"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth.

And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited." (Isa. xxiv, 21-22.)

This is the day of the final Judgment on "the earth"; and is followed by the Advent of Our Lord to reign in Israel.

Now let us see that these pregnant sentences are dealing with the nations of the "earth" which, in this chapter, refer to the nations of Asia and the Babylonian civilisation, as contrasted with the Isles.

Now there is a paragraph dealing with "the poor," the needy in distress, who cry "O Lord, thou art my God." This undoubtedly is Israel. These are brought into comparison with strangers. The declaration is that while all these things have been falling upon the nations of the earth, Israel has found in Jehovah "a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall."

"Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low."

Thus Israel is protected, while the Asiatic "earth" falls in utter confusion.

"AND IN THIS MOUNTAIN."

That is to say, "in this nation"; for "mountain" signifies government, and the nation so governed. The reference is to Israel. "And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all the people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined."

Read also verses 7-12. This is God's purpose concerning Israel when the earth is being turned upside down. Undoubtedly "this mountain" is "The Isles in the sea," "The Isles of the sea." (2) "From the uttermost parts of the earth," that is to say, "The British Isles."

THE LAND OF JUDAH.

"In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

"Open ye the gates that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in."

The latter nation is clearly defined elsewhere in the Bible as Israel.

Read the succeeding verses of this chapter, namely, Chapter xxvi, for they tell the story of Judah during the seven times of punishment and of her awakening at the end of that period, in the day called "That day" in these chapters.

MY PEOPLE.

"Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast.

For, behold, the Lord cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain."

LEVIATHAN.

"In that day the Lord with his sore and great and strong sword shall punish leviathan the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea." (Isaiah xxvii, 1.)

Here is a striking passage. What does it mean? The answer must be, "We do not know." It is a serpent—that is to say—one the way of which is hidden, the presence of which comes as a surprise, the attack of which is sudden, unexpected, poisonous and deadly. It is a piercing serpent. It makes its way through defences, and strikes a sudden and deadly blow. It is a crooked serpent; its path is not to be estimated, and so guarded against; it is deceitful in its ways—it is a water animal, whose attacks are to be feared afloat; or it is a maritime nation or company of nations who are thus described which shall suddenly strike a naval blow unexpectedly. It is not a general system of warfare, but a definite nation or organisation, or fleet. Twice it is distinguished by a proper name, namely, Leviathan.

"And he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea." This seems to refer to a country or power, or to an organisation afloat which is of the dragon nature. So we take the "dragon" symbol and see that it is one of the three powers responsible for one-third of the propaganda leading up to the "Battle of the great day of God Almighty." (Rev. xvi.)

Are we reading here of the development of submarine fleets, piercing and crooked, whose attacks are unexpected and deadly, of the dragon power?

We should say to those who are in charge of our naval defences beware of the sudden, unexpected piercing stroke of the enemy whose presence was not expected, whose action is crooked or not according to usage of war—striking perhaps in peace time.

Whatever the fact, the end is sure. With his sore and great and strong sword, in that day the Lord shall punish Leviathan.

A VINEYARD OF RED WINE.

What a beautiful figure is here. In Palestine, the land of our fathers, anyone may grow a vineyard of white wine. The white grapes need no care, or very little. But he who would grow a vineyard of red wine in Palestine must literally care for it night and day.

We are still thinking of the day which is looked upon as the day of tribulation. The "earth" is being broken to pieces. Israel is being preserved. Judah is singing of its strong city, whose bulwarks are salvation, into which "the righteous nation that keepeth the truth" enters as garrison and defenders. That is to say, Israel-Britain. Leviathan and the dragon are being destroyed. God's people are called to hide themselves within their chambers for a little moment, "until the indignation be overpast." It is in "that day" that the Lord sings of His vineyard of red wine.

"A VINEYARD OF RED WINE.

"I THE LORD DO KEEP IT: I will WATER IT EVERY MOMENT: LEST ANY HURT IT, I WILL KEEP IT NIGHT AND DAY."

Most certainly the vineyard of red wine is redeemed Israel-Britain.

Now let us take these messages and set them side by side as they refer to "THAT DAY." Manifestly they may not be set in sequence chronologically, for the prophet insists that the time indicated is identical; it is "In that day." So we have in contemporary array:

"The earth" Chapter xxiv.	"The Isles" Chapter xxiv.	Israel: "this mountain" Chapter xxv.
"The land of Judah" Chapter xxvi.	"My people" Chapter xxvi.	"Leviathan" Chapter xxvii.

"A Vineyard of red wine" Chapter xxvii.

It will be seen that while the earth, and Leviathan, the strangers, and the terrible ones, are destined to go through terrible experiences "In that day"; Israel, Judah, The Isles, are to be kept in perfect peace.

So, looking at this great series of chapters dealing with "that day" of the indignation, we cannot see that they fall upon Israel. Truly she passes through the experience of being broken off from the nations: of halting her usual activities: of withdrawing into her chambers and of shutting her doors about her: hiding herself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. Perhaps this would amount to what would in normal times be considered cataclysmic interruption of trade, commerce and industry. But compared with what is happening in the world outside it is peace itself. Moreover, the conditions will start every wheel in industry, and every person in service, so that employment will be at "its highest peak."

THE PASSING OF THE THRONE OF DAVID.—III.

By the Rev. L. G. A. Roberts, Commander R.N.

ISRAEL'S SONGS OF TRIUMPH (XXV-XXVII).

THERE is a great gap and many things have taken place since the prophet in chapter xxiv, 15-16, heard in vision "glory to God" ascending from the British Islands, and the utterances now poured forth by Israel again in possession of her land. The times of the Gentiles, at least 2,520 years, have passed by, and the "hidden" people have been revealed. All nations, with the exception of the Jew and the Arab, have been obliterated as to their original. Isaiah xxx, 28; xxv, 7.

Zion now being restored, she can lift up her voice and praise God in that He has done wonderful things; His "counsels of old are faithfulness and truth." Or as Isaiah l, 11, "they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion," with the voice together (Israel and Judah) shall they sing. The city here is in direct contrast to that one spoken of in xxvi, 1, and means the ideal-world city, whether Rome or Constantinople, or "Babylon" representing all. See Ps. lx, 9, and cviii, 10. Verse 3 refers to the city of that mightiest of nations who has the Lord for their God; "the city of the terrible nations," an epithet applied to Israel, Isaiah xviii, etc., made strong by His mighty power, also God's instrument to support the needy, the refugee and the poor. These other terrible ones are "strangers" to God's covenant. The time is arrived, v. 6, when the Peace having been arrived at in Jerusalem, Hag. ii, 9, and God's purposes and plans being accomplished, here, in this mountain (xxiv, 23), will be a feast of the richest flavours, to commemorate that Israel's "dead men shall live," xxvi, 19; Hos. xiii, 14; 1 Cor. xv, 54, 55-57. "Death swallowed up in victory." Then shall Israel know her God, and in a greater sense even than a Christian does, for the substance is realised, the evidence is complete; the Christian's best hope will be accomplished, and he himself see the Kingdom of God and its rightful King. He will see then that all the promises made to Israel are "Yea and Amen in Christ Jesus," and learn more completely to know that breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, and be filled with all the fulness of God. Ephes. iii. Lo! this is our God, we have waited for Him. We will rejoice and be glad in His salvation. In this mountain also the hand of the Lord shall rest, after having trodden down all Israel's enemies, Moab being especially named, for was it not Moab that tried to turn God's blessing of Israel into cursings? and when the device of Balak failed, tried her with dark deeds of incest, the representation of the corrupted and sensual world, as opposing God's pure laws. Mal. ii, 15. All that oppose the integrity and righteousness of God's Kingdom, together shall fall, as does the high fort of the walls of every city not founded upon the Rock.

CHAPTER XXVI. When Israel is seen to be, under God, the deliverer of Judah, Judah shall have this song. We have a strong city (Israel), salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. She herself will admit her own shortcomings and acclaim Israel to be "the Righteous Nation which keepeth the Truth." She will see that Jerusalem has been turned over to the charge of Israel, for that she (Israel) is all righteous. This acknowledgment on the part of Judah will reflect upon Israel (Britain). No nation is saved by the multitude of the host, but a righteous nation will be kept in perfect peace; this brings salvation to herself without offensive weapons; she has learnt to trust in the Lord Jehovah, for in the Lord Jehovah is the Rock of ages. Deut. xxxii, 15, 18, 30, 31-36. Their experience has been gained throughout their national life. "There is none that fighteth for us but only Thou, O God!" How very true their reasoning, v. 5-8, for they plead with God to call to mind the NAME, His own vouchsafed MEMORIAL. Exod. iii, 15; Hos. xii, 5; Ps. cxxxv, 13. We do not realise the Power of this Memorial. We must plead it more and more. Let the desire of our soul be to His NAME and to His Memorial, Isaiah xxvi, 8, for He has pledged Himself on behalf of His people, v. 9. Through the long, dark night of affliction have I desired thee, yea with my spirit within me will I seek thee early; what is this terrible night? Is it brought on by the burden of Dumah? Isaiah xxi, 11, 12; Mic. vii, 7-10. It is connected with God's judgment at the end of this age. The contrast of the effect of God's dealings upon mankind is here stated, with Israel they will urge us to extend the Kingdom to the utmost of our power before the coming of our King. With others it will lead them to deal unjustly. One cannot help, here, referring to Luke xvii, 22 to xviii, 8, remembering Abraham's prayer for Sodom. God's gracious deliverance of Israel is seen, Isaiah xxvi, 12; they are delivered from the envy of the nations: the rebuke of His people shall He take away from off all the earth, xxv, 8-9. The nations will not see the lifting up of God's hand until too late. We, then, have Israel's confession as a result of God's grace, v. 12, 13. The contrast between other nations and Israel is that every nation fighting against Israel shall perish, lx, 12, whereas Israel's people have been most wonderfully increased, though it had been removed far unto all the ends of the earth. In our trouble we remember the Word of the Lord, Ps. l, 15, "Call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorify Me." Affliction will bring us to our knees, Hos. v, 15. We certainly have not rendered to the Lord for all His benefits towards us as a nation. We have done but little in His vineyard, and Europe has received but little at our hands, it is but true, "neither have we wrought any deliverance in the earth, neither have the inhabitants of the world fallen." One of these, the earth, is Europe, and the world is the other nations, mostly under our dominion or protection.

This 19th verse has been assumed by many commentators to refer to the resurrection of the Church. Whereas it is really addressed in answer to the prayer of Israel. "Your little strength, I know it all." Rev. iii, 8, it shall yet be rewarded, thy brethren of Judah, v. 9, shall yet come to thee, and all Israel shall be saved.

"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee, hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity, the earth shall disclose her blood and shall no more cover her slain." Some terrible punishment is to be meted out upon all the nations which in days gone by have persecuted the people of God. Rome and her "Catholic" surroundings will be called upon to give an account for the righteous blood that they have shed. Rev. xi, 15-19; xv, 8. There will be a separation between "him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not." Mal. iii, 18, 19; iv, 1. This is all set out in Revelation.

GOD'S GREAT CARE OF ISRAEL (XXVII).

"In that day," if we turn back to xxii, 25, we have the day or period of the transplanting of the House of David back to Palestine, as in xxiv, 23. It comprises certain matters leading up to that day, which here does not end until v. 13. In that day, the great trumpet shall be blown. This is the same as Rev. xi, 15, the seventh trumpet, when the mystery of God shall be finished. God's people restored. The commencement of this restoration was the greatest sea-fight that has ever taken place in the world, when submarines were used to the terrible destruction of shipping and almost to the starving of God's people located in the British Islands. But God is watching. He has acted in mercy, but in such a way as that we could not claim the victory. We know we were at our wit's end; we know of the secret counsels held on board the Admiral's ship to devise a plan to pierce the submarines by a detonator let fall into the sea, which should pierce them through ; we know also how on April 23rd the daring attempt to shut up Zeebrugge was carried out in 1918, which ultimately brought the war 1914-1918 to an end. No one puts these devices down to man alone. It was "the Lord with His sore, great and strong sword that punished leviathan (the U-boats), the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent, and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea." We were near the end of our resources when God put the ideas into our sailors' minds. What brought on the mutiny in the German Fleet? "In that day sing ye unto her, A vineyard of red wine." The vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the House of Israel, and the MAN of Judah His tender plant. Comp. John xv, 1, 5, and contrast Ezek. xv, 1-6, with John xv, 6. Red wine is the wine of delight. I, JEHOVAH, do keep it, see His care of it, in watering, manuring, pruning, cutting off useless branches, no man can come near to hurt it day or night. His care is wonderful; it does not mean that His people do not undergo correction, but it is all in love. Isaiah liv, 9, 10. And "they shall surely gather against thee, but not by me." "No weapon formed against thee shall prosper." As soon as we fall on our knees He delivers us. "Or let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me ; and he shall make peace with me." This we have done, but imperfectly.

However, a greater era of blessedness is coming. "He shall cause them that come of Jacob (the supplanter, the deceitful) to take root," he shall sow his wild oats, ultimately throwing them away, and "ISRAEL shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the earth with fruit."

Israel returns to reason, let him count up God's dealings with him. Has He smitten him as He smote those that smote him? Has our land been laid waste? Have we been brought to bankruptcy? Have we not been enabled to lend to all nations, even to the impoverishing of ourselves for others? "In measure when it shooteth forth thou wilt debate with it." God will deal gently with us, bringing us to reason that charity may begin at home, put our own house in order, when we see God "staying His rough wind in the day of His east wind." We have not yet experienced this, as we shall immediately. Then, by this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged. Jacob again must be overcome in his wrestling with the ANGEL. The natural man must be put away, and we shall then be His true Israel. Every idol, image or thing we cling to must be relinquished, and Jacob must become the true people of God.

We then have a repetition of what will then have taken place, xxv, 2 ; xxvi, 5-6 ; all the opponents of God's Kingdom shall find no favour. Great wonders are to take place in the land of Egypt and the great trumpet is to be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish (the lost) in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the Lord in the holy Mount at Jerusalem. That these are children of Israel is plainly stated, and we know of very many in Abyssinia and Afghanistan who have to be gathered, though it may be one by one. Zech. ix, referring to the same trumpet, v. 14, gives us the manner of the return of very many from the regions of Afghanistan. It may be that these are termed "the Kings of the East," Rev. xvi, 12.

Such then is the story of that portion over whom the House of David has been reigning from the time it left Judæa until its return again to Jerusalem, as in xxiv, 23 ; this latter verse being a concise summary to the glorious sequel of the first transplanting of the House by Jeremiah. Ezekiel xxix, 21, see 18, 19 ; Isaiah xxiii, 7, 18 ; and the glory of the King's return.

THE PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM.—II.

AN ADDRESS BY MR. J. J. MOREY, Kensington Town Hall, 16th April, 1928.

"THE Kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation." Now a nation can be a merchantman, and the greatest merchantman the world has ever seen ; for if this Empire is the nation to whom God has given the Kingdom, it is the merchantman who has been seeking goodly pearls, who has got within his grasp a greater pearl than he ever thought or knew. I believe that this great Empire is the merchantman ; at any rate, it is the only nation, the only merchantman, that has been seeking goodly pearls, and it is the only one that has found any worth naming. We think we have found some goodly pearls, do we not, in our ecclesiastical systems, in our creeds, and, dare I say it? our Prayer Book ; in our commercial greatness, in our fame, in our social order. We think we have found some goodly pearls, but I suggest to you that the time is coming soon when this nation will see that here is the treasure of the Kingdom of Christ, and she will be prepared to sell all the rest in order to keep it, and she will have to sell most of them, for we are beginning to find out that the things we thought were goodly pearls are but tinsel, and some of them are already losing their beauty. We shall let them go ; and that is the price we have got to pay to build and retain the Kingdom of Christ here and now.

I believe that we shall come to that. I believe that in the great tribulation which is upon us Britain is going to find herself ; she is going to open her eyes ; she is going to see that she has a real treasure, and the treasure and the pearl are very closely allied. I believe we shall loosen our hold upon many secondary things, upon many things we have falsely prized and thought were pearls, but which we will be willing to part with in order to have the Kingdom, the precious thing that God has committed to our care.

Let me take you on to another parable which I think comes out of that phrase : "The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you." It is a Kingdom parable. Do you see what happened when Christ said that? He was depriving the unjust steward of his stewardship. You know that parable. The master is going to discharge him, and that is when he gave him notice. "The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation." The master is going to get a fresh steward, and the unjust steward says : "I kno what I will do, so that when I am deprived of my stewardship they will receive me into their houses." This is the Jew, and he has truly got into all their houses throughout the world. In the House of Manasseh, in the House of Ephraim, in the House of David ; in every land he is very well established, and you will find he got in by the same worldly wisdom as that steward showed towards the debtors in the parable. It is the story of the Jew, and the way he is going to plant himself firmly in the worldly houses of this age, and be satisfied with worldly fame and position. The Lord points the moral, and says His disciples must do better than that. He says: "You must so use your money—the mammon of unrighteousness—that you may make friends who will receive you into everlasting habitations." This steward is going to be content if he gets into the houses of earth, but you must so make friends of your financial power and your mammon of unrighteousness that, when you are in need, they will receive you into Heavenly habitations—treasure in Heaven and not merely on earth.

Now, I think you will see at once the meaning of the parable of the mustard tree; it only needs to be mentioned. There are three parables based upon seed. There is one parable of the seed which is not strictly a Kingdom parable, I think: the parable of the sower who went forth to sow. There I think the seed is the Gospel, but in the parable of the mustard tree the seed is the Kingdom, and the Lord says the Kingdom is like a tree which at first was very small, just a mustard seed, but it grows into a tree and spreads and grows, so that the birds of the air may come and lodge in the branches thereof. That is what is happening. The Kingdom tree is growing up, and the time is coming when it will be grown, and the nations of the world will be glad to come and shelter under its throne, its government, its laws, and its righteous reign. It is a picture of the Kingdom grown up.

Isaiah has a wonderful word bearing upon that. Speaking of the nation that has the building of that Kingdom he says: "The nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee." They are going to come and lodge in the branches of that Kingdom, at any rate when Christ has come to be the King.

Then, when Our Lord had given His disciples many of these parables, He said unto them, "Have you understood all these things?" And they had the nerve to say, "Yes!" Well, they were in advance of many of us, for they had not lost the vision of the Old Testament; and when Our Lord talked about the Kingdom they knew what it was. The law and the prophets and the Kingdom made one story, and they knew it was the Kingdom of Israel. If you and I had not lost the vision of the Old Testament, we should have understood also.

Then Our Lord said to them, "Every scribe who is instructed unto the Kingdom—every man who has really seen this mystery—is like a householder, who bringeth out of his treasure things new and old."

The modern preacher has not any "old" in his story of the Kingdom; it is all "new"; it all begins with Jesus. Therefore, he has not been instructed unto the Kingdom. The man who knows the secret story of the Kingdom of the Bible begins with Abraham; then the law, and the throne of David, and the prophecies about the Kingdom, about its submerging and its restoration; then Bethlehem; then Calvary; then the "New," the Christian era; then the coming again of Our Lord, and the millennium. There is an "old" as well as a "new" part to the Kingdom, if you know the truth about it. Do you not see what Christ meant? He meant that it takes the Old Testament as well as the New to tell the story of the Kingdom, and the whole Bible is one connected theme.

Now let me refer to another parable. In fact, there are two which I will merge together: the parable of the talents in St. Matthew and the parable of the pounds in St. Luke. I believe they are one, and I venture to say that the Church has twisted those parables out of shape to make them appear to bear an individual message. They are not individual parables, they are Kingdom parables. I believe they have a larger and a national meaning. Let us look at them. Begin with the one recorded in St. Luke:

"A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a Kingdom, and to return."

You have there the Ascension of Our Lord, His Coronation in Heaven—which is told you by St. John—and His Second Coming all in a sentence. Are you still thinking that I am wrong? Are you still thinking that the Kingdom of the parables, and the Kingdom of God, and the Kingdom of Heaven, are just a state of grace, a state of salvation? Then how are you going to deal with that sentence? A certain nobleman, Our Lord—nobody disputes that—went into a far country, to receive for Himself—salvation? Eternal life? It is preposterous. And to return and take possession of His Kingdom—eternal life? Salvation? You know very well it is impossible. He is the Lord of Life and Glory, the Redeemer of Israel and the Saviour of the world. If the Kingdom is just a state of salvation, then the parable is meaningless, but if it is a Kingdom over which He will reign on earth, then you see He went to receive the honour of being proclaimed King, and will return to take possession of His Kingdom and to reign over it in this world.

Before He went away He called His ten servants. Now, why ten servants? "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel." Ten tribes, no doubt about it, and they are the ten servants. And He delivered unto them His goods in St. Matthew; His pounds in St. Luke; and said to them, "Occupy till I come." He will be a long time away. He told the parable because they thought the Kingdom would come soon. "After a long time the Lord of those servants cometh." While He is away He has put someone in charge. Who? The ten servants; "Occupy till I come." Who is occupying till He comes? Who is in charge of the sacred things? Not the Jews; for He took it away from them. It is that nation, that flock, the nation and the people who make the ten servants, the House of Israel. Those ten servants are the flock; they are the nation; they have the seed buried; they have the hid treasure. In other words, they have the goods which He delivered to their care. If you look at the world to-day, there is no doubt as to who is occupying. Great Britain is occupying till the Lord comes. He delivered unto them His goods. Now, what are the goods? (1) The laws of the Kingdom. He has handed to this nation the responsibility of interpreting that law in terms of national life. We are in charge of the law; He has delivered to us the goods, and the great Ten Commandments are a part of the goods. (2) The land of Palestine. This land will be the centre of His Kingdom, and surely it is a part of that committed to our care. To whom has He given it? To the same nation which is in charge of the law. (3) The throne of David. That throne is going to be preserved and handed over to Him. To whom has He given it? To the same nation which has the law, and the land where the throne is going to stand.

Digitized by Google

The law and the land and the throne all part of the goods. (4) The Book of the Kingdom. To whom has He given that, for its distribution, for its proclamation to all nations? To the ten servants—to Britain to-day—and we have it, as we have the throne, the law and the Kingdom. Surely that is what it means. (5) The Church of the Kingdom. Britain is the centre of Christianity. My brethren, we have the goods. We must be the ten servants; we must be the nation to whom He gave it; we must be the flock of the House of Israel.

But we have to develop those talents, we are expected to make one talent grow into ten. Look at it. What about the law spreading over the world to-day? What about the throne? One of the greatest influences in the world for civilisation and national righteousness. What about the Book? And the Church? With all the mistakes we are making at home, we still have the missionary door open, and we are sending out the Gospel to all peoples.

I think those three men who come back to the Lord to report are representative men. There were more than three. At any rate there were ten servants to begin with, and that is a race, and those three men stand for three classes. You have at the top the people in that race who have meant business, and worked hard for the Kingdom and have done their best—one talent made into ten. Then you have the moderates—there are plenty of them; and then you have the third class in the nation who have buried their talents in the earth. And it is time you began to find out which class you belong to; whether the Lord is going to say to you, "Well done, good and faithful servant," or whether you are going out into the outer darkness, where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Then the parable of the wheat and the tares. I think there is to-day a great misunderstanding as to the time and the fulfilment of that parable. A clergyman said to me the other day, "I have been preaching about that parable for years. That parable is the Last Judgment; that parable is the Great White Throne period at the end of the millennium, when the wicked, and others, come up for judgment, and God separates the good from the bad." That is a great mistake. Let us see. You cannot find that there are any good coming up for judgment at the Great White Throne. I will challenge you to find it. "The wicked rise not again until the end of the thousand years," but the good go in without judgment. "There is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus," and I think you will see that at the end of the millennium it is the wicked only who are judged; the good are not there. Again, at the end of the millennium there will not be any tares in the Kingdom; it will not have been a perfect millennium if there are. If I must have about me all the cunning, crafty, selfish people during the millennium, it won't be an era of happiness for me. It is unthinkable. He is going to take the tares out of the field, in order that there might be a millennium. It is a great mistake to put that parable of the wheat and the tares beyond the millennium. It is coming within the next few years. The Lord is going to cleanse the Kingdom of all things that offend and them that do iniquity, in order that there might be a clean, righteous Kingdom on earth, and it is at the beginning of the millennial reign of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

I think that parable fits the parable of the pearl. We have come to the time when we have to be prepared, in this nation, to let the tares go, and to let everything that belongs to them go. The things that we have thought were goodly pearls and which we have prized so much we have to let go, and take the great pearl—the righteous Kingdom.

We are at the beginning of these things now, and I think through the fires of tribulation we shall find our souls, we shall find our nation and our true selves. The Lord is going to lift out of the Kingdom all those that are represented by the tares. That must come at the beginning of the millennium.

Before I close I want to say that in St. Matthew, chapters xxiv and xxv, we have a series of parables which indicate what the Lord is going to do when He comes. I have not the time to deal with them now, but I want to call your attention to a remarkable passage in chapter xxiv which has appealed to me in these days. It seems to me that when Christ comes the first man He is going to deal with is the man who has been in charge of His Kingdom. Listen to this: if this is not our Royal House, I do not know anything. Our Lord says, referring to the time after He has come, "Who, then, is a faithful and wise servant whom His Lord hath made ruler over His household, to give them their meat in due season?"—to attend to the welfare of His people. I am very thankful that we have a King who has the welfare of this nation at heart. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing. Verily, I say unto you that He shall make him ruler over all His goods."

There is your House of David; there is your servant David, appointed to reign over the combined Kingdom of Israel and Judah, and he is here now. Have you got that? The King whom He is going to elevate under Himself, to be the King—or the Royal House, at any rate—is here before He comes. I think we need to pray for the King. The responsibility of this nation is his, as God's representative. I believe he feels that responsibility, but he needs that you and I should hold up his hands, and should pray that he may have grace and wisdom to discharge that responsibility, so that when the Lord shall come He will find him so doing, and give him an honoured place in His Kingdom on earth.

BIRTH-PANGS.

By A. R. Nelson Heaver.

A Message to the Young People of Great Britain.

A Congress Message entitled "The World Crisis" appeared in the National Message and Banner dated October 1st, 1927. The message which follows is complementary to this, but is more directly a message to the Younger Generation of Britain.

The writer has ever striven to avoid the egotistical element in previous writings, but in this case pleads the indulgence of his readers, since the initial personal testimony with which the article deals entirely loses its force if the pronoun "we" is adopted.

As one who originally rejected the British-Israel evangel because I imagined that it involved the recognition of the almost inevitable recurrence of world hostilities, I have abundant sympathies for those among my fellow members of the rising generation who recoil in horror from the very contemplation of such a thing.

It is easy for the armchair critics to talk with careless lightness and detachment. It is a different thing for Youth who has to pay the price and meet reality upon the battlefield.

"Young Man, rejoice in thy Youth!" Thus it is written in the sacred Book. Well, those of us who were between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five when War broke out have had little opportunity to rejoice in our youth. Before our time we were called upon to face the sternest discipline that life can offer, the soul-testing ordeal of experience in the furnace and the holocaust of modern war.

BRITAIN looked on aghast as the flower of her manhood offered up their lives upon the altar of human sacrifice. A generation gave their lives for the KINGDOM.[1] The SOUL of the NATION was shaken to its foundations.

And to-day, with a generation of the best of our virile brethren missing, we face a world of difficulties such as appals the heart of the wisest of our elders, with all their advantages of age, discretion and experience.

Moreover, many of us are without that strengthening of a living faith in CHRIST which alone makes the facing of such an ordeal bearable.

To such the words of CHRIST at first may well seem strange and difficult. How can we face the coming storm—the coming whirlwind conflict?

Listen to the voice of Him Whose every word is authoritative. Speaking of the very times in which we live, He said: "When ye shall hear of Wars and

RUMOURS OF WARS,

Be ye not troubled. . . . For these are the beginnings of sorrows."[2]

One can imagine the scorner or the mocker saying "Be ye not troubled!" How often have those who were at the Front heard the words, "After all, what does anything matter?" These were the words on a thousand lips during the sorrows of the last great struggle, when those who, seeing no light—no explanation for the tragic horrors around them, watched in dull despair, Humanity, drinking to the last dregs the cup of mortal anguish.

The doctrine of despair truly enough. But where there is no vision the people perish.[3]

One can imagine the cynic and the disillusioned saying "Be ye not troubled"; but to hear such counsel from the lips of One Whose human sympathies were not dead but divine in their living intensity is simply amazing.

Be ye not troubled? Well, if we are right in facing the issue of a universal conflagration without being troubled, then there must be some tremendous reason for it.

What is that reason?

Before I was nineteen years of age I had seen war under many conditions. In the Homeland, where the agony caused by casualties among relatives and friends never failed to leave its mark; where the effects of enemy submarine blockade and raids from the air brought suffering to the people such as could only be forgotten and ignored by those bereft of all imagination.

I saw war in FRANCE behind the lines; the effects of war upon the life of a people holding at bay within their own domains a cruel and merciless foe. I saw war service in the air with the armies of three allied nations; with the French and American armies in the South of France and the British armies in the North.

I saw war from the enemy's lines; from the midst of his field gun batteries firing upon our own advancing troops; from behind the German lines; in occupied territory; among the French and Belgian populations under domination of the enemy; the hardships of prisoners of war, Russian, Portuguese, Italian, French, Belgian and British. I must draw the veil over the conditions endured by some of these . . .

I saw the effects of war in enemy territory; the effects of naval blockade upon the lives of civilian enemy population; the life of prisoners in enemy lands; a revolution, when the Southern German States threw off the yoke of PRUSSIA; the return of enemy troops marching through their home towns heralded as "heroes having laid down their arms in the cause of humanity" . . . .

Truly a tour of the Western Front such as few M.P.s, with all their special privileges, enjoyed! Moreover, I saw it all with the eyes of a journalist. For although young in years, I had the heart of a man and one that ached for the sufferings of the people.

And having seen war under all these conditions, I believe from the foundation of my soul that war is hell, and that any man who can stand up and say in the face of modern wars and rumours of wars, "Don't worry; Be ye not troubled," is saying a tremendous thing—so tremendous that no man but JESUS would have dared to give such thought an utterance.

Certainly none but He could take upon Himself the authority to give vent to so stupendous an assertion. But JESUS spake as never man spake, and behind His word lies all the power and authority of the living GOD.

Then, if we are not to be troubled in the face of the coming tribulation—in the prospect of a further war—there must be some transcendental reason for it. What is the reason? In what light should we regard the struggle of nation with nation and kingdom with kingdom?

Listen to the voice of JESUS—the greatest Statesman of all time—as He repeats His message:—"Be ye not troubled . . . For these are the Birth-Pangs!"[4] The Birth-Pangs?

Yes! These are the Birth-Pangs, not only of a New AGE—an AGE wherein dwelleth righteousness—but of a new CREATION.

The present phase of trouble is indeed a War to end War. Our faith in this fact is fully justified, abundantly vindicated.

A woman, travailing in pain, longing to be delivered of her child, finds her sorrows turned into joy in that a man child is born. So shall our sorrows be turned into joy unspeakable. Finally, it is written that GOD shall wipe away every tear from our eyes.

For the spectacle of a world, struggling in the birth-throes of a new creation, will bring the SOVEREIGN LORD of the UNIVERSE on a visit to the WORLD which He has made.

And to the SON—by Whom and for Whose pleasure[5] it was and is created—will be given the throne of DAVID.[7] And with the SON will be manifested that race of super-men, the sons of GOD,[8] for whom the whole creation waiteth.

THE THRONE OF THE WORLD,[6]

Moreover, we have this sure assurance: "Whosoever shall call on the name of the LORD shall be delivered."[9]

The message that, coming from a Brith-ish leader in the past history of our nation, strengthened God's Brith-ish People in the hour of trial, was: "ENGLAND expects that every man this day will do his duty."

In the present DAY of the LORD, a greater Leader and Commander than he, sends you His message:—"JESUS expects . . ."

What does the KING expect of His People? Surely among the greater things, just this: "That every ANGLO-SAXON MAN will do his duty, standing steadfast and unswerving in their loyalty to the KING and KINGDOM into Whose service they have been called."

Let us then, in prayer, repentance and faith, stand together bravely enduring until the hour of His coming—the coming of the KING of the KINGDOM of HEAVEN to reign over us.

Meanwhile JESUS is still expecting till His enemies are made His footstool.[10] Expecting . . . . till . . . .

The whole creation begins to feel the thrill of this expectation, as the hour of triumph, so long looked for, falls due.

BISHOP STIRES ASKS AMITY WITH BRITAIN.

THOSE who would sow the seeds of hatred and conflict between England and America were attacked by the Right Rev. Ernest M. Stires, Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Long Island, yesterday afternoon, in St. Thomas's Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street. The occasion was the unveiling and dedication of a war memorial to the parishioners who served in the World War and especially of the twenty men killed in the war. A distinguished company was present, including many uniformed men who had served overseas.

Bishop Stires, who was Rector of St. Thomas's until two years ago and who himself served as a Y.M.C.A. Chaplain in France, unveiled the memorial, which has been cut into the wall over the door on the Fifty-third Street side. General Robert Lee Bullard, the military guest of honour, stood near the Bishop and the Rev. Dr. Roelif H. Brooks, the present Rector, as an American flag was withdrawn from the memorial.

Immediately after the ceremony, Bishop Stires, speaking from his old pulpit, launched his attack on those who would stir up trouble between England and the United States.

SEES KINSHIP OF SPIRIT.

Speaking of the relations between America and England, Bishop Stires said:—

"The people who read history with the larger understanding, who feel the presence of God in every page, who behold Him working His purpose out, now helped by man and now hindered, these students know that the true peace of the world, the peace of obedience, depends more upon deep and abiding friendship between these two great peoples than upon any or all other considerations.

"Our two forms of Government were born of our character and not enforced by political mechanics. We have in common a fundamental temper in the making and administration of law. Stronger than the tie of blood and the bond of common speech is our kinship of spirit. This is most clearly proven by our most serious conflict. For the Declaration of Independence is the child of Magna Charta; and the lion's whelp was true to the call of the blood in its veins.

"It is unnecessary to recall, however briefly, to such a company as this the annals of England's glory from Alfred's day—and earlier—to our time. With all her faults and all her mistakes she yet stands pre-eminent in character, ability and strength; the greatest teacher of truth and justice, and the most faithful exemplar and guardian of the ideals she has taught. Civilisation may need for its larger beauty the contributions of many other nations, but who could think that a civilisation worthy the name could be possible without England?

LIKE "TWO HANDS OF GOD."

"Often in the same family there are two lads totally different in temperament and in gifts; each has strong qualities and some weaknesses, yet each is strong where the other is weak—and therefore they sometimes misunderstand each other.

"So it is with these two great peoples—each strong but in different fashion; each exhibiting characteristic weaknesses, but totally different in their natures. Yet they are brothers complementary of each other, if not always complimentary to each other. And when united for high unselfish purposes, they seem like the two hands of God for the moulding of a better world.

"What shall we say of those who would prevent this work, who would sow the seeds of hatred and conflict between England and America?

"Think you that the Christ of history has no clear call for us at this hour? He reminds us that though we are a nation of many peoples, yet our true mother is England. From her are the lessons, the examples, the spirit which made us great. Can you not hear Him bid these go hand in hand for the comfort and strength of the world?

"We sing the hymns England taught us, we pray the prayers hallowed by her, we study the Bible she defended and gave to the world, we read with a brother's pride the record of her sons in the great struggle in which at the last hour our sons fought and fell with hers—rushed on and won with hers.

"We should stand to-day with one hand raised in loyalty to God, and with the other we should clasp the hand of our English brothers, our fellow-soldiers in Christ. That is the best basis for peace and for a Christian civilisation."

BISHOP'S SON PRESENT.

The Rev. Ernest Van R. Stires, eldest son of Bishop Stires, who was ordained last June, appeared in his ecclesiastical robes for the first time in St. Thomas's. His name is among those carved into the memorial. He served as volunteer in the Ambulance Corps of the French Army, being too young to enlist in the A.E.F.

General Avery D. Andrews, Chairman of the War Memorial Committee, was in the front pew with General Bullard. Just behind them were Colonel Charles Elliott Warren, Colonel De Witt Falls, Colonel Thomas Denny, and Colonel Daniels, the latter of the American Legion. All were in uniform.

After the sermon "The Star-Spangled Banner" was sung. "Taps" was sounded by two buglers, one in the sanctuary and the other in the rear of the edifice, one echoing the other.

NOTES AND QUOTATIONS IN RELATION TO BRITAIN-ISRAEL.

BY PROFESSOR EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., &c.

[The following articles should be read with the thought in mind that they are not intended as a glorification of the Empire, nor of the Anglo-Saxon people, but as a recognition that Jehovah, the God and King of Israel, has in the Celto-Saxon people the basis of His Kingdom on earth. The Anglo-Saxon people have been trained for ages to be the Administrators of that Kingdom, and to carry its benefits, its liberty and its peace to all mankind.]

No. 18.

THE Canadian Bank of Commerce had its Annual Meeting in Toronto, January 10th, 1928. Its President, Sir John Aird, gave the annual address, a stately and businesslike delivery.

In his remarks he referred to England in the following words, which are well worth a place in these "Notes and Quotations":—

"A few years ago, and since the war, some people were inclined to regard Great Britain as a decadent nation; but she is far from being this; indeed, the British Empire is a greater Empire to-day than it has ever been. We have only to consider that she has come to the forefront during the past year in the engineering and scientific field by securing the world motor-cycle speed record, the motor speed record, the world steam railway speed record, the world submarine speed record, the world steamship record, and the world aeroplane speed record, including the vertical aeroplane; and within the last month or so she has invented a process of manufacturing the highest grade of tool steel from iron products by means of wireless electric current."

And these are only samples of the many ways in which she is, and has been, leading the world for hundreds of years.

Referring to England's rule in India, the San Francisco Argonaut, quoting a great New York paper, says:—

"In the administration of India, the world sees, and India knows it, the most amazing bureaucracy that any civilisation ever produced, a body of men so insignificant in its numbers, so insignificantly remunerated, yet so absolutely incorruptible, and so exalted in its prestige, that with only a handful of white troops behind them—fewer than 65,000 officers and men of all ranks—the men constituting this bureaucracy governs a population of 300,000,000. They do more. They govern it wisely and beneficently. They protect the tillers of the soil from the Brahmin bannias and other oppressors, who naturally resent being excluded from this immemorial field of plunder, and therefore foment anti-British propaganda in this country (America) and elsewhere."

Harold Begbie has written a series of letters on "Our Foreign Dictators," a most valuable and timely production, which ought to be read by every man in the British Empire.

In his pamphlet he quotes from some other people of repute, and some of these quotations are herein used because of their real worth, as will be seen on perusal. He quotes Emerson, who says:—"I see her (England) not dispirited, not weak, but well remembering that she has seen dark days before; indeed, with a kind of instinct that she sees a little better in a cloudy day, and that in storm of battle and calamity she has a secret vigour and a pulse like cannon."

How true, too, are these words. In her trials in Egypt; in the wilderness in her warfare with Amalek; in Canaan under Joshua, the Judges and the Kings; on and on through Asia, in her time of exile and wanderings, and ever on, till she reached the Isles of Britain, and through the ages up to now, she was able to see, when others were blind. And she saw BECAUSE SHE HAD AN UNDYING FAITH IN GOD IN ALL THAT LONG JOURNEY, which gave her a clear eye and vision which are hers to-day.

THE NEW BIBLE HOUSE IN JERUSALEM.

BY B. R. PARKINSON.

THE official opening of the new Bible House at Jerusalem took place on April 10th. In the absence of Lord Plumer, the High Commissioner, through indisposition, Lady Plumer declared the building open, and the Bishop of Jerusalem conducted the service of dedication. There were present members of the great International Missionary Council, which has just held its meeting on the Mount of Olives; representatives of the Armenian Patriarch, the Greek Orthodox Church, the Syrian Church, the Abbot of the Abyssinian Church, and a number of clergy, missionaries and residents of Jerusalem and elsewhere. The Bible Society was represented by Rev. J. H. Ritson, D.D., London Secretary, Rev. David Calder, B.A., New Zealand Secretary, and two members of the London Committee. Several B.-I. friends were there from England and New Zealand, including Miss Lightbody, who runs a small Bible and Book Depot in Jerusalem for the Protestant British-Israel Association. There was also present the old man, Michael O'Felan, who kept open a Bible Depot in Jerusalem during the war in defiance of the Turks, and who presented a Bible to General Allenby on December 11th, 1917, as he entered the Jaffa Gate.

The new Bible House is a five-storey building in stone and reinforced concrete, erected on a site at the junction of the Jaffa and Nablous roads. On high ground just outside the old city walls the foundation of the house is in the rock. The building was completed just before the earthquake of last year, and was almost the only structure in the neighbourhood which withstood the strain without a crack. Erected by subscription from all parts of the world, this is the climax of a chain of nearly fifty Bible Houses in many countries which have been built by or for the Society out of special funds, independent of the subscriptions for Bible distribution. Naturally the House at Jerusalem has evoked an unusual amount of interest, and the Society may be congratulated on the fulfilment of a long-cherished hope and desire, made possible by the British Mandate.

The Egypt Agency of the Bible Society, whose centre has been Port Said, distributes the Scriptures in 80 tongues, and it is anticipated that the Jerusalem Branch will become increasingly busy as the city continues to grow, for the demand for Bibles is great. A notable and significant episode was the presentation of copies of the Scriptures (Old and New Testaments) to all the Jewish workmen who were engaged on the building, and these were willingly received.

The Bible Society has this year passed the 600 mark in the total number of languages into which it has published the Scriptures, and the event recorded here may be hailed as a fulfilment of the prophecy, Isa. ii. 3, "Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

B.-I. COMMISSIONERS' WORK.

MR. JOHN LEECH, K.C., has been making a tour of some of the Midland Branches, beginning with a large and enthusiastic meeting at Ebenezer Church, Birmingham, and closing at the same place with an excellent Conference of Midland delegates. The following Branches were represented: Birmingham, Handsworth, Walsall, Stourbridge, Nottingham, Derby, Leicester, Melbourne, Coventry, Leamington, Rugby, Dunchurch, Cheltenham. Some others, unfortunately, were unable to send delegates.

The Chief Commissioner and the large number of delegates were welcomed on behalf of the Birmingham Centre by the Rev. T. H. Whitehouse, Commissioner. Some topics of immediate practical interest were discussed, followed by an explanation at length by Mr. Leech of the enormous growth of the work of the Federation and of the overwhelming demands on the energies of the existing staff of Commissioners, and the need of further appointments. He also very plainly showed the urgent necessity of the Areas taking a fuller share in the raising of funds for the support of the men working them, and for the extension of their activities. After a free and interesting discussion, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"That this Conference of Midland delegates, having heard from Mr. John Leech, Chief Commissioner, a statement of the acute need for the better provision of funds for the maintenance and extension of the work of the Commissoners, recommends that every Branch of the Federation in the Area shall adopt among its numbers, according to individual choice, any or all of the following methods of contribution to the Commissioners' Fund for the Midland Area, namely:

(a) Such periodical payments (over and above their annual membership subscriptions) payable weekly, monthly, quarterly or otherwise as desired by the members, and of such amount as they may be willing to contribute.

(b) Weekly Freewill offerings by means of envelopes, for fixed or varying sums, according to individual convenience.

In the case of (a) and (b) each Branch, or its Committee, to decide whether the whole or what part of the moneys thereby contributed shall be given to the Commissioners' Fund.

(c) Pyramid Collecting Boxes, issued to Branch members from Headquarters through an Area Representative, the entire contents of which shall be given to the Commissioners' Fund.

And this Conference urges that each Branch shall take its full share in this pressing responsibility.

Tea was provided for the Conference by ladies of the Birmingham Centre, and the desire was freely expressed that gatherings of this kind might be held at frequent intervals.

"THE CHURCH OVERSEAS."

EXTRACT FROM ARTICLE BY THE EARL OF SELBORNE IN THE "QUARTERLY REVIEW."

"SOMEWHERE in the newspapers I read an account of a Communist Conference at which two leading ideas were expressed: the ardent hope of universal peace and a fierce desire for the destruction of the British Empire.

"Leaving out of account those present at the Conference who were in reality anything in the world but idealists, doubtless many of those present and who acclaimed those sentiments were genuine idealists—a very dangerous class of idealists, to be sure, but honest.

"I do not suppose that it has ever occurred to these people that the disruption of the British Empire would be wholly destructive of the possibility of the peace of the world; but so it is. On the dissolution of the British Empire each Dominion would have to look after itself, and each Dominion would be forced greatly to increase its naval and military expenditure for its own protection. The Dominions would arm. In India and in Africa chaos would ensue, exactly the same kind of chaos as to-day reigns in China.

"This was the condition in which the British found India when first they came in contact with her, and those are the conditions which actually prevailed less than one hundred years ago in those parts of India which had not then come under the peace-compelling sway of Queen Victoria. India would remain in chaos till some strong Power st[illegible]d into the place which the British Empire had previously filled.

"British Africa outside the Union of South Africa would likewise relapse into a seething warfare of tribe against tribe until some strong Power like France or Germany stepped in. This kind of chaos—when all ordered government is in abeyance and when fighting chiefs, small and big, roam over the land seeking what they can devour—probably produces the absolute maximum of human misery. This was the fate of France at the time of the Hundred Years' War with England, and of Central Europe at the time of the Thirty Years' War. It is the fate of whole provinces of China to-day.

"The British Empire has brought order, peace, liberty and justice to great tracts of the earth where the meaning of those words was unknown before. Its existence alone makes the ideal of the League of Nations possible; it is in itself a nucleus League of Nations; it carries with it the living hope that one day 'Peace will over all the earth its ancient splendour fling.' Destroy the British Empire and the result will be war and misery.

