and am surrounded with home comforts. Saturday afternoon I take a trip with Sunderland over the city, or town rather; for, although Bradford has a population of 240,000, it is not, in English parlance, a city, as it has no cathedral and no bishop. Only those places are cities where cathedrals and bishops put in an imposing appearance.

Bradford, in some parts of the day, and at some places, presents almost as busy and crowded a scene as London. It is a manufacturing point. The Lister mills, the largest in the world, are here. They are simply immense, and astonish one with their height and variety. I visit Maningham Park, a beautiful place. Bradford is amply endowed with parks. Outside of London it surpasses all other towns of its size for the number it possesses, although in the heart of the city we do not see trees and gardens as we do in London.

Bradford is a picturesque place, although it is crowded with warehouses and factories, and its streets are narrow and crooked like those of Boston. I travel, after my rounds of the principal resorts, to the home of Mr. Sunderland at Undercliffe, and it is a climb to get there. It is like going up Zion's hill. However, we don't have to walk; we ride on the top of a big tramcar. The tramcars here have two stories, and they do present a gigantic appearance. A wonderful and beautiful view is unfolded as I mount upward on this tremendous vehicle. Bradford is built mainly in the heart of a great basin. Vast hills roll away on every side, decorated with residences. Far as the eye can see these billowy mountains extend. It was like many a scene in the Old Granite state, and reminded me more of my native territory than any place I had yet visited. The sun was setting as we traversed the lofty ridge, and it was indeed a gorgeous prospect. The sky was like a vast dome of mingling gold and blue, with darkening grey. Swell on swell of table lands, and mighty hills like the swaying of a huge sea, swept to every point of the horizon, while deep down below gleamed and glowered the multitudinous city. As my friend Smith said, looking at Bradford at night time, when its thousand lights were flashing, it seems as if heaven itself was turned topsy-turvy, and all the shining stars were huddled and scattered in flaming masses in the abyss beneath. Bradford certainly can boast of beauty and sublimity.

I must not omit to write of Laycock's Temperance Hotel, where they drink tea and eat toast and talk with the volubility of a ladies' sewing circle. It is a congregation of cranks from morning till night, and the humming and the buzzing and the flashing and the crashing of ever-varying ideas are immensely amusing. It is like the sputtering of electric batteries with opposing currents. This is one of the oldest places in Bradford, and is a curiosity shop indeed. Here is freedom of speech, the utmost antagonism of thought with prevailing good nature; while occasionally there is a lurid lightning glare which threatens disaster, but glances off in a rainbow shower of jolly laughter. I wouldn't have missed Laycock's on any account. It was unique, universal, interesting, evolutionary, and revolutionary. I liked it. It was good as a play. I hope it will keep rolling and tumbling on in Niagara-like fashion, with its intellectual rapids, long as the world stands. Bradford won't be a dull place to visit as long as Laycock's flourishes.

John Grange was chairman of the meetings, and made excellent opening addresses, giving a hearty welcome to the American visitor. Friends were present from Leeds, Shipley, Halifax, and other neighboring places. Some came many miles afoot to attend. I was quite encouraged to meet these loyal comrades. I must extend my thanks to the ladies, Mrs. Gott, Mrs. Grange, Mrs. Sunderland, and others, for their support. Only a few ladies in Bradford are willing to be identified with the movement. It is a pleasure to find a few who are brave and intelligent.

I leave Bradford with the star of progress shining upon my way. I have faith in the courage and devotion of our allies here. Especially must I thank Mr. J. W. Gott for his generous comradeship.

I return to London on Monday. I spend the evening at Watts's, where we outline future campaigns. Tuesday I am busy with "News and Notes," and can't see much, although there are thousands of objects yet to view. Tuesday evening I attend the annual meeting of the Malthusian League. I listened to earnest and splendid addresses from Dr. C. R. Drysdale, President; George W. Foote, A. B. Moss, Dr. T. R. Allinson, Mrs. Thornton Smith, and others. I was deeply interested in the many and fruitful ideas advanced. Of course I cannot see but what the Malthusian proposition is correct. Population must increase faster than the means of subsistence, and the check must be war, famine, and pestilence, or wise human control. It is a subject worthy of the widest consideration and the utmost liberty of expression. I am afraid we could not hold such a meeting as this in New York. We have not freedom of speech enough yet. Our English friends are ahead of us on some points. They have fought the good fight and won. Of course, in England, where the population is so overflowing, the pressure of the Malthusian question is much greater than in our own country, whose natural resources are still far in advance of the demand made upon them; but the time is surely coming when we in America must confront this enormous problem, the solution of which is absolutely necessary to human progress.

After the meeting I had a walk and talk amid London lights and shadows with A. B. Moss and Mr. Lawrence, a veteran of the Bradlaugh ranks. We stood on London Bridge—historic spot—and watched the wonderful scene, and in imagination traversed the ages past. We went by the old London Tower, glooming in the solemn midnight with the strange majesty of crime and death, and horror and glory; we passed over the stupendous Tower Bridge, a marvel of human achievement, one of the most amazing structures anywhere on the planet; a kind of crystallised Niagara in its magnificence, strength, loftiness, and massive proportions. I walked through Billingsgate, silent as the grave at this hour, with only a solitary policeman on his rounds; but at five o'clock in the morning what life and language burst in tumult here, a pandemonium of every ejaculation under the sun. The Tower of Babel or the Day of Pentecost couldn't equal this for diversity of tongues.

A. B. Moss is one of our best workers on this side, a vigorous and straightforward speaker. He has had a vast variety of experience. He is London born and bred, and understands how to reach and move the great masses of the people.

I was also glad to meet Edward Truelove, the oldest of our veterans here. He is in his eighty-fifth year. His courage is unquenchable. He has suffered in our cause, but bates no jot of heart or hope. He will die in the harness, with all the glorious enthusiasm of youth.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

July 6, Chester-le-Street Branch (lecture held at West Pelton Co-operative Hall at 6.30); 7, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 14, Bristol; 16 and 17, Plymouth; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth; 18, Leicester; 25, Liverpool.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

Holy Mummery.

At Montreal, on the 28th ult., three priests blessed a new bank located in that city. The archbishops sprinkled holy water throughout the building, the assistant priests responding to the benediction.

We had one of those holy banks in Chicago in 1890. It sported an immense capital, opened and closed its business hours by prayer, and conducted its entire business on Christian principles. Godly business men, and troops of widows and orphans reared in the faith, made their deposits in this pious bank. Some $400,000 were diverted from legitimate purposes, the bank failed, and thousands were ruined financially, all for the glory of God. The business world will do well to keep an eye on this Montreal combination or mixture of religion and finances.—Progressive Thinker.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

Lord Rosebery's Government fell over cartridges. No, says Mr. Price Hughes, he fell over the turf. Winning two "Derbies" lost him the Premiership. And serve him right. The man who won't listen to the Methodist Times and "act accordin'" deserves ostracism—and apparently gets it.

We know Mr. Price Hughes's opinion of Lord Rosebery. What we want now is Lord Rosebery's opinion of Mr. Price Hughes. If it were printed in the Methodist Times, it would treble the circulation.

The Methodist Times wants to put "fifty God-fearing young Methodists into the next House of Commons." Only fifty! Think of it! What modesty! Mr. Hughes ought to head the fifty. He has modesty enough.

Alas! the fifty dwindles down in practice. Mr. Hughes hints that he can find money enough for one candidate, and wishes to hear of a "young lay Methodist" who is willing to spend the money in wooing votes. He will probably find a good many lay Methodists on that lay.

Canon Ince has been writing in the Expositor on "The Miraculous Conception and Virgin Birth of Christ." He tries to get over the contradictions between Matthew and Luke by saying, "Their narratives must be derived from different sources." We thought both were from the Holy Ghost. What a pity they did not state what those sources were, and whether Mary, Joseph, or some others were responsible for their statements.

John, Mark, and Paul, according to Canon Ince, left out the virgin birth because they were concerned with other matters. Here again it is a pity that they did not drop even a hint that they had heard of such a remarkable occurrence. But the best explanation of Canon Ince is the reason that neither Jesus nor Mary gave any testimony on the matter. That, according to Canon Ince, was because of the "essentially private and delicate character" of the facts. We thought the Incarnation was the very basis of the Christian scheme. If so, its evidence should have been demonstrated, and not left on no better ground than the virgin birth of Perseus or of Buddha.

About thirty years ago a sensational trial took place in India, known as "the Maharaja Case." The reports are still sought after by the curious. It was alleged that certain high caste persons known as "Maharajas" posed as gods, and that the young women of the sect worshipped them, and regarded a divine visitation as a high honor. The adherents of the sect said that their proceedings were religious, and of essentially a private and delicate character. But an investigation took place, the Maharajas were condemned, and the scandal ceased.

The Daily Chronicle played it rather low over that Cromwell statue subscription. It appears that the £3,000 for the statue was sent by cheque to Mr. Gladstone before the Chronicle appeal was published. According to rumor, the person who sent the cheque was Lord Rosebery. If this be true, it is very much to his credit, and shows him to be capable of action in the midst of floods of talk.

Many funny things have been said of late about Cromwell, but the funniest is ascribed to Mr. Gladstone. The Grand Old Man is reported to have said on board the "Tantallon Castle" that "Cromwell was a dastard." That takes the cake.

The Rev. A. Poe, the Protestant rector of Ballynahon, has got into trouble through disobeying Jesus Christ's command to "give to every one that asketh." The reverend gentleman was mounted on a bicycle, and a tramp asked him for alms. This being refused, the tramp knocked the parson off his machine with a stone, belabored him with a stick, and then decamped. The poor parson was picked up unconscious and badly injured.

Spirit photographs were discussed by the London and Provincial Photographic Association. Mr. Duguid, the "medium" most noted for these productions, was years ago assistant to a Glasgow photographer. He inserted in Hafed, a pretended contemporary account of Jesus, a plate copied from Cassell's Family Bible, and has passed off a picture of the Cyprian's Priestess as spirit guides under various names—Lily, Aurora, Mignon, etc. One member of the association stated his belief that one of the portraits in The Veil Lifted was simply a picture of the bust of Clytie.

Oh the humbug of those dear religionists. Some years ago there was a row over Sunday tramcars in Glasgow, and it ended in a compromise, by which the cars were to run just in time to take the Godites to kirk and back again! The blessed Sabbath was to be broken a little, and the Godites were to have all the benefit of the desecration!

Something similar to this is proposed by Mr. Charles Hill, secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association. He is dead against all recreation on Sunday, nor will he hear of a theatre being used for even a lecture. What he proposes is this, that all licensed houses should be prohibited from being used on Sundays, except for religious purposes. For brazen hypocrisy this about takes the cake.

The Cape of Good Hope sky-pilots and Sabbatarians have been much riled by the success of the Sunday concerts at Cape Town. A deputation of these and the Y.M.C.A. waited on the Premier, and induced him to promise to bring in a measure dealing with the matter. Evidently there is a wide field for Freethought propaganda at the Cape.

John Jones, sub-postmaster at Trealaw, Rhondda Valley, and a prominent local preacher in the district, has been sentenced at the Glamorganshire Assizes to four years' penal servitude for forgery.

A religious riot between Christians and Hindus has taken place in the Madras presidency. The Shanars are descendants of aboriginal devil-worshippers, much looked down upon by the Hindus. The Christians have been far more successful with them than with the higher castes, and at Tinnevelly they have a bishop of their own. At Kalugumalai about a hundred Shanars abjured Hinduism and embraced Christianity. Considerable excitement was occasioned by their baptism in the Catholic church. The Hindus demanded the removal of a paudal which had been fixed by the Catholic missionary in front of the church. The Christians refused, and a riot took place. The church was set on fire, and some of the Christians were either suffocated or burned to death, while others who escaped by the windows were arrested by the police. Fires and murders were then committed indiscriminately, and the barbarous scenes continued for six hours, with the result that there were twenty deaths among the Shanars, a large number of wounded on both sides, and the Shanar property was totally destroyed.

The young lady who committed suicide with the Rev. Mr. Constable, of Guiseley, was, it appears, his wife, the parties having been quietly married by special licence last Easter.

In the case of the prosecution of the Manchester Spy for accusing Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlew, the editor of the Christian Worker, the Children's Own Paper, and chairman of the Working Lads' Institute, who was publicly described as "with a burning zeal for the cause of Christianity," of being "a loathsome being, who has misused the name of God and the vicariate of Christian work to gratify his unnatural passion," the case against the defendants, who pleaded justification and produced evidence in support of their charges, was dismissed.

San Mateo, near Ferrol, in Spain, has been the scene of a bloodthirsty fight. It all arose out of religion. There was a fair and a religious procession, and a quarrel began as to who should carry the patron saint of the village. First came hot words, then blows, then knives and revolvers; and forty persons, including two men of God, were among "the wounded." The patron saint did not interfere. Perhaps after a long spell of heaven he found the fighting a relief.

The New York Daily Tribune, in an article on the Salvation Army, says that "it does not appeal to the intellect, but to the feelings; the people it strives to reach have little intellect to be appealed to." At the same time, the Tribune thinks the Salvation Army is educating the religious residuum "for useful membership of religious bodies of the older and more polite type." According to this estimate—to put it plainly—"General" Booth is only the jackal to the lion of Ecclesiasticism.

Booth wants to keep in with all parties, so he has given orders that no Salvation Army building shall be let for political purposes during the coming contest.

At the Royal Agricultural Show, at Darlington, five men who took refuge under a tree during a thunderstorm were struck down by lightning. Two were killed outright, and the others writhed hysterically, though they escaped with but slight injuries.

The Daily News leader writer must have a curious idea of Providence. Detailing a case in which three viragos assaulted a girl because, as they said, "She's very pretty; let's make her ugly," it says: "They then caught her by the hair and dragged her to the ground, and, after beating her unmercifully, one of them stabbed at her with a tin-opening knife. Here, however, Providence interposed, and the knife was mercifully directed to the body of one of the viragos." This Providence which directs a stab at one person to wound another is a curious kind of "critter." It reminds us of the old farmer who said: "Drat that Providence; first he rotted my taters, then he spoilt my corn, and now he's took my missis. Drat Providence, say I."

Digitized by Google

The Christian people of Saybusch, in Galicia, won't have a Jew in the town, and, because one appeared as clerk in a lawyer's office, smashed the windows of the house he lodged in, broke the furniture, and stole his books and clothes. Fourteen persons were arrested, and one boasted that he paid for drinks for all who declared they would drive away the Jew from the town.

The Rev. R. H. Haweis has been rounding on his clerical brethren during his visit to Australia. He is reported as saying that the Church is officered by men inferior to those of twenty years ago. The Church, always the resort of the fool of the family, now only holds out prospects to the palpably dull or dishonest.

The lower clergy of Rome have started a new journal, called the Intransigent, to advocate Christian Socialism and the interests of the poorer priests, who get little chance of advance under the present ecclesiastical system. There are, it appears, Headlamites even at the headquarters of Catholic faith.

There is a large variety of Raskolniks, or Dissenters, in Russia, and no sooner has the Holy Synod suppressed one heterodox sect than another rises in its place. The latest heretical development is a sect known as Pilgrims, or Wanderers. They probably inherit a nomadic tendency, and, under the influence of religion, declare that the reign of Anti-Christ is at hand. That arch fiend seizing the seats of government, the only salvation will be to flee to the Siberian morasses, forests, and hills, where the Pilgrims retire to lead a primitive Christian life. The Holy Synod has cursed the sect as malignant enemies of Mother Church, and measures are to be adopted to root them out from their remote Siberian retreats.

The Times, in its notice of the late Professor Huxley, mentions that at the meeting of the British Association at Oxford, in 1860, Bishop Wilberforce had the impertinence to ask Huxley whether he was related to an ape by his grandfather's or his grandmother's side. Now, there is hardly a theologian living who would venture this sort of insult. This is left to the "gentlemen" of the Christian Evidence Society.

The Times does not give Huxley's dignified reply, which is, however, of historical interest. He said: "I asserted, and I repeat, that a man has no reason to be ashamed of having an ape for his grandfather. If there were an ancestor whom I should feel shame in recalling, it would be a man, a man of restless and versatile intellect, who, not content with an equivocal success in his own sphere of activity, plunges into scientific questions with which he has no real acquaintance, only to obscure them by an aimless rhetoric, and distract the attention of his hearers from the real point at issue by eloquent digressions and skilled appeals to religious prejudice."

Bradford has an Art Gallery; it has also a School Board; and the two disagree. The head mistress of one of the schools asked for permission to take her scholars to see the pictures. This was refused by the School Management Committee, and when the reason was asked at a Board meeting Canon Simpson talked about "public morality," and said that "the character of some of the pictures in the gallery made it inadvisable to send the children there."

We can hardly believe that there are any "wicked" pictures in the Bradford Art Gallery; such as Lot and his daughters, or David dancing naked before the Ark. Canon Simpson may have his eye upon a picture of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. But mere nakedness does not corrupt children. There is a delicious French story about a little sister and a littler brother looking at a picture of "our first parents." The little fellow asked which was the gentleman, and the little maiden said she couldn't tell—they had no clothes on. But perhaps children don't run that way in Bradford.

How they love one another! The High Church Times says of the Low Church Association: "The chief work which this so-called Church Association carries on is exactly described as a disturbance of the Church's peace." And it goes on to complain of "the unscrupulous method which the Association's colporteurs too frequently pursue" in attacking Ritualism.

The Rev. F. T. Wethered defends the Rector of Clifton, Bed., who refused to marry parties whose banns he had put up, because one of them was unbaptised, on the ground that he is legally required to have their Christian names; "and how can a person acquire a Christian name except at baptism?" We fancy the law would say that the Christian name, in a legal sense, is the name before the family name, and that it is acquired by registration without baptism.

The energy of Mr. Stead is to have a new outlet. He has discovered, through the spooks, that the crying want of the age is a Baby Exchange. It is an old saying that those who don't want children have too many, and those who do want them have none. Mr. Stead is going to rectify this. We hope he won't make a worse muddle than in his dabbling with other social topics.

The choir of a church in Leicester have struck under peculiar circumstances. The lady members donned ecclesiastical raiment—cassocks, caps, surplices—and were ordered to wear ordinary dress. They struck, and have been supported by the male members, who don't see why the clergy alone should sport ecclesiastical millinery.

What a funny title! The League of the Christian Ladies' Boot. Its object is to free the Chinese ladies from compression of the feet. The ladies of the League compress their waists, which is more dangerous. A Chinaman said: "We squeezy foot; you squeezy waist. Same both. Get husband."

At the Royal Albert Hall meeting of the Woman's International Temperance Association, when Miss Weston came to the front, the band struck up "Rule Britannia," and the audience (or was it congregation?) joined in "spontaneously." What splendid internationalism!

Canon Wilberforce spoke at that meeting, taking the place of Mr. W. S. Caine, who had to leave for Westminster. "I am not Caine," he said, "and I am not Able to fill the position worthily." This gorgeous witticism convulsed the audience (or congregation). According to the Methodist Times, their "gaiety was not eclipsed for several minutes."

Fathers Stanton and Hogg, the well-known Ritualists of St. Alban's, Holborn, are going to try to bring about Christian Reunion by issuing an English edition of the Roman Missal, in which the Communion Service of the Church of England will be incorporated. The mere announcement suffices to send the English Churchman in a rage.

"She" is an American. Her registered name is Mrs. J. C. Brooker. She is absolute ruler of the Perfectionists, calls herself "daughter of God," and holds communication with him through angels. The previous "She" was Mrs. Martin. She was buried at Cincinnati on May 25, and the Perfectionists keep watch night and day over her grave in order to witness her resurrection and ascent to heaven in a chariot of fire. Fools! of course; but are they bigger fools than some ancient persons we read of who saw the "son of God" go through a similar performance?

A certain Christian Evidence journal is asking whether it is to live or die, and is frantically appealing for help to avoid a silent funeral. One of its friends, a red-hot Orangeman, hopes it will receive support to oppose Atheists, Secularists, and other "loose persons." Even the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes asks his friends to buy it for a few weeks, if only out of charity, in order that it may carry on its crusade against "scoffers." But a paper cannot prolong its life by such arts as these. The fact is, there is no real demand for Christian Evidence journals. Their only chance lies in the patronage of Secularists. That is why we don't advertise them.

We see it reported that the Rev. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, on entering the twenty-sixth year of his ministry there, announced that he would forego the fixed stipend paid to him as pastor, and depend solely on what the people chose to bring him, whether it was much or little. Dr. Parker has always been so keen after money that we are tempted to believe he fancies this plan will work out better than the other. He was never known to be satisfied with "little."

In the interest of scientific clearness I object to say that I have a soul, when I mean all the while that my organism has certain mental faculties which, like the rest, are dependent on its molecular composition, and come to an end when I die; and I object still more to affirm that I look to a future life, when all I mean is, that the influence of my doings and sayings will be more or less felt by a number of people after the physical components of that organism are scattered to the four winds.—Huxley.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

August 4, Newcastle.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

J. T. G.—The "childishness" is in complaining of what could not be avoided. Milton Hall, even in Kentish Town, is better (for the present) than no hall at all. Mr. Foote and his colleagues are not under an obligation to do impossibilities. They do their best, sometimes for not so much as thanks.

M. Andrews.—Five hundred shillings would be of little use; they only amount to £25; and we have appealed enough.

E. G. Taylor.—Letters cannot be published without the writer's consent. Mr. George Wise says that his letter to you was marked "private," and asks us not to publish it. Of course we respect his wishes, though it seems to us that he lacks courage in the matter. Mr. Wise, by the way, doesn't answer the question put to him in the Freethinker as to whether he asks opponents at his meetings for their names and addresses, and what he wants to know their addresses for.

J. D.—Your essay on "God and the Atheist" shows that you have thought; but you require a great deal more practice in composition before your efforts will reach the level of publication.

F. W. Swain.—Pleased to hear the Derby friends were so delighted with Mr. Putnam's lecture.

W. Mann.—We did not keep the copy of the Times in which Sir Gilbert Parker's letter appeared. The date would be near June 20. Canon Taylor's articles, and other criticisms of missionary enterprise, have from time to time been noticed in our columns.

H. Duncan (Sunderland).—Will see what can be done.

A. G. Scopes.—Received. Shall be pleased to see you at Clacton.

R. J. Murray.—Mr. Foote has written you privately on the matter.

Augustus.—Mr. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C., will supply you with a good cabinet photo of the late Charles Bradlaugh for 2s. 6d.

E. Calvert intends to join the London Secular Federation's excursion.

J. Wood.—See paragraph. Mr. Foote cannot take part in any open-air meetings at present, being already overworked. But he will make an exception if you find you cannot hold your meetings at Wood Green on account of Christian rowdyism. He has always held it to be his duty to intervene to the best of his power in such emergencies.

W. A. Lill (Sheffield).—Correspondence should reach us by Tuesday morning. Your letter is too late for "Sugar Plums." Glad to hear, though, that Mr. Putnam had an enthusiastic reception on Sunday.

Papers Received.—Church Reformer—Freedom—Liberty—Der Arme Teufel—Christian Commonwealth—Humanity—Zoophilist—Huddersfield Daily Examiner—Nottingham Argus—The Literary Guide—Manchester Spy—Manchester Courier—Boston Investigator—Twentieth Century—Truthseeker—Freidenker—Open Court—Progressive Thinker—Light—Two Worlds—Isle of Man Times—Yorkshire Post—Cape Argus—Non-Sectarian—New York Tribune—Manchester Evening News—Crescent.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor by marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

That a man should determine to devote himself to the service of humanity, including intellectual and moral self-culture under that name; that this should be, in the proper sense of the word, his religion, is not only an intelligible, but I think a laudable, resolution. And I am greatly disposed to believe that it is the only religion which will prove itself to be unassailably acceptable so long as the human race endures.—Huxley.

SUGAR PLUMS.

The summer weather did not prevent an excellent audience from assembling in the Camberwell Secular Hall on Sunday evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "All About Angels." This evening (July 7) Mr. Foote takes the chair at Milton Hall for Mr. J. P. Gilmour, of Glasgow, who is on a visit to the South, and is taking the opportunity to address a London audience. We hope the metropolitan Freethinkers will give their Scottish visitor a hearty reception. He deserves it.

Last Sunday evening the Hall of Science was closed, and Mr. Charles Watts gave his lecture at Milton Hall instead. His subject was "Cromwell and English Freedom." Considering that the change of place of meeting had only been announced for a few days, there was a very good audience, who gave Mr. Watts an enthusiastic reception. Miss Vance presided, and made a neat little speech. Previous to the lecture Mr. Watts drew attention to the death of Professor Huxley, and paid a well-deserved tribute to his useful career. The references made to the principal incidents in the Professor's public life, and to his peaceful death, were received with sympathetic applause.

Our London readers are again reminded of the Secular Federation's Annual Excursion to Clacton-on-Sea next Sunday (July 14). The tickets are now on sale, and full particulars will be found in our advertisement columns. Messrs. Foote and Watts have given up their Sunday, for lecturing purposes, in order to join the party and spend the day with the "saints," who will doubtless muster in strong force. Freethinkers should induce their Christian friends to come by our special train, just to see what a melancholy, miserable set the "Atheists" are when they "assemble and meet together."

Our American visitor, Mr. S. P. Putnam, lectures to-day (July 7) in the Amphitheatre, Northumberland-road, Newcastle-on-Tyne. We hope there will be a big rally of Tyneside Freethinkers on this occasion. They should come in from twenty miles around, and give the President of the American Secular Union a regular North-of-England welcome.

It is well that our American visitor is combining work with pleasure, or he would go back to New York utterly demoralised. Everywhere he goes the "saints" are showing him generous hospitality, and taking him about to the various places of interest. And "Samuel"—as Mr. Watts calls him—is enjoying himself immensely. He is having "a fine time" indeed. Yes, it is the lecturing that saves him. Without that he would feel inclined, when he goes home in September, to rush off to Florida, or some other happy land, instead of buckling-to for the annual Convention of his own Society.

Mr. Putnam continues his "Notes and News" from England in the New York Truthseeker. The number for June 22 contains the account of his day up the Thames with Messrs. Foote and Watts, his visit to the British Museum with Mr. Wheeler, and his experiences at Liverpool. We shall reprint all this in due course.

The Liverpool friends took Mr. Putnam in on one point; of course not designedly. They forgot to tell him that Liverpool is at the mouth of the Mersey, and he forgot that London is a long way up the Thames; so that he falls into the mistake of supposing the Mersey to be the "broader and deeper" river of the two. Of course the Thames is far and away the premier river of England.

Ingersoll was invited by the manager of the Queen's Theatre, Montreal, to lecture there. The Colonel was agreeable, and sent on his advertising matter. Every paper refused to insert it, and the manager, on account of the boycott of the press, got the contract cancelled.

Captain R. C. Adams, the energetic president of the Canadian Secular Union, is, of course, not satisfied with this, and assures the Colonel that if he comes he will find his audience. He says: "The gifted authoress, Helen H. Gardener, once lectured to a thousand people in Montreal on a Sunday evening, but no mention of the fact was made in Monday's papers. She afterwards wittily wrote: 'Montreal has no newspaper. If a few ministers meet together, it is news. If a thousand people gather to hear a Freethought lecturer, it is not news.'"

Professor Huxley was once wroth with an Evangelical busybody at a seaside resort, who offered him a tract and wanted to know whether he was "saved." It seemed to the great scientist a piece of gross impertinence. He told the soul-saver to mind his own business—at which the soul-saver felt "insulted." The fussy religionist did not understand the serenity with which an unbeliever can face death, leaving all the "funk" to the Christians, who hope to go to heaven, but have an awful fear of going to the other place. Professor Huxley's death was calm and peaceful, as became a philosopher. He read and wrote up to the last day of his life, and "through all his sufferings," the Times says, "he preserved that amiable and kindly disposition which made him so beloved in his own household."

Digitized by Google

It goes without saying that Professor Huxley died without the assistance and consolation of professional exhorters. His wife and one of his daughters were with him when he drew his last breath. Which was as it should be. All the dying really require is to let their last gaze fall upon dear faces. Death is then a mixture of sleep and love.

The Daily Chronicle writes of Professor Huxley's death: "The uppermost thought born of the sorrow which this morning's news brings is that a striking and charming personality is withdrawn. . . . . True to himself, it followed that he was wrong-doer to none, and with his withdrawal there remains one the less of that type of the ideal man who endeared himself to such as knew him only in the fellowship of spirit. To those who knew him as friend and counsellor his loss will be irreparable."

The Chronicle also notes that Professor Huxley was "conscious to the last, and knowledge of his coming end was born with equanimity, his strength of character and his amiable disposition never forsaking him."

The Daily Telegraph wrote: "We have had in Thomas Henry Huxley a guide of light and leading in natural science of whom England may well be proud, foremost in pursuing the task of enlarging the area of human knowledge, faultless in scientific integrity, and as true a friend by his work and worth to his age and to his race as he was a fast and loyal votary of Truth, and fearless follower of her steps, wherever they might lead."

The Pall Mall Gazette paid a high tribute to Professor Huxley, and courageously stated that his controversy with Mr. Gladstone about the Mosaic account of Creation was one of his finest efforts. The Westminster Gazette wrote: "We lose in him, not only an eminent scientist and a brilliant writer, but a commanding man."

The next dinner of the Omar Khayyam Club will be held on Saturday, the 13th, at Box Hill, Dorking, and George Meredith will be one of the guests.

The Manchester Branch will shortly enter upon an active out-door crusade, and, with that object in view, they have engaged the services of Mr. C. Cohen for a period of four weeks, commencing Sunday, August 18. A subscription list will be opened to defray the expenses, which, of course, will be considerable, and friends are desired to subscribe as liberally as possible.

Secularists in the Wood Green district are earnestly invited to rally round the Secular open-air platform. At a recent meeting there was persistent and reckless disorder, and eventually Mr. C. Cohen had to be protected by the police on his way to the railway station. The local Branch means business, and will not be intimidated. It intends to open a Freethought bookstall on Saturday evening (July 6) at 6 o'clock, at the foot of Jolly Butchers' Hill, close to the lecture station. This novel enterprise deserves the utmost success.

The Rangoon Times appears to be a very liberal paper. There have been discussions in its columns on such questions as the views of Colonel Ingersoll, Is Christianity True? etc., in which due prominence has been given to the letters of Freethinkers. One of the writers, signing himself "Truthseeker," cites Mr. Wheeler at length on the connection between Christianity and Buddhism. Another writer boldly signs himself "Atheist." Heresy seems to flourish in Burmah.

Humanity, the monthly organ of the Humanitarian League, continues its crusade against the brutal features of our "Christian civilisation." The July number contains an important article by J. M. Greg on the Irish Cattle Traffic, and an able reply by H. S. Salt to Mr. D. G. Ritchie on the Rights of Animals. Accompanying this number, at least in our packet, is a facetious Play in one act, entitled "A Lover of Animals," by H. S. Salt. It is brightly written, and, if we may be pardoned the pun, not without salt.

The New York Daily Tribune reviews the Life of Charles Bradlaugh, and, after the manner of Christian reviewers, seeks to turn commendation of Mr. Bradlaugh into disparagement of those who work on similar lines. It concludes by saying: "The truest judgment of his character and work is embodied in that one word which was his self-chosen and best-known name, 'Iconoclast.' But it is one thing to smash empty images with the hammer; it is another and vastly different thing to knock one's own head against an Everlasting Rock."

Leslie Stephen's Life of his brother, Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, makes it clear how the great legal luminary, who, by the way, was a prolific writer both on the Saturday Review and the Pall Mall Gazette, gave up, one by one, every article of Christian belief. "One by one went tower and temple down." Yet Sir J. F. Stephen found life sweet, bright, and glorious, and said: "I should dearly like to live it again."

Sir James once had an interview with Cardinal Newman. "Fitzjames," says his brother, "was not the man to be awed by any reputation into reticence." He asked him plainly for some reasonable ground for believing that his Church was what it claimed to be. Newman replied, in substance, that he could not argue with a man who differed so completely on first principles. Fitzjames took this as amounting to the admission that Newman had nothing to say to anyone who did not go three-fourths of the way with him. "I said at last," he proceeds, "'If Jesus Christ were here, could He say no more than you do?' 'I suppose you to mean that, if He could, I ought to be able to give you what you ask?' 'Certainly; for you profess to be His authorised agent, and call on me to believe you on that ground. Prove it.' All he could say was: 'I cannot work miracles;' to which I replied: 'I did not ask for miracles, but for proofs.' He had absolutely nothing to say."

The Sunday Society has just held its twentieth annual meeting in London. Mr. Holman Hunt, the artist, vacated the chair for the new president, the Rev. Canon Barnett, who delivered a long and "churchy" address. Somehow or other, these clergymen will take a professional view of everything. Canon Barnett is in favor of opening places of culture on Sunday; but he seems to be opposed to Sunday amusements. Even in the matter of Sunday lectures Canon Barnett does not appear disposed to make any legal concession to Secularists, who could not get "incorporated," and could not, therefore, take advantage of the alteration in the law which Canon Barnett proposes. Still, it is well to have this Sunday question ventilated; and, from this point of view, the Sunday Society—even with a parson for president—may be wished every success.

THE HONORARIUM TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

It will be remembered that at the last Conference of the National Secular Society a letter was read from Mr. George Anderson, suggesting that its President "should be recouped for his loss of time and money in serving the party's interests." Accordingly, the Conference appointed a Committee, consisting of Mr. George Anderson, Mr. Charles Watts, Mr. Robert Forder, and Mr. George Ward, to consider the best plan to be adopted for carrying out the suggestion. The Committee met and drew up a circular, which probably most of the readers of the Freethinker have seen.

This Committee unanimously passed the following resolution, proposed by Mr. George Anderson, and seconded by Mr. George Ward: "That the sum to be paid the President of the N.S.S. for this year be £100, to be confirmed, augmented, or diminished each year by vote of the Conference."

By this resolution it was the desire of the Committee to carry out the object, for which it had been appointed by the congress of delegates, in the most satisfactory manner both as to terms and amount, leaving the Society to act yearly in future as circumstances might dictate.

It is to be hoped that what has been done will meet with the approval of the Secular party, and that its members will subscribe the required amount as promptly as possible.

CHARLES WATTS.

Subscriptions Received:—

Per Miss Vance: S. Hollies, 5s.; G. Anderson, £5; "Rubber Stamp," 10s.; J. Kennedy, £1 1s.; D. Davis, £1 1s.

Per R. Forder: W. Carter, £2 2s.; C. J. Pottage, £2; W. C. Stuart, £1 1s.; W. Lamb, 10s.; W. P. Ball, £1; J. Fulton, 10s.; J. D. Pottage, 5s.; Crabtree Brothers, 3s. 6d.; A. J. Marriott, 5s.; J. Hayes, 2s.; F. S. C., 1s.

Per Charles Watts: Z. Z., 5s.

Digitized by Google

DEATH OF PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

On June 29 Europe lost one of her most distinguished scientists, and Freethought one of the ablest advocates, of the century. Born May 4, 1825, Thomas Henry Huxley's early education was carried on at home and in his father's school at Ealing. In 1842 he entered the medical school at Charing Cross, passed with honors in anatomy and physiology, and, after some medical experience among the London poor, became M.R.C.S., and in '46 joined the Medical Naval Service. From Haslar Hospital he was selected to accompany Captain Owen Stanley on a surveying voyage in the Southern Seas. He investigated the fauna of those regions with avidity, sent home papers to the Royal and Linnean Societies, by which he acquired reputation, so that soon after his return home in 1851 he succeeded Edward Forbes in the chair of Natural History at the School of Mines. He enriched zoology with many memoirs, and joined Tyndall in studying glaciers in Switzerland. He was foremost among the men who stood beside Darwin; and, next to Darwin himself, to Huxley must be ascribed the honor of popularising the doctrine of Evolution. In 1860 he delivered popular lectures on "The Relation of Man to the Lower Animals," and afterwards, in his Evidence as to Man's Place in Nature (1863), showed the relation of man to the higher apes. This was ten years before the publication of Darwin's Descent of Man. In this year he was elected Professor of Comparative Anatomy to the Royal College of Surgeons, and held that office for seven years. He became president of the Geological and the Ethnological Societies in 1869 and 1870, and presided over the meeting of the British Association held at Liverpool in 1870. In this year he also became member of the first London School Board, and was chairman of the committee which arranged the scheme of education adopted in the schools.

All this while Huxley was contributing, by magazine articles, lay sermons, and addresses, to the spread of science viewed in the light of evolution. These were afterwards published—the Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews in 1870, Critiques and Addresses in 1873. In '76 and '77 Mr. Huxley was propagating his views on science and evolution in America. The American Addresses were published in 1877. His book on Hume, contributed to Morley's "Men of Letters" series, is a model of clear exposition, and he puts the argument against miracles in his own incisive way. One of his last works was seeing through the press a complete edition of his non-technical essays in nine volumes. The Essays Upon Some Controverted Questions contain some of his most important anti-theological writings, such as those on "Gladstone and Genesis," "The Evolution of Theology," "Science and Morality," "Science and Witness to the Miraculous," and "The Keepers of the Herd of Swine."

In his anthropological study on The Evolution of Theology Huxley shows he had bottomed the pretensions of religionists. He found the genesis of their god in ghost belief, and traces the many traits of similarity between the religious beliefs and observances of the early Jews and those of the savage inhabitants of the Tonga Islands. With the critical researches of Biblical scholars like Kuenen, Kalisch, Reuss, and Wellhausen he was perfectly familiar. He was equally at home on the ground of New Testament criticism, and men like Gladstone, the Bishop of Carlisle, and Prebendary Wace found their arguments pulverised. His keen perception of the weak places in their armor was shown by keeping them to the story of the Gadarene swine.

His letter on the "Corybantic Christianity" of the Salvation Army was enlarged into an incisive criticism on Booth's scheme of dealing with "Darkest England," under the title of Social Diseases and Worse Remedies.

Throughout his career Professor Huxley made it clear that the trend of his teaching was in opposition to the dogmas of the theologians. In the autobiographical sketch appended to his collected essays he thus sums up his life's aims: "The last thing that it would be proper for me to do would be to speak of the work of my life, or to say at the end of the day whether I think I have earned my wages or not. Men are said to be partial judges of themselves—young men may be, I doubt if old men are. Life seems terribly foreshortened as they look back; and the mountain they set themselves to climb in youth turns out to be a mere spur of immeasurably higher ranges, when, with failing breath, they reach the top. But if I may speak of the objects I have had, more or less, definitely in view, since I began the ascent of my hillock, they are briefly these: To promote the increase of natural knowledge, and to forward the application of scientific methods of investigation to all the problems of life to the best of my ability, in the conviction, which has grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength, that there is no alleviation for the sufferings of man except veracity of thought and of action, and the resolute facing of the world as it is, when the garment of make-belief, by which pious hands have hidden its uglier feature, is stripped off. It is with this intent that I have subordinated any reasonable or unreasonable ambition for scientific fame which I may have permitted myself to entertain to other ends; to the popularisation of science; to the development and organisation of scientific education; to the endless series of battles and skirmishes over evolution; and to untiring opposition to that ecclesiastical spirit, that clericalism, which in England, and everywhere else, and to whatever denomination it may belong, is the deadly enemy of science."

This testimony is true. Huxley was a valiant teacher, thinker, and fighter for Freethought. Knowing the forces on the side of superstition, he armed himself with every weapon of learning and of skill in controversy to meet and master the obscurantists on their own ground. He was one of the few men who combined high scientific attainments with equal literary gifts. His work was many-sided, and his power of lucid exposition unrivalled. His writings are clear, elegant, and trenchant, and take rank with our best literature. He was the protagonist of evolution. In promoting higher education, in popularising science, in spreading Freethought and combatting superstition, his influence has been deep and wide, and his loss is one that will not easily be supplied.

Huxley called himself an Agnostic. He found it was an unpardonable sin to presume to go about unlabelled. "I could find," he says, "no label to suit me; so, in my desire to range myself and be respectable, I invented one; and, as the chief thing I was sure of was that I did not know a great many things that the 'ists and the 'ites about me professed to be familiar with, I called myself an Agnostic." Of the position indicated by the term, as clear an account as any is that given by Huxley at the close of his famous essay, "On the Physical Basis of Life":—

"If a man asks me what the politics of the inhabitants of the moon are, and I reply that I do not know; that neither I, nor anyone else, have any means of knowing; and that, under these circumstances, I decline to trouble myself about the subject at all, I do not think he has any right to call me a sceptic. On the contrary, in replying thus, I conceive that I am simply honest and truthful, and show a proper regard for the economy of time. . . . . Why trouble ourselves about matters of which, however important they may be, we do know nothing, and can know nothing? We live in a world which is full of misery and ignorance, and the plain duty of each and all of us is to try to make the little corner he can influence somewhat less miserable and somewhat less ignorant than it was before he entered it."

This is Secularism, and plain common sense. Huxley lived a good secular life, one of tireless activity in the service of truth and justice, without fear and without reproach. Our reverent tribute of admiration must be laid on his grave.

FREETHOUGHT PHILANTHROPY.

Among the many large bequests by rich men which have distinguished the present century, the gifts of Freethinkers have figured conspicuously. The founder of Girard College, in addition to the $84,000,000 required for the establishment of that college, gave during his lifetime and at his death $30,000 to the Pennsylvania Hospital, $20,000 to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, $10,000 to the Orphan Asylum, $10,000 to the Lancaster Schools, $10,000 to provide fuel for the Philadelphia poor, $10,000 to aid distressed sea captains, $20,000 to relieve poor Masons, $50,000 for city improvements in Philadelphia, and $300,000 for canals in the State. When, in 1814, the Government needed help, Girard at once advanced $5,000,000; and when, in 1793 and 1797, Philadelphia was afflicted with the yellow fever, and but twelve persons could be induced to nurse the sick and bury the dead, Stephen Girard, the Freethinker, was one of these.

James Smithson left $500,000 to found the Institution named after him at Washington. Peter Brigham gave $3,000,000 to establish hospitals in Boston. John Redmon gave $400,000 to support free beds in the Boston hospitals.

James Lick gave $1,000,000 to found an astronomical observatory. William McClure gave $500,000 to aid the working men of Indiana. A. T. Tilley gave $30,000 to build a school at Northampton, Mass., for the scientific training of women without theology.

In Glasgow, Scotland, the Mitchell Library was established at a cost of £70,000 by a Freethinker; and in the same city Mr. George Baillie left £18,000 to establish unsectarian schools, reading-rooms, etc.

Many other similar acts could be named, one of them being a bequest of $50,000 by the late Mr. Butland to the Toronto General Hospital.

J. S. Ellis.

Scepticism is the highest of duties, and blind faith the one unpardonable sin.—Huxley.

Digitized by Google

THE FIRST THEOLOGIAN.

Once, in the times of the cavemen, thousands of years ago,
Came there a storm which blustered over the land, laying low
Forests which grew on the hillsides; bringing with it the rain,
Thunder, and lightning; and strewing beasts, stricken dead, o'er the plain.

Gathered a group of the tribesmen, awe-struck, appalled at the sight;
Huddled they close at the cave-mouth doubting that morning light
Would never again follow darkness—scared, now and then, with the flash,
Bright and speeding, of lightning, followed by thunder crash.

Crouched they in fear and in trembling, fearfully watching the play
Fitfully made by the lightning; anxiously longing for day;
Dreading the crash of the thunder; hearing the pitiless rain
Lash on their shelter of limestone—entering time and again.

Huddled they closer together, shivering, wakeful, afraid;
Hearing the shriek of the storm-fiend as he passed by on his raid;
Eyes staring open in terror under their long-matted hair—
More like to beasts than to mankind, crouching in dread in their lair.

Slow spread the dawn in the eastward, merging the black into grey;
Lulling, the gale fell to sighing. This was the promise of day.
Then came to one of the tribesmen speech with the coming of light;
Passed from each one of the tribesmen fear with the passing of night.

Peered they abroad from their cave-mouth into the dusk of the dawn;
Saw, in the soft breezes waving, each blade of grass with its awn;
Saw the destruction the forest had suffered throughout the night;
Saw a lightning-seared mammoth prone in the spectral light.

Then rose the voice of the speaker: "When by myself, I have thought
That there were spirits whose pleasure came from the pain by them wrought.
But now I know there are spirits, strong with a strength beyond man,
And our day's journey is merely to them nothing more than a span.

"We've heard their voice in the thunder, we've seen their rage in the wind,
Tearing the trees up, and leaving nothing but wreckage behind;
We've seen the flash from their fire-stick streaking the blackness of night;
We've seen the death of the mammoth, quick, in the midst of his flight.

"Thus they bring hurt and wreak vengeance; they may bring death on us, too, Quick as was brought on the mammoth lying out there in our view."
Listened the tribesmen in silence; listened intently till he Spoke of their end by the spirits, and of the pain that might be.

Startled, they looked at each other; then they began to discuss:
"What if the death which he speaks of should be the death brought on us?
We must do something or other. What he has said is the truth,
For we have seen that the spirits kill and destroy without ruth."

Once more the voice of the speaker took up the thread of his speech:
"Let us take gifts from the hunting; fish found by us on the beach.
Let us lay them on a boulder close to the edge of the wood,
And when the wild spirits see them they may do works for our good."

"Yea, that is wise," said the tribesmen. "He counsels wisely and we Straightway shall make to the spirits gifts, and the spirits will see
That we give honor and fear them, and they will leave us at peace."

. . . . . .

Such were the words of the cavemen. So came the gospel of peace.

THE GABERLUNZIE.

THE HOLY LAND AND THE HOLY BOOK.

THE editor of a religious paper recently offered a prize for a short paper on the above subject, designed to convey information to the young. I wrote the following, but have not as yet received the prize: "The so-called Holy Land is of about the size and fertility of Wales. The phrase, 'from Dan to Beersheba,' has been used so often that people have, without thinking, supposed them to be as far apart as Cape Horn and Behring Straits, whereas they are nearer than from London to Liverpool. Jerusalem the golden is a one-horse town, noted for spurious relics and fleas. The whole plateau on which it is built could never have accommodated fifty thousand inhabitants. Solomon's temple was a shanty ninety feet by thirty, and, before this was put up for Jehovah, he used to live in a tent.

"The so-called Holy Bible consists of sixty-six books by various authors. Whom they were written by, or when they were written, nobody certainly knows. As they have come down through many hands, they have probably been much touched up en route. Some were certainly not written by the persons to whom they were ascribed. Thus Deuteronomy contains an account of the funeral of Moses, and the Psalms of David refer to the captivity of Babylon. They are interesting records of Semitic legend, folk-lore, and tradition, and contain some fine poetry, as in Job, Isaiah, and some of the Psalms. But they contain numerous contradictions, indecencies, absurdities, and atrocities, and the earlier historical books bear the stamp of barbarism. Only undiscriminating ignorance or interested priestcraft could attribute such a mixture to an all-wise God."

CELSUS.

Christian Evidences.

Christian evidences are not such as would be required in ordinary matters requiring proof. Christian evidences of its past history consist of the fables handed down by the "Christian fathers." Those fathers, from Paul down, took the ground that a lie in the interest of the Church was a good thing. The Christian evidences of the future are reduced to one item—faith. And those that relate to the present are two in number. The unanswerable evidences to what are called the truths of Christianity are that so many great people have believed them, and that so many Bibles are printed! These two facts startle and appal the unbeliever with their tremendous force. Argument against such evidences as these has but little weight. The fact that the Bible has fewer readers than any book in the world has no weight. Even in Christian families, reading the Bible and taking salts are intimately associated repugnances. You can find ten thousand people who believe the Bible to one that has read it. What the minister reads from the pulpit is considered sufficient for the average Christian. And the "general belief" proof is akin to the former universal belief in a flat earth. God himself, with millions of his most learned people, believed the earth flat and stationary. But that didn't affect the rotundity or disturb the revolutions of the globe. Neither does the general belief in the stories of Jonah and Christ make them true, nor the millions of Bibles printed establish the claims of that book to divinity, or even to decency.—Ironclad Age.

Obituary.

IT is with regret that I announce the death of another friend and supporter of the Secular movement in Failsworth. The interment of Mrs. Fletcher, of Failsworth, took place at the Unitarian Chapel on Wednesday, June 26. By the kind permission of their minister the Secular Service was read by Mr. Pegg, of Manchester, in the chapel, and afterwards at the graveside. Mrs. Fletcher, who was seventy-four years of age, was one of the oldest supporters of the Failsworth Secular Sunday School, and, although she has not taken an active part for some time, her loss will be greatly felt. The funeral was attended by a large number of teachers and friends from the Secular schools, and the most sincere sympathy is felt by all who knew her for those who are related to her.—E. HOWARD.

Digitized by Google

CORRESPONDENCE.

Re HADRIAN'S LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—In his interesting article on "Our Sun-God" Mr. Wheeler refers to the famous letter of the Emperor Hadrian to Servianus. In that letter, which, be it noted, is only preserved to us at second-hand, Hadrian is represented as saying that "the (Egyptian) worshippers of Serapis are called Christians," and that "those consecrated to the service of Serapis call themselves bishops of Christ." But does not Mr. Wheeler think that there is some mistake here? Hadrian's letter may be dated about A.D. 134. Now Dr. Barr Mitchell, in his learned monograph on "χριστος," has shown that in the so-called "Christian" epitaphs there is no instance earlier than the third century wherein the name-word is not written "Chrestos" or else "Chreistos" (same pronunciation, emphasising the long e). And in Antigua Mater Professor Johnson—who, on the publication of this book, found Freethinkers more in accord with him than when he put out The Rise of Christendom—says that for the first four centuries it was the common practice of the Christians to write the name of their Master "Chrest" or "Chreist." On the whole, then, it seems pretty certain that not earlier than the third century did the term "Christian" come in to use.

But, if this be true, Hadrian could hardly have written as above. χριστος is the proper Greek equivalent of the Hebrew word which we write "Messiah," and which means "anointed." From the first, Greek-speaking Jews would, as a matter of course, use this as their equivalent. But Hadrian could hardly have been referring to Greek-speaking Jews when he wrote of the Egyptian worshippers of Serapis. Besides, Chrestos was a title borne by Osiris; and, therefore, the probability is that the (Osirian) worshippers of Serapis called themselves "Chrestoi"=the "good folks," or followers of the Good One. We cannot say which word Hadrian used in his original letter; but it seems to me very unlikely that he wrote of the Egyptian worshippers of Serapis as "Christians."

However, I am sadly sensible of the fact that my information is too meagre for my opinion to be of any value. Perhaps, therefore, Mr. Wheeler will kindly favor his studious readers with his views on this important point.

ANDREW LIDDLE.

[When the Greek conquerors of Egypt assimilated the old Osirian faith with the Greek worship of Hades in the worship of Serapis as Lord of the Underworld (the sun-spirit which, presiding over the destinies of the dead, assured their resurrection, similar to his own), Chrestos became his title, as equivalent to the Egyptian nefri, or "excellent," found on Egyptian tombs with the crux ansata, or sign of life. Among Egyptians of the post-Ptolemaic period Chrestoi was equivalent to "the good, the justified." Thus the monks of Serapis were Chrestoi, and Hadrian may originally have so written it. But, as one-third of the inhabitants of Alexandria were Jews, it is likely that the play on words, which identified the worshippers of the "anointed" with the "good," is earlier. Philo shows the eclecticism which was going on a century before Hadrian. The Therapeuts he describes were like the monks of Serapis, and they are identified by Eusebius with the Christians. We find this play on words in Romans xvi. 18, 1 Peter ii. 3, in Justin Martyr, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian; all usually dated before the fourth century. The latter says (Ad Nationes): "By a faulty pronunciation you call us Chrestians, and so utter the sense of pleasantness and goodness." It was natural that tomb inscriptions should retain this older and more general form. No doubt the double meaning tended both to popularise the Christian name and to modify the character of the faith. The letter of Hadrian indicates that in the second century Christianity was allied to, or had not entirely disengaged itself from, the Egyptian faith, and suggests that it dates rather from Alexandria than from Jerusalem.—J. M. W.]

THE POPULATION QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—In an "Acid Drop," in your issue of June 23, you refer to Dr. Horton as "never having read Malthus, or being incapable of understanding him." I believe there is a more probable explanation of the Doctor's present pronouncement as to the absurdity of Malthus' prediction. In the Christian World of November 9, 1893, there was a summary of a deliverance by Dr. Horton, under the heading, "A Straight Talk," in which the following occurs: "Dr. Horton boldly dealt with the population question, denouncing as gross selfishness the bringing into the world of families by those who cannot maintain them, and introducing children to disease and dirt, and, still worse, to moral and spiritual ruin. He showed how [the] increase of the colliery population had greatly increased the struggle for existence in the coal trade." The Christian World further added: "The lecture appears at length in the Christian World Pulpit of yesterday."

Dr. Horton is a patron of the Christian Evidence Society, and Secularists, who have been so wearily enlivened for the past twenty years or so by the classic and impartial diatribes delivered by the lecturers of the above society against the Malthusian theory in general, and The Elements of Social Science in particular, have in some instances retorted with the foregoing extract from the Christian World: the result being that the cyclopedic erudition of the C.E.S. lecturers has been perturbed thereby. Now, it is quite possible that the rev. gentleman's attention may have been drawn to the indiscretion wherein he had given truth place before Christianity; hence the absurdity of Malthus's prediction.

A. LEWIS.

THE DISPERSION OF THE JEWS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

SIR,—In the veracious Acts of the Apostles we read (ii. 5) that "there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven." Now, I used to be told that the Jews were dispersed for rejecting Christ. But it appears from this passage that they were already among every nation. Is this a sign of the late date of the Acts of the Apostles?

GALIO.

That Stuttering Sergeant.

"In our company during the civil war," said Captain T. E. Barlow, of Milwaukee, "was a stuttering sergeant named Thomas, and a chaplain named Chenautt, who was exceedingly untidy in personal appearance. The sergeant was a wit, and gave the chaplain no end of trouble. One cold day the parson had preached for over an hour, and at the close of his discourse asked anyone who felt serious to come forward. The sergeant went at once. 'Do you really feel serious?' asked the chaplain, rather doubtful of his convert. 'Se-se-serious! I-ah-ah-should say I—I di-did. Any m-man w-would feel s-se-serious to s-s sit on a c-ca-cake of ice t-t-two hours and h-he-hear y-you p-preach,' was the reply. On another occasion at mess the sergeant began to eat before the chaplain had asked the accustomed blessing. Extending his hands over the table, the chaplain said, 'Pause, sergeant, pause.' 'Y-yes, I s-s see 'em. D-d-d-d——d dirty ones, too.'"—Ambrose Bierce, "Dod Grile."

PROFANE JOKES.

"The Rev. Mr. Oldbuck is a sort of reminiscent sinner." "How so?" "He revels in the recollection of what a devil of a fellow he was in his youth."

Michael—"What is the matter with Dr. Thirdly? He looks as though he were panic-stricken." Gabriel—"He is, poor soul. He has just met Dr. Speakpeace, whom he knew on earth as a Unitarian, and no one can convince him now that he is not in the infernal regions."

In a Sunday-school the teacher had been explaining the text, "Let your loins be girded." Wishing to see if they understood the explanation, he said to a boy: "Well, tell me now how and why we are commanded to gird up our loins?" "To keep up our breeches, sir," replied the youth.

A boy was reading from an old-fashioned primer, the letter "s" of which was made long, very much like the letter "f" of the present time. He came to the sentence about Solomon, which he read as follows: "Solomon was the wifest man that ever lived." "True, my boy, true," said his father, who was listening. "He had a thousand of 'em."

How to Help Us.

(1) Get your newsagent to take a few copies of the Freethinker and try to sell them, guaranteeing to take the copies that remain unsold.

(2) Take an extra copy (or more), and circulate it among your acquaintances.

(3) Leave a copy of the Freethinker now and then in the train, the car, or the omnibus.

(4) Display, or get displayed, one of our contents-sheets, which are of a convenient size for the purpose. Mr. Forder will send them on application.

(5) Distribute some of our cheap tracts in your walks abroad, at public meetings, or among the audiences around street-corner preachers.

(6) Get your newsagent to exhibit the Freethinker in the window.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7.30, J. P. Gilmour will lecture.

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 8.15, social gathering for N.S.S. members and friends. Tuesday, at 9, dance.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Annie Besant, "Individual and National Ideals."

WEST LONDON BRANCH ("Sun in Splendor," Portobello-road, Notting Hill Gate): Monday, at 8.30, general meeting.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, A. Guest, "Bible Tragedy and Comedy."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, St. John, "Has Man a Soul?"

CAMBERWELL GREEN: Tuesday, at 8, a lecture.

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, W. Heaford, "Why we do Not Believe in Christianity."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, W. J. Ramsey, "Christ and His Teachings."

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, C. James, "The Philosophy of Atheism."

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, G. Standring, "What is the Old Testament?" 3.15, F. Haslam, "The Fall of Man."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, Stanley Jones, "Christianity Critically Examined." Thursday, at 8.30, F. Haslam, "The Exodus from Egypt."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "Civilisation and Christianity"; 3.30, "The Social Aspects of Christianity." Wednesday, at 8, St. John will lecture.

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, a lecture.

KILBURN (corner of Victoria-road): 7, F. Haslam, "Modern Science and Revelation."

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, a lecture.

LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, E. Pack will lecture.

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "My Imprisonment for Blasphemy."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, F. Haslam, "The Fall of the Bastille."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, W. Heaford, "Christ and His Teachings."

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, 3.15, and 7, C. Cohen, "Christianity: its Rise, Influence, and Decay."

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Can these Dry Bones Live?" 7, "Inspiration." Course of lectures by C. Cohen: Monday, at 8, "What Think ye of Christ?" Tuesday, "Christianity: Is it True?" Wednesday, "Christianity: Its Rise." Thursday, "Christianity: Its Progress." Friday, "Christianity: Its Decline." Saturday, 7.15, addresses by Messrs. Forder, Moss, Rowney, Easton, James, Lewis, Thompson, and Miss Vance.

COUNTRY.

DERBY (Pollitt's Dining Room, Market-place): 7.45, general meeting.

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, L. Small, B.Sc., "The Antiquity of Man according to Science." Arrangements for excursion to Chester on July 14, after lecture.

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rochdale-road, All Saints): 6.30, C. Pegg, Humorous Reading.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Amphitheatre, Northumberland-road): 11, S. P. Putnam, "The Bible and Modern Thought"; 3, "Christ and the Nineteenth Century"; 7, "Secularism and Christianity."

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): Excursion to Tuxford; meet at Victoria Station at 1.20; train leaves at 1.37. Tickets to be had of the Secretary.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (32 Dovecote-street): 6.30, Important meeting.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRADFORD (Market-place, Godwin-street): 6.30, J. Greeves Fisher, "Has Man a Soul?"

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, lower end): 7, J. Kenst, "To Live Christ over Again."

CHATHAM (corner of the New Brompton-road, High-street): 11.15, A. B. Moss, "Ancient Saints and Modern Sinners"; 7, "Antidotes to Superstition."

DERBY (Market-place): 11, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—July 7, Victoria Park; 8 to 12, Wood Green.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—July 7, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 14, m. Kingsland, e. Edmonton; 21, m. Camberwell, a. Victoria Park, e. Camberwell; 24, Hyde Park; 25, Hammersmith; 28, m. and e. Wood Green.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London, E.—July 7 Chatham.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—July 17, m. Kingsland.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

CHARLES WATTS'S WORKS.

THE TEACHINGS OF SECULARISM COMPARED WITH ORTHODOX CHRISTIANITY. 1s., by post 1s. 2d.

SECULARISM: IS IT FOUNDED ON REASON, AND IS IT SUFFICIENT TO MEET THE WANTS OF MANKIND? Debate between the Editor of the Evening Mail (Halifax, N.S.) and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by G. J. Holyoake and Colonel R. G. Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 1s., by post 1s. 2d.

A REPLY TO FATHER LAMBERT'S "TACTICS OF INFIDELS." 6d., by post 7d.

SCIENCE AND THE BIBLE. 4d., by post 5d.

CHRISTIANITY: ITS ORIGIN, NATURE, AND INFLUENCE. 4d., by post 5d.

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER? 4d., by post 5d.

AGNOSTICISM AND CHRISTIAN THEISM: WHICH IS THE MORE REASONABLE? 3d., by post 4d.

THE NATURAL AND THE SUPERNATURAL; OR, BELIEF AND KNOWLEDGE. 3d., by post 4d.

SECULARISM: DESTRUCTIVE AND CONSTRUCTIVE. 3d., by post 4d.

HAPPINESS IN HELL AND MISERY IN HEAVEN. 3d., by post 4d.

THE SUPERSTITION OF THE CHRISTIAN SUNDAY. A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 3d., by post 4d.

BIBLE MORALITY: Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defective as an Ethical Guide. 3d., by post 3½d.

SAINTS AND SINNERS: WHICH? 3d., by post 4d.

EVOLUTION AND SPECIAL CREATION. 3d., by post 4d.

IS THERE A LIFE BEYOND THE GRAVE? Reply to Dr. R. B. Westbrook. 3d., by post 4d.

CHRISTIANITY AND CIVILISATION. Why Christianity is Still Professed. 3d., by post 4d.

WHY DO RIGHT? A Secularist's Answer. 3d., by post 4d.

THEOLOGICAL PRESUMPTION. An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N.S. 2d., by post 2½d.

EDUCATION: TRUE AND FALSE. 2d., by post 2½d.

SECULARISM: ITS RELATION TO THE SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF THE DAY. 2d., by post 2½d.

THE EXISTENCE OF GOD; OR, QUESTIONS FOR THEISTS. 2d., by post 2½d.

THE BIBLE UP TO DATE. 2d., by post 2½d.

ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Freethought Publications.

Crimes of Christianity. Vol. I. By G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Hundreds of exact references to Standard Authorities. No pains spared to make it a complete, trustworthy, final, unanswerable Indictment of Christianity.

Chapters:—1, Christ to Constantine; 2, Constantine to Hypatia; 3, Monkery; 4, Pious Forgeries; 5, Pious Frauds; 6, Rise of the Papacy; 7, Crimes of the Popes; 8, Persecution of the Jews; 9, The Crusades. Cloth, gilt, 216 pp., 2s. 6d.

The Jewish Life of Christ. Being the Sepher Toldoth Jeshu, or Book of the Generation of Jesus. With an Historical Preface and Voluminous Notes by G. W. Foote and J. M. Wheeler. Paper covers, 6d.; superior edition, superfine paper, cloth, 1s.

Bible Studies. Essays on Phallic Worship and other Curious Rites and Customs. By J. M. Wheeler. Illustrated, superior paper, 2s. 6d.

Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations. By J. M. Wheeler. Handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

Darwin Made Easy. By Dr. Edward B. Aveling, Fellow of the London University. This is the best popular exposition of Darwinism extant. Cloth, 1s.

Essays in Rationalism. By Charles Robert Newman (Atheist Brother of the late Cardinal Newman). With a Preface by George Jacob Holyoake, and a Biographical Sketch by J. M. Wheeler. 1s. 6d.

Bible Handbook for Freethinkers and Inquiring Christians. Edited by G. W. Foote and W. P. Ball. Complete, paper covers, 1s. 4d.; superior edition, on superfine paper, bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price Twopence,

Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

A Demonstration of the Biblical Doctrine of Devils, suitable for circulation among Christians.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Digitized by Google

64 pp., price 3d., by post 4d.,

THE

HALL OF SCIENCE LIBEL CASE.

WITH A

FULL AND TRUE ACCOUNT

OF

"THE LEEDS ORGIES."

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION,

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Colonel Ingersoll's Great Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 3d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 3d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Price 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d. post free,

THE GRAND OLD BOOK.

A REPLY TO THE GRAND OLD MAN.

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

An Exhaustive Answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."

CONTENTS:—Preface—Preliminary View—The Creation Story—The Fall of Man—The Psalms—The Mosaic Legislation—Corroborations of Scripture—Gladstone and Huxley—Modern Scepticism.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout: Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumours and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 7d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.
All three Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 2s. 2d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

180 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. PULLEN, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 8s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Digitized by Google

WELL WORTH YOUR ATTENTION.

SPLENDID TROUSERS

To Measure.

ALL WOOL.
LATEST PATTERNS.
PERFECT FIT.

800 DRESS LENGTHS

at barely Half Price.

Three Dress Lengths for 21s.

INCLUDING

TWEEDS, CASHMERES, FIGURES, SERGES, DIAGONALS, DARK, LIGHT, AND MEDIUM SHADES.

PRICES.

Trousers to Measure 9s. per pair.
Three Pairs Trousers to Measure for 25s. 6d.
Six Pairs Trousers to measure for 48s.
One Trousers' Length for 5s. 6d.
Three Trousers' Lengths for 15s.
Six Trousers' Lengths for 27s.

TROUSERS.

INCHES

A, Round Waist over Trousers .....
B, Round Seat.....
E to D, Inside Leg Seam .....
F to G, Full Length of Trousers.....
H, Round Thigh .....
I, Round Knee.....
J, Round Bottom .....
Please say Lined or Unlined.....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Side or Cross Pockets.....

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4 UNION-STREET, BRADFORD.

Nine Hours at the Sea-side for 3s.

ANNUAL EXCURSION

OF THE

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION

TO

CLACTON-ON-SEA.

Tickets 3s. Children under 14, 1s. 6d.

G.E.R. SPECIAL TRAIN FROM LIVERPOOL STREET,

On SUNDAY, JULY 14, at 8.45 a.m.

Tickets will be available from any station between Liverpool-street and Stratford by local train, meeting special at Stratford at 8.50. Returning from Clacton-on-Sea at 8 p.m., calling at Ilford, where passengers can proceed to their respective stations by local service.

Tickets may be obtained from R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.; all Branch Secretaries; at the lectures on Sundays; and of Miss Annie Brown, hon. sec., 22 Pembridge-road, Notting Hill Gate, W.

"The Clacton Tea-Table,"

TOWN HALL BUILDINGS, CLACTON-ON-SEA.

Specialité—1s. ORDINARY, 12.30 to 3.

Tea fresh for every customer. Furnished Apartments.

Also "Brunswick Confectionery," Pier Avenue.

Proprietor, H. FOYSTER.

COALS! COALS! COALS!

MESSRS. FRANCIS E. WOOD & CO. are supplying good Parlor Coal, suitable for all purposes, at 16s. 6d. per Ton. Hot Kitchen Coal, 14s.

R. Forder says: "They are remarkably cheap and good."
W. J. Ramsey writes: "I am well satisfied with your Parlor Coal."

Orders to 266 York-road, King's Cross. Depôts all over London.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 3s.

302 pp., superior paper, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. post free,

FLOWERS OF FREETHOUGHT

[Second Series]

BY

G. W. FOOTE.

CONTENTS:—

Luscious Piety
The Jewish Sabbath
God's Day
Professor Stokes on Immortality
Paul Bert
Converting a Corpse
Bradlaugh's Ghost
Christ and Brotherhood
The Sons of God
Melchizedek
S'welp me God
Infidel Homes
Are Atheists Cruel?
Are Atheists Wicked?
Rain Doctors
Pious Puerilities
"Thus Saith the Lord"
Believe or be Damned
Christian Charity
Religion and Money
Clotted Bosh
Lord Bacon on Atheism
Christianity & Slavery
Christ Up to Date
Secularism and Christianity
Altar and Throne
Martin Luther
The Praise of Folly
A Lost Soul
Happy in Hell
The Act of God
Keir Hardie on Christ
Blessed be ye Poor
Converted Infidels
Mrs. Booth's Ghost
Talmage on the Bible
Mrs. Besant on Death and After
The Poets and Liberal Theology
Christianity and Labor
Dueling
An Easter Egg for Christians
Down Among the Dead Men
Smirching a Hero
Kit Marlowe and Jesus Christ
Jehovah the Ripper
The Parson's Living Wage
Did Bradlaugh Backslide?
Frederic Harrison on Atheism
Save the Bible!
Forgive and Forget
The Star of Bethlehem
The Great Ghost
Atheism and the French Revolution
Pigottism
Jesus at the Derby
Atheist Murderers
A Religion for Eunuchs
Rose-Water Religion

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Just published, price 4d., by post 5d.,

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER?

BY CHARLES WATTS

(Vice-President of the National Secular Society).

London: Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 28. SUNDAY, JULY 14, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

LAWS AGAINST RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

A Statement and an Appeal.

THE present age boasts of its freedom. Civil and religious liberty is almost a commonplace among Englishmen. Catholics, Dissenters, and Jews have all been enfranchised. They enjoy the full rights of citizenship; their propaganda, worship, and property are fully protected by the law. But there is one exception to this rule of toleration. Freethinkers are still victims of oppression. They may vote for members of Parliament, and other representatives of the people; they may even sit in Parliament without hypocrisy or subterfuge under Mr. Bradlaugh's Oaths Bill; but they are still insulted as jurymen by ignorant or bigoted judges; they are liable to penalties for propagating their principles; and the law does not allow Freethought Societies to hold any kind of property, or to receive any legacies.

Many persons who are not Freethinkers are unaware of the grievances under which they suffer, and the following statement is intended for their benefit. It is believed that, when they understand the facts of the case, they will, for the most part, be favorable to an alteration of the law, so that all forms of opinion may enjoy a legal equality.

Under the old English law, heresy, blasphemy, schism, and other such offences, were tried and punished by the Ecclesiastical Courts. By the writ de heretico comburendo atheists, heretics, blasphemers, and schismatics could be burnt to death. This penalty was only abolished in 1677 by the Act 29 Charles II., cap. 9. The Act did not, however, take away the power of the Ecclesiastical Courts to deal with such offenders by "censures not extending to death." But in the course of time, by a gradual change of practice, the Ecclesiastical Courts have lost actual jurisdiction except over clergymen of the Church of England.

As heresy dropped out of sight attention became fixed on blasphemy. Lord Coleridge said that "the law of blasphemous libel first appeared in our books—at least the cases relating to it are first reported—shortly after the curtailment or abolition of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in matters temporal. Speaking broadly, before the time of Charles II. these things would have been dealt with as heresy; and the libellers so-called of more recent days would have suffered as heretics in earlier times."*

Thus law and practice continued till the passing of an Act known as the 9 and 10 William III., cap. 32, called "An Act for the more effectual suppressing of Blasphemy and Profaneness." It declares that "any person or persons having been educated in, or at any time having made profession of, the Christian religion within this realm, who shall, by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking, deny any one of the persons in the Holy Trinity to be God, or shall assert or maintain that there are more gods than one, or shall deny the Christian doctrine to be true, or the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be of divine authority," shall upon conviction be disabled from holding any ecclesiastical, civil, or military employment, and on a second conviction be imprisoned for three years and deprived for ever of all civil rights.

Lord Coleridge and Sir James Stephen have both called this law "ferocious." But it still disgraces the Statute Book. So much of it, as affected the Unitarians, was ostensibly repealed by the 53 George III., cap. 160. Lord Eldon, however, in 1817, doubted whether it was even partially repealed; and Chief Baron Kelly and Lord Bramwell, so late as 1867, held that a lecture on "The Character and Teachings of Christ: the former Defective, the latter Misleading," was an offence against the Statute.

This "infamous" Act was drawn up with such stringency that it defeated itself. No prosecution ever took place under it. But it largely guided the judges in their view of the Common Law of Blasphemy, under which scores of Freethinkers have been imprisoned.

The Act of William III. specifies certain opinions as blasphemous; it says nothing about the language in which they are couched. The crime was not in the manner but in the matter. And this view of Blasphemy has been held by all our judges, with the single exception of Lord Coleridge. In Woolston's case (1730) the Court "would not suffer it to be debated whether to write against Christianity in general was not an offence at Common Law." In Carlile's case (1819) the Court "was bound not to hear the truth of the Christian religion questioned." It declared that "if the defendant wished to produce authors to show that the Christian religion might be denied, that could not be allowed." Lord Chief Justice Abbott said "it was not competent in a Christian court, in a court of law, to rise up and say that the Christian religion was not a religion of truth." Mr. Justice Best went still farther. He said: "The Act is not confined to those who libel religion, but extends to those who, in their most private intercourse, by advised conversation admit that they disbelieve the Scriptures.' Lord Ellenborough, in the case of Eaton (1812), who was prosecuted for selling Paine's Age of Reason, said that "to deny the truth of the book which is the foundation of our faith, has never been permitted." In the case of Hetherington (1841), it was decided by Lord Chief Justice Denman that "an attack upon the Old Testament is clearly indictable." In the case of Paterson (Edinburgh, 1846), the Lord Justice Clerk said that the law expressly provided that "they who publish opinions contrary to the known principles of Christianity might be called to account and proceeded against by the civil magistrate." When the late Mr. Charles Bradlaugh was illegally arrested at Devonport, in 1861, for intending to lecture against the Bible, he brought an action for false imprisonment, and obtained one farthing damages; Lord Justice Erle, holding that the policeman, although he acted illegally, had really conferred a benefit on the plaintiff by preventing him from disseminating infidel opinions. Precisely the same view was taken by the Court of Exchequer in the case of Cowen v. Milbourn. Baron Bramwell said "it was unlawful to deny the truth of Christianity or the divine authority of the Scriptures." Lord Chief Baron Kelly added that to call the teaching of Christ misleading was "a violation of the first principles of the law, and cannot be done without blasphemy."

Sir James Stephen, in his Digest of the Criminal Law, among alternative definitions of Blasphemy, gave the following: "A denial of the truth of Christianity in general, or of the existence of God, whether the terms of such publication are decent or otherwise." The same high

* The Law of Blasphemous Libel. The Summing-up in the case of Regina v. Foote and others. Revised with a Preface by the Lord Chief Justice of England. London: Stevens & Sons.

Digitized by Google

authority, in a later magazine article,* held that the crime of Blasphemy consists in the mere expression of heterodox opinions; that it is only an aggravation of the crime to express them in "offensive" language; that "a large part of the most serious and most important literature of the day is illegal"; and that every bookseller who sells, and everyone who lends to his friend, a copy of Comte's Positive Philosophy, or of Renan's Life of Jesus, commits a crime punishable with fine and imprisonment.

Sir James Stephen detested this Law of Blasphemy. He even went to the length of drafting a Bill for its total abolition. He said that he preferred "stating it in its natural naked deformity to explaining it away in such a manner as to prolong its existence and give it an air of plausibility and humanity."

This view of the law is borne out by the language of indictments for Blasphemy. In the abortive prosecution of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, and the successful prosecution of Messrs. Foote, Ramsey, and Kemp (1883), it was alleged against them in their indictments that they wickedly and profanely attempted "to bring the Holy Scriptures and the Christian religion into disbelief and contempt," not only "against the peace of our lady the Queen," but also "to the great displeasure of Almighty God."

Lord Coleridge, however, in summing-up at the trial of Messrs. Foote and Ramsey in the Court of Queen's Bench, while admitting that the law of Blasphemy "is undoubtedly a disagreeable law," let humanity get the better of his legal judgment. Against the decision of all previous judges, he laid it down that "if the decencies of controversy are observed, even the fundamentals of religion may be attacked without a person being guilty of blasphemous libel."

"Such a law," said Sir James Stephen, "would never work." You cannot really distinguish between substance and style; you must either forbid or permit all attacks on Christianity. Men cannot discuss doctrines like eternal punishment, for instance, as calmly as they do questions in philology. When they feel deeply they will express themselves strongly; and "to say that you may discuss the truth of religion, but that you may not hold up its doctrines to contempt, ridicule, or indignation, is either to take away with one hand what you concede with the other, or to confine the discussion to a small and, in many ways, uninfluential class of persons."

John Stuart Mill expressed the same truth in an article on "Religious Prosecutions," in the Westminster Review of July, 1824: "To declare that an act is legal, but with the proviso that it be performed in a gentle and decorous manner, is opening a wide door for arbitrary discretion on the one part and dissatisfaction on the other. The difficulty is greatly increased when the act itself is offensive to those who sit in judgment upon the manner of its performance."

Such a law is a downright absurdity. It means that twelve Christians are to be put into a jury-box to decide whether a Freethinker has attacked Christianity in a "becoming" manner. What is the Freethinker's liberty worth in such circumstances? Would Liberal writers like to be tried by their opponents for attacking Conservatism without a proper respect for the "decencies" of controversy?

"There is one reflection," said Sir James Stephen, "which seems to me to prove with conclusive force that the law upon this subject can be explained and justified only on what I regard as its true principle—the principle of persecution. It is that if the law were really impartial, and punished blasphemy only because it offends the feelings of believers, it ought also to punish such preaching as offends the feelings of unbelievers."

Unbelievers do not ask to have their feelings "protected." They demand—and sooner or later it must be conceded—that religious questions shall be discussed as freely as political and social questions. What has truth to fear from the wildest storms of controversy? "Let Truth and Falsehood grapple: whoever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?"

Freethinkers will never be satisfied until the odious Blasphemy Laws are swept out of existence. A beginning has already been made. The late Charles Bradlaugh introduced a Bill to abolish them, and, in the face of acrimonious bigotry, forty-seven members of the House of Commons voted for the measure.

Some day a more successful attempt will be made. Meanwhile attention is invited to the disabilities which the Blasphemy Laws lay upon Freethinkers.

Their opinions being illegal, their Societies are outside the protection of the law. They cannot as Societies hold any kind of property; in fact, they are in the position of Trade Unions under the old laws against such combinations. Legacies left them may be intercepted, and intercepted by Christians. Some years ago house-property was left to the Bolton Secular Society and appropriated by the heir-at-law. In 1886 the sum of £500 was left by Mr. Josiah Spencer to assist the Manchester Secularists to obtain a hall of their own; Mr. Charles Bradlaugh and Mr. George Payne being appointed trustees. This sum was also appropriated by the residuary legatee, the Duchy of Lancaster Court holding that part of Mr. Spencer's will to be invalid.

In order to defeat this disabling law, as far as possible, Freethinkers may form Limited Liability Companies; but the shares may in time pass into hostile or indifferent hands, and several properties have been lost or diverted in this way. Of course a legacy may be left absolutely to an individual, with an understanding that he is to apply it, or a portion of it, to Secular purposes; but such a legacy would be invalid if a secret trust could be established. And if the sum to be disposed of were a large one, a testator might feel the want of a proper security; for, admitting the strict rectitude of the person he trusted, his intentions might be frustrated by accident, such as death or bankruptcy.

To obtain at least a partial security for non-Christians, Mr. Manfield, late member for Northampton, introduced a Bill which never came up for the second reading. Its title was the "Civil and Religious Liberty Extension Act," and its special object was to make it "lawful for any person to create and endow, or create or endow, any Trust for inquiry into the foundations and tendency of religious and ethical beliefs which from time to time prevail, or for the maintenance and propagation of the results of such inquiry."

A more drastic Bill, drafted on the lines of the one introduced by the late Charles Bradlaugh, was introduced, first by Mr. S. Storey, member for Sunderland, and afterwards by his colleague, Mr. J. Gourley. It provided for the practical repeal of the Blasphemy Laws by abolishing prosecution on account of religious opinions. This measure also failed to reach a second reading.

It is doubtful whether anything will avail except the absolute repeal of the Blasphemy Laws by such a Bill as Mr. Gourley's. There is no express law declaring that Freethought Societies shall not hold property or receive legacies. The disability follows from the illegality of their propaganda at common law. While it is a crime to oppose Christianity, it is as illegal to leave money for the promotion of Freethought as it is to leave money for the promotion of theft or murder.

Prosecution and imprisonment are not the worst evils of the Blasphemy Laws. A cause which is persecuted has a compensation in the publicity that is given to its principles, and the stimulus that is given to its activities. But to rob it of those material rights, which are indispensable in a civilisation based upon property, is to doom it to suffer the worst form of injustice. It is within the personal knowledge of the present writer that many thousands of pounds have been lost to the Secular party, during the last five years, in consequence of the infamous law which denies Secularists the common rights of citizenship, and makes them as Secularists but aliens in the land of their birth and affection.

This is not a religious question at all. It is a political question. Secularists appeal for a recognition of their full rights of citizenship, not on the ground that their opinions are true—for all sects occupy that ground, to the exclusion of others—but on the ground that Religious Liberty should cover every variety of conviction. Unless it does so it is not Liberty at all, but merely an extension of Privilege.

With this view the following questions have been drawn up for use in the present general elections. Secularists are earnestly invited to put these questions to parliamentary candidates, and to bring this statement of the nature and effect of the Blasphemy Laws to their notice:—

* "Blasphemy and Blasphemous Libel." By Sir James Stephen, Fortnightly Review, March, 1884.

Digitized by Google

(1) Are you in favor of the fullest extension of Civil and Religious Liberty?
(2) Do you consider that Secularists or Freethinkers should be liable to prosecution, fine, and imprisonment for disseminating their principles?
(3) Do you consider that Secular Societies should be kept without legal security for their Funds and Property?
(4) Do you think it just and right that legacies left to Secular Societies should be withheld from them under sanction of the law?
(5) Will you vote, if you have the opportunity, for the abolition of the Blasphemy Laws, under which Freethought is a crime?
(6) If you are not prepared to vote for the entire abolition of the Blasphemy Laws, would you vote for such a measure as the Liberty of Bequest Bill?

Candidates' answers to these questions should be noted and forwarded to the editor of the Freethinker as soon as possible. Such information will be extremely valuable in view of the introduction of a Bill in the new Parliament.

G. W. F.

UNDOGMATIC CHRISTIANITY.

We hear a good deal in these days of undogmatic Christianity. The Creeds have long been crumbling, and now Christians are saying, "Oh, we are not bound by what our fathers believed." Even the preachers, who are sworn to believe and defend the articles of their faith, notoriously do not preach them. Whoever heard a sermon enforcing the doctrine that "Works done before the grace of Christ and the Inspiration of his Spirit are not pleasant to God," or teaching that "They also are to be had accursed that presume to say that every man shall be saved by the law or sect which he professeth, so that he be diligent to frame his life according to that law and the light of Nature. For Holy Scripture doth set out unto us only the name of Jesus Christ whereby men must be saved." Such sermons would not be listened to by intelligent congregations. We are offered now all the honey and none of the vinegar of the old faith. The genuine, old, unadulterated Christianity cannot be obtained at any price. The brimstone is carefully omitted from the treacle. Hell is unmentionable to ears polite, and is supposed to have been turned into a skating rink.

Now, either the old dogmas were true or they were false. It is either true or not true that God Almighty, the presumed creator of the universe, came down to the earth at a particular time and was born of a mortal woman, who did or did not remain a virgin. And the necessity for this illegitimate birth either did or did not depend upon a prior woman having partaken of some forbidden fruit. If there was no Fall, then there was no necessity for a Redeemer from the effects of that Fall.

To say that dogmas do not matter is virtually to confess that they are untrue, and to say this is to affirm that what has been held to be the very core of Christianity during the mass of the centuries of its existence is founded on mistakes or falsehoods.

The New York Tribune (Sunday, June 16) devoted an editorial to showing that Christians could, with Dr. Heber Newton, give up the dogma of Christian's bodily resurrection. It says: "The evidence for dogmas, however, is one thing; that for Christianity as a system of life and conduct is another." But why should we trust on matters of life and conduct a system which has proved to be in the wrong in other respects? Why should we go back to Jesus, who believed in demons, for a system of life and conduct any more than to Buddha?

What is Christianity without its scheme of redemption, its salvation through the punishment of an innocent person? Wherein is it differentiated from "essential" Judaism, "essential" Islamism, or "essential" Theism? If Socrates, Darwin, or Mill could get to heaven without believing Christianity, why on earth should I or anyone else believe it? For I find questionable, not only its dogmas, but its very essence. The central doctrine of all religion is reliance upon God, and such reliance I hold is futile and weakening to moral fibre.

We are now told that the Bible is "inspired but not inerrant"; that is to say God dictated some part of it, but did not keep out errors in other parts. If this meant frankly that it is partly true and partly false, I can agree. If the undogmatic Christians will honestly admit the supremacy of reason we will shake hands, only we shall proceed to test it on the very fundamentals of the faith; on the doctrine of the existence of God. Will they say God or no God it does not matter, or is their real meaning, "We do not care how much you throw over as long as you pay your pew-rents promptly? You may dispense with every doctrine of Christ, only you must hold on to the name of Christian because it is so highly respectable."

The politician who said "Them's my sentiments, and if you disapprove of them they can be changed," was no more accommodating than the creedless Christian, who even, if he gives you his "sentiments," will never state distinctly what it is he accepts and what he rejects. Christianity, in fact, is shredded down to a mere sentiment common to all religions. What is left should be infinitely precious, for it is infinitesimally small.

J. M. Wheeler.

CROMWELL THE FRIEND OF FREEDOM.

The name of Oliver Cromwell has recently been brought prominently before the public through a proposal having been made in the House of Commons to erect in his honor a national statue; but I regret that the late Government did not adhere to this intention to nationally recognise the services of one of England's greatest sons. It is, however, gratifying to find that what a prejudiced Parliament failed to do, will shortly be accomplished by private generosity. Surely if statues are raised to the memories of kings, who did nothing that added to the honor and nobility of the nation, one should be erected to commemorate the hero of, what was undoubtedly, up to that period, the grandest epoch in the history of our country. From my earliest years the character of Cromwell always had a peculiar charm for me, inasmuch as in him I recognised a concentration of those qualities which make a great and noble man. His genius for achieving thorough reform of the gross abuses of his time, his fidelity to principles which he deemed right, his keen power of discrimination in the midst of difficulties, his courage under adversity, and his marked power of self-control in the hour of victory, commanded my admiration. Not being a hero worshipper, I do not regard Cromwell as having been a perfect man. Still, I agree with the late Charles Bradlaugh that Cromwell "was a man of higher stature and of mightier will than any other who lived in his age." As a Secularist, I applaud his persistent defence of mental freedom, of the right of personal opinion, also his sincere vindication of religious liberty. Secularists need not ignore the excellent traits in a person's character, because they are unable to endorse the whole of his conduct. Our duty is to acknowledge noble and useful actions wherever they are found, and to emulate the good deeds of others, so that we may be the better enabled to equip ourselves with the means of fighting successfully the battle of life.

To be in a position to judge fairly the career of Cromwell, it is necessary to remember his early training, the incidents that led to his entering upon public life, and, above all, the characters of the men with whom he had to cope, and the circumstances with which he had to contend. He was educated in the strict Puritan faith. For some time he sat in Parliament "a silent member," but the unjust attempt upon the part of the king to exact the payment of ship-money from Hampden and others enraged Cromwell, and he became a determined enemy to the despotism of Monarchy. He commenced his public life in stormy times. Society was then rotten to its very core, and Cromwell had to confront intrigue, treachery, and conspiracy. The five years of his rule as Protector was one continual struggle, not only against petty machinations, but also against attempts to take his life. In his time parties not only differed in opinion and policy in reference to general political matters, but a fierce and bitter feud existed between the supporters of the king and those who favored government by Parliament. Such conditions, no doubt, caused Cromwell to resort to methods that, under other and better circumstances, he would not have adopted. While, of course, it is absurd to say that Cromwell was "raised up by God," still there is no doubt that he was for the most part equal to what the hour demanded of him. To the Freethinker of the present day, a man marching to battle singing psalms, with the Bible in one hand and the sword in the other, would not be regarded as a political messiah, or an ideal hero of the Saxon race. The fact, however, remains that, whatever was the incentive, Cromwell possessed an undaunted courage, which made him as supreme in Parliament as he was victorious on the battle field.

Digitized by Google

It is said that Cromwell was a fanatic and superstitious in religion, which probably, to a certain extent, is true; but so was the King. Yet the one proved himself a lover of liberty, and the other a tyrant by nature. Even religious fanaticism has not the same effect upon all natures. Some men have a too keen sense of justice, and are too strong intellectually to be swayed by the more insiduous and pernicious influence of the fanatical spirit of theology. Such a man was Cromwell, who never allowed his own ardent zeal in the cause of religion to prompt him to unjustly interfere with the worship of others. But what is called fanaticism in him I should term a deeply-rooted enthusiasm inspired by a sincere belief in the stern Puritan faith. With him to "please his God" was his highest duty; but to do this fortunately he deemed it necessary to be fair and just to man, and to use his power to secure for all equal privileges and equal rights. It was not that vulgar theological fanaticism which has so often, since his time, deprived men of that to which they were entitled by birth and citizenship. We must judge Cromwell, if at all, by his works at a most critical epoch in our history. He purified the seat of Government by ridding it of political corruption; he was the head of a movement that suppressed the King and the power of the aristocracy; he gave a fatal blow to the delusive but mischievous belief in the "divine right of kings"; and he made the name of England feared, if not respected, by all the civilised world. Moreover, he raised, from most unlikely materials, the finest army in Europe. His grand regiment, called the "Ironsides," was "never beaten." In his first engagement the enemy were three to one, and at the battle at Winceby his horse was killed, and fell upon him. He rose, but was again struck down; still he was not to be defeated, for, mounting a trooper's horse, he made the enemy fly, pursuing them many miles and won a glorious victory. Where are the kings, or other members of the royal blood, who ever displayed, in the face of such fearful odds, similar skill and bravery? Contrast this military ability and this indomitable courage with the conduct of the Duke of Cambridge in the Crimea; and yet upon this "feather-bed soldier" more of the people's money has been wasted than would pay for the erection of a hundred statues to the great Protector.

The position of Catholicism previous to the time of Cromwell must not be overlooked. He succeeded in checking the flames that had been lighted by the Roman Catholic Church. The Catholics believed that no faith ought to be kept with heretics. But Cromwell gave the Duke of Savoy and the Pope of Rome to understand that if justice was not done, "England's guns should be heard in the castle of St. Angelo." Neither must we forget by whom he was surrounded. We may fairly judge a man by the company he keeps, if he is free to select it. Cromwell had around him the master-minds of that age. John Milton, who was his secretary, was one of the most virtuous and learned men of the period. Frederick Harrison says: "By rare and unexampled fortune, the first political genius of his age was served by the greatest literary genius of his time. . . . . Never had ruler so mighty a poet in his service; never did poet share such labors of state under so great a chief." Milton's friend, Thurloe, was Secretary of State, and among Cromwell's associates were Andrew Marvel and George Fox, besides John Hampden, of whom Baxter said, in his Saint's Rest, that he should like him for a companion in heaven. Cromwell's greatness was not marred by either bigotry or selfishness. Whenever he found honest men of ability he was willing to avail himself of their services, not for purposes of his own, but for the service of his country. That was an indication of true statesmanship, and of the highest political wisdom.

However much some of my readers may be opposed to the political views of Cromwell, it cannot truthfully be denied that in the very height of his power he proved himself possessed of qualities which all Secularists must admire. He was brave and honest and he had a scrupulous consideration for those who differed from him, provided they did not seek to trample upon the rights of others. This fact will be amply proved in my next article. His aim was to establish a system of justice throughout the kingdom. The means he sometimes employed would not perhaps be thought the most appropriate to adopt to-day, inasmuch as conditions have changed since his time. Still, in the words of Macaulay, "he reformed the representative system in the most judicious manner, and rendered the administration of justice uniform throughout the island."

CHARLES WATTS.

(To be concluded.)

LINCOLN'S RELIGION.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S character is shown in the truest, clearest, and most effective light when it is presented in its real colors. He was neither a blatant infidel nor a professing Christian. He was simply an unbeliever. He was without faith in the Bible or its teachings. On this point the testimony is so overwhelming that there is no basis for doubt. In his early life, Lincoln exhibited a powerful tendency to aggressive infidelity. But when he grew to be a politician, he became secretive and non-committal as to his religious belief. He was shrewd enough to realise the necessity of reticence with the convictions he possessed, if he hoped to succeed in politics.

It is a matter of history that in 1834, at New Salem, Ill., Lincoln read and circulated Volney's Ruins and Paine's Age of Reason, giving to both books the sincere recommendation of his unqualified approval. About that time, or a little later, he wrote an extensive argument against Christianity, intending to publish it. In this argument he contended that the Bible was not inspired, and that Jesus Christ was not the Son of God. He read this compilation of his views to numerous friends, and on one occasion, when so engaged, his friend and employer, Samuel Hill, snatched the manuscript from the author's hands and threw it into the stove, where it was quickly consumed. A Springfield friend said of him that, in 1838, "Lincoln was enthusiastic in his infidelity." John T. Stuart, who was his first law partner, declares: "Lincoln was an avowed and open infidel. He went further against Christian belief than any man I ever heard. He always denied that Jesus was the Christ of God." David Davis stated that "Lincoln had absolutely no faith in the Christian sense of the term."

These authorities ought to be conclusive, but there is further testimony. This latter is important as explanatory of Lincoln's frequent allusions, in his presidential messages and proclamations, to the Supreme Being. To the simplicity of his nature there was added a poetic temperament. He was found of effective imagery, and his references to the Deity are due to the instinct of the poet. After his death Mrs. Lincoln said: "Mr. Lincoln had no faith and no hope in the usual acceptation of those words. He never joined a church." She denominates what has been mistaken for his expressions of religious sentiment as "a kind of poetry in his nature," adding, "he was never a Christian." Herndon, who was his latest law partner and biographer, is even more explicit. He says: "No man had a stronger or firmer faith in Providence—God—than Mr. Lincoln; but the continued use by him late in life of the word 'God' must not be interpreted to mean that he believed in a personal God. In 1854 he asked me to erase the word 'God' from a speech which I had written and read to him for criticism, because my language indicated a personal God, whereas he insisted no such personality ever existed."

So it must be accepted as final by every reasonable mind that, in religion, Mr. Lincoln was a sceptic. But, above all things, he was not a hypocrite nor a pretender. He was a plain man, rugged and earnest, and he pretented to be nothing more. He believed in humanity, and he was incapable of Phariseeism. He had great respect for the feelings and convictions of others, but he was not a caviller. He was honest and he was sincere, and, taking him simply for what he was, we are not likely soon to see his like again.—Chicago Herald.

Digitized by Google

THE FRUIT OF THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE STILL FORBIDDEN.

THE Austin Statesman of April 7 has an editorial that would have better fitted the first of that month. It is entitled "The Danger of Great Learning." It is the old cry of wolf, when there is no wolf. It is the old scarecrow of the priests of all religions, from the earliest times of which we have any record, to prevent men from knowing anything except what the priests chose to tell them. The first law ever promulgated for the government of man was, that he should not eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, and the penalty prescribed for disobedience was death. The man did eat the fruit, however, and found out that it was good, and that all that God told him about the danger of doing so, was a lie, and the knowledge he thus acquired had made him as one of the gods.