"Of course there were indefensible happenings during the centuries in which the Empire was growing into being. Men were not perfect then any more than they are now. But I do not understand why Communists of all people should feel so sensitive about that word 'grab.' They pretend that the whole of the Empire was grabbed by British adventurers from someone else, which, of course, is an utter travesty of the facts of the case. Conquest there was and much of it, but there was much voluntary adhesion for the sake of protection. I have myself discussed this very aspect of the question with that great African "chief," Khama, who persuaded the whole group of Bechuana tribes to put themselves under the protection of Queen Victoria.

"We are not responsible for the deeds of our fathers. We are responsible for the use we make of the heritage they have left to us, and I say unhesitatingly that to-day the hands of our people as a governing race are clean and that their motives are pure. Great Britain draws not one penny of tribute from the British Empire, and our universally accepted policy is to enforce peace and order, to give liberty and justice, and to train the less experienced races of the British Empire to govern themselves."

OBITUARY.

MR. WILLIAM REEVE.

"KNOW ye not, that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel."—2 Sam. iii, 38.

No truer words can describe the noble character of our fellow-worker, who has so suddenly been taken from our Association in Toronto.

William Reeve was truly a good man, and was loved and respected by all. He was "an Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile." He was always ready and happy to give out of his rich treasury of knowledge to further the work of spreading British-Israel Truth. He was a true and humble follower of the Saviour, and his ambition was to write and tell others the "Gospel of the Kingdom."

Born at Leighton Buzzard, in Bedfordshire, England, he came to Canada when about 19 years of age and settled in Toronto. He was very studious and came under the teaching of Rev. Dr. Wild on the subject of British-Israel. From that period he devoted his time and energies to its propagation. The Pyramid was particularly interesting to him, and he solved the problem of the shortening of the time in the first Low Passage following the Grand Gallery.

We are sure that all British-Israelites will deeply sympathise with his wife and family, and pray that the God of Israel will sustain and comfort them in their bereavement.

ORIGIN OF THE WELSH.

LECTURE BY MR. A. EXLEY (PRESIDENT OF THE BRISBANE B.-I.-W.F. BRANCH) TO THE MEMBERS.

THERE are three texts of Holy Writ which form, as it were, separate keys to unlock gates of knowledge with respect to the destiny of the House of Israel, and its position and influence in the world to-day. Perhaps the most important of these is the one concerning a message given to King David at the height of Israel's prosperity, when the King wished to build a house worthy for the worship of Jehovah. This message implied a change of territory, and that Palestine would not always be held by the House of Israel, nor Jerusalem its capital city. The message given by the prophet Nathan was "Moreover I will appoint a place for My people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as before time" (2 Sam. vii, 10). Thiscl early points to a place of security, free from incursions of enemy forces. A clue to its position is given by the prophet Jeremiah, "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the Isles afar off, and say, 'He that scattered Israel will gather him and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock.'"—Jer. xxxi, 10. We also learn from the prophet (Is. lxv, 15), The Lord God shall call His servants by another name, and that they would speak with stammering lips and another tongue (Is. xxviii, 11). They would thus while being sifted through the nations lose their identity as Israel.

ANCESTORS OF THE WELSH.

When the dawn of history first illumines these "Isles afar off," we find them inhabited by a race called Brythons, who were the ancestors of the present Welsh nation—the Cymry—who first appeared in Europe 650 B.C.—a century after the Ten Tribes had been deported from Palestine. The first historical mention of Cymry is to be found in the Nimrod Obelisk, now in the British Museum, dating back to 858 B.C., which speaks of the tribute of the Khumri to the King of Assyria. From this and other inscriptions we gather that the people of Israel were known as Beth Khumri, or Gimiri, that is, Land and People of the Tribes. Khumree, Gimiri, Cymry, all apply to the same people — the subjects of Omri, King of Israel. These names, more or less corrupted, indicate many places through which the tribes passed—Gumri, a fortress on the banks of the Araxes to which region the Israelites were translated at the Captivity. Crimea (Cumria), where many Israelitish tombs with Hebrew inscriptions are still to be seen; Cambria, the abode of the Welsh, and Cumberland, of close kin to Cambria. The Welsh are possibly the purest in blood of those tribes of Israel which first reached the Isles of the West, and their collective name Brythons signifies, in Hebrew, People of the Covenant.

MEN OF WAR.

Burrows, in his "Wild Wales," states that Hu Gadarn, the leader of the Cymry, led an immense concourse of his countrymen from the Crimea across many lands to Britain, a country inhabited only by a few savage Gauls (ancient Iberians).

Digitized by Google

but which, after the arrival of Hu and his Cymry, became a smiling region, its forests thinned, its bears and wolves hunted down, corn planted, and pleasant cottages erected. The Brythons were men of war, and built war chariots with scythes attached to the axles which, when driven by the Brythonic charioteers, were the terror of the Roman soldiery.

The young bloods of Rome copied the Brython chariots and many a well-contested chariot race raised the enthusiasm of the spectators in the Coliseum. The Brythons were skilful in the training of dogs and hawks, and were well versed in the arts of agriculture.

They could smelt, forge, and mould metals, and their coinage as a means of exchange dates at least from the year 150 B.C. They carried on an export trade with the countries on the eastern borders of the Mediterranean, exporting tin, lead, silver, pearls, hides and fleeces, and receiving in exchange finely woven fabrics. For 400 years the Brythons kept the Roman troops on the alert, compelling them to build ninety military stations to hold them subject, but in spite of all its efforts Rome never subjugated the whole country.

LAWS AND RELIGION.

The Cymry possessed written laws before any Continental nation, and these were based on and owed their origin to the laws of Israel as set forth in Leviticus. Alfred the Great collected and formed into a code these laws, which form the foundation of the Common Law of England. As regards language, Modern Welsh is said to be closer in idiom to Hebrew than any other modern language, and to abound in roots of Hebrew origin.

The religion of the Brythons was Druidism, which taught of a Supreme Being, and that man's soul is immortal. They worshipped in groves and set up memorial stones of which Stonehenge is the best extant example. But the greatest gift which the Welsh or Ancient Brython gave to the whole nation was the inestimable boon of Christianity. The British was the first of the Christian National Churches, and its bishops were representatives in the early great Christian Councils. The British Church, from its centre of Carleon or Wok, sent out missionaries to Ireland, Scotland, Gaul, and even Italy, and was the principal factor under God's Providence in leading their kinsmen of the House of Ephraim and its attendant tribes—now known as English, into the true knowledge of the Light of the World. From the Ancient Church of Britain are sprung the Established Churches of England and Scotland, with their many offshoots, all members of the Church Catholic. "Like a mighty army moves the Church of God," many regiments, many leaders, but all doing the will of the Commander-in-Chief, King of kings and Lord of lords.

The Rev. James Mountain, D.D., is to lecture at Southport on June 5th; Wigan, June 6th; Liverpool, June 7th; and Manchester, June 8th.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

By the Rev. G. H. Lancaster, M.A.

QUESTION.—Can you tell me why our Communion Table is called "Altar," and why we speak of Altar Vases, Altar Frontals, etc.? An Altar speaks of sacrifice. Was the word "Altar" used just after the Reformation, and if so when was it correct to speak of the Communion Table?

ANON. (DEVON).

ANSWER.—It is safe to say in reply that the use of the word "Altar" is purely traditional, and, in the accepted interpretation of the Doctrine and Dogmas of the Church of England as expressed in the 1662 Book of Common Prayer (and in the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England) that the Communion Table is not an Altar in the sacrificial sense of the term.

It is almost impossible to delete the word "Altar" from conventional usage. If it be affirmed, as is the case of course, that this word is not to be found in our Prayer Book, it must also be remembered that the word "Protestant" does not occur either in the Prayer Book. So it is a mutual case of giving and taking.

The Church of England Doctrine is sacramental, but not sacerdotal, and so the Holy Table is not a sacrificial Altar, in the sense in which "Altar" was and is used in other religions

Words change their meaning. Many words in the Bible (A.V.) have an entirely different meaning attached to them nowadays. As a general rule words change their meaning for the worse, of which hundreds of examples could be tendered. But here we have a case in Anglican theology where the word "Altar" has changed its meaning to what should be a harmless and innocent connotation, meaning nothing more than "Communion Table." In support of this, attention should be drawn to the beautiful Prayer of Oblation, where we pray ". . . . accept this our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. . . . And here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy, and lively sacrifice unto Thee. . . . And although we be unworthy, through our manifold sins, to offer unto Thee any sacrifice, yet we beseech Thee to accept this our bounden duty and service. . . . "

It will be seen that in this Prayer we retain the use of the word "sacrifice"—in a new and a New Testament sense, so that the word "sacrifice" has now another meaning attached to it, and with that new and modern meaning we may still, in conventional language, retain the word "Altar" unofficially, if so desired.

I have in front of me the two Prayer Books of Edward VI. The first one (1549) uses "the Lordes table" in the opening Rubric, and "Altar" in the subsequent Rubrics, whereas the second Book (1552) deletes the word "Altar," and uses "LORDES table" in the opening Rubric, and "Goddes borde" in a subsequent Rubric. Hence, officially speaking, the word "Altar" has not been printed in our Prayer Books since 1552. But its use has been retained colloquially down to the present day.

nucleus League of Nations ; it carries with it the living hope that one day 'Peace will over all the earth its ancient splendour fling.' Destroy the British Empire and the result will be war and misery.

"Of course there were indefensible happenings during the centuries in which the Empire was growing into being. Men were not perfect then any more than they are now. But I do not understand why Communists of all people should feel so sensitive about that word 'grab.' They pretend that the whole of the Empire was grabbed by British adventurers from someone else, which, of course, is an utter travesty of the facts of the case. Conquest there was and much of it, but there was much voluntary adhesion for the sake of protection. I have myself discussed this very aspect of the question with that great African "chief," Khama, who persuaded the whole group of Bechuana tribes to put themselves under the protection of Queen Victoria.

"We are not responsible for the deeds of our fathers. We are responsible for the use we make of the heritage they have left to us, and I say unhesitatingly that to-day the hands of our people as a governing race are clean and that their motives are pure. Great Britain draws not one penny of tribute from the British Empire, and our universally accepted policy is to enforce peace and order, to give liberty and justice, and to train the less experienced races of the British Empire to govern themselves."

OBITUARY.

MR. WILLIAM REEVE.

"KNOW ye not, that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel."—2 Sam. iii, 38.

No truer words can describe the noble character of our fellow-worker, who has so suddenly been taken from our Association in Toronto.

William Reeve was truly a good man, and was loved and respected by all. He was "an Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile." He was always ready and happy to give out of his rich treasury of knowledge to further the work of spreading British-Israel Truth. He was a true and humble follower of the Saviour, and his ambition was to write and tell others the "Gospel of the Kingdom."

Born at Leighton Buzzard, in Bedfordshire, England, he came to Canada when about 19 years of age and settled in Toronto. He was very studious and came under the teaching of Rev. Dr. Wild on the subject of British-Israel. From that period he devoted his time and energies to its propagation. The Pyramid was particularly interesting to him, and he solved the problem of the shortening of the time in the first Low Passage following the Grand Gallery.

We are sure that all British-Israelites will deeply sympathise with his wife and family, and pray that the God of Israel will sustain and comfort them in their bereavement.

ORIGIN OF THE WELSH.

LECTURE BY MR. A. EXLEY (PRESIDENT OF THE BRISBANE B.-I.-W.F. BRANCH) TO THE MEMBERS.

THERE are three texts of Holy Writ which form, as it were, separate keys to unlock gates of knowledge with respect to the destiny of the House of Israel, and its position and influence in the world to-day. Perhaps the most important of these is the one concerning a message given to King David at the height of Israel's prosperity, when the King wished to build a house worthy for the worship of Jehovah. This message implied a change of territory, and that Palestine would not always be held by the House of Israel, nor Jerusalem its capital city. The message given by the prophet Nathan was "Moreover I will appoint a place for My people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more ; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as before time" (2 Sam. vii, 10). Thisel early points to a place of security, free from incursions of enemy forces. A clue to its position is given by the prophet Jeremiah, "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the Isles afar off, and say, 'He that scattered Israel will gather him and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock.'"—Jer. xxxi, 10. We also learn from the prophet (Is. lxv, 15), The Lord God shall call His servants by another name, and that they would speak with stammering lips and another tongue (Is. xxviii, 11). They would thus while being sifted through the nations lose their identity as Israel.

ANCESTORS OF THE WELSH.

When the dawn of history first illumines these "Isles afar off," we find them inhabited by a race called Brythons, who were the ancestors of the present Welsh nation—the Cymry—who first appeared in Europe 650 B.C.—a century after the Ten Tribes had been deported from Palestine. The first historical mention of Cymry is to be found in the Nimrod Obelisk, now in the British Museum, dating back to 858 B.C., which speaks of the tribute of the Khumri to the King of Assyria. From this and other inscriptions we gather that the people of Israel were known as Beth Khumri, or Gimiri, that is, Land and People of the Tribes. Khumree, Gimiri, Cymry, all apply to the same people — the subjects of Omri, King of Israel. These names, more or less corrupted, indicate many places through which the tribes passed—Gumri, a fortress on the banks of the Araxes to which region the Israelites were translated at the Captivity. Crimea (Cumria), where many Israelitish tombs with Hebrew inscriptions are still to be seen ; Cambria, the abode of the Welsh, and Cumberland, of close kin to Cambria. The Welsh are possibly the purest in blood of those tribes of Israel which first reached the Isles of the West, and their collective name Brythons signifies, in Hebrew, People of the Covenant.

MEN OF WAR.

Burrows, in his "Wild Wales," states that Hu Gadarn, the leader of the Cymry, led an immense concourse of his countrymen from the Crimea across many lands to Britain, a country inhabited only by a few savage Gauls (ancient Iberians), but which, after the arrival of Hu and his Cymry, became a smiling region, its forests thinned, its bears and wolves hunted down, corn planted, and pleasant cottages erected. The Brythons were men of war, and built war chariots with scythes attached to the axles which, when driven by the Brythonic charioteers, were the terror of the Roman soldiery.

The young bloods of Rome copied the Brython chariots and many a well-contested chariot race raised the enthusiasm of the spectators in the Coliseum. The Brythons were skilful in the training of dogs and hawks, and were well versed in the arts of agriculture.

They could smelt, forge, and mould metals, and their coinage as a means of exchange dates at least from the year 150 B.C. They carried on an export trade with the countries on the eastern borders of the Mediterranean, exporting tin, lead, silver, pearls, hides and fleeces, and receiving in exchange finely woven fabrics. For 400 years the Brythons kept the Roman troops on the alert, compelling them to build ninety military stations to hold them subject, but in spite of all its efforts Rome never subjugated the whole country.

LAWS AND RELIGION.

The Cymry possessed written laws before any Continental nation, and these were based on and owed their origin to the laws of Israel as set forth in Leviticus. Alfred the Great collected and formed into a code these laws, which form the foundation of the Common Law of England. As regards language, Modern Welsh is said to be closer in idiom to Hebrew than any other modern language, and to abound in roots of Hebrew origin.

The religion of the Brythons was Druidism, which taught of a Supreme Being, and that man's soul is immortal. They worshipped in groves and set up memorial stones of which Stonehenge is the best extant example. But the greatest gift which the Welsh or Ancient Brython gave to the whole nation was the inestimable boon of Christianity. The British was the first of the Christian National Churches, and its bishops were representatives in the early great Christian Councils. The British Church, from its centre of Carleon or Wok, sent out missionaries to Ireland, Scotland, Gaul, and even Italy, and was the principal factor under God's Providence in leading their kinsmen of the House of Ephraim and its attendant tribes—now known as English, into the true knowledge of the Light of the World. From the Ancient Church of Britain are sprung the Established Churches of England and Scotland, with their many offshoots, all members of the Church Catholic. "Like a mighty army moves the Church of God," many regiments, many leaders, but all doing the will of the Commander-in-Chief, King of kings and Lord of lords.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

MEETINGS will be held as usual at Headquarters next week, Wednesday afternoon and Thursday evening. The speakers last week were Mr. John Leech, K.C., and Mr. Daniel Farmer. Mr. Sleeman's Bible Class meets each Tuesday, from 6 to 7. In response to requests a Bible Class for women will be held on the first Saturday afternoon each month, commencing on Saturday, June 2nd, at 3 o'clock.

We are pleased to report that the amount required for the new Book Room in East London has been subscribed, and to all the donors we tender our sincere thanks. We need liberal donations for our general work; the demands upon us in various directions are heavy and continuous. We cannot adequately express our gratitude to all those who regularly and generously send us help.

The B.-I. Cause has suffered a loss in the passing away of Mrs. Mitchell, of Bradford. A lady of a remarkably fine character, she was a zealous worker in a private way, and never lost an opportunity of spreading B.-I. teaching among those with whom she came in contact.

IMPORTANT CORRECTION.—On page 295 of this Journal, the symbology used by Our Lord in the Parable of "Judah and Lazarus" is said to be found in Isaiah xiv, 13 and 14, whereas it ought to have been Isaiah v, 13 and 14. See also the Revised Version.

A B.-I. Open-air meeting will be held in Finsbury Park on Sunday, June 3rd, at 3.30 p.m. The Rev. Joseph Gay will be the principal speaker, supported by Messrs. Pilcher, Barrow, McKelvey and Tester. We hope to announce other meetings in next week's issue.

Mr. Garrison, Secretary-General, gave two lectures at Stroud on 17th inst., at both of which General Fasken presided. In the afternoon, Mrs. Flora Annie Steele, the well-known authoress, moved the vote of thanks. In the evening the mover was Mr. Saunders, the Editor of the local paper, when the subject was "The Great Pyramid," which attracted a representative gathering from the town and district.

We are indebted to General Fasken for his influential efforts to rouse interest in this part of Gloucestershire.

On Saturday last Mr. Garrison lectured on the "Pyramid" in the beautiful Royal Hall at Harrogate to a very fine audience, said to be by far the largest known for a lecture in the town for some years past. It comprised the leading people, and drew numbers from Leeds, Bradford, Rochdale, Ripon, Ben Rhydding, Bingley, and other places. The closest interest was maintained for two hours. Dr. Rutherford presided. Great praise is due to Miss K. Noble, our very zealous and capable local Hon. Secretary, for her excellent organisation work, and her businesslike methods.

At both Stroud and Harrogate return visits were asked for.

During the early part of this month excellent audiences gathered at Bradford, Bingley and Ilkley, to hear the Rev. T. H. Whitehouse on "Moscow v. Britain," and at all the cry is for "more."

On the 10th and 11th four meetings were held at St. Martin's Parish Hall, Lincoln, addressed by the same speaker. The Chairmen were the Rev. Canon E. Akenhead, R.D., Councillor Miss M. E. Nevile, M.B.E., J.P., Mr. R. C. Minton, O.B.E., and Capt. J. S. Reeve, D.L., J.P. Good audiences in the afternoons, and excellent ones in the evenings, listened with intense eagerness to the Message of the Kingdom, many expressing keen delight. The work of organising the meetings was done by Major Guy M. Ellison, assisted by Lt.-Col. W. H. B. Brook, and members of Toc H. It is now intended to form a Branch here, and all who are interested are requested to send their names and addresses to Headquarters, 6, Buckingham Gate, London, S.W.1.

The Liverpool Branch had a visit from the Rev. Joseph Gay on May 10th, when he gave an address on "Britain's Place in God's Plan of the Ages." Questions were asked and answered at the close.

On May 7th the Watford and District Branch concluded a very successful season's work with a lecture by Mr. Howard B. Rand, LL.B. (of Massachusetts, U.S.A.), on the subject of "Bible Chronology and the British Empire," the chair being taken by Colonel G. W. Brazier-Creagh.

Mr. Rand's address covered a wide field of British-Israel Truth, giving the prophetical and historical basis upon which our teaching is founded.

The general opinion expressed at this and previous meetings is, "Why do not the Clergy teach this Truth, which is obviously Bible Truth, and of which we recognise the significance when the events, most of which are well known to us, are placed in their chronological order?"

During the season's work we have held twelve public meetings and eight Branch meetings, all of them well attended by enthusiastic hearers. We have been addressed by many well-known B.-I. leaders, and have enrolled a large number of members and associates during the year, many of whom have attended every meeting.

We are indeed encouraged to go on with the work which, with God's help, will be the means of great blessing in Watford and district.

DR. WARSHAW, M.A., lecturing at Worcester, said: "Vivisection was under a system of inspection, but it was a system that protected no one but the Vivisector."

TO SUPERINTEND 267,000 VIVISECTIONS PER YEAR IN THE UNITED KINGDOM, THERE WERE TWO INSPECTORS ONLY! How was their yearly report compiled? It was a compilation of reports sent in by the Vivisectionists themselves, and, of course, they did not give the show away! It was just an elaborate piece of eyewash to quiet the awakening conscience of the people!"

Any agony can be inflicted upon these poor patient, friendless creatures with perfect impunity if neither of the two Inspectors happens to be present.

Do not be deceived by the plausible excuse that rats are chiefly used. All the worst experiments are made and the most fiendish scientific curiosities gratified upon dogs, cats, horses and rabbits, all highly organised and sensitive creatures!

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

(It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.)

WHAT SHALL ISRAEL'S PART BE IN THE LAST GREAT STRUGGLE?—V.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

We have analysed several of the outstanding prophecies in order to determine what is indicated in them as Britain's place and experience in the last great struggle.

Let us now turn to a consideration of mobilisation of forces such as are indicated as preceding the last great struggle. If we turn to the sixteenth chapter of Revelation—the pouring out of the sixth vial—we find an activity indicated on the part of three evil spirits like frogs, which are the spirits of devils working miracles, going out to the kings of the earth and of all the world to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

This clearly indicates a period of intense and world-wide propaganda. It should be manifest by this time to all, and its scope and direction should be known. Is there such a propaganda?

In looking for this propaganda we must recognise that it is threefold and each division of it is indicated. The propaganda of the beast: the beast symbol has always indicated the secular organisation of a kingdom or Empire, such as Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome. We shall be safe in assuming that the symbol still stands for some such power.

The dragon: this symbol stands primarily for the devil; and, secondarily, we believe for the ecclesiastical organisation which has always been associated with the secular authority of kingdom or Empire. It has not always been by the choice of the beast or national authority that such association has existed. Sometimes the dragon power of the priesthood has been in active contest as to authority with the national authority. History makes this very clear. In this case, however, the beast and dragon powers—while separately organised, each working toward its particular objective—will co-operate together against Israel-Britain.

The false prophet: it is sufficient to say that this description can only be referred to the Mohammedan organisation.

From these three sources, then, national and secular, ecclesiastical and Islamic, goes out a stream of propaganda. Is this threefold propaganda apparent to-day? Obviously the answer is "Yes."

The secular propaganda has its fountain-head in Moscow, and its activities are manifest in every land. We shall deal with this first:—

It is a striking fact that from Moscow as a centre of propaganda there has come to the Council of the League of Nations a proposal for national disarmament. As a move towards peace this proposal is utterly insincere. As a move to prevent war in the sense of nation moving against nation it is in line with the beast propaganda. The primary object of the beast power is not now to set nation against nation, but to set class against class in every nation, thus to bring about universal impotence outside of those countries organised under the beast rule; not international warfare, but class warfare, is the objective of the Soviet propaganda.

Digitized by Google

In response to that propaganda, deluded classes have been organised in all the nations outside of Russia, who would move to overthrow existing Governments but for the fact that such Governments are armed and control the administrative machine.

Thus in Britain the forces which make for law and order are armed and organised, and are therefore able to hold the Communistic class element under control. In Russia, the forces which make for law and order are unorganised and unarmed, while the Communist Government is armed and controls the administrative machine. It is manifestly, therefore, a part of the specious propaganda of the beast organisation to induce the nations which stand for law and order to cast their arms aside.

Manifestly the nations would be mad indeed to fall in with such propaganda.

It is further the intention of the beast power, which is not by any means Russia, but a bureau of adventurers of a certain race, to use the forces under their control to carry out a programme of conquest greater than any which has ever been attempted in history.

The first objective tried has been China, but the inertia of China has been too great an obstacle to be quickly overcome, and that attempt has not succeeded.

The second would be India ; but the beast propaganda in India has been met by the difficulties of a multitude of races, a plurality of languages, the division of the people into rival faiths and into separate castes, so that again rapid organisation of the hundreds of millions of India cannot be carried out in the time available.

The third objective is the unorganised, sparsely-peopled, faction-torn Middle East. This is a land of supreme strategical importance and lies exposed to the grasp of any strong invader ; therefore the beast organisation is formulating plans to take possession of that strategic position, and, in order to carry out such purpose, desires first to disarm the Western nations, and especially Britain.

We have therefore the strange spectacle of the beast propaganda preaching disarmament to the Western nations, while arming itself in every direction. Not national war, but class war is the watchword of the beast propaganda. How clearly has the Bible foretold this very thing !

The ecclesiastical propaganda : Is this manifest before our eyes ?

Let us consider for a moment what this can be. It is the ecclesiastical organisation which has existed side by side with the Imperial organisation in the Babylon succession of Empires from the great religious function organised by Nebuchadnezzar on the plains of Dura down to the present day.

The lineal descendant of Babylon, Imperially, was Rome. The lineal descendant of ecclesiastical Babylon has been, and is, Rome. We have nothing to do with the faith of our neighbour, and are not making reference to it in this article. We have everything to do with the political activities of that organisation when it is brought to bear upon our individual or national life. Is there in the realm of world politics a propaganda emanating from this source, intensified at the present period, tending to gather the nations to the battle of the great day of God Almighty ? It is manifest to the world that there is.

Not in modern days has the secular activity of the Papal organisation been so active as it is at the present time in the political life of the nations. What nation is there that does not feel this pressure ? We know of none. Most certainly it is felt in every part of the Empire. It is felt in political contests and elections. It is felt in the lobbies of the Houses of Parliament. It is felt in the administrative departments. It is felt in the executive forces of the nations, dominions, provinces and cities of the Empire and of the United States. It is felt upon the executive boards of our semi-public services, such as railways and steamboats. It is felt in the management of private enterprise such as mines, factories, shops and stores. The pressure excludes many non-Roman Catholics from positions and employments which are their right, and gives place to Roman Catholic appointees out of all proportion to their claim according to their numbers in the community.

The intensive propaganda against the free worship of the Anglo-Saxon and his liberty of action and share of privilege is being pushed from day to day, and the aggressive pressure upon individuals ignoring the rights of parents and other authorities is becoming more marked. These things are with us, and are being increasingly well known from day to day. Be it marked that in stating well-known facts we are making no attack upon either the Roman Catholic faith, people, or organisation, but are simply discussing forces which are directed to act upon our national, family and individual life.

But is this all ? It is not all.

There has been called into existence an army of men who have been made to swear an oath preparatory to action, looking towards the overthrow of the national organisation of the Empire and of the United States.

Why has this army of men been called into existence and been caused to take such an obligation ?

This organisation is widespread throughout Anglo-Saxondom and its propaganda activities are ceaseless.

Is not this manifestly the second phase of the intensive propaganda of the present period ? Is not the objective the restoration of the temporal power of the Papacy ? And the using of it to enforce the subjugation of the Church in Anglo-Saxondom ?

The third great phase of propaganda is that of Islam.

As far as Turkey is concerned the power of Islam is waning, and the faith of Islam is passing away.

But in Africa and elsewhere the faith of Islam in late years has made greater progress among native races than the Christian faith has done. There still remains a tremendous centre of moral power, and multitudes will yet answer to its call in the final assembly of nations for the last great struggle.

Now, how are these things to be met ?

It will be noticed that arms and armies are playing the part now of restraining the subversive class activities stirred up by this threefold propaganda. Arms restrain them in India ; arms restrain them in Egypt ; arms restrained them in China, and are restraining them throughout Anglo-Saxondom. Arms are restraining them on the larger scale of international endeavour and world revolution. It will be a fatal day for the nations if they lay restraining power of arms on sea and land aside. " I speak as unto wise men ; consider what I say."

But it is manifest that arms can only restrain overt action ; the experience of the ages has been, and the experience of to-day still is, that doctrines cannot be overcome by arms.

Germany took the sword, and was met with the sword. The Soviet and the Papacy have each taken the field with doctrine, and they cannot be met by the sword. How then shall they be met?

The provision to meet this need of the era has been made by Almighty God. Against the negations of the Bolshevik and against the aggressive claims of the Papacy must be preached, and we would to God that all were active in preaching, "this Gospel of the Kingdom." Thus a superior doctrine, founded on absolute truth, backed by the power of the Holy Spirit, will meet and overcome the threefold propaganda of the enemy.

One of the most significant declarations of Holy Scripture is the statement of this basic fact, "THIS IS THE VICTORY THAT OVERCOMETH THE WORLD EVEN YOUR FAITH."

It is the glory of Israel-Britain and Israel-America to be the basis of the national faith of the Kingdom of God on earth. This is the Divinely-established national institution, appointed of God, defended by Him, and led forward to its inevitable destiny, namely, the inclusion of all the nations of the earth.

So Our Lord said, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a testimony unto all nations, and then shall the end come."

Thus the preaching of the Gospel of the Kingdom opposes itself to the threefold propaganda of the spirits of devils; the result of the preaching of the Gospel of the Kingdom will be to keep Israel steadfast in loyal service to God, and in defence of the precious things of the Kingdom.

The result of the threefold propaganda will be to gather the nations to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

By the analysis of the Scriptures elsewhere presented we see that Jehovah, the God of Israel, has taken upon Himself to "remove far off from us the northern army," and to so shut up the remainder of the enemy so that they perish without hand.

These are tremendous days through which we are passing; in them many men and women are unconsciously winning a place on the honours list of the Kingdom in the coming reign of Our Lord, to whom Our Lord shall say, "Be thou over five cities; Be thou over ten cities," and to all who have loved and laboured, "Enter ye into the joy of your Lord."

Now to be over five cities or ten cities is to be the captain over them; or, as in the Latin, "dux," or in English, "duke"; and there will be places provided for the reward of all His faithful ones.

"THE APPROACHING END OF THE AGE."

BY H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

An Extract from Preface to the First Edition (1878), by kind permission of the Publishers, Morgan & Scott.

IN conclusion, the author would strongly deprecate the false and foolish popular notion, that all study of prophecy is unpractical—a notion too often propagated by passing, but mischievously-influential allusions to the subject, from pulpit, platform, and press, made by those who know little either of it, or of its effects. It ought to be a sufficient rebuke to the levity that hazards such an assertion, or admits such an idea, to recall the fact, that one-third of the Bible consists of prophecy; and that Our Lord and Master said, "Search the Scriptures," not a portion of them. The Apostle Peter expressly tells us that we do well to take heed to the "more sure Word of prophecy," as to a light shining in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day star arise. Is it unpractical to make use of a good lantern on a pitch-dark night, in traversing a dangerous road? Or is it not rather unpractical and unreasonable to attempt to dispense with it? And further, a special and emphatic blessing is attached to the study in the closing Book of the Bible: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep the things that are written therein, for the time is at hand."

It is a reflection of the gravest kind on the wisdom of God, to suppose that the study of a branch of truth to which He has in His Word accorded singular prominence, should have an injurious tendency, or be devoid of a directly sanctifying effect; and moreover it is a conclusion completely at variance with all the facts of history and experience. Enoch was a student of prophecy, and of prophecy that is to this day unfulfilled, and Enoch was the saintliest of men, an eminently holy and practical preacher, who walked with God three hundred years, and was not, for God took him, and before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God. Noah was a student of unfulfilled prophecy, and Scripture presents no more practical preacher of righteousness than he was. All the holy prophets were students, and diligent students, too, of their own and each other's predictions, and especially of their chronological predictions. "The prophets inquired and searched diligently, searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glories that should follow" (1 Peter i, 10, 11). Daniel was a student of unfulfilled prophecy, yet he was not only a practical statesman, but a man of singular holiness, classed with Noah and Job as one of the most righteous of men.

There is everything in the nature of the study to make those who pursue it both practical and holy. It imbues the mind with the counsels and judgment of God about the affairs and events of earth; it reveals what shall be, and thereby lessens the inordinate power of that which is now, bringing the spirit under the influence of things unseen and eternal, and thereby weakening that of things seen and temporal. It affords to hope much needed food, lacking which we must languish and grow feeble; and to faith and love peculiar stimulus and enjoyment. Without an intelligent acquaintance with the teaching of the prophetic Word, no man of God is or can be thoroughly furnished to all good works, for it is part of the "all Scripture" given by inspiration, and profitable for the purpose of rendering him so.

Perhaps one reason for the prevailing neglect of prophetic expositions and preaching will be found on reflection, to lie, not in the fact that it is *un*practical, but rather in the fact that it is so peculiarly practical, that few have the boldness and courage to face the ridicule, opposition, and contempt it is sure to incur in the world. Jeremiah lived on the eve and in the crisis of a day of judgment on the apostate professing people of God. He was commissioned to deliver prophetic discourses full of denunciation of coming judgment, and of chronological statements of its proximity and duration. We know what Jeremiah's lot was, and few are prepared to play his sad and thankless rôle in society!

So far from the study and exposition of the prophetic Word being profitless and vain, we believe it is impossible to estimate the loss sustained by the Church, or the injury done to the world, by the very general and unjustifiable neglect of it. Is it not so that where one prophetic discourse is delivered, ten thousand doctrinal and practical sermons are preached? By what authority do we thus shelve a line of truth to which Divine wisdom has given such prominence in Scripture? Is it not our duty to declare "the whole counsel of God"? Those who have carefully looked into this subject, solemnly and with good ground believe, that the "Word" we are commanded to "preach" is full of evidence that the long predicted and long delayed judgments on the Papal and Mohammedan powers, which are not already begun, but are fast accomplishing before our eyes, are to issue, and that speedily, in such a burning of "Babylon the Great," as will light up all Christendom with its lurid glow,—the immediate precursor, if it be not the accompaniment, of the glorious advent of the King of kings. With all earnestness and sobriety of mind they assure their brethren that it is their deep conviction that this is the testimony of sacred Scripture; yet multitudes of Christian teachers, without even taking the trouble of examining into the subject, still preach the contrary, or imply it in their preaching; not from well-grounded conviction of its truth, but from educational prejudice, or mere force of habit. Is this right? Ought not every minister of the Word to study for himself the teachings of Scripture, until he is satisfied that he has attained the truth on this momentous theme?

May such a spirit as the Bereans had of old, be granted to the Christians of this generation, that they may diligently search the "more sure Word of prophecy," and draw directly from that sacred fountain the Truth as to the fast approaching future which God has graciously revealed. . . . .

THE SECOND ADVENT.—I.

A Paper read before the Glasgow and Galloway Diocesan Clerical Association at Glasgow on May 7th, 1928, by the REV. J. VAVASOUR HAMMOND, Rector of Holy Trinity Church, Ayr.

I HAVE chosen this subject because it appears to be seldom propounded from the pulpits of the orthodox Churches to-day, whilst, on the other hand, it forms the main theme of numerous smaller Christian bodies and religious sects where it is preached as the primary message for the times. Certainly, for some years now, there have been Advent Testimony Meetings in London upon a common platform of evangelical clergymen of the Church of England, Baptists, Methodists, etc., but there is ample evidence that this doctrine of the Second Advent is largely shelved in the sphere of official Christendom. In our recognised official Church newspapers, for example, how rarely do you find any reference to this doctrine, to say nothing of an expository sermon on the subject. Why is this the case? Are we, as a Church, neglecting a great theme to the detriment of our influence in these difficult days? We are living in days of rapid change and world-wide unrest. We seem to be whirled continuously through one crisis after another, through occurrences apparently to a large extent beyond human control. And there is a general feeling that we are passing through a transition stage, through the birth-throes of a New Age. It is commonly remarked how everything has changed since the War and is still rapidly changing, and we are markedly conscious of this in Church life. We have to regret a decline in public worship. We cannot but wonder why the Churches fail so signally to appeal with any obvious power to the manhood of Britain to-day. Can it all be due to the sheer worldliness of man or to the subtle work of the Devil? We are told that the organised Churches are out of touch with the needs of the modern world. We see numbers around us obsessed with money-getting and pleasure-seeking, or absorbed by economic perplexities, and it is very difficult to raise men's minds above mere mundane matters. Yet, despite our many national shortcomings, we cannot doubt that there is far more real Christian-hearted principle in the people of our race than shows itself on the surface. Undoubtedly among the thoughtful and serious-minded there is a divine discontent with things as they are, coupled with manifold endeavours to alleviate and remove prevalent evils and distresses, a desire and effort to abolish the more flagrant social injustices, greater kindness and sympathy between individuals of various conditions, much altruistic work of one kind and another. But we must allow that a great deal of this humanitarianism is carried on apart from any declared religious belief or religious practice. This constitutes a great weakness from a truly Christian point of view, for Our Lord taught quite clearly that love to God is man's first duty and out of it flows, as his second duty, love to his neighbour: and may not the reason that human government and theories and programmes of brotherhood have accomplished so little for the progress and elevation of humanity in the past be just because they have reversed this Divine order, even sometimes according duty to man such overwhelming precedence as to leave duty to God wholly out of sight. You see this in an extreme degree in the doctrines of Proletarian and Soviet Schools, where children are taught to leave God out altogether as "all gods are but the evolution of man's progress upward." Times are changed indeed, if you look back only a quarter of a century. Further, it is very often difficult to discern between the good and the evil principles which are behind the complex workings of modern movements. There is much evil at work, sinister and satanic, but there is also much which is the very reverse. All human systems seem to be in the melting-pot. Is this all preparatory to the segregation of the wheat and the tares, of good and evil principles, of truth and error, in the Harvest at the end of the Age? Is the emphatic preaching of the Social Idealism of the Gospel as stressed to-day in the Churches, together with a similar spirit and aspiration outside the Churches, a preparation for better human conditions in a New Age? Are we witnessing "the removal of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain," leading up to the Consummation of the Age and the establishment of the Kingdom of God in power and glory upon earth? The world's view is that good will gradually triumph over evil by human evolution, but plain Bible statements reveal that this triumph will not be finally accomplished without a definite, direct, Divine intervention. There is, of course, a progress taught in the New Testament by gradual, silent development, but progress by crisis, which is the same word as judgment, is also a fundamental New Testament idea. History shows that there have been clean new beginnings and tremendous revolutions. There are times when God seems to educate men by crises. We experience this in our individual lives. Man is by his very nature endowed with freedom within limits. If he so chooses he seems allowed to go wrong, allowed sometimes by whole centuries and throughout whole nations to go wrong. Evil seems to triumph, to work better than right. But all this time judgment is accumulating and then at last it falls.

Now, if there is any enlightening insight to be gained into the abnormal and extraordinary world conditions to-day and the goal to which they are moving, surely, as Christians, we must believe that it is to be gained from the Bible. In days like these at any rate it strikes one as more interesting, and perhaps more profitable, to centre upon Our Lord's apocalyptic teaching, directing our vision, as He so constantly does, towards the future, rather than to be continually harking back upon precepts of the Fathers or mediæval customs and traditions. Unless our Church worship is based upon simple, true and full-orbed Christian Truth, may it not easily become a mere Churchianity; having a form of godliness whilst virtually denying the power thereof? May it not be that we are losing much in our personal lives as Christians and in the effectiveness of our preaching as clergy by neglecting this doctrine of the Lord's Return, or by treating it in an indefinite way as if it signified little more than a religious revival? We discuss a great deal nowadays about the Catholic Faith, as to whether this or that is "Catholic" or no, but do we reflect that the doctrine of the Second Coming is equally a part of the Catholic Faith with those of the Incarnation, the Atonement or the Resurrection? The more carefully you study the teaching of Christ, the more I think you realise that should He not return at all, except in spirit to faithful souls, it would involve a radical transformation of the Gospel, for there is no doubt that Our Lord taught His disciples to regard His Return as a prospective fact of Revelation, an event which would prove as concrete and historical as was the Nativity or the Passion, and the fact of that Return is mentioned more than 300 times in the New Testament.

There is, however, that word "Parousia" which occurs in the New Testament with reference to the Second Advent, and, as you know, there has always been a certain amount of doubt as to what exactly that word "Parousia" means in relation to Our Lord's Return, owing to the fact that the most common meaning of the word is "Presence." Consequently many have held that the use of this word suggests a purely spiritual, invisible Return of the Lord—a Spiritual Presence unperceived by mankind in general, but realised spiritually by His true servants. Recent archæological discoveries, however, which have done so much of late to confirm the Bible narratives, have thrown valuable light upon this word "Parousia." Among papyri which have been unearthed there is one which reveals the exact meaning of this word "Parousia" as used in the time of the Apostles. It is, we find, the word which was regularly applied to the visit of a King or Great Man. We read in these papyri of the preparation made for the Parousia or visit of certain magnates. In one case, for example, the number of geese and other delicacies are enumerated to be supplied for the State dinner on the official visit or Parousia of a certain great magistrate. Thus, as applied to Our Lord's Second Coming, the word introduces it to us as a Royal visit, and according to the Bible, when He comes, He comes as a King to reign and rule the world in righteousness. Now this discovery of the real meaning of the word is important because Our Lord promised His followers that He would be with them always even unto the End of the Age, signifying obviously a spiritual, unseen Presence, but His Return at the end is always described as more than a Presence, as a Visible Return.

In reality Christ's Return as King is one of the fundamental doctrines of Holy Scripture. How is it, then, that this doctrine has become so much ignored and neglected? One reason no doubt is its difficulty, as being as yet so unimaginable. These facts may hinder us clergy from preaching very definitely on the subject, the more so in these days when we are all so anxious to be "modern" and up-to-date. But so also were the Sadducees and Pharisees of Our Lord's day. Also, the idea is so inconceivable that the intellectual conceit of man is tempted to put it down as an impossibility. We live, however, in days of such rapid progress and discovery that we know not what a day may bring forth. We may not altogether understand the ways and means of Our Lord's Return, but it is not for us to ignore, still less to allow ourselves to become sceptical. If a comparatively short time ago men had been told that in the twentieth century news would be flashed world-wide by wireless telegraphy in an instant of time, or that a man would be able to fly through the air at 150 miles an hour, or undergo a surgical operation without feeling any pain, in what a wealth of ridicule would the rationalists of those days have indulged! And now we are being introduced to television! It is surely time we had learnt enough of the wonders around us to appreciate the fact that it is hardly for our limited intelligence and comparatively puny knowledge to question the possibility of Christ's Second Advent in such Form that all will be conscious of His Appearing. Then, again, the indifference to the serious study of this doctrine is partly due to the sensational predictions which have been made regarding it and which have failed to materialise. This sort of thing has helped to hide the vital importance of this great subject. And, further, it has been connected in the popular mind with the "End of the World" in the sense of the Crack of Doom and a dissolving universe. But the Bible connects it not with the End of the World but with the End of the Age or Dispensation, with the ending of various long-standing world systems. To the earnest Christian it is represented in the Bible as the "Blessed Hope," not as an event of terrorism and consternation. It marks the dawn, it inaugurates an era of peaceful, Divine rule on earth in place of the long night of all man's misrule and man-made burdens. Where the Bible does warn us is as to the spiritual dangers to the Christian life amid the turmoil and trial which would characterise the last days of the Gospel Age to a peculiar degree. And this, no doubt, was a leading reason why Our Lord commanded His followers so strictly to " watch " for His Return, to be alert and expectant, not asleep as the foolish Virgins. Whether we happen to be alive on earth when He comes, or whether we shall have departed this life, we shall be judged, I presume, by the conduct of our lifetime here, irrespective altogether of Christ's Coming. Did He not, then, bid us watch partly because He knew how extremely difficult it would be to live a truly Christian life at the End of this Age? Ought we not to be grateful for these forewarnings and take heed to them? He knew that a time extremely insidious and perilous to true discipleship and Christian witness would immediately precede His Return, and do not such dangers to the moral and spiritual life abound to-day?

NOTES AND QUOTATIONS IN RELATION TO BRITAIN-ISRAEL.

BY PROFESSOR EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., &c.

[The following articles should be read with the thought in mind that they are not intended as a glorification of the Empire, nor of the Anglo-Saxon people, but as a recognition that Jehovah, the God and King of Israel, has in the Celto-Saxon people the basis of His Kingdom on earth. The Anglo-Saxon people have been trained for ages to be the Administrators of that Kingdom, and to carry its benefits, its liberty and its peace to all mankind.]

No. 19.

FROM Karl Marx we have the following statement: " Every revolution that does not spread to England is a storm in a tea-cup." (Page 86, " Bolshevised China," by E. E. Strother.)

He also says: " England is the rock on which revolutionary waves are broken." (Page 87, " Bolshevised China.")

"' GREAT BRITAIN SINGLED OUT."

Senator Goff, of West Virginia, October 4th, 1927, in the North China Daily News, says :—

" The Bolsheviks and the Chinese have agreed in singling out England for attack. They appreciate that it would be a mistake to attack all the Powers at once and, in their Oriental astuteness, they realise that in attacking one Power they will receive a certain measure of benevolent neutrality from certain of the other Powers. Great Britain is singled out in China because of the preponderance of her trade as well as her great influence as a colonising and elevating force in the East."

" A Change of Heart " is the heading of an article in the North China Daily News, September 21st, 1927.

The writer is indicating that the wild unreasoning hate against Great Britain, inspired and fanned by the Soviets and other haters of the British Empire in China, is dying out as a result of the lately acquired knowledge of the real facts of the case.

The North China Daily News quotes from the China Times of September 15th, 1928. The China Times writer in dealing with the Chinese attitude towards Great Britain is not just. He says, " It is undeserved."