Thus it has been from the first until now; the priests have been denouncing learning and trying to persuade men that the greatest sin they could commit was to attempt to learn the truth about the mysteries of their religion. It is for this reason they tell us that God has chosen the weak and foolish things of this world to confound the wise, and that out of the mouths of babes and sucklings cometh wisdom—such as priests approve of. Great learning is dangerous to the Church, and to all the pretensions of the teachers of the myths of religion; but it is the greatest blessing of life to all who are able to acquire it. It is the greatest emancipation proclamation that ever spoke freedom to a race of slaves; that set free the human mind from the shackles of superstition and the bondage of priestcraft. Priests have struggled to prevent its progress, and the history of religion has been a long record of the persecution of learned men by rack, thumbscrew, and the stake, to prevent the spread of knowledge. But all this has been in vain. Knowledge has increased and multiplied in spite of the attempts of priests to suppress it; until now, through the humanising effect of learning, religion has been disarmed of all its tools of torture, its teeth have been drawn, and it can only gnash its toothless gums and slander those it fain would kill. But hear the pious editor of the Statesman:—

> "The man with great learning becomes so confident of his mental strength, of his ability to weigh every statement and apply the strict rules of syllogism to every proposition, to analyse statements and problems, that he loses faith or belief in all things that do not receive the endorsement of hard, material facts, and measure up to the standard of his intellectual logic. While such a man may be said to be severely intellectual, he refuses to believe anything partaking of the supernatural."

All this is most solemnly true; but if an infidel had said it instead of the pious editor of the Statesman, every minister in Texas would have denounced it as a slander upon the Church, and an attempt to throw discredit upon the holy mysteries of the Christian religion.

The poet says, "A little learning is a dangerous thing." It is dangerous because it is little, and the less it is, the more dangerous, in exact proportion. But the theory of the Church and the Statesman is, that the more learning a man has, the more dangerous it becomes; for—as the editor says—"What does it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Now there are two assumptions in this statement. First, that man has a soul; and, second, that great learning will cause him to lose it; neither of which has a particle of evidence to sustain it. If it be true that man has a soul concealed about his person, it would seem that a learned man, who has studied anatomy, physiology, and psychology would be most likely to find out the truth as to whether he had one or not. So also, if he should find out that he actually had a soul, he would be best able to tell whether the knowledge that had enabled him to demonstrate the fact, would be likely to cause the loss of that soul.

There can be no danger in knowing the truth, except to those who would wish to suppress it; and the editor's talk about the danger of learning means nothing more than that it would be very dangerous to the cause of religion if the learned man should discover that all the talk about the soul was humbug. If a man has a soul, there can be no danger in a knowledge of the fact. If there is no such thing as a soul, and the theory is but an imposition taught by interested parties for their own benefit, then the learning that would enable us to find out the truth about it must be beneficial to everybody except those who are profiting by the imposition.

It is like this. A man comes to me and says, "There is a fortune for you that amounts to millions deposited in the First National Bank, that you can have by paying to me 10 per cent. of it." I reply, "Good! I will go at once and draw the money and pay you the commission." "No," he says, "you cannot do that; the money will not be paid to you until after your death; but it is a sure thing for you then if you pay my commission now." "Well," I say, "it is a good thing for my estate, anyhow, if true. I will go to the bank and ascertain the fact, and cheerfully pay your price for the information." "No," he says; "that won't do; you must take my word for it. There is great danger that you may lose it all by knowing too much. You must have faith that it is true—all safe as I tell you. All learning that goes beyond faith is dangerous." And so, if I am a fool or an ignoramus, I pay the commission, exemplifying the proverb, "A fool and his money are soon parted," and hug myself with the delusion that I am smarter and richer than the infidel who, from his great learning, refuses to believe in the promises of the Gospel sharp, who is now living high on the money he has fooled me out of. Such bunco steerers as this find it very dangerous to meet a man who has learning enough to see through their little game.

The pious editor seems to think that belief is a matter of volition, and that the learned man refuses to believe in the supernatural out of pure pride and cussedness; and not because the evidence is insufficient to convince an intelligent man who has learning enough to know how to sift, weigh, and analyse it. But the fact is, everybody must believe that which is proved by evidence if he has brains and education enough to comprehend the evidence. Every lawyer knows and acts upon his conviction, that if he has an honest case he must secure an intelligent and learned jury to try it; but if he has a bad or dishonest case, in which he must pull wool over the eyes of the jury and make them believe that falsehood is truth, and the truth a lie, then he has no use for men of intelligence on his jury, and secures, so far as he can, a jury of ignoramuses, who will believe any nonsense that he may tell them. I quote again: "He [that is the man of great learning] is intellectual, but he demands material proof of everything, forgetting that his intellect receives the evidence of many material facts that are not confined by any one of his senses, but the moment that the spiritual is presented to the intellect for belief, although the material is sustained by the same kind of evidence, he refuses utterly to believe it."

If by this the editor means to say that the spiritual is sustained by the same evidence that material facts are, I take issue with him. The spiritual rests upon faith alone for its evidence, but material facts are sustained by material evidence sufficient to force belief upon any cultivated mind. When such evidence is presented, it does not rest with the will to believe or to reject it; if the judgment is convinced there is no escape from the conclusion. As I said before, the spiritual has absolutely no evidence to support it but faith, and whether a man believe it or not, will depend upon whether he has sacrificed his judgment to his fears and hopes, or has sufficient brains and learning to properly weigh evidence.

The pious editor goes on to say: "The miracles wrought by Christ when he was on this earth are attested by the same kind of testimony that informs us of the remarkable military career of Alexander, or Charlemagne; the man of great learning refuses to believe the proof of the former, while he gives ready credence to the latter."

It is true that both rest upon hearsay testimony; but there is another element in the evidence which he has forgotten; and that is, the probability or credibility of the story itself. If a man should come to me and say that he ate a beefsteak for his breakfast this morning, I would have no difficulty in believing the story, because there is no improbability in it, and the man could have no motive in deceiving me about so simple a matter. But if he told me his cow jumped over the moon, I would utterly refuse to believe it, though the testimony came from the same man that I had believed in the first case; and so would the editor of the Statesman, or any man of a very moderate degree of learning.

When a man tells me that Christ raised a dead man to life after he had been so long dead that putrefaction had set in, I want something stronger in the way of testimony than the word of any man, because it is much more credible that the man told a lie than that a dead and rotten corpse should come to life.

Digitized by Google

The histories of Alexander and Charlemagne have been told by hundreds of writers in all the nations of the earth; and we know who they are, and the authentitity of their works. Besides, there is nothing in their works that transcends the bounds of probability, not to say possibility. The life and miracles of Christ are found only in a book that is as full of marvels as the life and adventures of Baron Munchausen.

Nobody knows who the authors were, nor when the stories were written. The Jews, among whom these miracles are said to have been performed, did not believe in them, never did believe in them, and do not believe in them to this day. The Romans, who governed Palestine, and the Greeks who stood at the head of the science, arts, and literature of the world are all silent as to the wonderful things that are said to have taken place in their midst. How absurd to say that these improbable and impossible wonders are sustained by the same evidence as are the histories of Alexander and Charlemagne.

One more quotation and I have done. "Outside of the evidences of the divinity of Christ, and beyond that a Christian professes to have been drawn or taught by the Holy Spirit, is the fact that he revealed a religion that no man or set of men would or could have conceived at that age or time."

If the pious editor had a little more learning, he would have known that modern research and discovery has proved, beyond doubt, that whoever it was that concocted the Christian religion, he revealed nothing that was new; that the whole teaching of Christ, as told in the Gospels, was copied from earlier Pagan books and traditions that the fathers of the Church endeavored to destroy, and hoped they had destroyed, but which modern learning has brought to light.

It is too late in the history of the world to attempt to build up barriers against the tide of learning; the time was when the power of the Church could suppress all attempts to enlighten the mass of the people. That time has passed away, never to be revived. Free schools, free thought, and free speech have opened the eyes of all men to the impositions and fraudulent claims of the teachers of religion, and the tide of learning, like the leak in a dam, has grown until it is now irresistible. Let everybody know and understand that learning is always safe, and the more we have of it, the safer we shall be.

—Independent Pulpit. J. P. RICHARDSON.

Obituary.

A WELL-KNOWN London character has passed away in the person of Dan Chatterton, who died on July 7 at the age of seventy-five. As a vendor of literature and bill-poster his gaunt figure was familiar in the London streets and parks, since the days when Hyde Park railings fell and Mrs. Law first spoke there despite prohibition. Devoted to the propaganda of Communism, he lived in great poverty, and produced a curious paper and pamphlets which he set up and printed himself. Violent in invective against princes, peers, priests, and other parasites, he would not hurt a fly, and he was the soul of integrity. He was working almost to the last. Miss E. Robins, like her sister a true sister of mercy, nursed him during the last week in his slum residence off Drury-lane. Mr. Forder conducted the funeral.—J. M. W.

After Death.

"After death—what?" Eternal peace. We simply go back to the eternity of unconsciousness wherein we were before birth. Others must now fight the battle of life for us. We may rest forever. Is this not infinitely more consoling than eternal joy for the few and eternal torment for the many? And this is what true Christianity implies. And it is not progressive—it means now precisely what it did in the days of the popes and Calvin and Edwards. Do not be so foolish and think it is me, and not you, marching on the "broadway" of destruction. Few there are, indeed, scrambling on the "narrow path"—all others, including all those who doubt a single word of that hoary book, are damned! There is no middle ground.—Otto Wettstein.

ACID DROPS.

THE men of God are a danger in every movement. They should really stick to their pulpits, and let laymen do the political and social work of the world, just as they let laymen do all its professional and industrial work. When they take up a cause, or a principle, they nearly always overdo it. A layman, used to the rough-and-tumble of the world, is more circumspect; he has also more self-control, and a stronger sense of justice.

Some years ago we told some of our Socialist friends, who are also Atheists, that the men of God would exploit their movement as soon as it was profitable to do so. Well, our prophecy is fast being realised. Listen to men of God like the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, and you would fancy they were all Fabians. But they are not, and they don't mean to be. They only want to attract the support of people who are Socialistically inclined; and their Socialist sentiments—always vague and therefore easily disownable on occasion—are only the bait upon the hook.

Having no real sincerity, but only the simulation of it, such men of God overdo everything, as we have already remarked. Just take an illustration. Many of our readers know that Mr. Blatchford's Merrie England has been a striking success. At any rate, it has had a very extensive sale. Now a fact like this is one that tells with Mr. Price Hughes. Accordingly, he praised "Nunquam's" book, and only regretted that he was not a Christian. Well, a reply to "Nunquam" is written by Mr. George Brooks, who is a Christian; whereupon the Methodist Times pitches into the replier, describing him as a self-made man who has made a "pile," and who therefore sees nothing but wickedness in all attempts to improve the social position of the people. It also accuses him of using a "vituperative" style and employing "brutal language."

Mr. George Brooks writes to the Methodist Times, stating that he has not made a "pile" at all, and that he earns a living by his pen; and as to the "vituperation" and "brutal language," he challenges Mr. Hughes to produce anything of the kind from the book. Mr. Hughes does not accept the challenge, nor does he express any regret for his misrepresentations. Which is exactly what would be expected by anyone who knows the author of "The Atheist Shoemaker."

Mr. Price Hughes naturally gives his readers a "tip" over the general election. "The duty of every Christian," he says, "at this national crisis, is to speak and act and vote as he believes Jesus Christ would have spoken, acted, and voted if he had been in similar circumstances." What a beautiful rule of policy, to be sure! It means anything or nothing. There are pious Conservatives and pious Liberals, and both sides feel that they have the support of Jesus Christ.

There is one thing that Jesus Christ would probably want to do if he were alive. He would want to "boss" the Salvation Army or the West London Mission. But he wouldn't do it. Booth and Hughes would take precious good care of that. Jesus Christ dead for nearly two thousand years is one thing; Jesus Christ in the field as an active rival is quite another.

From a report in the Christian World, it appears that "General" Booth's match-making business—we don't mean the matrimonial department—is a wretched failure. Traders and consumers will not pay double the market price for Salvation lucifers. But why doesn't Booth sell them cheaper, especially as he got his capital for nothing? His reply is that he pays such high wages. Well now, that is news!

When the news arrived that the Canadians had carried a "Prohibition" law, the "Temperance" women (who shortly before had passed the previous question to a resolution supporting some small attempt to improve the industrial position of women) stood up and sang the Doxology. It must surely have been a revised version. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," but curse him for having said in his written word "that it is wine that maketh glad the heart of man"; and for having, by his incarnate word, turned the water into wine.—Church Reformer.

Charles Jackson Holmes, mission preacher, was sentenced to three months' hard labor at Canterbury, for robbing a Wesleyan minister, whose guest he was, at Faversham.

At the East Riding Sessions the Rev. Alfred Barber, on bail, pleaded guilty to indecently assaulting a boy named John Pogmore, at Filey, on May 25. Prisoner is a Church of England clergyman, and was recently married. He was sentenced to four months' hard labor.

Digitized by Google

Michael Cleary, the husband of the poor woman who was burnt as a witch near Clonmel, has been sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude, and those who assisted him in his superstitious cruelty have received various minor terms of imprisonment. While Christians hold, as the word of God, a book which proclaims "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," the punishment of witch-killers is an anomaly, proving their Bible belief is nothing more than a farce.

Charles Jackson Jones, a mission preacher, has been sentenced to three months' hard labor at the East Kent Quarter Sessions for stealing jewellery at Faversham. He was conducting a mission in the neighborhood when he perpetrated the theft.

Dr. Pentecost is having the same trouble with the congregation in his London Tabernacle that Dr. Talmage encountered in Brooklyn. The coppery color of the contents of his contribution boxes worries him. He finds an average of no less than six hundred big, clumsy English pennies each Sunday. The modest shillings and sixpences make a poor show amid the mass of grosser metal, and the yellow gleam of the sovereign is almost unknown. The preacher's prejudice against copper as a monetary metal is so strong, that he has expressed it in earnest language to his people. No bimetallist has made a more eloquent plea for silver than that of Dr. Pentecost to his congregation. Even threepenny bits, he declares, are more respectable and honorable than the despised brown coins.

The Theosophists had a split at their Convention. Mr. H. A. Coryn demanded that, as its first business, the Convention should address itself to the consideration of the legal status of the European section, with a view to determining whether it was or was not de jure a part of the Theosophical Society. This resolution Colonel Olcott declared out of order. His ruling was challenged, and, on a vote being taken, was upheld by thirty-nine to fourteen.

Then came a squabble over a letter from the American section, which it was proposed to reject as improperly directed. Some were for waiving technicalities and receiving the letter and answering it in a friendly spirit; others, led by Mrs. Besant, held that the letter should be simply received and laid on the table. While it pretended to make overtures of peace, Mrs. Besant argued, it really had behind it a very different sentiment. She moved that it be simply received as an act of courtesy without discussion or further action. On a vote being taken, this course was adopted.

Then came the denouement. Irritated at the two decisions come to, antagonistic to the American section, all those delegates who had voted on the opposite side rose in a body, together with their friends, to the number of fifty or sixty in all, and, one of their number acting as spokesman, it was announced, with portentous solemnity, that they had determined to sever their connection thenceforward with their fellow European members—in pursuance of which resolve they thereupon one and all tramped hilariously out of the room. The first object of the Society is to promote universal brotherhood. It is getting on.

Light, the organ of the high-class Spiritists, says of the Theosophical Society: "It is being shivered to atoms by personalities, constitutions, rules, formalities, officials, and doctrines, all the direct result of intense organisation. Theosophy has not set us an example—it has put up a warning."

The Church Times urges the entire body of the Church of England to vote solid Tory, because "We have reached a supreme moment when, if we put forth all our strength, we can arrest the assault upon the Church for many a long day to come." The more frankly the Church becomes partisan in politics the more surely will the doom come when its day of party triumph is over.

The "unco guid" of Glasgow still prefer dirt to desecrating the Lord's Day. At first the public baths were only open on "lawful days," and when it was proposed that they should be opened for an hour or two on Sunday morning, the Council and the Kirk raged in chorus, and all but swore over the impiety of the conception. Better be dirty than offend the Deity by washing under public auspices on the Sabbath morning. But the contemptible squalling was useless. Common sense refused to budge or vanish "up the Cowgate," and at last the slight concession was made that the baths might be opened for a short time on Sunday for the benefit of those who had no private baths of their own.

The accommodation proved insufficient, and last week Mr. Stevenson proposed that the baths should be open from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. Again the bigots raged about the sanctity of the Sabbath, and Mr. Stevenson's motion was lost; but a motion doubling the open time on Sunday morning was carried, so the Lord's Day will be doubly desecrated after all.

A religious riot has taken place at Porbandar, Bombay, owing to the clashing of Hindu marriage processions with the Moslem Mohurran. Three persons were killed and 184 injured. It is a sweet thing is religious fervor!

Nietzsche's statement that a people is nature's circumlocution for a few great ones, has been considered an instance of the callousness of Anarchism. It is, however, curiously paralleled by Coventry Patmore, the Roman Catholic poet and essayist, who says the world is but a dunghill whereon to grow one or two saintly characters. This is a good instance that extremes meet.

The bicycle in America, as in England, is helping to turn the first day of the week into a day of recreation. The ministers are seeing the drift, and giving Bicycle Sermons. The Rev. Mr. Scadder, New Jersey, who describes himself as an enthusiastic wheelman, frankly says that if the movement continues, the churches will be weakened, if not ruined. It is seriously proposed that all the churches should provide store rooms for bicycles, and open their door to wheelmen wearing riding-dress.

A new old story of a soldier saved by his Bible is going the rounds of the religious press. It is of a soldier who, during the storming of the Malavand Pass, was hit in the chest and fell to the ground. The bullet, however, was buried in a Bible which the soldier carried in his bosom, and had thus saved his life. Many similar tales, and possibly true ones, are told of all fetishes. A Freethought volume would never have served, but a pack of cards would have done the business.

Messrs. Booth and Shaw, the Liberal candidates for Halifax, have been heckled on the subject of the Blasphemy Laws. Being asked if he would vote for their repeal, Mr. Shaw replied, "That is a most difficult question. I could not answer that." Mr. Shaw has simply to say if he is in favor of Freethinkers being punished by Christians for opposing Christianity. There is really no difficulty in the question; the difficulty is in Mr. Shaw's reluctance to do justice to those who differ from him on religion.

Alderman Booth was rather more explicit. He replied that so far as the Blasphemy Laws affected religious distinctions or civil rights, he should be prepared to repeal them to that extent. But if words have any real meaning, that is repealing them altogether. Freethinkers don't want to curse and swear in the public streets, if that is what Alderman Booth is thinking about. What they want is the same right as Christians to hold and propagate their opinions. No more and no less.

The Tablet (R.C.) sneers at Huxley as "a fanatic of negation and a dogmatist without a creed," and says "the theory of the Origin of Species was accepted, not from a belief in its inherent truth, but because it gave speculators a colorable pretext for dispensing with the assumption of an intelligent Creator of the universe."

The Church Times says of Huxley, that "in entering upon the arena of theological controversy, he forgot the homely proverb which forbids the cobbler to go beyond his last." After the thrashing he gave theologians this is either ignorance or cheek.

There is a boy evangelist out in Missouri who weighs only about seventy-five pounds. He is thirteen years of age, and boasts of having broken the entire Decalogue before his conversion. This precocious sinner was plucked like a brand from the burning, and baptised into the Baptist Church before he had reached his teens. He now conducts services in knee-breeches and broad collar. They go ahead so rapidly in America that there is hope that he may emerge from his evangelistic stage ere he comes of age.

Mr. Page Hopps is an amiable man as well as a theologian with an inclination towards Spiritualism. He hopes to see a great reunion of Christendom in another sense than Dr. Lunn's. People will "intensely agree about the things of the spirit which are spiritually discerned." Mr. Hopps hopes that "even such iconoclasts as Colonel Ingersoll" will join this happy family. We fancy he will be disappointed. Colonel Ingersoll has logic as well as poetry. He is opposed to every form of supernaturalism.

Christian temperance people, who act on the "fallen angel" theory in their attempts to put down drinking, are all on the wrong tack. They don't understand the law of cause and effect. It would do them good, unless their case is hopeless, to study Mr. Charles Booth's remarks on the "drinking habits of London workmen." Mr. Booth finds that it is the worst-paid workers who drink the most, and that drinking increases with irregularity of employment. Skilled men, well paid, and in regular work, as a rule drink the least. This is exactly what might be expected by a common-sense Materialist.

Digitized by Google

A big pilgrimage, organised by the American Catholic bishops and sky-pilots, has left New York for Loretto, Rome, Lourdes, and Paray de Monial, where the pilgrims will have the opportunity of worshipping Our Lady of each place. Four separate and distinct virgins, yet the four are not four, but one.

Yellow fever is raging at Santos, in Brazil. Men were dying by scores in the city, and on the British and foreign vessels in port. Some British ships had their flags flying at half-mast for weeks as man after man of the crews succumbed to the scourge. The death-boat was being rowed about the harbor day and night, from vessel to vessel, collecting the dead for burial. Some ships had only one or two men left of their entire crews.

During a thunderstorm in Southern Sweden, last week, fourteen persons—nine men and five women—were struck by lightning. Eight of the men were killed on the spot, and the others had to be taken to a hospital.

A lady representative of the Christian World went to report the proceedings at the laying of the foundation-stone of the Cathedral cathedral at Westminster. She was stopped on the stairs leading to the Press seats. "Pass this lady out," cried an official, and she was passed out. It was stated that Cardinal Vaughan was emphatic in ordering that the Christian World was one of the papers not to be admitted! More Christian harmony!

Three centuries ago the Catholic Church would have burnt the editor of the Christian World. Now it only puts an affront upon a member of the staff. The will is there, but the power is gone, or burning would still be the order of the day.

It was rather appropriate that, at the launching from Genoa of a new ship called "Giuseppe Garibaldi," the vessel entered the sea splendidly amid the cheering of the by-standers, but, moving before the appointed time, without the customary blessing of a priest.

Orangemen and Catholics came into collision at Boston on Independence Day. Casualities—one dead and scores wounded. Good old religion!

American lynchers are not very particular. A party of them entered a negro church in Lake City, Florida, dragged the black preacher from the pulpit, and shot him dead. Of course they were all Christians. How they love each other!

The G. O. M. has long been engaged on an annotated edition of Bishop Butler's works, which he has nearly completed. It is to be published as soon as possible in two volumes—one for Butler and one for Gladstone. The G. O. M.'s ruling passion is strong at the finish. He always had a love for theology, and he would have made a splendid archbishop. Even in his political orations he was always at home with God Almighty, especially in the perorations.

"Come unto me, all ye that want a smoke, and I will give you tobacco." This is not in the New Testament, but it might have been if Jesus Christ had preached in the nineteenth century. "If you want a smoke (free)," says an East-end advertisement, "come next Sunday afternoon, at three, to Christ Church Hall, Hanbury-street. A free cup of tea, if you like. Tobacco gratis." This is very different from the old style of "compel them to come in." We shall yet see smoking-pews in churches.

The secretary of the Liberator Relief Fund says there are still 2,528 victims on the books, for whom a further sum of £50,000 is required. Most of these were deluded by the pious character of the directors and their supporters, and the appeal is, properly, mainly directed to the churches.

"A Faithful Servant" writes to the Duc d' Orleans through the Paris Figaro, relative to his wearing the order of the Holy Ghost at the marriage of the Duc d' Aosta: "I wish the Holy Ghost had inspired you better."

The Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Benson gave their second garden party last week. According to the society papers it was quite too too exquisite an affair, and would have considerably astonished Jesus Christ could he have been present.

At the Laurel Hill Convent, Limerick, sixty-eight of the nuns and boarders were prostrated with every evidence of irritant poisoning. One of the nuns died and was privately interred without any inquest.

Bishops Doane and Coxe, of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, have been much scandalised at the idea of a Woman's Bible, and have been denouncing the New Women who projected the scheme. Bishop Doane prophecied no end of evils from women's rights, and said money would buy their votes "as it now does themselves." Bishop Coxe said: "The effort to establish the 'New Woman' has, it must be said, been accompanied by a desire on the part of the agitators to emancipate themselves from religion. When I read from day to day of the utterances of this new cult, giving forth startling 'truths' and disseminating odious principles from the lecture platform, I am inclined to cry, 'Oh! shame, where is thy blush?'" Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and other of the advanced women, are starting on the bishops, and we bet the women will have the last word.

A Catholic priest, known as the Canon-Bishop of Segouzac, has been brought before the Correctional Chamber at Paris for conducting a matrimonial agency.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions have long been dissatisfied with the state of affairs in the Land of the Rising Sun, where the native Christians will not stand the nonsense of their American pastors, and wish to run a Christianity of their own. A committee has gone out to investigate and report.

There is quite a row between English and American missionaries in Japan. The latter claim that their work is of greater importance than that of their British confrères, because America spends much more money on her missions than England. The English declare that this does not prove the merit of American mission work, as it is quite possible that five pounds of English money, spent judiciously, may do as much good as double that amount of American funds. The Jap looks on and laughs.

In the text book of Moral Philosophy, by Father Rickaby, in use at Stoneyhurst, and published with the express approval of the Pope, it is laid down that "Brute beasts, not having understanding, and therefore not being persons, cannot have any rights. They are of the number of things." It goes on to show at length that "We have no duties to them, not of justice, as is shown; nor of religion, unless we are to worship them like the Egyptians of old; not of fidelity, for they are incapable of accepting a promise." It even shows at length that "We have, then, no duties of charity, nor duties of any kind, to the lower animals, as neither to sticks or stones." Paul said, "Doth God care for oxen?" Such is Christian morality!

The papers have been making a fuss about a monkey getting into St. Stephen's Church, Hampstead, and defying all efforts to dislodge it. Really this is not the first time a monkey has been in church—or even in the pulpit.

A Dalziel telegram reports a sad accident on the Mississippi. A large passenger steamer had a hole knocked in her bottom, and made water so fast that the captain was only just able to run her upon a sandbank. Several persons jumped overboard while she was in deep water, and were drowned; but all on board were saved after she stranded, with the single exception of a Christian minister. He had been on his knees praying from the first moment of the accident, and in getting into the boat he stepped into the water. Such is the efficacy of prayer.

A special train conveying Dutch pilgrims to Mont-Aign ran off the line near Antwerp. One pious lady was killed, and several pious persons were badly injured.

Jehovah will not look after his own houses. The parish church at Callington, near Plymouth, has been partially destroyed by fire. Just a little of that water which made Noah's Flood would have stopped this calamity.

There is a foul-mouthed fellow in Liverpool who delights in (safely) libelling Colonel Ingersoll, and circulating the most abominable lies about his personal character. This fellow makes a great boast of his Christianity, but many Christians are ashamed to hear him profess to be of their religion. We happen to know that he was kicked out of a Christian church for getting drunk while denouncing drinkers in general, and moderate drinkers in particular. We could say more, but the rest will keep until it is wanted.

There was a regular scuffle between rival clergymen in the pulpit at Irvine last Sunday. The Rev. Albert Kerr and a rival orator had both been asked to preach by different sections of the church. They fought for possession of the Bible, and the police were called in but declined to interfere

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

July 21 and 28, Milton Hall.

August 4, Newcastle; 11, 18, and 25, St. James's Hall, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

H. L. Sumner.—Thanks for Lady Cook's pamphlet on The Evils of Society. It is plain-spoken and honest. We do not agree with all she says, but we believe her pamphlet will do good in its way.

W. McLachlan (Chicago).—Yes, it is the same Mr. Wheeler who introduced you to Mr. Foote at Glasgow in 1876. If you write to him address your letter to 27 Enkel-street, Holloway, London, N.

E. Truelove writes that he will subscribe £2 and "G. R." £3 to the President's Honorarium Fund.

E. Smedley.—(1) Martin Luther did not practise polygamy himself, but he appears to have thought it compatible with Bible Christianity. No doubt he liked a drink when he was thirsty. (2) We have often explained the "Great Debate" which Z. B. Woffendale advertises. It was a surreptitious job, done by a reporter who could not take a verbatim report, although it pretends to be verbatim. The noble Woffendale's speeches are twice as long as Mr. Foote's, and he also embellished the "Report" with annotations. Mr. Foote declined to read the proofs of the wretched abortion, and publicly repudiated all responsibility for it. As the law now stands a debate in which Mr. Foote takes part could not be published without his consent.

G. Narwiger. We regret the oversight. In our next.

A. Woxley.—Your letter arrives very late. We have condensed into a paragraph for "Sugar Plums."

E. D. H. Daly.—Thanks for cuttings.

J. Keast.—Glad to hear you are having such good meetings at Eastville Park, Bristol. The open-air propaganda in the summer should swell your indoor meetings in the winter.

J. Hill.—See paragraph. Glad to hear from such an old reader. The general public does not buy the Freethinker; it rarely does buy anything worth buying. Humanly speaking, we love the world, and wish to serve it; but, intellectually, we rather despise it. "Providence" has stocked this planet with a terrible lot of fools.

J. G. Bantham.—So you all liked Mr. Putnam at Newcastle. Why, certainly. He'll be liked anywhere.

A. B. Moss.—Pleased to hear you had capital audiences at New Brompton. Shall be glad to see you at Clacton.

W. Bradburn.—What is the use of asking us whether there is any truth in the story of "an Atheist" who "said to his dying daughter," etc. The preacher who told it may have had a low forehead, but he had plenty of front.

W. J. Wenham.—(1) Sufficient reason for Jewish hatred of Pilate arose from his removing the army from Cæsarea to Jerusalem and placing Roman standards on his palace, and from his using the temple revenues to construct an aqueduct. (2) Philo would share the prejudices of his countrymen, but we cannot be sure we have his writings as written. (3) Our sources are not trustworthy enough to judge Pilate's character. Many legends cluster round the name of Pilate. The story that he committed suicide at Vienne rests on the dubious authority of Eusebius (H. E. ii. 7), and probably arose from there being a Mount Pilatus, or cap-shaped, there; it was also said that he became a hermit by Mount Pilatus, near the lake of Lucerne, and that he was beheaded by Nero. Tertullian says he was a Christian in conscience, and in the Ethiopic Church he is a saint. His day is June 25. The Copts also say he died a Christian martyr. Origen, Chrysostom and Hilary assert that his wife became Christian, and the Greek Church makes her a saint (Procla), and observes October 27 as her day. Washing the hands was a Jewish and not a Roman custom, and helps to betray the unhistorical character of the whole story.

T. Powell.—Well, if Jesus did not steal the donkeys, he requisitioned them. We admit the technical distinction.

E. G. Taylor.—Received with thanks. Our statement and appeal, with the two Bills, will be reprinted in leaflet form for permanent use.

Curious.—Many thanks for the information. The copy of Mr. Foote's pamphlet on the Resurrection, which you enclose, is one of the special sheets printed for binding when Bible Romances are completed. Whoever is selling them for one penny is a thief. The sheets have been stolen from our stockroom. We should be glad to identify the culprit.

W. Cassell sends £1, his half-yearly subscription to the N.S.S. Benevolent Fund.

Sympathiser.—Dan Chatterton was a character. He breathed fire and slaughter, but wouldn't hurt a fly. His integrity was remarkable. Poor as he was, you might have trusted him with ten thousand pounds, and you would have found it all right, even if you found him dead of starvation beside it.

W. P. Sorer.—We cannot send you copies of the Bills. Let Mr. G. W. Palmer, the Liberal candidate at Reading, have a copy of this week's Freethinker.

B. Bennett.—We cannot answer such questions through the post. If you want to waste your time by studying Baxter's views, read the Christian Herald.

T. Dobson.—The questions for parliamentary candidates are printed in our first article this week. We don't think it would answer to publish Mr. Putnam's "Notes and News" in a separate form.

J. H. Simpson.—Many thanks. We hope your example will be followed everywhere. Candidates should be pressed firmly on subject of the Blasphemy Laws.

Papers Received.—Non-Sectarian—New York Tribune—Public Opinion—New York Sun—Literary Digest—Secular Thought—Light—Two Worlds—Isle of Man Times—Truthseeker—Open Court—Remarks—Southend Express—Freidenker—Progressive Thinker—Church Reformer—Universal Republic—Twentieth Century—World's Advance Thought—Western Daily Mercury—Crescent—Islamic World—Glasgow Weekly Herald.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SPECIAL.

The Directors of the National Secular Hall Society (Limited) having left the Hall of Science matter in my hands, as Chairman of the Board, I have had to act according to my best judgment; and in doing so I have closed the Hall for Freethought meetings until we can arrive at a definite settlement. Meanwhile I have had Milton Hall engaged for our Sunday evening meetings. It is not central, like the Hall of Science, but it is fairly accessible, and anything is better than a serious break in the continuity of our propaganda.

Milton Hall will be closed this evening (July 14), in consequence of the Secular Federation's excursion. So many of our own people being away, and the weather being too fine to tempt many strangers indoors, it is better to discontinue the meetings for once, than to put a lecturer on the platform to address empty chairs.

On the two following Sundays—July 21 and 28—I shall be at Milton Hall myself, and, with a little judicious advertising in the neighborhood, I dare say we shall secure good meetings. Friends who can circulate handbills announcing these two lectures should communicate with Miss Vance at 28 Stonecutter-street.

As a first step in carrying out the lecture-scheme which I mooted at the Conference, and which I have since referred to in the Freethinker, I have engaged St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, for three Sunday evening lectures in August. All the three lectures will be delivered by myself. We cannot charge at the doors for admission, but we can sell tickets beforehand; and it will be necessary to do this, as the expenses will be rather heavy.

Should this experiment succeed, as I believe it will, we could follow it up, and introduce other lecturers to the same public. I have long been of opinion that the West-end of London has been gravely neglected. Indeed, I am not sure it would not be a good policy to engage halls temporarily—say for a month or so—in various parts of this huge metropolis with its five millions of inhabitants, and put our best lecturers forward where the people can come and hear them without a long walk or a somewhat expensive railway journey.

I hope to get a brief holiday before this summer weather is ended; after which I shall be ready for a long hard winter's work. I believe our party wants the President to push forward. Those who will accompany him are welcome; those who will not must be left to come on afterwards.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

SUGAR PLUMS.

SECULARISTS all over the kingdom should make use of our first article in this week's Freethinker during the general elections now taking place. If a candidate does not understand the questions, he should be supplied with our statement. After reading that, it will be idle for him to say he does not understand the Blasphemy Laws. We have printed enough of this week's issue to allow of extra copies being available for this purpose.

Since the paragraph in our "Acid Drops" was in type, Mr. W. R. Shaw, Liberal candidate at Halifax, has been written to and supplied with a copy of Mr. Taylor's pamphlet. His reply is as follows: "Though absolutely opposed to Atheism in any shape whatever, I consider your contention in respect to the Blasphemy Laws a just one, and therefore I shall vote for any Bill which will further religious liberty."

Mr. F. Barratt, the Liberal candidate for Torquay division, in answer to a question from Mr. Widdicombe, of Dartmouth, as to whether he would vote for the repeal of the Blasphemy Laws, said he was in favor of the toleration of any view whatever.

Mr. S. P. Putnam lectured at Newcastle on Sunday. His audiences were not so large as they might have been, but this was probably owing to the hot summer weather. Mr. Bartram tells us that the "saints" were delighted with Mr. Putnam's lectures, and delighted with him too, as a thoroughly genial gentleman, full of human nature. They earnestly hope to see him again in the near future. At Chester-le-Street a fine audience gave Mr. Putnam an enthusiastic reception. To-day (July 14) he lectures at St. James's Hall, Bristol, where we have no doubt he will meet with a grand welcome. Bristolians had a taste of him at the Conference.

Mr. J. P. Gilmour, of Glasgow, lectured at Milton Hall on Sunday evening, his subject being "The New Theism." Mr. G. W. Foote presided, and Messrs. Wheeler, Forder, Heaford, Rowney, and other well-known London Freethinkers were present. Considering the miraculous weather there was a good attendance. Mr. Gilmour treated his subject with marked ability. Unfortunately he was suffering from hoarseness, but his voice improved as he went along, and rose for a powerful and brilliant peroration, which won enthusiastic applause. Mr. Gilmour lectures to-day (July 14) in the Secular Hall, Leicester.

London Freethinkers will doubtless turn out in strong force this morning (July 14) for the Secular Federation's annual excursion to Clacton-on-Sea. There seems every probability of fine weather, and the arrangements allow of a long time at the seaside. Our special train leaves Liverpool-street Station at 8.45, which looks very early, but is not so in fact, as the metropolitan train service enables people from almost every part of London to get there in time. Finsbury Park and Holloway are the difficult parts to get from, but we dare say the "saints" in that district will manage to catch the train by some sort of conveyance.

Tickets should be obtained, if possible, before the morning of the excursion. Of course they will be obtainable, as far as they hold out, outside the railway station, where Miss Brown and other friends will be prepared to supply late applicants; but the safest plan is to get tickets beforehand.

The same friend who gave £5 for free tickets to children last year, has repeated his generosity. The tickets have been distributed by the Excursion Committee in conjunction with the Branch secretaries.

Messrs. Foote, Watts, and Parris will go with the excursion to Clacton. Mr. J. M. Wheeler and Mr. R. Forder will be there as usual. Mr. A. B. Moss also writes that he may be expected. No doubt some other leading men will turn up before the train starts, and we hope they will find a perfect swarm of friends on the platform.

Excursionists to Clacton will find plenty of accommodation for dinner in various restaurants, with prices for all pockets. A common tea for the Federation party will be provided at Rigg's Retreat, a few minutes' walk from the pier, at ninepence per head. Mr. Foote will preside, and will be supported by the friends above mentioned. The time for this "communion of saints" is 5.30. This will give ample opportunity for brake-drives in the neighborhood or a sail on the sea.

Mr. John Grange debated with the Rev. A. J. Waldron at Bradford on the first two evenings in July. Christianity versus Secularism was the subject of discussion. Mr. Waldron spoke well and never fell into the orthodox method of abuse. Mr. Grange satisfied his own party and often won the applause of his opponents. A correspondent describes his opening speech on the second night as "masterly."

The Chatham Branch takes its annual outing on Sunday, August 11, driving to Stockbury Valley. They start from the Luton Arches at 9.30 a.m., calling at Military-road, Rochester, and Strood, for friends. The route selected is through Cuxton, Snodland, Town Malling, Wateringbury, and Detland Hill; returning through Key-street and Bainham. A good tea will be provided at the "Three Squirrels," Stockbury. Friends will provide their own lunch, which will (D.V.) be partaken at Wateringbury. Tickets, including tea, 3s. 9d.; children under fourteen half-price; to be obtained of J. Hill, 174 Canterbury-street, New Brompton, or from the committee.

The "Atheist Shoemaker" affair has been a subject of correspondence in the Nottingham Argus. Lindley Maxfield contributes a racy letter on the Secular side, and points out the absurdity of a letter by the local Christian Evidence secretary, who relies upon Mr. Holyoake's "vindication" of Mr. Price Hughes. Mr. Maxfield shows that the facts—as distinct from mere opinions—are on Mr. Mr. Foote's side, and that Mr. Hughes has yet to prove that Charles Alfred Gibson was ever an Atheist or a lecturer.

Darwin was intended for the Church, and Huxley as a child had strong clerical affinities. "I remember turning my pinafore wrong side forward, in order to represent a surplice," Huxley wrote, "and preaching to my mother's maids in the kitchen as nearly as possible in Sir Herbert's manner one Sunday morning when the rest of the family were at church. That is the earliest indication I can call to mind of the strong clerical affinity which my friend Mr. Herbert Spencer has always ascribed to me, though I fancy it has for the most part remained in a latent state." Our sub. has an early portrait of Huxley, taken over forty years ago, in which he appears remarkably like a Methodist parson, chiefly owing to his wearing a white, or blue, tie.

"Fifteen years ago" (writes a correspondent of the Manchester Evening News) "it was my lot to come in frequent contact with Mr. Huxley. At that time he was in his zenith as a social lion, and would turn blithely from a lecture on lobsters at the Zoo to a cultured drawing room, where he would stand sipping tea and gossiping on the latest book of the day, in entire defiance of his own principles of hygiene. On one occasion, which comes back to me vividly, he remarked that the best equipment for the battle of life was not a sound education, but a sound stomach."

The Academy says of Professor Huxley: "His encyclopædic learning, his absolute clearness of vision, his unrivalled facility of popular exposition, his trenchant argumentation, his lucid prose, his flashes of irony and wit, guarantee that his name will be preserved as long as the language is read."

Similarly, "E. R. L.," the writer of the obituary notice in the Athenæum, says: "To the present writer it seems impossible not to regard him as one of the very greatest minds of this century—a permanent glory of the English race."

The Independent Pulpit keeps up a good standard, as may be seen from the article by J. P. Richardson which we reprint. Mr. Davis also writes well on "Rational Morality"; H. Wettstein on "The Source of Psychic Phenomena," which he attributed to auto-hypnotism and double consciousness. Mr. Bailey writes on "Religion and Morality," and N. Zediker on "Immortality."

From a brief editorial in the Independent Pulpit we clip the following: "Freethinkers are often asked, 'What will you give us in place of religion?' This is a queer question; it is like the old slave who, on emancipation day, asked to whom he belonged, since they had taken 'old master' away. Liberalism is trying to set the Christian free, and for what it takes from him, there is no need of a return. It does, however, offer him many opportunities for making himself the happier and better for the burden he has cast off. It opens up to him a field for investigation and study, interesting, beautiful, and instructive beyond compare, and if he be so inclined, he may find in it the material with which he can clothe himself in beliefs and thoughts as much superior to the garments he has laid aside as the robes of a king to a beggar's rags."

The American Protective Association, at its convention at Milwaukee, passed the following resolution: "All institutions of an ecclesiastical character claiming temporal dominion or the right to define the extent of their own jurisdiction, are inimical to all forms of constitutional government, and are a menace to the perpetuity thereof."

Digitized by Google

If this is anything more than an abstract pious opinion, the A. P. A. ought to throw itself into the work of the American Secular Union and support their Nine Demands for the complete separation of Church and State.

Dr. Andrew Dickson White, in his "New Chapters in the Warfare of Science," in the Popular Science Monthly, traces the different opinions held concerning the Bible. His last chapter is entitled "From the Divine Oracles to the Higher Criticism."

We receive from S. David's, Portland, Kansas, a copy of a little semi-monthly paper entitled the Freethought Ideal. The paper is new to us but it has already reached its thirteenth number. It is extremely cheap, as American papers go, being only 50 cents. per year; and is ably conducted. It ought to have a large circulation and do good work in the States.

De Dageraad continues its translation of Crimes of Christianity, and, in the July number, one of the editors contributes a long article on "Free Life."

While our London friends are enjoying themselves at Clacton, the Manchester saints will be picnicing at Chester. Their train leaves the Central Station at 9.20. Those from Liverpool and neighborhood who intend joining the excursion at Chester, should be at the landing-stage at 1.30, for the boat to catch the 2.10 train for Birkenhead. From the Central Station at 2 o'clock, change at Rock Ferry. Due at Chester 3.3. Trains leave Chester at 7, 8.35, or 10.5, for both landing-stage and Central Station.

Mr. T. McKinnon Wood, Liberal candidate for East Islington, says: "I am in favor of the abolition of the blasphemy laws, and of the granting of liberty of bequest to the institutions you name." Mr. B. L. Cohen, the Conservative candidate, also says: "I have no hesitation in assuring you that I also am a 'Freethinker,' if it is understood by that expression that everybody should be free to think as he likes, and also, as it appears to me, a necessary consequence, to bequeath his money to any institution he deems worthy of such consideration."

Nya Sanningar, the new Swedish Freethought paper, continues to publish illustrations of Bible texts. It also gives a capital portrait of Victor Hugo.

The Freethought Federation has opened its new headquarters at 141 South Water-street, Chicago, which, we hope, will be a centre of activity in that great metropolis.

Secular Thought (June 29) reprints Mr. Wheeler's article on "A Jolly Japanese Religion" from our columns. The other contents are good. Our contemporary is now entering on its eighteenth half-yearly volume, and we are pleased to note that Mr. Ellis maintains it worthily as an exponent of the cause in Canada.

Freethought Philosophy.

Freethought doesn't make a man anxious. It makes him a philosopher. He takes life as it is, for what it is, and makes the best of it. A Freethinker never climbs on himself in the vain desire to lay hold of the "next world." He is fairly content with this world, even if things are not just as they might be. He can fold his hands with a quiet touch, or he can stretch wide his arms without waiting to see whether the Lord approves of the operation. The Freethinker finds enough to do to mind his own business, and has no time to waste, either in singing praises to keep God in good humor, or supplying mundane news for the information of Jehovah. He feels that life to him means work and service, and not show and ceremony. Let the poor Christian, conscious of his spiritual imperfection, struggle mightily for the kingdom of Jesus—the Infidel cares not; he has a kingdom of his own, within which he can live in peace, free from the interference of priestly demagogues.—Boston Investigator.

Priests, Women, and Children.

The Jesuits have been accused of hatching a regular system for undermining and corrupting the principles of youth. But, though the accusation be just, every priest is a Jesuit as far as relates to a desire of gaining the minds of youth. All priests have necessarily the desire of influencing the minds of others. From their very calling they have a disposition to be teaching; women and children are the materials that they like to work upon. Next to the Devil they dread men of understanding.—William Cobbett, "Register," vol. xxxiii., p. 397.

THE HONORARIUM TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

It will be remembered that at the last Conference of the National Secular Society a letter was read from Mr. George Anderson, suggesting that its President "should be recouped for his loss of time and money in serving the party's interests." Accordingly, the Conference appointed a Committee, consisting of Mr. George Anderson, Mr. Charles Watts, Mr. Robert Forder, and Mr. George Ward, to consider the best plan to be adopted for carrying out the suggestion. The Committee met and drew up a circular, which probably most of the readers of the Freethinker have seen.

This Committee unanimously passed the following resolution, proposed by Mr. George Anderson, and seconded by Mr. George Ward: "That the sum to be paid the President of the N.S.S. for this year be £100, to be confirmed, augmented, or diminished each year by vote of the Conference."

By this resolution it was the desire of the Committee to carry out the object, for which it had been appointed by the congress of delegates, in the most satisfactory manner both as to terms and amount, leaving the Society to act yearly in future as circumstances might dictate.

It is to be hoped that what has been done will meet with the approval of the Secular party, and that its members will subscribe the required amount as promptly as possible.

CHARLES WATTS.

Subscriptions Received:—

Amount acknowledged, £16 1s. 6d.

Per R. Forder: Toby King, £5; E. Painter, £5; H. Byshe, 10s.; A. Lewis, 10s.; R. Griffiths, 4s.; W. H. Wood, 2s. 6d.; R. Taylor, 2s. 6d.; J. H. R., 1s.; J. P., 1s.

Per Miss Vance: J. and J. McGlashan, £1; W. Hardiman, 2s. 6d.; Edward Clodd, 10s.; C. H. Gask, 10s.; T. Beach, 5s.

Per Mr. Watts: Mrs. J. Donaldson, £5.

MR. PUTNAM'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

Extracts from his Letters to the New York "Truthseeker" (June 22).

COVENT GARDEN theatre and the Italian opera make one of the supreme attractions of London at this season. Through the kindness of friends I was enabled to behold this splendor of fashion without its costing a fortune. The music is superb, and the orchestra is one of the finest and largest in the world. The stage adornments, the magnificence of scenery, and the brilliancy of the acting and singing, make a world of fascination for the lover of art. But besides the imaginary glory there is also outspread a real glory of wealth and enchantment in the vast auditorium itself. Here are the élite of London dressed in rich and royal robes. I was not among them, but over them in one of the democratic stalls, and from this height a gorgeous picture in living colors flashed and moved before me. Lords and ladies, with silks and jewels of uncounted value, composed the sparkling scene. It was like an immense animated garden, and one could but watch, with intense curiosity, its vibrating rainbow tints, and, at times, it seemed more unreal to my fancy than the romance of the opera itself.