He says that at one time Japan held strong feelings against certain early treaties, but " Britain was the first nation to negotiate a treaty with her (Japan) on the basis of mutual equality."

" Moreover, during the nineteenth century, England was the friend of all nations struggling for freedom, for Britain's is a constitutional Government, and she has always carefully guarded the right of her people to liberty."

He repels the statement that Britain oppresses India and Egypt.

The splendid, pacific speech made by Sir Austen Chamberlain in the House of Commons, June 17th, 1925, was so important that it was considered wise to have it printed in the Chinese press, but " no printer in Shanghai dared to print the document."

" The Shanghai Municipal Council, desiring that the generous nature of the proposals outlined in the speech (Sir Austen's speech) should be known, had it issued as an advertisement on the front page of a leading Chinese daily."

" The extremists called upon the editor of the paper and demanded that he print on the same page, in a succeeding issue, an apology for having dared to publish anything spoken by a British statesman."

The varying items above indicate somewhat how truth and falsehood, right and wrong, are in a life and death struggle in chaotic, bleeding, helpless China.

ISRAEL IN THE ASSYRIAN EXILE.—I.

Paper prepared and read by A. S. BAYLY before the East London (S. Africa) Branch of the British-Israel-World Federation.

IN the year 767 B.C. was born nigh to Galilee, in that portion of Canaan originally allotted to the tribe of Naphtali, an Israelite who was named Tobit, in the days when Azariah was king over Judah and Menahem reigned over Israel in Samaria, and we learn from 2 Kings xv, 13, That he (Menahem) did what was evil in the sight of the Lord and departed not from the sins of Jeroboam who made Israel to sin, by enforcing the worship of the golden calves set up at the northern and southern extremities of his kingdom, the one at Dan and the other at Bethel, to turn away the ten tribes from worshipping at Jerusalem.

But notwithstanding the influence of his father's house and the revolted tribes who sacrificed to Baal at Dan—Tobit, as soon as he became of age, clung to the original faith and went up alone to the feasts at Jerusalem, and—as he states—he was left an orphan and, under the influence of his paternal grandmother, Deborah, complied with the law of Moses and took his firstfruits to Jerusalem to the altar of Jehovah and gave them to the priests, the sons of Aaron. Likewise the first tenth part of all his increase he gave to the Levites who ministered at Jerusalem. A further tenth part he sold and went and spent it at Jerusalem every year. A further tenth part he gave to his poorer kinsfolk. And here we have another instance of the influence of a godly mother, or grandmother, like those of Timothy many centuries thereafter, who guided and taught the youth the fear of the Lord and to walk in His ways. When Tobit came of age, which under Mosaic law was 30 years old, he married a kinswoman—Anna—and by her had a son named Tobias.

But alas, notwithstanding his faithfulness to the worship of Jehovah, he could not escape the disasters which fell upon his tribe and nation; for, when Shalmaneser, the third king of that name ruling over Assyria, invaded Palestine, he was taken captive with other members of the ten tribes and carried away into Assyria, 721 B.C.

But his God did not desert him there, for whilst the bulk of the captives were divided up into parties and placed by Shalmaneser in the cities of Habor and Halah on the river Gozan, and the other parties of the ten tribes in the cities of the Medes—Ecbatane and other places—Tobit and his wife and son were taken to Nineveh. But unlike most of the captives, he states, he remembered God with all his heart, and further states that the Most High gave him grace and favour with Shalmaneser—so much so, that he became Shalmaneser's purveyor, and he was thus the instrument of succour to his brethren of Israel, giving them money and bread, clothes to the naked, and if he saw any of his nation lying dead, or cast without the walls of Nineveh, he buried them. This period of prosperity did not continue for long. Seven years after the exile Shalmaneser died, 714 B.C., and Sennacherib came to the throne.

Here we will pause to consider the political conditions of the civilised world at that time, leaving out of consideration China and its then settled and ancient civilisation, and the mysterious and little known civilisations of what we now know as Central America. We find that the two great Empires of Egypt and Assyria stood on either side to overawe the little kingdoms of Judah and Israel, and these little kingdoms were, in turn, overrun by one or other of these Empires with varying fortunes as the Pharaohs or Kings happened to be the greater warriors and leaders of their day and generation.

Solomon married a daughter of a Pharaoh of the 21st Dynasty, known as the Tannite Kings, 1129 to 1000 B.C., and Palestine was not invaded by this dynasty. We read, however, that Shishak or Sheshonk, a Pharaoh of the 22nd Dynasty, captured Jerusalem and plundered the Temple in the fifth year of the reign of Rehoboam, King of Judah, and immediately after the revolt of the ten tribes. Possibly at the instigation of Jeroboam, the instigator of the revolt, as he had been a political refugee in Egypt during Solomon's reign.

The next, or 23rd Dynasty, was not successful against Judah, for one of the Pharaohs, Zerah (or Osorthen) was defeated by Asa, King of Judah, 950 B.C. And so we are carried down a space of 200 years, Judah and the ten tribes' kingdom being left alone, although there was occasional warfare between the kings of Judah and Israel, and the incursions of the kings of Syria, their next-door neighbour. But now the cup of Israel's iniquity was well nigh full, although spared a little longer, and the hosts of Sennacherib defeated by Divine intervention before Jerusalem, followed by Sennacherib's hasty retreat to his capital, Nineveh, 709 B.C.

And now we return to the life story of Tobit, who had been enjoying prosperity and influence under the former king Shalmaneser and subsequently under Sennacherib. But this was to come to a sudden stop. It appears that after Sennacherib's return to his capital, Nineveh, in his wrath he killed many Hebrews, whom Tobit buried privately. A Ninevite, however, went and told Sennacherib that Tobit was burying his victims, and Tobit being fearful of becoming himself a victim, hid himself, with the result that all his goods were forcibly taken away and nothing was left to him but his wife and son.

Sennacherib's wrath, however, had but a short endurance, for within fifty days after his return he was killed in the house of his god by two of his sons, who fled to the mountains of Ararat. And Sarchedonos, his son, reigned in his stead, 709 B.C. This king appointed over his late father's estate, and all his own affairs, Tobit's nephew, Achrachus, son of his brother Anael, and this nephew entreating for Tobit, he was permitted to return to Nineveh. The domestic joys and trials of Tobit and the adventures of his son Tobias in his journeying read like a thrilling romance, but as our subject is Israel in the Assyrian exile, we must hasten on and conclude the first portion of this lecture in the words of Tobit's original biographer :—

"When Tobit was very aged he called his son and his six grandsons and said, Go into Media my son, for I surely believe those things which Jonah the prophet (863 B.C.) spake of Nineveh that it shall be overthrown, and that for a time peace shall rather be in Media, and that our brethren shall be scattered on the earth from the good land, and Jerusalem shall be desolate for a time and the house of God shall be burned. And that again God will have mercy on them and bring them again into the land where they shall build the Temple, but not like to the first, until the time of this age be fulfilled. And afterwards they shall return from all places of their captivity and build up Jerusalem gloriously, and the house of God shall be built in it for ever with a glorious building as the prophets have spoken thereof.

"And all nations shall turn and fear the Lord God truly and shall bury their idols. So shall all nations please the Lord, and His people shall confess God and the Lord shall exalt His people, and all those which love the Lord God in Truth and justice shall rejoice, showing mercy unto our brethren. And now my son depart out of Nineveh, because those things which the prophet Jonah spake shall surely come to pass."

When he had given these and other personal counsels he gave up the ghost, being 158 years old, 609 B.C., and Tobias his son buried him honourably. And when Anna, Tobias' mother, was dead, he departed with his wife and children to Ecbatane, to Raguel his father-in-law, and on his death and the death of his mother-in law he inherited their substance, also his father Tobit's. Tobias died at Ecbatane in Media, 600 B.C., being 127 years old. But before he died he heard of the destruction of Nineveh, which was taken by Nabuchodonosor and Ahasuerus, and he rejoiced thereat.

THE KINGDOM-NATION AND HER ENEMIES.

BY HOWARD B. RAND, LL.B.

To be able to clearly understand the present world activities in national affairs it is necessary that we should locate the Kingdom, and the nations who are the enemies of that Kingdom.

Israel was led from Egypt into the Wilderness by Moses, and there formed into the Kingdom-nation. From its very beginning this Kingdom was beset by enemies whose desire was to usurp its power, or annihilate it.

Digitized by Google

The Bible clearly records two antagonistic groups of enemy nations through the ages fighting against this Kingdom-nation. Just prior to the King's return to rule from the Throne of David, these two will be found fighting against her, one to gain its ancient dominion and rule, the other to blot out for ever the Throne of David and the name Israel. That there are two lines of enemy powers the prophecies clearly show. Failure to distinguish between these two groups, which God through His prophets has kept separate, has led to the same confusion in understanding prophetic fulfilment in the final scenes of world conflict, as failure to distinguish between Israel and Judah has led to misunderstanding of Kingdom promises.

We will first deal with the enemy power whose desire has been world rule and dominion, which power was established by Nebuchadnezzar, and was to continue during the years of Israel's and Judah's punishment. Daniel gives this line of succession. Its aim and desire is to rule. That it would so rule God decrees, but only during the years of Israel's punishment. We have a record of a remarkable dream of Nebuchadnezzar's in the second chapter of Daniel. That dream, as interpreted by Daniel, gives what is known as the Babylonian succession of Empires, beginning with the head of gold, the Babylonian; followed by the breast and arms of silver, the Medo-Persian; then the belly and thighs of brass, the Grecian; and after that the iron legs, the Roman world Empire which becomes divided into the European Kingdoms as signified in the emblem by the toes, but as they are part of iron and part of clay, though still Roman, they are a mixture of weakness and strength, and fail to cling one to another. By this vision the Lord gave Nebuchadnezzar the history of the rule of Gentile power during the seven times' punishment of Israel, known in the Bible as the Times of the Gentiles.

The vision shows the Stone Kingdom, cut out without hands in the days of these Kings. This is the Kingdom-nation Israel, founded by God, schooled in the Wilderness, led into captivity, and during the seven times of punishment gathered into the Isles—the appointed place. From which place they have expanded until their power, as Daniel tells us, is widened or spread out. After which will follow the closing scenes of this age.

Britain-Israel has been smashing at the Image, as the Stone Kingdom. First one nation, then another, of these Roman divisions have felt the impact of her power, each impact hastening the day of its disintegration. The last impact terminated in the overthrow of Germany. As yet the Image has not been scattered, as the chaff of the summer threshing floor. It began with ancient Babylon, and must close with the destruction of modern Babylon; hence the feverish activity at the seat of the Roman world, which dreams of ancient splendour and its revival, but which in reality is preparing for the final crash when it shall be smitten by the Stone Kingdom and consumed, thus making way for the growth of the Stone into the great mountain.

Some look for a revival of the Roman Empire, but the prophets give no place for it. What we see is the preparation for their final stand against the onward march of the Kingdom. One nation after another has gone down before the onward march of His Kingdom, so it is fitting that the final phase of that war is about to descend upon the once mighty seat of the Roman Empire. This is the task assigned to Israel, as God's battle-axe and weapons of war to subdue nations. It is the conflict between the Kingdom and that succession of world Empires whose desire has been world rule and dominion.

That there is another line of Kingdom enemies who are not content to contend for world power, but desire the complete blotting out of the Israel nation, is testified to by the Lord in no uncertain tones through the mouth of all His holy prophets. The final end of these enemies will be brought about by the intervention of God Himself, on behalf of His people Israel.

While the overthrow of the Babylonian succession was national destruction, this second combine, whose desire is Israel's annihilation, will perish when, in His wrath, God goes forth to war in the final struggle.

That the final phase of that struggle against Israel is recorded in Ezekiel xxxviii and xxxix is true, but that this combine and desire is from old is less understood.

> "Thus saith the Lord God; Art thou he of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years that I would bring thee against them?"—Ezek. xxxviii, 17.

This is a remarkable statement, calling attention to a long list of prophecies against this final combination which in the latter days would seek to destroy His people Israel.

We find a most remarkable prayer offered by the Throne of David against this enemy who has combined to overthrow that Throne and the Kingdom. The prayer is made by David and is recorded in the 83rd Psalm. First David calls upon God for protection against an enemy who is the enemy of God, of his Throne, and of his people:

> "Keep not thou silence, O God: hold not thy peace, and be not still, O God.
> "For, lo, thine enemies make a tumult: and they that hate thee have lifted up the head.
> "They have taken crafty counsel against thy people, and consulted against thy hidden ones."—Verses 1-3.

The Psalmist then reminds God in his prayer that their desire is to blot out entirely the name of Israel:

> "They have said, Come, and let us cut them off from being a nation; that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance."

Then David enumerates the great confederacy formed for this purpose:

> "For they have consulted together with one consent: they are confederate against thee:
> "The tabernacles of Edom, and the Ishmaelites; of Moab, and the Hagarenes;
> "Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek; the Philistines with the inhabitant of Tyre;
> "Assur also is joined with them: they have holpen the children of Lot."—Verses 5-8.

Then David asks the Lord to do unto them as He had done to those whom David mentions in the next verses:

> "Do unto them as unto the Midianites; as to Sisera, as to Jabin, at the brook of Kison:

Digitized by Google

"Which perished at En-dor: they became as dung for the earth.

"Make their nobles like Oreb, and like Zeeb: yea, all their princes as Zebah, and as Zalmunna."—Verses 9-11.

David now reminds God of how they desired to desecrate His House, and asks God to break their power:

"Who said, Let us take to ourselves the houses of God in possession.

"O my God, make them like a wheel; as the stubble before the wind.

"As the fire burneth in a wood, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire."—Verses 12-14.

Then, as in the overthrow of Gog, David prays that this confederacy be destroyed by God's power bringing confusion upon them:

"So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm.

"Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek thy name, O Lord.

"Let them be confounded and troubled for ever; yea, let them be put to shame, and perish."—Verses 15-17.

Closing with these words:

"That men may know that thou, whose name alone is Jehovah, art the most high over all the earth."—Verse 18.

How strikingly similar to the closing verse of Ezekiel xxxviii after the overthrow of Gog:

"Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord."

That Ezekiel xxxviii and xxxix is God's answer to David's prayer a careful comparison of the two will clearly show. To-day, that a confederacy is being formed by Russia is clear in David's prayer and God's answer.

But who is the outstanding nation that David reminds God hated him and lifted up its head against him and his House, and of whom the prophets prophesied during many years of its coming against Israel to destroy her? In the history of Israel we find she had such an enemy. The very first organised military attack upon her was made without provocation, to which attack Moses calls Israel's attention in the following words:—

"Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt:

"How he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God.

"Therefore it shall be, when the Lord thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it."—Deut. xxv, 17-19.

That war was to be the order between Israel and Amalek down through the ages Moses clearly shows in Exodus xvii, 16: "For he said, Because the Lord hath sworn that the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation." The margin renders it "Because the hand of Amalek is against the Throne of the Lord, therefore the Lord (this is God's controversy) will have war with Amalek from generation to generation."

Amalek was called by Balaam the first of the Goyim (heathen) to attack Israel—"And when he looked on Amalek he took up his parable and said, Amalek was the first of the nations, but his latter end shall be that he perish for ever."—Numbers xxiv, 20. That is, in the last days, or latter days, he shall be—as the marginal rendering—even to destruction.

Through Israel's early history we find her at war with the Amalekites, these wars being recorded in Judges, in 1 and 2 Samuel, in the Book of Kings, and the Chronicles. David includes them in his prayer as one of those confederated against God and Israel, which prayer the Lord answers through Ezekiel, giving the details of their latter day gathering and final overthrow.

Outside the mention of Haman's descent in Esther, the Amalekites are not again mentioned by name. It is well to note that here also the desire on the part of Haman was to annihilate God's people. The failure to find the Amalekites again mentioned by name has led some to assume that they had perished, but God's prophetic Word speaks otherwise. Of no other people than the Amalekites do we find God Himself from His Throne, and for His Kingdom Israel, declaring He would wage war against them from generation to generation.

Beginning with Moses, on through the prophets, there is prophesied the final overthrow of a people whose hand is against the Throne of God.

That the Amalekites are not mentioned after the captivity and removal of the Throne of David from Palestine is not at all strange. The conflict was from generation to generation between the Throne, in its earthly representative, and the descendants of the ancient Amalekites. The conflict continued, but its record, after the removal of the House of David, is outside of Bible history, though mentioned in prophecy.

Briefly, let us outline this conflict between Israel and Amalek. They were the first to war upon Israel by treacherous attack in the Wilderness, when she was hard pressed by the difficulties of the way. Because of this, Balaam prophesies in the latter days their end would be destruction. David prays against a confederacy formed to destroy Israel, naming Amalek among them, and God answers through Ezekiel the prophet 500 years later, who indicates another treacherous attack upon his people in the latter days, the time specified when the Amalekites will meet their destruction.

David tells us that Amalek and the confederacy are to perish by God's tempest and storm, and Ezekiel tells us this is the manner of Gog's destruction:

"And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face.

"And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood, and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone."—Ezekiel xxxviii, 18 and 22.

David tells us this confederacy, of which Amalek is a member, will conspire to cut Israel off from being a nation, and this is the desire of Meshech, or Moscow, to-day.

David prays that their discomfiture will magnify God. Ezekiel tells us Gog's overthrow will make God known in the eyes of all nations.

The first attack against Israel was treacherous, and the closing troubles of this age will again see Israel the subject of another treacherous attack by a Northern confederacy—Israel's ancient enemy now modern Russia.

The Psalmist records laughter from Heaven that will be far from pleasant to the ears of those who are in the enemy ranks : "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh : the Lord shall have them in derision."—Psalm ii, 4.

Thank God, Israel's defence is from Him against the great confederacy now forming. Upon the Amalekites and all those allied with him the Great Day of the Lord will bring destruction when, because of their treacherous attack, God intervenes to save His people.

Israel, as God's battle-axe, is breaking in pieces the Babylonian succession of Empires, but God Himself fights as in the day of battle against Gog and all his bands, in the day they come into the land.

"ADVENT WITNESS" REVIEW OF "ISRAEL IN PROPHECY AND HISTORY."

SINCE the researches of Grattan Guinness into prophetic fulfilment it has been known and admitted, by all persons capable of appreciating reason (of whom the Advent Witness reviewer is apparently not one), that a "time" is 360 years, and that therefore the "seven times" of Israel's punishment must cover 2,520 years.

Ascertain the beginnings of Israel's chastisement, and the simplest arithmetical calculation will show its ending.

PART OF THE HEADQUARTERS' STAFF.

The first blow fell either in 742 or 741 B.C. Archbishop Usher said 742. Llewellyn Thomas says 741. I have gone most carefully into the matter, and believe Thomas to be right. Corresponding terminal date—1780.

The great upheaval was in 721. Terminal date—1800.

Isaiah, about the date of the first catastrophe, predicted that within 65 years (Isaiah vii, 8) "Ephraim shall be broken in pieces, that it be not a people." Deduct 65 from 741, and we get 676 as the Biblical date of final upheaval. Corresponding terminal date—1845. (In all the above calculations I have made allowance for the "Zero point.")

The statement that a further catastrophe for Israel at the hands of Esar-haddon is "without even the semblance of a Scripture to support it" is a falsehood. If the reviewer of the Advent Witness, with his appeal to "Scripture," will not admit the fact, the British-Israelites—with their appeal to the Holy Scriptures—know it to be true that if a prophetic utterance was made by Isaiah in 741, to be fulfilled as he stated in 676, that fulfilment would take place. God's honour is bound up in the matter. Moreover, if the person who is responsible for this "review" would kindly refer to Ezra iv, 2, he would find himself face to face with that "semblance of a Scripture," the imagined absence of which has caused him such mental perturbation. "GOD IS NOT THE GOD OF THE DEAD, BUT OF THE LIVING."

BY THE REV. WM. C. BATTISCOMBE
(Formerly Rector of Warehorne, Kent.)

THIS statement, as all will recollect, was made by Our Lord, in reply to the Sadducees' argument in support of their belief that there is no resurrection of the dead. Our Lord quoted apparently from Exodus iii, 6, in which an account is given of God's first appearance to Moses, when He said to him: "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." At the time that God spoke to Moses, these three great patriarchs had long since passed away to their rest. Two hundred years had elapsed since Jacob breathed his last, and three hundred and thirty years since Abraham had passed away; yet God still described Himself as the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob. Though these fathers of the Hebrew people had long since closed their respective earthly careers, and their bodies had long since been laid to rest, they themselves still lived before God, and He could still call Himself their God. Such was the forcible and convincing argument which Our Lord opposed to the hypothesis presented to Him by the Sadducees. And He thus rebuked them for their ignorance—"Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, or the power of God."

This argument may be applied with equal cogency in reply to opponents of British-Israel Truth. These opposers produce various arguments in support of their contention that Ephraim-Israel—(the Ten Tribes)—no longer exist as a separate and distinct nationality. They suggest three hypotheses, indeed four. They say that the Ten Tribes who were in 721 B.C. transported from Samaria—the Northern part of Palestine—by the Assyrians became gradually annihilated; or that they intermingled inseparably with heathen nations; or were metamorphosed into a different race of people—Red Indians, etc.—though they omit to tell us on what grounds they support so grotesque a notion; nor do they give any information as to when this singular and most unnatural transmutation took place: their main support to their suggestion being the negative statement that they do not know where they are.

Another favourite suggestion is that the Ten Tribes, or what remained of them, joined the Jews in Babylon, and returned with them to Judæa, after the seventy years' captivity—although the Scriptures plainly declare that those who returned from Babylon were composed of those of the House of Judah (or their children) who were, seventy years before, taken into captivity by the Babylonian King. They maintain that the Jews who returned comprehended, generally, all that remained of the Hebrews that were destined to be, in the future, regarded as the remnant of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, and that the term "Jews" became thereafter the generic term for all that are left of the descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—the Chosen People—of whom God continually describes Himself as "their God."

Admitting, for a moment, this last hypothesis, where could this great remnant of the Ten Tribes, which they postulate returned with the Jews from Babylon, have settled in Judæa? Their own portion of Palestine—Samaria, the northern part—is excluded; for it was, to a greater or less extent, already occupied by the descendants of the heathen foreigners whom the King of Assyria had placed there, about two hundred years before; and moreover, these "Samaritans" were most hostile to the Jews when, on their return, they were engaged in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem; they did their best to interfere with or stop this work. Nor could this great remnant of the Ten Tribes have found settlement in Judæa, in which province, we are told, the returning Jews settled; for we are distinctly informed that when those of the captivity returned from Babylon—those from Judæa—they "came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one into his own city." Where then could these Ten Tribes go? No mention is made of their "ousting" the Jews from their own cities and villages, or even of their sharing with them "their own cities." There is no allusion to overcrowding by reason of this great increase of numbers, or of struggles for possession. It is a very easy and convenient form of argument to say, "Oh, the Ten Tribes, of course, came back with the Jews from Babylon, and they are now all muddled together and called Jews," until one comes down to particulars. Such are the alternatives which opponents bring forward to meet the statements of those who support British-Israel Truth, viz.:—that the Ten Tribes were either gradually annihilated; or that they intermingled inseparably with heathen nations; or were changed into an altogether different race of people, and spirited away bodily into some remote region of the earth; or that the remnant that was left of them, by some mysterious means, journeyed from Assyria to Babylon, joined the Jews there, and returned with them to Judæa, and have since all been muddled together under the all-embracing general term—"Jews"! Some opponents bring forward all these suppositions, and say, as it were: "There is the result of our study, and careful investigation of the case of those poor miserable Ten Tribes; take your pick of the four hypotheses, which we have submitted to your choice: any one of the four will answer the purpose. It makes no difference which of the four you prefer to select: all lead practically to the same result, viz.:—That the Ten Tribes, as a separate and distinct nationality, no longer exist—practically, they are dead."

Having thus, to their own entire satisfaction, disposed of the separate national existence of the Ten Tribes of Israel—having thus "killed" them—they set to work to dispose of

God's promises to them of temporal greatness as an actual world-power. For thus disposing of a people who had been so disobedient and backsliding, in the face of the marvellous treatment they had so long received fron their faithful, long-suffering and patient God, these opposers may be reasonably excused—the people certainly fully deserved their punishment; but when it comes to setting aside, discrediting and explaining away God's solemn promises, repeatedly set forth, this is quite another matter.

But what do these opponents assert? They say effectually:—"We, together with other learned men, have carefully examined into this matter also, and we have come to the conclusion that though we frequently find the terms 'Israel,' 'Jacob,' 'Ephraim,' and other expressions, which certainly imply that they refer to the Ten Tribes—the Northern Kingdom—yet as we cannot find, in subsequent history, any trace of 'Israel' as distinct from 'Judah,' these temporal promises of greatness to Israel cannot have a literal signification, but must evidently be understood spiritually; so we have decided that it is intended that they should so be treated, whether a spiritual interpretation be strictly consistent with the wording of the promises or not." Such a solution may satisfy some people, and may solace many who make enquiries into this subject, until they begin seriously to search and investigate the Scriptures for themselves, and use their own intelligence, judgment and common-sense. Various causes have influenced those who maintain the four hypotheses set forth above. First and foremost among these causes is the inability, through prejudice and inaccurate investigation, to differentiate between the two distinctive terms, "Israel" and "Judah." After the two captivities, and the appearance of the term "Jews," the notion was propagated that the main body of the Ten Tribes, being, as many wrongly conjectured, cast away for ever, and therefore irretrievably lost, only a comparatively few were preserved; and these were preserved by joining the "Jews" at the time of their return from Babylon. Having thus amalgamated they would be included in the name "Jews." These Jews would thus compose the recognised remnant of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, and might be called irrespectively "Israel" or "Jews," Israelites or Hebrews, etc. Any of these terms would, they maintain, represent this recognised remnant of the Hebrew people, without reference to either of the two Kingdoms into which the Twelve Tribes had been divided; though this will not explain why so many describe the Children of Israel in the Wilderness as "Jews." These inaccurate readers of Scripture fail to realise the fact that "Israel" has a national as well as a generic application. As a national term, it applies to the Ten Tribes, or "the Kingdom," or Ephraim-Israel, exclusively; just as "Judah," used nationally and not tribally, applies to the Kingdom of Judah. This term, at the time of the Babylonian captivity, was shortened to "Jews": it became a sort of nickname. The term "Israel," used in a generic sense, was occasionally, in the absence of the Ten Tribes, applied to Judah: first, because the people of Judah were equally descendants of Jacob or Israel; and secondly, because they were then the only recognised representatives of the Twelve Tribes of Israel. But whenever the prophet desired to draw a distinction—which he frequently does draw—between the Ten Tribes of Israel and the Two Tribes of Judah, he speaks of them by their national names "Israel" and "Judah." Judah or the Jews are, in certain circumstances, sometimes called "Israel"; but "Israel," or the Ten Tribes are never—in any circumstances whatever—called Judah or the Jews, because they never were and never could be Jews. The inhabitants of these Islands and of the British Empire are sometimes wrongly called "the English." They are thus described from habit and want of thought. To call them all Scots, Welsh or Irish, instead of British, would be just as incorrect. The whole includes the component parts, but any one part does not include the whole. It is much the same in the case of Israel and Judah. Judah is a part—a very small part—of Israel when the latter term is understood in a generic sense. But "Israel," as a rule—and much more the rule than the exception—is also a part of the whole—the greater part. The whole is more unequivocally expressed by the term—the Hebrews, or the Twelve Tribes of Israel. Until the distinction between Israel and Judah is clearly understood and well defined in the mind, it will be impossible to remove the erroneous impression which has been produced, through the propagation of the above hypotheses regarding Israel or the Ten Tribes.

Confusion and muddle must continue to prejudice the mind against the right interpretation of Scripture on the subject. Another cause which has greatly helped to blind so many as to the utter falseness of the above four suppositions respecting the true condition of Ephraim-Israel is the failure to realise that if they have been nationally annihilated, by one or more of the ways suggested by opponents, then God must be regarded as the "God of the dead," and not of the living, although Our Lord tells us that such cannot be the case, nor can such a thought be, for a moment, entertained. What saith the Scripture? Some years after the captivity of Israel in Assyria we read in Isa. xlix, 7: "Thus saith the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel, and His Holy One"; v. 26: "All flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob"; xliii, 14: "Thus saith the Lord, your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel"; Jer. xxxi, 9: "I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My first-born"; 35-37: "If those ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever," et alia. Israel or Ephraim-Israel must now be existent as a separate nationality, quite distinct from the Jews, who are but a scattered and oppressed people of Israelitish descent, but not a nation. If Ephraim-Israel have nationally deceased, God can no longer be called the "God of Israel," or the Holy, Mighty One of Israel, their Saviour and Redeemer. And if they are now nationally deceased, their national death must have taken place after their captivity and before the prophets proclaimed the special messages to them, at the command of the "God of Israel." It is impossible for Him to be the God of what is dead—of what no longer has any existence! They who assert that Israel or the Ten Tribes are, nationally, no more, that they are nationally dead, lay themselves open to Our Lord's stinging rebuke—"Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, or the power of God." "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." And the hypothesis that the term "Israel"

(including their blessings) has been given to another people consisting of believers in Christ, without regard to descent or nationality—described as spiritual Israel—is repugnant to the whole tenor of the Scriptures—Old and New. Therefore Israel, as a separate and distinct nationality, must be now existent, and must be now accomplishing the purposes which God has declared they should accomplish—"in the latter days," after He had re-covenanted and redeemed them. St. Paul denied emphatically the false supposition, which even in his days was suggested, that God had cast away His people; for he declares with emphasis: "God hath not cast away His people" (Rom. xi, 1). That was more than seven hundred years after their captivity. He was then still "the God of Israel"; they were still "His people." Israel, as a nationality, was not dead; God was "not the God of the dead, but of the living."

In the Benedictus we read:—"Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for He hath visited and redeemed His people." Our Lord said to His disciples:—"Ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the Twelve Tribes of Israel." St. James sends greeting "to the Twelve Tribes (of Israel), which are scattered abroad." Why take the trouble to send greeting to a nationally defunct people? St. John, in his vision, "heard the number of them which were sealed; and there were sealed 144,000 of all the Tribes of the Children of Israel."—not the number of the Jews only. This was recorded some eight hundred years after the captivity of ten-twelfths of the Twelve Tribes!—the ten-twelfths which opponents assert are nationally extinct! The Scriptures declare, time after time, that God is the "God of Israel"; as He cannot be the God of the dead, but of the living, Israel, as a nationality, must be still existent.

"This people have I formed for Myself: they shall shew forth My praise."—ISAIAH XLIII, 21.

God of Thy chosen race,
Thy truth to us impart,
And sanctify it with Thy grace
Within each waiting heart.

Thy truth we must proclaim
To earth's remotest bound,
The God of Israel, He shall reign,
And righteousness abound.

Prepare us for the task,
Remove each guilty stain,
Thy promise is to those that ask
Pardon through Jesus' Name.

So let Thy praise be set
In hearts attuned above.
And songs of adoration sung
With gratitude and love.

God of Thy chosen race,
Thy will shall then be done,
And Israel's praise of Thy great Name
Through every nation run.

WE are on the very threshold of a new age. The exact dates are unimportant, for in the advance of the plan of the ages it is not the sharp-cut dates, but periods of time, that are important. Old things pass away in a fading-out process; new things gradually dawn. Only on looking backward do the people realise that "a great thing took place back there." Surprisingly few of the real turning-points of the world come amid signs and wonders and people standing in awe of what is passing. In the minds of most the War was the cataclysm, because it was noisy; but something greater than the War, though much less clamorous, is in passage now.

It is neither for man to help nor hinder, but to hold himself ready to do what is right, whatever may be the circumstances. When the age begins to turn, we are too late to stop it, for the causes thereof were set in motion long ago and are now invincible. Nor can we help the new age being born, because we are but creatures of months, and the new age is generations in process of formation. We can but will the Right, not for our particular race or religion or nationality, but the Universal Right, which harms none, and in which each finds its own fulfilment.

One of the principal human duties that devolve during periods of change is the duty of conscious allegiance. What do you, as a personality and in your personality, stand for? And are you standing for it by standing with others who are standing for it? These are questions which are pressing home from many directions to-day. The bugles of Time are blowing "Assembly," and men are dividing themselves, each according to the moral note within.

It is not a question of allegiance to opinions or programmes or philosophies; it is a question of allegiance to moralities. A man may be hopelessly wrong in all his opinions, but if he is morally right, he is of the stuff of the continuing order of life. On the other hand, a man may be perfectly correct in his opinions and knowledge, and yet everything he does may collapse and die because of moral anæmia. In this time of change it is not a question of having the correct economic theory; it is a question of being loyal to the Right. Immoral or unmoral men never yet constructed an enduring social structure, nor enforced a single beneficial social change.

This coming to conscious allegiance is not always a pleasant experience. Especially in this day when everybody is obsessed more or less with the idea of wanting to be a "good fellow," and when the flabby philosophy of "Boost" has reduced us to spongy masses of saccharine sweetness.

Men have been taught to put even their moral convictions in the background; indeed to possess no obtrusive moral convictions, in order that a false show of fellowship may be made.

This fellowship has now fallen apart. It was based on nothing enduring. It had no meaning except a desire to escape the penalty for being "different," which so many people fear.

It is a time now when conscious allegiance costs something, for it will mean division, and the very first division must be between those who will be loyal to moral conviction and those who will not. And this, quite apart from the consideration of persons or majorities.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

IN spite of unfavourable weather there was a large attendance at the prayer meeting at H.Q. on Wednesday, May 23rd. The Rev. Commander Roberts was the leader; he and Messrs. Garrison and Edward Pritchard gave addresses. On May 24th (Empire Day) the Secretary-General gave a lantern lecture on the Empire, with particular reference to New Zealand. Both our lecture rooms thrown into one were crowded, and many had, unfortunately, to be turned away. The President, Major Knowles, O.B.E., presided, and gave an Empire address.

The speakers at H.Q. this week are the Revs. Kenneth Dodds and G. H. Lancaster, M.A. Meetings will be held as usual on Wednesday next, at 3 p.m., and Thursday next, at 7.30 p.m.

Mr. Garrison visited our Bristol Branch on May 21st and addressed a full audience on the occasion of the Annual Meeting, at which also Capt. Wills, the President, Col. Smith, Mr. C. F. Waddington and Capt. Palmer Bott spoke. It was an enthusiastic gathering, and the encouraging report was unanimously adopted. On the following day Mr. Garrison lectured on the Empire in the Town Hall, Maidenhead, to a large assembly, which included about 150 young people from the schools of the town.

Mr. R. Mayell has lectured on the Pyramid, at Rhymney, Cardiff and Tredegar, to interested audiences.

The Hon. Secretary of our Durban (Natal) Branch reports increasing interest. Lectures are held monthly, and a Bible Class is well attended. On St. George's Day a lecture was delivered on "The Royal House of Britain" to a very appreciative audience.

The Rev. Joseph Gay addressed a large audience for our Halifax Branch on May 22nd. During the session they have had addresses from W. H. Hesketh, Esq., J.P.; Rev. G. W. Plasting; John Leech, Esq., K.C.; Rev. Dr. Mountain; Rev. R. G. F. Waddington; Rev. T. H. Whitehouse; and Messrs. G. R. Gair, A. W. Dargue, J. W. Oldroyd, N. Robert Shaw, J. W. Allott and T. R. Butler. A large amount of literature has been sold, and considerable progress has been made.

Mr. Basil Stewart has given two lectures for our Exeter Branch and one for our Paignton Branch on "The Great Pyramid," and one also at the hotel where he was staying. Keen interest was aroused among the excellent audiences.

The Dover Branch held their two last lectures of this session on Wednesday, May 16th, at the Institute. Colonel Smythe spoke on "The Wanderings of Benjamin," giving a very instructive lecture. The chair was taken by Rev. H. D. Simeon, M.A. In the evening the speaker gave some answers to "What our opponents say."

Mr. Morey gave two splendidly inspiring addresses on May 16th for the Worthing Branch. Keen interest was shown in the Great Pyramid, and many questions asked. The hall was packed, many being unable to gain admittance.

Open-air B.-I. meetings are to be held in Finsbury Park on Sunday, June 3rd, at 3.30, and Tuesday, June 5th, at 7.30 p.m. Also on Sunday, June 10th, and Tuesday, June 12th, at the same hours, at Peckham Rye.

We are glad to know that our members and friends are so greatly appreciating the attractions of Glastonbury, and the comforts at our B.-I. Hostel, "Abbots Leigh," and we greatly hope that this summer will show a largely increased visitors' list.

We are happy to say that reports from Canada tell of great meetings in various centres where the Rev. Pascoe Goard has given many of his wonderful addresses, particularly at the Convention in Toronto. We shall hope for further information later.

Mr. Raymond Barrett writes:—"For the third time I have been impelled to read and carefully study that most fascinating, instructive and important book, "Israel in Prophecy and History," by P. W. Thompson, M.A., and while fully agreeing with the encomia passed upon it as being a work indispensable to the British-Israelite, I am, nevertheless, exceedingly surprised by an omission which, to me, seems unaccountable. The author clearly sets forth that the year 1845 was to be marked by blessing to Israel, but he has not followed the matter up by showing how the promise eventuated in fact, as it did. It would be greatly to the satisfaction of many if this omission could be rectified by an article in THE NATIONAL MESSAGE. Mr. Thompson owes this to his readers."

How Insulin was Discovered.

STRAY DOGS WERE PICKED UP IN TORONTO (some by Dr. Banting himself), and taken to the vivisecting laboratories. Some had their pancreas cut out, and slowly became miserable wrecks. Others had the pancreatic ducts tied up, thus left with the normal functions painfully disordered.

Experiments by Banting and others were of extreme cruelty, and included the pouring of boiling water into a dog's pancreas, causing it to faint with pain. (American Journal of Phy[illegible] March, 1924.)

These dogs used in Insulin experiments (and continually used for testing the finished preparation) either suffer violent convulsions, or die slow, lingering miserable deaths, deliberately inflicted by a terrible fellow-creature—Man. They can only dimly, pitifully, wonder Why?

WHY? BECAUSE SUCH MEN AND SUCH METHODS of "research" are without the fear of God! and so are all they who trust in them!

THE "NEWS MIRROR" of Toronto, May 9th, 1925, devoted its front page to: IS INSULIN A FAILURE? DEATH-RATE FROM DIABETES SHOWS AN UPWARD TREND!

Cursed be man that trusteth in man!

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

[It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.]

THE PYRAMID AND THE PRESS.

By HERBERT GARRISON.

A NUMBER of statements regarding the Great Pyramid have recently appeared in the public Press, and predictions of calamity have been attributed to the British-Israel-World Federation which are entirely without foundation. For example, it has been stated or assumed that the Federation is responsible for the alleged prediction that a Tidal Wave would overwhelm Weymouth on May 29th. As a matter of fact, the supposed author of the prediction has no connection whatever with the Federation, and the prediction was quite unknown to us until after it was made. Another statement in an evening paper on May 29th says that a spokesman of the "British-Israel-World Federation which is running the whole business" said angrily this afternoon, "Kindly contradict these statements about the Tidal Wave; they are quite without authority. The Pyramid foretells an eight years' war, with earthquakes and pestilence, but there is no suggestion that the South of England is to be submerged; none whatever." Now the statement that the B.-I.-W.F. is running the whole "business" is not true. It has been quite impossible to trace the supposed spokesman. He was not a member of the Federation Staff. The Pyramid certainly does not foretell an eight years' war.

The attitude of the Federation was explained by the President and by the Secretary-General at the great meeting in the Queen's Hall on April 13th, and further given in an interview with the latter which appeared in The Times on May 25th, from which we quote the following:—

> "The fact that according to what is known as 'Pyramid Chronology' the world is to enter on a period of tribulation on the night of May 29th has led to the circulation of rumours which, in consequence of their localised, as distinct from general, predictions of trouble, are stated to have caused some alarm among credulous people. . . . The British-Israel-World Federation, which has accepted and disseminated the 'message built into the Great Pyramid,' not only repudiates responsibility for the rumours, but is disturbed by the currency they have obtained. Members of the Federation regard the coming eight years as a period of very great importance, and some men believe they will bring Armageddon. It is emphasised, however, that the nature of the Tribulation predicted is not known, and ordinary sensationalism is, therefore, deprecated. This attitude, it is urged, does not conflict with an expectancy that some event of profound significance will occur on May 29th or 30th. The event may not be spectacular, but in later months enlightened men will be able to point to it as the starting-point of vast movements. . . . There is no proof, it was stated at the offices of the British-Israel-World Federation in London yesterday, that the Great Pyramid was built as a monument or tomb, and the contention is that it was built under Divine inspiration, to give a special message to those people of the world who have the inch measure as apart from the metric system of measurement. The Anglo-Saxon race uses the inch measure, and in connection with this it should be said that the Federation teaches that the Anglo-Celtic-Saxon peoples are descended from Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and are the modern representatives of ancient Israel. . . . According to the British-Israel-World Federation the period of tribulation may not necessarily be associated with war, but the opinion is expressed that war somewhere is likely during the next eight years."

Digitized by Google

Had the other papers taken their cue from The Times, most of the trash which has been published would surely not have appeared in their columns.

Interviews given to representatives of three other papers unfortunately misrepresented what was said, so that wrong impressions were conveyed. This, we feel sure, the readers of this journal who know what we teach and what we do not teach will have suspected. The truth is that a section of the Press has indulged in mendacious misrepresentation, revelled in a jumble of errors, and engaged in an orgy of scoffing. They have published letters containing utter nonsense, only serving to expose the ignorance of the writers. That some of the correspondents have attached their names and addresses shows that they are quite unconscious of what an exhibition they have made of themselves. How apt is the dictum of Robert Burns as applied to such people. As for the sneering, it "cuts no ice," as the Americans say. Cheap enough and very nasty. One would have thought that any reputable editor would have used his blue pencil freely, instead of allowing scholarly and conscientious men who have given many years to exhaustive study of the Pyramid to be held up to ridicule, while their traducers know nothing whatever of the subject, one writing of the Pyramid as simply a "barrow," another speaking of Abraham as "a scoundrel and a blackguard." This will naturally shock our readers, but it is just as well they should know something of what certain of our opponents are capable of saying; they may the better realise what a colossal task of missionising is before us here in our own land, apart from that needed abroad. Paganism is not confined to Africa, nor Atheism to Europe.

As to the Pyramid, it still stands "For a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of Hosts in the land of Egypt" (Isaiah xix, 20), and no amount of scoffing can alter that fact, There is no proof that its scientific symbolism is wrong, and we have every confidence in Mr. Davidson, the greatest living exponent of its message. He writes to us as follows, under date June 2nd:

> "I am confident that my work is reliable and that my dates are correct. The Tribulation is indicated as starting from the date of the chisel edge of the vertical grooves over the entrance doorway of the last Low Passage. We must, therefore, be patient and watch the gradual unfolding of events at home and abroad up to August 22nd of this year, for the development and significance of the Pyramid's message to be appreciated. Any premature identification or detailed interpretation should be avoided."

We have a list of events which took place on May 29th-30th, all of which may in due time prove to have some connection with coming developments, but, in the meantime, we, and we feel sure our readers also, will take Mr. Davidson's advice in the concluding sentence of his letter.

Let us unite in prayer that the God of Israel will keep us faithful to the end, and graciously pour out His Holy Spirit upon the whole nation.

INTERCESSION FOR THE OUTPOURING OF GOD'S HOLY SPIRIT.

HELD AT HEADQUARTERS, WEDNESDAY, 23RD MAY.

FOR NATIONAL REPENTANCE AND FOR NATIONAL PRAYER.

BY THE REV. COMMANDER L. G. A. ROBERTS, R.N.

YOU will notice our first intercession for the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit is admirably in keeping with the season we have just entered into. It is when He ascended up on high that He led captivity captive and received gifts for men, even for the rebellious. And this is our first plea. We come to Him as a most rebellious people. This could not be laid more truly to the charge of any people besides Israel and Judah, and yet God has promised to " Jacob My servant and Israel whom I have chosen," " Fear not, I will help thee, I will pour water upon him that is thirsty and floods upon the dry ground. I will pour My Spirit upon thy seed, and My blessing upon thine offering." Should we ask when ? we are told by Joel ii, 28. This promise of the Holy Spirit is just before the great and terrible day of the Lord—Ezek. xxxvi, 25, etc., just before our return to Palestine. Yet again St. Peter, Acts iii, 19, exhorts all Israel " Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and He will send Jesus which before was preached unto you, whom the heaven must receive until the times of the restitution of all things spoken of by His servants the prophets." Isaiah xxxii, 15-20, is to the same purpose. Rev. xi, 11-14.

Now an essential for fervent prayer is unity of purpose. They were all with one accord in one place. Be ye all of one mind. As British-Israel this is surely our characteristic. There is no other body on the earth so united and so consistent on the same theme. Preparing the Kingdom for the return of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

NATIONAL REPENTANCE.

Those who know our subject best know how much we have to repent of. God has never dealt so with any other people. He has been so loving, so gracious, so kind; in all our afflictions He has been afflicted, and the angel of His presence, the Lord Jesus, has followed us : but we as sinful people have loved our own way. Nothing is more self-evident than that some people professing godliness have tried to remove from our Prayer Book all the lovely stories of God's gracious dealings with us, and to put ourselves on the basis of other nations, and yet the lie stares us in our face; if we will only consult history even as far back as the Spanish Armada, we shall find that it was not our own strength, but God's interference, that gave us the victory. The same merciful God preserved our country from Roman doctrine by His sending over of William of Orange. He so controlled the elements as to make them a means of blessing to His people. The same again in the time of Napoleon, when he only waited for Nelson to be out of the way and a favourable wind to allow his army to be thrown into Britain. The elements again brought Nelson rapidly on his way and prevented the French Commander-in-Chief from leaving the French coast. Lastly, we know well it was not our own foresight or even our resources that saved us, but in every case we see God's hand in the destruction of the sea-serpents, the dragon in the sea the submarines, and their port of Zeebrugge. Mutiny resulted in the German Fleet and the end the yielding up of all the German Navy.

These wonderful miracles of Grace towards us should now make us consider : shall we dishonour His Word by throwing out of our Baptismal and Marriage Services those portions which to us are a proof that we rely upon His promises ? Shall we dishonour Christ our Redeemer by presuming that we believe He can be confined in a secret chamber at the beck and call of one calling himself a priest, made-to-order of the Church of Rome, and degrading our God whom we worship as inferior to the gods of wood and stones, silver and gold, that the nations who know not God worship ?

Let our prayers then be directed that Peace and Happiness, Truth and Justice, Religion and Piety may be established among us by a spiritual adherence to His Holy Word.

A very dismal, wet and cold day, and yet our rooms were both well filled, and the audience held for nearly two hours.

THE SECOND ADVENT.—II.

BY THE REV. J. VAVASOUR HAMMOND, Rector of Holy Trinity Church, Ayr. Author of " The Practical Value of Biblical Prophecy to the British Race to-day." (The Covenant Publishing Co., Ltd.)

FROM the considerations mentioned last week in Part I amongst others we can understand why certain signs are given in the Bible which are to announce to Christ's followers when His Return is near. It is true that we know not the day nor the hour when the Lord shall be revealed from Heaven, but we are given signs which will tell us when He is near, and these signs are given in Bible Prophecy not to foster sensationalism nor to satisfy curiosity, but to strengthen the faith of Christ's servants in their personal lives, in their manifold duties and in their witness to His Truth. After all, the Master Himself constantly referred to the Prophetic Scriptures in support of the Truth and for the confirmation of Faith. Do we, as clergy, sufficiently follow His example in this respect ? The Bible gives us many signs which would attend the close of this Dispensation. Take just a few. Distress of nations on the earth with perplexity; an accumulation of catastrophes and convulsions in nature (which have certainly been accentuated of recent years); a singularly restless state of society: lawlessness, a daring development of iniquity and sinister crime; a great falling away of simple faith in Christ, and the love of pleasure more than the love of God; a lukewarm religion with a form of godliness but denying the power thereof; a seducing spiritism. As you review world conditions to-day is it surprising that there are those who believe we are living in the ending time of the Age? Add to these, more special signs such as a marked movement among the Jews. We know that in 1897 the Zionist movement started, that 1918 saw Britain's Proclamation to the Jews concerning a Jewish National Home in Palestine, and we know about their present prominent position and widespread activities. Is this the "budding of the fig tree," always the Scriptural emblem of the Jewish people, which Our Lord said would herald "the Kingdom of God" to be "nigh at hand"? Another sign which He gave was the completed publication of the Gospel as a witness to all nations. Look at the present day wide and well-nigh universal circulation of the Scriptures; mass movements among nations in India and Africa in search of Christian Truth and the urge of the "World Call" at home; and apparently from Bible Societies' reports a rapidly increasing desire for the Scriptures in all nations ever since the War. But most significant of all is the deliverance of Jerusalem from centuries of oppression. This is the principal point to be noticed, I think, in considering the 21st Chapter of St. Luke, which, despite certain modernist contentions, reads to the plain man as a remarkable predictive discourse by Christ, a prophetic perspective, in fact, of the entire Christian Dispensation until His Coming again. And Jerusalem is the pivot. Our Lord leads up, first of all, to the destruction of Jerusalem. He foretells that His disciples will be persecuted, that Jerusalem will be surrounded by armies, that the Jews will be led away captive into all nations, that the Temple standing in His time, in all its glory, will be destroyed and not one stone left upon another. All this came literally and strictly to pass. But He looked further and said that Jerusalem would be down-trodden until a certain long period had elapsed, viz., the "Times of the Gentiles." He did not say the time signifying an undefined, indeterminate period of Gentile rule over Jerusalem, but used this peculiar plural phrase "the Times of the Gentiles"—a specific, definite period. What did He mean by it? Now, Jerusalem, as we know, had been trodden down for centuries until liberated by Allenby's Army in 1917. This, the outstanding event of the Great War, at once attracted the attention of students of Bible Chronology. Fifty years ago Grattan Guinness, following along similar lines of study to that of others before his day, suggested 1917 as the year in which Palestine would be liberated from Mohammedan tyranny. His calculation was based on what is known as the year-day principle of reckoning Prophetic Time. I am not going to bother you with figures nor with the intricacies of Bible Chronology, but you will remember that a day as representing a year appears in Numbers and in Ezekiel as a principle of reckoning in relation to Prophetic Symbolism. If lengths of time specified as 1,260 days, 42 months; 70 weeks; a Time, Times and a half, seven Times, are to be intelligible, then they must all be interpreted on one scale, and they do align to a day for a year and 360 calendar years to a "Time." Take an example of the year-day principle as a working hypothesis, viz.: "the 70 weeks" of Daniel ix, which were to elapse from the going forth of the commandment to restore and rebuild Jerusalem to Messiah the Prince. That period was actually 490 years. The prophecy announced it as "70 weeks," that is, 490 days. In passing, you notice that this is independent of questions about the date of the Book of Daniel; it is prediction even if you will only accept the latest date of the critics, and as I have already indicated, by comparing Scripture with Scripture and Prophecy with Prophecy, a Time appears from internal Biblical sources to represent 360 calendar years, in which case Seven Times—2,520 years. Counting "Seven Times" back from 1917, when Jerusalem was liberated, you get 603 B.C., the date when Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, began to deport the Kingdom of Judah into captivity. Nineteen years later Nebuchadnezzar deported Zedekiah, sacked Jerusalem, burnt the Temple, and caused the complete downfall of the Kingdom of Judah. The suggestion from this is, as you see, that from 1917 to 1934 marks the ending time of that long period which Our Lord described as the "Times of the Gentiles." Each Dispensation grows out of the preceding one, so that the beginning and end overlap or merge one into the other. Certainly the years through which we are passing present very serious and complicated problems; they seem beyond anything that has had to be faced in any previous age, for they are world-wide and involve all nations, all classes, all society, all political and industrial interests, and all spiritual and theological issues. Is a Divine Hand at work upsetting and overthrowing all things that offend, with a view to the correction of social, ecclesiastical and political errors, whilst the forces of evil rise in serried ranks against everything that really tends for the true well-being of humanity—a great culminating strife between good and evil working up to a climax? Before the problems presented by things as they are in the world to-day, the keenest intellect, the most subtle statesmanship, and the combined efforts of civilisation seem practically powerless, whilst the Christian Church, even in its best phase of spiritual life and influence, seems likewise powerless to withstand the rising tide of materialism and of anti-Christian theory and practice.

If it be the case that these perplexing conditions are in accord with the signs given by Our Lord in the latter part of St. Luke xxi and elsewhere, then we are bidden to lift up our heads and take courage that the Victory of Christ and His Kingdom are "nigh at hand." It would seem natural to believe, as Scripture seems to indicate (as, for example, in the phrase the Times of the Restitution of all things), that Our Lord would not merely bring the Kingdom of God, but form it so far as this visible realm is concerned, out of already existing human society, revealing more Truth, and a larger vision of the meaning of things, conferring greater spiritual powers upon those fitted and capable to receive and use them, developing human capacities hitherto latent, thus initiating a new period of human evolution, in which all the evils which afflict humanity will gradually be eliminated under His Rule. The Bible also seems to teach that there will be reunion and communication in some sort between the seen and the unseen realms. And by implanting the principles of the right evolution of humanity firmly in human society, Our Lord would effect the greatest judgment yet experienced in the history of mankind. For when the good is living and working powerfully, evil will be seen and felt as evil more than aforetime and will meet with more opposition. Sin will be judged by the manifestation of righteousness, checked and destroyed by the active power of righteousness. The distinction between the righteous and the unrighteous would probably be more marked than it is at present, and characteristics and conduct conflicting with the Divine Society established and growing up on earth would prevent participation in it or, at all events, until such time as worthiness to be admitted had been attained.

To conclude then, how are we to treat all this New Testament teaching about Our Lord's Return? If we profess belief in the substantial accuracy of the historical record of the appearances of the Risen Jesus, we are logically committed, it seems to me at least, to the expectation of His Return to this Earth in power and great glory, to complete the work on Earth which He inaugurated when He first came. As we believe and witness to the Resurrection and Ascension of Our Lord, ought not the confession of our faith and our witness to be equally firm and clear that He will so come as He went into Heaven? Looking at all the clear statements in Scripture which bear upon the Christian Expectation of the Lord's Return, is our reliance in Providence to be such that we can suppose them to be false? If, for example, chapters like St. Luke xxi are not in some real and practical sense true, and the religion of Christ is very practical, in what sort of Divine Guidance in human affairs can we believe? And so having regard to the signs of the times (as well as the definite teaching of the Bible) may not our day and our generation be a "due season" for holding forth this doctrine boldly in view of Our Lord's words, "Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing."

There is no doubt that simple belief in this doctrine of the Blessed Hope has a great influence and purifying power, as St. John points out in his first Epistle, over Christian lives. We are warned that just prior to Our Lord's Return simple faith will be rare, that Christian character will be severely tested, we are put on our guard against insidious influences which will so work that they can deceive even the very elect or sidetrack them from the Truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Look at the warning which occurs in the Book of Revelation about "keeping our garments," the strict purity of the Christian Faith, lest we "walk naked," with no real spiritual Truth or vision to steady or support us. In this connection we have Our Lord's warning: Wherefore if they say unto you, He is in the desert (as has occurred in the case of some Adventists in America) go not forth; or, behold He is in the secret chambers (or Tabernacle as in the teaching of our Roman friends regarding the Host) believe it not: for as the lightning cometh out of the East and shineth even unto the West, so shall the Coming of the Son of Man be.

In the light of Our Lord's Teaching His Advent will, of course, be sudden, but the Great Event will not be unexpected, so Scripture seems to suggest, to those who, discerning the signs which He has given, are looking with Faith and Hope for His Appearing. No event can come really suddenly upon those who are prepared for it. Hence the point and force of Our Lord's injunction to His followers: "Take heed to yourselves lest that Day come upon you unawares, for as a snare shall it come upon all those (i.e., not taking heed) that dwell on the face of the whole earth."

WHAT IS THE BRITISH EMPIRE?

GOD'S PURPOSE BEHIND OUR FELLOWSHIP OF NATIONS.

THE COVENANT.

*By the Rev. W. E. Harston Morris, Vicar of All Saints, Southport.

"But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is He that hath given thee power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant, which He sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day."

These words were spoken by Moses to the people of Israel. These words might be equally well spoken to the people of Britain this day.

It is indeed amazing how many of the promises and prophecies of the Old Testament do apply to the people of Britain to-day. I am not holding any brief for what is known as British-Israel teaching. My mind is quite open on that subject. I am quite willing to be convinced. I find that the people who scoff at it as a "fad of certain cranks" are people who know nothing whatever about it, because they have never taken the trouble to study the question at all. If it were a ridiculous pretension of cranks, if it were, that would not condemn it. So was Christianity at the first; so was the solar theory of Galileo; so was Newton's law of gravitation; so was evolution; so were the warnings of Lord Roberts twelve months before the Great War.

Of this, at any rate, I have convinced myself. That the British race is heir to the promises of Almighty God. To this let the story of the British Empire bear witness.

A Company of Nations.

What is this British Empire? It is not an Empire in any sense in which other Empires have existed. It is not as the Empire of Rome was—governed from Rome—one Roman law running from east to west. "We are not allowed," said Caiaphas to Pilate, "to put any man to death." It is not like the old German Empire (there was, in pre-war days, nearly as much difference between a Bavarian and a Saxon as between a Saxon and an Englishman, but all were under the iron heel of the German Reich); nor even like the Union of the United States of America, controlled from one central government. To all intents and purposes the British Empire is a fellowship of independent nations, recognisedly independent. If Canada wished to break away from the Empire to-morrow there is nothing to stop her; there would be no war to reclaim her; she is free. What is it holds this "company of nations" together?

A purely spiritual bond. The Roman Empire was held together by the Roman legions; when they failed the Empire fell to pieces. Under God the British Empire is held together by goodwill. Interpret that goodwill as you like—call it loyalty, call it the ties of relationship, call it affection, call it patriotism—all these may be comprised under that term goodwill. There is loyalty. I believe that the strongest hold on the Empire is the Monarchy; our King is their King; our Prince is their Prince. Abolish the Monarchy, make England a Republic—encouraged, I take it, by the superiority of conditions in Russia, France—we should deal the most smashing blow at the solidarity of the Empire possible to imagine. It was relationship, affection, patriotism, that brought the wood-cutters of Manitoba, the sheep-shearers of Australia, the farmers of New Zealand, to stand side by side with London clerks and Wigan miners out there in Flanders and Gallipoli. Spiritual forces—goodwill.

SPIRITUAL FORCES.

If you come to think of it, similar forces created the Empire. England did not sit down and say "We will now go out and conquer Australia." She sent no Julius Cæsar with vast armies to add nation after nation to her rule. There has never been any deliberate creation of our Empire. We have fought to redress grievances; we have fought to protect our own emigrants; we have not deliberately fought to add another patch of red to the map of the world. In most cases those who first went out had not the slightest idea what the results of their going would be.

When Marsden first set foot in New Zealand to preach the Gospel to cannibals, he had no thought of adding New Zealand to the Crown of England, but to the Diadem of Christ. Men went out, driven by spiritual forces greater than themselves (some, it may be, to find gold; some driven out; they had made this country too hot for them). But the great majority of the pioneers—what of them? What made them? An instinct—almost a craving—which God has made natural to the British race.

> The father loves to stay at home;
> The brother loves to go abroad.

It may be, being on an island, he had always to face the sea—if he wanted to go anywhere at all. Who does not know the magic of far-off names—Yokohama, the Golden Gate, the Andes, and the Rio Grande, and the islands of the Southern Seas? Who has not felt that wistful longing to be over the hills and over the main—to stand with the ocean all around, and to see the lands of the far distances? It was the men who could and did who made the Empire.

"In the heart of every man a poet has died young."

In the heart of almost every Briton a wanderer once has lived.

"We were dreamers, dreaming greatly, in the man-stifled town;
We yearned beyond the sky line, where the strange roads go down.
Came the whisper, came the vision, came the power with the need,
Till the soul that is not man's soul was lent us to lead.
As the deer breaks—as the steer breaks—from the herd where they graze,
In the faith of little children we went on our ways.
Then the wood failed, then the food failed, then the last water dried;
In the faith of little children we laid down and died.
On the sand drift; on the veldt side, in the fern scrub we lay,
That our sons might follow after by the bones on the way.

. . . . .

Follow after—we are waiting—by the trails that we lost,
For the sound of many footsteps, for the tread of a host,
Follow after, follow after, for the harvest is soon;
By the bones about the wayside ye shall come to your own."

CREATION OF THE ALMIGHTY.

These were the men who made the British Empire. Led by the soul that is not man's soul. For, if I believe anything at all about the Empire, I believe that it is the creation of Almighty God. It is His Hand that I see all through history, from the day when He chose this little island, encircled by the silver sea, brought into it the strain of Celt, Roman, Dane, Saxon, Norman—all that was needed of the spirit of adventure, reckless enterprise, tempered by determination, caution, persistence. I see how God has never suffered our nation to be beaten in war, or successfully invaded. How God has entrusted to her ten gates of the world—Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, Port Said, Aden, Socotra, Singapore, Hong Kong, St. Helena, the Falkland Isles. How at last God has placed even the Holy City in the hands of the people from the Islands of the Northern Seas—as God said He would. I see more than this—I see the share that Christ has had in the formation of the Empire. There are those who think little of foreign missions. I wonder how much of our Empire we should have had to-day if it had not been for foreign missions! We can start at home. What would be England's position to-day but for St. Aidan, St. Columba, St. Chad, St. Columbanus, Paulinus? Take out of the history of England Theodore, Hugh of Lincoln, Cranmer, Wilberforce, and countless others. Then go on. Take from the story of the Empire all that has been done by the preachers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Leave out Marsden, Livingstone, Crowther, Hannington, Mackay, Stewart, Gordon.

THE LINK THAT BINDS.

No—here is just the difference between the British Empire and those others. They were founded upon material force, and so held. This was founded upon spiritual force, and so held. I believe that the British Empire is the creation of Almighty God. If so, there is a purpose behind it. There always is with any creation of God. If our Empire be merely a matter of blundering luck we might think differently. But I think that in its creation we see too often the Hand of the Master Craftsman to doubt its origin. It was certainly not given to us for jingoism, worldly pride, boasting, and vain-glory.

" Fair is our lot ; O goodly is our heritage
(Humble ye, my people, and be fearful in your mirth),
For the Lord our God Most High,
He hath made the deep as dry,
He hath smote for us a pathway to the ends of all the earth."

Which means no more than this : Beware lest thou say in thine heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth.

" Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God ; for it is He that hath given thee power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant, which He sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day."

PAX BRITANNICA.

May it not be that the over-ruling Providence of God has created this Empire for three chief reasons :—

(1) To teach the world the great lesson of unity, fellowship, brotherhood, co-operation, inter-Empire trade ; the policing of the seas for us, the finding of homes for our sons and daughters, for them.

(2) To teach the world the possibility of peace. Civil war between parts of the Empire is unthinkable. However much our interests might differ and clash—unthinkable. Does not the very existence of the Empire preach the possibility and the advantage of world peace? And—go further—might it not be possible in days yet to be for such an Empire, held together by the closest bands, to impose peace upon the world? Pax Romana (it has been done once).

(3) To proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ. God once chose twelve men of one stock for this work. Might He not choose twelve nations of one stock to complete it?

These things are of close interest to us all. It is not too rash to say that the sons and daughters of some of us in this church will be out in the far-off lands before we have passed away.

Here lies our responsibility (the personal responsibility) :

The citizen of the day before yesterday was the citizen of his city ;
The citizen of yesterday was the citizen of his country ;
The citizen of to-day is the citizen of the Empire.

Add to it such men and women as shall do honour to its name and set forth the glory of God, for it is righteousness—and righteousness only—that exalteth a nation.

AN INTRODUCTORY TALK AT HEADQUARTERS ON ISRAEL'S MIGRATIONS.

BY MISS E. M. PERRY.

THE section of the migrations of Israel, about which I propose to speak to-day, dealing with the escape from Assyria, is really only a very small part of the subject, but it has become the point on which much attack has been made on the B.-I. position.

I have recently had the privilege of attending a course of lectures by Mr. Gair, dealing with the earlier migrations, and I would like to refer briefly to two of these before dealing with the one specially selected.

We learn from the early records :—

I.—That about 1600 B.C. there migrated from Egypt to Greece a people called the Danai.

II.—These people were related to the Ruler of Egypt, who at that time was Joseph.

III.—They were not Egyptians, as they were not a dark-skinned people, but belonged to the long-headed Aryan race.

IV.—Dannus (their leader) is said to be the son of Bela—and Dan of the Bible is the son of Bilhah. (Gen. xxx, 6.)

V.—They conquered the Aborigines, who had only a Stone Age civilisation, and introduced the higher Hebrew culture.

VI.—Greece was at the time known as Argos, which is a Hebrew word, meaning ark or chest.

Unfortunately they weakened themselves by war with Israel in Troy, and, although conquerors, the serf classes overpowered and drove them from Greece on their return.

They went north, and founded a settlement at Lacedœmonia, and also Sparta ; Josephus tells us the Lacedœmonians wrote to the Jews claiming relationship, and that the Jews acknowledged this, saying their ancient books had the record. From Lacedœmonia Dan migrated across Europe, leaving the trace of their name on rivers and towns, and came, via Scandinavia, to Ireland.

At the time that Dan migrated to Greece there came into Asia Minor a race known as Dar-Dannaus (the Trojans).

We are told :—

I.—These were descendants of Darda, who is mentioned in 1 Kings iv, 31, as among those wise men whose wisdom Solomon excelled.

II.—The oldest secular writer of the world [Sanchomatho (N)] tells us Darda was related to Krŏnŏs, whom the Phœnicians called Israel.

III.—This Krŏnŏs had a son called Yehuda, or Judah.

It was with these Dan from Greece went to war.

Referring to one other migration, we find that there were either descendants of the twelve sons of Israel left in Palestine, or that they returned from Egypt at an early date. Reasons for this conclusion are found in the discovery of slabs bearing references to Israel in Palestine at the time of Thothmes III, and the records of his wars tell us he took cities called Jacob-El and Joseph-El.

These people were driven north by the wars between the Assyrian and Hittite people, and they settled in Iberia and Albania.

After some time they became restless and made a compact for ships with the Phœnicians on the coast of Asia Minor, and in these they came to Cadiz in Spain.

Moving north, they founded a colony called Gael-ag, and became known as the Milesians. Here they were attacked by the aboriginal tribes and Canaanite settlers (driven from Palestine in the wars with Israel), and decided to migrate to Ireland. Here they reunited with the Tuatha de Danaan, whose migration from Greece we have seen.

Their motto at this time was : " We have lived free, and we will die free," which is suggestive of their never having been under bondage in Egypt.

This gives us two of the very early migrations, of which full details will be found in the History which Mr. Gair is soon publishing.

We come now to what you will realise is a small section of a great subject, the escape from Assyria, and I wish to acknowledge my indebtedness for many points to the Rev. W. Milner's book, "History is on Our Side."

As our talk to-day is an introductory one, we must refer to the story of the quarrel which took place in the reign of Rehoboam (1 Kings xii), which led to the formation of the two Houses, instead of the one united Israel.

From that time the Southern Kingdom was composed of Judah, Benjamin and Levites, and the Northern of the Ten Tribes.

We must remember that we cannot view this as an ordinary family quarrel; it was the result of the statement made by God to Solomon in 1 Kings xi, that He would rend the Kingdom from his son, and it is significant that when Rehoboam sought to regain supremacy of Israel, God's Word was explicit: "Ye shall not . . . for this thing is from Me" (1 Kings xii, 24).

There must have been some great purpose in refusing to allow the breach to be healed, which is explicable if both Houses had a different future history, but inexplicable if they drifted together at some few years' distance.

The immediate history of both Houses was most disappointing. They worshipped the gods of the heathen, and dealt with those that had familiar spirits. Their sin grew so great that eventually punishment fell, and in 2 Kings xvii, 6-7, Shalmaneser, King of Assyria, took the Northern Kingdom captive, and placed them in Halah, Habor, by the River Gozan and cities of the Medes.

Twenty years later the King of Assyria again raided the land, and took the remainder captive, placing them in the same place (2 Kings xviii, 11). This would be 721 B.C.

In 598 B.C. Judah (except the poorest of the land) were taken captive to Babylon. From this time Judah was called Jew, or Yehudim—i.e., the remnant of Judah.

The distance between the two places of captivity was about 200 miles. The Biblical history, though not the prophecy of the House of Israel, ceases at this point. But we have three statements of her immediate future.

First.—They were to lose their identity (Hosea i, 10).

Second.—Their name should be changed (Isa. lxii, 2).

Third.—But they would remain a nation with a descendant of David as King (Jer. xxxiii, 17).

It is at this juncture that the main attack on the B.-I. position takes place.

Have the two Houses reunited? Our opponents say they have done so, mainly when Judah returned from the seventy years' captivity.

Against that view we have to consider the following facts:—

I.—The Chief Rabbis of Jerusalem and London know of no such reunion.

II.—The Jewish people do not acknowledge it. In their synagogues they pray for their lost brethren.

III.—Their prominent writers do not admit it. Dr. Neubauer says: "No mention of this event is found in documents at our disposal," and Josephus says there may have been a few families who returned, but the main body had not done so.

IV.—The numbers returning from Babylon, which Archdeacon Hanan states were 42,360 (of which 642 were without genealogy and therefore not Jews), precludes the thought of the whole of Israel being represented; this number would be only those of one or two tribes.

V.—Ezra distinctly states which tribes returned.

VI.—The return had not happened in Our Lord's time, as Caiaphas, High Priest in Jerusalem, knew they were still scattered (John xi, 49-52). He knew nothing of the Church, the children of God would mean to him the Children of Israel.

VII.—In Zech. xi, 13-14, we read the final break took place, when the thirty pieces of silver were paid for Our Lord.

We will now consider the matter from the other point of view, i.e., that Israel did escape to Arsereth—as Esdras tells us. It is important to settle the question of the place of their captivity, as Rawlinson and the Jewish historian Ewald differ. The former places them just over the border, and not more than 200 miles from Palestine, where return would be easy; while Ewald places them south of the Caspian; and while there seems no reason for Rawlinson's position, there is certainly reason in placing them where the cities of the Medes existed and where even to this day is a River Ozan, which was known as Gozan up to the 10th century.

This position is 600-700 miles from Palestine, and has three mountain ranges and two rivers in between.

There are two historians who tell us of a great migration at a time when the military position would occupy the whole of the attention of the Assyrian army.

The first, Esdras, tells us that Israel, seeking a country where they might be free, passed over the upper reaches of the Euphrates to a destination called Arsereth, a district a considerable way off, as he states it would take them one and a half years to reach. This country is on the north-west of the Black Sea, and has still a river and town called Sereth.

The second, Herodotus, brings a people called Scythians (but whom he says the Persians called Sakai) across the Araxes to the Kimmerian land, which is also on the north-west of the Black Sea.

The Araxes is still so called to-day, and both rivers would be crossed in an escape to the north.

The military position at this time precludes all thought of a return to Palestine, for not only was Assyria at war with the nations surrounding their land, but we read in 2 Chron. xxxv, 20-24, of an extraordinary attack on Carchemish by the King of Egypt. Extraordinary, because it seems this foreign King had been called to the attack by God. This army would block the west to the Children of Israel.

Before we trace the pathway by which we believe they escaped, let us look at three different names we may anticipate finding connected with them.

I.—We should expect to find some indication of the standard of Joseph and Ephraim as the holders of the Birthright blessing (1 Chron. v, 1-2).

We know that such standards existed from Num. ii, 2, and ancient Jewish authorities tell us that the twelve signs of the Zodiac were borne on the twelve standards of Israel. Josephus refers to this, and the Chaldee paraphrase of an earlier date asserts the same, but adds that Reuben's standard bore the figure of a man, Judah a lion, Ephraim a bull, Dan a serpent. The latter we are told was altered to the eagle at an early date.

To Seth is attributed the division of the Zodiac signs, and there is a school of thought which holds that in them we find the story of the Atonement, so that for the 2,500 years when there was no written Revelation, God did not leave Himself without witness. The 19th Psalm speaks of this.

It is interesting to realise that the four living creatures in Ezekiel, and the four beasts surrounding the throne in Rev. iv, having faces of man, ox, lion, eagle, are the four side signs of the Zodiac, and if this represents the whole atoning work of Our Lord, these suggest the four-square basis of that work.

The bull (Taurus) being the standard of Ephraim, and the Hebrew word for bull being Engl or Angl, we should look for some indication of this name in the way followed by the escaping Israelites.

II.—We should expect to find some reference to the root of the name of the father of the family I-Saac; for we read "in Isaac shall thy seed be called." Saak is the root word meaning laughter.

III.—We expect also some reference to the great Covenants, and I do not need to remind you of the Hebrew Brith, which occurs 161 times in the Old Testament, meaning Covenant, and which is imbedded in the name Britain.

IV.—We might also look for the word "Scoth," the Hebrew for Tabernacle, which the Israelites were told to inhabit once a year, to keep them reminded of the pilgrim days of wandering.

Let us now briefly follow the way they would have taken. Early on the way they came to a fertile country, where it is likely some dropped out, for this became the home of the Nestorians, whom Dr. Grant in his book on their history proves to be of Hebraic origin.

We all know these became the early missionaries to Asia.

Directly Armenia is entered we find some of the names we should expect. A river Engl, a town Angl, a mountain Sakh.

After crossing the Euphrates, the Araxes faces them; having crossed this they follow a river, whose name to-day is Israel-see, while the "Pass of Israel" lies a little further on.

Here again we find Hebrew place names, such as Pen Yak —God show His Face, and Bark-El—God's blessing.

It is supposed that there occurred a division of the people here; some, the Sakian, travelling to the north of the Caspian, while the Kimmerian followed on round the Black Sea to Arsereth, leaving again in the Crimea such names as Saak for lake and town. Here, too, are cemeteries bearing many Hebrew names, one example of which is "Moses Levi, 726 year of our exile."

In closing we will follow Herodotus in his visit to the people he calls the Scythians, in the country north-west of the Black Sea. He tells us some interesting facts.

I.—They told him that from the time of the fruitless invasion of their country by Darius in 500 B.C. to the time of their first King was 1,000 years. Who was that King? In Deut. xxxiii, 5, we find Moses was really the first King, and from 500 B.C.—1500 B.C. is 1,000 years. In the proclamation by Darius in three different languages, Persian, Assyrian and Babylonian, on the Behistun Rock, he speaks of this war, but in writing to the Persians he calls them Sakai, but Kimri to the Babylonians.

II.—These people, Herodotus say, did not eat swine's flesh, and even then they still had an abundance of soothsayers, foretelling the future. Hosea iv, 12, seems to refer to this in the words: "My people ask counsel of their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them."

We have therefore two historians who tell us of:—

Two people escaping from Assyria at the same time—
Who came by the same route—
To the same destination.
Called by Esdras Sons of I-Saac, and by the Persians the Sakai.

To these people historians trace the origin of the Anglo-Saxon peoples. "History is therefore on the side of the argument that Israel, lost 700 B.C., has been re-found in the British Isles" in the Christian era.

"THE LOST SHEEP OF THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL!"

BY HENRY D. HOUGHTON.

"I AM not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel." (Matt. xv, 24.)

Many have contended that this passage proves conclusively that the Jews were the House of Israel; as they further suppose that Christ spent the whole of His life in and among the Jews in Palestine, thus fulfilling this declaration.

Now if the words "The lost sheep of the House of Israel" means the Jews, then that means that Christ was sent to the Jews only!

Now let us look fairly and squarely at this. Very fortunately we have very clear guidance from Our Lord in this matter.

In Matt. x, 5-6, Our Lord first uses this term, "The lost sheep of the House of Israel." Who was it used of? The Jews? Well, let us see.

The command of Our Lord to His disciples was, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel." (Matt. x, 5-6.)

Now the contention of our opponents is that the Jews close at hand were these same lost sheep of the House of Israel, for to them the disciples went.

But verse 23 in the same chapter destroys that illusion. For there we see that the cities of Israel are so great, so remote, so numerous, that the message Christ gave them should not be fully delivered till the Son of Man should come.

"Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come."

So then the cities of Israel should be so vast, so remote, so populous that the disciples and their successors should not have completed their evangelisation till the Son of Man be come.

As a consequence this evangelising of the cities of Israel must be still going on! For Our Lord is not yet come!

This could not mean the cities of the Jews! They have none to-day! Not one solitary city in all the world is a Jewish city!

Where then is this "House of Israel," with her mighty and numerous cities where the Evangel of the Cross is being preached to-day? For remember it has to be preached as a continuous never-ceasing message, "Till the Son of Man be come." Most certainly and indisputably it cannot mean the Jews.

Now let us look at something else. If it was the Jews to whom Our Lord was specially sent, why was it that Our Lord purposely hid His Gospel from them by speaking to them in parables lest they should understand?

That will take a lot of explaining. In Matt. xiii, 10, we read, "And the disciples came, and said unto Him, why speakest thou unto them in parables?"

Now notice there was a reason, and that reason was lest they should understand and be converted!

He answered them, "Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, but to them it is not given!" (verse 11).

How then could these be the people (Israel) to whom He was specially sent? That would be the falsifying of His own mission, an intentional defeating of God's purpose in sending Him! An impossible thing!

But note what it says in verse 15.

"For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them."

This could not be the people to whom Christ was specially sent, for Christ to be content to leave them in their lost condition.

But look at St. Mark's record of this same incident. It is much briefer and more pronounced.

"And when He was alone, they that were about Him with the twelve, asked Him about the parable.

And He said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the Kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: that seeing they may see and not perceive; and hearing they may hear and not understand; LEST AT ANY TIME THEY SHOULD BE CONVERTED; AND THEIR SINS SHOULD BE FORGIVEN THEM"!

And then in verse 34 we have, "But without a parable spake He not unto them"! Why? Why?

The parables were for hiding as well as for explanation. Hiding to the Jews, lest they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven! Surely, surely then this could not be the people to whom Our Lord was specially sent!

But now we have got to find the real "Israel" to whom He was sent. And Christ's words to the disciples give us the clue, "Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the Kingdom of God" (verse 11). Then they must be part and parcel of Israel to whom He was sent.

And thereby hangs a tale, which cannot be dealt with for a moment, but will be returned to shortly.

Again, look at other words of Our Lord, which prove conclusively that when He spoke the words of our text He did not mean the Jews.

John x, 24, says: "Then came the Jews round about Him (notice who they were, THE JEWS), and said unto Him, How long dost thou make us to doubt? IF THOU BE THE CHRIST, TELL US PLAINLY."

There is the invitation; but Our Lord would not do it! And further, gives the reason.

"Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed not." He had declared it, because if He had not done so they could not be condemned! The declaration had been made, but He would not repeat it: but He rather told them that there was a continued and never-ceasing declaration of it in His works!

"The works that I do in My Father's name they bear witness of Me" (verse 25).

What did the Jews do with that witnessing? "BUT YE BELIEVE NOT!" and here is the true reason. "BECAUSE YE ARE NOT OF MY SHEEP AS I SAID UNTO YOU" (verse 26).

Therefore and indisputably the Jews are not Christ's sheep: and He had told them so before, "As I said unto you." So this is the second time He had made this astounding declaration that the Jews are not His sheep, proving conclusively that they could not be the lost sheep of the House of Israel.

Now let us look at something else. The lost sheep of the House of Israel were the whole Ten Tribes, and were lost before Christ's day. The Jews were not lost at all. They were known, recognised, certified if you like. Even Christ said unto them, "I know that ye are Abraham's seed." (John x, 37.)

They knew themselves who they were. "We have Abraham to our father."

But says one, "They were spiritually lost, and it was of that that Christ spoke."

Well, if He had been speaking of that, and had specially come to them, why did He speak to them in parables lest they should be converted, and have their sins forgiven them?

Did he come to mock them? Assuredly not!

Put shortly, if the Jews were the Israel to whom Christ was sent, why did Christ cover His meaning in parables lest they should be converted, and He should heal them?

St. Peter, speaking of the Jews, said that Christ was to them a stone of stumbling and rock of offence, . . . whereunto also they were appointed." (1 Peter ii, 8.) Again proving that they could not be the Israel to whom Christ was sent.

St. Paul, too, affords some very strong evidence. Thess. ii, 14-16, says: "For ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews: who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men; forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sin alway: for the wrath of God is come upon them to the uttermost."

A terrible passage, showing very clearly that these people could not be Israel, though of Israel; for if these were the people to whom Christ came, His mission was an absolute failure: a thing impossible!

Remember, that Christ was to be the glory of Israel. And if the Jews are Israel, then this delightful prediction signally fails.

Digitized by Google

"A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people Israel." (Luke ii, 32.)

This cannot be the Jews, for Christ is to them and ever has been a reproach, a hissing, an usurper! But make no mistake, there is a literal lineal Israel somewhere to whom Christ has become their glory.

Take that other passage, Acts v, 31: "Him hath God exalted with His right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins."

Has Christ given repentance to the Jews? Obviously not! They are the citizens who, hating Him, send this message after Him, "We will not have this man to rule over us." Then obviously they cannot be this Israel to whom Christ gives repentance and forgiveness; and again could not be that "House of Israel" to whom He declared He was sent: for if so, His work and His mission would have been an irretrievable failure.

Let us distinguish between things that differ. "THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL" IS NOT THE JEWS.

Referring to that passage, "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel until the Son of Man be come," let it be said here, that quickly after the Crucifixion some of the Apostles came to England and preached Christ crucified; and within a few years of that time England became a Christian nation; her King Lucius, A.D. 179, being himself a preacher, and a missionary to the Continent.

And from that day down to this there has been a never-ceasing Evangel preached here, right down from the days of Joseph of Arimathea to this very day in which we live: and if we are Israel, His continuous command to His disciples has been fulfilled to the very letter:—"Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel."

But how did Christ Himself actually preach to the House of Israel?

Let us go back in history to the division in the time of Rehoboam.

Eleven tribes left Rehoboam, so he was left with the tribe of Judah only. (1 Kings xii, 20.) And verse 19 says, "So Israel rebelled against the House of David to this day." And so Benjamin must be included in that term "Israel," for Rehoboam was left with the tribe of Judah only!

Benjamin, however, quickly left the Northern House and joined Judah; and then the Southern people were called "The House of Judah WITH THE TRIBE OF BENJAMIN." (See verse 21.)

Benjamin was the light-bearing tribe.

"And unto his son will I give one tribe, that David My servant may have a light alway before Me in Jerusalem." (1 Kings xi, 36.)

This tribe of Benjamin, though forming no part of the House of Judah, espoused the cause of Rehoboam, and allied herself with Judah, though still belonging to and a part of the Northern House, but lent to David for a purpose.

They went into captivity with Judah, and part of them returned with Judah (see Ezra i, 5; iv, 1; x, 9). They were in the land when Our Lord came: they lived in Galilee, this is why He preached so often there. The Galileans were Benjaminites; they were "ISRAEL." And they received the Christ (St. John iv, 45), the Jews sought to kill Him (St. John vii, 1).

So Christ Our Lord spent a deal of the time of His public ministry in Galilee. He preached and taught by the Sea of Galilee; chose His disciples there, all of whom, with the exception of Judas Iscariot, were Benjaminites, according to one well-known writer.

Here then is a part at any rate of the Israel to whom Christ was sent.

Afterwards, when Saul of Tarsus was made an Apostle, he, too, was of Benjamin.

"I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin." (Romans xi, 1.) This particular choice of the one tribe could not be all chance.

Again, note the words of the angels present at Christ's Ascension (Acts i, 11): "Ye men of Galilee" (why didn't they say, "Ye Jews"? Because it would not have been correct), "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus," etc.

But note the strange words of the disciples in verse 6. "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore the Kingdom TO ISRAEL?"

Notice "To Israel." If it is suggested that they were enquiring if Christ was going to restore the Kingdom to the Jews, we venture to deny it. They knew that the Kingdom of God, the centre of worship of Jehovah, should be taken from the Jews and given to another nation, for Christ had told them so.

But this enquiry referred to the earthly literal Kingdom. The Jews never had the Kingdom, and never will have, apart from Israel. The Ten Tribes is the Kingdom, the eleven while Benjamin was amongst them, the Ten afterwards.

"Behold, I will rend the Kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee." (1 Kings xi, 31.) "But I will take the Kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it (the Kingdom) unto thee, even ten tribes." (Verse 35.)

And verse 38: "And will give Israel to thee."

Judah or the Jews formed no part of this Kingdom. Separately from the Ten-Tribed House, Israel, the Jews never had the Kingdom, and never will have.

But eventually Judah is to join Israel under one King: though whether this includes all who now call themselves Jews is very doubtful indeed. (See Rev. ii, 9; iii, 9.)

The disciples knew that the Jews were not Israel the nation, the Kingdom-nation, though they were of Israel the Patriarch.

This gives quite a new meaning to the enquiry of the disciples, "Wilt thou at this time restore the Kingdom to Israel?" Well might they ask that, for they, being Benjaminites, belonged to Israel.

But is it possible that in our Saviour's words in Matt. xv, 24, quoted at the commencement, there is a distinct reference to His redeeming of Israel by the sacrifice of the Cross? And THAT was why He was sent?

"For the transgression of My people was He stricken." (Isaiah liii, 8.) "He shall save His people from their sins." (Matt. i, 21.) "All we like sheep have gone astray: we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." (Isaiah liii, 6.)

"For thus saith the Lord God: Behold I, even I, will both search My sheep, and seek them out."

Digitized by Google

"As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered, so will I seek out My sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day."

"I will feed My flock. . . . I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick. . . . Therefore will I save My flock. . . . And I the Lord will be their God.

"Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they, even the House of Israel, are My people, saith the Lord God." (Ezek. xxxiv.)

There we have the special people to whom these gracious messages are sent: and Christ was the great Seeker, the Messenger, the Redeemer by whom Israel is restored.

He is not only Israel's Redeemer, but Judah's if they will have Him, as He is also the Saviour of the world.

ISRAEL IN THE ASSYRIAN EXILE.—II.

Paper prepared and read by A. S. BAYLY before the East London (S. Africa) Branch of the British-Israel-World Federation.

721 TO 613 B.C.

WE gather from the account given in 2 Kings xvii that the tribes of Israel (other than Judah and Benjamin), having filled up the cup of their iniquity, were carried away captive by Shalmaneser, King of Assyria, 721 B.C., into Assyria and were divided into parties. Some were sent to the far end of the Empire into the cities of the Medes and Ecbatane in particular. The most were settled in the suburbs of Halah and Habor along the banks of the River Gozan, a tributary of the River Tigris, upon which Nineveh was built; these were evidently agricultural districts from which the food supplies of Nineveh were drawn. A few favoured families were taken to Nineveh itself, amongst which was one Tobit, who came under the notice of the King, Shalmaneser, and was made his purveyor, that is the officer in charge of the food supplies, and it was his duty evidently to see that the Israelitish exiles duly tilled the soil and brought their produce to Nineveh.

Some fifty years later the then King of Assyria, Esarhaddon, 681 B.C., having united the kingdoms of Nineveh and Babylon and thus brought peace to these regions, re-colonised North Palestine and sent men from Babylon, Cuthah Ava and Hainath.

It would appear that during the period from, say, 709 to 681 B.C., the Israelite exiles were not treated as captives but as colonists, and had freedom to travel from city to city subject to the ordinary perils of the journey in those days. As witness Tobit's journey from Nineveh to Rages, a city of Media, and return, and ten years later of his son Tobias's journey from Nineveh to Ecbatane in Media, and back again.

Now we are told in 2 Esdras viii, 40-46, That these exiles took counsel together, that they would leave the multitude of the heathen and go forth into a further country where never mankind dwelt, and they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passages of the river which winds its long and sinuous way through the mountains of Armenia, and journeyed to the North-east of Lake Van, and thence continued their marchings to the shores of the Black Sea at a point where Trebizond now stands, and then appear to have wandered round the seacoast past the place now known as Batoum to the foot of the Circassian Mountains, which they did not essay to cross, but in later times crossed the straits of Yenikale, which forms the entrance to the Sea of Asof, and thence into the Crimea and settled there for a long time. In the burial-places there, hundreds of monuments have been found with Hebrew inscriptions. This party evidently took advantage of the unsettled state of the kingdom of Assyria at the death of Sarchedonus, 681 B.C., ere Esarhaddon came up from Babylon to Nineveh and took over his brother's kingdom, thus uniting the kingdoms of Nineveh and Babylon.

But there was another section of the Israelites settled in Media, and principally in the city of Ecbatane, where here were at least some wealthy and influential Israelites of the tribe of Naphtali, for we read in Tobit xiv that Tobit at his death enjoined upon his son Tobias, in view of the foretold destruction of Nineveh, to go to his uncle at Ecbatane where the conditions were more settled, which Tobias did and died there, 600 B.C., having lived there in wealth and influence.

In the book of Judith we read that in the twelfth year of Nabuchodonosor who reigned in Nineveh (this would be about 613 B.C.) Arphaxad reigned in Ecbatane and walled in the city with hewn stones 5 feet broad and 10 feet long, and made the wall 117 feet high and the gates of the city 67 feet broad, and after a desultory warfare waged for five years, the King of Assyria (Nabuchodonosor) overthrew Arphaxad in battle and became lord of his cities, and came to Ecbatane and took the towers thereof and spoiled the streets of their beauty. He captured Arphaxad in the mountains adjacent and smote him through with darts and then returned to Nineveh. We saw that Tobias died at Ecbatane in 600 B.C., and must have been 119 years old at the capture of Ecbatane and too aged to flee therefrom, so clung to the dismantled city with other inhabitants upon the retirement of Nabuchodonosor.

Doubtless many of the inhabitants of Ecbatane and other cities fled before the army of Nabuchodonosor, and with them the Israelite colonists, and escaped in different directions; some to Persia, whilst other avoiding the Circassian Mountains, skirted the south and south-eastern coast of the Caspian Sea and there settled, becoming known there as the Sacæ, or Sons of Isaac, which they undoubtedly were. From thence, in course of centuries increasing in numbers, they again split into various parties, finding their several ways, some into Central Asia, whilst others skirting the Caspian Sea to the North crossed the Ural River into what is now Russia in Europe. During the subsequent migrations across Europe of these several parties we can be assured that their God Jehovah—God Almighty—never lost sight of them, but guided them all unknown to themselves to their ultimate goal—the British Isles, and so, like a mighty river that at its source is but a collection of small streams flowing, sometimes lost to knowledge in the hills and even disappearing in subterranean channels to burst forth at a distance as a strong, rapid river, so has been the progression of the ten tribes of Israel in their migrations extending over 1,600 years until the last instalment of them (the Normans) found a permanent resting-place in Great Britain, A.D. 1066.

THE SCIENCE OF PRAYER.

By HENRY PROCTOR, F.R.S.L.

FROM the dawn of history men have been students of science; not only spending all their energies for the sake of fresh acquisitions of knowledge, but actually becoming martyrs and laying down their lives in pursuit of it. But there is one branch of science, the most important of all, which is forgotten by the multitude and known only to the few. We refer to the science of prayer. For from whatever standpoint we view it, there can be no question of the vital importance of that which, throughout the ages, has succeeded where every other branch of science has proved an utter failure. They may indeed be mighty, but this is almighty. Where medical science wrings its hands and says, "Impossible," the prayer of faith steps in and says:

"IT SHALL BE DONE."