The next wonderful panorama to unfold before my vision was the Kew Gardens, which I visited on Thursday with Foote and Watts. Even the opera must pale its artificial splendors before these multitudinous flowers—flowers of all hue, flowers of every climate. All that the soil can produce is gathered here for the scientific gaze, and for poetic ardor and love's sweet spell. The Kew Gardens are a great place for London courtships. If a fellow will not propose here on a fine day, with the beauty of nature about him, luminous as the imagined paradise, he certainly will never do it, and many a vow has been uttered amidst these glorious pomps. The Kew Gardens, although originated for purely scientific purposes, are open to the public, and the throngs on Sundays and holidays are innumerable. It is a gay and festive place, while to the eye of science it is a world of wonders. One is transported, as if by magic, into all the regions of the earth while he lingers in these botanic chambers, where the warmth of the tropics mingles with the breezy north. As you emerge from the glassy palaces, the trees and grass glitter on every side in arcades of jewelled floor and roof far as the vision can sweep.

Digitized by Google

After the Kew Gardens, and a good square meal at Richmond, comes a magnificent drive to Hampton Court, six miles away, across the Thames, which here is a comparatively narrow stream, with green and wooded banks, and embowered mansions of the old English style. We pass through Twickenham with memories of the poet Pope in the mind, who here polished his brilliant lines for immortality. Twickenham is a curious town with a narrow and winding thoroughfare, and houses on either side as ancient as the hills, and great stone walls. I don't like these stone walls, for they shut out many a lovely view, and give England the appearance of feudal exclusiveness, which is not by any means the spirit of the times. I cannot report all the beauties of this charming journey, but the crowning beauty of all is Bushey Park. A wide road, smooth as a billiard table, extends straight ahead for a couple of miles. On either side are four ranks of mighty trees that stand like venerable warriors. Beneath these spreading canopies glows a green sward. Beyond the branching arcades on the sunlit fields are deer and sheep indolently feeding. As we glance forward, the vast columns of trees seem to meet and mingle in the mellow horizon, and backward the same prospect presents itself—masses of green sinking into silvery and golden distance in the glory of the occidental sun.

How shall I describe Hampton Court? A "new moon risen on mid-noon," we might say, in Milton's words. Here a thousand thrilling recollections mingle with the pomp of nature and of art. Through the wide galleries and storied chambers we wander; heroes and kings and the illustrious beauties of the olden time shine upon our vision; while from the vast windows of the palace we behold the glittering gardens, the fountains, the silvery sheen of waters, and the majesty of ancient oaks. I can only suggest the massive and brilliant glories of the renowned scenes, the great, solemn building, the shadowy arches, the laden walls, the relics of royalty and war, and the bright and variegated world without. Here the mighty Cromwell reigned in the grandeur of his solitary genius, a sublime energy in the midst of battling factions. I must confess I never understood Cromwell as I did this hour in the shadow and splendor of Hampton Court, when the glowing words of my comrades revealed the hero in his true colors. They studied him and comprehended him from a Freethought view, without prejudice, in the clearness of universal principles; and certainly the gigantic Puritan was an admirable and wonderful character—a man of action, like Cæsar and Napoleon, and equal to either of them in the creative energy of his genius. He was not, after all, a fanatical religionist, but a comprehensive and tolerant man, the best his time could produce; misunderstood in his own era, and only now being appreciated, not only as the greatest warrior England ever produced, but as its wisest statesman and boldest administrator.

It is the sunset hour; the chimes are ringing forth, and we wander alongside the Thames, where the boats glide up and down with merry passengers. As the great night glooms onwards, with its million stars in London's bosom, we return homeward with an added lustre in the illuminated chambers of memory.

On Friday morning, with Joseph Mazzini Wheeler (who has read more books than any other man in the Freethought ranks) I visit the British Museum. Mr. Wheeler is named after the illustrious Italian patriot, who was the friend and comrade of his father. Mr. Wheeler is known on both sides of the Atlantic for his learning and his devotion to our cause. I thoroughly enjoyed my day's trip with him, and the objects I viewed were enlightened by his extensive knowledge. The British Museum is a wonderful place. Here is a revelation of vast spaces of human history. Here are relics and mementos from almost every nation. We plunge into the depths of time. There is a vast procession of the ages as we wander through these majestic halls. Here are human implements dating back 4,200 years B.C. It seems that the British Museum knocks out Adam by 196 years. There are mummies and sarcophaguses and monuments dating 3,700 years B.C., and man must have been quite civilised to have produced these evidences of artistic talent and skill in the use of instruments. The library of the museum contains at present 2,000,000 volumes. A copy of every book published in the empire is sent to the museum and preserved. The reading-room is a vast circular, domed hall, in which, I think, a thousand students could be gathered at once. There are desks and conveniences for study. Anyone can call for and examine any book he desires. The libraries are beginning to overflow the whole building, and will in time undoubtedly occupy the total structure, and the other vast collections will be removed to other places, as some already are placed in the South Kensington Museum of Natural History, which we also visited. In this is a noble statue of Darwin.

In the display of animal life is vividly demonstrated the process of evolution, much to the scandal of the orthodox party, who protested against such an exhibition of nature's history, but it is too late in the day. There is a beautiful collection of birds and insects, and the truth of natural selection is plainly perceived as we follow the changing species. There are the bones of the ancient whale, which, I think, must have swallowed Jonah, since there is plenty of room to hold Jonah if ever he got in. He could walk around and take a nap quite comfortably in that capacious belly. There are also remains of huge mastodons, and of almost all the animals that have ever walked the earth. It is simply impossible to enumerate the multitude of curiosities. I must leave it to the imagination of the reader.

We also traversed the law courts of Lincoln's Inn, and witnessed the solemnities of justice. These courts are small and gloomy, but they hold an immense amount of wigs and dignity. Everything moved in a slow and ponderous fashion. The "law's delay" was pretty well exemplified.

We also took in Hyde Park—the people's park—a beautiful, ample space. Outdoor meetings of some sort are held here almost every day. If anybody is discontented he can come to Hyde Park and blow himself off. He is sure to find some listeners. One does not have to keep off the grass here. No matter how dilapidated one is, he can lie down on the greenery and bask all day in the sun, and he can sleep all night if he wants to. There is no policeman to tell him to move on. This is a vast lodging-house for houseless men and women in summer, and a motley scene can be witnessed in the small hours of the night. We passed by the noted "Reformer's Tree," under whose spreading branches many a mighty shout has been raised for liberty and justice. Here Bradlaugh has poured forth his torrents of eloquence. Fashion mingles with democracy at Hyde Park. This is typical English ground. The Anglo-Saxon race has surged here, rough and ready, polished and elegant, in vast variety. Our wandering steps encircle the Prince Albert Memorial that, in gilded magnificence, attracts the view at one of the entrances. It presents an imposing appearance. Prince Albert is displayed in golden panoply as the Patron of Art, and about him are placed the statues of the most illustrious geniuses of the human race. At the four corners are huge emblematical figures of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America.

I can't write any more of London. I must hurry on to Liverpool, where I lecture, Sunday, May 26, and at no place have I found a more cordial and generous reception. I am met at the station by a deputation of the Secular Society, Messrs. R. Towers, J. Roberts, J. C. Balfour, Wollett, and Small, and I have a pleasant social evening Saturday at the home of Mr. E. Newman, president of the society. Sunday morning I am greeted by a fine audience, Mr. J. T. Ross in the chair. In the afternoon Mr. J. Roberts presides, and in the evening Mr. E. Newman. The numbers increase, and I have a crowded house at night, and I never enjoyed more enthusiastic applause. Mr. George Wise, a somewhat notorious evangelist, was present to debate. We gave him twenty minutes for reply to my lecture, "Christ and the Nineteenth Century," but as he did not make a single point, it is no use to waste space on his assertions. There was a ripple of debate at each lecture, but nothing of any importance was elicited from the Christian side. So far as the lectures were concerned, there was almost universal approval. The platform, however, is always free and open to discussion. But the trouble is that the Christian disputant never meets the issue fairly. He dodges and uses words instead of ideas, and his pettifogging is not worthy of report.

I meet many friends at Liverpool who have known me through the columns of the Truthseeker, Mr. Doeg, secretary; Mr. Charles Stocker, bookseller, etc. It was a pleasure to meet these sturdy supporters. It was the Queen's birthday, and there were processions and celebrations and outdoor meetings, but notwithstanding these attractions a splendid assembly filled our hall, and Liverpool has shown her magnanimous appreciation of America.

I like Liverpool. It is a brilliant, go-ahead city of over half a million inhabitants. It is the next to London in size, and is like to London in its cosmopolitan aspects. The representatives of all nations are in Liverpool. It is a natural gathering-place for every race, it being a kind of universal seaport. The Mersey is a noble river, much like our own Hudson. It is broader and deeper than the Thames, and has seven miles of docks. Here come and go innumerable craft, and the largest ships in the world. There are many fine buildings in Liverpool, galleries, parks, etc. The residential portion of the city is very handsome, and from the river back into the wooded and hilly country extends many a delightful prospect. The city is not built upon a level spot, but upon acclivities sweeping upward from the docks, so that as you traverse the streets on top of the huge omnibuses many a splendid view of the town attracts the gaze.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

(To be continued.)

Mother—"Yes, Bobby, God made you. I'm surprised that you should have forgotten that." Bobby—"Well, it happened a good while ago, Ma. Seven years is a long time for a boy to remember anything."

Digitized by Google

THE INFIDEL CONTRACTOR.

We often can correctly say
What faith a man professes,
And sometimes can exactly weigh
The quantum he possesses.

The faith possessed by some who trade—
Like buttermen, or hatters—
May ne'er, or seldom, be displayed
Throughout their business matters;

But, some there are whose faith we know
Exactly to a fraction,
Because the full amount they show
In ev'ry trade transaction.

For instance: those to whom we owe
The wonders of construction
Are faithless, as their labors show,
And destined to destruction.

A road-contractor always tries
To minimise expenses,
And yet he always treats as lies
The Christian faith's pretences.

No mountain does he move to-day
By prayer, faith, or fasting.
But slowly cuts his toilsome way
With shovels, picks, and blasting.

To cut a hill with spades and picks
At cost of time and money,
When faith could do the job for "nix,"
Is sad, as well as funny.

Yet pious, godly persons bless
The godless undertaking,
Puffed up with Christian righteousness,
Whilst Christ they're thus forsaking.

A mountain's small in all regards—
In plan and elevation—
That measures but a million yards
By cubic computation.

Now, if a grain of faith can start
And cast into the ocean
A million yards, a millionth part
Would set a yard in motion.

But faith, to-day, can't even start
A tremor in a custard,
Nor equals e'en the billionth part
Of any grain of mustard.

Still, faith's required—says Holy Writ,
My brothers and my sisters—
To save us from the burning pit,
And keep our souls from blisters.

So, navvies and contractors all!
Shun shovels, picks, and blasting!
Unless you wish to squirm and squall
In hell for everlasting!

G. L. Mackenzie.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

July 14, Bristol; 16 and 17, Plymouth; 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth; 18, Leicester; 25, Liverpool.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

BOOK CHAT.

Man's Faith: His God-given Attributes. The Creed of an Artist, by Ilex Iluminati; 1895 (Labor Press, 57 Tib-street Manchester), is a sort of prose poem or rhapsody. The author is evidently an artist, and a lover of music, who has been influenced by Shelley, Browning, Whitman, E. Carpenter, and Ruskin. Disliking Church orthodoxy and conventionality, calling the Bible "a gross mixture of fallibility," he holds that "Religion is a Morality." On the question of the nude in art, he says: "We need to be frank with nature to be truly chaste. Reared under one prejudice and another, we warp the mind as Chinamen do the feet." The book is full of fervor and fine feeling, but it is one of those writings which Horace would recommend to be kept nine years, and then revised before publication.

* * *

Zola's Rome, on which he is now busy, is to be the second of a triology, Lourdes, Rome, Paris. Lourdes symbolises the Middle Ages with all the simplicity of its faith; Rome symbolises the present with the attempt of the Neo-Catholics to accommodate old faith to new wants and aspirations; and Paris will symbolise the future, in which Zola will try to foretell what will be the outcome of it all.

* * *

Huxley's "Corybantic Christianity" is a phrase that should stick to Booth's army of militant missionaries. The Westminster Gazette, however, points out that "its application to the Salvationists was new, but the collocation of ideas itself is as old as Celsus. That ancient writer applied it, curiously enough, to all Christians alike. We quote from Froude's essay on "Origen and Celsus" a paraphrase of some remarks by the latter: 'So long as the Christians were few there was tolerable agreement among them. As their numbers extended the mutinous spirit displayed itself; sect was formed after sect, each condemning the other, till they have little left but the name in common. Their faith rests on nothing but their hopes and fears, and they have invented the most extraordinary terror. God forbid that they, or I, or any man, should cease to believe that wicked men will be punished hereafter and good men rewarded. But the Christians have taken this ancient doctrine, and distorted its meaning, and now howl it out like the Corybantes, as if no one had ever heard of it before.'"

* * *

We are informed that Mr. Edward Clodd, the author of The Story of Creation and A Primer of Evolution, is not engaged on The Story of Joseph, as stated in several journals, including our own. There is probably some mistake in the name.

* * *

The Rational View, by Charles C. Moore, the editor of the Blue Grass Blade, of Kentucky, is concerned with Christian theology. Mr. Moore, like several other of the leading American Freethinkers, was brought up to the ministry, which he left when he found he could no longer hold the Christian doctrines of the miraculous. At his very ordination he had his eyes partially opened. He says: "I remarked to Dr. Pickett that I should never be willing to defend the doctrine of slavery as it was understood in the South. He kindly but earnestly, rebuked the remark, and, picking up a New Testament, read to me the first five verses of the sixth chapter of First Timothy. I saw plainly that the passage not only justified slavery, but warned me, as a young preacher, that I must teach that slavery was right, and withdraw 'myself from such as said it was not.'" An endeavor to bring the truth of Christianity home to his auditors, and a study of Colenso and an investigation of the claims of the Bible, led Mr. Moore to resign the ministry, and become completely opposed to supernaturalism.

* * *

The Rational View is a book of 373 pages, giving Mr. Moore's views at full length. They are stated very clearly and simply, and, even when dealing with such topics as the evolution of life and society, are written so that he that runs may read. A large part of the book is devoted to showing the incompatibility of the Bible with the conclusions of reason, science, and common sense. Mr. Moore is always frank and direct. Thus he says: "At the very threshold of religious inquiry is the question, What is God? I do not think that any man can, with any great satisfaction, answer this question, though I think it can be answered, with great confidence, that God is not what he is represented to be in the Jewish Scriptures." He is equally ready to acknowledge his difficulties with regard to the Bible. Thus he says: "How the New Testament manuscripts ever got into the Greek languages I have never been able to find out." The Rational View is well calculated to stir thought, and we hope it is having a good circulation in America.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "The Jews on Tramp."
CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, a lecture.
CAMBERWELL GREEN: Tuesday, at 8, a lecture.
CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, F. Haslam, "The Exodus from Egypt."
DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, C. Cohen will lecture.
EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, Stanley Jones, "Stories from the Bible."
FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11.15, no lecture.
HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, W. Heaford, "The Creed of an Unbeliever." Thursday, at 8.30, W. J. Ramsey, "God so Loved the World."
HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, W. Heaford, "The Credentials of Christianity"; 3.30, "Holy Absurdities." Wednesday, at 8, F. Haslam will lecture.
ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, no lecture.
KILBURN (corner of Victoria-road): 7, S. E. Easton, "Some Old Stories Re-told."
KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, a lecture.
LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, F. Haslam, "The Exodus."
MILE END WASTE: 11.30, no lecture.
OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Some Old Stories Re-told."
REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, no lecture.
VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15 and 3.15, C. Cohen will lecture.
WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, A. G. Hertzfeld, "The Real and Ideal Jesus"; 7, C. Cohen will lecture. Thursday, at 8, a lecture.

COUNTRY.

BLACKBURN: Business meeting.
BRISTOL (St. James's Hall, Cumberland-street): S. P. Putnam lectures three times. Important members' meeting after evening lecture.
LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 11, quarterly meeting of Tontine Society; 7, C. Doeg, "Religious Materialism." (For Branch Excursion to Chester see "Sugar Plums.")
MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): Picnic to Chester; train leaves Central Station at 9.20; tickets 2s. 9d.
ROCHDALE (Working Men's College): 7, special Branch meeting—election of officers, etc.
SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 3, members' quarterly meeting; 7, Mr. Drury, "Is Death an Eternal Sleep?"
SOUTH SHIELDS THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY (Free Library Hall, Ocean-road): 11, Annie Besant, "Masters as Facts in the Past and in the Present"; 3, "The Brotherhood of Man"; 7, "Man the Master of his Destiny."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRADFORD (Market-place, Godwin-street): 6.30, John Grange will lecture.
DERBY (Market-place): 11, Mr. Briggs will lecture.
NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside): 11, Mr. Bowie will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Marchant-street, Bow-road, London, E.—July 14, m. and a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford; 18, Wood Green; 20 and 21, Manchester; 23 to 26, Blackburn; 28, Stockton-on-Tees; 29 and 30, Middlesboro'. August 1, Wood Green; 4, m. and a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford; 6, Camberwell; 8, Wood Green; 11, m. and a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 15, Wood Green; 18, m. and a. Finsbury Park; 22, Wood Green; 25, Manchester.

STANLEY JONES, 58 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—July 14, m. Kingsland, e. Edmonton; 21, m. Camberwell, a. Victoria Park, e. Camberwell; 24, Hyde Park; 25, Hammersmith; 28, m. and e. Wood Green.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Croydon-road, Rotherhithe, London, E.—July 21, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 28, m. Pimlico Pier, e. Tottenham. August 4, Camberwell; 11, Westminster; 18, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 25, m. Clerkenwell, a. Victoria Park.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—July 17 and August 4, Kingsland.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR CUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Price Twopence,

Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

A Demonstration of the Biblical Doctrine of Devils, suitable for circulation among Christians.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Nine Hours at the Sea-side for 3s.

ANNUAL EXCURSION

OF THE

LONDON SECULAR FEDERATION

TO

CLACTON-ON-SEA.

Tickets 3s. Children under 14, 1s. 6d.

G.E.R. SPECIAL TRAIN FROM LIVERPOOL STREET,

On SUNDAY, JULY 14, at 8.45 a.m.

Tickets will be available from any station between Liverpool-street and Stratford by local train, meeting special at Stratford at 8.50. Returning from Clacton-on-Sea at 8 p.m., calling at Ilford, where passengers can proceed to their respective stations by local service.

Tickets may be obtained from R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.; all Branch Secretaries; at the lectures on Sundays; and of Miss Annie Brown, hon. sec., 22 Pembridge-road, Notting Hill Gate, W.

"The Clacton Tea-Table,"

TOWN HALL BUILDINGS, CLACTON-ON-SEA.

Specialité—1s. ORDINARY, 12.30 to 3.

Tea fresh for every customer. Furnished Apartments.

Also "Brunswick Confectionery," Pier Avenue.

Proprietor, H. FOYSTER.

CHARLES WATTS'S WORKS.

THE TEACHINGS OF SECULARISM COMPARED WITH ORTHODOX CHRISTIANITY. 1s., by post 1s. 2d.

SECULARISM: IS IT FOUNDED ON REASON, AND IS IT SUFFICIENT TO MEET THE WANTS OF MANKIND? Debate between the Editor of the Evening Mail (Halifax, N.S.) and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by G. J. Holyoake and Colonel R. G. Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 1s., by post 1s. 2d.

A REPLY TO FATHER LAMBERTS "TACTICS OF INFIDELS." 6d., by post 7d.

SCIENCE AND THE BIBLE. 4d., by post 5d.

CHRISTIANITY: ITS ORIGIN, NATURE, AND INFLUENCE. 4d., by post 5d.

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER? 4d., by post 5d.

AGNOSTICISM AND CHRISTIAN THEISM: WHICH IS THE MORE REASONABLE? 3d., by post 4d.

THE NATURAL AND THE SUPERNATURAL; OR, BELIEF AND KNOWLEDGE 3d., by post 4d.

SECULARISM: DESTRUCTIVE AND CONSTRUCTIVE. 3d., by post 4d.

HAPPINESS IN HELL AND MISERY IN HEAVEN. 3d., by post 4d.

THE SUPERSTITION OF THE CHRISTIAN SUNDAY. A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 3d., by post 4½.

BIBLE MORALITY: Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defective as an Ethical Guide. 3d., by post 3½.

SAINTS AND SINNERS: WHICH? 3d., by post 4d.

EVOLUTION AND SPECIAL CREATION. 3d., by post 4d.

IS THERE A LIFE BEYOND THE GRAVE? Reply to Dr. R. B. Westbrook. 3d., by post 4d.

CHRISTIANITY AND CIVILISATION. Why Christianity is Still Professed. 3d., by post 4d.

WHY DO RIGHT? A Secularist's Answer. 3d., by post 4d.

THEOLOGICAL PRESUMPTION. An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N.S. 2d., by post 2½d.

EDUCATION: TRUE AND FALSE. 2d., by post 2½d.

SECULARISM: ITS RELATION TO THE SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF THE DAY. 2d., by post 2½d.

THE EXISTENCE OF GOD; OR, QUESTIONS FOR THEISTS. 2d., by post 2½d.

THE BIBLE UP TO DATE. 2d., by post 2½d.

ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 15s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Digitized by Google

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES. The only complete edition in England. Accurate as Colenso, and fascinating as a novel. 132 pp. 1s. Superior paper, cloth 1s. 6d.

DEFENCE OF FREETHOUGHT. A Five Hours' Speech at the Trial of C. B. Reynolds for Blasphemy. 6d.

THE GODS. 6d.

REPLY TO GLADSTONE. With a Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 4d.

ROME OR REASON? A Reply to Cardinal Manning. 4d.

CRIMES AGAINST CRIMINALS. 2d.

ORATION ON WALT WHITMAN. 2d.

ORATION ON VOLTAIRE. 3d.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. 3d.

PAINE THE PIONEER. 2d.

HUMANITY'S DEBT TO THOMAS PAINE. 2d.

ERNEST RENAN AND JESUS CHRIST. 2d.

TRUE RELIGION. 2d.

THE THREE PHILANTHROPISTS. 2d.

LOVE THE REDEEMER. 2d.

IS SUICIDE A SIN? 2d.

LAST WORDS ON SUICIDE. 2d.

GOD AND THE STATE. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part I. 2d.

WHY AM I AN AGNOSTIC? Part II. 2d.

FAITH AND FACT. Reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

GOD AND MAN. Second reply to Dr. Field. 2d.

THE DYING CREED. 2d.

THE LIMITS OF TOLERATION. A Discussion with the Hon. F. D. Coudert and Gov. S. L. Woodford. 2d.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH. 2d.

ART AND MORALITY. 2d.

DO I BLASPHEME? 2d.

THE CLERGY AND COMMON SENSE. 2d.

SOCIAL SALVATION. 2d.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE. An Agnostic's View. 2d.

SKULLS. 2d.

THE GREAT MISTAKE. 1d.

LIVE TOPICS. 1d.

MYTH AND MIRACLE. 1d.

REAL BLASPHEMY. 1d.

REPAIRING THE IDOLS. 1d.

CHRIST AND MIRACLES. 1d.

CREEDS & SPIRITUALITY. 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d
Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumors and Wens, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 9d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 9d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 9d.
All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 1d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr Allbutt, and others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. FULLER, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

BEWARE of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

LOOK FOR AUTOGRAPH REGISTERED TRADE MARK

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,683.

IN Red INK ON EACH BOX, WITHOUT WHICH NONE ARE GENUINE.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 3s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Digitized by Google

GOTT'S SUMMER SALE.

☞ We cannot send Patterns, but we guarantee Satisfaction in every case, or return money in full. ☜

40s. PARCELS for 20s. 1s. must in each Lot be added for Carriage.

Parcel A contains
1 All-Wool Serge Dress Length, worth 13/6
2½ yds Fine Bodice Lining
4 yds Skirt Lining
2 dozen Buttons to match
1 Ready-made Under-Skirt
1 Lady's Umbrella
1 Pair of Fine Black Cashmere Hose
1 Lady's Blouse
1 „ Apron
1 „ Belt

Parcel B contains
1 Flake Tweed Dress Length
1 Umbrella
3 yds Fine White or Scarlet Flannel
6 yds Fine Flannelette
1 Lady's Blouse
1 „ Apron
1 „ Belt
1 Pair of Fine Black Cashmere Hose

Parcel C contains
1 Pair Men's Trousers
1 Boys Suit for any age under 8
1 Gent's Umbrella
1 Tweed Dress Length
1 Lady's Umbrella
1 Ready-made Under-Skirt
1 Lady's Apron
1 „ Belt

Parcel D contains
1 Dress Length
1 pair of Sheets
1 Quilt
1 Table-cloth
6 yds Flannelette
1 Lady's Blouse
1 Ready-made Under-Skirt

Parcel E contains
1 Navy Blue All-Wool Serge Dress Length
1 Scotch Tweed, all wool
1 Habit Cloth, any color

Parcel F contains
1 West of England Trousers Length
1 Fine Worsted „
1 Scotch Tweed „

Parcel G contains
1 Suit Length, Serge or Tweed
1 Cloth Dress Length, any color
1 Boy's Suit, any age under 8

Parcel H contains
1 Melton Overcoat Length, any color
1 Black Cashmere Dress Length
1 Lady's Umbrella
1 Gent's Umbrella

Parcel I contains
1 Suit Length, Black or Blue Serge
1 Tweed Dress Length
1 Boy's Suit, any age under 8
1 „ Reefer Overcoat

Parcel J contains
12 yards Flannelette
12 „ Cotton Shirting
12 „ Flannel
12 „ Muslin de laine

Parcel K contains
Gent's Scarbro' Shaped Mackintosh, in black, navy, or brown. Give length at back, chest and waist measures.

Parcel L contains
Lady's Cleveland Mackintosh, latest style, in all colors, plain, check, or mixture. Give length back and front, bust and waist measures.

Parcel M contains
1 Scotch Tweed Dress Length
2 Flannelette Nightdresses
2 „ Chemises
2 pairs „ Knickers
2 Lady's Aprons
1 „ Belt

Parcel N contains
1 Dress Length, in serge, cashmere, habit cloth, or tweed, in any color
1 Good Strong All-Wool Suit Length, in black, blue mixture, stripe, check

Parcel O contains
30 yards Remnants, suitable for girls' dresses, all double width.

Parcel P contains
15 yards Tweed and Serge Remnants, suitable for boys' suits; all 28 in. wide

Parcel Q contains
4 Odd Trousers Lengths and
2 pairs Men's Under-pants

Parcel R contains
3 pairs Ready-made Trousers
2 „ Under-pants
2 „ Socks
Give waist, inside and outside leg measures

Parcel S contains
1 Bruno Cloth Dress Length
1 Brown Beaver Jacket Length
1 Lady's Umbrella

Parcel T contains
11 yards of Deep Pile Velveteen, twill back, in black, navy, green, brown, or maroon; 23 in. wide

Parcel U contains
1 First-class West of England Suit Length

Parcel V contains
1 First-class Black or Blue Worsted or Vicuna Suit Length.

Parcel W contains
22 yards Heavy Cloth Dress Material, 50 inches wide, black, navy, brown, green, grey, maroon, or fawn.

Parcel X contains
Lady's Mackintosh
„ Umbrella
„ Under-Skirt
„ Blouse

Parcel Y contains
Mixed Lot of Useful Goods for Lady's wear. Worth at least 40/-

Parcel Z contains
Mixed lot of Useful Goods for Gent's wear. Worth at least 40/-

A MOST MARVELLOUS LINE.

I have just secured over 10,000 yards of really good Trouserings at a price I have never before equalled. I will gladly send a few cuttings of these, which, if carefully examined, are bound to please you, as the price is not more than half what they are honestly worth. Or if you describe the color you would like, I will select a good shade for you.

PRICES.

Trousers to Measure 9s. per pair.
Three Pairs Trousers to Measure for 25s. 6d.
Six Pairs Trousers to measure for 48s.
One Trousers' Length for 5s. 6d.
Three Trousers' Lengths for 15s.
Six Trousers' Lengths for 27s.

TROUSERS.

INCHES
A, Round Waist over Trousers .....
B, Round Seat.....
E to D, Inside Leg Seam .....
F to G, Full Length of Trousers.....
H, Round Thigh .....
I, Round Knee.....
J, Round Bottom .....
Please say Lined or Unlined.....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Side or Cross Pockets.....

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4, UNION STREET, BRADFORD.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—NO. 29. SUNDAY, JULY 21, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

HARCOURT'S TUMBLE.

SIR WILLIAM VERNON HARCOURT was never an object of my admiration. Those who regard him as a great statesman are welcome to their belief. At any rate, it is not a theme for discussion in the Freethinker. Facts, however, are stubborn things. If you go away and come back you generally find they have been waiting for you. And it is a fact that Sir William Harcourt has had a very bad fall. After representing Derby for half a generation he has been rejected by a tremendous majority. His seat was considered perfectly safe, but he has lost it, some fifteen hundred of his supporters having deserted him and voted for the Tories.

In considering this event from a Freethought point of view, I must refer to something which occurred twelve years ago. I was then a compulsory recipient of Her Majesty's hospitality in Holloway Gaol. For attempting to "bring the Holy Bible and the Christian Religion into disbelief and contempt" I was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment like a common thief. I was dressed in prison garb, fed on prison fare, locked up in a brick vault twelve feet by six, denied all access to my friends except at rare intervals, refused all writing materials except a slate and pencil, and for a time only allowed one book to read—which, by a poignant irony, was the very volume I had fallen among thieves for studying too attentively. A man never forgets his experiences in such a situation. For ten years I have lived within sight of the tower of Holloway Gaol, and every time my gaze falls upon it, I am reminded (if I am ever likely to forget it!) that my great business in life is to attack the evil superstition which has always waged relentless war against the rights of Freethought.

I was tried for the fictitious crime of "blasphemy" at the Old Bailey. The judge who presided was a Roman Catholic. He was also a superlative bigot. One jury disagreed, much to his lordship's disgust. He then refused me bail, and I was locked up in Newgate. Another jury—obviously a packed one—was empanelled to try my case alone. I was found guilty, and sentenced to the utmost penalty the law permitted. I expected this, and I told Judge North that the sentence was worthy of his creed. Fortunately I couched my disgust in ironical language, or I might have had another six months for contempt of court.

A prisoner tried at the Old Bailey is like a rat in a hole. I was therefore not sorry to be tried again, on another indictment, in the Court of Queen's Bench, before the late Lord Coleridge. On that occasion I made a speech which was reported in the newspapers, and which attracted considerable attention. One point, at least, was clear gain. Christians had talked of my "indecent" attacks on Christianity, and, in addressing the jury, I complained of the use of this misleading word. Lord Coleridge, like a true gentleman, assisted me in this direction. He told the jury that there was no "indecency," in the proper sense of the word, in my alleged "blasphemy." "He may be blasphemous," said Lord Coleridge, "but he certainly is not licentious, and you do not find him pandering to the bad passions of mankind."

A petition for my release was signed by the foremost men in science, art, and literature. It was absolutely unique. But it made no impression on Sir William Harcourt, who was then Home Secretary. He would not even allow the slightest relaxation in my prison treatment. The "indulgences," such as they were, which I subsequently enjoyed, were granted by the Prison Commissioners in consequence of Lord Coleridge's representations. As the petition had no effect, a question was asked in the House of Commons by Mr. Labouchere. That was Sir William Harcourt's opportunity, and he took it like a Christian. In the face of Lord Coleridge's strong, clear words about my alleged "indecency," the Home Secretary replied that he could not see his way to remit the sentence of a prisoner who had been found guilty of "an obscene libel." In vain I asked him to liberate me on the charge of "blasphemy" and try me again on the charge of "obscenity." In vain the Radical papers protested against the Home Secretary's statement as an outrage. Sir William Harcourt knew I could not prosecute him for libel, as the House of Commons is a privileged place, where a man can indulge in lies and defamation with impunity. He also knew that he was pleasing Mr. Gladstone. He likewise knew that he was pleasing the great bulk of the religionists of this country. He played a mean, cowardly, contemptible part, which would have been nauseous to any man with a spark of magnanimity. And he did it to please the Christians.

Years have rolled by, and now the Christians have shown their gratitude. Sir William Harcourt has been kicked out of Derby by a coalition of Beer and Bible. Alderman Bemrose occupies his seat; and who is Alderman Bemrose? "He is pre-eminently a Christian," says a writer in the Daily News, "and he places that before all other considerations." I understand he is president of the Young Men's Christian Association. And this eminently pious man, this representative Christian, has sent Sir William Harcourt packing. He is knocked down, so to speak, by the very Bible party, in whose interest he slandered me so vilely. It is really refreshing. One rubs his hands, and feels that poetic justice has not forsaken the earth.

"Politics," says one of George Meredith's characters—"politics is climbing the greasy pole; mutton or no mutton, there's grease for certain." Sir William Harcourt has had the mutton; he has also had the grease. He is a member of the Church of England, yet he supports Disestablishment, at least where it is demanded by Liberals. He is a drinker—we do not mean a drunkard—yet he takes up the cause of Teetotalism. Anything to reach the mutton at the end of the pole.

Mr. Gladstone "took on" the Nonconformist Conscience, but he was a pawky old parliamentary hand, and knew how to use the Dissenters. Only on one occasion did he succumb himself. It was when he slapped Parnell in the face, and destroyed the prospects of Home Rule. Sir William Harcourt "took on" the Nonconformist Conscience after his chief's retirement, and it has sunk him fathoms deep in the ocean of failure. Temperance is an admirable thing. We love it as much as anyone. No man who does a lot of work can be other than temperate. But you cannot promote Temperance in opposition to human nature. People who are not teetotallers—and they are the majority—will never submit to fanatics who want to make it illegal, or difficult, to drink a glass of beer. Men who see that the liquor traffic must be regulated, cannot see why a "prohibition" clause should be inserted in a public bill. And they are apt to feel disgust when they learn that the author of the clause is not a teetotaller. Rich men, with well-stocked wine-cellars, are hypocrites to be so anxious about the poor man's sobriety. They are always legislating for him, but how their hands and eyes go up when he proposes to legislate for them!

Digitized by Google

I do not wish Sir William Harcourt any harm. But I am not sorry for what has occurred. He will obtain another seat, and I presume he will lead the broken army of Liberalism in the new Parliament. My desire is simply to emphasise what looks like a piece of retribution. He pandered to Christian bigotry, and he has fallen a victim to pious opponents. He flattered the Nonconformist Conscience, although he is himself a Churchman, and he has lost the sweets of office in consequence. He has now an opportunity for reflection, and I will see that he has a copy of this article to help him. G. W. FOOTE.

NAPOLEON'S RELIGION.

"In spite of terrors of Napoleon, he is entitled to the gratitude of mankind. He pulled down the Pope, and the monks in Spain and Italy, and the Inquisition in those countries. He carried the light of liberal principles to dark and enslaved regions. It will be impossible for all the kings and priests in the world to make men as ignorant and submissive as they were before he marched over the Alps.....Napoleon—and that was his greatest fault—gave, in some sort, a sanction to falsehood, and hypocrisy, and imposture, by going to mass. His example was of evil tendency. The act was, besides, a compromise with fraud."—Wm. Cobbett, "Register," vol. xxviii., p. 6.

THE time should be approaching when both Frenchmen and Englishmen will take an impartial view of the great personality who, a century ago, was rapidly rising to power in Europe. The harsh judgments of historians like Scott and Lanfrey may perhaps be somewhat modified by the conviction that Napoleon, like lesser men, often acted from necessity rather than from will. Lust of power grows by what it feeds on. The fabric of Napoleon's dominion ever needed new conquests to make the earlier ones secure. If ever a man could dominate circumstances, and, by seizing the opportune moment, subordinate them to his purposes, it was Napoleon. Yet Napoleon believed in destiny, and would have said with Bismarck: "There is so much I must in my life that I rarely reach I will." He said himself: "My son cannot replace me; I could not replace myself. I am the creature of circumstances."

Napoleon came at the break-up of the old feudalism, and completed the work. France was fighting for very life against the allied monarchies of Europe, and he won his way to the top by dint of his inherent fighting qualities. Physically, he was different from other men. His head was abnormally large, his blood circulated abnormally slow. In this respect, such a man was never known. His pulse beat only forty to the minute. This indicated great reserves of energy and callousness. He could easily stand work, troubles, and sleeplessness that would have killed other men. His habit was to get to bed at eleven and be up at three, and he had the "two o'clock in the morning courage." In war he could do everything for himself. "Il n'est rien à la guerre, que je ne puisse faire par moi-même." He said with the same frankness: "J'aime le pouvoir comme un musicien aime son violon" (I love power as a musician his violin). He went straight to his point unembarrassed by scruples.

Rarely has the "Will for Power" been more absolutely incarnate or more reckless of honor, truth, sympathy, affection, or human life. He said to Metternich he thought nothing of the lives of a million men.* As a matter of fact, between 1804 and 1815 there were killed more than 1,700,000 Frenchmen, not to mention allies and enemies. The eternal Ego may be said to have been at bottom of his religion. On his beautiful bronze face was stamped, as Heine remarked, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Woe to those who stood in his way!

Yet he believed in Fate, which he identified with God. He was a Deist of the school of Voltaire, thinking with him, "Si Dieu n'existait pas il faudrait l'inventer" (If God did not exist it would be necessary to invent him)—exactly what has been done. He had a genuine belief in an overruling Power, but he was consistent throughout. He regarded religion as an instrument of policy, and utilised it to render others subservient to himself. Atheism he was suspicious of. Those who deny celestial rule are apt to question terrestrial rulers boldly. To Laplace he noticed that his great work La Mécanique Céleste never once mentioned the name of God. "Sire," replied the astronomer, "je n'ai pas eu besoin de recourir à cette hypothèse." Laplace had no need to recur to that hypothesis, but Napoleon had. He had a strong sense of the mystery of existence, and he knew that God was among the magical words, as he called liberté and égalité; excellent to conjure with.† His God or Fate was an unknown one. He said, "The problems of Providence are insoluble." "All predictions are imposture, the result of fraud, folly, or fanaticism." Yet he would have repudiated Positivism had it been started in his time. "A religion," he remarked, "which relates to this life, without teaching man whence he comes and whither he goes, is not supportable (soutenable)."

Napoleon did not believe in any special revelation. He said: "I once had faith. But when I came to know something, as soon as I began to reason, which occurred early in life, at the age of thirteen, I found my faith attacked and that it staggered." He became, as he said, "no capuchin," but a man of the world, ready to utilise it for his own aggrandisement. Of the Christian religion, he said: "As far as I am concerned, I do not see in it the mystery of the Incarnation, but the mystery of social order, the association of religion with paradise, an idea of equality which keeps the rich from being massacred by the poor." Again he says: "Society could not exist without an inequality of fortunes, or an inequality of fortunes without religion." "A man dying of starvation alongside of one who is surfeited, would not yield to this difference, unless he had some authority which assured him that God so orders it, that there must be both poor and rich in the world, but that, in the future, and throughout eternity, the portion of each will be changed." Christianity was not true, but it was useful. He said frankly to his friends: "It is said that I am a Papist. I am nothing. In Egypt I was a Mussulman; here I shall be a Catholic, for the good of the people. I do not believe in religions; but the idea of a God! [Then pointing upward] Who made all that?" (Thibaudeau, p. 152).

His sentiments were the same when at St. Helena. Mrs. Abell, in her Recollections of the Emperor Napoleon (p. 69), relates how she catechised him on the subject in Anglo-French. "Pourquoi avez-vous tourné Turque?" He did not at first understand me, and I was obliged to explain that "tourné Turque" meant changing his religion. He laughed and said, "What is that to you? Fighting is a soldier's religion; I never changed that. The other is the affair of women and priests; quant à moi, I always adopt the religion of the country I am in." He was much annoyed when accused of Atheism, though he confessed himself a fatalist, saying, "I believe that whatever a man's destiny calls upon him to do, that he must fulfil." His belief in destiny was doubtless genuine, though it, too, had its utility in impressing others with the idea that he was the man destined to rule, and that the stars in their courses fought for Napoleon.

J. M. WHEELER.

(To be concluded.)

* "Un homme comme moi se f... de la vie d'un million d'hommes." Napoleon's heartlessness is much dilated upon by Professor Sloane in this month's Century; yet it is strange that he relies chiefly on his merciful suggestion to the surgeons that his plague-stricken veterans, who were to be left behind in Egypt, be poisoned by an overdose of opium.

† He shrewdly observed that liberty was the need of the choice few, by nature elevated above the rest. It may be repressed with impunity, but equality, on the contrary, is the craving of the multitude.

Digitized by Google

CROMWELL THE FRIEND OF FREEDOM.

(Concluded from page 436.)

THERE is no principle in Secularism that commends itself with greater force to all truly liberal minds than that of toleration, or, as I prefer to put it, a just consideration for the mental rights of those from whom we differ. As uniformity of opinion upon speculative subjects is impossible, all persons should be permitted, without impediment or persecution, to entertain whatever views upon such questions which may accord with their individual judgment. Cromwell undoubtedly entertained this view, for he proved himself a real friend of toleration, and that at a time when it was regarded by politicians as folly, and by divines as criminal. The Presbyterians of his day were as intolerant as the Roman Catholics, and Goldwin Smith says these very "Presbyterians who persecuted Cromwell with the most unrelenting malignity, were never persecuted by him." In reply to those who urged the justice of toleration, the Assembly of Divines at Westminster in 1644 pronounced it to be "the grand work of the Devil," and that it "had all error and all evil in it." A similar spirit of intolerance actuated the minds of most of the members of the numerous Christian sects with whom Cromwell had to deal. They appeared to revel in persecuting, and in inflicting the severest tortures upon each other. The Christian method of dealing with religious opponents was to whip them, imprison them, and place them in the pillory, to bore their tongues through with a hot iron, and have the letter B (for blasphemer) branded on their forehead. These were the humane and Christian modes of encouraging "religious freedom" when Secularism was unknown, and when the followers of Christ held absolute sway. To the credit of humanity, be it said, that in all ages, and among all faiths, there have appeared some natures too pure and too noble to be entirely corrupted by their theology. Among these, in the history of the past, is the name of Cromwell, the friend of freedom.

Cromwell was too great a lover of liberty to allow his faith in God to interfere with his duty to man. Goldwin Smith says: "Theoretically, of course, his toleration embraced only Protestants and Trinitarians, all sects of whom he desired to see, not only at peace with each other, but united. . . . . But the greatness of his nature carried him beyond his theory, and in all cases we find him practically the enemy of superstition." It is only just to observe here that Cromwell was himself superstitious, particularly upon the eve of his death. But this weakness upon his part did not destroy his practical love of toleration. Hence we find that he protected from Christian violence Biddle, the father of English Unitarians; he pleaded for the safety of the enthusiast, James Naylor, who roamed the country as "the Everlasting Son, the Prince of Peace, the Fairest among Ten Thousand"; he made determined efforts to obtain the readmission of the Jews to England, whence they had been banished since the year 1290; and when George Fox, the Quaker, was imprisoned and threatened with death for preaching, he was brought to Cromwell, who set him at liberty upon his promise that he would not take up arms against the Government. It is quite true that Cromwell issued some strict ordinances against both Catholics and the Anglicans, but it was not on account of their religious opinions, but in consequence of their political plots and insurrections. According to Baxter, Cromwell's maxim was: "The magistrate had only to do with civil things, not with a man's religion when held as a private view."

Equally liberal and considerate was Cromwell in political matters. In a letter to Major Crawford, he states the rule that should be observed in the selection of servants of the State. He writes: "Sir, the State in choosing men to serve it, takes no notice of their opinions; if they be willing to serve it, that satisfies." His treatment of political opponents was not revengeful; he only desired to prevent them from injuring the Government of the country. If they persisted in trying to thwart his power, he had them simply confined until they were convinced of what he deemed "the error of their ways." Much severer treatment has been dealt out since his time to those who opposed "the powers that be." Surrounded, as Cromwell was, by determined and sometimes not over scrupulous enemies, he was compelled to do something to check their persistent machinations, or all progressive legislation would have been impossible. Ormond, a most formidable enemy of Cromwell, came to London disguised for the purpose of getting up a plot against the Government. He was discovered before he could carry out his design, upon which Cromwell said to a friend of Ormond's: "If you wish to do a kindness to an old friend, Ormond is in London; warn him to be gone." This was the action of a noble mind, not the spite of a revengeful spirit. No wonder that Algernon Sidney told Burnet "that the Protector had just notions of public liberty."

To those who question Cromwell's ability to advance the civil business of the nation, I would remind them of his words in calling attention to the abuses which then existed in connection with the law: "There is one general grievance in the nation. It is the law. I think I may say it, I have as eminent judges in this land as have been had, or that the nation has had for these many years. Truly I could be particular as to the executive part, to the administration; but that would trouble you. But the truth of it is, there are wicked and abnormal laws that will be in your power to alter. To hang a man for stealing sixpence, threepence, I know not what—to hang for a trifle, and pardon murder, is in the ministration of the law through the ill-framing of it. I have known to my experience abominable murder quitted, and to see men lose their lives for petty matters. This is a thing God will reckon for; and I wish it may not be upon this nation a day longer than you have an opportunity to give a remedy; and I hope I shall cheerfully join with you in it." From the standpoint of justice, can these sentiments be surpassed in the bold speeches of Cæsar, Bonaparte, or Washington, with whom Cromwell has been compared? To his honor, be it said, that he insisted upon trial by jury and the establishment of a high court of justice, where the legal rules of evidence were observed. "Nor," says Goldwin Smith, "unless to murder the Protector and overturn the Government was no offence, does the slightest suspicion rest upon it of having shed one drop of innocent blood."

I have no space here to deal adequately with what is supposed to be the three blots on the character of Cromwell—namely, his excluding members from the House of Commons in 1654, the execution of the king, and the Irish massacres. These acts can only be understood by remembering the circumstances of the time. Probably had he not have interfered with the members of Parliament, the conspiracies that were then being concocted against him would have culminated in destroying the commonwealth, if not Cromwell's life. I am opposed to capital punishment, believing that to kill a man is not the best way to improve him. If, however, such punishment is justifiable, it was, in my opinion, in the case of the king. As to the slaughter of the garrisons in Ireland, the mode of warfare in those days was less humane than it is now. The Protestants had been massacred wholesale, the Catholic General, Count Tilly, had slaughtered both the garrison and the inhabitants of the city of Magdeburg, while Alva, and other Catholic generals, had carried on a war of extermination. It was a sad and deplorable spectacle of religious warfare, and, rightly or wrongly, Cromwell thought that, doing what he did, was the best way to bring it to an end.

Political and religious freedom received an impetus during Cromwell's rule that has proved a lasting blessing to the nation. Cassell's English history, says: "The heroes and statesmen of the Commonwealth have left doctrines and examples which are still the study and imitation of nations." Hallam observes: "It is just to say that the maritime glory of England may first be traced from the era of the Commonwealth." And even Sir Walter Scott admits: "No government was more respected abroad than that of the Commonwealth." Unfortunately, it was followed by the Restoration, which I regard as being no fault of the principles which Cromwell enunciated. The truth is, the people were not prepared for self-government, having been trained amidst the influenced of monarchy. Hence the new principles were not thoroughly understood by the masses, and the Commonwealth had to be sustained by force. A true Republic is not like a plant forced in the hot-bed of military power, but it resembles more a tree developed by the fresh air of freedom and personal cultivation. Still, I share Goldwin Smith's view that Cromwell inspired an awe and reverence for the English name, and that he was the honest and indomitable exponent of principles that had found no parallel in any other period of our history.

Digitized by Google

CHARLES WATTS.

SECULARISM AND SOCIAL REFORM.

IT was recently remarked by a writer in one of the reviews that what he styled the New Secularism—by the way, whenever you want to create a sensation now-a-days, you drag the word "new," by hook or crook, into your title—that the New Secularism was more and more concerned with the affairs of this world, with practical measures of reform, than with even the theoretical discussions of theologians and scientists, or the conflict between religion and science. It was alleged that people to-day—or the mass of reformers at least—were more interested in how starving men should have food to put in their bellies, and naked men clothes to put on their backs, than debating who was Cain's wife, or even whether Atheism or Christianity was the more reasonable. The drift of thought, in short, has taken a more "materialistic" form—to use the cant phrase of the religionist. But it is, of course, none the less secularistic—at least, so this writer alluded to admits. "We may," he says, "agree to denounce (how kind!) the too-apparent worldliness of the wealthy church-going classes, without drifting with the equally apparent current of Secularism setting in amongst the new democracy." So the "new democracy" doesn't debate who was Cain's wife, it simply leaves the whole business alone and concerns itself with an eight-hours' day and Merrie England. Which proceeding, in so far as it is genuine, proves that the "new democracy" is wise in its generation.

Now, if it be the case really that the drift of democratic thought is to ignore the whole religious juggle, then it is for Secularists largely a matter for congratulation. Not that indifference in itself is a good thing, but the indifference which ignores as worthless, because it has tested, is good. In so far, then, as the democracy is unreligious, and seeks to devote itself to attaining practical objects which shall make better this life, the Secularist object is attained. And it is well that a religionist like the Rev. Walter Walsh should see and admit that this movement of the democracy is secular.

But there are some things which must not be forgotten, and which it may be well to remind the "new democracy" of. And the first point is, that if the time has now arrived when the religious shams and the religious red-herrings which were dragged across the path can be ignored by the democracy, that result is largely due to the Secularist pioneers of the past, who actively attacked these shams and worked for their overthrow. Mr. Belfort Bax, if I remember rightly, has said that the social movement will swallow up the secular movement. Possibly. But let us not forget that the secular movement was an absolutely necessary prelude to the social movement. Until the chains and shackles that bound man's intellect were removed, it was impossible that the chains and shackles which bound him socially should be broken. And this brings me to the chief, or at least, the inspiring reason for Freethought and Secularist propaganda. Of course, truth is truth, and is worth fighting for, for its own sake. If the proposition that there is a hell be false, it is, for the sake of truth alone, well to destroy it, just as it would be well to attack the proposition, say that the sun was only fifty million miles away, or that the square on the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle was double the sum of the squares on the other two sides. All these propositions being false are, for the sake of intellectual truth, worth fighting. And if they were put forward with any degree of weight and authority, we would find men prepared to demonstrate again their falsity, just as we see scientists wrangling over sun-spots or the number of the primary colors. But then you would never get a great popular organisation to take up these academic questions, nor, as a rule, would you find them exciting much enthusiasm. People are not inclined to profoundly champion mere abstract truths where these truths have no practical bearing on life.

But with the Freethought propaganda it is different. That really touches life. After all—as a mere hopothesis—the question of whether there be a god or a hell is as unimportant as whether there be canals on Mars. It is because the god-belief and the hell-belief are used as engines for the degradation of men, as weapons by which largely an unjust and hideous social system is maintained, that is why Freethinkers attack religion so hotly and so enthusiastically. When Mr. Goldbug first discovered—and it must have been far back in human history—that it helped to keep Jones and Smith contented if they were assured of a surfeit of good things hereafter; that they could be kept in hovels here and promised mansions of marble in the skies—in a word, when Goldbug discovered how to delude the mind and exploit the imagination, he had discovered a key to power. And when then a professional class arose whose business it was to dose Jones and Smith with these fairy-tales, the system was complete. Mr. Whitechoker was a friend of Mr. Goldbug—in fact, he represented the division of labor, it being difficult for the same individual to directly do the fleecing and the preaching at the same time. Though, indeed, they sometimes changed parts, Mr. Whitechoker going in for a bit of fleecing,* and Mr. Goldbug doing some preaching on his own account. And so the game went merrily on—and so it goes on to-day. The fat bishop with his thousands a year generally "has no doubt that some great object, known only to the Architect of the Universe, is served by the existence of poverty and suffering." And Goldbug, too—or the more diplomatic of the species—is profoundly distressed at the number of the unemployed. He mounts upon the worker's back, as Tolstoi says, weighs him down to the ground, and then assures everyone how distressed he is at the worker's condition, and how readily he would join in supporting any scheme to better it; he would vote for a Royal Commission, or even abolish the House of Lords—in short, he would do anything but—get off the worker's back.

But the first duty of those who would alter this state of affairs, who would end the reign of Whitechoker and Goldbug, is to clear men's minds of superstition. And Secularism is doing that. It is clearing the path. That is the function of Freethought. And when the way has been cleared of the rank growths which religion nurtures, it will be easier for the car of Progress to pass along. But where men are stunted by false and mischievous beliefs, where they do really think that they will have mansions in the skies if they live in dens here, no social progress is possible. You cannot make free in body those who are still slaves in mind. And Secularists are really, therefore, the advance-guard of the army of reform.

The work of the advance-guard, however, must not be forgotten, and, above all, it must not be undone. If the democracy becomes less enthusiastic or less active in the propagation of Freethought and Secular principles, it must be because these principles have been accepted and become part of the life of the people. And that brings me to the chief danger which lies before the democratic movement—the danger of Whitechoker coming back in another disguise. Already the metamorphosis of Jesus has set in, and we see the democracy being cajoled into a fresh slavery under a fresh name. This aspect of the case was well emphasised by a writer in a recent number of the Free Review. Labor Churches, Socialist parsons, bishops delivering sermons of the "new" pattern, Christian Social Unions; these things are in the air. And they are an omen. The old trick is being found out, and new tricks must be invented. Superstition, like everything else, must accommodate itself to its environment, and in a democratic age we will have a democratic superstition. Jesus now, it seems, was, in fact, one of the "unemployed." Which is, perhaps, the truest thing in the new Christology.

It is not to be supposed, of course, that I charge all these democratic Whitechokers with hypocrisy. Doubtless many of the sermons swelling with indignation at the evils of society, do really represent the thought and the heart of the preachers. But what I do point out is, that if these preachers want to remedy the evils they denounce, they must come down out of the pulpit and work. We have tried religion for a good while now, let us change the régimen. We have had preaching and preaching and preaching for hundreds of years. Let us try good secular

* According to a recent number of the New Age, there are no less than forty-seven ministers of religion who hold shares in Messrs. George's Brewery, Bristol.

Digitized by Google

work, and leave the preaching alone. Instead, therefore, of, say, the Christian Social Union delivering courses of sermons in City churches, it really investigated the causes of the misery, and suggested what legislation or what changes would remedy it, the result would be infinitely more profitable.

But, above all things, the democracy must leave the old clothes of superstition behind. Patching the garment, even with the gaudiest of colors, is useless. "The choice," says the Rev. Walter Walsh, "of the near future is the choice between the religious and the secular ideas of life." That is so. And on the choice which the democracy makes will depend whether we fall back or go forward. The function of religion is to bolster up things as they are, and find consolation for those who are wronged; the function of Secularism is to investigate the causes of the wrong, and remove them.

FREDERICK RYAN.

INVENTION AND INJUSTICE.

BY COLONEL ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

INVENTION has filled the world with competitors not only of laborers, but of mechanics—mechanics of the highest skill. To-day the ordinary laborer is, for the most part, a cog in the wheel. He works with the tireless; he feeds the insatiable When the monster stops, the man is out of employment—out of bread. He has not saved anything. The machine that he fed was not feeding him—the invention was not for his benefit.

The other day I heard a man say that it was almost impossible for thousands of good mechanics to get employment, and that in his judgment the Government ought to furnish work for the people. A few minutes after I heard another say that he was selling a patent for cutting out clothes; that one of the machines could do the work of twenty tailors; and that only the week before he had sold two to a great house in New York, and that over forty cutters had been discharged.

On every side men are being discharged and machines are being invented to take their places. When the great factory shuts down, the workers who inhabited it and gave it life, as thoughts do the brain, go away, and it stands there like an empty skull. A few workmen, by the force of habit, gather about the closed doors and broken windows and talk about distress, the price of food, and the coming winter. They are convinced that they have not had their share of what their labor created. They feel certain that the machines inside were not their friends. They look at the mansion of the employer, and think of the place where they live. They have saved nothing—nothing but themselves. The employer seems to have enough. Even when employers fail, when they become bankrupt, they are far better off than the laborers ever were. Their worst is better than the toiler's best.

The capitalist comes forward with his specific. He tells the working man that he must be economical—and yet, under the present system, economy would only lessen wages. Under the great law of supply and demand every saving, frugal, self-denying, working man is unconsciously doing what little he can to reduce the compensation of himself and his fellows. The slaves who did not wish to run away helped fasten chains on those who did. So the saving mechanic is a certificate that wages are high enough. Does the great law demand that every worker should live on the least possible amount of bread? Is it his fate to work one day that he may get enough food to enable him to work another? Is that to be his only hope—that and death?

Capital has always claimed, and still claims, the right to combine. Manufacturers meet and determine prices, even in spite of the great law of supply and demand. Have the laborers the same right to consult and combine? The rich meet in the bank, club house, or parlor. Working men, when they combine, gather in the street. All the organised forces of society are against them. Capital has the army and the navy, the legislature, the judicial and executive departments. When the rich combine, it is for the purpose of "exchanging ideas." When the poor combine, it is a "conspiracy." If they act in concert, if they really do something, it is a "mob." If they defend themselves, it is a "treason." How is it that the rich control the departments of government? In this country the political power is equally divided among men. There are certainly more poor than rich. Why should the rich control? Why should not the laborers combine for the purpose of controlling the executive, the legislative, and judicial departments? Will they ever find how powerful they are? A cry comes from the oppressed, the hungry, from the down-trodden, from the unfortunate, from the despised, from men who despair and from women who weep. There are times when mendicants become revolutionists—when a rag becomes a banner, under which the noblest and the bravest battle for the right.

How are we to settle the unequal contest between man and machine? Will the machines finally go into partnership with the laborer? Can these forces of nature be controlled for the benefit of her suffering children? Will extravagance keep pace with ingenuity? Will the workmen become intelligent enough and strong enough to become the owners of machines? Will these giants, these Titans, shorten or lengthen the hours of labor? Will they give leisure for the industrious, or will they make the rich richer, and the poor poorer? Is man involved in the "general scheme" of things? Is there no pity, no mercy? Can man become intelligent enough to be generous, to be just; or does the same law or fact control him that controls the animal or vegetable world? The great oak steals the sunlight from the small trees, the strong animals devour the weak—everything at the mercy of beak, and claw, and hoof, and tooth—of hand and club, of brain and greed—inequality, injustice, everywhere. The poor horse standing in the street with his dray, overworked, overwhipped, and underfed, when he sees other horses groomed like mirrors, glittering with gold and silver, scorning with proud feet the very earth, probably indulges in the usual socialistic reflections and this same horse, worn out and old, deserted by his master, turned into the dusty road, leans his head on the topmost rail, looks at donkeys in a field of clover and feels like a Nihilist.

In the days of cannibalism the strong devoured the weak—actually ate their flesh. In spite of all the laws that man has made, in spite of all advances in science, the strong, the heartless, still live on the weak, the unfortunate and the foolish. True, they do not eat their flesh or drink their blood, but they live on their labor, on their self-denial, their weariness and want. The poor man who deforms himself by toil, who labors for wife and children through all his anxious, barren, wasted life—who goes to the grave without ever having one luxury—has been the food of others. He has been devoured by his fellow men. The poor woman living in the bare and lonely room, cheerless and fireless, sewing night and day to keep starvation from a child, is slowly being eaten by her fellow men. When I take into consideration the agony of civilised life—the failures, the anxieties, the tears, the withered hopes, the bitter realities, the hunger, the crime, the humiliation, the shame—I am almost forced to say that cannibalism, after all, is the most merciful form in which man has ever lived upon his fellow man.

It is impossible for a man with a good heart to be satisfied with the world as it now is. No man can truly enjoy even what he earns—what he knows to be his own—knowing that millions of his fellow men are in misery and want. When we think of the famished we feel that it is almost heartless to eat. To meet the ragged and shivering makes one almost ashamed to be well dressed and warm—one feels as though his heart was as cold as their bodies.

In a world filled with millions and millions of acres of land waiting to be tilled, where one man can raise the food for hundreds, millions are on the edge of famine. Who can comprehend the stupidity at the bottom of this truth?

Is there to be no change?

Are the "laws of supply and demand," invention and science, monopoly and competition, capital and legislation, always to be the enemies of those who toil? Will the workers always be ignorant enough and stupid enough to gives their earnings for the useless? Will they support millions of soldiers to kill the sons of other working men? Will they always build temples and live in huts and dens themselves? Will they for ever allow parasites and vampires to live upon their blood? Will they remain the slaves of the beggars they support? Will honest men stop taking off their hats to successful fraud? Will industry, in the presence of crowned idleness, for ever fall upon its knees? Will they understand that beggars cannot be generous, and that every healthy man must earn the right to live? Will they finally say that the man who has had equal privileges with all others has no right to complain, or will they follow the example that has been set by their oppressors? Will they learn that force, to succeed, must have thought behind it, and that anything done in order that it may endure, must rest upon the cornerstone of justice?—Twentieth Century.

Digitized by Google

CHRISTIANITY AND HONESTY.

If any Freethinker should regard Christianity as an association for the promotion of dishonesty, he need not enlarge upon the doctrines of salvation by faith, "Jesus paid it all," or the death-bed repentance of sinners. He can refer to the palpable fact that Christians never act up to their pretended beliefs, and that the beliefs themselves are very often, indeed, not held honestly. The Non-Sectarian of St. Louis, in its June number, says:—

> "It is hardly an exaggeration to say that not one-half of those who profess a belief in the Apostles' Creed, and renew this profession at every religious service which they attend, really believe that Jesus rose from the dead, or that he was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, or in the resurrection of the body. Most thinking men of all denominations have long ago ceased to believe in these statements of the creed. There is no question as to what these statements meant to those who promulgated this creed—they used plain language to state that which they themselves believed, and which they intended to demand of others as a pre-requisite to church membership, and as a declaration of principles. To put any other meaning into them, or to try to explain away their literalness, is a species of literary juggling and legerdemain which would not be tolerated elsewhere."

Now, could this be the case if Christianity really encouraged intellectual honesty in its members? It encourages, on the contrary, the profession of what is not believed, and thus undermines truth and honesty. Children are taught in the school to say they believe what they cannot believe, and their whole life is one organised hypocrisy, because to say what they really think will outrage respectability.

A bonâ fide Christian, one who really believes that God was born of a virgin in Palestine, and that he died to save us after we are dead from eternal damnation for sins committed before we were born, is as rare as the phœnix which St. Clement cites as a type of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. Christianity has only a Sunday existence, and even on Sunday infidelity may be, and is, preached from the pulpit, only it must be veiled in conventional phraseology. When will Christians be honest?

UNCLE BENJAMIN.

A Dangerous Book.

In Germany, some malcontents are circulating scriptural texts, such as the following:—

"It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence princes."—Psalm cxviii. 9.

"Put ye not confidence in a ruler."—Micah vii. 5.

"Put not your trust in princes."—Psalm cxlvi. 3.

"Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child."—Eccles. x. 16.

"That which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."—Luke xvi. 15.

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you."—James v. 1.

The purpose of the malcontents is to show that, if all anti-revolutionary literature is prohibited, the Emperor will have to interdict the Bible.

THE BIBLE.—A true revelation, proceeding from a just and good God, and necessary to all mankind, ought to be clear enough to be understood by all the human race. But will the revelation, upon which Judaism and Christianity are founded, bear the test of this criterion? The elements of Euclid are intelligible to all who endeavor to understand them. This work excites no dispute among geometricians. Is it so with the Bible? and do its revealed truths occasion no disputes among divines?—M. Boulanger, "Christianity Unveiled," p. 28.

ASINITY.

GIORDANO BRUNO'S Cabala del Cavallo Pegaseo is like Erasmus's Praise of Folly, a treatise and satire on the Asinity, and especially the asinine piety of his day. The praises of the asinine goddess are sung in a sonnet, of which Mr. Owen, in his Skeptics of the Italian Renaissance, gives the following translation:—

O Sainted Asinity. Ignorance most holy!
Stupidity most sacred! Devotion most profound
Thou alone can'st make us learned, good and sound,
While human thought and study are now of value only.
Little availeth the search that men so fully Employ by every art or science Speration,
Little availeth their sky ward contemplation
To gain the heavenly seat which is thy object solely.

What boots them, ye curious, your persistent exploration?
The wish to learn the secret of nature's laws and ways,
If the stars be water, earth, or fiery exhalation?
Holy Asinity despises wisdom's rays.
Folded hands and knees form her sole occupation,
Expecting from Providence the luck of better days;
All passes, nothing stays
Save fruition of that eternal peace,
Which God will give her after her decease.

ACID DROPS.

PRAYERS are seldom sensible, but there was a very good one used in Parliament in Oliver Cromwell's time—namely, that those who had zeal might have wisdom, and that those who had wisdom might have zeal.

What a contrast to this old prayer is the new one drawn up by the Bishop of Ripon for use during the present elections. "Grant us rectitude and prudence"—"banish from us prejudice and partiality"—and so forth, is all very pretty, but it is so general as to be utterly meaningless. It would be perfectly true, if you were asked a man's address, to say he lived in the universe, but it would not enable anyone to find him.

No doubt the Bishop of Ripon really wants to see a thumping Tory majority; one pledged to uphold the House Lords and especially the Bench of Bishops. The Rev. H. J. Wilkins, vicar of St. Jude's, Bristol, is honest enough to say that "the Church has become a huge political agency for the Tory party." This is true enough, except for one word. The Church has not become a Tory agent; it was never anything else.

During the Shahzada's visit to Liverpool he was entertained at a lunch in the Town Hall, and grace was said by a Mohammedan official, who recited a verse from the Koran. This excited the indignation of some Christian sky-pilots, who cannot bear to see a poacher upon their preserves. One of them says it "calls for a solemn protest on the part of all who are concerned for the honor of their Lord Jesus Christ." But why not let Jesus Christ look after his own honor? On the Christian theory he is well able to take care of himself.

This incensed sky-pilot went on to refer to the Armenian atrocities, which he said were perpetrated on Mohammed's express commands. But is not this a Christian calumny? We invite the Rev. William Hutton to indicate the text in the Koran upon which he relies in making this terrible statement. And if he finds it, which we do not believe he can, we will then ask him to compare it with the Bible God's express command for the extermination of Canaanitish men and the outrage of Canaanitish women.

We commented last week on a bad accident to a train full of pilgrims in Holland. Since then a worse accident of the same kind has occurred in America. Two large excursion trains were proceeding from Richmond, Windsor Mills, and Sherbrooke townships, in the east of Quebec province, crowded with pilgrims for the shrine of St. Anne de Beaupré. One of the trains dashed into the rear of the other, demolishing two coaches and frightfully mangling their occupants. Many persons were killed, including the three priests in charge of the pilgrimage. What an awful satire on the superstition of these excursionists! Several of them, doubtless, were going to the shrine of St. Anne for the benefit of their health, hoping to be cured by faith; and some of them died sooner than they would have done if they had stayed at home. Even the priests who were running the pilgrimage were smashed up. St. Anne could not help them in their extremity. Faith will remove mountains, but it will not save a man in a railway accident. Sceptics and believers fare exactly alike—"For one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth so dieth the other."

Digitized by Google

Methodism does not seem to be too flourishing. Mr. Champness, of the Joyful News Mission, has had to dismiss sixty of his evangelists. This is more than half of the total number. Methodism wants—at least, that is the opinion of the Methodist Times—a new outpouring of the Holy Spirit. They are praying for it to come down at the Plymouth Conference. But we guess they'll have to wait the Holy Ghost's convenience.

Hugh Price Hughes calls the Methodists to arms. Rome and the Church of England are both making desperate efforts to strengthen themselves. "The fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty are attacked!" exclaims the author of The Atheist Shoemaker. Very likely. They always have been. Mr. Hughes and his friends help to keep up the laws against Secularism. They only cry out when their own privileges are endangered. On the whole, we should like to see them suffer a little. It would give them a "fellow feeling" with the down-trodden Freethinkers.

The Two Worlds draws a subtle distinction. It says: "True, there might be an Atheistic Spiritist, but not an Atheistic Spiritualist." Be this as it may, we have read more than once of spirits, or their mediums, who have shelved difficult questions by saying they have roamed through the universe without coming into any contact with a god.

Something like a miracle is reported in a Madras paper. A girl of ten, at Madura, is said to have refused alms to a mendicant, who thereupon looked at her steadfastly and went away. As soon as he disappeared, pebbles, cotton, thread, straw, grain, and other objects began oozing out of her eyelids every fifteen or twenty minutes. These are the sort of tales that are spread by the mendicants.

The "Song of Songs," which is not Solomon's, and which Grotius called an indecent poem, is defended by the Rev. Dr. W. E. Griffis in the columns of the Northern Christian Advocate, as fit for public as well as private perusal. He says: "There is not in the whole poem of five thousand words one impure thought or evil suggestion, unless it be at the one point from the polygamist king who has disobeyed his God and the law of Israel." Now if Solomon knew of the law of Israel, as we have it, which is very doubtful, it is certain he did not disobey it by polygamy, or by seeking more concubines, for these practises were carried on by all God's favorites, and there is nothing in the Bible to condemn them. God himself is spoken of as having two sisters—Aholah and Aholibah—at the same time, who bore sons to him, and such an idea would hardly have been used even in metaphor had it been reprobated.

One would think by the flourish of trumpets over the Christian Endeavors, etc., that the old faith was triumphant all along the line, and that infidelity is rapidly becoming unknown. Those who look behind the circus methods of the churches know there never was a time when they had to rely more on adventitious aids to maintain their position. The Rev. Dr. Scot Hershey, of Boston, says that Ingersoll in America counts two millions of intelligent young men among his followers, and in every Christian country the old faith is being rapidly undermined.

Henry A. Lush, a Great Northern Railway guard, who committed suicide in his brake, left a letter to his wife in which he expressed a hope to meet her in heaven.

A few months ago Mr. Foote lectured to a large audience at Sunderland on the question "Did Jesus Christ Ever Live?" Several friends of a body calling itself the Anti-Infidel League were present, and their behavior was simply scandalous. Although they knew that discussion would be allowed after the lecture, they hooted, hissed, yelled, and otherwise indulged in the most brutal interruptions. Since then an Anti-Infidel Leaguer, named F. W. Birkett, has written what he considers an answer to Mr. Foote. A copy of this pamphlet has been sent to us, and we have read it through. It is the work of a very green hand. Words are put into Mr. Foote's mouth which he never used, and the replies to what he did say—or, more often, what he was supposed to say—betray a most extensive ignorance of the subject. With respect to the Josephus passage, for instance, Mr. Birkett does not appear to have heard that anyone but Mr. Foote ever regarded it as a forgery, whereas it is stigmatised as such by an overwhelming majority of Christian scholars. The testimony in its favor quoted from Renan is not given accurately. It may be taken honestly from some English translation, but it is not what Renan says in the French original. We will leave Mr. Birkett at this point. He will see how little he understands the question when Mr. Foote publishes the substance of that lecture in a separate form.

An acute writer says: "Every year of his life God is obliged to murder between sixty and seventy millions of human beings in order to keep down the surplus population of mankind." Besides the slaughter, large numbers are broken down in the struggle for life. According to the New York Herald, the American doctors say that paresis, or paralysis of mind and body is alarmingly on the increase in the big cities, owing to the worries incident to the increasing struggle for existence. New York is a hot-bed of the disease, which a century ago was unknown, even if it did exist. Civilisation is not without its drawbacks.

The Catholic League of South London sent the following question to Parliamentary candidates: "If returned to Parliament, will you do all in your power to secure that further and adequate financial aid from rates and taxes shall be granted by Parliament to all efficient Roman Catholic schools in England and Wales?" Twenty-four candidates had the wickedness or folly to reply to this question in the affirmative.

England is a free country. Of course everybody knows that. But the Secularists are robbed by law of their natural rights of property, while all religious establishments are subventioned by the State; and now the religionists are clamoring for public money to maintain their schools. What a peculiar sort of freedom it is, to be sure!

We regret that Mr. Storey has lost his seat for Sunderland. Mr. Gourley, however, retains his; and it was Mr. Gourley who took up the "Religious Prosecutions Abolition Bill" during Mr. Storey's absence from Parliament through illness.

The Rev. W. W. Howard has removed to Leek, and the local Times gives him a two-column introduction to the inhabitants. Mr. Howard tells in his own way why the projected debate on the Soul, between himself and Mr. Foote, did not come off at Liverpool. "He is ready," says Mr. Howard, "to criticise my position, but he will not bring forward his own." This is—well, not accurate. Mr. Foote drew up a proposition which he would maintain in debate, as against Mr. Howard's; but the reverend gentleman wanted to draw up his own proposition and edit Mr. Foote's. Hence these tears.

In the current number of Folk-Lore it is mentioned that, in 1892, a child in Suffolk scalded itself with soup and died, though a "wise woman," one Mrs. Brundish, was sent for "to charm the fire out of her." The charm consisted in the repetition of these words:—

> There were two angels came from the north,
> One brought fire, the other brought frost.
> Come out fire, go in frost.
> Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

A correspondent of the Rangoon Times says there are out there two distinct classes of Christians, who look on each other as enemies. They are the well to do, who style themselves "Caste Christians," and the poor, who are known as "Non-Caste Christians." The ministers have to pander to the Caste Christians, for it is from them they derive these emoluments.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in a sermon last Sunday, said that he sometimes got tired, and gloomy, and vexed; and at times anger or irritation would come upon him; but he kept an open book of pleasant poems on the table, of which he would read a few lines, and the irritation would melt away. We dare say this is a very good remedy. But how is it that the Archbishop finds it in a book of pleasant poems instead of in the Bible? Does poetry do as well, or better?

New York was visited by a terrible cyclone on Saturday night, July 13, and the outskirts of the city suffered severely. But the worst devastation was wrought at Cherry Hill, about ten miles distant. Several persons were killed by "Providence," and scores of buildings were blown down. One of these, a wooden church, was caught by the wind and turned completely round. Perhaps "Providence" will send another cyclone to turn it round again; otherwise the worshippers will have to say, like the Irishman, that the front of their church is at the back.

Mr. Keir Hardie has been defeated at West Ham. He went about the country fighting the Liberals and helping the Tories, and the Tories have repaid him by taking away his seat. Mr. Hardie is evidently a poor hand at a bargain. He will now be able to devote more time to preaching Jesus—unless he finds out what he ought to have discovered long ago, that Christianity is the greatest enemy of real progress.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. John Page Hopps says of the Unitarians, in the Coming Day, "Dozens of Unitarian chapels are not churches at all, but churchyards dull and dead." He ought to know, for he has been among them the major portion of his life.

Coleridge, who had been a Unitarian himself, said that Unitarians were not entitled to the designation of the term Christian. This reminds us of a story of a gentleman of that persuasion who was introduced one day to a Churchman of the stricter sort, who inquired: "Did you say you were a Unitarian? Ah! well, then, I can recognise you as a gentleman, but not as a fellow Christian." "Oh, never mind about that," was the breezy reply; "I can recognise you as a fellow Christian, but not as a gentleman!"

In the Sunday Companion the Rev. G. P. Merrick, chaplain of Holloway Gaol, tells of the murderer, Neil Cream, who, it was proved, murdered in cold blood no fewer than thirty-five women. According to Mr. Merrick, he was one of the most proficient Bible students in the gaol, and could recite from memory almost half the Bible.

The Daily News, writing of Coleridge and those who rake up all the old sins of authors, says these latter "establish the Pagan conception of retribution, and make punishment eternal." This is a Christian calumny on Paganism. It was Christianity and not Paganism which taught eternal punishment, and it taught it for fifteen hundred years, till humanity got ashamed of the doctrine which the Daily News now stigmatises as Pagan.

Referring to the "Woman's Bible," now in course of preparation by Elizabeth Cady Stanton and others, the Catholic Union and Times speaks of Mrs. Stanton as "the venerable maiden"! Is it possible that Father Cronin is so far behind the times that he does not know that Elizabeth Cady Stanton is a wife, and the mother of many children, some of them already known to fame? Or does he think that she is a modern "Mother of God" unaffected by the vicissitudes of maternity? In either case Father Cronin should come down into this century.—Truthseeker.

A "Bible Student" asks in the New York Sun why is it that Matthew and John, actual eye-witnesses according to Luke, avoid all mention of the ascension. "Dese sorter questions," said the colored preacher, "would upset any system of theology."

The Rev. J. J. Porter is a Baptist preacher. He is also the editor of the Helper, published in Jerseyville, Ill., and professes to be eager for a debate with "any living infidel scholar [dead ones being debarred] as to the correctness of the Bible." Here is a sample of what the Rev. Mr. Porter can do: "THOMAS PAINE. In 1792 he [Paine] went to Paris to engage in constitution-making with Condorcet. Soon he was imprisoned by Robespierre, and during the eleven months of his imprisonment he wrote the Age of Reason. He showed it to Dr. Franklin, who returned it, advising Paine never to publish it, but burn it up before it was seen by any other person, and thus he would save himself a great deal of repentance and mortification." The facts, as recorded by Mr. Paine himself, are that the first part of the Age of Reason was written in 1793, being completed in December of that year, six hours before the author's arrest took place. Franklin had then been dead about three years. I do not believe that the Rev. Mr. Porter desires to debate with Infidels on the "correctness" of anything. What he wants is a lying match.—Truthseeker.

The Rev. Mr. Easton, who claims to speak with knowledge because he has been a missionary in Persia, says: "All evidence goes to show that emancipated woman, so far from being a purifying and refining element in society, is herself an incarnate demon with nothing womanly in her but the name, a combination of Messalina and Lady Macbeth." Possibly Mr. Easton considers the Persian method of keeping women subdued and secluded preferable as it is more in accordance with the revealed word of God.

The refusal of the Rev. Johnson Myers, of Immanuel Baptist Church, Chicago, to baptise a colored applicant for membership, has made some talk among the colored population, and one of the leading black ministers, the Rev. Mr. Townsend, has retorted that he would rather take his portion in hell than go to heaven to meet such white folks as the Rev. J. Myers.

The Rev. J. I. Whitty, of Ramsgate, claims to have started Palestine Exploration, and puts his claims in verse as under:

> Since he who scribes—Johannes Irwine Whitty
> Explored Jerusalem, the Holy City,
> Have two and thirty age-worn years fled by—
> The present date below, marked Anno Domini.

Mr. Whitty may take the cake for his discoveries; he will hardly do so for his verses.

Providence has much regard for locusts, and in East Africa swarms of them eat up all the provender. A letter from the German mission there says: "Many people die of hunger. In a place near Mpwapwa, forty-six out of fifty inhabitants died of famine. Two weeks ago I was in a village where nine grown-up people out of seventeen had died of hunger in a single week. Hunger is the cry throughout the land."

During divine service a church at Calastarra, in Murcia, was struck by lightning. A child was killed, eight other persons were injured, and the building was set on fire. A very peculiar case of "Providence."

The Rev. W. Earle, a High Church clergyman, recently wrote a book in which he spoke harshly of dissenters. The Greenock Telegraph having criticised his view, Mr. Earle wrote to the editor: "Luther and Knox and Wesley, and all men like them, who opened the door for the sheep to leave the fold, must now have a hot corner. I could not believe that such incarnate demons are in heaven. All who oppose my book are enemies to the happiness of Christendom. Woe betide the papers which go against my book. In doing so they are going against God." This man of God evidently has the good old spirit of religion. But Luther, Knox, and Wesley also had a touch of the same complaint. They were not, therefore, incarnate demons. "Criticise me and you criticise God," is the common religious thought. Theists are obliged to make God such another as themselves. They must give God their own thoughts, having no other wherewith to endow him.

Mr. H. M. Stanley, the gentleman who went through Africa in such a Christian fashion, says it is written that "the whole earth shall know the Lord." We presume this means that Stanley was the Lord's advance agent. If so, the poor niggers must look out when the boss appears.

The South Wales Times devotes an article to "Secular Education and Atheism." It prophecies that if Board schools go on, "in two or, at the most, three generations, religion will be dead in the working classes of this country, and they will have sunk into Atheism." Horrible! most horrible! Sunday-schools, it seems, are inadequate to cope with the evil, wherefore the rate and taxpayer must be plundered for the support of denominational schools.

Mr. J. Kenyon, the Conservative candidate for Bury, has a funny idea of the duties of Atheists. He is reported as saying that though they cared nothing for religion, yet they ought to send their children to some denominational school to give them religious education. Mr. Kenyon apparently considers that Atheists give up religion because it is a good thing.

The New York Independent, a journal something like our Christian World, is flippant over the Woman's Bible. It says, "Why not? We have a Breeches Bible."

A. W. Malcolmson writes in the Vegetarian Messenger on "Biblical Difficulties Overcome." How naive he is may be judged from his saying, "It is remarkable that in the only model prayer Our Lord left us, he taught us to say, 'Give us this day our daily bread.' Not our daily flesh or meat." He is unaware that "bread" here is generic like "meat." He goes on to say that, at the Last Supper, "he took bread and wine, vegetable products." Is he not aware that the Passover, which Jesus celebrated, included lamb? He does not notice that "Our Lord" partook also of fish, and said "Rise Peter, kill and eat."

When the people of Neufchâtel opposed Frederick the Great's interference in favor of a pastor of the Swiss Church who denied the eternity of future punishment, "Eh bien!" said the king, "si ces messieurs de Neufchâtel veulent être damnés à toute eternité, ainsi soit il." If these Neufchâtel people wish to be damned to all eternity, so be it. The gentlemen, it seems, did not profess to think the doctrine of universal salvation dangerous for themselves, but were fearful of its effect upon "their wives and servants."

James I. said: "No bishop, no king." He might have added: No cross, no crown. The king owned the bodies of men; the priests, the souls. One lived on taxes collected by force, the other on alms collected by fear—both robbers, both beggars. These robbers and these beggars controlled two worlds. The king made laws, the priest made creeds. Both obtained their authority from God, both were the agents of the infinite. With bowed backs the people carried the burdens of one, and with wonder's open mouth received the dogmas of the other. If the people aspired to be free, they were crushed by the king, and every priest was a Herod, who slaughtered the children of the brain. The king ruled by force, the priest by fear, and both by both.—Ingersoll.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, July 21, Milton Hall, Hawley-Crescent, Kentish Town: 7.30, "Secularism and the New Parliament."

July 28, Milton Hall.

August 4, Newcastle; 11, 18, and 25, St. James's Hall, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

J. G. Dobson.—Thanks. See paragraph.

J. T.—Isis Very Much Unveiled is published at the office of the Westminster Gazette, price one shilling.

W. G.—The Melbourne Harbinger of Light says that Mrs. Mabel Besant Scott, only daughter of Mrs. Annie Besant, was baptised into the Roman Catholic Church on May 1. Requiescat in pace.

G. W. B.—We have always a large quantity of such copy on hand, and cannot guarantee an early insertion.

W. W. Roberts.—Your subscription is handed to our publisher, R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C., to whom please send direct in future.

K. O. M. (Amsterdam).—James ii. 20 is evidently a contradiction to Galatians ii. 16. How otherwise can it be explained? Thanks for De Dageraad, and prosperity to Freethought in Holland.

J. Keast.—Thanks for the trouble you have taken. See paragraph. Bristol shall be attended to as soon as Mr. Foote gets his Lecture-Scheme in working order.

A Trinitarian (Nottingham).—Your letter is too long for its importance. You ask "Is God responsible for his acts?" but you do not define "responsible." Hadn't you better prove that there is a god first?

J. Seddons.—Pleased to hear that the Manchester excursion was a success. These social gatherings tend to cement our party.

E. M. Vance, 28 Stonecutter-street, will be glad to hear from any friends in the West-end who can distribute or exhibit bills of Mr. Foote's three Sunday evening lectures at St. James's Hall; also from friends who can undertake to assist in the sale of tickets.

H. Cosgrove.—Thanks, but Mr. Foote has not time to write letters in provincial papers. It is quite true that the Rev. W. W. Howard has held public debates with Messrs. Foote, Watts, and Symes; but it was very many years ago. Of course Mr. Foote is quite ready to debate with Mr. Howard on reasonable conditions. And the first condition is absolute equality. Christians must abandon their old ideas of privilege. They used to burn Freethinkers; now they assume airs of superiority, and expect us to be thankful for anything they concede to us. But we want no concessions. We simply want justice and fairplay.

E. Shedley.—(1) Alleged facts must be substantiated before anyone can be called upon to explain them. Much of the phenomena of hypnotism, in public performances, is deception, and often collusion. No hypnotic patient can tell anything but what is in his own mind or what is suggested to him. (2) We do not know what debates of Mrs. Besant's are now in print. (3) Mr. Foote objects to wearing either ticket—"Individualist" or "Socialist." His view is that society and the individual have their rights and their provinces. But this is not the place to discuss the matter.

H. Mellor.—Parallels to the sayings of Jesus Christ are not in one book, but in many books. Jewish parallels are given in the famous Quarterly Review article by Deutsch, which has been reprinted in his "Remains."

C. G. Quinton.—Very sorry to hear of the continued rowdyism in Victoria Park. See a paragraph in "Sugar Plums." If it is absolutely necessary, Mr. Foote will come down and see whether a meeting cannot be held in spite of the blackguards.

Shareholder.—The National Secular Hall Society still occupies the Hall of Science, though the mortgagee has more than once "demanded" possession. The Society's solicitors are now acting, under the Chairman's instructions, and the result will probably be announced in next week's Freethinker. Of course it is ridiculous to expect a detailed statement of delicate business week by week. This paper is read by enemies as well as by friends.

A. Jackson.—It is a waste of time to reply to such a driveller. On one page he boasts of the downfall of Secularism, and on the next inquires whether his own paper is to live or die. With respect to your own query, the figures are an absurdity. Mr. Bradlaugh was never able to raise large sums of money for Secular halls. The sum he originally raised, twenty-six years ago, for the Hall of Science, is considerably less than has been raised for the same object since his death. It will be news to old members of the N.S.S. that "in Mr. Bradlaugh's time" the Society "could raise its thousands of pounds for special objects." Bible-bangers are never strong in arithmetic.

Papers Received.—Rangoon Times—De Dageraad—Der Arme Teufel—Secular Thought—Freidenker—Fur Unsere Jugund—Western Mail—Liverpool Post—Progressive Thinker—Light—Two Worlds—Harbinger of Light—New York Sun—Clarion—Liberator—Truthseeker—Post—Literary Digest—Isle of Man Times—Freedom—Jerusalem Star—Glasgow Evening News—Sunderland Echo—Good Templar's Watchword—Philosophical Journal.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor be marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Mr. Foote has not been lecturing for some weeks. This evening (July 21) he lectures at Milton Hall on "Secularism and the New Parliament." North London Freethinkers should do their best, in spite of the phenomenal weather, to secure him a large audience. Mr. Foote also lectures at Milton Hall on the following Sunday; on the next Sunday he opens a new hall taken by the Newcastle Branch, and then he returns to London for his three Sunday evening lectures at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, of which full particulars will be given in our next issue.

Mr. S. P. Putnam lectured at Bristol on Sunday. Owing to the wonderful weather, which makes it a burden to sit indoors, and perhaps still more to the Parliamentary elections, his audiences were not so large as they should have been; but those who did attend were delighted. We hope the Birmingham friends will rally in strong force at Mr. Putnam's lectures to-day (July 21). The battle of the elections is over, and people should now be free to listen to wit and common sense.

Providence favored the L.S.F. excursion to Clacton-on-Sea with delightful weather, and when there the saints thoroughly enjoyed themselves roaming or boating along the shore, taking a sea-trip in the "Koh-i-noor," or driving into the country. Mr. and Mrs. Foote, Mr. and Mrs. Watts, Mr. Parris, Mr. Moss, Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Forder, Mr. Truelove, and other well-known friends, were present and joined the common tea at Rigg's Retreat. In consequence of the beauty of the weather, the President said there would be no speaking, and briefly expressed a hope that there would be even better gatherings in succeeding years.

Mr. Joseph Symes has fought bravely against enemies and adverse circumstances at Melbourne, though we regret that he seems to be getting the worst of it at present. He is being sued for libel by one of the men who jockeyed him out of the hall he built for Freethought purposes, and at a certain stage of the proceedings he was charged with contempt of court on account of some remarks in the Liberator. Mr. Symes pleaded his own case, and denied that he meant to cast any slur upon the court; nevertheless the judge sentenced him to fourteen days' imprisonment.

Mr. Symes has apparently more than one man can do out at Melbourne. Bigotry seems as rampant there as it is here, and even more so. Mr. Symes brought on action for assault, and went into the box as a witness; whereupon he was asked a number of ridiculous and insulting questions of the "Where do you expect to go to?" order. It is scandalous that such proceedings should be tolerated in a court of justice. Our old colleague would be well-advised, in our opinion, if he refused to answer argumentative and hypothetical questions, which are only put for the purpose of raising a prejudice against him, and not at all for the purpose of eliciting relevant information.

Just as we are going to press we receive the Liberator for June 8, in which we note that Mr. Symes has won in the libel case, the jury returning a verdict of "Not Guilty." This prosecution had been hanging over Mr. Symes for many months, and he must feel relieved at its termination.

From the same number of the Liberator we see that the Secularists in Sydney are in trouble over their hall.

Digitized by Google

The late lessee left them with a large arrear of rent, and a Mr. Blake, who bought one of their promissory notes, has moved for a public auction. It is said that the Christians are trying to get the place into their hands. Altogether it is a grave question whether Secularists should take the risks and responsibilities of property until they can hold it in trust under the full protection of the law.

Mr. Robert Forder lectures in Victoria Park this morning (July 21), and we hope the platform will be well supported by local Freethinkers. This open-air station has lately been the scene of much Christian ruffianism; indeed, the Branch has appealed to Mr. Foote, who may have to intervene personally. It will never do to let our meetings be stopped by blackguards who disgrace the name of Christianity.

There is a revival of interest in Spinoza in Holland. A new translation of his Ethics, by Dr. Gorter, has appeared, and a second translation has been announced. In Germany, also, Spinoza becomes more and more known, studied, and appreciated.

Mr. J. E. Dobson heckled the Liberal candidate, Mr. Samuel, at Stockton-on-Tees, on the Blasphemy Laws. Mr. Samuel replied, before a meeting of two thousand people, that he was in favor of the fullest extension of religious liberty, that he considered Freethinkers should be as free as any other body to disseminate their opinions, and that he would support Liberty of Bequest and Repeal of the Blasphemy Laws.

We know not what denomination the Rev. J. Howarth, of Sunderland, belongs to, but he certainly deserves a Sugar Plum for the way in which he supported Mr. Storey for bringing in a Bill to repeal the Blasphemy Laws. Mr. Howarth said he demanded that a man should be regarded as much a citizen, though he was an Atheist, as a man who was a Christian man and a Christian minister. This statement was received with much applause.

The Bristol Branch of the N.S.S. sent our "Questions for Parliamentary Candidates" to the candidates for the North and South divisions of their city. Mr. Lewis Fry replied that he was "in favor of complete civil and religious liberty," though he appears to think that people ought to be punished if they "give reasonable grounds of offence to the prevailing religious opinion of the country," which stultifies his first declaration. Mr. Charles Townsend replied that the "Blasphemy Laws ought to be repealed at once." Mr. F. S. Hill's reply was evasive. He was in favor of religious liberty (of course!), but "to give complete and careful answer to your questions would entail an amount of time and research which you will easily understand I cannot now give."

Mr. W. H. Lawless, one of the Liberal candidates at Bristol, replying to a local Secularist, wrote: "I am distinctly opposed to any laws inflicting disabilities upon citizens because of religious or non-religious opinions." Sir Michael Hicks Beach, the well-known Tory, wrote: "The Blasphemy Laws are doubtless old-fashioned in form and detail; but I think it necessary that offensive or indecent attacks on the faith of the great majority of the people should be liable to punishment; and therefore I am opposed to their repeal, unless something of that kind could be substituted in their place." That is, Sir Michael will not help to destroy the present stick with which Christians beat Freethinkers, unless he is certain of having in its place another stick, not perhaps so heavy, but good enough for the purpose. "Offensive" and "indecent" are what Bentham called question-begging epithets. Even "attacks" is a term of the same description. Criticism and discussion are christened "attacks," then they are called "offensive attacks," then "indecent attacks," and by that time the poor critic has become a monster deserving twelve months' imprisonment.

The annual picnic of the Failsworth Secular Sunday-school, which was arranged for July 20, has, in consequence of the election taking place on that day, been postponed to the following Saturday, July 27. The excursion goes to Hebden Bridge, the times of trains, etc., being the same as already arranged.

On Sunday last about forty members and friends of the Manchester Branch journeyed to Chester in a saloon carriage, where, after a pleasant run of seventy-five minutes they arrived, and were met at the station by two local Freethinkers and conducted round the walls of the city. In the afternoon a number of friends from Liverpool arrived, and the whole party proceeded up the river in a special barge to Eaton. The scenery was delightful, and the sail enjoyed by everyone. Before leaving Eaton a photograph group of the party was taken.

The July Monist opens with a thoughtful paper by Professor Joseph Le Conte on "The Theory of Evolution and Social Progress." His idea is that as organic evolution differs from mere chemical evolution, taking up new factors, so human evolution or social progress involves new factors to those of organical evolution. "Organic evolution strives only for the survival of the fittest. Social progress strives to make as many as possible fit to survive. In organic evolution the weak, the sick, the helpless, the old, the unfit in any way, perish, and ought to perish, because this is the only means of strengthening the blood or physical nature of the species. In social progress, on the contrary, the weak, the sick, the helpless, the old, the unfit in any way, are sustained, and ought to be sustained, because sympathy, pity, love, strengthens the spirit, the moral nature of man, the distinctive human nature. In a word, in organic evolution war is the great element of advance; in rational evolution, peace." Professor Le Conte admits that the moral nature is conditioned by the physical nature, but thinks the problem of their claims, and of how to obey the law of love and mutual help, without weakening the blood of the race by inheritance, can be solved by a rational education, physical, mental, and moral.

Leslie Stephen helps to explain how his brother, Sir James Fitzjames Stephen became a Freethinker, having been brought up in Evangelical Puritanism. He was one of those few who have sought to realise hell, and the fewer still who have thought of it as for themselves. "He imagined the whole world transformed into a globe of iron, white hot, with a place in the middle made to fit him so closely that he could not even wink. The globe was split like an orange; he was thrust by an angel into his place, immortal, inconsumable, and capable of infinite suffering; and then the two halves were closed, and he left in hideous isolation to suffer eternal torments.

Fitzjames's elder brother gave the first blow to this ghastly creed, and then Paine's Age of Reason shook him further. Defending Rowland Williams in the famous Essays and Reviews case, compelled a further examination of orthodoxy, and he came at length to think that religion would not survive theology, but that morality would survive religion.