If in pursuit of our science of prayer we attempt to measure its possibilities, we find it impossible, because we cannot measure the infinite. If anything is impossible to the power of prayer, then it must be impossible to God. For the promises in regard to it are absolutely limitless. We can measure the power of prayer, therefore, only with

THE PLUMBLINE OF INFINITY.

When Our Lord was asked by His disciples to increase their faith, He answered them in a remarkable way; for, dismissing the thought of their own faith entirely, He said, 'Have the faith of God." Thus indicating that they could lay hold, by simply taking it as "the gift of God," on the faith of God, which "spake light out of darkness," when He said, "Light be, and light was."*

The man who is made in the Image and Likeness of God, who through faith becomes a son of God, and is begotten of God, can, like his Elder Brother, speak even as He did, when He multiplied the loaves and the fishes. For He that sanctifies and they that are sanctified are "All of One": being fellow-heirs with Him of all the plenitude of the Divine Nature. For it is the declared will of God that all His sons and daughters should be "filled unto all the fulness of God." In such a case the words which a son of God speaks are not his, but emanate from the Indwelling Logos, the Eternal Word, which is in his heart and in his mouth.† His prayers, therefore, are inspired, inwrought, energised of God. Such prayer is, of necessity, infallible. For it is the prayer of God, which is prayed in the faith of God. It is this faith that can move mountains, and to which nothing is impossible, for it is commensurate with the power of God. We can form some conception of its power when we know that the atom, every atom of matter, consists of about a thousand electrons revolving around a central orb, and that each atom is a solar system in itself, and that the power in a single atom is sufficient (according to Lord Kelvin) to raise the whole British Fleet to the height of Ben Nevis. What then must be the possibilities vested in millions on millions of these atoms! How great must be the power that keeps this planet earth rotating on its axis at the rate of over a thousand miles an hour, and causes it to revolve incessantly around the sun at the rate of a thousand miles a minute; or that causes our sun to revolve around some great central orb at the rate of five hundred millions of miles in a year, with all that vast multitude of sixty millions of suns, with the billions and billions of planets which constitute their systems. Well may we say: "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" or, "Is any problem too great for the Universal Mind, the Fountain of wisdom and Source of all knowledge?"

THE CREATIVE WORD,

The veriest tyro in natural science does not need to be told that all things must be possible to the Rulers of such a universe as the science of astronomy depicts. With some it may seem difficult to believe in the Elohim, and in El Elyon, the Supreme, the God of Gods, of whom the Bible speaks with so much assurance, but even Huxley, who was styled "the Prince of agnostics, the High Priest of agnosticism," affirmed that he saw nothing improbable or inconceivable in the thesis that there might be beings in the universe, rising tier on tier, as far above man as man is above the black beetle; higher indeed than the Christian's highest ideal of God. Thus even to the agnostic there can be nothing unreasonable in the belief in the innumerable hosts of angels, which are represented in both the Old and New Testaments, so often as the agents in answering prayer, as Gabriel when sent to Daniel, to Zechariah, and to Mary, as well as those who appeared at the Resurrection, and at various times of special need to the Lord Jesus, especially while He was praying. "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them that are heirs of salvation?"

And just a grain of faith, no larger than "a mustard seed," is sufficient to move mountains, and to work mighty signs and wonders. If we would receive this faith as a free gift of the Spirit,‡ a free, unmerited favour to anyone who will use it for the profit§ of all mankind, and for the extension of the Kingdom of God on earth, then the power of prayer might be demonstrated like any other scientific fact, by the "signs following," and "our speech and our preaching would not be in word only, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

OUR usual weekly meetings at Headquarters will be held (D.V.) until further notice on Wednesday afternoons at 3, and on Thursday evenings at 7.30. Last week helpful addresses were given by the Revs. Kenneth Dodds and G. H. Lancaster, and the Secretary-General.

A Speakers' Training Class was started on Wednesday of last week, under the leadership of the Rev. Joseph Gay. The class will meet each Wednesday, at 7.45 p.m., until the end of July. Those who wish to join are invited to do so at once. The Women's Bible Class met on Saturday afternoon, under the guidance of Mrs. Zoe Bell and Miss Alexander, and will meet again on the first Saturday afternoon in July, at 3 p.m. Mr. Sleeman's Bible Class for Men meets each Tuesday, from 6 to 7 p.m.

Mr. John Leech, K.C., addressed two well-attended meetings at Sutton, Surrey, on May 23rd, and on the following day he lectured twice to good audiences in the Athenæum Hall, Brighton, for our Branch there.

* * *

Mr. J. J. Morey addressed two large audiences at Tunbridge Wells on May 30th. A Branch of the Federation was formed, and the Rev. Dr. Mountain was elected President, and Mrs. Stillmant was elected Hon. Secretary. This week Mr. Morey is speaking at Guildford, Chatham, Croydon and Eastbourne.

The Rev. R. G. F. Waddington, M.A., is announced to give an address on Friday, June 15th, at 7.30, in the Friends' Meeting House, Fountain Street, Bradford, on "Some Impressions of Palestine and the Near East," based on his recent tour. A full audience is anticipated.

The Ilkley and Ben Rhydding Branch greatly enjoyed the visit of Rev. T. H. Whitehouse on May 9th, when he addressed a good audience. On the 24th he gave the same interesting and instructive lecture, "Moscow versus Britain," at Liverpool.

On Saturday, May 12th, Thurcroft had a visit from Mr. W. Whitton, who gave an address in the Laughton Wesleyan Hall. By the kind permission of the Stewards of the Chapel, Mr. Whitton occupied the pulpit at the two services on the Sunday; the afternoon subject was "The Coronation Stone," and the evening "The Kingdom of God." After the evening service, Mr. Whitton was warmly thanked, and the Trustees are trying to arrange another B.-I. Sunday.

The Rev. Joseph Gay visited Keysoe, Bedford, and preached May 16th on "The King and the Kingdom," a study in St. Matthew. He gave a B.-I. address at the public meeting in the evening. Passing on to Paignton, Devon, he gave two lectures on the 17th, to large audiences. On Saturday evening, in Padiham, Lancs, he lectured on "Charles Dickens, his time and place in the British Empire." On the Sunday, Mr. Gay preached S.S.A. sermons. Monday, the 21st, found him in Bingley, Yorks; Tuesday, Halifax; Wednesday, again in Bingley; Thursday, Ben Rhydding; and Friday, 25th, at Bradford.

On the 29th, the same speaker gave two lectures at the Masonic Hall, St. Leonards, to crowded gatherings. The subject in the afternoon was "God's Kingdom Nation," and in the evening, "The Coming Storm and Britain's Place in it," when the hall was packed to its utmost capacity.

At St. Andrew's Church, Suffolk Street, Dublin, a Service of Intercession was held on the 29th, being conducted by the Rector, the Rev. R. Northridge, assisted by Mr. E. H. Flint. It was a beautiful service, the address being given by the Rector.

Mr. Wm. Whitton is to conduct an Open-Air Mission on the sands at Southport during the week commencing July 15th, and another at Bridlington for the week commencing August 12th. B.-I. friends who intend to spend their holidays at these places are asked to help, and to communicate with Mr. Whitton in advance at his address:—25, Earldom Road, Sheffield.

We again remind our readers of the Summer Convention at Glastonbury from August 6th to 10th, and we shall be glad if those who propose to attend will communicate with us as soon as possible.

* * *

Congress reserved seat tickets for the week commencing October 1st are now being booked. All those who require seats near the platform will do well to make application without delay.

Israel in Prophecy and History

By P. W. THOMPSON, M.A.

Possibly the finest historical survey, in relation to the identity, that has yet been written. This, the first book written on the subject of British-Israel by the author of The Whole Tithe and other works, is a contribution of the utmost value to our literature.

Demy 8vo. Cloth cover. Price 5/-; by post, 5/6

God and My Birthright

By THOMAS J. LLEWELLYN, F.R.C.S.

The Author asks the question: "If the British be not Israel, how then comes it about that they are doing the very work that the unerring Word of God tells us that Israel was to do?" He decides: "There is only one logical conclusion, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon Race is the long-lost House of Israel."

The Names of God

or, The Majestic Order of Divine Revelation

By Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD, F.R.G.S.

The Rev. Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE wrote:
"May I express my sincere gratitude to the Rev. Wm. Pascoe Goard for his book on The Names of God . . .
It is a remarkable discovery, and deserves the closest attention. I have published a book on The Titles of Jehovah. I wish I had known half of what Mr. Goard has produced in his book.
I ask him to believe that he has helped a humble servant of Jehovah in his study of the Word."

GOOD ADVICE

To a friend in distress you would tender sympathy and helpful advice. You have many friends unwittingly ignorant of the greatest truth affecting our State to-day. Give them that word of helpful advice. Introduce them to "The National Message." Tell them the value of its teaching. Let them know the help you get from it week by week. Then get them to fill up the Subscription Form below and send it to us. This Message can then be addressed to them, and so our good work will go on.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

THREADS OF TRUTH.—I.

BY THE REV. W. PASCOE GOARD.

THERE is a matter which all schools of Bible interpretation should remember. It is that in the Bible there is what might be termed the wilderness of the universe and of the world, and within that wilderness there is a garden planted by God, in which garden Jehovah Elohim placed the man.

There is the first chapter of Genesis, which deals with the "wilderness" of the universe at large; and of the world. The second chapter, and succeeding chapters of the garden story, deals with the garden, and with the man specially formed, inbreathed, and placed therein.

The succeeding chapters and books of the Bible take note of the "wilderness of the nations" outside of the main theme of the Bible; but its space is occupied, and its story deals chiefly with the story of the selected seed of the created man.

Now, when the scientist directs his attention to the wilderness of the universe and of the world, he will find therein the creatures which are the handiwork of God. His information will never be contrary to the Bible. But much of it will be outside of the Bible story. So for a moment we will look at the universal theme as presented in the first chapter of Genesis. What have we of data here?

REVELATION.

One short chapter plus three short verses—Gen. i and ii, 1-3.

GEOLOGY.

Fossil forms of once living creatures preserved in the rock.

PHYSIOLOGY.

Similarity of structure of the body in the vertebrate world, and an apparent progress in the development of the plan.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

Fragmentary remains of animals around which theories have been established. For instance, that a tooth found in silt beds of the U.S.A. belonged to an anthropoid man. This was taken to be established, and the treasure was preserved in the Smithsonian Institute. Scholarly lectures were founded on it as showing evolution in man—until it was found that the tooth was that of a peccary, or wild pig.

Now place all these lines of data side by side. We have:—Revelation, one chapter; Geology, fossil remains; Archæology, fragments of bones; Physiology, form of structure common to vertebrates; what are supposed to be remains of previously active organs, usable under conditions of life long passed away; such, for instance, is the vermiform appendix. The latter is supposed to have now no function to perform in the physical system. It will be found, however, that the appendix has a very essential function which it does perform in the present condition of physical life, which anatomical science has overlooked. It acts as a gas retort, necessary to the health and life of the physical system.

When all these sources of information have been gathered it will be found that there is in hand, in Revelation, a strange and wonderful statement, as of fact. That statement affects the mind in a truly miraculous way. It presents to the mind of the simple a progress from "day" to "day" of creative activity; and to the learned it opens out a view of the universe in the making with a broadness which is never overtaken by science, no matter how widely it flings its boundaries of knowledge; as in astronomy, for instance. No other passage of literature in the world can achieve this effect upon the minds of the simple and of the learned. The statement of Genesis is categorical and authoritative. It offers no other proof than the answer of the facts of the universe to its universal statement.

Geology, archæology and physiology afford a little pile of fragments and bones, which, as far as they go, confirm the majestic statement.

As to time: The first chapter of Genesis is timeless. The second chapter comes within the scope of six thousand years.

Universality: The first chapter of Genesis deals with the universe: the second chapter embraces the earth and the heavens around it; by reference only, in order to relate geographically the position in which the continuing story of the Bible is located; then it proceeds to deal with Eden, and to the garden planted eastward in Eden.

Thus { Chapter i: / Chapter ii: }

The narrative deals with all that have been born of Adam and Eve. In all cases but the one line it is only to show that Cain and his seed; Ham and Japheth and their seed; Esau and his seed; although born racially within the lines of the story, by their own volition move outside of its scope; these constituting "the wilderness of the nations."

These are to be brought back through the Atonement wrought out by Our Lord Jesus Christ, through the missionary and administrative activity of Israel, God's Kingdom-nation.

Now it will be well for every one of us Christian ministers to realise that our MESSAGE IS THE MESSAGE OF THE BIBLE. What the Bible includes we should include. What the Bible excludes we should also exclude. The first chapter of Genesis is for us authoritative. Its exhaustive exposition is not in the scope of our ministry. It is essentially scientific, and therefore the scientist's field.

We are dealing with the Adamic family; and with the way in which God is dealing with that family in this our day.

Ours is not the theme of evolution versus creation. Ours is the theme of the new creation, and the new birth. We are not dealing with the people of the wilderness of the nations; but with the seed of Abraham, and those who from the wilderness of the nations may be induced to come into the narrower limits of the "Garden Kingdom of God."

Within these limits it is possible for all of us to agree on essentials. If at spare intervals one should wish to pass through the gates of the garden and to go out for a stroll in the wild, he should not in so doing imagine that telling what he has seen out in the wild of the universe can take the place of preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom and of salvation. This latter is our job. When we forget this, we should cease our active work as an ordained preacher of the Word, and go out into the activities of the wider world of our choice. We should remember we shall find no salvation there for ourselves nor for our followers. The tree of life grows only in the garden.

We may call the inhabitants of the wilderness to the gateway; we may bid them enter through Christ, Who is the door; we may cause them to eat of the tree of life and to become citizens of the Garden Kingdom. But we shall not accomplish this by telling of the things which are out in the wild. We shall do this, if at all, by telling them of the way to the tree of life in the garden. So let us get back into the boundaries of the garden and there carry on our intended task.

One wonders if any man living can round out all the truth before his mental vision. Not the details of course. No man living can do that; but the departments—how many of them are there? and the outlines: how great is their extent?

Most men know a little, so very little, of the common things of life. He knows that the sun rises, makes his progress through the heavens, and then sets in the west. He knows this, of course. The nautical almanack will tell him to a minute what time the sun rises and what time the sun sets for every day in the year. This is a part of his everyday knowledge. It enters into all his plans. But strangely enough, the sun does not rise; the sun does not climb the heavens from the east, nor descend into the west; it only appears to do so. What happens really is that the earth is turning over on its axis, and the nearest visible object which reveals this to the earth dweller is the sun. The moon and planets are, of course, outshone by his brilliance. So the ordinary man knows sunrise, noon and sunset, and what he knows is true enough to fact, but not to basic astronomical fact. It gives him the working outline of his day. It furnishes the data by which the shipmaster may determine his position on the seas. It is founded on fact; but the appearance he uses is not the basic fact. The earth moves; the sun, as far as the diurnal movement is concerned, stands still.

The same man knows that the sun stands over the equator at the equinoxes, and that it moves to the north in summer and to the south in winter, thus producing the seasons. The seasons have been calculated with mathematical precision and the calculation is based upon this every year fact. The surface facts are true enough, and have served to guide the chronologist for ages. But the basic facts are not as the apparent fact. The sun does not move north, nor south. It is the earth that wobbles on its axis. So the practical scientist gets his bearings by the apparent facts. They never deceive him in practical matters. But they are not basic facts after all.

So in theology. The evolutionist begins with the beast. He delights to look at the apparent facts of developing life. He bases his calculations and theories on this appearance.

Digitized by Google

But the basic facts in biology, as in astronomy, are contrary to appearance, as the Holy Book tells us. Unlike even the apparent movement of the sun, which is so sure and stable as to furnish the data required for navigation, the evolutionist has but uncertain, detached fragments of fact to bring together. He reaches a conclusion which is at variance with the miraculous first chapter of Genesis; and which, to say the least, runs ahead of all known data. The vital thing to consider is the direction of his course is reversed. It is most certain that Jesus Christ came with the declared object of directing the eyes and the faith of the people towards God in heaven above us. He said, "When ye pray, say, Our Father, which art in heaven. . . ." The evolutionist directs the eyes of men primarily downwards to the lower animals, and says "from these you have ascended." This directing the eyes of men downward instead of upward to God the direct and present Creator is tragedy in the utmost possible degree.

ADDRESS AT KENSINGTON TOWN HALL.

BY THE REV. T. H. WHITEHOUSE.

ON THURSDAY, APRIL 19TH, 1928.

I CAME this morning from Northamptonshire. We are pinning our flag in Northampton, where a very great protagonist of the negation of all faith—Bradlaugh—stood and challenged Almighty God as to the fulfilment of the promises made to Abraham. Well, as the result of a few days' work there, we got a good Branch going.

A man said to me in the meeting last Friday, "If ever there was an arrant unbeliever, who derided the Bible and scoffed at religion, I was that man; but I came into your meeting and I heard your teaching, and now I am living in a new world."

A few days ago I was helping at a friend's down in South Devon. A dear little man took me for a ride in his motor car, and during the drive he opened his mind to me. He said he came to England about 27 or 28 years ago as a prisoner of war. He was one of the Jameson raiders, and when he got to Southampton he was released. At that time he was an agnostic and a very wild fellow, and he gave me some incidents in his career which quite supported his assertion. For many years that man lived his agnostic kind of life, and it got him nowhere. He was a most unhappy man. Then a friend at Exeter told him something about the Pyramid, and what the Pyramid stands for. As an engineer, it appealed to the man's fancy, so he went into the Pyramid teaching, and he came out a convinced British-Israelite, and a very humble Christian.

Everywhere and all the time British-Israel is a factor which will bring the unchurched masses back again to Christ.

There was an occasion when Our Blessed Lord was going up to Jerusalem for the last time; going there to accomplish that death which should redeem a people for service and procure salvation for all mankind, and He and His followers rested on the slopes of Olivet, and gazed across the valley at that glorious city. The disciples pointed out to Him the wonders of that lovely spot; and how their hearts welled within them, as patriots, as believers in the God of their fathers, as men who hoped for the redemption of Israel. "Yes," said Our Lord, "You see these things. There shall not be one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." They did not know what to make of it; it seemed to suggest an extraordinary happening, and they took the occasion to put a question to Him privately: "Tell us, when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world?" First He gave them some signs NOT of His Coming—false Christs who set up new religions, wars, rumours of wars. "See that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet." No. There must be a great interval of time. "Nation shall rise against nation, kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes. These are the beginning of sorrows." Something different from the normal condition in which human life runs its course. No more the raising of armies to be sent out to fight our battles, while the rest of the nation gets on with its business or pleasure. No more the raising of 27,000 men and sending them out to fight a decisive battle—as Waterloo, but the whole nation going under arms. We have seen it; 9½ millions of men in this, the most pacific of all nations, in the King's uniform; nearly eight millions of them put into the firing line, and that firing line belting the globe. And the womanhood of the nation thrown into the munition works, labouring day and night to produce munitions of war, for their men to blast other women's men out of existence. The belligerent nations were doing the same thing. Fifty millions of men in the line of battle. Kingdoms making it their sole business to fight to the last gasp. There is something phenomenal. We have arrived at a time.

Famines—the second thing. Yes, assuredly. If you take fifty millions of men and put them into the firing line, they are producing nothing but death and destruction; and if you put their women into munition works to produce nothing but means of destruction, you will have famines. And the famines came. You remember how nearly we came to a famine here. You and I do not like to remember the terrible hardships, the shifts we were put to to fight famine, and that out of eleven million tons of shipping bringing food across the ocean eight million tons were sent to the bottom. We were told, after the Armistice, by men who knew best, that we were within six weeks of starvation; a later statement reduced it to three weeks. Anyhow, we came terribly near to a hideous death for our population by starvation. I remember reading about one huge district in Poland, war-swept, where there was not a single child left alive under the age of seven. And the famine swept around the globe in the track of the war, and worked its deadly havoc. The second sign.

The third sign. Pestilences. Yes, the pestilence came. How can it be otherwise? One thinks with amazement and admiration of the marvellous work done by our Sanitary Corps, but even so we had the pestilence. You remember that awful influenza scourge, that swept 100,000 victims into an untimely grave, and claimed its toll across Europe; then it went on to Asia, where it threw six millions into the grave; and it crossed the Pacific, and visited New Zealand, Australia, and so completed its circle of the globe in the track of the world war. More suffered through that one visitation than fell with wounds and death in the war. The third sign.

Digitized by Google

The fourth sign. Earthquakes. Need I labour this point? You opened your newspaper to-day and saw the daily record of earthquakes and their toll of death.

These are the beginning of sorrows. All birth-pangs. That is what Our Lord said. This is the travail of the age in anguish to bring forth.

The fifth sign. The fourteenth verse, chapter twenty-four of St. Matthew. "And this Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all the nations, and then shall the end come"; for some of us the goal. Humanity is striving for the achievement, the consummation. The Gospel of the Kingdom. Another Gospel? Did not St. Paul say, "Let him be accursed if he preach another gospel." What is the Gospel of the Kingdom? It is not only the Gospel of Calvary, and yet it is not another Gospel. It is the Gospel of Divine Sovereignty—the Lord reigneth; the Gospel of Christ's inherent authority, the exercise of His rule and dominion in the earth.

Last Christmas we were singing—and the echo is still in our ears—the anthem of the Kingdom:

> "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.
> "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his (David's) kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

Perhaps you are saying, "But that, you know, is from the Old Testament, and the Old Testament is a discredited Book to-day. I have no use for the Old Testament." Have you not? Have you for the New? If you have, then listen to the teaching of the New Testament. In the first chapter of St. Luke you will find it recorded that God sent a glorious and angelic being, named Gabriel, to a little village in Galilee called Nazareth, to a humble cottage home, to a gentle village maiden whose name was Mary, who was engaged to be married to the village carpenter, Joseph. The angel entered that humble dwelling, and said:

> "Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women."

And the angel went on to tell her that she should have a son; that He should be called Jesus, the son of the Highest, and that the Lord should give unto Him the throne of His father David. Two fathers—the Highest and David. Two natures—Divine and human. Two thrones—the Eternal and the earthly.

> "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever."

There you have the Old Testament foreshadowing the New. And the kingdom of David is distinctly named as the twelve tribes of Jacob, who are to be the subjects of the Divine rule of the Lord Jesus Christ. There is the Gospel of the Kingdom, which is to be preached for a witness to all the world, and as a sign of the times. That is the mission of the Federation. That is the message of the Federation's missionaries. These are signs which Our Lord gives of the setting-up of His Throne, and some of the accompaniments of His Coming.

A sixth sign. Turn to the twenty-first chapter of St. Luke, the twenty-fourth verse. Our Lord is speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem, the foretelling of which had caused such dismay to the disciples. He foreshadowed how Jerusalem should be desolated, the Jews scattered into all the nations, and Jerusalem trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled. Then a people who are not Gentiles shall expel the Gentiles, and take back their ancient heritage. There was a day—the 9th December, 1917—when a British "Tommy" crawled towards the Turkish lines to make an observation. In the early dawn he saw two figures emerge from a gateway in Jerusalem, walking towards the English lines. He sprang up and challenged them. One of the men told him to take him to his Commandant. He was taken to the Colonel. It was the Mayor of Jerusalem, who had brought the keys of the city to surrender to the British. Two days afterwards Lord Allenby stood there, the centre of an epoch-making ceremony, and the four-fold flag of the British people was run up on Mount Zion—where it waves at this moment, and, please God, ever will. There, right in the midst of that land, geographically outlined by Almighty God, when He said to Abraham: "All this land will I give thee, from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates"—mandated by a greater Power than the League of Nations—Almighty God Himself—to the Abrahamic Race. Thus it has come to them, and they have come into their own. That is the sixth sign that the Lord is at hand, because He is to reign on the throne of His father David. Isaiah xxiv says that it shall be in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously.

A seventh sign. This is future, but not in the dim and distant future.

> "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.
> "And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened."

We can all see the clouds beginning to gather blackly overhead. It was not without great searchings of heart that we read in this morning's newspaper that Russia has commandeered one-third of the whole of the national resources for military purposes. What is their objective? It is a sign of the times.

I want to point out to you the last sign of all.

> "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven."

What shall that sign be? Who can tell? But it will cause every man and woman to lift up their eyes, and they shall behold Him. Every eye shall see Him, all the kingdoms of the earth shall wail because of Him, but His people will not wail; they look up with early expectation, and our hearts give forth the cry, Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

"Who poisons confidence, he murders the future generations."—Coleridge.

THE SHEPHERDS OF ISRAEL AND GOD'S FLOCK.

BY H. E. TURNER.

THE thirty-fourth chapter of Ezekiel contains two declarations of predominance, one of denunciation against the shepherds of Israel, and the other of compassion on the flock of God's pasture; the chapter proclaims the Word of the Lord which came to the prophet during the captivity of the House of Israel, about the year 570 B.C.; the prophetic period is that of the Christian era, up to the time of Israel's return to their own land of Canaan. The chapter for the most part is allegorical or figurative, and, as far as our purpose requires, we will now endeavour to express its allegories in plain literal language.

Firstly, the shepherds are shown in the twenty-third chapter of Jeremiah to be the pastors who feed the people, i.e., who feed their minds with knowledge of God's Word (Jer. iii, 15; 1 Peter v, 2), and these shepherds doubtless include clergy, pastors, lay readers and all who undertake the responsibility of Scripture teaching, with its accompanying obligations, whom we will describe as the ministers.

Secondly, the flock of God's pasture, in the plain and unmistakable interpretation of verses 30 and 31, "even the house of Israel, are My people, saith the Lord God. And ye My flock, the flock of My pasture, are men." There is no loophole here for spiritualizing or scepticism; the flock in the figurative is the House of Israel in the literal, and as if to prevent the possibility of misconception, the sheep are declared to be men. "The lost sheep of the house of Israel." (Matt. x, 6.)

Thirdly, being fed in a good pasture indicates Divine sustenance, viz.: the nourishment of the mind by being taught the Word of God, the Scriptures. "It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." (Luke iv, 4; Deut. viii, 3.)

In literal rendering the chapter commences thus: "And the Word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, prophesy against the ministers of Israel, prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the ministers: Woe be to the ministers of Israel that, for their own gratification, do appropriate to their own opinions the sacred Word of God! Should not the ministers nourish the people with the pure, unadulterated Word of God? Thus saith the Lord God: Behold I am against the ministers; and I will require My people Israel at their hands, and cause them to cease from their ministry. For thus saith the Lord God: Behold I, even I, will both search My people Israel, and seek them out.

"And I the Lord will be their God, and thy servant David a prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it." (24.)

A literal sense of the text and context may be disputed or explained away, to suit modern ideas, but there will be no evading the House of Israel on the Day of Judgment. The Word of God abounds in promises to the people of His choice for their nourishment, but God's people Israel are deprived of their promises; their very names, Ephraim, Jacob, etc., are given to nourish a Church of reputed Gentiles, Israel of the Scriptures are effaced by their ministers and their existence as a nation blotted out. The main theme running through the chapter represents the offence of ministers in their betrayal, their disdainful rejection of God's chosen people, and their wilful neglect to search for the lost House of Israel, disregarding God's covenants and the injunction of 1 Chron. xvi, 15: "Be ye mindful always of His covenant; the word which He commanded to a thousand generations; even of the covenant, which He made with Abraham, and of His oath unto Isaac; and hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance"; the British by translation from the Hebrew means the covenant race, and they are by every available proof God's people Israel; how then does the attitude of clergy and ministers compare with those in the chapter under consideration? With the exception of a witnessing band of acknowledged British-Israelites, the attitude of the majority of ministers of various denominations, from prelates to pastors, is precisely similar to that described in allegory by the prophet Ezekiel; their aversion and opposition to British-Israel is evident, yet there remains the denunciation: "Thus saith the Lord God; behold, I am against the shepherds, and I will require My flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock"; "and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God." (Hosea i, 10.) "Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you; and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion: and I will give you pastors according to Mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding." (Jer. iii, 14.) "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." (Rom. xv, 4.)

Whatever this thirty-fourth chapter of Ezekiel may portend to ministers of religion, it has, for God's people of the House of Israel in these islands and beyond the seas, a message of consolation and hope.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF CHRIST IN THE LIGHT OF BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH.

PART I.

BY W. G. DUNCAN THOMPSON.

THE subject of British-Israel Truth is a subject which touches every phase and department of Christian and every-day life.

It is concerned with ethnology, history, theology, sociology, economics, and countless other branches of human knowledge. There is, however, one grave charge which is often brought against it by critics, namely, that it is material and unspiritual.

It is partly to attempt to refute such a charge that we have chosen the spiritual aspect of the subject for consideration.

This is the highest aspect which can be attained by any branch of human knowledge and the most difficult to express, and in endeavouring to write upon it much has to be taken into consideration.

It is well to remember that the B.-I.-W.F. is not a Jewish Society. It is not subversive of orthodox Christian belief. It is not the vapouring of cranks who have no valid authority for their beliefs.

Digitized by Google

On the other hand, in British-Israel Truth we have a master-key for unlocking the historical meaning of the Scriptures and man's place and activities upon the earth, for beyond the mere claim that Britain is ancient Israel and the presentation of historical and Scriptural proof of our beliefs there lies a great field of spiritual vision.

It is to obtain a glimpse of that vision that we would seek, and it is with this aim in view that the subject: "The Friendship of Christ in the Light of British-Israel Truth" has been chosen.

If we are successful in arriving by means of British-Israel faith at some perception, however dim, of the vision splendid, then the criticism that B.-I. teaching is unspiritual falls to the ground—at least so far as we are concerned.

But it would be a pity, would it not, to base a subject solely on a criticism, and therefore I give you also an admission: England's Poet-Laureate—Robert Bridges, whose opinion does count for something in the intellectual world, once closed a personal conversation with a sentence as unforgettable as it was unexpected. "After all," he said, "the greatest thing in the world is the friendship of Christ."

It is, indeed, a greater thing than even the most spiritually-minded of us dream, and it is our present object to see if B.-I. teaching can add anything to our knowledge of it.

Now it is quite essential in this matter to begin at the beginning and to get our thoughts clear if we are to learn anything, and in thinking of the Friendship of Christ in the Light of B.-I. Truth we must first understand clearly what friendship means.

To make it as clear and lucid as possible let us call in an old friend of ours noted for his exactness, viz., Euclid, so that by a geometrical symbol we may try to express a psychological truth.

Everyone knows Euclid's definition of a straight line—length without breadth lying evenly between its extreme points.

That is the symbol we will use for the basis and beginning of friendship. The direct line of communion of friend with friend.

How straight it is. When the eyes of two friends meet across a crowded room, that room and all the people in it disappear for a brief moment, and there remains only a straight line along which one soul speaks silently to another.

How intimate and how beautiful is that direct fellowship which, oblivious of the outside world, exists between friend and friend, and which can stretch in faith and love across the world of space which may separate, aye, and across the gulf of death also.

There are many in this world to-day who know the friendship of Christ in this way. Christ is real to them and they know by experience that straight line of communion with Him with which nothing on earth can interfere—a communion which cuts through the things of space and time and joins the heart of God to the heart of man.

Intimate and beautiful, however, as this relationship is, it does not suffice. The perfect friendship must be greater and broader than the simple straight line.

At some time in such a friendship comes the moment when the one friend realises that the other has interests in which he does not share. A straight line has become manifest between the loved one and some external object; a straight line which passes from the friend, not to the other, but to something or someone else, and then comes to the one who realises this disillusionment and disappointment, and the knowledge that after all the friendship is not a perfect one.

This is the point, is it not, where so many friendships fail and yet the remedy is an easy one. It is simply to project a straight line ourselves from us to the object in which our friend is interested. We then have three straight lines—one between us and our friend, one between our friend and the external object of his interest, and one between that object and ourselves. But in doing this we have formed a triangle of three straight lines, a more perfect figure, embracing in our friendship both our friend and his interest and in reality broadening and deepening our straight line of direct communion on which the whole triangle rests.

We have now a greater content in our friendship. When we see our friend's eyes alight with interest in something unconnected with ourselves, we do not feel shut out, but are able to share with him his interest.

Yet even now we have not reached the inmost secret of friendship. There still lies beyond our vision many points of contact between our friend and the outside world, and sometimes it seems hopeless to seek for them. We have not the key to his personality.

And yet we can have it; but to do so, our own importance as the terminus of the straight line must disappear. The straight line must be rolled up and the two points of personality must fuse and become one. It is only then, when we have learnt how to clothe ourselves with our friend's personality, stand in his shoes, see the world through his eyes, that we are in sight of attaining the perfect friendship.

Then our insignificant point becomes the centre of a perfect circle. Our friend's lines of contact with the outside world, which are now ours, are the radii of the circle, and if our friend responds in like manner then we become one in heart, in mind and in vision, and the perfect friendship is attained.

Let us now apply this general conception of friendship to our friendship with Christ, the perfect Friend.

It is not for us to write here of the straight line of direct friendship with Christ. You know it. The Church is always teaching it. On the one hand we have God's direct appeal, "Come unto Me," and on our side it only needs our "Lord, I believe."

Then as regards the triangle, we have Our Lord's own command to complete it, "Simon Peter, lovest thou Me." The direct line—then "Feed My sheep." Having established the straight line of friendship between St. Peter and Himself, He points him to the outside object which must be included in that friendship.

The next step, the fusion of spirit, is also well known, and St. Paul puts it clearly enough in Gal. ii, 20. Here we find ourselves in the centre of the circle—the circle of Christ's friendship, life and interest, but do we understand what this implies?

It implies most certainly that Christ sees things through our eyes, that He understands all our hopes, our fears, our needs, and that we can be sure of His unvarying friendship; but it implies even more than that—and here we come to a most important fact—it implies that henceforth not only is Christ our friend, but that we are His, and it is necessary for us to try to understand His personality by studying His ways of working, His interests and take our part in furthering them.

Is it not a fact that there are many people, and one might almost say—Churches—who regard their friendship with Christ as strictly limited to the straight line? Their personal relation to Him is carefully hidden from the world, and what efforts they make towards forming the triangle of interest and caring for His sheep are made primarily for their own soul's sake and not from disinterested love for Christ or desire to further His work.

We are taking it for granted, however, that we do desire that further step—the fusion of spirit with Christ which will enable us to see ourselves and others and His ways through His eyes, and we will try with you, from the centre of Christ's Personality, to travel along those radii which have been made known to us to the circumference of His perfect designs.

There are, of course, no words by which one can transport another to that centre in Christ. It is a spiritual experience, and the critical mind which stands aloof awaiting logical conviction cannot enter it.

To attain that position we must not accept Christ as friend and leave all the acts of friendship to Him, but to see and feel things as He does we must stand as it were beside Him in sympathy and love, sharing with Him the joys and sorrows of His works and purposes.

With Him we must stand at the completion of His great work of Creation and experience with Him the delight of perfect accomplishment when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy.

We must stand beside Christ in the Garden of Eden as He awaits Adam's answer to His question, "Who told thee that thou wast naked?" Not beside poor shrinking Adam as we are prone to do, but beside that Figure so glorious, so radiant, so sinless and yet so loving, whose grief and agony and broken heart were irrevocably determined by the answer, "I did eat."

With Him we must stand throughout the weary centuries, marking how He lays His plans for the redemption of a world which slowly and surely turns away from the outstretched arms. We must observe how in the wickedness of mankind He is working out His plan through one man, Abraham. How even then miracle has to be brought in in the birth of Isaac; how in Isaac the whole chosen race which is to be God's instrument in His purpose is dedicated on the altar and redeemed by blood.

Then we must follow Him as wisely, tenderly, He trains Israel for His great work, stamping upon her a character which shall endure for ever and which shall be fit to accept, at the time appointed, the ideal of Christ as Saviour and King.

None who read Old Testament Scripture in this light, noting the covenants, the promises, the destiny and the work in the world which God gave to Israel, can dream that it was a failure. We shall exclaim emphatically with St. Paul, "Hath God cast away His people? God forbid."

We shall be bound to admit that Judah did so cast herself away, but we shall remember Our Lord's own words to the Jews, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," and in view of Our Lord's own words, "I am not sent save unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel," and by all the promises, we shall identify that kingdom with Israel, the sister of Judah.

A DIVINELY GUARDED NATION.

(PSALM CXXI.)

BY DANIEL FARMER.

OUR lot is cast in a time when great world movements are coming to a head. Each dispensation as it closes exhibits somewhat similar features. Our Lord left us a warning as this age draws to a close, and a note of good cheer—for although there is much to alarm as the forces of evil gather for the last great struggle, nevertheless He tells us to "look up, and lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh." (Matt. xxiv.) These "wild beasts" of Dan. vii will soon be displaced by the "Son of Man." Also, just as winter makes a last desperate struggle to hold its own in early spring—so the united attempt of these evil agencies to retain their hold are but a sign that "summer is nigh," for whilst the weeds are growing the trees are "shooting forth" also. (Luke xxi, 29.)

The fight between God and the Devil, good and evil, has, in our reckoning, been a long one. Many a brave warrior has gone down before the foe, often the enemy has seemed to triumph, and the cry gone up "How long, O Lord?" But although the Devil is often allowed to win a battle, God always wins the campaign, and when we turn to the Book of the Revelation, the "Book of the Throne"—and of final victory, we find the old proverb has proved true, viz., that "when things are in their right places the best is uppermost." So here—God the Father is supreme—His dear Son is "Lord of all." His people are singing, whilst "the wicked shall be silent in darkness." (1 Sam. ii, 9.)

Now we know that all God's people as individuals are safe—as the poet sang:

> "When trouble like a gloomy cloud
> Has gathered thick, and thundered loud,
> He near the Church has always stood,
> His loving-kindness, O how good."

But the Church is only one part of that which is under special Divine protection.

No careful reader of Holy Scripture, and of History, can fail to see that amongst the nations there has been one which, in a very special sense, has been under the Divine care and protection:—

A nation called Israel. Its origin took the form of miracle. (Heb. xi, 12.) Let out of Egypt amidst the miraculous, sustained in the wilderness for forty years by direct Divine and supernatural means.

Introduced into its new home by miracle and often repeated "signs and wonders," the history of this race has been "the history of miracle and the miracle of history." In its early stages Pharaoh tried to drown it, and the Lord drowned him. (Ex. xiv.) Centuries later an Amalekite tried to hang one of its principal representatives, and the Lord hung him. (Esther vii, 10), whilst the proud King of Babylon found that they were fireproof, and his own men inflammable. (Dan. iii.) In the later history of one section of this race, viz., the Jews, kings and rulers have found that it spells disaster to seek their hurt. Punch once cartooned a Russian Czar considering a pogrom of the Jews in his dominions. The shade of Pharaoh in the background warned him that the same had cost him dear more than 3,000 years before.

The second section of this same race which we recognize as the British—or Anglo-Saxon people—brought into these islands, as foretold in 2 Sam. vii, 10, has also been Divinely guarded in a most remarkable manner. Since the coming of the Normans—the last to arrive—and part of this House of Israel, to be found under "another name" (Isaiah lxv, 15), no foreigner has landed on our shores except as a visitor or prisoner. There have been seventy-five attempted invasions since the Romans quitted our shores in A.D. 409. All failed, as was guaranteed in 2 Sam. vii, 10.

To mention but a few: in 1645, Francis of France collected a fleet of 150 ships of war and 25 galleys, convoying 60 transports. Continental storms delayed their sailing during May and June. In July the Armada crossed to the Isle of Wight, but dared not land before destroying the English fleet of some 60 vessels. Then the wind dropped to a persistent calm, the hot weather producing a plague which destroyed thousands, and compelled the return of the rest.

In 1588, Philip of Spain, incited by England's deadliest foe, the Papacy, built the famous "Invincible!" Armada. (1 Kings xx, 11.) The ships of the largest and most powerful type proved too unwieldy for the English Channel. The choicest of Spain's manhood was on board as soldiers and sailors; 300 of Rome's holy priests, not with Bibles, but with dread instruments of torture, came to bring England back, not to the Holy Catholic, but the Roman Catholic Faith. But a second time "God blew with His wind" (Ex. xv, 10)—and modern Israel was saved.

Some 200 years later saw the great Napoleon planning the invasion of England. Armed waggons stood outside the Bank of England ready to remove the treasure inland to Worcester. Waggons were also ready to remove those in the coast towns. At Edinburgh the sentry stood ready to light the beacon fire. "Do you not think we can effect a landing?" he was asked. "Yes," replied the great man. "I think we can get in, but I question if we shall ever get out again." And he, wisely, did not attempt the same. Once more the God of Israel intervened, and Nelson, calling upon "every man to do his duty," was used to destroy the joint French and Spanish fleets in 1805—concerning which Fouche said, "It completed the safety of England."

What a wonderful story is told of God's providence in the coming of William of Orange in 1688. The characteristic Romish duplicity of James II so disgusted and angered the English nation that they offered the Crown to William of Orange. He sailed from Helveotsluyson on October 19th. The fleet of James waited for him in the Downs. A violent storm drove him back to Holland without the loss of a single ship. On November 1st William started again. This time the East wind which blew him past Torbay, where he desired to land, also prevented the English fleet in the Thames, under Dartmouth, from following him. On November 5th William had gone too far past Torbay to return against the wind, and if he had gone on to Plymouth, the troops of King James were waiting for him. During this period crowds stood in Cheapside praying for "a Protestant wind." Suddenly the wind changed to the south, and the Dutch fleet was soon safe in Torbay. Hardly had they landed, when a fierce gale from the West blew back Dartmouth's fleet which was in pursuit. Bishop Lightfoot said, "The study of Church History is one of the best cordials for depressed minds." Not less so is that of our National History—for it will prove a strong support and encouragement in the stress and strain of the scenes which close this age. So that the Nation, as well as the Church, may confidently sing:—

"His love in times past forbids us to think
In the trouble that's last He'll leave us to sink;
Each wondrous deliverance we have in review
Confirms His good pleasure to bring us safe through."

The forces of good and evil are approaching the final struggle which closes the period of time in which our lot is cast. Nations, and not only individuals, will be compelled to take sides—this Psalm ii plainly sets forth. Is Britain safe? If she is Israel—yes—that is, she will not be nationally destroyed, as the great Empires of the past. (See Dan. ii, 44.) But no thoughtful man can fail to see that, just because we are the greater part of that Chosen Race, we are in for stern correction as a people. (Amos iii, 2.) Consider the carelessness to-day in regard to the claims of God, and He who calls us His people has said "I will send a fire . . . among them that dwell carelessly in the isles." (Ezek. xxxix, 6.) If our people would give heed to these great facts, and consider the events that are transpiring—and in a spirit of national repentance and supplication call upon God—who shall say that, just as in the case of Nineveh, the threatening storm might not be diverted from us, or, at least, mitigated?

For "Thus saith the Lord, I will yet for this be enquired of by the House of Israel." (Ezek. xxxvi, 37.)

OUR LORD'S PARABLE OF A DIVIDED KINGDOM OR A DIVIDED HOUSE.

By JOHN H. TENCH.

"He called them unto Him, and said unto them in parables, How can Satan cast out Satan? And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand. And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand" (Mark iii, 23, 24, 25).

I.—A WICKED CHARGE AGAINST JESUS.

What gave rise to this charge? The healing of one possessed with a devil, blind and dumb. This miracle though described so briefly was a striking one; in truth, three miracles in one. The demon in possession of this unfortunate man had carried his wretchedness to an extreme, at least on the physical side. Dr. Lyman Abbott says: "The great majority of evangelical scholars agree in the opinion that the individuals described as possessed by evil spirits were really under their control, and that the cures described consisted in fact as well as in appearance in the casting out of the evil spirit. Scripture represents that there is a world of disembodied spirits, both good and bad; that they are not wholly separated from man, but exert a powerful influence upon him; that their influence is not a thing of the past, but that the Christian has still need to watch and pray against it." Many, even of Christians, are troubled with dumb devils without realising it. Our speech is a God-like faculty, given us to be used for God, in prayer to Him—private prayer, family prayer, public prayer—in telling others about His goodness, in kindly praise of what is worthy and in bold condemnation of all that is evil. How often we are silent when such opportunities for speech arise! It is because we have a dumb devil.

(a) What was the result of the miracle? As always in such cases it was a savour of death to death and of life to life. On the one hand, all the people, the common folks who saw it done, were amazed, as well they might be, and said, is not this the son of David? Is this the long-expected Messiah? Who else could do such a wonder? But, on the other hand, the Pharisees had an unfavourable interpretation. In their hatred of Christ they had come all the way from Jerusalem to get material for some charge against Him. "He hath Beelzebub," they asserted shamelessly. Beelzebub, in Jewish popular thinking, was the ruler of the demons. Thus possessed, the Pharisees urged, Jesus was casting out demons in order that, under this cloak of seeming goodness, He might give currency for evil teaching.

(b) Why did the Pharisees make this abominable charge? They were jealous of Christ, and envious of His power over human hearts. Envy is one of the most deadly sins, and perhaps least feared of all. St. Chrysostom says: "Whence did Cain become such as he was? Whence Esau? Whence the children of Laban? Whence the sons of Jacob? Whence Korah, Dathan and Abiram, with their company? Whence Miriam? Whence Aaron? Whence the devil himself? The envious man punishes himself, and takes vengeance upon himself more than on the person he envies." Dr. Horton says: "It is a misfortune for any man not to believe in God. It is also a misfortune not to believe in that mysterious evil genius which is called in the Scripture Satanas, or the Adversary. But to take God for the devil, that is more than a misfortune; it is in effect to take the devil for God."