Mr. George Meredith made a speech for the first time in his life on Saturday evening. It was at the dinner of the Omar Khayyám Club. "While coffee was being served," says the Daily Chronicle, "the beautiful face of the greatest of living novelists was observed in the doorway, and all the members rose to their feet and welcomed him with the greatest enthusiasm." Mr. Edward Clodd, the president, greeted Mr. Meredith on behalf of the Club, which calls itself after the great Persian poet so exquisitely rendered into English by the late Edward Fitzgerald. Omar Khayyám was a Freethinker as well as a poet. "Your large infidel," Tennyson called him, in a dedication to Fitzgerald.

Some of the American Unitarians are far more liberal than their English co-religionists. At New York, some time ago, they invited Colonel Ingersoll to address them, and we see from the Boston Investigator that Mr. J. E. Remsburg has been invited by the Rev. Mr. Simmons, pastor of the first Unitarian Church of Minneapolis, to occupy his pulpit. It would be cruel if Mr. Remsburg gave his popular lecture on "The False Claims of the Christian Church."

The Universalists of America are simply those who disbelieve in eternal punishment, and offer treacle without brimstone. They have churches of their own, but all Unitarians, and many others, are practically Universalists. The late Stephen Pearl Andrews once said to them a very good thing. He observed: "You Universalists have squatted on the biggest word in the English language. Now," said he, "the world is beginning to want that big word, and you Universalists must either improve the property or move off the premises."

The Boston Investigator, under the heading "What We See," has the following: "That the National Secular Society's Annual Conference in England was a great success; that Messrs. Foote, Watts, Putnam, Moss, Cohen, Heaford, and Gilmour were in fine form at the evening meeting, and addressed a large and enthusiastic gathering."

The Two Worlds says that Spiritualists, as well as Secularists, are not recognised by the law, and cannot, as Spiritualist societies, hold property, receive bequests, or own halls, and this is an ever-increasing source of anxiety to its promoters. It urges all its readers to question candidates if they are in favor of the removal of all religious disabilities.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies, by a majority of 264 to 62, has declared the twentieth of September, the anniversary of the entry of the Italian troops into Rome, a national holiday. This will be gall and wormwood to the Papacy, which still yearns for a restoration of its temporal power.

Digitized by Google

Professor Bain is among the new recipients of £100 a year from the Civil List Pensions. We congratulate Lord Rosebery's Government on its courage in recognising the services of so advanced a thinker.

The friends of Dr. August Specht, editor of Menschentham and Freien Glocken, have been celebrating his fiftieth birthday, and, as it happens, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his becoming a Freethought speaker. Dr. Specht has written many German Freethought works, of which the most important is a Popular Development History of the World, which has reached a fourth edition.

The Crescent, "A Weekly Record of Islam in England," edited by W. H. Abdullah Quilliam, has been enlarged to sixteen pages. It is full of interest to all students of Mohammedan affairs, and, as our readers know, does not hesitate to carry war into the Christian camp.

The death of Professor Huxley leaves Herbert Spencer the sole survivor of the four intellectual giants who so powerfully upheld the doctrine of man's evolution from the lower forms of life. No man has done more than Huxley to popularise the study of science, and, by his remarkable literary gifts, to give it an interest and a charm which was irresistible, and which was sure to lead the reader to explore deeper into the storehouse of knowledge after reading one of Huxley's works.—Secular Thought.

The second edition of Une Mère Vierge (Mr. Foote's Virgin Mother), translated by C. Cilwa, has appeared in French. It is published by M. Felix Roy, 27 Passage de l'Opera, Paris.

THE HONORARIUM TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

It will be remembered that at the last Conference of the National Secular Society a letter was read from Mr. George Anderson, suggesting that its President "should be recouped for his loss of time and money in serving the party's interests." Accordingly, the Conference appointed a Committee, consisting of Mr. George Anderson, Mr. Charles Watts, Mr. Robert Forder, and Mr. George Ward, to consider the best plan to be adopted for carrying out the suggestion. The Committee met and drew up a circular, which probably most of the readers of the Freethinker have seen.

This Committee unanimously passed the following resolution, proposed by Mr. George Anderson, and seconded by Mr. George Ward: "That the sum to be paid the President of the N.S.S. for this year be £100, to be confirmed, augmented, or diminished each year by vote of the Conference."

By this resolution it was the desire of the Committee to carry out the object, for which it had been appointed by the congress of delegates, in the most satisfactory manner both as to terms and amount, leaving the Society to act yearly in future as circumstances might dictate.

It is to be hoped that what has been done will meet with the approval of the Secular party, and that its members will subscribe the required amount as promptly as possible. CHARLES WATTS.

[Subscriptions can be sent to Miss Vance, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C., or paid to any member of the Committee.]

Subscriptions Received:—

Already acknowledged, £35.

Per R. Forder: W. Hunt, 10s. 6d.; J. D. Leggett, 2s. 6d.

Per Miss Vance: J. T. Embleton, 10s.; S. Seal, £5; F. Burch, 2s. 6d.

Per G. Ward: E. Calvert, 2s. 6d.; Mr. and Mrs. Caisey, 4s.

We stand in the great presence of Nature, whose inspiration should be that of modesty, humility, and love. To accept Nature as the great cause of all things is that theory which involves the most coherent consequences, and it binds us to attempt explanations of mysteries by laws of science and philosophy. These methods may not lead us far, but they will not lead us wrong, and they will keep us modest by enforcing some proportion between what we declare and what we know.—G. J. Holyoake, "The Trial of Theism," p. 51.

MR. PUTNAM'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

Extracts from his Letters to the New York "Truthseeker" (June 22).

THE friends in Liverpool treat me royally. On Monday I have a red-letter day indeed, a day crowded with the noblest pictures of English scenery and its ancient magnificence. Through the kindness of Mr. Towers I am driven by him over to the olden and beautiful city of Chester, seventeen miles distant. We are accompanied by Mr. W. C. Balfour and Mr. Lawrance Small, who is one of the most active workers for Freethought in England, at home amid the treasures of modern science. I had good company, a delightful day, a road smooth as marble, a fine horse, and England's most superb springtime attire. We cross in the ferry-boat to Birkenhead. They don't have ferry-boats here like our big ones. The passengers go over in one boat and the teams in another, and the boats are small in comparison with our palatial ones. Birkenhead is a place of 100,00 inhabitants, and has a somewhat monotonous appearance, with its rows of houses, and scarcely a green thing to be seen; but soon we are out in the country, flying by the long, green hedges, the extensive fields, the rows of horse-chestnut trees, the white and red bloom of the hawthorns, the rugged oaks, and at times the mountain ash, or rowan, with its brilliant blossom. We pass by Port Sunlight, where they manufacture the Sunlight Soap. This is an immense industry. A beautiful village has been built around the huge factories, a kind of model village, where the working man can buy his own home by small instalments, and enjoy the conveniences of modern life. Mr. Lever, the originator of this vast enterprise, was a Freethinker, I understand, and a contributor to the support of Mr. Bradlaugh. He is a reformer after the Owen style. He believes in helping humanity by industrial methods. After passing Port Sunlight we roll through Eastham, Sutton, and other quiet and antique villages, over which the breath of change has never swept. At Chester we pass under the ancient wall built, I believe, by the Romans. The word "Chester" is from the Latin word castra, and indicates an ancient camping-ground. The present city of Chester has grown beyond the original ramparts, but these still remain as landmarks of centuries ago.

Old-fashioned streets and houses, overhanging walls, covered walks alongside the stores, etc., meet the view in this stately cathedral city of about fifty thousand people. The cathedral is the first object of interest. It was built in the thirteenth century. It is falling to pieces in places, and is now being renovated. It is a beautiful building, solemn and sweet in its voices and pictures of the past, as we wander through its freighted gloom, gaze upon its panels and carvings, its rich adornments, and the emerald carpet and shining trees that greet the blue heaven in the central space of its encircling walls. An ancient verger waits upon us and reveals the hidden beauties. He tells us he has been here for over fifty years. No doubt he loves the cathedral. Its carvings are among the most marvellous and skilful in the world, wrought in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. There was a sly twinkle of humor in the old man's eyes as he pointed out the quaint and curious figures. I must confess I was astonished. I supposed that in a cathedral so imposing, with its dim, religious light, there could be nothing in its carvings but scriptural and theological subjects. Ah me! those old monks had a vein of comedy, and in the very heart of the church the artist had pictured the humors of human life. There were carvings of clowns dancing, of lovers, of Red Riding Hood—a legend, it seems, of the tenth century—of a quarrelling married couple, with elbow against elbow, as if each sought for more room and neither would yield. There was, furthermore, the final tragedy, when they went at each other with knife and hatchet. There was also, as the verger smilingly hinted, a prophecy of Chicago, a picture of two great fat hogs and a litter of pigs, with the parson coming after his tithes. Well, it was funny to see these humorous displays in the holy sanctuary. Those old monks could not have been such a bad lot when they were capable of enjoying these secular pictures in the very midst of their religious solemnities. The gargoyles on the outside of the cathedral are equally comic and grotesque. One represents Gladstone, with feather pen in mouth, toppling over the Roman dynasty, and another Disraeli in a similar position. I must confess I do not understand the significance of theological art.

One of the most novel things I witnessed in Chester was a picture of the Virgin Mary being impregnated by the Holy Ghost. I do not dare to describe it. I could hardly believe my eyes when I looked at it; but there it was, on one of the main streets of Chester, on a building that must have been erected in the thirteenth century or before. What fools we mortals be! I said to myself, as I looked at that hideous caricature.

Chester is on the river Dee. We watched the salmon-fishing, which is quite an industry here. As I noted the fishermen hauling in the net, the music of the poet's song murmured in my brain, "Across the sands o' Dee." Near the river bank are the ruins of the oldest church in Chester, of the twelfth century, I believe.

Digitized by Google

At the landing-place my friends charter a steamship, the "Volunteer," to take our company up the river to the estate of the Duke of Westminster. Why should we not travel in pride and glory like any grandee of the land? It was a beautiful voyage. We left behind the gracious, venerable city, glittering on the high banks of the river. The prospect before us was infinitely sweet, the placid river, clear and smooth, the green banks, and the softly gliding vessel. Every moment there was a change

Into something rich and strange.

It is indescribable, the perfect loveliness, the solitude, the motion, the city fading from view, and only the winding liquid pathway with emerald splendors on every side, and ever-varying shades of color.

We reach the beautiful estate of Westminster. Here are the stables which produce the most famous horses in the world. Here is the magnificent park, with great trees, and the deer and sheep grazing on the ample green. The residence of the Duke seems like a village as we approach. There are the outbuildings and lodges, the chapel and tower, the main structure itself, and the golden gates, and the obelisk. We pass through the magnificent suite of rooms where royalty is entertained, where glorious pictures grace the walls, and statues gleam, and precious stones shine; where there is everything that wealth can buy. The duke has an income of a million pounds a year. He owns enormous quantities of land, houses in London, etc. I believe he is the richest duke of the realm. When he is away from his gorgeous palace visitors are permitted to enter, and the proceeds are devoted to charitable purposes. The Duke himself will show visitors about if he happens to be present; and the visitors do not always know who is their guide, and some amusing blunders occur. But the Duke takes it all in good part. I guess he likes to study human nature that way. I should think he would want some such relief from the awful dignity of his position, which must occasionally be tiresome. It is like keeping a big hotel. He has accommodation for over one hundred guests. He can't spend all his money whatever he does. I don't believe he enjoys himself one bit better than we Secularists did on this glorious day. The great house was just as beautiful to us as to him, with all its gay and splendid surroundings. The voyage in the golden evening from the palace to the city was like an enchantment, as if we were in the realms of poetry itself. The new moon shone out from the rolling clouds as we bowled along to Birkenhead, from whence we could see the far glittering lights of Liverpool glancing up and down the river away to the distant sea itself. And thus passed a day filled to the brim with bright experiences.

. . . . . .

Wonderful and many are the mountain and sea views in the glorious land of Wales. I can scarcely describe the ever-varying prospects unfolding in sunlight and mist and cloud. Immense hills, cultivated to the very top, sweep away in the vast distance; lovely vales intervene, beautiful villages and ancient dwellings contrasting with the pomp and pride and circumstance of modern life, which now overflow these once wild and untrodden regions. Wales is a favorite place of resort for the fashion and wealth of England. Llandudno is an elegant seaside city, with superb hotels and residences, a delightful beach, equisite expanses of water, and rugged surroundings. The coaching tours, however, are the supreme thing, with the "tally-ho," the four-horse stage, with seats on high, as if you were riding on the roof of a house. It is an illuminating voyage, through the air almost, I might say. I could take only two of them, as my time was short. I arrive at Llandudno from Liverpool, Wednesday, May 29, at noon, and immediately take the trip through Synchant Pass to Penmaen Mawr. We travel through the old town of Conway, about five miles distant, and view the ruins of its once magnificent castle, which for ages has towered upon this historic coast. With melancholy grandeur it greets the sun of to-day. It gives a noble idea of the massive structures of the old fighting times, when war was the normal condition of humanity. It would seem impossible to take this castle by storm, so impregnable are its defences, so strong its towers and walls, protected by precipitous shores and frowning hills. One can imagine how things were in those tumultuous and bloody eras, now forever gone, with their glory and their chivalry. Beyond Conway we sweep into an amphitheatre of magnificent hills, variegated with the splendor of modern thrift and invention. Every inch of ground is apparently used for man's benefit. There are no waste places. Even the Synchant Pass makes pasture for the wandering herds and flocks. It presents a grand a romantic appearance as we plunge down its tremendous grade. The coaches here, however, don't go with the thundering whirl of our Californian stages. They put on the brakes in Wales, while in California they bid "farewell to every fear," and urge the horses to a resounding gallop. People are more slow and cautious on this side, and the traveller does not feel every moment as if he were launching into eternity. After Synchant Pass we come to the charming village of Dwygyfylchi—pronounce it if you can; I can't. It is as much as I can do to spell it. Near by is the Fairy Glen, where, for the moment, as you gaze through the forest arcades and into the tumblings water, one seems to be a thousand miles from civilisation. On top of the huge hill which encircles the glen is the "Druid's Circle," an ancient temple of worship, one of the most remarkable remains of the dim and mystic past. The coach continues on to Penmaen Mawr, where the mountains reach down close to the sea, and where the sea stretches away with magnificent and ever-changing illuminations, sweeping to the horizon, or framed in with outlines of the vast and rugged coast. We return by a different route, where equally pleasing and exhilarating pictures adorn the pathway. In the evening thousands of tourists swarm along the sands or on the great pier. Music fills the air. The lights flare in a wide semicircle, the mountains glimmer in the dusky sky, the waters fling back the glow, and a scene of beauty and animation flows on until midnight. The morning hour is equally enchanting. The sun flashes over the surrounding pinnacles, the splendid buildings appear in gorgeous ranks, while the children and dogs and donkeys gather on the beach, and everybody seems to be in a mood of careless festivity, in unison with the magnificence of earth and sky. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

(To be continued.)

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

MR. CHARLES WATTS has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

July 21, Birmingham.

August 11, Failsworth; 18, Leicester; 25, Liverpool.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

Religious Knowledge.

The general reader has probably had a surfeit of apocryphal specimens of "English as she is wrote," answers by school-children to questions in history, etc., but the following samples are genuine, and worthy of preservation. They are taken from recent Sunday-school examination papers, and were quoted last month before the Presbyterian Commission of Victoria by Mr. Wishart, the examiner in connection with the "Allan Bequest": Question—"What is effectual calling?" Answers—"Calling two or three times at once, or else calling all the time." "The work of God's grace whereby we are enabled to live more unto sin and die unto righteousness." "The work of God's grace whereby we are removed into another world." Q.—"What is urged in the Tenth Commandment?" A.—"Not to be thankful for what we've got." "To do everything without covetousness, and look upon ourselves with full contempt." Q.—"Give a proof text showing that we should pray for what is required for the support of life." A.—"We should pray that Christ would be kind to our parents, deliver us from evil, dinner, breakfast, bread and butter, and other requisites." Q.—"What two classes of men came to see the child Jesus at Bethlehem?" A.—"Wild men of the East." "Wise men of the East offered Jesus the franchise" (frankincense). Q.—"What cheering words did the Lord speak to Paul at Corinth?" A.—"You shall never see my face again." Q.—"Who was the first martyr?" A.—"Martin Luther." "Agrippa." Q.—"What were his last words?" A.—"I am the light of the world." "Be sure and kill David." Q.—"What would have saved Sodom from destruction?" A.—"Ten riotous persons." "Water—they had no fire brigade." Q.—"Why did God command Abraham to offer up Isaac?" A.—"Because he was not a good man, and did not keep the Sabbath." Q.—"Name three ways in which the Sabbath was broken in Jerusalem in Nehemiah's time." A.—"They married infidels, worshipped asses, and trod wine presses." "Hawkers ran about the streets.—"X.," in "Harbinger of Light."

The Devil is called the "Father of lies." There is no instance given in the Bible in which he lied, but millions of people have told billions of lies on the Devil.—Blue Grass Blade.

Digitized by Google

REJECTED LOVE.

The world is full of pain and woe,
But, lest their God be deemed oppressing,
Some pious Christians seek to show
That every seeming ill's a blessing.

They tell us that the Lord above,
By harm desires our welfare hastened,
And chastens those who've won his love,
Yet Christians don't like being chastened.

It's chiefly those he has not blessed
With tumors, cancers, gout, or blindness,
Who loudly state the Lord knows best
And advertise his chastening kindness.

This queer conceit, without a doubt,
Would make the most afflicted cheery,
If one strange fact did not leak out
That actions contradict their theory.

If for some purpose, good and wise,
The Lord should bless them with insomnia,
They steal the sleep their God denies
With chloral—et hoc genus omnia.

His blessing—small-pox—they would shirk
By laws enforcing vaccination;
His chastening cholera they burke
By quarantine and sanitation.

By poison God may bless in vain,
The favored foil him with emetics;
And baulk his "purifying pain"
With opiate drugs and anæsthetics.

And with his highest blessing—death—
The key to Heaven, believers own it,
They fight until their latest breath
In frantic effort to postpone it.

But still they prate and still believe,
Despite the favors they've rejected;
They little think how God must grieve
To find his chastening love neglected.

The view of evil thus supplied,
No doubt possesses great attraction,
And, just a little modified,
May yield a useful rule for action.

Behind the cloud there shines the sun,
So welcome pain since God has sent it,
And piously say "Thy will be done,"
When you have failed to circumvent it.

E. H. B. Stephenson.

A False Claim.

If not so false, it would be amusing to read in Church papers, and hear from pulpits, the indebtedness women are under to Christianity for their elevation from a species of slavery. Christians borowed their social institutions, according to their own representations, from the Jews. The only condition a woman could visit the synagogues was to go by side streets and alleys, and, when attending upon religious exercises, they were shut off from all intercourse with the worshippers by the interposition of a latticed partition.

Down to within fifty or sixty years women occupied separate places in Christian churches, seldom being seated promiscuously through the assembly. Here they must remain silent, and learn of the priests. We believe it was the Universalists, some fifty years ago, who made a place for her in the pulpit, the Unitarians afterwards extending to her similar privileges.

When we recall Paul's cruel restrictions relating to the fair sex, and the implicit observance of his petty meanness in regard to them by Christians of all denominations, down to so recent a period, we would suppose they would remain silent on the subject until the last man with recollections of fifty years ago was at rest.—Progressive Thinker.

If the story of the Fall is not the true record of an historical occurrence, what becomes of Pauline theology? Yet the story of the Fall as directly conflicts with probability, and is as devoid of trustworthy evidence as that of the Creation or that of the Deluge, with which it forms an harmoniously legendary series.—Huxley.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MADMEN OR CRANKS?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE FREETHINKER."

Sir,—As one of your regular readers, although not claiming to be of the fraternity of Atheists, I must really object to Mr. J. M. Wheeler, in his article upon F. Nietzsche, saying that "Jesus, Mohammed, Joan of Arc, Jacob Boehme, Francis d'Assissi, George Fox, and Emanuel Swedenborg were all insane." Surely no intelligent reader, having read the life-histories of such as Mohammed, George Fox, and E. Swedenborg, would believe them to be insane or mad, in the ordinary sense of those words. Take Swedenborg, for instance. I have been assured by a New Church minister (Rev. G. J. Woodford) that the "Memorable Relations," or supposed spirit communications appended to some of Swedenborg's works, were added after his death when the sect began to put forward his views for acceptance, and a Church was formed. It is certainly clear that Swedenborg was a learned man, a scientific inventor, and held high offices in the Swedish State somewhat analagous to our Mr. Gladstone to-day, and to call him insane is ridiculous.

Then, leaving out of the question the debatable nature—mythical or human—of Jesus, a study of the life of Mohammed will justify no one in calling him mad, as well style Cromwell or Napoleon Buonaparte mad, a remarkable and shrewd man; the legendary history, of course, has been added since his death by admirers and others.

As to Joan of Arc being mad, this person, also in her life, shows remarkable courage and intelligence of action; in fact, a high-minded patriot of the female order, whose heroic exploits have now become veiled in legendary lore, and expanded into much which is visionary and mythical; but why blame or asperse the maid for this? It appears to me that there was much method in the madness of these persons, and it is quite an abuse of words to style such great souls, as above mentioned, as mad or insane. Rather should their life-work receive our respectful homage, and, by placing ourselves en rapport with the men and the times in which they lived, seek to gain from their heroic actions some impetus or inspiration to animate the age in which we live and work.

Thomas May.

[The very purpose of my incidental illustrations was to show that Nietzsche could not be summarily dismissed on the ground of his madness. As to whether the persons I named were insane, it is a question for experts. If Mr. May denies they heard voices, saw visions, and exhibited other traits of insanity, he speaks out of the plenitude of his ignorance, and I advise him to read Maudsley's Pathology of Mind, and Ireland's Blot on the Brain. Instead of blaming or aspersing these ecstatics of genius, I said "I dearly love a crank," and argued that there was an insanity which rises above the common level, as well as an imbecility that sinks beneath it. I do not blame Mr. May, but I notice it is usual with him to catch hold of the wrong end of the stick.—J. M. W.]

PROFANE JOKES.

"Johnnie, why did not the lions eat Daniel?" "'Cause they didn't know he was so good."

Mamma (to little girl of four who has been naughty)—"You wicked girl! You know if I cannot see you some one can." Little Girl—"Who can, then?" Mamma—"God can." Little Girl—"Where is he, then? I can't see him. You know I'll have no peeping."

Aunt Dinah, the colored cook, was caught giving the fatest turkey to her friends. She substituted a leaner one, and said the fat all fried out.

The next Sunday was the first in the month, and Dinah, who was a professedly devout communicant of the church, was promptly in her place at the beginning of the services. Her mistress was also a communicant, and watched with interest to see if Dinah would partake of the holy communion.

But Dinah, apparently, had no conscientious scruples to keep her away. She knelt at the altar rail as devoutly as if her conscience had been devoid of guilt.

On their return home the mistress called her servant to her, and, in a tone of mild reproach, said: "Oh, Dinah, how could you go to the holy table with such a load of sin on your soul?"

"I ain't got no sin on my soul, Missy," was the reply.

"Why, Dinah, not after you stole that turkey and gave it to your friends, and then lied about it?"

"Oh, la, Missy!" exclaimed the impenitent cook, "do you s'pose I'se goin' to let that old turkey hen stan' between me and my bressed Lawd?"

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7, musical selections; 7.30, G. W. Foote, "Secularism and the New Parliament."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 8.45, social gathering for N.S.S. members and friends. Tuesday, at 9, dance.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Stanley Jones, "Christianity and Civilisation."

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, open discussion—"Morals, the Outcome of Evolution."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, A. G. Hertzfeld, "The Real and Ideal Jesus."

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "Christianity Critically Examined."

CAMBERWELL GREEN: Tuesday, at 8, a lecture.

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, W. J. Ramsey, "The Curse of the Cross."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, a lecture.

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, S. R. Thompson, "Slavery." (Collection for Benevolent Fund.)

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11, debate between Lucretius Keen and Job Williams, "Atheism or Christianity—Which has Done Most for Mankind?" 3.15, E. Calvert, "Is the New Testament Worthy of Credit?"

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, A. B. Moss, "Christianity and Evolution." Thursday, at 8, Stanley Jones, "Evolution and Darwinism."

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, A. B. Moss, "Design and Natural Selection"; 3.30, "The Bible and Evolution." Wednesday, at 8, Stanley Jones, "Evolution and Darwinism."

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, a lecture.

KILBURN (corner of Victoria-road): 7, W. J. Ramsey, "Tales from the Jew-Book."

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, a lecture.

LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, W. Heaford, "Bible Lessons in Morality."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, F. Haslam, "Heroes and Martyrs of Freethought."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, W. Heaford, "Religion and Insanity."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, S. E. Easton will lecture.

TOTTENHAM GREEN: 3.30, S. R. Thompson, "The Origin of the Gods." (Collection on behalf of Sam Standring.)

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, R. Forder will lecture (collection for L.S.P.); 3.15, Stanley Jones will lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, A. Guest, "Atheist or Theist: Which is the Fool?" 7, W. Heaford will lecture. Thursday, at 8, a lecture.

COUNTRY.

BIRMINGHAM (Museum Concert Hall, Bull Ring): 11, S. P. Putnam: "The Bible and Modern Thought"; 3, "Christ and the Nineteenth Century"; 7, "Christianity and Woman." (Friends from a distance can obtain dinner and tea.)

CHATHAM SECULAR HALL (Queen's-road, New Brompton): 2.45, Sunday-school; 7, C. James, "Christianity and Civilisation."

LIVERPOOL (Oddfellows' Hall, St. Anne-street): 7, C. Doog, "Religious Materialism."

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, C. Cohen, "Darwinism and Democracy"; 6.30, "Who Was Jesus Christ—God, Man, or Myth?"

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): 11, J. P. Gilmour, "South Sea Mission Bubbles"; 3, "The Science and Superstition of Hypnotism"; 7, "The Natural History of the Christian Religion." Tea at 5.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES (32 Dorecote-street): 6.30, business meeting.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Captain Duncan's Navigation School, King-street): 7, Theosophy, a discussion.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, Lower End): 7, J. Kenst, "Christian Evidence."

CHATHAM (corner of the New Brompton-road, High-street): 11.15, C. James, "Christianity and Modern Thought."

DERBY (Market-place): 11, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

MANCHESTER (Stevenson-square): Saturday, at 7, C. Cohen, "Secularism." Sunday, at 3, "Christ as a Teacher."

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside): 11, Mr. Selkirk will lecture.

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road.—July 20 and 21, Manchester; 23 to 26, Blackburn; 28, Stockton-on-Tees; 29 and 30, Middlesboro'. August 1, Wood Green; 4, m. and a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford; 6, Camberwell; 8, Wood Green; 11, m. and a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 15, Wood Green; 18, m. and a. Finsbury Park; 22, Wood Green; 25, Manchester.

STANLEY JONES, 53 Marlborough-road, Holloway, London.—July 21, m. Camberwell, a. Victoria Park, e. Camberwell; 24, Hyde Park; 25, Hammersmith; 28, m. and e. Wood Green.

ARTHUR B. MOSS, 44 Credon-road, Rotherhithe, London, E.—July 21, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 28, m. Pimlico Pier, e. Tottenham. August 4, Camberwell; 11, Westminster; 18, m. and a. Hyde Park, e. Hammersmith; 25, m. Clerkenwell, a. Victoria Park.

T. THURLOW, 350 Old Ford-road, E.—August 4, Kingsland.

TO FREETHINKERS.—Ladies and Gentlemen requiring SUPERIOR OUT GARMENTS at moderate prices. First-class Style and Fit Guaranteed.—H. HAMPTON, Artiste Tailor, 14 Great Castle-street, W. (three doors from Regent-street). Patronised by leading Freethinkers.

CHARLES WATTS'S WORKS.

THE TEACHINGS OF SECULARISM COMPARED WITH ORTHODOX CHRISTIANITY. 1s., by post 1s. 2d.

SECULARISM: IS IT FOUNDED ON REASON, AND IS IT SUFFICIENT TO MEET THE WANTS OF MANKIND? Debate between the Editor of the Evening Mail (Halifax, N.S.) and Charles Watts. With Prefatory Letters by G. J. Holyoake and Colonel R. G. Ingersoll, and an Introduction by Helen H. Gardener. 1s., by post 1s. 2d.

A REPLY TO FATHER LAMBERTS "TACTICS OF INFIDELS." 6d., by post 7d.

SCIENCE AND THE BIBLE. 4d., by post 5d.

CHRISTIANITY: ITS ORIGIN, NATURE, AND INFLUENCE. 4d., by post 5d.

WAS CHRIST A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL REFORMER? 4d., by post 5d.

AGNOSTICISM AND CHRISTIAN THEISM: WHICH IS THE MORE REASONABLE? 3d., by post 4d.

THE NATURAL AND THE SUPERNATURAL; OR, BELIEF AND KNOWLEDGE. 3d., by post 4d.

SECULARISM: DESTRUCTIVE AND CONSTRUCTIVE. 3d., by post 4d.

HAPPINESS IN HELL AND MISERY IN HEAVEN. 3d., by post 4d.

THE SUPERSTITION OF THE CHRISTIAN SUNDAY. A Plea for Liberty and Justice. 3d., by post 4d.

BIBLE MORALITY: Its Teachings Shown to be Contradictory and Defective as an Ethical Guide. 3d., by post 3½d.

SAINTS AND SINNERS: WHICH? 3d., by post 4d.

EVOLUTION AND SPECIAL CREATION. 3d., by post 4d.

IS THERE A LIFE BEYOND THE GRAVE? Reply to Dr. R. B. Westbrook. 3d., by post 4d.

CHRISTIANITY AND CIVILISATION. Why Christianity is Still Professed. 3d., by post 4d.

WHY DO RIGHT? A Secularist's Answer. 3d., by post 4d.

THEOLOGICAL PRESUMPTION. An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. R. F. Burns, of Halifax, N.S. 2d., by post 2½d.

EDUCATION: TRUE AND FALSE. 2d., by post 2½d.

SECULARISM: ITS RELATION TO THE SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF THE DAY. 2d., by post 2½d.

THE EXISTENCE OF GOD; OR, QUESTIONS FOR THEISTS. 2d., by post 2½d.

THE BIBLE UP TO DATE. 2d., by post 2½d.

ROBERT FORDER, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

COALS! COALS! COALS!

MESSRS. FRANCIS E. WOOD & CO. are supplying good Parlor Coal suitable for all purposes, at 16s. 6d. per Ton. Hot Kitchen Coal, 14s.

R. Forder says: "They are remarkably cheap and good."
W. J. Ramsey writes: "I am well satisfied with your Parlor Coal."

Orders to 206 York-road, King's Cross. Depôts all over London.

"The Clacton Tea-Table,"

TOWN HALL BUILDINGS, CLACTON-ON-SEA.

Specialité—1s. ORDINARY, 12.30 to 3.

Tea fresh for every customer. Furnished Apartments.

Also "Brunswick Confectionery," Pier Avenue.

Proprietor, H. FOYSTER.

Read "THE TRUTH SEEKER."

MONTHLY, PRICE 1D.

Edited by JOHN GRANGE.

Of all Newsagents to order. Wholesale, Mr. Forder.

Price Twopence,

Satan, Witchcraft, and the Bible.

BY J. M. WHEELER.

A Demonstration of the Biblical Doctrine of Devils, suitable for circulation among Christians.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

STANTON, the People's Dentist, 335 Strand (opposite Somerset House).—TEETH on VULCANITE, 2s. 6d. each; upper or lower set, £1. Best Quality, 4s. each; upper or lower, £2. Completed in four hours when required; repairing or alterations in two hours. If you pay more than the above, they are fancy charges. Teeth on platinum, 7s. 6d. each; on 18 ct. gold, 10s.; stopping, 2s. 6d.; extraction, 1s.; painless by gas, 5s.

Digitized by Google

Colonel Ingersoll's Great Lecture

ABOUT THE HOLY BIBLE

Price Sixpence.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Works by G. W. Foote.

Flowers of Freethought. First Series. 221 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Flowers of Freethought. Second Series. 302 pp., bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.

Bible Heroes. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Letters to the Clergy. First Series. 128 pp., 1s.

The Grand Old Book. A Reply to the Grand Old Man. An exhaustive answer to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." 1s.; bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Christianity and Secularism. Four Nights' Public Debate with the Rev. Dr. James McCann. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Is Socialism Sound? Four Nights' Public Debate with Annie Besant. 1s.; superior edition, in cloth, 2s.

Infidel Death-Beds. Second edition, much enlarged, 8d. On superfine paper, in cloth, 1s. 3d.

Darwin on God. 6d.; superior edition, in cloth, 1s.

Will Christ Save Us? A Thorough Examination of the Claims of Jesus Christ to be considered the Savior of the World. 6d.

Reminiscences of Charles Bradlaugh. 6d.

A Defence of Free Speech. Three Hours' Address to the Jury before Lord Coleridge. With a Special Preface and many Footnotes. 4d.

Comic Sermons and Other Fantasias. 8d.

Rome or Atheism—the Great Alternative. 3d.

Letters to Jesus Christ. 4d.

Interview with the Devil. 2d.

Philosophy of Secularism. 3d.

Atheism and Morality. 2d.

My Resurrection. A Missing Chapter from the Gospel of Matthew, discovered by G. W. Foote. 2d.

The Folly of Prayer. 2d.

Ingersollism Defended against Archdeacon Farrar. 2d.

Was Jesus Insane? A Searching Inquiry into the Mental Condition of the Prophet of Nazareth. 1d.

Christianity and Progress. A Reply to Mr. Gladstone. 2d.

The Impossible Creed. An Open Letter to Bishop Magee on the Sermon on the Mount. 2d.

What was Christ? A Reply to J. S. Mill. 2d.

The Bible God. 2d.

Salvation Syrup; or, Light on Darkest England. A Reply to General Booth. 2d.

Is the Bible Inspired? A Criticism on Lux Mundi. 1d.

The Dying Atheist. A Story. 1d.

The Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's Converted Atheist. A Lie in Five Chapters. 1d.

Mrs. Besant's Theosophy. A Candid Criticism. 2d.

Secularism and Theosophy. A Rejoinder to Mrs. Besant. 2d.

The New Cagliostro. An Open Letter to Madame Blavatsky. 2d.

The Shadow of the Sword. A Moral and Statistical Essay on War. 2d.

Royal Paupers. Showing what Royalty does for the People, and what the People do for Royalty. 2d.

Bible Romances. New Edition. Revised and largely re-written. (1) Creation Story, 2d.; (2) Eve and the Apple, 1d.; (3) Cain and Abel, 1d.; (4) Noah's Flood, 1d.; (5) The Tower of Babel, 1d.; (6) Lot's Wife, 1d.; (7) The Ten Plagues, 1d.; (8) The Wandering Jews, 1d.; (9) Balaam's Ass, 1d.; (10) God in a Box, 1d.; (11) Jonah and the Whale, 1d.; (12) Bible Animals, 1d.; (13) A Virgin Mother, 1d.; (14) The Resurrection, 2d.; (15) The Crucifixion, 1d.; (16) John's Nightmare, 1d.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

THOMAS PAINE'S WORKS.

The Age of Reason. New edition, with Preface by G. W. Foote. 1s.

Miscellaneous Theological Works. 1s.

Complete Theological Works. (Including the Age of Reason.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Rights of Man. Centenary edition. With a Political Biography by J. M. Wheeler. 1s.; bound in cloth, 2s.

London: R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

ALLINSON FOR HEALTH.

HOME CONSULTATIONS—10 a.m. to 1 p.m., 10s. 6d.; 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 5s. Patients Visited.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. I. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Management of Infancy, Health, Longevity, The Teeth, Tobacco, The Drink Question. Also the Cause and Cure of Disease, Constipation, Biliousness, Eczema, Blackheads and Pimples, Nervousness, Coughs and Colds, Chest Complaints, Deafness, Thread Worms, Long Worms, Tape Worms, The Itch, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. II. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on The Healing Power of Nature, Urine, Saline Starvation, the Hair and its Management, Sleep and Sleeplessness, Want of Energy, etc. Advice for the Thin, for the Stout; Simple Fever, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Whooping Cough, Ringworm, Hypochondria, Bloodlessness, Diarrhœa, Ulcerated Legs, Tumours, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. III. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on No More Death, Management of Young Children, Unsuspected Domestic Poisons, How to Grow Tall, to Keep Warm, to Live One Hundred Years, to Improve the Memory, and to become Beautiful and Attractive. On the Cause and Cure of Stomach Troubles, Flatulence, Sleepiness, Varicose Veins, Boils and Carbuncles, Sebaceous Tumours and Warts, Hay Fever, Winter Cough, Chilblains, Epilepsy, and on the Diseases Produced by Taking Mercury.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. IV. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Hardening, Work and Overwork, Sugar and its Abuse, Milk as Food, the Tomato, Poultices, Quinine, Against the Knife, Arsenical Poisoning, Tonics, Against Stimulants in Disease, about Swallowing Pins and other Articles. Also Cure of Sunstroke, Dog Bites, Pains in the Back, Pediculi or Lice, Chicken-Pox, Synovitis or Inflammation of the Joints, Tonsilitis or Quinsy, Herpes (Tetter or Shingles), Erysipelas, Ulcer of the Stomach, Epidemic Influenza, Sciatica, Psoriasis or English Leprosy, etc.

MEDICAL ESSAYS. Vol. V. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

Contains Articles on Pure Water, The Mouth, Its Use and Abuse; Rules for the Aged, Training, Blood Letting, Nose Bleeding, Felon or Whitlow, Ingrowing Toenail, Gum Boil, Cold in the Head, a Red Nose, Flushing and Blushing, Toothache, Sore Mouth, St. Vitus' Dance, Goitre, Mumps, Inflamed Eyes and Eyelids, Fits, Fainting, Apoplexy, Spitting and Vomiting of Blood, Vomiting, Wounds, Burns, Scalds, Bruises, etc.

The Five Volumes, strongly and neatly bound, price 6s. 9d., post free.

HYGIENIC MEDICINE. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.—An Eye Opener to Drug Takers.
RHEUMATISM: ITS CAUSE AND CURE. Post free for 9d.
DIET AND DIGESTION. Post free for 7d.
CONSUMPTION: ITS NATURAL CURE. Post free 7d.

All these Books, bound in One Vol., post free, 3s. 6d. Send Postal Order.

THREE PAMPHLETS FOR YOUNG MEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.
A BOOK FOR MARRIED WOMEN. For Postal Order for 1s. 2d.

All communications to be addressed to—

DR. T. R. ALLINSON,
4 Spanish-place, Manchester-square, London, W.

THE BEST BOOK

ON NEO-MALTHUSIANISM IS, I BELIEVE,

TRUE MORALITY, or THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF NEO-MALTHUSIANISM.

By J. R. HOLMES, M.M.L., M.V.S., M.N.S.S.

160 pages, with portrait and autograph, bound in cloth, gilt lettered. Price 1s., post free.

 In order to bring the information within the reach of the poor, the most important parts of the book are issued in a pamphlet of 112 pages at ONE PENNY, post free 2d. Copies of the pamphlet for distribution 1s. a dozen post free.

The National Reformer of 4th September, 1892, says: "Mr Holmes' pamphlet . . . is an almost unexceptionable statement of the Neo-Malthusian theory and practice . . . and throughout appeals to moral feeling. . . . The special value of Mr. Holmes' service to the Neo-Malthusian cause and to human well-being generally is just his combination in his pamphlet of a plain statement of the physical and moral need for family limitation with a plain account of the means by which it can be secured, and an offer to all concerned of the requisites at the lowest possible prices."

The Council of the Malthusian League, Dr. Drysdale, Dr. Allbutt, as others have also spoken of it in very high terms.

The Trade supplied by R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C. Other orders should be sent to the author.

J. R. HOLMES, HANNEY, WANTAGE, BERKS.

W. J. Rendell's "Wife's Friend"

Recommended by Mrs. Besant in Law of Population, p. 32, and Dr. Allbutt in Wife's Handbook, p. 51. Made solely by J. Fuller, 15 Chadwell-street, Clerkenwell; 2s. per doz., post free (reduction in larger quantities). For particulars send stamped envelope.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

Beware of useless imitations substituted by some dealers and chemists, the words "Rendell & Co." and "J. W. Rendall" being speciously and plausibly introduced to deceive the public.

Look for Autograph Registered Trade Mark

W. J. Rendell

No. 182,688.

In Red Ink on each Box, without which None are Genuine.

Higginson's Syringe, with Vertical and Reverse Current, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. Dr. Palfrey's Powder, 1s. 2d. Quinine Compound, 1s. 2d. Dr. Allbutt's Quinine Powders, 8s. per doz. All prices post free.

W. J. RENDELL, 15 Chadwell-st., Clerkenwell, E.C.

Digitized by Google

GOTT'S SUMMER SALE.

☞ We cannot send Patterns, but we guarantee Satisfaction in every case, or return money in full. ☜

40s. PARCELS for 20s. 1s. must in each Lot be added for Carriage.

Parcel A contains

1 All-Wool Serge Dress Length, worth 13/6
2½ yds Fine Bodice Lining
4 yds Skirt Lining
2 dozen Buttons to match
1 Ready-made Under-Skirt
1 Lady's Umbrella
1 Pair of Fine Black Cashmere Hose
1 Lady's Blouse
1 „ Apron
1 „ Belt

Parcel B contains

1 Flake Tweed Dress Length
1 Umbrella
3 yds Fine White or Scarlet Flannel
6 yds Fine Flannelette
1 Lady's Blouse
1 „ Apron
1 „ Belt
1 Pair of Fine Black Cashmere Hose

Parcel C contains

1 Pair Men's Trousers
1 Boys Suit for any age under 8
1 Gent's Umbrella
1 Tweed Dress Length
1 Lady's Umbrella
1 Ready-made Under-Skirt
1 Lady's Apron
1 „ Belt

Parcel D contains

1 Dress Length
1 pair of Sheets
1 Quilt
1 Table-cloth
6 yds Flannelette
1 Lady's Blouse
1 Ready-made Under-Skirt

Parcel E contains

1 Navy Blue All-Wool Serge Dress Length
1 Scotch Tweed, all wool
1 Habit Cloth, any color

Parcel F contains

1 West of England Trousers Length
1 Fine Worsted „
1 Scotch Tweed „

Parcel G contains

1 Suit Length, Serge or Tweed
1 Cloth Dress Length, any color
1 Boy's Suit, any age under 8

Parcel H contains

1 Melton Overcoat Length, any color
1 Black Cashmere Dress Length
1 Lady's Umbrella
1 Gent's Umbrella

Parcel I contains

1 Suit Length, Black or Blue Serge
1 Tweed Dress Length
1 Boy's Suit, any age under 8
1 „ Reefer Overcoat

Parcel J contains

12 yards Flannelette
12 „ Cotton Shirting
12 „ Flannel
12 „ Muslin de laine

Parcel K contains

Gent's Scarbro' Shaped Mackintosh, in black, navy, or brown. Give length at back, chest and waist measures.

Parcel L contains

Lady's Cleveland Mackintosh, latest style, in all colors, plain, check, or mixture. Give length back and front, bust and waist measures.

Parcel M contains

1 Scotch Tweed Dress Length
2 Flannelette Nightdresses
2 „ Chemises
2 pairs „ Knickers
2 Lady's Aprons
1 „ Belt

Parcel N contains

1 Dress Length, in serge, cashmere, habit cloth, or tweed, in any color
1 Good Strong All-Wool Suit Length, in black, blue mixture, stripe, check

Parcel O contains

30 yards Remnants, suitable for girls' dresses, all double width.

Parcel P contains

15 yards Tweed and Serge Remnants, suitable for boys' suits; all 28 in. wide

Parcel Q contains

4 Odd Trousers Lengths and
2 pairs Men's Under-pants

Parcel R contains

3 pairs Ready-made Trousers
2 „ Under-pants
2 „ Socks
Give waist, inside and outside leg measures

Parcel S contains

1 Bruno Cloth Dress Length
1 Brown Beaver Jacket Length
1 Lady's Umbrella

Parcel T contains

11 yards of Deep Pile Velveteen, twill back, in black, navy, green, brown, or maroon; 23 in. wide

Parcel U contains

1 First-class West of England Suit Length

Parcel V contains

1 First-class Black or Blue Worsted or Vicuna Suit Length.

Parcel W contains

22 yards Heavy Cloth Dress Material, 50 inches wide, black, navy, brown, green, grey, maroon, or fawn.

Parcel X contains

Lady's Mackintosh
„ Umbrella
„ Under-Skirt
„ Blouse

Parcel Y contains

Mixed Lot of Useful Goods for Lady's wear. Worth at least 40/-

Parcel Z contains

Mixed lot of Useful Goods for Gent's wear. Worth at least 40/-

A MOST MARVELLOUS LINE.

I have just secured over 10,000 yards of really good Trouserings at a price I have never before equalled. I will gladly send a few cuttings of these, which, if carefully examined, are bound to please you, as the price is not more than half what they are honestly worth. Or if you describe the color you would like, I will select a good shade for you.

PRICES.

Trousers to Measure 9s. per pair.
Three Pairs Trousers to Measure for 25s. 6d.
Six Pairs Trousers to measure for 48s.
One Trousers' Length for 5s. 6d.
Three Trousers' Lengths for 15s.
Six Trousers' Lengths for 27s.

TROUSERS.

INCHES
A, Round Waist over Trousers .....
B, Round Seat.....
E to D, Inside Leg Seam.....
F to G, Full Length of Trousers.....
H, Round Thigh.....
I, Round Knee.....
J, Round Bottom .....
Please say Lined or Unlined.....
(Lined 6d. extra.)
Side or Cross Pockets.....

J. W. GOTT, 2 & 4, UNION STREET, BRADFORD.

Printed and Published by G. W. Foote, at 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

The Freethinker

Edited by G. W. FOOTE.] [Sub-Editor, J. M. WHEELER.

VOL. XV.—No. 30. SUNDAY, JULY 28, 1895. PRICE TWOPENCE.

MR. STEAD'S "JULIA."

MR. W. T. STEAD is a characteristic figure of the present age. He typifies what we may call, for want of a technical name, the enterprise of common journalism. Board schools have taught everybody to read—and alas! too many of them to write; and all sorts of scribes are ministering to the literary tastes of the multitude, who require something to interest them without giving them the trouble of thinking. Amongst the purveyors of this mental pabulum, Mr. Stead is easily first. The work exactly suits his faculty and temperament. Mentally he is just on the level of the public he addresses. His advantage over them consists in a certain restless energy, which some people mistake for enthusiasm. He is interested in many things, and shallow in all of them. Even if he had the mental power, it is doubtful whether he could sit still long enough to think, in any proper sense of the word. He does not think, but he has thoughts; and as that is just the condition of the great mass of the public, it is not surprising that he is a very successful journalist. One might say of Mr. Stead's productions what Lincoln said when he was asked his opinion of a certain book in great temporary vogue: "Well, if people like that sort of thing, I should say that is just the sort of thing they'd like."

Now there is one thing your enterprising journalist never does. He never fights a forlorn hope. He has never any convictions which are not shared by a large section of the public. It may be a minority, but it is a minority large enough to keep him going. Your enterprising journalist is always on the look out for "a felt want," and eager to supply it; and this peculiarity is the key to all Mr. Stead's avatars. His genius has had many incarnations, and will probably have many more; but in all of them he will retain a keen eye to the main chance. He has a happy and profitable knack of leaping on to a movement which is attracting attention, and of becoming its spokesman. He is incapable of creating a wave of public interest, but no one equals him in riding upon its crest—until it is breaking, when he flies off to a fresh adventure.

I was once brought into close contact with Mr. Stead. It was at the time of the "Trafalgar-square riots." Much as I detested Sir Charles Warren, and was indignant at his dragooning the London Radicals, I saw that we could not fight the police, and still less fight the soldiers behind them; so at the risk of misunderstanding and misrepresentation I tried to drag the Radicals away from Trafalgar-square. Mrs. Besant shrieked against that policy, and was warmly seconded by Mr. Stead, who was then editing the Pall Mall Gazette, and who saw "good copy" in bloody rows between the people and the police. For my part, I should never have said to others "Go to the Square," I should have said "Come." Mr. Stead was full of "Go," but there was no "Come" about him. I soon saw that his place would be at a window of Morley's Hotel, while the men he egged on were being truncheoned in the roadway. And ever since then I have smiled at Mr. Stead's eulogists, especially when they have trumpeted his "courage."

Students of human nature will not be surprised to learn that Mr. Stead is a sentimentalist; indeed, he is almost a crank. Set anything "occult" before him, and his eyes widen like saucers. He sniffs up the mysterious as a devout Catholic sniffs up incense, and with the same mixture of spiritual and sensual ecstasy. He patronises Theosophy and goes maudlin over Mrs. Besant. He also dabbles in Spiritism. And in all this he is sincere—that is, as sincere as he can be. But the enterprising journalist is not suppressed. Many other people coquet with Theosophy and flirt with Spiritism. "Go to, then," says Mr. Stead, "I will start a magazine for them, and they shall buy it; and I will make it ghostly and creepy, so that other people with 'nerves' may buy it likewise." And the result is Borderland.

In the July number of this curious publication there is a heading "Is Man Immortal?" It appears that an American newspaper syndicate has been putting this novel question to a number of gentlemen who know nothing about it, although they pretend to know a great deal. One of these is Mr. Stead himself, and his answer to the question is printed in full, while extracts are given from the other answers, which are illuminating "seven millions of readers" in the land of Yankee-Doodle.

Mr. Stead does not know whether man is immortal, but he does know that the soul survives the body, which is really an "encumbrance." And how does Mr. Stead know it? Why, in this way. Suppose you had a friend who emigrated to America, and that your friend sent you letters and telegrams; would not that satisfy you that America existed, and that your friend was still living? Very well, then; Mr. Stead had a friend "Miss Julia ——" who "emigrated to the world beyond the grave scarcely four years ago." He has not seen her since, but others have. She appears to be shy of Mr. Stead, but she sends him "fair speechless messages," by using his hand as an automatic amanuensis. To look at him while he is scribbling you would think that he was writing, and your opinion would be confirmed if you saw the stuff afterwards. But you would (of course!) be mistaken. The hand is the hand of Stead, but the words are the words of Julia.

It is a common superstition that ghosts know what is going to happen; although our only definite idea of foresight is prediction founded on experience. Ghosts appear to know the future by intuition. Accordingly, Mr. Stead tells us that Julia has given him many a "tip." She has informed him "confidently of events which were to occur—events which were scouted at the time as impossible, but which nevertheless actually took place."

All this is very edifying, but it would be still more edifying if Mr. Stead would give us an opportunity of checking his prophetess. He is sufficiently cautious to disclose none of her predictions until they are realised. But it would be more satisfactory if he would disclose them beforehand. Our calculations would then be in no peril of disturbance by Mr. Stead's aberrations of memory. There are even other aberrations which are not beyond the limits of conceivability.

Digitized by Google

In another part of this magazine Mr. Stead refers to a prediction made two years ago that "the Liberals would be left in a minority of over 100." The same prophet predicted that "after Lord Salisbury got his three-figured majority he will in three years' time pass a measure of local government for Ireland, which will be Home Rule in all but name." Whether the bad grammar be Mr. Stead's or Julia's, we may reasonably assume that the predictions are hers. And what predictions they are! Why, hundreds of people have said that the Tories would pass a Home Rule Bill in disguise. It is almost a commonplace of political prophecy. The "minority of over 100" is a good guess, but it is no more. Had the prophet known, she would have given the exact number.

And this Julia-Stead nonsense is the world's new pledge of immortality!

G. W. FOOTE.

NAPOLEON'S RELIGION.

(Concluded from page 450.)

NAPOLEON'S phenomenal intellectual capacity is admitted on all hands. His words often have the sharpness of a sword. "Half measures are always dangerous." "Hazard nothing, gain nothing." "Speeches pass, actions remain." Scorn dominates sometimes, as when he says: "No government so tyrannical as one calling itself paternal." "The kitchen is a fine accessory to government." "Men are rare." "People in general are but big children." "There are rattles for all ages." "We must laugh at men to avoid crying." "From the sublime to the ridiculous there is but one step."* "Fortune is an arrant courtesan." "Wash your dirty linen at home." "We can march quicker when we march alone."

His utterances on religion are of this serious cynical turn: "In all countries," he said, "religion is useful to the Government; it should be used to control the people." Again he said: "Nothing more debases a nation than religious despotism." "The decadence of Italy dates from the moment when the priests would govern the finances, the police, and the army."

The intimate alliance of the Christian religion with political tyranny he noted in saying: "The French people, in order to obtain a constitution founded on reason, had to conquer eighteen centuries of prejudices" (Moniteur, vol. xxix., p. 90). In Egypt he told his soldiers to co-operate as cordially with believers in the Koran as with Jews and Christians, and to show the same respect to their muftis and imams as to archbishops and rabbis. He himself observed the feast of Ramazan, realising the verse of Voltaire on Zaire, that he is "a Christian in Italy, a Freethinker in Paris, and a Mussulman on the banks of the Nile."

When First Consul, Lafayette urged him to give equal liberty to all sects, placing them, as in the United States, outside the Government, he observed: "Lafayette is right in theory, but he always believes himself in America. The Catholic religion prevails here. Moreover, I have need of the Pope, and he will do whatever I wish." He disliked sects, and idealogues were his bête noire. "An established religion," he remarked, "is a kind of vaccination, which, in satisfying our love of the marvellous, guarantees us against quacks and sorcerers; the priests are worth more than the Cagliostros, Kants, and the rest of the German dreamers."

Speaking of his soldiers wearing the turban when in Egypt, he said: "Collectively, an army may well pretend to be of any description of worship, but it should in this obey the orders of a general-in-chief, who is as much the organ of his country as the flag is its symbol. Yet it would be odious for the soldiers individually to each deny the beliefs and faiths of their fathers, to improve their own position." He found his own policy confirmed, not by the words, but by the deeds of priests in all ages.

At St. Helena he said: "Theologians of all religions are the same; they spare neither ink nor words to enforce, according to their passions, their authority, or their caprice, a certain elasticity to the law of Moses, to that of Jesus Christ, or of Mohammed."

Napoleon sought to, and did, utilise religion in the matter of his coronation, his divorce, and the conscriptions. He considered it as a buttress of his own power, and at the time of the Concordat observed: "Mark the insolence of the priests who, in sharing authority with what they call the temporal power, reserve to themselves all action on the mind—the noblest part of man, and take it on themselves to reduce my part to physical action. They retain the soul, and fling me the corpse." He wished to be head of the Church as well as of the State. "You will see," he said, while negotiating the Concordat, "how I will turn the priests to account, and, first of all, the Pope." Parodying Voltaire, he said: "Had no Pope existed, it would have been necessary to create him"—viz., to give a spiritual sanction to his own authority. He let the clergy know they were servants of the State. When the curé of St. Roch refused to bury an opera dancer, he published in the Moniteur: "The Archbishop of Paris orders the curé of St. Roch in a retreat of three months, in order that he may bear in mind the injunction of Jesus Christ to pray for one's enemies." The Church was made the hand-maiden of the State.

All Catholic children were taught to pray for and serve Napoleon. "For God has raised him up for us in times of peril, that he might restore public worship and the holy religion of our fathers, and be its protector." M. Taine says: "Every boy and girl in each parish recite this to the vicar or curé after vespers in their tiny voices as a commandment of God, and of the Church, as a supplementary article of the creed. Meanwhile the officiating priest gravely comments on this article, already clear enough, at every morning and evening service; by order he preaches in behalf of the conscription, and declares that it is a sin to try to escape from it, to be refractory; by order, again, he reads the army bulletins, giving accounts of the latest victories; always by order he reads the pastoral of his bishop—a document authorised, inspired, and corrected by the police. . . . . 'You must praise the Emperor more in your pastoral letters,' said Real, Prefect of Police, to a young bishop. 'Tell me in what measure.' 'I do not know,' was the reply. Since the measure cannot be prescribed, it must be ample enough."

Napoleon said: "Popes have committed too many absurdities to be believed infallible."* Yet it was his own attempt to subjugate the Pope which led onwards to the claim for infallibility. He has left on record his plans to be head of the Christian Church. "If I had returned from Moscow victorious," he said, "I should have exalted the Pope beyond measure, surrounding him with pomp and deference. . . . . I would have made him an idol. He should have dwelt beside me. Paris would have become the capital of the Christian world, and I would have governed the religious as well as the political world. I would have had my religious as well as my legislative sessions; my council would have represented Christianity; the Pope should have been only their president. I would have opened and closed these assemblies, approved and published their decrees, as was done by Constantine and Charlemagne." Here we see the quality by which Napoleon outshone the great generals of all ages—his imaginative daring. It may seem strange that a man of such soaring mind and dauntless ambition should never have questioned the great god-ghost bogie. But, in truth, with all his clear, direct view of the things before him, he was in matters of speculative philosophy but an uncultured Corsican. "Who made all that?" satisfied him as a complete answer to Atheism, just as it satisfies, for a time, the merest child. So he remained a Deist.

Las Casas reports him as saying: "Everything proclaims the existence of a God—that cannot be questioned; but all religions are evidently the work of man. Why are there so many? Why has not ours always existed? Why does it consider itself exclusively the right one? What becomes, in that case, of all the virtuous men who have gone before us? Why do these religions oppose and exterminate one another? Why has this been the case ever and everywhere? Because men are ever men;

* This was taken from Paine, who says in his Age of Reason: "One step above the sublime makes the ridiculous, and one step above the ridiculous makes the sublime again."

* Les Papes ont fait trop de sottises pour les croire infaillibles.

Digitized by Google

because priests have ever and everywhere introduced fraud and falsehood." He said that his incredulity did not proceed from perverseness or from licentiousness of mind, but from the strength of his reason. Yet, added he, "no man can answer for what will happen, particularly in his last moments. At present I certainly believe that I shall die without a confessor." His doubt on the subject was warranted by self-knowledge. But it was rather his desire to die with all the éclat which the Church ceremonies could give than the return of faith which, after his trying illness, led him to receive on his death-bed the sacrament from Père Vignali. J. M. WHEELER.

OUR VIEW OF THE BIBLE.

THE severe criticism to which the Bible has been recently subjected has induced many intelligent professors of Christianity to considerably modify their opinions as to the nature and authority of the alleged "sacred writings." While many of the old orthodox believers still retain their fetish notions of the Bible, the more enlightened Christians refuse to accept it as "the very word of the very God." Modern thought has so impressed their minds that they cannot submit either to the authority of a tradition which has varied with all climes and ages, or to a Church whose history is a record of blunders, compromises, falsifications, and self-contradictions, which probably are unequalled in the annals of any merely secular institution. Such persons profess to remain Christians by believing that God's saving revelation to mankind is made in the Bible, and that every one may read it for himself if he studies the volume in a reverent and prayerful spirit. They admit many errors of copyists, reject many passages, and even books, as decidedly spurious, and regard many others as doubtful; yet maintain that, all deductions made, there is left a clear and sufficient divine message, whose essential character is untouched by any of the errors or defects, and unchanged by any of the various readings.

Now, although this is termed the "advanced view" to take of the Bible, it appears to us to be the most illogical theory which a Christian can hold upon the subject. The thorough Protestant bibliolater is consistent in his blind submission of reason to faith, and the Roman Catholics are equally consistent in their blind submission to tradition and ecclesiastical authority; for they both seek to reconcile things which are essentially irreconcilable—reason and faith, freethought and revelation, liberty and servitude, the natural and the supernatural. Such a theory is open to the fatal objection that it makes man the measure and standard of his God: setting up certain Scriptures as supernatural and divine, then subjecting them to the arbitrament of human nature and reason. Each of those who hold this theory says in effect: "Here are books purporting to contain the word of God, and I believe they do contain it, but mixed with it are many vain words of men; therefore what suits me I shall consider divine, and what does not suit me I shall reject." Numerous clever attempts have been made to smooth away this sharp self-contradiction; but, so far as we are aware, and as was to be expected, not one has been put forward that can be deemed even plausible by any candid outsider.

Personally, we regard the Bible as a merely human production, abounding in the faults, and errors, and superstitions common to ancient human works, the venerable days of old being the infancy of mankind. There is much in its pages that is very objectionable in phraseology, and decidedly foolish and vicious in sentiment. Still, being, as we believe, an emanation of the human mind, such a work must necessarily contain something of a useful character; and our duty is to examine its contents fairly, to accept the better parts, and to reject that which is not in harmony with the genius of the times. We should make our standard of judgment the value of the writings, not their supposed authority.

In reference to the Old Testament, it appears to us to be in one respect valuable, as representing the earliest traditions, and the gradual religious development, throughout several centuries, of a nation which seems always to have been peculiar, and whose religious convictions were, and are, unusually intense. The work of any one man, however great his genius, cannot have the historical interest of a national work like this, composed of treatises written at various periods, by men of very various minds, but all to a certain extent controlled by the same great national traditions and expectations. In many respects these various treatises are incongruous, for in the development and decadence of a nation, as of an individual, there are very incongruous phases; but inconsistencies fatal to the claim of Divine inspiration, which should have been immutable throughout, give the greater historical interest to these writings, as the productions of men whose leading inspiration in most cases was the destiny of their own people.

The great legislator who stamped this peculiar character upon the Jews—which, in spite of all aberrations and calamities, has preserved them a distinct people to this day, scattered among all nations for many hundred years, yet merged in none—appears to have been Moses, though we are by no means bound to accept the legends of his miracles and the forty years' wandering in the wilderness. And here it may be noted that those who see something miraculous, or, in other words, the hand of God, in this distinct preservation of the Jews conveniently forget that the ten tribes who were carried away by Shalmaneser, King of Assyria (2 Kings xvii., xviii.), so completely lost their characteristics, and blended with the nations around them, that not a sure trace of them can be found. Speculative writers, indeed, have identified them with nearly every later people, from the Aztecs and Red Indians to us English. But no satisfactory evidence of such an identification has been produced.

Two things are notable as pervading the Old Testament from beginning to end, equally conspicuous in Moses and David and the latest of the prophets. First, loyalty of the Jews to Jehovah was always to be rewarded by prosperity and dominion in this life, in their land of Palestine and its borders; disloyalty to Jehovah and the worship of other gods, by calamity and servitude. Secondly, the patriotism enjoined and cultivated in the Jews was so exclusive as to mean scorn and hatred of all other peoples about them, whom they were not only permitted, but commanded and urged, to drive out, to enslave, or even utterly to destroy. The old Jewish God was a jealous God, who hated all other gods with an abhorrence precisely proportioned to the abhorrence of the Jews themselves for the Gentiles. He was a stern and solitary autocrat, who would allow no rival near his throne; differing herein essentially from the social and easy-natured gods of the Greeks and other Polytheists. His character undergoes very considerable changes in the interval between the Pentateuch and the Prophets. In the former the sins of the father were to be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generations; in the latter everyone was to bear only his own sins. But, in both alike, mankind are in his hands as clay in the hands of a potter; he is an irresponsible Eastern tyrant, savage and implacable against all who do not worship him alone; and the only people for whom he cared were the Jews. Such is the narrow, intense, pitiless patriotism of the Hebrew Old Testament.

Coming to the New Testament, we find remarkable changes. It professes to reveal to us the very Messiah whom the Jews certainly expected, and whom they expect still, and are likely to expect a very long while yet. They were undoubtedly right in rejecting Jesus of Nazareth as this Messiah, even if we allow that there was such an historical person as a nucleus around which the gospel myths gradually clustered. The Bible states that the promised Messiah was to restore the kingdom of the twelve tribes of Israel in glory and prosperity, in their own land of promise; and no one can pretend that Jesus did anything of the sort. He found the remnant of the two tribes, the kingdom of Judah, subject to the Romans, and left them subject to the Romans; and, so far from attempting to deliver his countrymen from the foreign yoke, his only political advice to them was the galling and absurd command: "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." No amount of unsubstantial talk about a new Jerusalem in the heavens and a heavenly kingdom can remove this monstrous disparity. Let us do the Jews justice: their promised Messiah has certainly not yet come, and it is gross ignorance and insolence upon the part of the Christians to try to persuade them that he has.

The "higher criticism" has shown that most of the books of the New Testament are not trustworthy, either as regards their genuineness or their authenticity. Unaccredited and undated, many of these books were slipped into the Canon, while countless other gospels and epistles, with claims of equal worth or worthlessness, have been excluded. The books which composed this New Testament were first circulated at a time when the critical spirit was non-existent, and when true believers accounted all forgeries in favor of their religion not only permissible, but praiseworthy. The amount of falsification prevalent, which can be demonstrated even now, when so many of the required testimonies are lost, is astounding, and even appalling, to one who newly enters on the inquiry by studying the work of some competent and impartial scholar. Of these falsifications and uncertainties the ordinary Christians know nothing; and the learned Christians, who are thoroughly aware of them, are anything but anxious to point them out to their ignorant brethren.

Digitized by Google

Setting aside the absurd pretension that the New Testament is a "divinely-inspired" book, we acknowledge that it contains features deserving of admiration. Its two great drawbacks are, that most of its ethical teachings are impracticable, and that its writers held the delusion that the end of the world was at hand. Looking for this daily and hourly, they naturally gave no attention to the improvement of this world by social or political reforms, any more than one would plan repairs in his house if persuaded that it was to be burnt down very soon. Their only care was to be ready for the kingdom of heaven, and for this belief in the Lord Jesus Christ was all-sufficient. Hence, while we find in this book many noble moral sentiments, it is worse than neutral, it is bitterly hostile to that scientific Secular spirit of prudence, free thought, free action, social effort, by which we hope to make a happy life for man on earth. CHARLES WATTS.

TAMPERING WITH TRUTH.

"The profoundest of all infidelity is the fear lest the truth be bad."—Herbert Spencer.

AMONGST all disputants, and, in fact, amongst the mass of men in any community, there must be at least some common accepted standards by which differences can be measured. We must—all of us—have a definite starting point; we must build from some definite foundation. Thus, for instance, every man, whether he be an Atheist or a Christian, a Buddhist or a Bonze, accepts the proposition that things which are equal to the same are equal to one another. Each of them accepts, also, the proposition that two and two make four, and that murder is wrong. I merely instance these at random. There are thousands of other propositions we all agree on, and I am strongly inclined to think that the most extreme Atheist and the most devout Christian agree on infinitely more points than they differ on. That, of course, is no reason why we should not continue to investigate and compare our differences, however.

But in addition to the axioms I have enumerated on which we all agree, there is another most important proposition that we all should agree on, and the discussion of which is the object of this article. That proposition is, that demonstrated falsehoods must not be believed, and that the truth, when fully known, must be accepted. This proposition rests on another truth—viz., that the acceptance and the acting on the truth can never be otherwise than good, and can never cause evil or disaster.

Manifestly, it would be impossible to hold any disputation, say, with a man who did not accept the fact that two and two make four. Controversy would be out of the question. In the same way, how is it possible to discuss with a man who, when you have demonstrated the truth, will not accept it, on the ground that the falsehood is more consoling or more beneficial, and that the acceptance of the truth would cause unhappiness or ruin?

An Atheist, say, and a Christian argue on the assumption that when either has convinced the other—by appeals to reasons and axioms which both accept—that other will admit his error, and no longer hold the opinion he previously held. Otherwise the discussion would be objectless.

But there is a school which is making itself very important, and is attracting great attention latterly, which does not apparently accept the proposition that alone renders discussion possible or profitable. The leaders of this school are not, apparently, sure that demonstrated error may not be essential to race progress, and, in fact, that we must discuss and investigate, not with the object of arriving at the truth, but with the object of finding some belief which it is expedient to hold, whether it be true or false.

These remarks have been suggested by the interest excited by two recent books which have been hailed with acclamation by the religious world as apparently the most up-to-date expositions of the basis of religious faith. The books I refer to are Mr. Kidd's Social Evolution and Mr. A. J. Balfour's Foundations of Belief. Both of these works are ominous of the line which the defenders of religion are taking up, and it is a line which ought to make sincere religionists anxious for the future of their beliefs. Whether sincere rationalists either can rejoice at the weakness of the religious defence when that weakness is purchased by a wide dissemination of a distrust in truth, is questionable also. For the sincere religionist and the sincere rationalist—in fact, the sincere man of any school of thought—agree that the truth, when found, must be accepted, however disagreeable, or however it may clash with preconceived opinions.

Now, it is not my intention to review at any length the two books I have named, for that has been done already in these columns. But I merely wish to examine the gist of their teaching, in the light of the remarks which I have made. What, then, is the net teaching of Mr. Kidd's book? It is in reality that certain forms of belief fulfil an important function in helping the progress of mankind. As to whether any of these forms of belief are true or false, Mr. Kidd studiously avoids expressing an opinion, whilst some of them—viz., Buddhism, Mohammedanism, Mormonism, etc.—he would undoubtedly concede that he considered false. Here, then, we have put forward and accepted by the religious side, as the best modern "scientific" defence of religion, a book which admittedly discusses the utility of what the author considers to be some falsehoods, whilst it is very possible the author considers all the beliefs whose sociological function he is expounding are not true. The effect of Mr. Kidd's proceeding is naturally to suggest that falsehood may have a use, and a very good use. This is really tampering with truth, and the result of this mode of writing would be to shake all sincerity and the natural instinct in man which finds its highest satisfaction in knowing the truth. We are further, it seems, to pursue our studies into mythology and comparative religion, not by examining the genesis of the religions and seeing how they grew up and by what soil they were nurtured, always being helped in our research by the light of the real knowledge we now possess: we are, according to the fashionable process now in vogue, to begin—and end—by discussing what "function" the religious beliefs we are investigating played in the history of the people who held them. And if we find that a certain nation, under the influence of a certain belief, won military glory or commercial success, we are to write volumes on the "functions" of the said belief, whilst never hinting or concerning ourselves at all with whether it be true or not. Such, by implication, is the style which is suggested by recent developments. We are to take "beliefs"—no matter how absurd or false—as so many positive unchangeable facts, pretending not to see that any function—beneficial or otherwise—which they ever fulfilled depended on the fact that the people who held them held them as part of the truth.

Turning from Mr. Kidd's to Mr. Balfour's work, what is the underlying proposition of The Foundations of Belief, really, but an elaboration of Voltaire's mot about the necessity of inventing a God? Mr. Balfour is, in fact, so far from being sure about his "foundations" that he tells us he can satisfy himself of the inadequacy of Naturalism much more easily than of the adequacy of any of its opponents. "Man," says Mr. Balfour, "so far as natural science by itself is able to teach us, is no longer the final cause of the universe, the Heaven-descended heir of all the ages." But Mr. Balfour would like still to regard man as the Heaven-descended heir; so, instead of proving that "natural science" is wrong when it tells us he is not, Mr. Balfour says, in effect, "Hang natural science!" The lady who writes under the pen-name "John Oliver Hobbes," reviewing Mr. Balfour's book some time back in the Weekly Sun, put the case perfectly. "Mr. Balfour," she wrote, "may be compared to the Friar John in Rabelais, who encouraged his followers in going forth to battle by saying: 'I know of a charm by way of prayer that will preserve a man from the violence of guns and all manner of fire-weapons and engines, but it will do me no good, because I do not believe in it.'" That hits off Mr. Balfour to the life. And, indeed, it is noteworthy that these two books —Mr. Kidd's and Mr. Balfour's—should be of such a character. It has been well said that an interesting moment would be that in which a questioner should ask Mr. Balfour: "This religion which you defend, do you really believe it?"

Digitized by Google

But it is certainly memorable that the two works which have created most stir in religious circles, and have been accepted with acclamation by almost every religionist, from Mr. Stead to the editor of the Tablet, should be so questionable in logic and in sincerity. Mr. Kidd—possibly sincerely —tortuously reasoning on the folly of trusting to reason and "deciding by a process of reasoning that a process of reasoning cannot decide the question"; Mr. Balfour spinning a treatise in defence of that in which no one believes Mr. Balfour believes—they are pretty pillars of a faith which through history has been buttressed by ignorance and insincerity at every corner.

The fact really is, that religion has been fairly beaten on the ground of Truth. Putting simply the question, "Is religion true?" there is really only one answer that any candid man who examines the evidence can give. And by religion I mean the various beliefs in what is called the "supernatural" and the ceremonies flowing from those beliefs. But, seeing they are vanquished on the question of the truth or falsehood of their creed, the more clever if less sincere religionists are seeking to shift the ground of the dispute to the question, Is religion expedient? It is a shuffle that displays their weakness. Of course we know that religion can be beaten too on this ground, for it will not take much to show that, because religion is false, so it is expedient. But for the moment the religionist who adopts the Balfour-Kidd tactics will have a mass of existing prejudice on his side, and many otherwise straightforward people will begin to drug their intellects into the opinion that, after all, even if their childish beliefs be false, they may be very useful—doesn't Mr. Kidd say they keep society together, and doesn't Mr. Balfour argue that they supply the needs of man, and that what supplies the needs of man must be good?

It must be emphasised, however, that this tricking with what ought to be the most solemn truths is treason to the highest and best ideals of man. And it must be known as such and branded as such by everyone who values truth more than a petty victory for a petty creed. The best philosophy that ever sprang from the brain of man is not worth a single lie, and the philosophy which requires lies constantly to support it is a centre of intellectual and moral poison which saps and kills all vitality of thought or sincerity of action. This thing is true, or it is false. We do not want to know is it useful, does it "supply needs," will it "fulfil functions." We cannot hand these beliefs over to be played with by clever dialecticians, or made the subject of dull paradoxes by self-condemned "scientists." As Lowell has asked, in lines peculiarly appropriate to the present case:—

> Think you Truth a farthing rush-light, to be pinched out when you will
> With your deft official fingers, and your politician's skill?

Truth, however, the thing that is, is stronger than all the word-mongers and the argument-jugglers and the time-servers and the priests. And we might say, in conclusion, that the more the mass of men are true to themselves, the less chance will the word-jugglers have. It is an evidence of how far insincerity has eaten into our conventional thought, that the insincere book is praised. When thought is free, and things are known for what they are, politicians on a holiday will find some other recreation than writing books, the effect of which largely is to undermine the natural reverence for truth, and shake the inherent faith in man—the faith shared by every sincere human being—that the knowledge of what is true is right, is good, is useful and can never be an evil, and the instinct which rejects the slander that the race needs, or can ever need, an atmosphere of falsehood to enable it to live. FREDERICK RYAN.

NUDE WORSHIP.

THE thirteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. John has an account of a supper at which Jesus Christ entertained his disciples. The same relates that, when he had eaten all he wanted, or all there was in sight, he laid aside his clothes, took a towel and girded himself, and proceeded forthwith to wash the feet of the brethren. Two customs of considerable antiquity are supposed to have their origin in the proceedings of this occasion, one being the communion and the other the washing of feet as a religious ceremony. Now another feature of the evening is found to have had a theological significance—namely, the removal of the clothes. And why not? The master of ceremonies evidently had some reason for appearing in the nude, and, whatever it was, those who cannot understand may at least imitate, as they do in many other instances. Hence it occurs that in Omaha, Neb., a sect has arisen which, while retaining the communion and pedobaptism, has added thereto the bath in the altogether. The New Testament account does not tell whether or not ladies were present at the doings described, but the Omaha sect takes it for granted that they were, and so the brethren and sisters worship together like Adam and Eve, and profess not to be ashamed to do so. Their rites consist of a bath, after which the souls of the worshippers repose together and drink in the love of God, as a devotee describes it to the newspaper men. A peculiar theory of this sect is, that the love of God emanates from neither the heart nor the brain, but has its rise in the bowels and in the adjacent organs of continuity; and they hold that, as brethren and sisters should bear testimony openly to what God has done for them, the nude exhibition and contact become a divine command. There is any amount of scripture to be quoted in support of the practice—twice as much as there is for some religious observances that are enforced by law—Sunday-keeping, for example, which is almost entirely destitute of Biblical authority. In the first place, the only perfect beings the Creator ever had the kindness to locate on this sphere were habituated to nudity all the time they were perfect; and it is plain enough that, if any would become like them, the first necessity is to strip. Again, when David blessed his household he wore no clothes. Likewise Saul, when the spirit of God came upon him, "stripped off his clothes," as the inspired book puts it, and did not resume them for twenty-four hours. Micah, too, believed that, by discarding the habiliments of civilisation, he could appease the divine wrath; and Isaiah walked naked and barefoot for years. Woman had not enough influence in Bible times to affect the destiny of the universe by anything she could do of her own motion; still, if Bathsheba had kept her bloomers on, there would have been no savior along the line of David. Passing thence to Solomon, observe the language of his Song. True, there is no doubt (shellso) that here we have Christ addressing his bride, the Church, and the Church responding; but at the same time their descriptions of each other are so minute and circumstantial that we know at once that their observations were not impeded by conventional attire.

The doctrines of this new sect are especially adapted to the purposes of seaside and arboreal camp-meetings, and also to the warmer latitudes, where its missionaries would find the timber peeled ready to hand.

—Truthseeker. GEORGE E. MACDONALD.

CHRISTIANITY, which, if our accounts be true, threatened to seduce large numbers of people from their allegiance to the orthodox creed, was practically extinguished among the Jews themselves by the death of Christ. They could not possibly believe in a crucified Messiah. Only a very small band of disciples persisted in adhering to Jesus, justifying their continued faith by asserting that he had risen from the tomb. But it was no longer among the countrymen of Jesus, whom he had specially sought to attach to his person and his doctrine, that this small remnant of his followers could find their converts. Neither then nor at any subsequent time has Christianity been able to wean the Jews from their ancient faith. The number of those who, from that time to this, have abandoned it in favor of the more recent religion has been singularly small.—Viscount Amberley.

Digitized by Google

GOD AND NATURE.

Professor George John Romanes has left a palinody to the world—viz., Thoughts on Religion, edited by Canon Gore. Where the carcase is the vultures appear. He speaks of the religious instincts of humanity, and, treating them as scientific phenomena, he opines that their existence is an argument for an objective reason of religious fact (!), because nature presents us with no analogy for such instincts existing in vacuo, and without reference to any reality outside the subject. Nature abhors a vacuum. We know what nature is, but who knows anything of God? They are not connected. "Les deux ne se disent pas." Nature communes with all men, palpably; God communicates with a few favorites, schemers, and mystery-mongers, whose hybrid religions have well-nigh ruined mankind. Nature speaks to us in unmistakable accents; the lessons taught by her are salutary, and readily understood. Not so the so-called words of God. The very language in which they were uttered is a dead one. As to a correct translation and interpretation, the most learned men of all denominations differ more or less. The very origin of those so-called revelations—cui bono?—is doubtful. Honest thinkers, men not connected with clerical authorities, boldly assert that they are a fraud—a cruel fraud—for they have set millions at variance, and been the cause of diabolical cruelty and bloodshed.

Charles Kroll Laporte.

WHERE ARE THE WICKED?

A serious explosion on the footstool had occurred,
And the flames ran up his garment to the throne;
And though no personal damage was done unto the Lord,
The Recording Angel's office soon was gone.
And when he saw his day-books and his ledgers all ablaze,
He wrung his hands and cried, "What shall I do?
When Javeh comes to know it, the Devil he will raise—
I will go consult good Mo, the crafty Jew."

Soon to earth came the recorder, by advice of Holy Mo,
And visited the graveyards every one,
In hopes that he would find beneath the names of so-and-so
The evil and the good that they had done.
But behold, in ev'ry burial-ground from pole to pole, he found
No wicked person e'er had been interred,
For on ev'ry slab of freestone or marble above ground
Not a word to aught but upright lives referred.

"Alas!" exclaimed the registrar, "where are the wicked dead?
No stone records that they have ever been;
Yet sins by billions I have booked—where are the sinners fled?
Not a trace of their existence have I seen.
It seems to me Jehovah has been cruelly misled;
That wickedness was prevalent on earth;
I've read a trillion tombstones placed above the pious dead,
And every one records their honest worth.

"But where will God's chum, Satan, find the wherewithal to fill
The pit of which Jehovah made him king?
When old Gabe gets out his trumpet and tootles loud and shrill,
And Knox with Mary dance the highland fling?*
The Lord must start creating a diff'rent kind of folk,
And give them to the Devil as his due,
Wherewith the pit that's bottomless to plentifully stock—
That peace may ever reign between the two."

T. Clark.

Nature does not countenance any theory of the original perfection and subsequent degradation of the human race; and the supposition of a frustrated original plan of creation, and of later important endeavors to correct it, is as inconsistent with divine omnipotence and wisdom as the proposed punishment of the human race and the mode devised to save some of them are opposed to justice and morality.—"Supernatural Religion," iii., 572.

* John Knox, remonstrating with Mary, Queen of Scots, said: "There'll be nae dancin' in hell." To my thinking, she was a sensible lass to have her reel when she had the chance.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.

A Frenchman, having heard of Mrs. Stanton's projected Woman's Bible, jumps to the conclusion that it is a new version, and not, as it will be, a commentary. He expects it will read like this:—

"On the sixth day God created woman, and called her name Eve.

"As she was weary in the Garden of Eden, and fell asleep from fatigue under a palm-tree, the Lord took one of her ribs and made of it a man; and he called his name Adam.

"And Eve, when she had looked upon her husband, after she awoke, made a curious grimace which clearly signified, 'What is this fellow doing here?'

"And she added to herself, 'I was alone, and consequently tranquil, in this beautiful garden, all of whose fruits were mine; wherefore has this spoil-sport been sent me? Now I shall have to divide with him. A nice gift, surely!'

"And with a prophetic glance into the future she foresaw the quarrels, the hair-pullings, and the divorces that were henceforth to be the lot of coupled humanity."

A little further along we read this passage, which is at once a revelation and a revolution:—

"Nevertheless, on his part, the man became weary also. He had not yet invented baccarat and horse-racing; but bad instincts, rising perversities, began to agitate him.

"He had been given permission to eat all the savory fruits that Paradise produced in abundance, but he quickly grew tired of all these good things.

"Now he had been forbidden to taste of the fruits of a single tree, an ordinary apple-tree that produced acrid fruit of detestable flavor—which fact caused Adam to frequent the vicinity of that particular tree.

"One day, not being able to restrain himself, he plucked an apple, and, without even offering a single bite to his companion, he ate the whole himself.

"How well we recognise here the vile taste and the abominable egotism of man!

"In punishment for this disobedience they were both banished from the terrestrial paradise, and the innocent Eve suffered for the guilty Adam.

"So, during the ages, the woman shall pay for the pots that the man has broken!"

MIRACLES: LEGENDS OR MYTHS?

Dr. W. S. Crowe, in the Non-Sectarian, endeavors to explain the growth of the miraculous in the Christian system. Some of this he attributes to exaggeration, for even natural facts would, by exaggeration, assume a miraculous air; like the feeding of five thousand, or the killing of five hundred thousand chosen men in one day (2 Chron. xiii. 17). Dr. Crowe says: "Solomon made a great sacrifice of sheep and oxen at the dedication of the Temple, but he did not sacrifice a hundred and forty-four thousand. Moses led out a large number of Israelites from Egyptian bondage, but not three millions, and he did not support any such host in the wilderness forty years." He holds that there was a basis of fact at the bottom of the reputed "healings" by Jesus. But it is arguable that the basis of fact lay in the wonders ascribed to the sun. Dr. Crowe observes: "Having credited Jesus with all manner of healing, the idea was completed by crediting him with power to raise the dead." A resurrection was ascribed to all the sun-gods of antiquity, and the very core of the Egyptian religion was that, as the sun came to life after his descent into the underworld, so he had power to raise his worshippers. Dr. Crowe admits, in so many words, that "the story of Samson is an awkward Hebrew version of the universal sun-myth. His long, strong hair represents the burning rays of the summer sun. The Delilah, in whose lap he dallies, is the pleasant autumn, the Indian summer, emerging from which he enters the cold winter—his locks shorn, his strength gone. There he was in prison until his hair grew again, when he broke down the temple of the wintry ice."

Now, may not the gospel story be a Christian version of the universal sun-myth? The turning water into wine, the feeding of multitudes, the walking on the water, the descent into Hades, and the resurrection from the dead, while sheer nonsense if related of a human personality, as Dr. Crowe believes Jesus Christ to have been, are both natural, and, in a sense, true, when related of the sun.

MacSweeney Secundus.

There can be but little liberty on earth while men worship a tyrant in heaven.—R. G. Ingersoll.

Digitized by Google

ACID DROPS.

The Methodist Times notes, as we also noted, that Sir William Harcourt was turned out of Derby by Alderman Bemrose, President of the Young Men's Christian Association. Now the Methodist Times regards Sir William Harcourt as a Christian statesman. How, then, is the Derby disaster to be explained? Why, easily. Alderman Bemrose is not a Methodist: he is a Churchman. That accounts for his iniquity. How these Christians love one another!

Before the elections Mr. Hughes's paper chortled over the number of Methodists who were in the field under the Liberal banner. Alas! they have nearly all been defeated; and the "sacred cause" is under a cloud. And the worst of it that it is too late for praying. The mischief is done, and God Almighty himself cannot alter it.

The Weekly Mercury thinks the reduction of Sir George Trevelyan's majority at Glasgow "shows how feeling goes in the North against the party of Separation and Secularism." Fancy Sir William Harcourt belonging to the party of Secularism! Who would have thought it?

Mr. John Morley has lost his seat for Newcastle, and we are sorry for it. He is a man of intellectual distinction, and the House of Commons will be the poorer for his absence. But as Mr. Morley was to be defeated he might as well have fallen without a shadow upon his honesty. He is himself a Freethinker, and is of course opposed to political and social disabilities on account of religious or irreligious belief. But when he was heckled on the subject of the Blasphemy Laws and Liberty of Bequest he evaded the questions. Perhaps he thought it best to say nothing on such a ticklish subject, without meaning to desert the cause of freedom when it came to voting in Parliament. Yet he has lost his seat after all, so that he gained nothing by not being perfectly straightforward.

Mr. Fred Hammil, the Labor candidate at Newcastle, gave satisfactory answers to the questions put to him. He plainly declared his wish to see the Blasphemy Laws abolished altogether. No doubt there were some Freethinkers who voted for Mr. Hammil in consequence. And who can blame them for supporting candidates who recognise the iniquity of depriving them of the common rights of citizenship? If the Liberal party will keep Freethinkers outlaws until they make themselves "a nuisance," they will be forced to make themselves a nuisance. If it is useless to appeal to honesty, we must appeal to fear.

Mr. John Burns just managed to save his seat at Battersea. At one time he was a Secularist, and we do not know that he has ever renounced his old opinions. It seems to us, therefore, that Mr. Burns ought to be called upon to make some little stand for religious liberty as embodied in the "Religious Prosecutions Abolition Bill." The Battersea Branch of the National Secular Society should really interview him on the subject. It is their duty to do so first. If they neglect it, outsiders may have to perform it for them.

Mr. James Rowlands has lost his seat in East Finsbury. Many years ago he was a frequenter of the Hall of Science, and we presume he has still some affection for Freethought, but it is of a very platonic character. He did not even avail himself of Mr. Bradlaugh's Oaths Act. Instead of affirming at the table of the House of Commons, as the new law allowed, he went up and took the oath. Yet he is called a "sturdy" Radical.

There never seemed to us to be much "sturdiness" about the London Radical members. Still, we did not weep over the spectacle. Courage is really the rarest of virtues. It does not require very much of it to go with a big crowd. True courage comes in when a man plants himself firmly on a conviction, and stands alone, if need be, against the world. At any rate, there is no particular courage in risking nothing.

London Radicalism is at a very low ebb just now, and it will probably ebb still lower unless we get a revival of the old Bradlaugh spirit. Men like Stuart, Cremer, and Rowlands are all very well in their way, but they are not heroic enough to excite enthusiasm in the people. Radicalism was sturdy in the old days, when it was headed by Freethinkers, with Bradlaugh at the top of all, inspiring the rest with his fine mixture of sagacity and boldness.

"Q" has been asking in the British Weekly why it is that for Burns Scotsmen everywhere prepare after-dinner speeches, and set up images and sing and cheer and even fall below tables. "Q" thinks they have a greater writer in Sir Walter Scott. "Deas Cromarty" ventures to say "it is the religious note in Burns that fuses and kindles all the rest, that makes him the voice of the race at its best." We venture to affirm the contrary. It is the note of humanity, the simple pathos and sublime of human life, the freedom from all cant and hypocrisy, the plain absence of all the humbug which goes to make up religion, and especially Scotch religion, which makes hearts feel akin to Burns as vibrate in sympathy with his words of melody all over the globe. Burns is not a religious, but a liberating, influence, and the Burns worship is secretly disliked by the men of God, who feel it has helped to emancipate the once clergy-cowed Scotch from their influence.

Dr. Parker, in a recent sermon at the City Temple, said he accepted the Evolution theory. He did not explain how this was reconciled with the stories of the creation of woman and the Fall. He combated the notion, which he attributed to "some men of science," that man was humbled and degraded by the animals that had preceded him in the process of evolution. He did not say who the "some men" were. And then there are some men who think with Huxley that it is the scriptural story, rather than the story of nature, which is really degrading.

Dr. Griffith John, a missionary in China, says: "It is a fact that cannot be controverted that both the appetite and the demand for opium in China have been created by the introduction of the foreign article." Again: "The opium trade has been forced by England upon the Chinese, and that in direct opposition to the moral convictions of the nation, as well as the honest and long-continued resistance of the Government." This must be pleasant reading to English Christians who send missionaries to convert the heathen Chinese.

"The Chinese," says Dr. John, "call us devils, and when I think of this unprincipled and destructive trade I cease to wonder at it." Well, the "devils" are Bible-readers and true-blue Christians.

"With unbelief," says Dr. Pulsford, "hardness of heart is always associated." Yes, in Dr. Pulsford's mind; but his mind is not the measure of the universe. One is tempted to exclaim to these Pharisaic preachers, Doubtless ye are the people, and virtue shall perish with you!

"The world can stand anything but a fire-baptised church. It can stand logic and philosophy, and oratory, and music; but it cannot stand plain, common Gospel truth, red hot." This appears in the Methodist Times, and we hope it is true.

Curate Jones has been found by a jury to have committed adultery with Mrs. Worrall, and Mr. Justice Lawrence has granted a decree nisi in favor of the husband, with custody of the children. According to the evidence in court, one meeting between the guilty pair was in a churchyard. Curate Jones, after osculating his inamorata, went off to conduct divine service.

"The name of God has fenced about all crime with holiness." This line from Shelley's Queen Mab would be a text for an eloquent sermon. How true it is let the history of persecution and oppression bear witness. We see an illustration of it in the remarks of a certain Russian paper on the frightful assassination of Stambuloff, the Bulgarian statesman, who, while wishing to cultivate friendly relations with Russia, was anxious to maintain the independence of his own country. Stambuloff was murdered at a time when a Bulgarian deputation was approaching the Czar, and the Russian paper discerned in this coincidence the manifest hand of God!

Mr. Balfour (not Jabez, but A. J.) recently congratulated a Lancashire town on having escaped a great danger. That danger was the threatened establishment of a School Board. So much for the nephew, who leads the Tories in the House of Commons. And now let us turn to the uncle, who leads the Tories in the House of Lords. Lord Salisbury told the Church party, only a few weeks ago, that it was their duty to capture the School Boards. Putting the two declarations together, we have a clear view of the Tory policy in regard to education. First, keep up the voluntary schools by hook or crook, and prevent the introduction of Board schools; secondly, when Board schools can no longer be staved off, pervert them to the advantage of the Church. There is no humbug about this policy. It is plain, straightforward, and unscrupulous.

Probably the Tories will use their majority in the House of Commons, without any fear of the House of Lords, to endow the voluntary schools out of the rates as well as out of the taxes. Meanwhile it is well to note what is going on in the London School Board. An effort is being made to let the schoolrooms free to ministers who wish to give the children religious instruction out of school hours. A motion to that effect has been made, and, although it was lost, it may be successful if it is introduced again when the Tories are settled down in office.

Digitized by Google

It is said that it takes more than three generations to get savagery out of the blood. This seems illustrated by a new religion started in Fiji, of which an account, evidently by Mr. Andrew Lang, is given in the Daily News of July 22. The prophet-founder calls himself "He who speaks once," and runs on well-worn lines. He promises immortality in heaven to those who believe in him, and lands here below to those who fight for him. He sells the boon of eternal life for whales' teeth, the rates varying from ten shillings to two pounds' worth. He thus financed his religious movement, whereof the doctrines were a blend of Fiji myth and Bible history, now for the first time correctly interpreted.

His story is that two unpronounceable Fijian heroes went to the white man's country, where they were named Jehovah and Jesus. They were now about to return, drive the whites into the sea, and redistribute white men's property—a most alluring "programme." Of course there is a hell for white heretics and unbelievers. Mr. Lang says: "The whole movement resembles that of the Hau-Haus in New Zealand, who made a religion (like the Covenanters) out of 'the fightingest parts of the Bible,' and gave a great deal of trouble." For our part, we discern a somewhat close resemblance between the new Fiji religion and primitive Christianity.

Mr. Gladstone, and, following him, many others, have spoken in praise of the Christian piety of the late Dr. Andrew Clark, who, we believe, was a good man, as well as an eminent physician. But now the Rev. Edward White writes to the British Weekly, pointing out that possibly Mr. Gladstone was not aware of his profound belief in the necessity of reconstructing the Christian faith, on what he believed to be the primitive belief of Christadelphianism. That is to say, Dr. Clark did not believe in Natural Immortality, but that it was a gift of Christ; nor in a personal devil or everlasting hell, but in everlasting destruction for all who do not attain immortality in Christ. This the Rev. Edward White calls "more Scriptural lines on the question of Immortal Life." All we say is, that the person who thinks he is going to be immortal, while the mass of people are going to be annihilated, must have cheek second only to those who believe they themselves are to have an immortality of bliss, while others have an immortality of woe.

The Popular Science Monthly, writing on "The Passing of Torture," says "King Menelek, who is said to have recently condemned a treacherous page to terrible sufferings by mutilations and exposure in the wilderness, calls himself a Christian. The Inquisition was in full blast under the ægis of the Church only two or three centuries ago, and autos-da-fe were festivals in Madrid down to 1780. Prisoners convicted of certain crimes were broken on the wheel only a bare hundred years ago in France." The P. S. M. does not mention that it was Voltaire who more than any other man contributed to the passing of torture from European law.

T. Ubsdell, a newsagent at Clacton-on-Sea, is determined to save Christianity, if one man can do it. He had been innocently supplying a customer with the Freethinker, but on learning the character of this publication—which, if he had any sense worth speaking of, he might have guessed from its title—he wrote to his customer as follows: "After this week I shall not be able to supply the Freethinker, as I find that it advocates principles that I cannot assist in circulating." We congratulate T. Ubsdell on the strength of his convictions. It is not every Christian who would sacrifice a farthing a week for his principles. We are sorry, however, that we cannot congratulate T. Ubsdell on the strength of his intelligence. It takes a fool in a newsagent's shop to see that he is responsible for the opinions of the various publications on his counter.