II.—CHRIST'S CRUSHING REPLY.

The way in which Jesus deals with these Pharisees is among one of the most wonderful features of the Gospel. It sheds light upon many things, but it sheds a peculiar light upon Him and upon the Spirit that was in Him. Jesus knew their thoughts. In answering objections to Christianity it is most necessary to recognize the spirit in which the objections are raised and answer that rather than the mere words. Here the thoughts were of malice, envy and hatred. Jesus called them back to Him after they had gone away. It is always easy to refute opponents behind their backs. Our Lord took the more manly course; He convicted and rebuked them to their faces. Jesus began, not with invective as He had good reasons for doing, but with quiet argument. He appealed first to their better side, and to the sense of fairness in all that listened.

(a) What was Christ's first argument?

The argument of the divided kingdom, or the divided house. Every kingdom said Christ divided against itself in civil war is brought to desolation, and every city or house divided against itself, by quarrelling factions and family strife, shall not stand. The Church of England at the present day should take warning by Our Lord's words. "Backsliding Israel," as represented by the majority of our Bishops who are longing to get back to the dark ages and to introduce once more idolatry in this land from which we were delivered at the Reformation, and are thus causing strife in every direction—a house divided shall not stand. Christ does not deny that these sad things happen, but only states their necessary result. "How impossible it is," Christ went on to say, "that Satan, a single person, should be divided against himself!" The very thought is an absurdity; and if it were possible, Satan, seeing the evil results of division in kingdoms, churches, cities and families, would be far too astute to commit the error.

(b) What was Christ's second argument?

If I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children (the Jewish exorcists) cast them out? Those men at least pretended to cast out demons, and the Pharisees had never charged them with being in league with Satan; therefore the malice of their charge against Himself was evident. But Our Lord does not stop with this negative conclusion. His mode of casting out devils was by the Spirit of God, and quite different from the method employed by the Jewish exorcists. It proved itself Divine in changed lives, purified hearts, as well as in transformed bodies and clarified intellects. The Kingdom of God, and not the kingdom of Satan, showed itself by the result in all of Christ's miracles.

(c) What was Christ's third argument?

The argument of the castle, or palace. Edward Payson says: "The human soul may be justly compared to a palace, for it is a most beautiful, noble and magnificent edifice, an edifice formed of imperishable materials, a house not made with hands, the masterpiece of the all-wise and all-powerful Architect, Who formed and adorned it for His own use." Satan has taken possession of this house, and holds it by strength and arms. Most evidently in the case of a demoniac, Satan had taken possession of the house. "Now how," Christ asks, "could I enter the castle unless I were stronger than Satan?" And how could I regain the spoil that Satan hath stolen, the rich spoil of health, and character and happiness, without proving Myself the enemy of Satan?

(d) What was Christ's fourth argument?

The argument of the two sides: He that is not with Me is against Me. Our Lord gave the opposite statement of the same truth when, in the case of the man who was not one of His recognized followers but yet was casting out devils in His Name, He said: "He that is not against us is for us." That is, in the great struggle between light and darkness, good and evil, God and the enemy of God, there is no neutrality. The saying applies to Satan and Christ, for Satan could not by any stretch of the imagination be considered to be on the side of one who, like Christ, went about doing good; therefore he must be against Christ. When one man scatters what another gathers, their aims and interest are utterly diverse. Satan is the arch-waster, Christ the Collector, Saviour. This saying applies also, in a wider sense, to all men. For Christ, or

III.—AN AWFUL WARNING.

" I say unto you, every sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Spirit shall not be forgiven, and whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever shall speak against the Holy Spirit it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world nor in that which is to come."

(a) Why did the occasion call for an awful warning? Remember what a black-hearted, hateful sin the Pharisees were guilty of. Try to picture that gentle, beneficent, holy Jesus. Realize the cruel blow such a thought was to the man just healed. But they cruelly, malignantly, eagerly cry, " By Beelzebub He casteth out devils." It was in the face of such light, such considerate helpful words of Christ, that they did it.

(b) What was Christ's warning for such men? That there is an unpardonable sin; blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Our Lord takes pains to show that this is no personal matter; it does not refer to mistaken views regarding Himself leading to hostility toward Him such as Paul's, for instance. Misguided sceptics might speak against Jesus and still the door of forgiveness might be open for them if they repented.

(c) What, then, is this blasphemy against the Spirit? Dr. W. R. Nicoll says: " It is no sudden, angry blasphemy. Whoever fears that he has committed it and prays for pardon is worlds away from it." D. L. Moody says: " The very fact that a man is troubled about his sins shows that the Spirit of God has not left him." Henry Ward Beecher says: " If the faculty or organ by which a man discerns good and evil has become so perverted that it fails in its proper use, that man's constitution is so corrupted that his moral judgment may be said to be gone. If under circumstances which bring upon a man's soul the full power of the Holy Spirit, cleansing the understanding and giving life to the conscience, he resolutely and deliberately reviles God's truth and goodness, that is a fatal symptom." Dr. Chalmers says: " Such men will never obtain forgiveness—not because forgiveness is ever refused to those who repent and believe the Gospel, but because they have made their faith and their repentance impracticable."

(d) Why should British-Israelites take comfort when they are reviled? Because Jesus said: " The disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master, and the servant as his Lord. If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of His household?" I give a few of the revilings of two clergymen of the Anglican Church as quoted from Dr. Mountain's book, " British-Israel Truth Defended": " Side-tracked by the devil," " Not one substantial fact," " So flimsy a foundation," " Appalling misrepresentation," " Old wives' fables," " Degrading prophecy." Just as the Pharisees of old accused Our Lord of blasphemy and doing His work through Beelzebub, so these two Anglican ministers revile such good men as the Rt. Hon. Earl Roberts, Admiral the Rt. Hon. Lord Fisher, Bishop Alexander, D.D., Bishop Gobat, D.D., Bishop Titcomb, D.D., Bishop Thornton, D.D., the Rt. Rev. the Bishop of the Falkland Islands, the Rt. Hon. W. F. Massey, P.C., Mr. Reader Harris, K.C., The Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, D.D., and a host of others.

IV.—CHRIST'S SUFFICIENCY SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

The Scribes and Pharisees, so far from being silenced by Christ's crushing rejoinder and rebuke, proceeded at once to attack Him in another way. They answered Christ's declaration that He was of God, and they in their wicked opposition from the devil, by demanding a sign that is some miracle that would confirm these tremendous claims. This was a wicked demand because Christ had given them signs in great plenty. He had just given them a sign in the cure of the demoniac. Like all the unbelievers of to-day, they had abundance of proof of Christ's Divinity, and would not have believed though the proofs were multiplied sevenfold. What they needed was not evidence for the mind but conviction of the will. So Christ called them an evil and adulterous generation because the relation between God and His people Israel is represented in many parts of the Old Testament as being close and beautiful as that between a husband and wife, and these leaders of the Jews were false to that relation. Like wedlock, the relation called for unity of thought and purpose between them; but God is love, and the Scribes and Pharisees were animated by hate.

Jesus once said in another of His beautiful parables: " If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." So He gave them three signs from the Old Testament which ought to have been a sufficiency.

(a) Christ offered the sign of the prophet Jonah. As Jonah was three days and three nights in the body of the sea monster, so Christ would be three days and three nights in the grave and then would rise from the dead. It was the greatest miracle possible—greater than to raise others from the grave. It was the crowning evidence that Our Lord was the Divine fountain of life. Professor G. P. Fisher, of Yale, says: " To the transcendant importance of the fact of the resurrection of Jesus the Apostles were fully alive. They staked upon it their veracity. The Lord's resurrection was involved in all their hopes of salvation from sin and of future blessedness. They went out to proclaim 'Jesus and the resurrection.'"

(b) The Pharisees were further rebuked and condemned by the men of Nineveh; for the Ninevites repented at the preaching of Jonah, though the prophet worked no miracle, and here was Christ, so much greater than Jonah in His preaching, loving all men and seeking their salvation, whereas Jonah was disappointed when God did not destroy Nineveh, and yet the Pharisees insist on a miracle before they will repent!

(c) Another example Jesus gave them of one who should rise in judgment against the men of that generation. The noble-minded Queen of the South, who travelled all the long way from Sheba, in Southern Arabia near Aden, came to hear Solomon. Christ was far wiser than Solomon, and here were the Scribes and Pharisees who had travelled from Jerusalem to Galilee—for what? That they might catch Him in His words and find some charge to bring against Him for His condemnation.

(d) The sign, or threefold miracle on the demoniac, with which the discussion had started suggested another condemnation of the Pharisees. The cured man would need to be on his guard, or the demon would return. If he did not fill his cleansed life with holy thought and good works the devil would again seize upon his mind and would bring with him seven others, all more wicked than the first. Dean Alford says: "There was a time when the one unclean spirit of idolatry went out of the Jewish nation which had become empty, swept and garnished—swept and garnished by the decencies of civilisation and discoveries of secular knowledge, but empty of living and earnest faith."

"Except the Saviour dwell and reign
Within the sinner's mind,
Satan, when he returns again,
Will easy entrance find."—JOHN NEWTON.

V.—THE TERRIBLE FOLLY OF REJECTING CHRIST.

(a) How men reject Christ. They do not reject Him immediately and consciously. They draw away from Him by degrees and without realizing what is happening in their lives. Like the Pharisees, they gradually form the habit of pride and selfishness. Like Judas, they come insensibly to love money more than God and right. Like Pilate, they grow away from the love of truth and become devotees of popularity and power. Like Herod, they lose their purity and manliness day by day, and sink inch by inch into the pit of sensuality. Like the demoniac of Christ's parable, they simply fail to fill their lives full of what is noble and pure, and all the demons of vileness rush to occupy the empty tenement of their minds.

(b) Why men reject Christ. Christ's way is narrow and straight, and the ways of sin are broad and alluringly curved, pleasantly shaded and bordered with flowers. We do not at first see the serpents coiled in the flowers, or the deadly marshes hidden by the trees. It is very easy to be selfish. Men cloak it under fine names, such as prudence, and enterprise, and success. Men almost worship the wealthy and powerful, the beauty of face, or genius of mind, without stopping to think how the wealth was gained, how the power is used, whether the lovely face indicates a lovely soul, whether the genius is consecrated to helpful service. Whenever men reject Christ it is because they have chosen lower ideals than those upon which He insists.

(c) The Fearful and Eternal Results of Rejecting Christ.—To reject Him is to reject all that is holy and happy in the universe. It is to reject all our hope and promise and true prosperity. As we continue to repel Him the dreadful deed becomes a habit. After a while we cease to hear His gentle knocking at the door of our hearts. He never ceases to knock, but we may cease to be able to open the door. When that time comes to a man, he has committed the unpardonable sin. Therefore the solemn warning of this parable to all that study it is this: Hear Christ, while He calls to-day. Hear Him, receive Him gladly into your lives, and take Him for your Saviour, your Master and your Guide for ever!

OBITUARY.

THE LATE MRS. MODIN, PRESIDENT OF THE KINGSTON BRANCH.

ONE by one the generation of pioneer believers who so fearlessly and faithfully espoused the British-Israel Cause in the early days of its rediscovery are passing hence to their eternal reward.

Of this generation was the late Founder and President of the Kingston Branch, Mrs. Gertrude Modin, whose recent home-call at the age of seventy-one, after long weeks of severe illness and patient suffering, has deprived the B.-I. work in Kingston of its leader, and the B.-I. Cause in general of a lifelong and devoted advocate.

From earliest childhood, taught of a godly and widowed mother—herself steeped in Israel Truth—Mrs. Modin never wavered in her convictions nor ceased to proclaim them up to the day of her death—for her a happy release in perfect peace. In public and in private life, every opportunity for witnessing to God's Truth, and for upholding the sanctity of the Sabbath, was treated as a sacred trust, which must some day be accounted for, and was used accordingly. "Her children arise up and call her blessed, her husband also, and he praiseth her."

Apart from her public work in connection with the Kingston Branch, Mrs. Modin was also instrumental in the founding of two other Branches—now amongst the most virile in the Federation—and also, indirectly, of several others. In private life her clear exposition of and wide acquaintance with the Scriptures were alike a source of inspiration and enlightenment to all with whom she came in contact, and to many of whom she was admittedly a "mother in Israel."

One in closest touch with her five years of unremitting toil in Kingston and district has written: "Her loss to the meetings there will be irreparable. I was always filled with admiration at her positive genius for making the most of opportunities, for speaking to enquirers, or of making opportunities where none presented themselves."

Her long illness has cast a shadow over the whole Session's work in Kingston, and the prayers of all who knew her will be welcomed that the work she so ably commenced there may be carried on for the greater glory of God in the future. It is hoped to equip an adequate lending library for the district as a tribute to her memory, and in gratitude for her service.

REVIEW.

THE MIRROR OF TRUTH.*

By D. DAVIDSON.

TWENTY-FIVE centuries before science discovered the fact, Transcendental Philosophy enunciated that the Eternal Truth in the Design of Creation was mirrored in the minutest unit of physical being. Science now knows that the smallest unit of matter is a model of the physical universe. Yet the materialistic tenets of science and the transcendental concepts of philosophy remain irreconcilable. Why? Because physical being is the mirror of Eternal Truth, and yet is not a perfect mirror. An imperfect mirror refracts and distorts the image it presents. Thus does Nature distort the image of Eternal Truth, and materialistic science accepts the image as truth. This "set attitude," to borrow the words of Professor Elliot Smith, is "almost indistinguishable from a delusion." "Faith," says St. Paul, "is the evidence of things not seen," and "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." Professor Elliot Smith shows us that science reflects the "religious conversion" in its own material experiences; that, indeed, the scientific experience is the mirror of the spiritual experience.

The Great Pyramid was designed and constructed to present modern science as the mirror in which the image of spiritual reality may be seen by him who would see. The Pyramid's Revelation therefore portrays to us the imperfections and refractions in Nature's mirror, so that we understand why the image of Eternal Truth mirrored in Nature is an imperfect image, and that by understanding this we can come to a clearer vision of the Truth. The image presented, however, is an image that only the man of science can see clearly, since the medium of vision is science. To enable the student who is unacquainted with science to adjust his normal vision of things spiritual or things mundane to the perspective of the Pyramid's Revelation, something like a guiding medium of vision requires to be interposed. He requires, as it were, something analogous to correcting lenses, or rather assisting lenses, to help him to focus upon essentials. Only one acquainted with the facts and essentials of science can perform this useful service for those needing it. "The Witness of the Great Pyramid" by Basil Stewart renders valuable and popular service in this respect.

The work is completely revised and rearranged; much new matter has been added; and altogether I find the new book to be the best thing its author has produced to date. It is a very excellent popular book on the Great Pyramid, written by a literary man who by professional training and study has the technical qualifications necessary to make the subject not only simple to the general reader but also manifestly truthful to the unbiassed technical critic. That, in my opinion, it is not entirely free from certain elements of prejudice may make the work all the more piquant to the general reader. I wish the work every success, and may it prove the path of enlightenment and understanding to many.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

By the Rev. G. H. LANCASTER, M.A.

QUESTION.—Will you kindly explain to me the meaning to be attached to the Beasts of Rev. iv? At a recent meeting various suppositions were given during the open discussion, as to whether the animal and vegetable kingdoms were represented, or whether the four elements could possibly be meant? Commentaries are not very helpful over Revelation. Are these the same creatures which are mentioned in Ezekiel?

M. S. (Sussex).

ANSWER.—While no one Commentary alone on the Revelation of St. John the Divine may be considered satisfactory, yet perhaps much rich thought may be obtained from a careful study of several Commentaries. But the very nature of this wonderful Revelation precludes the actual possibility of any one writer, thinker, theologian or Bible student from gaining a clear understanding of what this book has to teach. The best Commentary on the Bible is the Bible itself, while there are obviously certain parts of the Bible which appeal to other certain parts, the one portion elucidating another portion with which it may have a correlated connection. Thus the Prophecies of Ezekiel and Daniel will help to explain the Revelation, while there is also a connection with 2 Thessalonians ii.

Revelation iv and v are two of the most wonderful chapters in the Bible, inasmuch as they give what may be termed a vivid and graphic picture of "Heaven." The visions contained are lucid and vigorous, while the word-painting of St. John is so brilliant that the colouring depicted presents to the eye a series of sights, sounds and scenes, which concomitantly and consecutively serve to construct before the prayerful eye of the Bible student a vision of Heaven's Glory, of the Lamb's Adoration, and of the orchestral and choral music and melody proceeding from the animated gathering around the Throne.

Space prevents a detailed examination and analysis of this most glorious vision, but a continuous study of these two chapters alone will reveal untold treasures. In fact the whole book of the Revelation is magnificently worthy of deepest research. It is the only book in the New Testament which entertains a blessing for those who study it. (Rev. i, 3.) The best and surest plan is to read the Apocalypse through and through again and again from beginning to end, bearing in mind the subtle differences and distinctions between the "Futurist" and the "Continuous-historical" interpretations, believing, as many of us believe, that the latter are the more correct.

"The four and twenty elders" represent the twelve Patriarchs of the Old Covenant coupled with the twelve Apostles of the New, and thus together the twenty-four represent the redeemed Church of God in Christ. They are clothed in white, because they are redeemed and cleansed by the Blood of Christ. They are "sitting" because Christ has "finished" His atoning work, and they have on their heads "crowns of gold" because they have passed through the cross to the crown, through Calvary to Pentecost, through earth's tribulation to Heaven's reward.

The number "four" is the terrestrial aspect of human things in relation to the Divine, or the number of "creation." Thus there are the four cardinal points of the compass; the four winds of heaven; the four quarters of a city; the four-square altar in the Tabernacle and the Temple; the "four-square city," i.e., the "holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God." (Rev. xxi, 10, 16.) So there are the Four Gospels, which give us the human interpretation of the Divine Son of God; and similarly numerous other analogies in the Bible exhibit the number "four" of greatest spiritual importance. "Four" in the Bible is always "3 + 1," and never "2 + 2," nor "1 + 3." Thus the first Three Gospels are called "Synoptists" since they stand together, while St. John's Gospel differs from them, and stands alone. Similarly here the first three "beasts" belong to the animal kingdom, and walk on the earth, whereas the fourth beast differs considerably, and is a bird, and flies upwards towards the heavens.

Hence these "four beasts" represent creation's testimony to the threefold "Holiness" of the Blessed Trinity in general, and of the "Lamb as it had been slain" in particular.

Thus the "four and twenty elders" signify the Revelation of God through His Word, and the "four beasts" the Revelation of God through His Works, since there must be perfect harmony in all that God does, inasmuch as He cannot be the author of confusion. (1 Cor. xiv, 33.)

These four beasts to my mind always seem to correspond with the symbolic imagery of the Four Gospels. St. Matthew represents Christ as King, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Lion being the king of animals. St. Mark pictures Christ as the servant of man (hence this Gospel does not give the genealogy of Christ, since it is not necessary to know the ancestry or genealogy of a servant), while the ox, the bull, the calf, etc., in the East are the symbols of service and employment. St. Luke reveals Christ as the perfect Human Being, and his Gospel gives us the Humanity of Christ; observe the human touch throughout, and Our Lord's dealing with the crowds, with the women, and with individuals generally. Hence this third "beast" is the man. St. John unveils the Divinity of Christ, and thus needs no human ancestry or genealogy. So the eagle soars to the highest heavens, the Glory Land of the Father's Home.

Again, there is a difference between the seraphim (Isaiah vi; Rev. iv) with six wings, and the cherubim (Ezek. i) with four wings. The seraphim are a type of God's loving mercies, while the cherubim are a type of God's just and holy judgment; hence as six is to four, so God's loving mercies are to His judgment. He is more anxious to forgive than to punish, to be merciful than to judge. In this connection it may be observed that the rainbow represents the sevenfold spirit of God, which "in sight like unto an emerald" is concentrated in mercy, for green, the colour of the emerald, is a symbol of the earth in verdure clad, which receives its showers of blessings, poured from above.

OUR LONDON OPEN-AIR CAMPAIGN.

THIS campaign was opened in Finsbury Park on Sunday, June 3rd, under the most favourable conditions. Quite a number of B.-I. believers rallied to the support of our Commissioner, the Rev. Joseph Gay, and his colleagues. Mr. Pilcher took the platform, and very successfully met the opposition which opened fire upon him almost at once. He was followed by Mr. Gay, who for nearly an hour held the large crowd at attention. Some very pretty thrust and parry work between the speaker and some Jews who were present increased rather than otherwise the interest of the people. The best of feeling prevailed throughout. Mr. Tester and Mr. McKelvey followed with addresses. It was announced that Mr. Gay would be in the Park again on Tuesday evening, and our Jew friends promised to be there. All were satisfied with the start of the outdoor work and feel that an impression was made upon many listeners.

At the meeting on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, Mr. Tester opened with a short statement on what the B.-I.-W.F. stood for. The Rev. Joseph Gay then spoke and was listened to attentively, the hour's address being unbroken by any interjections. After, many asked questions with enthusiastic eagerness. All were again delighted with the result. The support by their presence of all who can get to these open-air meetings is asked. The next of these gatherings is arranged for Brockwell Park on Sunday, the 17th, and Tuesday, 19th, and Highbury Corner for Sunday, 24th, and Tuesday, 26th. Sunday at 3.30 and 7.30, Tuesday at 7.30.

ENGAGEMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

BATTERSEA, 195, Lavender Hill, Tuesday, 19th, at 8. Mr. W. J. Pilcher.

BROCKWELL PARK, Open-Air Meeting, Sunday, 17th, at 3.30 and 7.30. Tuesday, 19th, at 7.30.

CARDIFF, Central Y.M.C.A., Tuesday, 19th, at 7.30.

HULL, Church Institute, Albion Street, Tuesday, 19th, at 7.30.

MANCHESTER, Fernley Hall, Deansgate, Monday and Tuesday 18th, and 19th, at 7.45. Mr. J. J. Morey.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

WE are pleased to be able to announce that the Rev. R. G. F. Waddington, M.A., our Commissioner for the North, who has recently returned from a tour in the Near East, will, on Wednesday afternoon next, June 20th, at 3 o'clock, give an address at Headquarters, 6, Buckingham Gate, S.W.1, on "Some Impressions of Palestine." We expect a full audience to hear him. Last week we had the pleasure of hearing addresses by the Rev. J. Lumley Davies and Mr. J. J. Morey.

The Anniversary of the Opening of our Headquarters will be celebrated (D.V.) on Monday, June 25th, at 2.45 p.m. The President, Major J. Knowles, O.B.E., will preside, and speakers will include the Rev. Commander Roberts, R.N., the Rev. Canon Savage, the Revs. P. Husband Davies, Sparshott Johnson (recently returned from Ceylon), W. H. Stuart-Fox, M.A., Joseph Gay, T. H. Whitehouse, Mr. John Leech, K.C., and Mr. Herbert Garrison. Tea at 4.40, 1/-.

We regret to have to record the passing away of Mrs. Periam Hawkins, one of our writers, and the author of the British-Israel A.B.C. She was a loyal and devoted supporter of our Cause. We tender to her daughter and members of her family our sincere sympathy.

The Rev. Pascoe Goard has had a strenuous time in Canada, lecturing and preaching in various centres, where ministers and professors have become profoundly impressed with the truth and importance of B.-I. teaching. From one of the most magnificent buildings in Toronto Mr. Goard broadcasted an address which reached a countless number through the Provinces of Canada and the States of the American Union.

The Bishop of the Falkland Islands writes us from Government House, Stanley, Falkland Islands, the wonderful news that a B.-I. lecture delivered in London was heard there on a loudspeaker. What would our grandfathers have said had such a thing as this been prophesied say 40 years ago? The good Bishop also reports that he gave a B.-I. lecture in the Town Hall, Stanley, one of the Gates of our World-Wide Empire.

* * *

Our new Book Room in the East End of London was opened on May 26th by Mrs. Knowles, President of the Women's Auxiliary. It is at 129, Leytonstone Road, Stratford. Major Knowles presided over and addressed a meeting held in St. Paul's Parish Hall, when the Rev. Joseph Gay and Messrs. McKelvey and Nock also spoke. Apology was made for the absence of the Secretary-General who had another engagement, and a vote of thanks was accorded to him for his appeal for the funds which had made it possible to establish the Book Room. A bouquet was presented to Mrs. Knowles by Miss Phillimore. The band of voluntary workers feel much encouraged by results already obtained, one of which is that an atheist speaker in the parks has become so greatly impressed by talks he has had with our workers and the literature given him that he wishes to try and undo some of the wrong he has done, and hopes he may one day be an open-air speaker for B.-I.

We would remind our readers of our Tea Room at H.Q., where tea is available each weekday except Saturday, from 4 to 5.30. Many have patronised it and enjoyed social intercourse and introductions. The Room is open all day as a Rest and Reading Room.

One of the leading public men of Devonshire, a Justice of the Peace and chairman of many important bodies—religious and philanthropic—has, with his wife, been staying at our Hostel at Glastonbury. He writes :—"You have a nice house here which ought to be well patronised. We shall tell our friends about it. We have been very comfortable. What a gloriously interesting place Glastonbury is. We have long wanted to explore it. The country all round looks beautiful. We wish you were here with us."

The Executive Committee met on June 7th, and during a two and a half hours' sitting got through a large amount of important business. A very encouraging report of work and progress was made.

* * *

Among many visitors from various parts of the world we have been glad to welcome Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Prichard from the Argentine. Mr. Prichard joined the Federation as a Life Member.

The Enduring Empire of the Brit-ish

BY

REV. P. H. PRITCHETT.

An account of the remarkable unconscious testimony of several Historians never before used in British-Israel evidence, which is shown to exactly fit in with the picture Scripture draws of the Scattered, Outcast, Wandering, Lost Ten-Tribed Israel led to the British Isles, and destined ultimately to become a blessing to the whole world.

A remarkable book, which strengthens every link in the British-Israel Chain. A work showing very deep research and productive of a fund of new corroborative evidence from outside sources.

GOOD ADVICE

To a friend in distress you would tender sympathy and helpful advice. You have many friends unwittingly ignorant of the greatest truth affecting our State to-day. Give them that word of helpful advice. Introduce them to "The National Message." Tell them the value of its teaching. Let them know the help you get from it week by week. The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

THREADS OF TRUTH.—II.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

The creationist begins with God, as the Bible begins "In the beginning God . . ." Through God the creationist looks for and finds the exalted beginning of man "Created in the image and likeness of God." He then follows on in the pathway open before him. For the Lord came not only to direct the eyes and the faith of men towards God in heaven, but to give men an impulse thitherward, bringing to the genus homo the gift of a second birth into a higher order of life; so that from being the son of the first Adam, who is "of the earth, earthy," he becomes the son of the living God; partaking not only of the image and likeness of God, but being "made partakers of the Divine nature."

Is the creationist at hopeless variance with the evolutionist? As to the basic fact he is. As to the surface facts of life there is some agreement.

Both may, and the creationist always does, postulate God as the original founder of life in the world. Both may see in the early ages of the world successive acts of creative power, each succeeding act producing a higher form of life. The Bible shows this. Geology shows this. The human era is the latest era in the earth. The preceding eras were marked with acts of creation succeeding act of creation; and the quality and endowment of life progressed with the succeeding acts. Whether they were long or short we do not know. The Bible names six of them. Geology seems to bear its witness to the essential rightness of the Bible testimony.

The Bible brings certain things into the last six thousand years. The formation of Adam. The psychological development set forth in the second chapter—the Jehovah-Elohim chapter—of the creation story comes within that period. The Adamic family are then traced historically and prophetically in outline for the succeeding five thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight years; and still on to the end of seven thousand years.

Only one thread of Adamic history is written in this Book, the Bible. The rest of the human population of the earth is left outside.

Within that six thousand years, less seventy-two, there is recorded the formation of Adam. If the Bible is clear in any one thing, it is in that the Lord did not use the physiological functioning of any pre-Adamite stock in the production of Adam. There is the Biblical testimony: "the testimony of the Lord." This fact is basic. One cannot form a chain beyond this creative act to link up with either pre-Adamites or apes. There is no positive data whatever to put in opposition to this statement. There is the negative statement, "We have never seen it after this fashion."

Is this negation sufficient to warrant the teaching of the evolution of the Adamic family as an ascertained fact? It certainly is not. It is a fact that the Word of God, which has never been found to fail, and which has been so largely verified in outline and in countless details, tells us that the creation of Adam has been an act of Divine procedure.

Digitized by Google

There is certainly no logic in postulating original creation of life; and denying subsequent creative acts. We have never seen a man created. We have never seen "creation" of life in any form. We can only arrive at this fact, outside of revelation, by saying, if God did not create life we cannot explain its presence in the earth.

Life is here; and we agree that it is here as the result of an act of Divine creation.

Adamic man is here. He has qualities wanting in all other orders of life on earth. The presence of these qualities is just as difficult to explain outside of Divine creation as is the presence of life. For instance, morals, faith, true religion, spirituality. These are qualities which undoubtedly belong to a higher world than that of the animal creation. How did these things come to be in man? By Divine inbreathing declares the Bible. Experience supports this view. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." This explains all, viz., life, moral character, spiritual power.

The birth of Isaac brought a new mutation into the family of Adamic man. It is a wonderful story. God "cut out" a pair of the Adamic family. He reveals just what He did with these in order to produce the Isaac seed. There is the fact. There is the descent. To those who know, who have collated the data, and measured the history of that one descent in the Adamic family, the distinct qualities of life are made manifest. They are through that miraculous interference by which the great Shepherd of the sheep introduced a new strain into the family of men.

This mutation, this miracle birth of the Saxon race, prepared the way for the next great creative act; namely, the production, through the New Birth, of the sons of God. Jacob our father experienced this at the Brook Jabbok. The family and race of Jacob attained to this at Bethel, where they anointed the pillar anew, which pillar has followed the race to this day, and may be seen in the Coronation Chair at the Abbey.

Jesus came, and by the miracle of His birth, the supreme sacrifice in His death, and the triumphant victory of His resurrection, made the New Birth of the sons of Adam, through Noah, Shem, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob possible, and through them extended the blessing to all the earth.

Have we the basic truths right in our minds and hearts, or are we following appearances only?

In this period of six thousand years we have the creation, formation, redemption and naming of a race and nation. This is also a product of Divine creative activity in the international world. Thus the Holy Book declares. It is a startling thing to realise that among the races there is one race which was miraculously brought into the world in the miracle birth of Isaac. That miracle birth so clearly told in the Old Testament and the New. Every soul which would survive in the Kingdom must be in this race either by birth or adoption. There will be none but the sons of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob either by descent or by adoption in the Kingdom of Heaven after the date of Isaac's birth.

There is a nation among the nations which is also a Divine creation made up of the miracle-born race descended from Isaac. That nation is Israel, now in these last days called Britain, and all the other names by which the descendant nations of Britain are called. Think of this.

A type of human life formed in Adam: a special strain of that family miraculously born in Isaac; the chosen descent of that strain organised into God's covenanted nation; that nation redeemed by the precious blood of Jesus; in that redeemed nation established for ever is the throne of David; among that people is established the ordained worship of God; to that nation is committed the law of the Lord and its administration; in that people the Gospel was worked out; and to that people was given the task of preaching that Gospel to every creature; into the care of that people was entrusted the lands of the covenant; to the shepherding of that nation was committed the heathen; and, finally, to that people shall be the task of reorganizing the earth.

Thus we see at this stage of the predicted development of the Kingdom of God a great nation. But that is a past stage in the process. We have seen emerge and declared to the world a nation and a company of nations and the age-long predicted "great people" into which Jacob declared Manasseh would grow. These things are before our eyes. But the end is not yet.

The call to the nations to get into the Kingdom is going out from many sources. The attention of the Western world is to-day taken up with the League of Nations. We have never spoken against this. It was conceived with the best intention. But the elements in it are too diverse to allow such unity of purpose and endeavour as will make it efficient when the full strain of the times fall on it. For that unity there must be

THE ALMIGHTY—JEHOVAH OF ISRAEL.

There must be the basic unity of His people, racially, and by adoption.

There must be oneness in faith.

There must be the same system of law. Opposing systems must of necessity be fatal in the long run—and that law must be the law of the Lord; or the Common Law.

There must be administration centralized in the God-appointed King.

The opposite of most of these things are in the League of Nations. The basis of these things are in the Celto-Saxon union of nations.

After some more years of striving the nations will come and apply to get into the Anglo-Saxon company of nations on terms of equality and freedom.

So we see the next stage of the proceeding according to the prophecies carried forward on the impetus of the driving force of the Kingdom and its spiritual power.

In that next stage the surviving nations will seek to come in and will be welcomed. No nation will rule over any other nation. No race will rule over any other race. All will be equal before the law; all will be governed by the law. All will be under the administration of the David throne. Let British statesmen take note that soon Britain will be called upon to organize the world under the Common Law of England so called, really of Israel.

"The nations will bring their glory into it."

Britain and America will bring their spiritual perception, and the spirit which has been born and trained for four thousand years under the law and the Gospel. This has been her special preparation for the task of administration. France will bring her vivacity and economy. Germany will bring her patient mastery of detail which has sent her far in research in such fields as have been suggested or opened by the inventive genius of the peoples. The men of Judah will bring their powerful mentality, and it will blaze with new splendour when they have caught the vision of Jesus Christ. And so the nation and company of nations and Great People will become A MULTITUDE OF NATIONS. But all the multitude of nations shall be ONE KINGDOM, " and David My servant shall rule over them all."

Digitized by Google

To that Kingdom Jesus Christ shall come, and He shall administer the Kingdom during His millennial reign.

Then comes the last phase, when He shall yield up the Kingdom to the Father, that God may be all in all.

This will see the end of the seven thousand years of Adamic history.

Then for the new heavens and the new earth ; and perhaps the birth or creation of new races of intelligent beings. And, perhaps, ourselves not only looking on at their struggles upward in the scale of created life, but perhaps we shall be of the " Elohim " of the new world who shall have a hand in the creative activity, and in the developments of such races as may be created. What we imagine the angels to be to us, with good ground of Scripture, we may hope to be to races not as yet created.

How wonderful to be in the Divine plan, and to be living in such a sphere of endless activity.

THE PRESENT CRISIS UP TO DATE.

ADDRESS AT BATH BY THE REV. COMMANDER L. G. A. ROBERTS, R.N.

PERHAPS it would be too much to tell you that the whole of my life has been centred on what I am going to bring before you this afternoon. But my writings will show what I mean. Fixing of dates is often a stumbling-block, but a fixing of events, where prophecy gives you a data to start from and a data to look to, is a very different matter. Shortly, the story I have to tell you is founded upon the 11th chapter of Rev. But it does not stand alone. It has for its accessories other prophecies, which give it its position in the plan and purpose of Almighty God. May I suggest that no prophecy of the Scripture stands alone, but all belong to one continued chain, and there is not a link wanting when once you see the key.

But first let me digress a little so as to lead up to the 11th chapter of Rev. The Temple of God has to do with Israel ; and what is said of this Temple in the Old Testament is taken on in the New. The connection is seen in the 4th and 6th Zech. with the Epistles, Cor., Ephes., Heb., Rev., though the commencement is in Exodus and culminates in Solomon. Moses was faithful in all his House as a servant, but the Lord Jesus, Who is God, was the Builder from the first ; and He is over His own House. It is He alone Who is our High Priest, and no mere earthly man can, or is, to be allowed over it. Though the composition is material, we all as a spiritual House are to become kings and priests unto God : or, as originally constituted, a kingdom of priests and a holy nation, with a Tabernacle as the centre of worship in the Wilderness, and a Temple when the peregrinations of our race are accomplished. Into this constitution, mainly Israelite, the stranger might enter, and after having been initiated and conformed to its ordinances, Sabbaths and covenant, he was to be no more treated as a stranger. The failure of Israel himself to act out the principles of its constitution did not do away with God's plan or purpose. God works in a miraculous way His wonders to perform. So Israel, disobedient, is punished first by separation into two main branches—Judah with Benjamin, who clung to the House of David, together with very many of the House of Levi. These formed the Southern Kingdom or Judah ; all the rest of the tribes under Ephraim being known as Israel or the Northern Kingdom. So the Word of God speaks of them as Israel, Joseph, Ephraim, All-Israel or the whole House of Israel. The others are known as Judah, sometimes the term Israel, and even All-Israel, signifying Benjamin, being added. For the tribe of Benjamin was lent to Judah, that Jerusalem and the House of David might always have a light before God for ever ; according to Deut. xxxiii, 12.

This separation was of God, it was from God, in order to carry out His plan. The name Jew was not applied to Judah until 2 Kings xvi, 6, where evidently it is the work of the scribe Ezra, as the Editor of the Books of Kings after the Babylonian captivity. As for the rest of the tribe of Judah, if they mingled with the Assyrian captivity, as Ezek. xi, 15, 16, they are amongst their brethren of Israel. Now prophecy deals with the Northern House especially as Israel or Ephraim, upon whom all the blessings seem to devolve. Judah has also its prophecies which have mainly been fulfilled.

The punishments eked out were for correction, instruction, discipline and training ; in such a way that the people when they had come to know their God should do exploits. The parables of Our Lord are mainly concerning the Kingdom, and these two sons, Israel and Judah. When Israel went astray Judah yet ruled with God, until Judah also went astray, some time later, to such an extent as to crucify the Lord and Master. These, in the Divine Providence, were but a very few, compared to All-Israel, who had accepted their Redeemer.

We find, in the prophecy of Zechariah, that All-Israel has done this, or as soon as they have heard. Hence the great necessity of preaching the Gospel of Grace to all ; and of Race, in order that Israel may willingly give himself as a co-worker with the Lord Jesus Christ.

After the return from Babylon the prophet Zechariah tells us that the two olive trees are still to continue ; this is in the 4th chapter. In the 6th he carries on the scheme of restoration, the building of the Temple, first by Him whose name is " The Branch," and then by those who wear the crown among the priests of the House of the Lord, who, followers of Jesus, are the kingly priests ; He Himself being the Priest-King. In the Revelation we are kings and priests unto our God. So this Book is the prophetic insight of how this great work is to be established. Israel is not lost sight of throughout, but in Rev. vii is significantly preserved and added to out of every nation under heaven.

Rev. xii gives us an epitome of Israel's struggle from first to last, the 11th chapter continuing the historical development of the Reformation principles, latent in Israel from the first. The measuring of the Temple does not take place till the glorious Reformation; the topic of the 10th chapter has taken effect under Edward VI and Elizabeth. The constitution of the Church is her 39 Articles. But the history of her witnessing evidence goes back to the time when Rome tried to assert her arrogancy and authority over the British Church, which had been working by the Grace of God from A.D. 37 until A.D. 664. Now it should be remembered that the ancient British Church owes nothing to Rome. It was founded from Jerusalem several years before any Christians went to Rome. Even Cardinal Baronius admits this. His date for Joseph of Arimathea coming here to Glastonbury is A.D. 35, whereas he says Rome did not know of Christianity till A.D. 42. Even Cardinal Pole admitted this before Queen Mary. The earliest Christian on record in Britain, leaving out the pioneers, is Pomponia Grecina, converted in A.D. 42. Then we hear of Gladys or Claudia, daughter of Caractacus. Bran, the father of Caractacus, was also a convert. Linus, a son of Caractacus, was the first Bishop of Rome, and the earliest Church in Rome worshipped in the house of Pudens and Claudia. King Lucius, from A.D. 160 to 176, caused the first National Church to exist in Britain, and the Druids having become Christians, the Flamens and Arch-flamens became bishops and archbishops. The British Church was persecuted under Diocletian, but Constantius, being favourably impressed, did not do more than destroy the buildings. A few Christians suffered at St. Albans, etc. Then Constantine's mother was a British Princess, and he, when he assumed the purple, was to that extent converted that he became the champion of Christianity. Quaint old Bishop Fuller tells us of ten churches built in the reign of King Lucius, and shows up the forgery of Eleutherius' so-called letter from King Lucius. In A.D. 314, at the Council of Arles, instituted by Constantine, Sylvester, Bishop of Rome, held only ten of the delegate bishops as being under him, whereas upwards of 200 bishops were present. So the claim made by Rome that it was held by the convening of "Pope" Sylvester is all a fabrication. We have the names of sixteen bishops of the British Church still preserved before the British met Augustine in A.D. 597. These names are given by Bishop Browne, "The Church in these islands before Augustine." When he did come Bishop Gregory broke one of his own laws, for he invaded the parish of Luidhard, a Gallic bishop who had ministered for sixteen years as Chaplain to Bertha, Queen to Ethelbert, King of Kent, who held services at St. Martin's, Canterbury, at that time. The people had been so favourably impressed by Bertha and Luidhart that, at the invitation of Augustine, upwards of a thousand became Christians and were baptized. When Augustine met the British bishops they refused his demand for them to acknowledge the Pope as their head, stating that Christ was their Head.

After about 58 years from the coming of Augustine the Roman efforts proved a failure. All Roman priests left the country. Then the first Anglo-Saxon was ordained to the See of Canterbury, and the name he went by was Deus-dedit. It would be wrong to suppose that the Celtic Church had no Bibles, but were dependent on Italy or the Vulgate. This is proved erroneous by the correspondence of both Celestius and Sedulius, where the Celtic version they quoted is seen to be radically different to that of Rome. (Haddon and Stubbs.)

THE SYNOD OF WHITBY.

Held in A.D. 664, in consequence of the Roman admixture as to the keeping of Easter, but principally because Wilfrith, an Anglican priest, had been to Rome and returned fascinated with her worship and ritual. As owing to him Easter partook of the Roman date, the British Church, disliking Roman ordinances, refused to be led by Rome. Hence the British bishops every one left their Anglican dioceses rather than conform. Shortly after, the Kings of Northumberland and Kent agreeing, selected a young man of Tarsus, a deacon, whose name was Theodore; this man, consecrated at Rome, became the first bishop-elect by the Anglican body. He became Archbishop of Canterbury in A.D. 668. But even now the Anglican Church refused to acknowledge any interference on the part of Rome.

Now we arrive at the 11th chapter of Rev., which says that the Two Witnesses to whom Christ gives power prophesied for "a thousand two hundred and three score days clothed in sackcloth." As these are days put for years, we have to ask ourselves first what two communities have existed as prophesying for 1,260 years. They evidently must have a somewhat different departure to cause them to be thus separately named. In the mouth of Two Witnesses is the law. Israel and Judah under the Old Testament, the Old and the New Testament, but in the Christian period they are called "My Two Witnesses." Anyone knowing history sees the British and Anglo-Saxon as apparently two separately constituted nationalities, since the British had been in these islands a very long time, but the Anglo-Saxon had only just consolidated here. Again, the British Church had existed 600 years, and the Anglican had only just come into existence. Now ever since the Synod of Whitby they have demurred to the tenets of Rome. Yet Rome has been as persistent in endeavouring to demand submission, as if she had a Divine Right. This these two Churches denied.

We must remember the language of the Book is figurative, that is "by signs." It is easy to see from our history the innumerable contests we have had, both British and Anglican, until the twelfth century, independently struggling for its own independence. This is the first and the last clause of Magna Charta. "The Church of England shall be free."

The Statutes of Parliament prove this. But it is not till after the Reformation, as in chapter x, that the Lord Jesus sets His approval upon the principles of that blessed era. It is the first time that the worship of Almighty God has been as it were compiled into one form of worship. Whereas before, every diocese had its own order. Now, under Archbishop Cranmer, all the most beautiful of our former liturgies were comprehended in this one; as the Archbishop reminds us, they have some of the prayers which had been in existence for 1,500 years. Now all these were put together first in 1549, then better still in 1552. Again in 1562 under Queen Elizabeth, and finally in 1662. We imagine that these were the reed like unto a rod. "Speaking," as in the Prayer Book, the measure or constitution of the Re-formed Church in Britain. The figures used here show that it is a Church militant (combatant), as for instance in the Spanish Armada "fire proceedeth out of their mouth and devoureth their enemies, and if any man will hurt them he must in this manner be killed." We all know Cromwell's determination, expressed to Cardinal Mazarine, and to Louis XIV, that if the French did not stop the massacre of the Piedmontese British cannon would interfere. For a confirmation of this see "Events to be remembered," SELBY, p. 232 note. The prophecy here conveys more than spiritual interpretation, and must refer to military power as well as spiritual.

Now we can take the middle point between 664 and 668 which gives us A.D. 666 a notable number, fixing our mind on λατεινος, the year or thereabout that all services were ordered to be said in LATIN. 1,260 years added to this would bring us to 1926 as the political death of the Witnessing or prophesying power in the street of the city spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where also Our Lord was crucified. We have heard of the conversations at Malines, also the extreme party in the Anglican Church which would set up an aumbry, pix, or tabernacle in every Church in England, doing exactly what Our Lord warned us against. "If they shall say He is in the secret chambers, believe it not," Matt. xxiv, 26. Now how long has this been illegally imposed upon us?

Before the meeting of Parliament in December, 1927, I was under the impression that the 16th or 23rd July, 1924, was the time this illegal action was brought into force, three and a half years from that would end January, 1928, when, if the reckoning is right, there should be amongst us "a time of refreshing, a Spirit of life from God." So we are in the time specified as "after three days and a half the Spirit of Life from God entered into them and they stood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon them which saw them; and I heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them: Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud, and their enemies beheld them. And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake was slain of man seven chiliads; and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory unto the God of heaven. The second woe is past; and behold the third woe cometh quickly." I have especially read this because it seems to point to what we are to expect suddenly and at this present moment.

The thing is more important than it looks. Here is Israel come to its last test or trial. Are we going to give up the Word of God at the call of the Modernist? Are we going to give way to superstition and idolatry at the call of the Church of Rome or Romanisers in our midst? What about the troubles now fermenting?

Is it Jacob's trouble to bring us back to our God?

THE PROBLEM OF THE DAY.

BY "VISIONARY."

THE aim of modern journalism being the entertainment rather than the education and instruction of the masses, it is not surprising that the general public, except a very small section, is not only ignorant of, but quite indifferent to the problems which confront Continental nations in regard to finance and economics at the present time. Many, who have the time and opportunity to digest the better-class magazine, would seem deliberately to abstain from reading articles upon these subjects—preferring those which relate to our own internal problems or those which affect their individual private concerns. These European problems are, however, of absorbing interest. The very difficulty of attempting to understand them seems to add zest to the search for a simple solution to the financial and economic tangle in which almost all Continental nations are struggling.

The position seems very like a spider's web in which European countries appear as flies caught in the silken net of finance with the great spider securely ensconced at the outskirts, but with full liberty of movement to catch and roll up all who unwarily venture that way or are willy-nilly swept there on a gusty day.

Security is the watchword, and within its limits the League of Nations appears to be doing its utmost to placate the rivalries of conflicting interests; so also is America by her proposals to outlaw war-makers. There is, nevertheless, missing the one great essential quality which Britain after the Napoleonic wars drew upon to such good purpose in order to ensure the rehabilitation and reconstruction of impoverished opponents, viz., the spirit or quality of generosity and forgiveness of debt. In other words, there has been a failure to apply and indifference to the second great Commandment of love and duty to the neighbour.

It almost would appear as if America were endeavouring to assure peace by means of a hold of finance and the rigid enforcement of the obligations of war-time governments.

Israel was once in bondage to Egypt for her good and as a necessary experience with a view to her development eventually as an instrument in the hands of the Almighty for the establishment of a new system of law and civilisation throughout the world, but, when she had learned the lessons required, Egypt lost her.

Were America to see and understand the resemblance and amend her policy accordingly, the world would be on the threshold of a wonderful era of peace and prosperity, but the edifices of Security and Peace which Europe and she are so laboriously constructing would appear to be founded on shifting sand rather than upon the rock.

It may even be that in the decision of the Hague, refusing Germany's claim to include the value of German nationals' foreign property in the Dawes' annuities—a very large total—is to be seen the last straw which may break the camel's back and compel for fear of the consequences a drastic scaling down of both inter-ally and late-enemy commitments. Time will show whether this is the case or not, but at this late hour such a revision could hardly be effected without considerable disturbance to exchanges and in the world of finance—so interdependent are the various national interests involved.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM.

Raising an Important Point for Consideration.

BY "EYNSFORD."

THE "Kings" or Gentile world powers represented by the Image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream in Daniel ii are universally agreed to be four: Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome. The feet and the toes of the mixed iron and clay are usually taken to be the decadent stage of the fourth Empire. The ten toes are supposed to be the kingdoms that came into existence after the downfall of the Roman Empire. These are mostly mentioned as in Europe rather to the exclusion of the other parts of that Empire, which are more the concern of the prophetic Scriptures.

This particular dream does not deal with the fragments of the Grecian and Roman Empires. The endings and final divisions of them are treated of in subsequent visions and revelation vouchsafed to Daniel.

It may surprise most British-Israelites that there are some who hold that the feet and toes of the Image do not represent the decline and fall of Rome, but that they stand for a distinct and new dominion, which supplanted Rome in the possession of the Promised Land, and which also occupied so much else of that Empire in Europe and North Africa. Their contention is that the feet and the toes represent the Turkish Empire.

The following is an endeavour to set forth fairly the argument as the writer has heard it.

First: That the Image represents not four but five Empires, and that this is to be gathered from the Scripture narrative.

Second: That the scene of the Image centres in the Land of Promise; that it deals mainly, if not entirely, with the domination of the Land by Gentile powers, of which there have been five; that the Land has been trodden under foot by the Empires of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome and Turkey—five in all.

Third: That the symbolism of the feet and toes made of iron and clay is a perfect representation of the strength and the weakness of Turkish rule. Just as iron signified the undiluted military strength and rule of Rome, so the ingredient of iron in the feet or toes was to emphasize the military prowess of the Turk mixed with his amazing feebleness in all other respects.

Fourth: That we are distinctly told that the Stone smote the Image on the feet; that it fell upon the last Gentile power holding the Land of Promise; that this meant that Israel before possessing it was to fall upon and break the Turkish Empire; that this is in strict accord with much Scripture teaching to the effect that the overthrow of "Edom" was to be by Israel.

Fifth: That Israel is not concerned with the European kingdoms that arose upon the ruins of the Roman Empire; that they lie outside the sphere of Israel; that the Stone did not and is not to fall upon these, but upon the feet and toes that were treading upon the Land of Promise, from the Nile to the Euphrates.

There is much food for thought in the contention of our friends. It seems quite reasonable, and is perhaps the more correct interpretation of the vision. History tells of five Gentile powers that held sway over the Land of the Covenant. We know that Britain did fall upon the fifth, and did deliver the Land from the Nile to the Euphrates from the tyranny and misrule of that power. This in itself alone should identify Britain as that ancient people predestined to be the doom of Edom, and to accomplish this deliverance.

It will be noted that, if the contention thus put forth is the truth, the Stone Kingdom is not the fifth world-wide Empire, but that it is the sixth, quite a jarring rectification of our preconceived ideas.

In reading over the recorded narrative the following points appear clear:—

I.—THE DREAM STATED.

In the description of the Image (Dan. ii, 32-33) there is nothing to say that it does not consist of five parts or five kings. On the contrary the body is certainly divided into five parts:—

1. "The Image's head was of fine gold."
2. "His breast and his arms of silver."
3. "His belly and thighs of brass."
4. "His legs of iron."
5. "His feet part iron and part clay."

We have always joined the fourth and the fifth together, making them two sections of the fourth. There is no conjunction (as in the case of Nos. 2 and 3, joining arms to breast, and thigh to belly) to show that the feet were the same kingdom as the fourth. This, doubtless, admits of the possibility of five. The fact that iron is found in the feet has led to the very natural conclusion that the feet are identical with the legs; but is this necessarily so?

II.—THE INTERPRETATION OF THE DREAM.

When we come to the interpretation we note in verses 39 and 40 that the kingdom of brass is designated as "third," that of iron as "fourth," whereas the feet of iron and clay are not stated to be "fifth." But the gold and the silver are not called "first" and "second," though they were so. In like manner might not the feet be fifth without being called "fifth"?

The idea is that verse 40 completes the Roman Empire: "And the fourth kingdom shall be as strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break and bruise." Rome was iron and iron only till it ceased.

Then that verse 41 describes not any degenerate terminal stage of the fourth, but an entirely new dominion that superseded it. "And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes part of potter's clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken."

Further, in verse 45 the Image is made to consist of five distinct materials, implying five Empires.

The Stone "brake in pieces the iron,
the brass,
the clay,
the silver,
and the gold."

The order of the enumeration here is not chronological.

The contention submitted is of real interest and perhaps of some importance. It would be good to have the matter cleared up beyond dispute. The considered opinion of some of our leading Bible students would be very welcome.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF CHRIST IN THE LIGHT OF BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH.

PART II.

BY W. G. DUNCAN THOMPSON.

BUT our journey of love is not yet finished. We must accompany Our Lord beyond Old Testament times. We must learn to know and love Him in His earthly ministry, and we must watch with Him during that awful hour when even His chosen friends, who were so ready to go to Him for help, and whom He never failed, slept in His hour of need.

And we must stand at the foot of the Cross, knowing not only that we can do nothing to prevent that brutal torture of God's beloved Son, but also that we have helped to put Him there.

If we can thus follow Him in heart and mind, then we are in some measure ready to understand the real meaning of friendship with Christ and to appreciate not only His intimate and direct relationship to ourselves, but also His great relationships to the world. Standing in the centre of this wonderful circle, we shall very quickly perceive three straight lines of purpose stretching out to the circumference—three radii which shall finally bind all the world to Christ—three relationships between Christ and the earth, each one embodying special activities in its particular sphere, but all finally uniting in the perfect circle, when the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

These relationships may be defined as :—

1. Christ as Saviour of the World.
2. Christ as Head or High Priest of the Church.
3. Christ as King of His Kingdom.

These three relationships are perfectly distinct and separate, and the fact that Christians do muddle them up and mix them together proves that they still have much to learn concerning Christ and the beautiful clearness of His ways and purposes.

Now it is to the third of these relationships that British-Israel Truth directs our attention for new insight and understanding of Christ's friendship, but we cannot value that relationship adequately until we have some knowledge of the scope of the other two.

Let us look for a moment at the first.

Christ as Saviour of the World. "God so loved the world that He gave . . . "

It may be that we have stood with Christ in this relationship and have realized something of the wonder of it and endeavoured in our small way to make it known. But while it is true that His love is towards the whole world and that His great sacrifice on Calvary avails for all, He needed an instrument in the world by which the Gospel of Salvation might be brought before the world. Therefore He inaugurated a special body, formed a new relationship, gave a fresh revelation of Himself, and made another point of contact with the activities of the world by the formation of the Church, the Body of Christ.

All this great and slowly developed plan was for the sake of His fathomless love for the world, but even so it was not enough. God knew and Christ knew that in spite of the love of the Son of Man for the fallen sons of Adam this was not enough.

Upon the world God has constantly showered His uncountable blessings.

The sun, the rain, seed-time and harvest, the universal consciousness of God, the still small voice of conscience, and the sacrifice of His only Son, and then, since this was not enough, He formed His Church, put into her hand His Word of Life and sent her forth preaching and teaching.

This, indeed, one would think was sufficient for even a God of Love to do for a sinful and rebellious world, but, alas, it was far from being so, and God, foreknowing it, made provision for girdling the earth with the perfect circle of His love that man should by no means escape it.

As matters stood and if they went no further, a great arc of human life and activity was left without any direct contact with the Christ. The individual might have the direct personal communion with his Lord; the Church member could experience the tie that binds the members of His Body together; but the citizens, the judges, the rulers of the earth would have no guide in the practical concerns of everyday life, and scarcely the power to translate individual and Church experience into national and business relations.

Our Lord knew all this better than our Churches do to-day, and throughout the centuries of His dealings with Israel He was painstakingly inculcating the laws, statutes and ordinances of His Kingdom; laws, statutes and ordinances which the veriest novice in law to-day will tell you are the basis of England's jurisprudence. No, the Church to-day can no more contain and confine the Christ or the revelation of Him than could the Jewish church of His own day when He went out among the people preaching first the Gospel of the Kingdom.

That glorious, radiant Figure still overleaps all such barriers, and once let the Church realize this, and teach not only that her members should take into the world the Church revelation of the Christ, but that they should seek in the world another revelation of Him Who is the Light of the World; should serve Him there as the national King who will shortly return to reign, and I venture to say her lost spiritual power will return redoubled.

But to look at this third relationship of Christ as King from another point of view. If any man doubts the statement that the offer of individual salvation and the organisation of the Church is insufficient, I would ask him to consider fairly for a moment the state of the world to-day after two thousand years of Christianity and he must answer—if he is still a sceptic as regards the facts of British-Israel Truth—the question: How do you account for the fact that two thousand years of Christianity and Church teaching finds the world no more prepared for Christ's return than it was in the days of His earthly ministry? And further: What do you consider is the cause which will determine the time of Our Lord's return?

If it is not an arbitrary and despotic whim, it must surely be that events on earth have furnished a justification as in His first Coming. Yet where in the individual salvation of souls, or the development of the Church, is there any trace of such justification?

Digitized by Google

Human souls in the mass still reject Our Lord, and the Church, one must frankly admit, is less ready even to believe in Christ's actual return than she has perhaps ever been.

As Our Lord said: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"

The truth, as a matter of fact, is that the preparation and justification for that Coming is taking place on earth. Heaven has always been ready for it, but that preparation does not lie primarily in the salvation of individual souls, or even in the condition and influence of the Church.

It lies in the secret and miraculous work of God in His Kingdom relationship which, going beyond while including the activities of the Church and the Christian, is preparing the world for the Coming of the King to His Kingdom though it knows it not.

If, indeed, we are able to stand with Christ in heart and mind and survey the world through His eyes of burning love, we must realize that His relation to the world as Saviour has not alone been sufficient to win the world; that His relation to His Church as High Priest, as well as Victim, has not kept even His Church pure and undivided, let alone all mankind; and we must have realized, if we know anything of His love, that even the amount of real results which have followed the operation of these two relationships will not satisfy Him; that nothing short of the WHOLE WORLD will do that.

Consequently, if we really love Him, we shall seek eagerly to further that third relationship which shall round off the other two and ultimately accomplish the burning desire of His heart.

That relationship we find in Christ as King; but that relationship has nothing directly to do with the relationship of Christ as Saviour. We do speak of Him as King in our hearts and lives, but in doing so we are thinking of a purely personal relationship, whereas a King's relationship to His Kingdom is a universal rule and government.

Nor has this relationship anything directly to do with the Church. There is no place in a Church for a King. For a Priest—yes, but not for a King. A Priest administers sacraments; a King administers laws. A Priest's authority is spiritual; a King's material. Christ is, of course, Priest and King, but Priest—High Priest in His Church; King in His Kingdom; and Church and Kingdom are distinct.

Let us then devote the rest of our time to the understanding of Christ as King in His Kingdom, which is a purely British-Israel study.

Now when one speaks of a King's authority being material this does not mean that it may not be spiritual in inception and in power. We know that Christ said His Kingdom was not of this world. It certainly was not, but the manifestation of it certainly was and is. One may say even more definitely, if possible, that the Church is not of this world and yet it has a material enough manifestation. How much more, then, must Christ's Kingdom, which is to embrace the kingdoms of the earth, have a material manifestation.

For the fact that it has a most definite material manifestation we have the strongest Scriptural warrant. Let us glance at one or two passages in the Bible: 2 Sam. vii, 8–16; Ps. lxxxix, 3–4; Jer. xxxiii, 17 and 20-21; Rev. xi, 15.

Perhaps you will say that is material enough—the throne of David—but we are discussing the throne of Jehovah Jesus, not the throne of Israel.

Well, let us read one or two more passages: 1 Chron. xxix, 23; Jer. iii, 11–19; Luke i, 31–33; Isaiah xliii, 14–15; Isaiah xliv, 6; Isaiah lxiii, 16–19; Hosea xiii, 9–10.

In these we see that the indestructible throne of Jehovah is the throne of David, and it is from King David that the British Royal Family traces its descent. Material enough—spiritual enough, and not really more startling than the claim of apostolic succession in the Church is the claim that Israel (not Judah) is His Kingdom on earth.

Then we know from the promises to Abraham that the people of the Kingdom are to become a nation—a company of nations—to spread abroad over the earth—make the waste places blossom—be victorious over their enemies—spread the Gospel of Christ—regain Jerusalem, and finally that, in the time of their extremity, Christ shall indeed return visibly as their King.

A REPLY TO THE ARTICLE ENTITLED "BRITISH-ISRAEL"

IN "CHRIST CHURCH PARISH MAGAZINE" (NAILSEA), MARCH, 1928.

IT is with regret that we have felt called upon to reply to the article in the "Christ Church Parish Magazine," Nailsea, of the month of March, entitled "British-Israel."

We take this matter up, not because the views there questioned and attacked need any defence on our part, but rather that we may be able to remove misconceptions which may have arisen in the minds of people as a result of it. It is with grief that we have felt this onerous duty thrust upon us by the singular action of the clerical gentlemen who penned the statement "British-Israel."

These gentlemen have cited the names of four people who have adversely criticised the British-Israel Movement; and it is seemingly upon the authority of these our critics would attempt to establish the invalidity of the position here maintained. We regret, however, to find that not once do they bring forward a single argument, or make one demonstration of value, to disprove that which they disagree with.

To quote a number of people without proving the inaccuracy of the opponent, or even without quoting demonstrations made by their authorities, does not prove their contentions. If numerous authorities, whose capabilities were undoubted, had been quoted, then, even without necessary proof, one would have been influenced to accept their statements. To quote two statements; however (which neither prove nor disprove anything), are in themselves not only worthless, but they depreciate the value of the arguments of those who make use of them.

Turning to their article, we find, among others, the statement, quoted from the Bishop of Chichester, which says, "They" (British-Israelites) "despise the learning of others, and they do not use their gift of reason." This at the outset (in descending to ridicule something which the writer has failed to disprove) by its very weakness invalidates their whole hypothesis.

To speak of authorities alone one need only cite the names of Huxley, Sayce, Petrie, Nicholson, Raleigh, Ripley, Waddell, Latham, Keith, Rawlinson, Sharon Turner, Palgrave and Hannay; all of whom, directly or indirectly, support the British-Israel position. Their direct and candid statements will be sufficient to convince any enquiring student of the ethnological and historical evidence of our position.

We find that Prof. Sayce traces a blond, long-headed (dolicephalic) race from Palestine (at the period of the early Israelitish settlement in Canaan) "through the peninsula of Spain and the western side of France into the British Islands." ("The Hittite Empire.") Prof. L. A. Waddell, LL.D., C.B.I., C.I.E., also has identified the British with a Palestinian dolicephalic race of the same period. (See "The Phœnician Origin of the Britons, Scots and Anglo-Saxons.") Both Sayce and Prof. Petrie agree in tracing this Aryan race to kinship with the Dardanians who were undoubtedly—from the evidence of the Egyptian Monuments—Israelites; and who as a result bore Israelitish tribal names, as Mr. Bruce Hannay (Barrister-at-Law, Author of "A Grammar of the Tibetian Language") even admits. ("European and Other Race Origins.")

Hannay has demonstrated quite clearly that the Aryan Briton had his origin in Palestine among the Aryan-Sakian (or Israelitish) Peoples.

We are thus singled out by the latest scholarship as a race of undoubted Eastern (Palestinian - Dardanian - Sakian - Israelitish) origin. We find on equally good authority that relationship with Teutonic Continental ancestors (as is to be expected, if the British are Israel) is disproved. In fact, the lack of affinity between the British and Germanic Peoples, with whom they have been falsely grouped for so long, argues very strongly in favour of the oneness of descent from non-Teutonic, but Israelitish-Aryan ancestors.

Many authorities have written much to demonstrate this non-Continental relativity and purity of descent. Prof. Sir Arthur Keith says, "It is undeniable from the anthropologist's point of view that British and Germans belong to opposite European types." (The Weekly Graphic, December 4th, 1915.) Dr. Latham is equally emphatic when he says, "Not a single pure Saxon is to be found in any village, town, or city of Germany. We once came there, but came out again in our wanderings to these British Islands." ("Ethnology of Europe.") These statements are supported by Prof. Raleigh, who pithily remarks, in concluding a dissertation against British-Germanic relativity, that a British hat will not fit a German head, and a German hat will not fit a British head. This clearly points out the difference in craniological type existing between the heads of the Germanic and British races. In itself it disproves any relationship. Whilst Prof. W. J. Ripley has added his contribution when he says, " Thus the ethnological comparison proves that the Anglo-Saxon peoples must be of an entirely different stock from the present German race, and that they therefore do not belong to the Teuton stock." (" The Races of Europe.")

Huxley has spoken of our non-mixed origin. He says, " I miss no opportunity of uprooting the notion that the people who form the British nation are descended from various races. All the detachments who flowed into Britain are branches of the self-same stock." (Report of his lecture at St. George's Hall, London, given in a work called " Unorthodox London," by the Rev. C. M. Davis.)

Again, Huxley says, " Therefore we should not talk any more of Celts and Saxons, for they are all one. I never lose an opportunity of rooting up the false idea that the Celts and Saxons are different races." (" Racial Origins.") Sir J. Palgrave says, " Britons, Anglo-Saxons, Danes and Normans were all relations ; however hostile, they were all kinsmen, shedding kindred blood." (" English Commonwealth.") Dr. T. Nicholson (" The Pedigree of the English People ") has written, " The fundamental rule of science, whether in history or elsewhere, is not what has been believed, but what is true. The inquiry into what is true on the present subject discovers a strong link of relationship between the Cymry and the English."

Prof. Waddell is quite as clear on the origin of Briton, Scot and Anglo-Saxon. Whilst the Medical Correspondent of The Times (June 6th, 1916) after quoting the authority of Dr. Young, of Glasgow University, quotes the Medical Journal, which says, " The more we dig into the physical character of the English, Scottish, Welsh and Irish peoples, the more do anthropologists become convinced that all four nationalities are compounded out of exactly the same racial stocks of mankind."

Finally, we might point out that both Sharon Turner (" History of the Anglo-Saxons ") and Rawlinson bring the British Race from almost identically the same regions as Petrie and Sayce. They derive the Saxon or Gothic stock from Northern Media and the district stretching west to the Crimea, at identically the same period as Esdras (II Esdras) informs us they left Media for Ar-Serath (a region between the Danube and the Crimea). Whilst reference to a non-Palestinian return of Israel is proved from Josephus.

Sir H. Rawlinson identifies both Kimmerian (Kelt) and Sacae (Saks—Saxons) as of one origin in Israel when he says, " We have reasonable grounds for regarding the Gimiri, or Cimmerians, who first appeared on the confines of Assyria and Media in the century (B.C.), and the Sacae of the Behistun Rock, nearly two centuries later, as identical with Israel." (" Origin of the Nations.")

Therefore the whole weight of historical, ethnological and philological evidence can lucidly establish the veracity of the British-Israel position. The British are undoubtedly of a pure descent, having no relationships of an ethnical kind with the Continentals ; Eastern in origin, the Gothic section of the race coming from Media and identified with Israel ; whilst the Keltic section is derived from Palestine and identified with early Israel. The closer the question is examined the clearer will be seen the historical relativity between the British and Hebrew Peoples, whilst the very silence and lack of evidence on the part of our critics clearly vindicates that which they seek to destroy.

From the Biblical standpoint also, the British-Israel position is no longer a matter of opinion from however high and learned a quarter that opinion may come. It is a position broad-based on the Old and New Testaments, and is, therefore, one which rests upon the Word of God.

If any intelligent and unbiased reader will compare the Book of the Prophet Hosea, chapter i, verses 2 to 9, with 1 Peter xi, 9, 10, 11, 12, he cannot escape from the conclusion that Hosea himself is charged to represent the idolatry of the Ten-Tribed House of Israel, or that the fate of Ephraim is further represented in the figure of the names of the three children, " Jezreel," " Lo-ruhamah," and " Lo-Ammi." The command of the Lord to Hosea is—" Call his name Jezreel." The name means God sows or disperses, and indicates a scattered people, and the Word of God is—" I will cause the Kingdom of the House of Israel " (not Judah) " to cease." The Divine command concerning the Prophet's second child is " call her name Lo-ruhamah," which the margin explains, " that is, that hath not obtained mercy." The Divine explanation is, for " I will no more have mercy on the House of Israel, that I should altogether pardon them. But I will have mercy upon the House of Judah." There, mercy is promised to " Judah," at a time when " Israel " was not to have mercy. This mercy extended to the Jews, or House of Judah, was fulfilled to them on their restoration after the Babylonian Captivity. Seeing that the House of Israel failed to heed God's messages, the next child is commanded of the Lord to be called Lo-Ammi—" Call his name Lo-Ammi " (margin, that is, not My People) " for ye are not My people and I will not be your God " (Hosea i, 4-9).

Now turn to 1 Peter xi, 9, 10, 11, 12, and as you do, remember that the Apostle is writing to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, and to these whether resident there or scattered further afield in their wanderings, and you find the Apostle is telling them that under the New Covenant the seed of the House of Israel spoken of by Hosea are readmitted into the privileges they had forfeited. The words of St. Peter could apply to none other than the Lost Sheep of the House of Israel, to whom alone Our Lord Himself claims that He was sent.

If you read verse 10 of Hosea i you have the future greatness of the people in their scattered condition foretold as being multitudinous, and the fact of their being destined to be called " the sons of the Living God." Now only by Regeneration—new birth—is it possible for anyone except Christ to become a son of the Living God. And the Epistle of St. Peter confirms the promise and fulfils the prophecy. This fulfilment means that the people of the Ten Tribes had wandered far from the area of their first captivity, had lost their identity amongst Gentile Peoples, had, in short, become Gentilised as to name, language and covenant privileges, and finally would be found in the place God had appointed for them, from which they were to move no more. (2 Sam. vii, 10.) They were to become a great maritime people (Numbers xxiv, 5–9), in which passage also we surely have the explanation of the Royal Arms with the Lion and the Unicorn.

In verse 11 of Hosea i the prophet foretells the ultimate Union of the Houses of Judah and Israel, and even to-day there are signs which make it clear that this prophecy is to be fulfilled.

The prophecies of Isaiah from the forty-first chapter onwards, which are addressed to Israel or to Jacob, or to Ephraim (all of which names connote the scattered Ten-Tribed House of Israel), speak of them as inhabiting the isles of the sea towards the Northward and towards the West (the Hebrew has no word for North-west, hence the phrasing which gives that direction). See Jeremiah iii, 12, 15–18; xxxi, 7, 8; Isaiah xliii, 5, 6; xlix, 12; and Hosea xi, 10. The final location in the place appointed for them can, therefore, be of little uncertainty, since the British Isles are the only North-western group.

Complete your study of our identification with the prophecies which foretold the greatness, power, missionary zeal and enterprise of the scattered but Christianised House of Israel. (See Isaiah xlix, 6; lxvi, 19; and compare with Acts xiii, 45–48.) Also compare Genesis xxii, 17, 18 and Genesis xxiv, 60, and in doing so remember that Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, Acre, Port Said, Suez Canal, Aden, Perim, Socotra, Babel-Mandeb, Bombay, Peshawar, Karachi, Rangoon, Penang, Malacca, Singapore, Sarawak, Hong Kong, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand and some more are all key places and gates which are ours. Read Deuteronomy xv, 6, and Deuteronomy xxviii, 12, 13, and try to understand those verses in the light of the following cutting from the Westminster Review—"Foreign countries have during the last thirty years added three thousand million pounds sterling to their debts, and the British people are the great lenders."

Space forbids more, but notice that the word "Britain" is made up of two Hebrew words, "Brit" or "B'r't," meaning covenant, and "ain" signifying land; and the word British similarly is composed of the Hebrew "Brit," covenant, and "ish"—"man." All these and many more are marks of identity between the British and Hebrew Races.

One of the writers for years fought against the "theory," as he then thought, that we are the after-seed or remnant and household of the Lost Ten Tribes, but study of God's Holy Word left no alternative but to believe.

TESTIMONY OF THE THREE WITNESSES.

BY HOWARD B. RAND, LL.B.

A WITNESS testifies to the certainty of a fact or an event and gives evidence to sustain that testimony. This evidence must be of such a character that it removes all doubt from the mind of a reasonable person.

In a court of common law we accept the testimony of two witnesses as to facts if their veracity is beyond question and their testimony identical. However, we very seldom find all the witnesses agreeing, so the decision must be based on what is called the preponderance of evidence.

It is a curious fact that in all walks of life men demand little evidence on which to base their action, the investment of their money, and the conducting of their business and domestic affairs. They would not dare demand from business associates as evidence of their good faith what they require of God, their Maker, before believing His Word.

God has laid down as an axiom of law this statement; "In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established."—Matt. xviii, 16.

If the statement of two witnesses is accepted in a court of common law as to the facts of which they testify, though differing in minor details, then the evidence of three witnesses who do not vary in any particular ought to establish beyond question the events which they record.

God has endowed us with mental faculties to use. He knows our needs and does not violate any man's true sense of real values. One of the important uses of our God-given reasoning powers is to discern the truth and reject error.

To man God has given the evidence of His plans and purposes for His people Israel and their redemption; of salvation and the establishment of righteousness and prewritten history for their instruction. Not only has he multiplied this testimony many times, but he has by the evidence of three witnesses—independent of each other—established the facts beyond question, and a man, though a fool, cannot err therein.

Who are the witnesses? First and foremost, though not the oldest, we present the WRITTEN WORD.

It testifies to certain facts. In Genesis it declares the beginnings—of the world and the subsequent creations, of man—of sin—of government—of a special people—and contains the promise of redemption. Then on through its pages it deals with the history of that special people. Their sojourn in Egypt, their formation into the Kingdom-nation with righteous laws and government, and their schooling in the Wilderness; then their entry into the Promised Land, and history while there—first under Judges, and then under Kings. This witness tells of the division of the People of Israel into different Houses—the House of David, the House of Israel, and the House of Judah. It also testifies to, and produces the evidence of Israel's sin, records the punishment which follows, first to the House of Israel, then to the House of Judah, and the transfer of the House of David from over Judah to be over Israel. After the removal of the Throne of David from over Judah is given the subsequent history of Judah to the coming of the Messiah. His rejection, and the punishment which follows.

Then sweeping on down through the ages, during which time the witness testifies that the House of Israel is to be lost, we have the glorious testimony of Israel found and the marks by which she would be known. One people only possess the marks recorded by this witness—the Anglo-Saxon nations, as represented by Britain, her Colonies and Dominions, and the United States of America.

Digitized by Google

If this were the only witness, I would accept the evidence of its testimony, which history has amply verified.

Now, then, who is our second witness? We need not look far, for our first witness tells us of its presence—"In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it shall be for a sign and a witness unto the Lord of Hosts in the land of Egypt."—Isaiah xix, 19.

Thus witness number two brings forward

THE GEOMETRICAL WORD.

And what a witness it is. For thousands of years its testimony has been sealed; but now the seals are broken, and behold we find this monument containing a chronological record of the story told in the Written Word.

The critic has tried to say of the first witness that its prophetic record was written after the events foretold. But of this witness it would be fatal for the critic to suggest its passages and markings were built after the historical period to which its chronology bears testimony. In one bold sweep down the corridor of time it tells the chronological history of a people—the Kingdom-nation in its onward march through the ages. It records the Exodus from Egypt, the birth of the Redeemer and Saviour, the beginning and close of the Christian era, and the closing period of the present age, and chronologically identifies the Kingdom-nation Israel in this latter time. Then it produces scientific evidence incorporated in its form, dimensions and structure to confound those who belittle God's Word and Revelation.

The testimony of these two witnesses is known, the evidence is overwhelming, so if a third bear record of the same facts, the word of their testimony is established beyond question.

Who is this third witness? As our first ushered in the second so our second points to the third. The Geometrical Word has embodied in its structure the grandeur of the Heavens and its Cycles. Yet it points to the stars in another way. To use one of many illustrations—the first descending passage pointed to Draconis at the time of the building of the Pyramid. But Draconis is the principal star in Draco, the sign of the serpent, the Devil, under whose sign, in the emblem of the descending passage, mankind marched downward to the pit. Here we have the clue, for Draco is only one figure in the great Pictorial Star Groupings. Our third witness, therefore, is THE PICTORIAL WORD.

What a wonderful witness it is. There in the Heavens, the stars mapped and named, telling us the same story as the other two, but by pictures, making the appeal through the eye.

The great Pictorial Star Groupings tell us of Man's Fall, and the Promised Redemption for Israel, and Salvation for the world; of Israel's increase and her physical helplessness in the final dangers that beset her in the close of this age; of the coming of the King to the rescue, the cleansing of the earth; banishment of evil, and the final destruction of the Devil and all his works. Thus does the testimony of this witness verify the Written and Geometrica Word.

Shall we say God has been unmindful of our needs as reasoning human beings? No, never, though the eyes of men have been blinded that they see not the truth and the way of Sal vation.

In closing, let us notice the testimony of these three witnesses as to the birth of the Redeemer of Israel, our personal Saviour.

The Written Word bears record of the time, and place, and manner of birth. The Geometrical Word gives the time and points to the City of Nativity. The Pictorial Word testifies as surely. Born of a virgin—Virgo, the virgin, is represented with a branch in her hand. Zech. iii, 8: "Behold I will bring forth my servant the BRANCH." In her left hand the ears of corn, or the seed, thus testifying it is her seed who is the subject of Prophecy, while the accompanying constellation in Virgo—Coma (the woman and child), explains that this coming branch or seed will be the "Desire of all nations," for the ancient name of this constellation is Comah, the desired or the longed for. Hag. ii, 7, says: "The desire of all nations shall come." Tradition indicates that the star seen by the wise men appeared in the constellation indicating the time of birth. It pointed to the City of David when it stood over Jerusalem in the zenith at midnight, and identified it as the birthplace of the Son of God, and the wise men, versed in the Pictorial Word, saw and understood.

Thank God all the witnesses testify that He is speedily coming to take the Throne of His father David, and rule over Brith-ish, the Covenant people, who are none other than Israel found.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

BY THE REV. G. H. LANCASTER, M.A.

QUESTION.—I heard it asserted recently that there were neither horses nor chariots in Egypt at the time of the Exodus; also that Joseph is not mentioned by name in any of the Egyptian documents or papyri. It would be very interesting to know if these assertions be correct or otherwise?—J. W.

ANSWER.—(1) The subject of the horse forms a very interesting study both in the Bible, and in relation to the various races in and connected with Bible lands. The philologist can find scope for much keenness in dealing with the names of the horse; the historical student can gather valuable facts illustrating political and religious history. It will be seen from the Old Testament literature that the horse is one of the most important factors in a people's growth, for although the prophets spoke strongly against its use, civilisation could not be held back. Yet Zechariah predicts that the Lord's "flock, the house of Judah" shall become like "his goodly horse in battle" (x. 3), while Job gives us in a fervently religious passage an unsurpassably superb picture of the war-horse (xxxix, 19-25). Apart from the fact that the horse is referred to in the Bible in symbolical phraseology and is associated with religious cults (2 Kings xxiii, 11), the animal known to the Hebrews was undoubtedly a war-horse, and as such excited admiration mingled with awe. Its strength and swiftness (Hab. i, 8; Jer. iv, 13) seemed to the people to be almost supernatural, which caused the prophets to complain that the people and their political leaders placed more trust and confidence in the horse than in Jehovah (Isai. xxx, 16; Psalm xx, 7; xxxiii, 17; cxlvii, 10).[1]

The earlier references to the horse in the Bible show that this animal was used by the Egyptians, the Philistines, and other non-Israelite tribes; but its introduction among the Hebrews was not of early date, nor is its use alluded to until the time of David and Solomon. It finds no place in the Book of the Covenant (Exod. xxi-xxiii), nor is it mentioned in the Tenth Commandment. Solomon imported horses in great numbers, with the result that in the period of the Kings they were employed not infrequently in war by both Judah and Israel, while the King was forbidden to multiply horses to himself (Deut. xvii, 16). This warning was intended to prevent foreign intercourse which rendered easy the introduction of heathenish cults (2 Kings xxiii, 11). The horse was kept in a stall, and fed upon barley and straw (1 Kings iv, 26, 28). It was controlled by a bit and bridle (James iii, 3), and urged on by a whip. Its hoof was compared with "flint" (Isai. v, 28), while the greatest terror which possessed a horse was the fear of the horned snake (the Cerastes) which "biteth the horse heels, so that his rider shall fall backward" (Gen. xlix, 17).

As in the case of the Assyrians the Hebrews never used the horse for draught purposes, nor was it used to any extent for riding purposes in pre-exilic days. Not until the Persian period do we read of a king's horse being used for State occasions, or of there being a royal stud (Esther vi, 8; viii, 10, 14, R.V.). The mule or ass continued to be the ordinary animal for riding purposes, including royal persons (2 Sam. xiii, 29), and also upon State occasions (1 Kings i, 33). So also Our Lord Jesus Christ entered Jerusalem "sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass" (Mat. xxi, 5).

(2) The horse was not known in Egypt before the time of the Hyksos (shepherd) kings some 1800 B.C., nor is it found on the Monuments before the eighteenth dynasty. It is first depicted in the time of Amenhotep I, and appears among the presents sent to Egypt by Burnaburias of Kardunias. Like the Assyrians the Egyptians doubtless obtained their horses from Northern Mesopotamia, where in turn they were introduced from Central Asia, whose steppes and plains seem to have been one of the earliest homes of the horse. Egyptian horses were greatly esteemed, and were a fine race, although pasture was scarce; they were exported from Egypt to neighbouring countries, and Solomon bought them at 150 shekels of silver, from the merchants who traded with Egypt by the Syrian desert. It is incorrect to state that there were neither horses nor chariots in Egypt at the time of the Exodus, which was much later than that of the Hyksos kings, and belonged to the nineteenth dynasty.

(3) Similarly chariots were used in Egypt upon the introduction of the horse in the Hyksos period. There is a great abundance of pictorial material on the monuments from the eighteenth dynasty onwards, illustrating what the Egyptian chariots were like. They usually contained two persons each, the right-hand warrior bearing the bow, while the left carried the shield. The reins were tied round the body of one of the combatants while he was engaged in action. The Egyptian chariot was light and open from behind, so that it could be easily mounted, and was constructed almost entirely of wood. The flat bottom was formed of a kind of network, consisting of interlaced thongs or rope, which gave it elasticity, and mitigated the jolting.

Furthermore the Biblical account of the Exodus clearly tells us that the Egyptians possessed chariots at that time, for we read that Pharaoh "made ready his chariot, and took his people with him: and he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them .... and he pursued after the children of Israel, ... and the Lord overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea. And the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them; there remained not so much as one of them. But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea .... Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea-shore" (Exod. xiv, 5-30).

(4) No, there is no mention of Joseph in any Egyptian document, nor is he referred to on the Monuments. This, coupled with the fact that the name of the Pharaoh is not mentioned in the Bible, prevents us from fixing accurately the period in which Joseph lived. But it is most generally believed that he lived in the period of the Hyksos kings, which would practically agree with the sojourning of the Children of Israel for 430 years in Egypt, assuming that the Exodus took place in the reign of Meneptah, of the nineteenth dynasty. There are, however, some scholars who present a strong case in favour of Joseph having lived in the eighteenth dynasty, in the reign of either Akhenaton or Tutankhamen, his son-in-law. But this is too big a subject, and too vast a problem to be discussed here.

On the other hand there was an early Hellenistic-Jewish document, probably written in the early years of the second Christian century, entitled "Joseph and Asenath," which is a most beautifully written romance, based upon the Biblical account, and coloured in Christian and Jewish thought. The Greek original was long since lost, but Syriac, Armenian and Slavonic versions are extant of which the Syriac (dated about A.D. 569) is the oldest and the best. An English translation appeared in 1918, of which I gave a résumé in the National Message and Banner in the issue of March 6th, 1926, pp. 171-173, which is well worth reading. It is a most beautiful love-story of the highest tone, and far and away transcends the modern novel, or even the romances of a Scott, or the idylls of a Tennyson.

THE HERALDRY AND FLAG OF GREAT BRITAIN. By M. Bloxam. Price 1*s*., 1*s*. 2*d*. post free.

WE welcome this little volume especially at this time, as we see it is a guide book to a larger work now being prepared by Mr. G. R. Gair. It, therefore, not only forms an introduction, or we may say a valuable explanation of what we may expect later on, but it is in itself a compendium of our Flag Heraldry; it also contains, inter alia, a great deal of useful historical information. The designs of the separate flags of Ireland, Scotland and England arranged so that you have the complete Union Jack, added to which there is the story of the composition of the flag of the United States, with all the evidence it carries with it of Divine origin. The book is nicely got up, well printed, and contains 36 pages in addition to the pictures of the flags.

It forms a subject for study, as well as being of great interest to all.—L. G. A. ROBERTS, Commander R.N.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

TO-DAY, June 23rd, is the Birthday of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and we of the British-Israel-World Federation most earnestly and sincerely beg to tender to His Royal Highness our congratulations and our very best wishes for very many Happy Returns of the Day, with the Divine blessing in rich measure.

A full audience is expected on Monday afternoonn ext, when we are to celebrate the Anniversary of the Opening of our Headquarters. As a large number will no doubt wish for tea, and as some may have trains to catch, it has been arranged that the first sitting in the Library shall be at 3.45. The meeting commences at 2.45, and as there are several speeches they will hardly be concluded before 4.40, when a second tea sitting will be ready.

* * *

Mr. John Leech, K.C., paid a visit to the Leicester Branch on Tuesday, June 5th. In the afternoon he gave an address on "The British Empire in Prophecy." Tea was then served. There was an excellent attendance in the evening to hear Mr. Leech on "The Second Coming of Christ."

The Pyramid collecting box campaign for the Midland Area Commissioner's Fund was launched and enthusiastically taken up by the meeting.

Peckham Rye was the scene for the "Open-Air Campaign" work on Sunday, June 10th. Mr. Pilcher opened the proceedings in the afternoon with an address showing Britain's descent from Israel. Mr. Bradbury followed with a splendid description of the promises to Ephraim and Manasseh, after which Mr. Barrow showed how similarly in language and in expression the British Empire was described by writers in books and in newspapers at the present time, and by the earliest Bible prophecies. In the evening Mr. Pilcher again opened, giving a Bible and identity talk, Mr. McKelvey taking the Geographical setting and size of the Empire, and dealing with the deliverance of Jerusalem by General Allenby, in Prophecy. Mr. Tester concluded with an account of the earlier migrations into Britain, the founding of London, and traced the illustrious ancestors of the British King, Carodoc, to Brutus the Trojan. Deep interest was shown at each meeting, and a most satisfactory feeling of harmony prevailed.

The speakers for next week at Headquarters are: Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. Bloxam; Thursday evening, Mr. John Leech, K.C. Last week we had addresses from the Revs. Commander Roberts, Joseph Gay, T. Sparshott Johnson, William Turpitt, B.A., B.D., and Mr. John Leech, K.C.

Open-air meetings are to be held to-morrow, Sunday, at 3.30, and Tuesday next, at 7.30, at Highbury Corner.

A correspondent writes us that "Land of Hope and Glory" is frequently sung for the Radio in the U.S.A., and that an American speaker to an enthusiastic audience in a certain city said: "Only an Anglo-Saxon Confederation can save the world."

* * *

Mrs. Bloxam has given addresses at Ansdell, Bedford, Clevedon, Grange-over-Sands, Hull, Hartington, Liverpool, Leeds, Preston, Sheffield, Southport, Scarborough and Worthing.

* * *

Mr. A. W. Walburn has given an address on "Signs of the Times" for the Exeter Branch to a crowded audience at the Y.M.C.A. Mr. G. Swansborough presided.

An important article by the Rev. Pascoe Goard on "The Low Passage of the Great Pyramid" will appear in the next issue of this journal.

Tickets for the next Congress are being booked far in advance of previous years. Those who because of defective hearing wish for front seats are advised to make application as early as possible.

The Sabbath that was made for Man

By J. G. MODIN. 35 pp. Paper cover.

Price 9d.; by post 10d.

Canada and U.S.A. 20 cts. Post free

Deals with that identification mark of Israel, the keeping of a National Sabbath. It is by far the most valuable contribution yet made to the subject.

St. Paul in Britain

Or, The Origin of British as opposed to Papal Christianity.

By Rev. R. W. MORGAN. Crown 8vo. 192 pp. Cloth cover.

Price 3/6; by post, 3/9

Canada and U.S.A. 95 cts. Post free

Proves that the Church in Britain owes nothing to Rome, but was established by those who learned the Gospel from the lips of Christ Himself, within five years of the Crucifixion. The style alone makes the book worth reading, while the author's citation of authorities stamps it as the result of high scholarship and deep research.

Sargon the Magnificent

By Mrs. SYDNEY BRISTOWE (Author of "The Oldest Letters in the World.") Demy 8vo. 168 pp. Cloth cover. 17 illustrations.

Price 5/-; by post, 5/6

Canada and U.S.A. $1.30 Post free

The author deduces, from the translations of the most recently discovered cuneiform inscriptions, the identity of Sargon with Cain the Fratricide. She describes the alliance of Cain with the forces of Evil and its effect on the development of the descendants of Adam.

The Signpost

"DAVYDD." Demy 8vo. 96 pp. Cloth cover.

Price 2/6; by post, 2/9

Price 1/-; by post, 1/2

Canada and U.S.A. 30 cts. Post free

The Divinity which has, from the beginning, shaped our National Ends is clearly demonstrated. Not only is there a God of History, but a God in History, and in the history of no nation or race as we ourselves find Him.

God in His Earth

By Rev. ARTHUR PRITCHARD, M.A. Crown 8vo. 152 pp. Cloth cover.

Price 3/6; by post, 3/9

Canada and U.S.A. 95 cts. Post free

A telescopic, microscopic and stereoscopic view of the blessed truths enshrined in the Bible. God's in His Earth, working through a Kingdom, therefore "All's well with the world," and the working out of His age-long purpose is clearly shown.

British-Israel Facts not Fancies

With Foreword by the Rt. Rev. The Lord Bishop of the Falkland Islands, D.D.

By Maj.-Gen. C. A. HADFIELD. Demy 8vo. 64 pp. Paper cover.

Price 1/-; by post, 1/1

Canada and U.S.A. 30 cts. Post free

General HADFIELD has confined himself to tracing the identity. His success may be gauged by the opinion expressed in the Foreword: "It is the intention of the writer to try and place in the hands of busy people a little introduction to this great subject, which can be easily read and digested, and which may awaken a desire for further study. Nothing could have been better done."

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

THE LOW PASSAGE OF THE GREAT PYRAMID.*

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

I am not a Pyramid expert. It has been my privilege to listen to and to read Mr. Davidson and others, who are students of the Pyramid. Conviction has come to me that the chronology of world history has been built into the structure of the Great Pyramid, and that such chronology has kept pace with the mighty things of history for nearly six thousand years. For four thousand years or so this chronological scale has been in existence. Thus we see the downward progress of the race under the influence of the Dragon star until the Exodus. At that point we have the way opened for those who choose the ascending path. This continues, a "low passage" ascent, to the date of the first Advent of Our Lord. Still the ascending passage continues, but from this point the height of the Grand Gallery gives plenty of head room, until the night of the entering of Britain into the Great War. The ascent here ends, and on level ground we move forward. From this time to the end of the Great War it is again a "low passage" forward movement, now on an horizontal plane. At the time of the signing of the Armistice there is another lift of the roof line, and we move forward with plenty of head room, but with a roof lower than that of the Grand Gallery until the date of May 29th, 1928.