Our American contemporary, the Progressive Thinker, prints the following passage from a recent sermon by the Rev. A. A. Taylor, D.D., Chicago: "Hell is exactly fifty-two miles below the level of the sea, and my knowledge is based on the Bible, as Christ spoke of hell being below, and not above. The Bible also says that the sun moves around the earth, and does not say that the earth is round; for that reason I believe the earth to be flat; I have about concluded that there are many suns, and that we have a new one every day." Some Chicago asylum is evidently about to receive a new inmate.

Sabbatarianism is growing in Chicago. Barbers' shops are now closed on Sunday. But hair grows on human faces all the same, and the barbers are mocking the law by going round to their customers' houses and shaving them for twenty-five cents.

Rev. W. E. Broadhurst, pastor of a Methodist Episcopal Church in Arkansas City, being accused of immorality, has thrown up the sponge. "It is due to the public," he says, "that I make this confession. I am a fallen preacher, after twenty-one years of acceptable work in the Methodist Episcopalian Church. I have resisted thousands of temptations, but was caught at last." Parson Broadhurst is like old father Adam—"The woman tempted me, and I did eat." He hints that the women of his church were always after him. So much for the ethical value of Christian preaching! And so much for the gallantry of this pious tomcat!

"How long, O Lord, how long?" asks a writer in the Twentieth Century with reference to the wretched condition of so many of the workers. Well, we guess it will last as long as men are foolish enough to ask that question.

The reactionary Education Bill, put forward by the, for a while, triumphant clericals in Belgium, is occasioning much excitement there. When M. de Barlet, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, said he pitied parents who let their children wallow in a slough of Atheism, such a tumult arose in the Chamber that he was forced to resume his seat. Those who attend the Freethinkers' Congress at Brussels will have an opportunity of seeing how unfortunate are the children who wallow in the slough of Atheism, for a review of the infant troops of Freethought will be one of the features of the gathering.

We hear on every side that the Church has shown itself thoroughly partisan in politics, and that clergymen who once posed as Liberals have been working might and main for the winning side. This is all very well while it lasts; but when fortune changes the Church may find she has made a mistake in taking sides, and, if now triumphant with the winners, may some day be abased with the losers.

Father Joseph, a Capuchin friar, of the Church militant, has been in the habit of going about preaching in the South of France, and attracting attention to his open-air sermons by firing off a cannon. He has had the misfortune of killing a man therewith, and the too enterprising preacher has been fined two hundred francs for "homicide through imprudence."

Pilgrimages are not played out in Italy. More than ten thousand travelled from the province of Lucca, headed by their archbishop, to the shrine of the Madonna at Montenevo, where they made rich offerings in gold and silver. Ordinary waxworks are out of the running when priests take to the show trade; and they all are taking to it, more or less.

Dr. J. T. Reece, a medical practitioner at Ystradgyalas, Breconshire, had been called upon to attend a case of burning in a neighboring village, and, as he reached the top of the hill, he was struck and killed by lightning. Dr. Reece, and the horse he rode, were both discovered lying dead on the summit of the hill by the parent of the patient whom the deceased was about to attend. Providence thus interfered to thwart an errand of humanity. No wonder the old farmer said, "Drat that Providence!"

F. H. Groom, in Two Suffolk Friends, tells a good story of an old native who thought it "wrong of fooks to go up in a ballune, as that fare (seemed) so bumptious to the Almighty." It looked like an attempt to poach on the Deity's preserves.

G. W. N. Yost, the inventor of the typewriter, according to the New York Herald, got into the hands of a mejum, one Henry A. Rogers, who held out hopes of type-written communications from the spirit world. The result is that Yost is poor, and believed to be daft, while the mejum has a sumptuous house in West Fifty-Second-street. The Herald says Yost is as certain about "the lies which Rogers has told him as he is that there is a heaven." After all, Rogers only plays a certain phase of the racket which is the common game of all priests and charlatans.

An American bishop, B. Turner, has recently written at length in favor of the theory that Solomon was a colored man. We have not seen the work, but it certainly will prove curious reading. Possibly he attributes the words of the Canticles, "I am black, but comely," to Solomon, and not to his lady-love. King Solomon's mines, it is well known, are situated in Africa.

Christian Gent.—"What is your reduction for clergymen on books?" Shopkeeper—"Twenty per cent. Are you a clergyman?" Christian Gent.—"Not yet, but I expect to be. I'm half through my course at the theological seminary." Shopkeeper—"Then you can have ten per cent. Half clergyman, half reduction."

Digitized by Google

Mr. Foote's Engagements.

Sunday, July 28, Milton Hall, Hawley-Crescent, Kentish Town: 7.30, "The Bible and Local Veto."

August 4, Newcastle; 11, 18, and 25, St. James's Hall, London.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts's Engagements.—July 28, August 4 and 11, Camberwell; 18 and 25, Milton Hall, London.—All communications for Mr. Watts should be sent to him (if a reply is required, a stamped and addressed envelope must be enclosed) at 81 Effra-road, Brixton, London, S.W.

W. Strassheim.—Your letter arrived too late for notice in last week's Freethinker. Nor would a notice have been of any use, as the Newcastle polling was on Wednesday and our publishing day is Thursday. See this week's "Acid Drops."

J. Burt.—St. James's Hall is not in the centre of London, but it is remarkably accessible. 'Buses run from Piccadilly-circus to almost every part of London.

W. Stephens (Northampton).—As you are a reader of the Freethinker, it is best to answer your query in this column, instead of by post, as you desire. Mr. Foote has several times been questioned on this matter. Some months ago Mr. Johnson wrote to ask whether the rumor "all over Northampton" was true, that Mr. Foote was coming down to speak in support of Mr. Harford. The same rumor was "all over Northampton" during the recent election, and a friend of one of the candidates was commissioned to find out whether it was true. Mr. Foote has never been asked to speak for any candidate at Northampton, either by letter or otherwise. This was the answer Mr. Foote returned to Mr. Johnson; and this is the answer he makes now. All the non-Tory candidates were in favor of repealing the Blasphemy Laws; and, in the circumstances, it is difficult to see how Mr. Foote—as a Secularist—could discriminate between them.

G. T. Gibbons.—Close your ears to death-bed stories in Christian tracts. You will find the real facts about Paine's last hours in our Infidel Death-Beds. The story that he said the devil helped him to write the Age of Reason is one of the many lies told about this great Freethinker. The Christians, who could not answer him when living, slandered him when dead. It is a way they have.

E. G. Taylor.—We note that the Christian who, a few weeks ago, attend an obscene libel against Colonel Ingersoll has publicly apologised in the Manchester Secular Hall, and expressed his regret at having been misled by the wretch who originated that convicted libel on the Hall of Science.

A. Le Lievre, who has read Mr. Watts's "admirable articles" on Cromwell, points out that, according to Macaulay, the great Protector not only tried to obtain the readmission of the Jews to England, but actually permitted them to build a synagogue in London "in spite of the strong opposition of jealous traders and fanatical theologians."

L. Levine (Charleston).—Hearty thanks and greetings. We now exchange with the Blue Grass Blade, which we hope will flourish.

A. B. Price.—We have seen the statement again and again in the public press that Sir William Harcourt is not a teetotaler. As we do not know him personally, we are confined to public sources of information. If you are dissatisfied on the point, why not write to Harcourt yourself?

P. H. Echlin.—No good advertising in that way. Apply to Mr. Forder, who will find you a customer, if anyone can.

J. Gatley.—See paragraph. Thanks.

T. Wise.—We agree with all you say.

T. E. M.—Confucius taught the golden rule in China; so did Isocrates in Greece. The substance of it was taught by Buddha, and by most other ancient moralists.

J. H.—The Catholic Church is one church all over the world. Your question must therefore be answered in the negative.

H. Bryceson, late of Cook's-road, Walworth, is requested to send his address to William Simons, 12 Wolsey-road, Mildmay-park, N.

W. Waker.—It is a nonsensical evasion to say that the Church of England is not State-paid. All its property is held under a legal—that is, a parliamentary—tenure. Then look at tythes. Are they voluntary offerings? They are exactable by the same means as rates and taxes. We intend to deal with the whole subject shortly.

R. Hardy.—We can scarcely see the material for a paragraph in our special line of criticism.

J. Roberts (Liverpool) writes: "I hope Mr. Wise will not consider me tediously pertinacious when I ask him why he has not replied to the question whether opponents at his meetings have, or have not, been demanded their names and addresses. If he should now reply in the affirmative, we in Liverpool will know what reason to assign for his unconscionable delay."

J. G. Bartram.—Mr. Foote will have pleasure in "naming" the child at Newcastle. Send one of the lecture-bills when printed. We hope that sentiment, however justifiable, will not be allowed to stand in the way of the debate between Mr. Watts and the Rev. A. J. Walrond. All of us should keep an eye on the greater good, and subordinate our personal feelings.

Meredith (Birmingham).—Tuesday afternoon is too late. Still, we are obliged to you for the trouble you took.

W. T. Anderson (Sunderland) wishes to correct a statement in our last issue. It was not members of the Anti-Infidel League who disturbed Mr. Foote's meeting, but members of the Anti-Infidel Association. We should be sorry to do anyone an injustice, and we cheerfully publish the correction; but we wish these two bodies were more clearly distinguished.

James Garrow.—Thanks. See "Sugar Plums."

H. Diner.—You do not seem to understand our paragraph. Satire must not be read like an affidavit.

Papers Received.—Progressive Thinker—Light of Truth—Light—Two Worlds—Blue Grass Blade—New York Tribune—New York Sun—Brighton Examiner—New York Herald—Accrington Advertiser—Glasgow Weekly Herald—Truthseeker—Morning—Twentieth Century—Independent Pulpit—Western Figaro—Glasgow Evening Times—Single Tax—Liberator—Progressive Thinker—Kew Mercury—Freethought Ideal—Isle of Man Times—Public Opinion—Crescent—Poet.

Friends who send us newspapers would enhance the favor be marking the passages to which they wish to call our attention.

Letters for the Editor of the Freethinker should be addressed to 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C.

Correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday if a reply is desired in the current issue. Otherwise the reply stands over till the following week.

Lecture Notices must reach 28 Stonecutter-street by first post Tuesday, or they will not be inserted.

Orders for literature should be sent to Mr. R. Forder, 28 Stonecutter-street, E.C.

Scale of Advertisements.—Thirty words, 1s. 6d.; every succeeding ten words, 6d. Displayed Advertisements:—One inch, 4s. 6d.; half column, £1 2s. 6d.; column, £2 5s. Special terms for repetitions.

The Freethinker will be forwarded, direct from the publishing office, post free, at the following rates, prepaid:—One Year, 10s. 6d.; Half Year, 5s. 3d.; Three Months, 2s. 8d.

It being contrary to Post-office regulations to announce on the wrapper when the subscription is due, subscribers will receive the number in a colored wrapper when their subscription expires.

SPECIAL.

The three Sunday evening lectures I have arranged to deliver at St. James's Hall, on August 11, 18, and 25, are now being advertised, and Miss Vance has the tickets ready for sale. They do not allow a charge of less than one shilling for any assembly at St. James's Hall; and as the experiment will cost over twenty pounds, I must take reasonable precautions against a loss. The seats will be one shilling, two shillings, and five shillings. But for the sake of our own people I have had course tickets printed at the price of eighteenpence and three shillings.

It must be distinctly understood that no money can be taken at the doors, and I am not sure at present that it will be possible to have any free seats. Those who mean to attend for certain should secure tickets in good time.

I know that August is not the best time of the year for such an experiment, but the hall is engaged by others right through the winter, and I had to take the opportunity then or lose it altogether. May I therefore ask my London friends to make a special effort to fill the hall on these three Sunday evenings? It will be a kind of demonstration. While I am speaking in one part of the building the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes will be speaking in another part; and that in itself should be a kind of attraction.

One great advantage of this experiment will be that we may approach the proprietors or lessees of other halls afterwards with a better prospect of success. It will tend to break down prejudice against us and our propaganda.

While the pen is in my hand I venture to refer to the "Honorarium Fund" opened by a special committee for the National Secular Society's President. It would be silly to affect an ignorance of this matter. But all I have to say about it is this. I should not like to see the committee's appeal in the Freethinker for a long succession of issues. Those who intend to subscribe might do so promptly, so that I may look at my own paper without feeling uncomfortable.

G. W. FOOTE.

Digitized by Google

THE HONORARIUM TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

It will be remembered that at the last Conference of the National Secular Society a letter was read from Mr. George Anderson, suggesting that its President "should be recouped for his loss of time and money in serving the party's interests." Accordingly, the Conference appointed a Committee, consisting of Mr. George Anderson, Mr. Charles Watts, Mr. Robert Forder, and Mr. George Ward, to consider the best plan to be adopted for carrying out the suggestion. The Committee met and drew up a circular, which probably most of the readers of the Freethinker have seen.

This Committee unanimously passed the following resolution, proposed by Mr. George Anderson, and seconded by Mr. George Ward: "That the sum to be paid the President of the N.S.S. for this year be £100, to be confirmed, augmented, or diminished each year by vote of the Conference."

By this resolution it was the desire of the Committee to carry out the object, for which it had been appointed by the congress of delegates, in the most satisfactory manner both as to terms and amount, leaving the Society to act yearly in future as circumstances might dictate.

It is to be hoped that what has been done will meet with the approval of the Secular party, and that its members will subscribe the required amount as promptly as possible.

CHARLES WATTS.

[Subscriptions can be sent to Miss Vance, 28 Stonecutter-street, London, E.C., or paid to any member of the Committee.]

Subscriptions Received:—

Already acknowledged, £41 12s.

Per R. Forder: J. Denham, 2s. 6d.; D. Young, 1s.; Bolton Branch, 14s. 6d.; R. Green, 5s.; S. J. W., 5s.; J. Downing, £1; Seventeen Stone, 2s. 6d.

Per George Anderson: W. Cabell, 10s. 6d.; A. Stanley, 5s.

Per Miss Vance: W. H. Stevens, £1 1s.; C. Shepherd, 2s.; G. H., 2s. 6d.; W. Johnson, 5s.; G. W., 2s.; C. B., 10s.; A. F., 2s. 6d.

SUGAR PLUMS.

Despite the heavy rain, an excellent audience met at Milton Hall on Sunday evening, when Mr. Foote lectured on "Secularism and the New Parliament." Many questions were asked in response to the chairman's invitation. This evening (July 28) Mr. Foote lectures again at Milton Hall, his subject being "The Bible and Local Veto." Freethinkers in the district should try to bring some of their Christian friends to this lecture, in order that they may learn how much the Bible is a friend of Temperance.

Mr. Foote lectures at Newcastle-on-Tyne next Sunday (August 4). On that occasion he will formally open the Branch's new hall in Northumberland-street. Local friends who have promised to subscribe towards the expenses of this meeting-place are requested to remit to the secretary forthwith.

Mr. Charles Watts lectures this Sunday evening (July 28) at North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road. Our South London friends should rally in full force and give Mr. Watts a good reception.

Mr. W. B. Thompson, a "Secular" member of the Gillingham School Board, has just had a good stand-up fight with his clerical colleagues. The Rev. R. Morris, the chairman, moved that the Board schools should be opened and closed with hymn and prayer, and grace or doxology be sung at the dismissal before noon. In his sky-pilotship's opinion, this would give a good moral tone, and also fit the scholars for their secular education. This was seconded by the Rev. W. H. Bowers, and partially supported by two other members. Mr. Thompson, however, protested. He maintained that there were other people besides Christians to be considered. He moved as an amendment that parents should be notified that the attendance of their children at religious instruction was purely voluntary. This was defeated by the casting vote of the chairman. Mr. Thompson then moved that one moral lesson a week should be given to the children. Parson Morris couldn't very well oppose that, so it was carried unanimously. Let us hope the moral lesson will counteract what Mr. Thompson rightly objected to, on ethical and æsthetical grounds, in many of the hymns taught to children.

Referring to the matter of heckling the candidates about the blasphemy laws, the Two Worlds says: "Reports reach us from all sides of satisfactory replies to the questions put to the would-be Parliamentary representatives. This matter must be forced upon the attention of Parliament. We hope to deal more fully with it in an early issue. Last week's Freethinker had a valuable article and series of questions on the same lines."

Mr. James Pender, M.P. for Mid-Northamptonshire, gave a favorable reply to all our "Questions for Parliamentary Candidates," and stated his willingness to support a Bill, no matter by whom introduced, with the object of securing religious liberty for all. This pledge was given at a Conservative meeting.

Mr. G. J. Warren wrote to all the candidates for the various divisions of the Tower Hamlets with respect to the Blasphemy Laws and Liberty of Bequest. Out of the fourteen only three replied, though stamped, directed envelopes were enclosed for the purpose. Mr. James Haysman (Mile End), Mr. J. W. Benn (St. George's), and Mr. W. H. Dickenson (Stepney) gave satisfactory answers. Unfortunately, neither of them secured a seat. Better luck to them next time.

Both the Liberal (A. H. Pollen) and Unionist (E. W. Byrne) candidates at Walthamstow agreed that legacies ought not to be withheld from Secular Societies. Mr. Byrne, however, most illogically said he could not support the Liberty of Bequest Bill; while Mr. Pollen thought that if God was spoken of irreverently, the law ought to put a stop to it. Of course Mr. Pollen meant his God.

Mr. A. M. Latham, Liberal candidate in the Altrincham division, answered all our "Questions for Candidates" satisfactorily, and added: "I am in favor of the fullest religious equality."

Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, in South-West Bethnal Green, wrote to Mr. J. G. Neate: "I am in favor of the abolition of the Blasphemy Laws, and of the granting of Liberty of Bequest."

It is proposed in Nature that a national memorial to the late Professor Huxley shall be placed in the Natural History Gallery of the British Museum, South Kensington, where it will be beside the statues of Darwin and of Sir Richard Owen. A meeting has also been held to forward a memorial at the Charing Cross Hospital and Medical School, with which Huxley was connected in early life.

A very favorable report and balance-sheet were adopted at the half-yearly meeting of the Westminster Branch. Mr. W. Tanner was elected chairman in place of Mr. H. J. Stace, and it was unanimously agreed to present the late chairman with a written scroll as a mark of appreciation. Mr. Debley was elected delegate to the L.S.F., and it was decided that the Branch's Annual Excursion be by brake to Epping Forest on Sunday, August 25; tickets 3s.

A special entertainment and dance will take place this Sunday evening (July 28) at the Battersea Secular Hall, to raise funds for the Branch. Tickets are 3d. and 6d. each. Help is greatly needed just now, and members whose subs. are due are notified of the fact.

The Belgian Freethinking writer, Charles Lemonnier, is engaged on a work, entitled La Légende de la Vie. It will endeavor to give a picture of the progress of mankind onwards from the Stone Age.

The Freethought Ideal is a bright little paper published at Portland, Kansas. It announces itself as "the cheapest paper of its kind on earth." The price of a single copy is five cents. Our contemporary does not seem to know that the Freethinker is a much larger paper, and is published at four cents.

"Atheist" writes to the Rangoon Times taunting the ministers of religion with having failed to take up the gauntlet thrown down by "Non-Credo" in that paper. He says: "The weakness and absurdity of their cause are painfully dawning upon Christians. They too are beginning to doubt the divine plan of salvation, and are afraid to press the question home in their time. That the system is a doomed one their very evasion of the question tacitly implies."

The program of the International Congress of Freethinkers, to be held at Brussels September 22, 23, and 24, is now issued. The sittings of the Congress will take place in the Grand Hall of the Loge des Amis Philanthropes, 10 Rue du Persil, commencing at ten o'clock each day. The subjects have already been announced. The serious proceedings will be diversified with a children's fête organised by the Cercle des Soirees Populaires Rationalistes, and will close with a banquet to the foreign delegates.

Digitized by Google

Mr. S. P. Putnam lectured on Sunday at Birmingham. Mr. G. J. Holyoake presided at the morning and evening meetings, and Mr. Ridgway in the afternoon. We hear that the Birmingham friends were highly delighted with Mr. Putnam's lectures. Some of them went with him on Monday to Stratford-on-Avon, the birth-place of the mightiest genius that ever lived on this planet. Our American visitor is of course enraptured. He has seen something that, in a certain sense, beats Niagara; and we may look out for an eloquent letter in the Truthseeker.

MR. PUTNAM'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

Extracts from his Letters to the New York "Truthseeker" (June 22).

My second day's drive is to Bettwys-y-Coed. We leave at 10 o'clock in the morning, and return at 6 in the evening. It is a forty-one-mile journey, and the same vast and wonderful views constantly charm the eye, only they are not really the same, for our road lies in a different direction. Again we see the old castle of Conway, Queen Elizabeth's palace, "Pean Mawr"; the Suspension and Tubular bridges, the estuary and Carnarvonshire mountains. Beyond Conway we wheel on a different course. We climb great hills, and thence proceed forward on a pleasant and elevated road, whence for fifty miles the eye can gaze upon the most stupendous scenery, conspicuous mountain peaks, whose names I cannot attempt to spell; tablelands and valleys, lovely lakes, and the winding glimmer of the river Conway, here and there. Sometimes the green forest wholly encircles our way, and the most brilliant emerald hues toss and roll away in the arching distance. Then we come to villages, nameless evermore, until more vowels are invented to fill in the battlemented consonants of the Welsh language, which I believe is the original language. Indeed, it does, in its rhythm and rolling pronunciation, fitly re-echo the wild and wondrous scenery from which it sprang. The Welsh language is a musical language, adapted to poetic fire; and if you could only pronounce the names of its mountains and villages, they would be most suggestive and beautiful sounds. About 50,000 people still speak the language, and it has a noble and charming literature.

Bettwys-y-Coed is reached about noon, and we have a vigorous appetite. By this time all the passengers are well acquainted, and we make a jolly company. I do not so far find any unsociability among English tourists. We were all strangers when we began this journey, but were ready to join in for friendly intercourse, and at the close greetings were exchanged and hopes for further acquaintance. I find the same hospitality and frankness here that I do in the great West of our own country. Of course I only meet the travelled public. They are generous and polite. If they know you are from America, they give you a hearty welcome, and treat you as their cousin from across the waters.

We stay at the Royal Oak Hotel for dinner, once the headquarters of David Cox, the famous artist. In the year 1847 he painted a sign-board for the hotel, which now hangs in the coffee-room, an object of great interest and a beautiful painting. It was the occasion of a remarkable lawsuit. When the hotel and its appurtenances were sold a few years since, the party selling endeavored to take away this picture as private property. The party buying claimed that the painting, being the sign-board of the hotel, was one of the appurtenances. The court sustained this view, and the picture, now valued at £4,000, is a part of the freehold of the hotel.

Swallow Falls is a beautiful place. The falls are not large at this season of the year, but the almost flying waters dash in silvery sheen over wild, precipitous rocks in infinite variety of motion; while the foliage of a magnificent forest on either side adorns the pathway of the bird-like cataract.

On the return journey we take the Denbighshire side of the Conway River; but time will not permit me to delineate the picturesque views that, with still different forms and colors, unfolded in panoramic beauty.

On Thursday morning I take the Marine drive about great Orme's Head, a vast promontory towering seaward from Llandudno. One of the finest highways in the kingdom has been carved, we might say, about this mighty abutment, hundreds of feet above the rolling waters. The sea, the islands, the mountains, the villages, castles, and dwellings, as you ascend and curve around this enormous crag, gather and multiply upon the view. A circuit of almost immeasurable expanse is filled like a sparkling cup with grandeur and delight.

At one o'clock the same day I take the boat for Menai Straits and Bridge. The bridge is a stupendous structure, from which a view can be obtained of the straits, of the surrounding country, the village itself, the great railway bridge, and other objects of interest. It was a mosaic of exquisite beauty compared with the vastness and grandeur of former scenes.

The same evening I return to Liverpool. I am met at the wharf by my good friends, Mr. Lawrence Small, Mr. John Roberts, and others, and we spend a happy evening together, not in Liverpool, but in Bootle, a town of about 60,000 people, which adjoins Liverpool, and which Liverpool is trying to incorporate into itself. It is really a part of Liverpool, but prefers its municipal independence. Mr. and Mrs. Small give a cordial reception to the Secular Pilgrim. There was a feast of reason and a flow of soul among these radical comrades. Mr. and Mrs. Tarleton and Mr. Roger Pride join the circle.

I arrive at Bristol Saturday afternoon and meet London friends, etc. The delegates to the National Conference are coming in, and there promises to be a notable gathering of the clans, the colors of Scotland mingling with those of England. I become acquainted with friends whom I expect to meet further on in the campaign.

Sunday morning the Conference comes together. They do differently here from what we do in America. They hold one day instead of three days. The morning and afternoon sessions are devoted to business, and the evening to speeches. I find the same elements here as elsewhere—plenty of individualism, some crankiness, hobbies occasionally, but, on the whole, frank sincerity, honesty of purpose, and when a question is settled a general determination to abide by the result and make the best of it. The main differences of opinion were about methods, and these will always occur. There was the largest latitude of discussion. Every one had a chance to talk. Quite a number of plans were presented, all of which received due consideration. From the beginning it was evident that Mr. Foote had the fullest confidence of the delegates, and there was no question as to his ability and fitness, or his heroic and generous devotion, and there was no thought of electing anyone else as President of the National Secular Society. A difference of opinion existed as to the best way of doing things. But Mr. Foote is one of those who is always ready to receive suggestions. He is open to conviction, and ready to accept any feasible proposition. He is exceedingly affable in the chair—patient, allowing the utmost liberty, while keeping strictly to the matter in hand. So that a most successful Conference was held, a large amount of business transacted, and amicable conclusions reached. By the wise and courageous and, at the same time, genial administration of President Foote, the National Secular Society is in a better and stronger position than ever to-day. It fronts the future with a noble captain and a gallant company. My staunch comrade of the American campaign, Charles Watts, is also side by side with Mr. Foote in this strenuous combat. No one could be a more able and brilliant supporter than Charles Watts. He is growing somewhat grey in the cause, but he has all the sparkle and vigor of youth, with the wisdom and the amplitude of age.

The society also did honor to itself by re-electing Robert Forder as honorary secretary. He has been a most faithful worker, an eloquent ally with Bradlaugh, Foote, and Watts. I am glad that women are also in the Freethought ranks, and willing and capable for frontier labors. Miss Edith M. Vance, the assistant secretary, has won the heartiest commendations of English Freethinkers by her loyalty, her activity, and her excellent business qualifications. Miss Annie Brown, secretary of the London Secular Federation, has shown herself a reliable worker in placing that organisation out of debt and upon a firm foundation for the future. I feel quite honored to be elected, with Charles Watts and others, as a vice-president of the National Secular Society. It is a proud position to occupy before the world, even if we are a poor and struggling host. I could not stand with a more royal company than the president, vice-presidents, and officers of the National Secular Society. I am quite sure that President Foote will receive the hearty support of all, and that there will be more enthusiasm and harmony than ever in the ranks of our English brethren.

There is no need in this report to give details of the Conference. I point out simply the results, that with the widest difference of opinion on some questions, and a momentary clash at times, there is among English Secularists a splendid brotherhood. They have the same difficulties to contend with that we have; there are rough places, but the staying power is present. The army will suffer defeat only in the end to attain a greater victory. This Conference was interesting to me in all its aspects. It was a sign of the times. There was a letting-off of steam, but, at the same time, there was a gathering of electric force, and the lightning blow will come.

At noon we all took dinner together at the expense of Mr.

Digitized by Google

George Anderson, who is a Secular philanthropist of the first order. He believes in creating good conditions for humanity, and then virtue will prevail. I assure him that the Freethinkers present enjoyed that fine dinner. It was a delightful occasion for sociability and general good feeling, and no doubt contributed to the unanimity of the Conference.

The evening session was devoted to speeches, and I thoroughly enjoyed the varied and brilliant display of oratory. Mr. A. B. Moss did himself credit, and gave a splendid outline of the progress of Freethought. Mr. Parris was vivid and to the point. He was logic on fire, and roused the enthusiasm of his audience. Like myself, he has had a varied experience in the fields of orthodox and liberal Christianity. He has tried them all and found them wanting. He, like Harriet Martineau, desires "the unfenced universe" and the wisdom of science in the place of the ignorance of theology. He made a rattling good speech. Mr. Gilmour is a true Scotchman, with the humor and the imagination of Burns himself. His was a breezy address, and received a hearty ovation. Mr. Cohen was born to be a rabbi, but by nature became a Freethought lecturer, and a most successful one too. He is a man of promise. There was something of Hebrew poetry in his oration, the prophetic fervor; but all the superstition was gone, and it glowed with the hopes of humanity, the sublime and brilliant future of man. In my turn I did my level best to show that the supreme battle-ground to-day is the rights of man on both sides of the Atlantic, and that the most important and urgent reform is the secularisation of the State. Through this reform only can other reform be made triumphant and permanent. In this respect the English and American organisations are identical in their purpose. The manner in which my ideas were received convinced me of the noble friendship of our old-world allies. I was followed by Charles Watts, who spoke with his old-time eloquence and power, when he was wont to thrill and arouse the Freethinkers of America. The same impetuous oratory bore his audience to a splendid burst of enthusiasm. Mr. Heaford contributed a fervent discourse, which illustrated his excellent service in the field; and then Mr. Foote, as President, delivered the final address. Mr. Foote is one of those who have a great deal of reserve power, and he is ready for any occasion with unexpected abilities. He put the cap-sheaf to the speeches of the evening by pointing out the lines of present conflict; the inevitable battle that is to come between Rome and reason; that there will be a marshalling of hosts such as the world has never seen before, and that the banners of Freethought will shine victorious through the mighty struggle over a peaceful and happy world. Round after round of applause followed the utterances of the eloquent President, and the Conference closed with bright memories and unconquerable hope.

Bristol is an old city of evangelical flavor. Robert Hall and John Foster radiated here in somewhat brilliant fashion. Lady Huntingdon and Whitfield and early Methodism in this place exhibited fiery faith. It is an orthodox town still. There are a few earnest Liberals, who will not go with the majority, but stand by their convictions, and are ready to work. The churches, however, are numerous and solemn, and there is a somewhat slow appearance in the general aspect of the city. It has not the snap of a modern manufacturing town like Glasgow and Manchester. However, it is a charming residence city. There is an ample and fruitful country about it. On Monday, with my friends, I had a delightful drive among the environments of Bristol. Especially magnificent is Clifton and the scenery about it. Here is the great Suspension Bridge over the Avon. The view along this massive structure is superb. On either side, between precipitous green and wooded banks, flows the calm, bright river. In the distance is caught a glimpse of the majestic Severn, and a wide expanse of fields and hills rolls afar. It is Bank Holiday, and throngs of people are sailing on the waters or meandering along the verdant swards and the wide pathways, an animating picture of outdoor English life. There seems to be, after all, an immense amount of happiness in the British Isles.

We return to London on Monday evening. The coaches are crowded, and there was a rush and tumult constantly, so many excursion trains were thundering and flashing along. When we arrived in London it was almost impossible to secure a cab or omnibus. Some of the party did not get home until one o'clock in the morning, and had to walk at that. But finally the holiday is over, and all find rest and quiet.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

(To be continued.)

THE THREE CHINESE SECTS.

The Buddhist priests declare their Fo in the abyss to be,
Say Lao's followers, "Paradise lies in the Eastern Sea."
But great Confucius' pupils look on real things around;
Before their eyes the airs of spring, fresh-blowing, brush the ground.

—From W. R. Alger's "Specimens of Oriental Poetry."

SOME LITTLE-KNOWN FREETHINKERS.—X.

HENRY HETHERINGTON.

How many of those who enjoy the benefit of a cheap press know anything of the labors, dangers, and sufferings of those who made the cheap press possible? Not least among these must be counted the name of Henry Hetherington. Born in Compton-street, Soho, in 1792, he was apprenticed to Hansard, the parliamentary printer. He was one of the most energetic working men engaged with Dr. Birkbeck in establishing the Mechanics' Institution in London. In 1830 he drew up a "Circular for the Formation of Trade Unions," which formed the basis of the "National Union of the Working Classes," and led eventually to Chartism. On July 9, 1831, he first issued from his house in Kingsgate-street, Holborn, the Poor Man's Guardian, price one penny. On the title appeared the words, "Established contrary to the 'Law,' to try the power of 'Right' against 'Might.'" In place of the Government fourpenny stamp was a picture of a printing press, with the words, "Liberty of the Press," "Knowledge is Power." The Poor Man's Guardian was issued to fight the Battle of the Unstamped. It consisted of but eight small quarto pages; yet, immediately on its appearance, obtained a circulation of 50,000 copies, and when prosecution began it ran up to double that number.

Only those who know the tyrannical censorship exercised over the newspaper press when it first became an influence in this country can rightly estimate the work of men like Carlile, Watson, and Hetherington in establishing for us a cheap and free press. Little more than a century ago publishers of papers were fined and imprisoned whenever they as much as mentioned the name of a peer of the realm. Press prosecutions were numerous. Hardly any paper ventured to exercise independent judgment. Anything and everything relating to politics or religion was at the mercy of the Attorney-General, who had the power of summary arrest for seditious or blasphemous libel. As the demand for newspapers increased the tax upon them was enhanced. In 1765 the newspaper stamp duty was three-halfpence; in 1789 it was raised to twopence, in 1797 to twopence halfpenny, in 1804 to threepence, and in 1815 to fourpence. Here it remained until, through the agitation of Hetherington and his co-workers, it was in 1836 reduced to one penny, at which figure it remained until abolished by the exertions of men like Austin Holyoake and S. D. Collet in 1857.

Hetherington's Poor Man's Guardian was the chief instrument in the battle for the removal of taxes upon knowledge. It was the first penny newspaper in the country, and was followed by Cleave's Gazette and other unstamped papers. The general price of newspapers at that time was sevenpence. The first number of the Poor Man's Guardian coolly cited the law under which it was liable, and which it defied. Three convictions were soon obtained against Hetherington; but the Bow-street magistrates were unable to enforce their order for some time. With provoking coolness Hetherington sent them a note to say he was "going out of town," and went on a tour spreading the Poor Man's Guardian in the provinces. On returning to London to his mother, who was dying, he was dragged off to prison while knocking at his own door; and in prison he was kept for six months. Hibbert, Watson, Cleave, O'Brien, and others, saw that the Guardian with its outspoken policy was maintained, and as soon as Hetherington came out he was again directing affairs.

Mr. James Grant, in his work on the Newspaper Press (vol. ii., p. 302), says: "Hetherington was in many respects a remarkable man. He was intelligent and clever, but it was in the qualities of determination and courage that he chiefly excelled. Nothing daunted him. He knew not what fear was. In the army he would have been a hero. Of all men in London at the time, he was just the man to fight the great battle of an Unstamped Press." To courage he added resources. He evaded arrest by disguise. To distribute his paper dummy parcels were made up, duly labelled "Poor Man's Guardian," and sent off in one direction by persons instructed to make all resistance they could to constables who seized them; while the real parcels were sent off by another exit. He got his friends to dress in his clothes, and again and again they were arrested in mistake for himself. In 1832 he was again convicted and imprisoned, together with his friend, James Watson, for six months. During the progress of the "unstamped" agitation fully five hundred persons were arrested for selling the Poor Man's Guardian. Their pertinacity gained the day in 1834.

The case came for trial before Lord Lyndhurst, who, says Mr. James Grant, was then a thorough Republican. In charging the jury he took up the copy of the Poor Man's Guardian, and, looking at it with an aspect of pity and contempt for its poor appearance, said, with a peculiar expression in his countenance, and no less peculiar in his tones: "Gentlemen of the jury, that is what they"—meaning the Government—"call a newspaper." All in the court then saw that the triumph of Hetherington, and the defeat of the Government, were certain. The jury returned a verdict that the Poor Man's Guardian was not a newspaper. No. 159 bore these words: "This paper, after sustaining a persecution of three years' and a half duration, in which upwards of five hundred persons were imprisoned for reading it, was declared in the Court of Exchequer to be a strictly legal publication."

Digitized by Google

The veteran William James Linton, in his Memoir of James Watson, has the following on Watson's friend, Hetherington: "For four years he bore the brunt of the battle for a free press. Ever busy in the interest of his class during the Whig Reform ferment, he was among the most zealous as well as the wisest leaders of Chartism afterwards. A ready speaker, bold and fluent, passionate, sarcastic, or humorous on occasion (he had a spice of fun in him through all his trouble), he was deservedly popular in those days; and in the Chartist Convention of 1832 sat as delegate for Stockport and for London." In 1840 Hetherington was again arrested for selling Haslam's Letters to the Clergy. To test the impartiality of the law, some of Hetherington's friends commenced prosecutions against four high-class publishers—Moxon, Frazer, Richardson, and Saunders—for the publication of Queen Mab. The law was clear. Shelley's poem was a blasphemous libel, and, despite the eloquent defence of Sarjeant Talfourd, Moxon was declared guilty. It remained for the prosecutors to call him up for judgment, which was never done, their object being merely to call attention to the state of the law, and to advertise Queen Mab. This course obtained for Hetherington the mildest sentence then given for blasphemous libel—four months' imprisonment. While in prison Hetherington wrote Cheap Salvation, a tract showing that all the advantages ascribed to religion could be retained, while dismissing priests and their theology. On coming out, Hetherington resumed Freethought publication, issuing the first translation of Strauss's Life of Jesus, The Existence of Christ Disproved, by a German Jew, A Few Hundred Bible Contradictions, A Hunt After the Devil and Other Odd Matters, by P. Lecount, tracts by Emma Martin, etc. He also devoted himself to the spread of Chartism and Socialism. He died August 24, 1849, leaving a will, signed shortly before his death, in which he says: "I calmly and deliberately declare that I do not believe in the popular notion of the existence of an Almighty, All-wise, and Benevolent God, possessing intelligence, and conscious of his own operations; because these attributes involve such a mass of absurdities and contradictions, so much cruelty and injustice on his part to the poor and destitute portion of his creatures, that, in my opinion, no rational, reflecting mind can, after disinterested investigation, give credence to the existence of such a Being." He was buried in the unconsecrated portion of Kensal Green Cemetery, where lie the remains of many other worthy Freethinkers.

J. M. W.

MR. PUTNAM'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. Charles Watts has made the following lecturing engagements for Mr. S. P. Putnam:—

August 11, Failsworth; 18, Leicester; 25, Liverpool.

Mr. Putnam will return to New York on Sept. 7, therefore friends who have not engaged him should communicate with Mr. Watts at once. Societies near any of the above towns requiring week-night lectures should arrange for Mr. Putnam to visit them when he is in their district on the Sunday.

PROFANE JOKES.

He—"I hear you attend the Handel and Haydn performances. Were you present at the 'Creation'?" She (indignantly)—"I suppose you will next want to know if I sailed in Noah's ark."

Rev. Mr. Goodsoul—"Ah, my boy, that cigar will carry you to perdition. How can you travel to your end with that cigar in your mouth?" Boy—"Yah! in de smoking-carriage, of course, yer old chump."

Johnny was saying his prayers before going to bed, his slow thoughts helped out by his mother's suggestions "Bless all the lambs of the flock," said mamma. Johnny knew that meant him among the rest, and reasoned quickly and generously from the children to the parents. "Bless all the little lambs," he repeated, "and the old sheep too!"

A reverend gentleman was addressing a school concert recently, and was trying to enforce the doctrine that the hearts of the little ones were sinful, and needed regulating. Taking out his watch, and holding it up, he said: "Now, here is my watch; suppose it doesn't keep good time—now goes too fast, and now too slow. What shall I do with it?" "Sell it!" shouted a flaxen-haired youngster.

BOOK CHAT.

Humphry Ward praises Leslie Stephen's life of Sir James Fitzjames Stephen as the memoir of a very remarkable man, set amid the records of a highly interesting family by a writer who is not only his subject's brother, but also one of the most skilled biographers, sanest judges, and keenest intelligences of our time. This is a good deal to say of any man, but it is certainly true of Mr. Leslie Stephen, a man whose services to English letters have never been recognised by the general public as quite so great as they really are.

* * *

Lord Acton's inaugural lecture as Professor of History at Cambridge will attract considerable attention, as he is a Roman Catholic with a reputation beyond any published performance. In his lectures he eulogises mental freedom, and acknowledges the triumph in modern times of the Protestant races. His distinctive note is that all historical judgments must be subordinate to ethical standards.

* * *

One of the latest and best of the series of "Les Grands Ecrivains Français" is the study of Diderot by Joseph Reinach. Diderot was one of the greatest and most fecund of French thinkers, and to compress an adequate study of such a man into a small book was no light task.

* * *

For over a dozen years the American translation of Max Nordau's Conventional Lies of our Civilisation has been sold in England, first by the Freethought Publishing Company, and then by Mr. R. Forder. Now Mr. W. Heinemann, doubtless impressed by the success of Degeneration, advertises a new translation of Herr Simon's old iconoclastic volume as "Max Nordau's New Book."

* * *

Another brilliant work by Max Nordau, not so iconoclastic or pessimistic as Conventional Lies, is Paradoxes, also on sale by Mr. Forder. It deals with such topics of modern life as optimism and pessimism, majorities and minorities, genius and talent, the influence of fiction, the natural history of love, evolution in æsthetics, the State an annihilator of character, nationality; and takes an imaginary glance at the future, in which the small and feeble peoples will disappear, and pressure of population will spread the dominant races all-over the earth.

* * *

The Humanitarian League is issuing a new miniature series of "Humanity" reprints, of which Nos. 1 and 2 are now ready. These are The Humanising of our Prisons, by Edward Carpenter, and Experiments in Hospitals, by Edward Maitland. The reprints, which may be obtained from the office of the League (79A Great Queen-street, W.C.) at fourpence per dozen, post free, are of the size of a square postcard, suitable for enclosure in letters.

* * *

J. Timewell, 141 Gower-street, W.C., publishes a penny pamphlet called The State Carriage, and with it a cartoon by "Cynicus." The idea of both is, that Charity in our present social system only balances the carriage which enables the rich and privileged to ride over the poor.

* * *

Mr. James Leatham writes in the July Westminster on "The Religiosity of the Scot," which he accounts for by Scotland having so long been a wild, lonely country, and the struggle with a poor soil and harsh climate.

* * *

Canon Cheyne, in the Contemporary, dwells on "The Archæological Stage of Old Testament Criticism," which he urges must come to the front. He endeavors to ascertain when the Genesis story of creation was evolved from the earlier Babylonian one, and concludes that it must have taken some hundreds of years. "It is not only Babylonian, nor wholly Canaanitish, nor wholly Israelitish, but has developed out of elements supplied by each nationality."

* * *

In an article on "The Mystery of Birth," in the current Fortnightly, Grant Allen contends that the real mystery is in the Not Me becoming the Me, a process carried on at every meal. "William Evans makes himself daily out of meal and mutton. There is the mystery." Mr. Allen tries a flank movement against Weismannism, and asks: "Is there any real and essential difference between the transmission of functionally acquired modification to offspring, and their registration or persistence in the individual organism?"

* * *

Esmé Stuart writes in the Fortnightly on the French academician and Atheist poet, Leconte de Lisle, and tries to make out that "the religion of the Christ won back his respect, though never his adhesion." Of course the poet was a man of many moods, but in his most serious work Christianity has not even his respect.

Digitized by Google

SUNDAY LECTURE NOTICES, ETC.

[Notices of Lectures, etc., must reach us by first post on Tuesday, and be marked "Lecture Notice," if not sent on post-card.]

LONDON.

MILTON HALL (Hawley-crescent, 89 Kentish Town-road): 7, musical selections; 7.30, G. W. Foote, "The Bible and Local Veto."

BATTERSEA SECULAR HALL (back of Battersea Park Station): 8.30, musical and dramatic entertainment. Tuesday, at 9, dance.

CAMBERWELL (North Camberwell Hall, 61 New Church-road): 7.30, Charles Watts, "Does Death End All?"

WEST HAM SECULAR ETHICAL SOCIETY (61 West Ham-lane): 7, adjourned discussion—"Morals the Outcome of Evolution."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BATTERSEA PARK GATES: 11.30, Mrs. Thornton Smith will lecture.

CAMBERWELL (Station-road): 11.30, J. B. Coppock, F.C.S., "Animal Development."

CAMBERWELL GREEN: Tuesday, at 8, a lecture.

CLERKENWELL GREEN: 11.30, S. E. Easton, "Prayer."

DEPTFORD BROADWAY: 6.30, C. James, "Christianity the Foe of Liberty and Progress." Thursday, at 8, C. James will lecture.

EDMONTON (corner of Angel-road): 7, A. B. Moss, "Behold how the Gods Vanish."

FINSBURY PARK (near the band-stand): 11, debate between Lucretius Keen and Job Williams, "Atheism or Christianity: Which has Done Most for Mankind?" 3.15, W. Heaford, "Christ and His Teachings."

HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE (Middlesex side): 7, F. Haslam, "How I Became a Secularist." Thursday, at 8, a lecture.

HYDE PARK (near Marble Arch): 11.30, F. Haslam, "The Exodus from Egypt"; 3.30, "How I Became a Secularist." Wednesday, at 8, T. Thurlow will lecture.

ISLINGTON (Prebend-street, Packington-street): 11.30, St. John will lecture.

KILBURN (corner of Victoria-road): 7, a lecture.

KINGSLAND (Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction): 11.30, a lecture.

LAMBETH (Kennington Park): 3.30, S. E. Easton, "Prayer."

MILE END WASTE: 11.30, W. Heaford, "Bible Lessons in Morality."

OLD PIMLICO PIER: 11.30, A. B. Moss, "The Bible and Evolution."

REGENT'S PARK (near Gloucester Gate): 3, W. J. Ramsey, "Immortality."

TOTTENHAM GREEN: 3.30, S. R. Thompson, "Christianity and Slavery." (Collection on behalf of Sam Standring.)

VICTORIA PARK (near the fountain): 11.15, a lecture; 3.15, a lecture.

WOOD GREEN (Jolly Butchers' Hill): 11.30, Stanley Jones, "Evolution and Darwinism"; 7, "Reason and Revelation." Thursday, at 8, a lecture.

COUNTRY.

MANCHESTER SECULAR HALL (Rusholme-road, All Saints): 11, Annie Besant, "The Uses of Evil"; 3, "The Place of Politics in the Life of a Nation"; 6.30, "The Evidence for the Supersensuous."

PLYMOUTH (Democratic Club, Whimple-street): 7, Mr. Shaw will lecture.

SHEFFIELD SECULAR SOCIETY (Hall of Science, Rockingham-street): Excursion to Wharncliffe Side; members and friends meet at 2.30 in Norfolk-street, near the corner of Arundel-street, to go by carriage.

STOCKTON (Borough Hall): 11, C. Cohen, "Is the Belief in God Reasonable?" 3, "Religion or Freethought"; 7, "Who was Jesus Christ—God, Man, or Myth?"

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

BRADFORD (Open Market, James Street): 6.30, H. Smith, "Is the Bible the Word of God?"

BRISTOL (Eastville Park, Lower End): 7, a lecture.

DERBY (Market-place): 11, Mr. Briggs will lecture.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Quayside): 11, R. Mitchell, "Providence."

SOUTH SHIELDS (Market-place): 11, Hall Nicholson, "Christianity and Slavery"; 3, "The Established Church the Enemy of the People."

Lecturers' Engagements.

C. COHEN, 12 Merchant-street, Bow-road, London.—July 28, Stockton-on-Tees; 29 and 30, Middlesboro'. August 1, Wood Green; 4, m. and a. Victoria Park, e. Deptford; 6, Camberwell; 8, Wood Green; 11, m. and a. Victoria Park, e. Edmonton; 15, Wood Green; 18, m. and a. Finsbury Park; 22, Wood Green; 25, Manchester.