Then begins another "low passage" progress for a hundred inches. There is nothing to indicate the twenty-ninth of May as being different from the thirtieth of May or any other date of the hundred inches which follow, which are calculated to indicate a hundred months. The present low passage is no lower than the passages which represented millenniums of history in the descending and ascending passages. The upthrust of the roof of the Grand Gallery indicated the first Advent of Our Lord, and all the blessings which followed His Coming. The upward thrust of the antechamber marked the era of cessation of physical war. What else will history say that it marked? Perhaps it marked also the entrance of those ideals which presage the principles of the Millennial reign. For such ideals have been much in evidence, intermixed with other matters, during the period of the Armistice, such, for instance, as the banishment of war from the earth.

But while there have been such indications, and while the head room has been sufficient, and more, to enable men to walk upright, still the roof line has been lower than that of the Grand Gallery. It has been a period of lower spiritual ideals and of less spiritual achievements in the Christian world than was the period of the Grand Gallery. Education and culture of the natural man has progressed. Spiritual vision and achievement has retrograded. The Christian life of the antechamber has been less triumphant than that of the Grand Gallery. This we see clearly by the fact that the Grand Gallery commences at the birth of Our Lord and in connection with His dispensation.

* This article appears late because it was written in far-off Vancouver on June 1st.

Digitized by Google

Let us look at the doctrinal field which has been occupied during the two periods, and mark the difference.

The Christian faith of Britain has become symbolic to a degree. Men have given to the symbol that veneration and adoration which in the former period was given to the Lord directly. So much for the ritualistic and ultra-sacramental wing of the Christian Church, and of the Israel nation. The Christian faith has become materialistic in the hands of the modernist; and the triumphant faith of the former generations has very largely died out. Christianity in the last ten years has not achieved the height of faith and truth that it did through previous generations of the dispensation.

Enemy propaganda has been effective also. This has given to the period the obstacles of the "triple veil." There has been the concrete obstacle of the "granite leaf," and there has been the indication of similar obstacles. Day after day has been indicated in the antechamber as critical points in the progress through this pregnant period, and each and every day thus indicated has written its story on the pages of the last decade of history.

Now comes the last low passage. Christianity in Israel will not walk with head erect, and the nation will walk with bowed head and with difficult steps. There is just head room for the nation upon its knees.

What are the present facts connected with the period of Israel-British history which we have now entered upon?

Let us be assured that the Pyramid in no way affects or controls the progress of world history, or national history. It but marks the passage of the ages and of the years and months. The things which are ahead during the next indicated years will be the natural sequence of the events through which we have been living, and the natural fruit of the works which the nations have been carrying forward during the years of the last decade. We shall see things move logically forward during the indicated period. May we look at things as they are to-day, and so be able to estimate what they will be to-morrow.

We are still in a period of international struggle. He must be blind indeed who fails to see that fact. There is no promise of an immediate end of strife.

We simply point out that facts we find in the great field of world events will be found to be chronologically indicated in the Great Pyramid, provided we are able to rise above detail and take our stand upon the greatest outline of world events; such an outline as marks the progress of dispensations.

We have often pointed out that the method of warfare changed with the Armistice. Doctrine took the place of the sword. Propaganda took the place of military drill. Revolution, brought about by propaganda, took the place of organised international war.

Consider these things; for herein is the key to the facts of the period.

What Germany attempted to do by physical power the Bolshevik influence is attempting to do, and has largely done, by doctrine.

Germany sent forth a military force. The Bolshevik organisation sent forth an army of propagandists.

Papal and Moslem propaganda has also been active in the field, and each has been carrying forward a contemporary campaign, looking each to a revolution in its own favour.

The Bible speaks of this latter as the going forth of "three evil spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

This form of warfare has been quite as manifest and quite as far-reaching as was the physical warfare of the Great War.

What is the aim of the present war of propaganda?

1. Subversion of law.

2. Destruction of the administrative authority and organisation, which the propagandists call "Imperialism" and "Capitalism," etc.

These are the chief aims of the present psychical attack.

Before the psychical attack by propagandists Russia fell. Its Czar was slain, and the law and its administration were both subverted. It should be noted, however, that the law so subverted was not the Anglo-Saxon or Common Law. Before the doctrinal attack by the propagandists the Empires of Germany, Austria and Turkey fell. The administrative machinery was removed, and a new administration provisionally set up in each of these Empires; or, rather, in the room of each of these Empires.

Thus far the work of conquest by doctrinal weapons has progressed.

"Root and branch work" has been the order of the day. In Russia and in Turkey the classes in whose hearts and minds resided the law, and in whose hands had been for ages the administrative authority and power, were ruthlessly slain; and in Germany and Austria they are firmly suppressed.

The same type of doctrinal propaganda is honeycombing the U.S.A. and the Dominion of Canada; has caused the cleavage in Ireland; and is producing uncertainty and unrest in England and Scotland. This is the state of affairs through which we have passed during the last decade.

The era, now ending, has been

A NEGATIVE ERA.

It has been a time of pulling down; and the destructive work has been thoroughly done in Continental lands. At the beginning of that era there were six great Empires, six great administrations having Imperial status; administrating four great systems of law.

The Empires and Administrations were:—

Empires.	Law Systems.
China.	Confucian—Buddhistic law.
Turkey.	Moslem law.
Russia.	Autocratic law modified by the Greek Church Council of Grand Dukes.
Austria.	Civil law.
Germany.	Civil law.
Britain.	Common or Divine law.

Now mark what has happened. We represent this by striking out the Empires, administrations, and systems of law, which have suddenly passed away under the propagandist attack.

Digitized by Google

Mark that not one of these things were removed through the agency of the Great War. The question of the form of government of the Central Powers did not even arise in the council of nations which ended the war. The governments fell before the propagandist attack.

Empires.	Administrations.	Systems of Law.
~~China.~~	~~China.~~	~~Confucian law.~~
~~Turkey.~~	~~Turkey.~~	~~Moslem law.~~
~~Russia.~~	~~Russia.~~	~~Autocratic law.~~
~~Austria.~~	~~Austria.~~	Civil law.
~~Germany.~~	~~Germany.~~	Civil law.
Britain.	Britain.	Common or Divine law.

One Empire—Britain—and two systems of law remain.

Is it possible for the minds of men to grasp the scope of the tremendous destruction indicated by the above diagram? Most certain it is that the post-war generation does not realize the magnitude of the destruction thus wrought, or the great vacuum thus left in the world situation. Things of such magnitude as to cover the earth, and of such antiquity as to cover the historic ages, are gone. Imperial dignity was swept away, with its holders. Imperial authority was rent from the hands of Emperors and governments, leaving the whole governmental services, military, naval and civil, going abegging. What a huge field for exploitation by ambitious men and organisations!

This represents the domestic position in each Continental country where an Empire had been.

In the international field, the void left by the fall of Empires is just as clearly manifest. Manchuria looms out of the fog which covers the battlefield. The Southern forces of China have been driving towards it. The Soviet activities of Russia have been directed towards it; and now, in no uncertain tones, Japan has declared her active protectorate over it. Three nations in contest for Manchuria! How will the matter be settled?

Again: In the eyes of Russia, China, India, Afghanistan, Persia, Turkey, Mesopotamia and Palestine have seemed like ripe cherries to be plucked at will. They might remain but a dream but for the fact that Russia is under compulsion of circumstances to act abroad, or to fall at home. The Bible foretells Russia's ultimate action.

Again: In the eyes of Prussia, backed by Germany, it seems to be a foregone conclusion that the existing government of Russia will fall; and it has become the hope and purpose of Prussia, plus Germany, that she shall have the reorganising of Russia, and an outlet for her population and enterprise there. But Poland is in the way sadly. What will Germany do?

In the eyes of Mussolini, the Mediterranean is an Italian lake, and the lands bordering thereon the natural sphere of Italian colonisation and enterprise.

Thus nations are organizing for expansion on lines which must carry conflict of interests and of races.

One must not assume that because nations desire to expand that therefore they are yielding to a needless ambition. Germany is confined within limits which we should consider to be altogether too strait for the needs of our race: seventy millions of people within the compass of a country no larger than a Canadian Province. Italy with a rapidly increasing population is also confined within too narrow limits. Her children are saying to her "give place that we may dwell." In time past the United States received the overflow of these and other countries. But the United States has now closed the door to the overflow of the nations. Therefore they are seeking outlet elsewhere. And who shall blame them?

Thus there are real points of danger through the natural increase of people which must find an outlet for expansion.

Thus it is in the international situation. No amount of preaching and of peace propaganda can obviate these dangers. They must be met and overcome by some means. But, how shall it be done?

It is true that in the British Empire there is room enough and to spare. But against the free flow into the Empire there are two major obstacles. These are: national patriotism on the part of the people whose need is to migrate; and the matter of faith, or rather of creed, and of Church association.

This brings us to another set of facts which enter vitally into the present situation. These facts are: not nations, but racial and credal organisations.

There are two great organisations which are partly founded on race, and partly on creed, namely, the Roman Catholic Church and the Jew. The former, in its political aspect, may be classed as a Latin organisation—for the Anglo-Saxon Catholic is, as a rule, politically loyal to the British throne and administration, and has always opposed the claim of temporal power by the Popes applied to Britain. But with the Latin race it is otherwise. That great ecclesiastical organisation, the Papacy, has not as yet laid aside the thought of temporal power. The official journals which speak the mind of the Church makes that clear. The Continental field from which Imperial authority has been swept, as we have seen in the last ten years, offers a very attractive field for active striving after the temporal power which Emperors wielded until yesterday, and to which the Papacy might become heir to-day, as the Popes became heirs to the Cæsars some twelve hundred years ago. The preparation for a drive in the psychical world to this end is very widespread and powerful. It is a factor to be taken account of in the present condition of world affairs.

Again, founded partly on race, and chiefly on creed; nay, this time it will be safe to say, on faith; being a distinctive and non-Christian religion, is the activity of the international Jew. The time of the budding of the fig tree has come, and the Jew is forging to the front in the affairs of the world. In his mind is the hope of, and in his heart the conviction that he will attain to, the hegemony of the world, and that in the immediate future. To this end he is making use of the literary, scholastic, political and economic machinery of the nations, to create the condition and the attitude of mind generally which will enable him to step into the ruling position in the earth in the place of the Emperors and their governments which have so lately fallen.

These things are not dreams of what may be in the future. They are the things with which statesmen and governments have to reckon at the present time. And statesmen and governments are laying their plans and carrying them out to meet this condition of affairs. In these things are wrapped up explosive elements which will soon shake the world.

Such, then, is a glance at the facts of the present world condition as they are related to the non-British and American peoples, that is to say, the non-Israel peoples.

The last decade has been, in part, taken up with the removal of the Continental Empires and all that they stood for. Accordingly the Continental Empires which are not of Israel are gone. More and more the activity of the nations and of the organisations mentioned has been turned to preparation for the moment when each will aim at taking over the things which remain and which each has desired. Combinations—national, allied and institutional—have been carried forward to great lengths; soon the time of preparation will give place to the time of action in various lines. There will be negotiations, alliances, oppositions, and finally blows. Such is the only course that the movements now under way can be expected to take.

In the midst of all this flux and change one Empire has stood firm. Of course we refer to the only Empire remaining, namely that of Britain. It is unique in this, it is an Empire without an Emperor. It is an Empire which is united in loyalty to the King.

Now the King is declared to be the King of each separate Dominion and Commonwealth. Loyalty to an Emperor is not expressed. Why is this? It is because that by Divine appointment David and his successors are given the dignity of King, but not of Emperor. An Emperor is a King of KINGS. In the British Empire there is only ONE KING. Where, then, is the justification for calling the British "company of nations" an Empire? Its justification lies in the fact that in the Empire there is, in deed and fact, the "King of kings." He is the centre of authority and of government. He is the fountain of honour and of worship. "He is a great God and a great King." "He is our God, and we are the people of His pasture and the sheep of His hand."

This Empire has stood, and still stands, with all its administrative machinery, intact. It has stood contrary to the expectation of the world. But it has stood according to the revealed plan and purpose of Jehovah, the King of kings, in Israel-Britain.

While other nations have been passing through the crushing and grinding process, Britain, intact, has been carrying forward her administration within all the boundaries which were hers before the war, and over other lands and peoples which have come within the scope of her administration since the war. Thus by Britain and by the United States one-third of the human race has been made partakers of the freedom and equality of the Common Law. That this branch of the human family has preserved its organisation and stability, and has extended its influence over all the oceans and over so much of the earth, is a fact which should attract and hold the attention of the people. The course of this expansion has in no way been stayed by the events of the time. What shall be the place and part of the Anglo-Saxon in the struggle for expansion and supremacy which is now imminent?

The Divinely-declared purpose is that the Kingdom of God, as manifest in, and administered by, the Celto-Saxon race according to the principles of the Common Law, shall be extended to all the earth. It is the declared purpose of God that each nation shall find its place within that Commonwealth of nations, that each shall be subject to His rule, and that each shall accept and obey the Common Law. This is inevitable. How soon, time only will tell. In the meantime we shall be daily moving towards that event. No one race shall rule over another race. But God shall rule over all; the system of law which He requires to be obeyed and enforced must be the Common Law, and the administrative authority must be in the hand of His servant David.

Now, then, the stage is set for the great act of the drama through which we are now living. In it nation after nation, combination after combination, and institution after institution, will make attempts to gain the position dreamed of and desired by each. The struggle does not so vitally affect Britain and America as it affects the other nations, for our Empire organisation stands as firmly as ever it did, and occupies the position appointed for it of God. Its administration is seen to be easily the most desirable and efficient in the earth. This is the judgment of other nations, expressed again and again in general literature. The loyalty of the people is beyond question, as has been manifested again and again during the times of stress through which we have been called upon to pass. Therefore, the field of the Empire is not open to ambition nor to exploitation as was that of the other Empires which fell.

INTO THIS TIME WE HAVE NOW ENTERED. This is not a prophecy drawn from the Pyramid, nor from the prophecies; but is a conclusion arrived at from the consideration of the facts of the case. Preparations have been made, and are in progress, of which we have certain information. Plans have been formed and await the moment of opportunity, of which the governments and their departments know. Strategic positions have been taken up and are now occupied by rival forces, who watch each other over the boundaries. Treaties have been entered into, and their contents are well known to the responsible parties. What shall be the final upshot of all this?

> "And I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up, and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." (Dan. viii, 27.)

This is the end to which we are coming.

Finally, to this Kingdom the Lord shall come, bringing Divine wisdom and authority to bear on the circumstances of the world, and under His reign the nations shall dwell in peace.

THE END OF THE CHASTISEMENT—1845

BY P. W. THOMPSON, M.A.

(Author of The Old Book and the New Age, etc.)

WE believe that Mr. Llewellyn Thomas was the first writer upon the subject of the prophetic interpretation of Scripture to point out that the Seven Times' Chastisement of Israel had not wholly lapsed by the year 1800, and that a further term of years must run their course before the time of Israel's disfavour had completely vanished from the Divine mind.

Digitized by Google

Having dealt with the subject at length in Israel in Prophecy and History we have now neither space nor inclination to tread the path which we have already explored. Suffice it to say that we are assured that Mr. Thomas is as correct in this matter as we have found him to be in other matters. From our own calculations we regard the prophetic year 1845 (March, 1845, to March, 1846) as having been the era of total cessation of a chastisement which had endured for the great Seven Times. Any trouble which modern Israel has had since 1845 has been modern Israel's own fault.

Nor is it a hard task to ascertain which particular marks of Divine favour revealed themselves at this period. As seems to be the invariable case with Israel, particular mercies followed immediately upon particular and deserved hardships. Let us remember this for our present comfort and future hope.

Just before the commencement of the final period of chastisement (1702) and principally in the reign of William of Orange, certain reforms in banking, currency and finance took place which were the immediate and necessary prelude to the economic blessings attending the dying away of the tribulation. (Israel in Prophecy and History. Ch. vii.)

As time proceeded, and the Divine favour increasingly manifested itself, an economic situation was reached at which some of the blessings would themselves tend to become curses, unless succeeded by such further providences as would enable Israel to realize the possibilities of her own development. Certain adjustments became urgent. Between 1702 and 1842 trade had vastly increased, population had vastly increased, credit had vastly increased, but the insular wheat harvest could not similarly vastly increase. The population was underfed, owing to the heavy taxation of imported corn, at a time when such importation was essential to comfort. The credit given to foreign countries had not always been followed by the repayment of that which was due, though the temptation to grant the credit had been extreme. The greed which characterized the seizure of the opportunities given by the commercial expansion which had in part found its outlet in this unstable market had led to the employment of women and children in factories under such onerous and inhuman conditions as were an abomination to the Lord and to all honest men. And in 1842 the displeasure of the Almighty was very visibly seen in the land.

After the hot fit the cold. There was overwhelming depression in trade. Three thousand houses in Stockport had no tenants, and one-half the master-spinners failed. In Leeds one-fifth of the population were kept alive out of the poor-rate, and the condition of Sheffield was no better. The furnaces of Wolverhampton were extinguished, and there was rioting at Manchester. The national spirit seemed broken.

Within a year or two of 1842 the whole outlook, mental and physical, had completely and overwhelmingly changed. "The value of land rose, all the blast furnaces were re-lit—the amount paid in wages exceeded that ever known in this country, and wages too at a high rate. Large portions of the labouring classes not only enjoyed comfort, but commanded luxury."

The factor in this economic change was the, at first, almost unconscious realisation of the truth that in the railway there existed the lever which would raise us from our national depression. The origins of the railway boom lie wrapped in mystery, for, as Lord Beaconsfield said, of the capital that went to their construction large portions came from the country and from unknown people in the country. In the first instance these ultimately sound investments rather lent themselves to speculation, and there was a temporary cloud—an April shower. But the too hazardous speculators vanished and the railways remained, with the results noted above. All men who wanted to work had work, and at such wages as were not known before.

Nevertheless, the outstanding feature of this time of grace was the alteration in our system of taxation inaugurated by Sir Robert Peel, for this eventuated in cheap food. For wages to be high and for food to be cheap is, economically, an earthly paradise for the mass of the nation. We have dealt with the wages. We shall shortly deal with the food.

Sir Robert's greatest Budget was passed in 1845. He continued the Income Tax (previously voted in the Budget of 1842) and used the surplus thus obtained to sweep away a vast number of duties upon imports which weighed upon trade, and to put an entire end to all duties on exports. In 1849 a Navigation Act was passed which threw open our ports to foreign shipping. The results, coupled with the effects produced by quick and certain railway transit, were tremendous. The Golden Age had arrived (it was entirely Israel's fault that it had not), and in the Great Exhibition of 1851 men assembled to prate of the brotherhood of nations. Let us add, and with much pleasure, that Fielden's Act, passed in 1847, limited the work of all young persons and women in factories to ten hours per day. This was a step in the right direction, and is a pleasant contrast to the merely material aspirations of that generation.

But the noblest reform we have to chronicle was the total repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846, which repeal meant cheap food for the workers. Hitherto this reform had been held up, partly, at any rate, on the ground that its advent would mean loss of employment to the English agricultural labourer so soon as he ceased to be protected from foreign competition. But, as one of the said labourers trenchantly remarked at a public meeting—"I be protected, and I be starving." The measure was passed in the Commons by a majority of 98 in a House of 556. In the Lords the second reading was carried by a majority of 47 in a House of 375, and the House never divided on the third reading. Yet Cobden himself admitted that in the Lords there were not 20 members, and in the Commons not 100 members, who were really disposed for the measure.

Is it unreasonable to see the hand of God in that move for the extension of the railways whose origin no man could exactly trace, and in the repeal of the Corn Laws, carried by majorities in both Houses at a time when, if men had followed their own inclinations, it would have been lost in the Commons by a majority of 356, and never heard of in the Lords at all?

Cheap food, high wages, more humane conditions for the workers, no export duties, and few import duties, were the economic signs of this era. Had Israel at this time sought spiritual blessing as she obtained economic blessing we might now be in the Millennium!

THE FRIENDSHIP OF CHRIST IN THE LIGHT OF BRITISH-ISRAEL TRUTH.

PART III.

By W. G. DUNCAN THOMPSON.

IT is not within the scope of our subject to identify Britain—Brith-ain—the covenant land, by these and scores of other proofs, with ancient Israel. That has been done most effectively by many competent writers.

I am taking the fact for granted and simply trying to use it to show the constancy, the truth and the love of Christ for the world in that He has fulfilled His promises of old and that by doing so He has made another contact with the world which should provide us with a deeper insight into His character and a greater knowledge of His friendship.

If the idea of David's throne and the Israel Kingdom being the nucleus of Christ's Kingdom and being established in Britain startles and even shocks us, as it has startled and shocked a good many Christian people, let us at least be brave enough to decide why we are startled and shocked before rejecting the idea. Such a feeling may certainly be caused by the natural repulsion from error or irreverence, but it may also be the result of deeply-rooted tradition, and I am sure no Christian of to-day has been so perturbed and startled by British-Israel Truth as were the Jews at the claim of Jesus of Nazareth to be their glorious Messiah. It is a solemn question which is being put before the Churches at this moment by the British-Israel Movement, and is no less than this :—

Are you going to reject the Christ as your national King as the Jews of old rejected Him because it does not square with your pre-conceived ideas ?

If we study this Kingdom conception and use the key of Christ's own Personality and ways of working, we find it squares and squares gloriously, and gives us fresh light and knowledge of Him.

At the risk of being overlong and even tedious, let me remind you, since it is so important to our subject, of God's methods of working for man. All His blessings, save His Creation blessings, are given through man. The Bible was written materially by man ; the knowledge of the Gospel was carried over the earth by man ; the world was offered salvation by the Man ; and it is man in his weakness not his strength, but conquering through the might of God behind and within him.

So with His Kingdom. It began on earth in weakness even as did the King, it passed through fiery trial as did He. It was unknown as He was, and it is only now in God's good time, when it is adult and strong, that it is being revealed as Christ became revealed when He reached man's estate. God works by means of the weak and in man's eyes foolish things, but His results are sure.

To study God's care and love for His Kingdom through the story of the Bible must surely bring us closer to Him as the sheep of His hand.

Look at that Kingdom to-day, not perfect as the King, but blossoming and filling the earth with fruit in such manner as to be filling all the nations with astonishment.

Our Empire held together, not by force but by mutual affection, is beyond their comprehension, as the daily papers admit ; our continuous and persistent efforts on behalf of the other nations of the world is equally mysterious to them ; while the part Britain is playing at Locarno in not only binding foreign countries together in friendly conference, but shouldering their burdens to the breaking-point, is unparalleled in history.

Read a précis of Britain's work in the League of Nations, and then read the Sermon on the Mount. Read a list of Britain's possession over one-fourth of the earth, and then read God's covenants with Abraham and David ; and then if you do not see a Power, almost ready to His hand, by which He will unite all the world into His universal Kingdom, over which He shall come to rule, then surely must your eyes be holden in blindness.

We have yet very far to go, many national sins to deal with and perhaps many sorrows, before we, as a nation, shall be inspired to give that cry which no nation has yet given—the national cry to Christ to come back and reign over us. We came within measurable distance of it towards the end of the Great War when the King nationally called upon the people for national prayer ; and God heard us. From that moment our armies never had a set-back and victory leaped towards us.

When that cry is made, can we doubt our King's hearing us and answering ? He answers the individual cry for the Saviour. He answers the Church's cry for the Spirit. He could not refuse His Kingdom's cry for her King. Nor would He refuse any nation's cry, but looking at the world to-day, is there any other nation likely to make such a cry save Israel-Britain, and even she, with this Truth, may need to go again through the fires before we make it ?

Yet although we still have far to go, we also have come far, and it is to Britain to whom all the nations look to-day for guidance. I heard the other day a League of Nations' official say that when a delegate of the British Empire rose to speak, whether he was from Australia, Canada, New Zealand or from the Homeland, there was always an intense silence while the delegates of all nations waited to hear his words as if the Empire knew more than they and had the key to their difficulties.

If only Britain was fully conscious of her King and her destiny, how much more she might accomplish. It is almost solely through her Churches that the Gospel has been spread over all the earth, and it is through her might and power and idealism that the world is beginning to learn the rudiments of a universal Kingdom of peace and righteousness.

Now, in concluding, what is the force of all this from the point of view of the friendship of Christ ?

Surely it is that throughout the Scriptures God in Christ exposes His very heart to us in His message to His chosen earthly people.

And it is the heart of our Friend we must needs reach.

While His Church is His Body and is used in His eternal purpose towards the world, His Kingdom is His Bride, and through all the Bible it is to her His yearning love is extended in the tenderest and most pleading passages.

"Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you."

"Can a woman forget her sucking child that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb ? Yea, they may forget. Yet will I not forget thee."

"Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of My hands."

Digitized by Google

" I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name, thou art Mine."

" Thy Maker is thy husband. For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid My face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer."

"As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you."

" Jesus wept "—over whom? Jerusalem.

" I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee."

All these are passages addressed to Israel the nation, and surely if we would wish to be the Friends of Christ, to abide in His love, to understand Him, we cannot be indifferent to the dearest, long-sought wish of His heart, the conscious answering cry of His Bride to Him, and if we accept the so well-attested facts that our race is that Bride, then indeed our hearts must turn to Him in deepest love.

When we look upon our nation loaded down with every single gift He promised to His Bride, Israel—a third of the inhabited globe given to us for a dwelling, victory, freedom, honour and countless other blessings which no other nation has ever possessed, can we dare to think He has so adorned or will adorn a stranger and forget His own whom He swore by Himself to Abraham that He would never forget?

And when this Kingdom-consciousness is born in us; when we really understand our King's relationship to us as King; and when we further realize that this mighty King is coming soon to take the kingdoms of the world, to right all wrongs, and to gather us to Himself, simply because we have cried to Him to come, then shall we not thrill to the echo of His approaching feet as it is cast back along the corridor of present-day history; and as we come at the close of the year to the remembrance of our King's first Coming and hear once more the Christmas carols, shall we not listen with a greater understanding to the refrain, " Noel, Christ is the King of Israel "?

Surely as we realize that our own intimate friend is our Saviour, our Priest and our King literally, the straight line of personal friendship will take on a deeper, truer meaning, and in the strength of that revelation we shall go out into the world better men and women, more earnest members of our Church, and preach to all the world, with which we meet, the Gospel of the Kingdom.

This is, as I understand it, the message and meaning of British-Israel Truth. If this message has reached our hearts then we shall see a new radiance, a new glory in the face of our heavenly Friend. We shall still see the thorn-crowned brow, the eyes so tender and loving; but we shall see there also the spiritual beauty of our High Priest, touched with the spirit of our infirmities, but spiritually able to intercede for us with His Father and to forgive us our sins. But we shall see more than this, for in that Face we shall discern the serene majesty of the King and understand its meaning, and when, in His chosen and appointed time, our King appears again upon this earth, in awful majesty, we shall have no terrors; for in that Face, outshining the sun in His splendour, we shall see also the Face of our own familiar Friend, and, most wonderful of all, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.

SOME COMMENTS CONCERNING DAN.

" For ever, O Lord, Thy word is settled in Heaven" (Psalm cxix, 89).

BY PROFESSOR EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., &c.

MANY have ably written on Dan the man, and Dan the tribe. The present writer wishes to draw reading attention to this wonderful man, the judge, who was one of the twelve ancestors of our covenant Saxon race.

Dan is introduced in Gen. xxx, 6: " And Rachel said, God hath judged me, and hath also heard my voice, and hath given me a son: Therefore she called his name Dan," a judge.

Dan had one son, Hushim, or Shuham, who was dumb, and is said to have slain Esau, his grandfather's brother.

In the times of Moses, Dan was one of the most numerous tribes, and could put more fighting men in the field than any other tribe, Judah alone excepted. He numbered 64,400 men.

When the twelve fighting tribes were formed into four groups of three tribes each, Dan was put at the head of his group, and was given control of the north side of the newly-formed British square, that is, the square of the covenant man.

Num. ii, 25: " The standard of the camp of Dan shall be on the north side by their armies; and the captain of the children of Dan shall be Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai."

When the twelve spies were sent by Moses to search out the land of Canaan, Dan was represented by Ammiel the son of Gemalli.—Num. xiii, 12.

It might be well to state that each tribe had a recognised leader who was known as prince. Thus, in Num. xxxiv, 22, we read:—" And the prince of the tribe of the children of Dan was Bukki the son of Jgoli."

Down in Egypt, the old man Israel, before he died, indicated the future, to some extent, of his sons. Of Dan he said, Gen. xlix, 16:—" Dan shall judge his people as one of the tribes of Israel." Three hundred years later Moses said, in Deut. xxxiii, 22:—" Dan is a lion's whelp. He shall leap from Bashan."

We would make a comment on the future outlook of Israel and Moses concerning Dan.

1st. Israel asserts that Dan shall judge his people as one of the tribes of Israel.

Primarily, this would seem to signify that no matter how Dan might, in the future, be split into sections, through much wanderings, and mingle with the other Israel tribes, still he was to be kept separate, in part, from his brethren, and form a government so as to rule himself.

We know, from history, that Dan, at an early date, did largely separate from his tribal brethren. We can trace him through Europe, Greece, Russia, the Balkan regions, up to the Baltic, Denmark, and on to Scotland, Ireland and England.

One spot he selected and possessed before the time of Christ, viz. Denmark, the limit, or bound of Dan. Through good and evil, in peace and in war, Dan has remained in that north-west corner of Europe, and has truly judged and governed his people. The word of the old man Israel has been made good by the history of Dan the judge.

2nd. Moses said:—"He shall leap from Bashan." A very remarkable statement. Dan, in the main, was settled on the upper reaches of the Jordan, or river of Dan. Bashan was adjoining and east of the Jordan. Bashan was the home-land, to a large extent, of Gad, Reuben and the half tribe of Manasseh.

Hence, this tribe was so situated that, in the stress of war, irregularly pressing in on the north and west bounds, and also hindered by his own tribal brethren from moving south, his easiest exit was east and north-east, which would lead him to leap or pass out from his home, via the land of Bashan.

Such a movement provided for Dan a position of advantage in his northward movement in Asia, preparatory to his western passage into Scythia or Russia.

Very good history shows that major Dan went out by Bashan, and that Dan has judged his people in Denmark, where he is now governing them before our eyes. Thus, then, we have two prophetic utterances concerning Dan made good.

When Moses went up into Mount Nebo, the Lord showed him all the land of Gilead unto Dan. The mountain climber can test this thing to-day. It is a fact that from Pisgah a man can behold Gilead and the land of Dan of those ancient days. This, in itself, is a modern way-mark, testifying to the veracity of the Old Book, which stands all tests.

Josh. xix, 47:—"And the coast of the children of Dan extended too little for them; therefore the children of Dan went up to fight against Leshem, and took it . . . dwelt therein, and called Leshem, Dan, after the name of Dan their father." Dan was great at naming the regions and rivers he visited.

From the history standpoint this is important. It is one of Dan's many moves looking toward their future activities in centuries to follow.

One of the results of Dan's north-and westward movement was to place him in a strategic position in relation to Asia Minor, Greece, Macedon and the Isles of Greece. This is exceedingly important in view of much of Grecian and Macedonian history.

From the territorial possession of Dan four cities were taken and given to the tribe of Levi. These four were Eltekeh, Gibbethon, Aijalon and Gath-Rimmon, including the suburbs of each city.—Josh. xxi, 23.

We read that in the Song of Deborah she asks: "Why did Dan remain in the ships?" Doubtless, he did so for safety, for navigation, trade, commerce, and unconsciously for great future movements.

We find, from ancient history, that the Danites were skilled workmen and expert well-diggers.

That Dan recognized the necessity of religion in a practical way we shall see later, when we examine into his migrations somewhat.

THE LATE BISHOP TITCOMB.

THE late Right Rev. Jonathan Holt Titcomb was the first Bishop of Rangoon, Burmah. He was consecrated by the late Archbishop Tait in 1877. Prior to this he had been Vicar of St. Stephen's, South Lambeth. After five years in Burmah he was obliged to retire and return to England owing to ill-health. On his recovery he rendered great service as deputy for the Bishop of London, superintending the stations of the Established Church on the Continent of Europe. In 1886 he became Vicar of St. Peter's, Brockley. For a period he was President of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association. He was a frequent contributor to "The Banner of Israel."

His work and his writings and addresses were a great help to our Cause. He was a learned man of sound judgment, urbane and of a lovable character. He won the affection of all who knew him. He was courageous and fearless in his proclamation of Israel Truth. The Editor of "The Banner of Israel" wrote of him as "A Prince in Israel." He passed away on April 2nd, 1887. His books are valuable contributions among our B.-I. literature. In his introduction to his first book, "The Anglo-Israel Post Bag," he says his aim is to show that there are no insuperable difficulties in regard to Philology or History; that there are many strong probabilities based on Scripture predictions which are much more easily to be interpreted than on any other principle, and that there are singular confirmations from a number of independent facts. He emphasises the folly of those who condemn without examination.

EXTRACTS FROM "THE CREATION OF MATTER."

BY THE REV. W. PROFEIT, M.A.

"IT is, we say, indirectly that atoms can be weighed. It is far from the power of man to separate atom from atom, weigh the one against the other, and note the perfection of their balance. It is far beyond his power to devise and make a balance for an experiment so fine. He cannot deal with single atoms. He lacks, even when aided by the microscope, the perceptive power and the refinement of touch capable of distinguishing, handling, or in any way singling them out and acting on them. And yet single atoms have been in some way dealt with, handled, and acted on. Every particle has been weighed, and weighed to a nicety, is of a weight that corresponds, with minutest exactness, with that of the countless particles of its kind. Never was balancing like it. The greatly differing weights in the different kinds of atoms so small render more impressive the sameness in the same element. What, then, hath weighed them with such accuracy? Where were the balances found? What possesses the power of using them in such a fashion? What made all the atoms of hydrogen of one lightness? What made those of oxygen sixteen times heavier, those of all the elements just their own numbers of times heavier? Let a man produce before a company huge scales of accuracy so exquisite that a grain of dust could disturb the balance; let him put into the one a mighty mass of iron, into the other of copper; let him vary the substances, and consequently the size of the masses; let him show a large number to choose from, and in every case let there be a perfect level and stillness of the scales, let there be accuracy such that the least dust would be seen to disturb the balance —would not every witness be filled with admiration, and ask in wonder how such accuracy could be attained, and be sure that much thought, and planning, and closest attention, and care had gone before? Would not every witness regard with scorn the suggestion that all was the result of chance? And when we consider the elements of the universe, their infinitesimal smallness and the nicety of the weighing with which they are weighed, what ought to be the boundlessness of our wonder, the fire of our admiration; how ought we to yield our whole being to the conviction that a seeing and understanding nature hath done this, that a hand of inconceivable power and fineness of touch, associated with matchless intelligence, hath accomplished it!" . . . . .

"On the supposition that the order existing among the elements of matter is due to mind, how great that mind must be. The perfection of the adjustments, the complexities and extent and amount of arrangements, are such as to demand in the intelligence producing them power immeasurably beyond all bounds that imagination can conceive. He who could devise in thought, and realize in fact, the vast and intricate system of the material world, who could make it so rich in beauty, who could put into it so extraordinary a wealth of order, who could make it throughout all its borders, in every, even the smallest portion of its extensive territories, such as to create a boundless enthusiasm of admiration, must be as far above the sons of men in understanding as the most distant star, from which it takes light thousands of years to come, is above the earth. The union of suns and planets and moons, of clusters and galaxies and nebulæ, is set in an order that declares the glory of the wisdom of Him Who built them and appointed them their place. But the glory of wisdom which they proclaim is not to be compared with the glory, is almost infinitesimally small compared with the glory displayed in the universe of atoms. Can then order so amazing be referred to chance? Can that which is worthy of a mind so far transcending all measures of power be the work of, or have as the ground of its being, any unintelligent principle? Can triumphs, which demand for their achieving the understanding of a God, be ascribed to any blind nonentity? They cannot, they cannot. Any such suggestion is an insult to the poorest understanding."

"A finite and related Maker or Builder of the universe would have been entirely dependent on chance. He could have done nothing of Himself. He could have done nothing without finding material elements and perceiving natures, ordered and related to each other, and to His own powers, or in such a condition that His own related powers could bring them into order and relationship to each other. It was a matter of chance that He should find a single particle of matter or ether point or perceiving nature anywhere within His range or limited sphere of action. It was a matter of contingencies without number that He should find primal elements sufficient to form the least drop of water, the least grain of sand. How inconceivably vast the multitude of contingencies involved in His finding them in quantities sufficient for being built up into a world filled with organisations and perceiving natures. The dependence on chance, therefore, of such a being would have been immeasurably, yea, infinitely great. Chance would have played the all-important part, and the chances against would have been, not merely as the number of atoms, ether points, and perceiving natures, but as these multiplied indefinitely. The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable that the Architect and Builder of the universe is not of limited and related powers, but unlimited and absolute."

WHAT IS THE VITAL POINT OF CONVERSION?—I.

BY HENRY D. HOUGHTON.

PERHAPS some may marvel that the writer dare take pen to write on such a well-worn theme; possibly thinking that no new thing can be said upon it, and no new light be given.

As Christian Churches we have wandered far from the simplicity that is in the Gospel. Many of those in constant attendance upon the Churches know not what are the vital necessities of saving faith.

Long and elaborate discourses have been given, and many treatises written which have multiplied instructions, but only bewildered true seekers.

There are millions to-day in our midst who would dearly like to know what are the true and vital essentials of Salvation; and if they are declared clearly and with Scriptural authority and free from additions of men, many indeed would be delighted to hear and to follow.

Digitized by Google

Thousands of sincere earnest souls spend a whole lifetime in uncertainty, because they fear they have not believed aright or in the right thing.

How simple was the Apostles' way! How direct was their testimony! How concentrated and pointed was their instruction and their practice in accepting converts!

How free were their meetings from all attempts to magnify themselves!

There was no hiding in confessional boxes, confessing all the secret sins of the heart to a man who was a fellow-sinner.

There was no coming and bending down at the Communion rail before another man equally lost and undone like themselves.

There was no lording over God's heritage or the taking of any glory to themselves.

The taking or refusing of Jesus was done while the Apostles preached! Not in any hole-in-the-corner meeting afterwards. But AS the Apostles preached it says "Many believed."

If our people were taught that the acceptance of Jesus Christ as the Son of God was the one vital, living, renewing thing, what a difference would be seen in our churches and in our land!

Quite recently I heard of a case where a young man sought admission to a certain church, and was refused because he had not been to their penitent-form.

Now there are passages of Scripture which are very specific, that declare in the plainest language what it is that must be believed if we are to be saved.

Now let us see if we can find out from Scripture itself, from the words and practice of Our Lord, and from the words and practice of the Apostles, what the one vital necessity of Salvation is.

Take Christ's own words first of all. "And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment. Of sin, because they believe not on Me." (John xvi, 8-9.)

Take the case of the healing of the blind man recorded in St. John ix.

Verse 35: "Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when He had found him, He said unto him, 'Dost thou believe on the Son of God?'"

Now the man was so ignorant that He did not know who was the Son of God; and so of necessity he puts this question to Our Lord, "Who is He, Lord, that I might believe on Him?" Then Jesus answers, "Thou hast both seen Him, and it is He that talketh with thee." Then comes the man's brief but sufficient confession, "Lord, I believe. And he worshipped Him."

Is there a denomination or church in our land which would receive a man on such a confession?

Again, take these words of Our Lord to the Jews: "For if ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." (John viii, 24.)

Now if those words are true, then, of necessity, the converse is: "If ye believe that I am He, then ye shall be saved."

Then in verse 28 we have this: "Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am He."

This is the theme and teaching of many passages of Scripture.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life." (John vi, 47.)

It is not: "He that believeth in the Church"; or, "He that believeth in all the theories of the Churches"; or even, "He that believeth he is saved shall be," but "HE THAT BELIEVETH ON ME." In other words, "Believeth that I am He."

The acceptance of Christ as the Son of God is the vital, saving, renewing thing that transforms and brings to the man, whether he knows it for the moment or not, Eternal Life!

Take those glorious passages in John iii: "That whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (verse 16.)

"He that believeth on Him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already."

And that wonderful last verse in the same chapter: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life."

But St. John in his Epistles is very bold, and wondrously clear.

"Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God." (1 John iv, 2.)

And again, verse 15: "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."

Shall we pause to see if we really take this in? St. John there declares that whosoever confesses that Jesus is the Son of God IS SAVED!

A tremendous statement; and one utterly beyond and at variance with the accepted usages of to-day.

Again in chapter v, verse 1, St. John reaffirms the same great principle of Life Eternal, though in exceedingly brief terms: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."

In the opening chapter of St. John's Gospel we have the same Life Eternal shown as springing up in all who accept Jesus as the Christ.

"But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." (verses 12, 13.)

Clearly, the believing on His Name brings Salvation!

Take Our Lord's words after His resurrection to doubting Thomas, after He had bidden him thrust his hand into His side, and be not faithless but believing. "Thomas, because thou hast seen Me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, AND YET HAVE BELIEVED." (John xx, 29.)

That was Thomas' conversion! For only eight days before he had said: "Except . . . I will not believe." But now, at the sight of the evidences, the print of the nails, the spear wound in the side, He cries out (and here is the crisis, the vital point of his conversion): "My Lord and my God."

On one occasion Our Lord put a very strange question to the Pharisees, which, I am afraid, even to this day, is not thoroughly understood. "What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is He?"

The first part of this question is often taken as the subject of an address. But the whole point and purpose of it is in the last portion, "Whose Son is He?" This has been wholly neglected. It comes out very clearly in the other words of Our Lord, which follow their answer.

"They say unto Him, David's."

He had however in mind a greater and far more important Sonship, and He wished to teach them that!

His object was not to puzzle or confound the Pharisees in argument. He wanted to show them the great central Truth of the Word that Christ was the Son of God.

"If David then call Him Lord, how is He his Son?" (Matt. xxii, 42-45.)

He wished to show them that David knew and prophesied that the Christ Who was to come would be Divine in origin, the Son of God!

Take Christ's words in Matthew xvi, 15-18: "He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

There was the glorious confession of Peter's faith; and it must have been Peter's conversion; for Christ immediately answered, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father, which is in heaven." Then comes a message for all men, and for all time. . . . "And upon this rock" (the Sonship, the fact of His being the Son of the living God) "I will build My church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Now Christ there says most distinctly that this is the foundation Truth upon which His Church is to be built. And this is how He is building it to-day!

That is how each seeker enters; and by the same means, the revealing of this great Truth by the Father direct to the seeker, that Christ is the Son of the living God; and all this without the interference or patronage of men! Though "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God."

We do not make enough of this all-important declaration of Our Lord. It is rarely quoted except when it is necessary to reply to the Papist. It is, however, far more important for us to use it, and to declare it as the foundation-stone, the beginning of the Christian life itself. It is the one vital separating thing!

Note how plainly both St. Matthew and St. Luke in their first chapters make clear Christ's Divine origin.

And St. John begins his marvellous Gospel with the same declaration, but in even a bolder and diviner form.

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . All things were made by Him; and without Him was not any thing made that was made."

That was the foundation upon which John built up his Gospel; and it was the same foundation which Our Lord Himself had set forth as that upon which He would build His Church.

Christ's great object in His teaching was to prove Who He was; to gather around Him those who were truly convinced of His Divine origin.

Why all His marvellous miracles, why all His wonderful works, His going about doing good, His cleansing of the lepers, His restoring of the sick, His rebuke to the raging seas and wind, His raising of the dead? Why? Why?

They had for their ultimate object the proving of Who He was! For on that glorious foundation—that He was the Son of God—was to be built up the faith of all future generations. And so that very necessary foundation must be strongly and truly laid.

On one occasion the Jews came round about Him and said: "How long dost Thou make us to doubt? If Thou be the Christ, tell us plainly."

Now note Our Lord's answer: "I told you and ye believed not: the works that I do in My Father's name, they bear witness of Me." And again: "If I do not the works of My Father, believe Me not. But if I do, though ye believe not Me, believe the works; that ye may know," (and here is the object and purpose of it all) "and believe, that the Father is in Me, and I in Him." (St. John x, 24-38.)

We have the same thing in Christ's private talk with His disciples just before His death. "Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me? The words that I speak unto you I speak not of Myself: but the Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works.

"Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me, or else believe Me for the very works' sake." (John xiv.)

In that same chapter Philip seems to doubt Our Saviour's words, for he exclaims: "Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us"; or, "We will be satisfied."

Note Our Lord's reply: "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip?"

There had not yet come to Philip the great enlightenment. But Christ goes on, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."

That was the declaration that Philip needed. There was the opening up to Philip of Christ's Divine origin and Sonship; and that was Philip's conversion.

SIR ARTHUR KEITH'S THEORIES.

By the Rev. Canon W. D. Springett, D.D. (Oxon.).

Many years' study of the nature of the human race, its origin, and its possible future, have led me, in the first place, to the conviction that it is impossible to account for the origin and the maintenance of personalities and things that we can see or hear or otherwise touch with our senses, without taking for granted the existence of other persons and things, that co-exist with them, although we cannot touch them with any of our material organs of sensation.

For this real, but unseen, order I will use the word "spiritual." And again, as the relations of existences in this sphere of being, which I can examine, are all thought-out relations, I am convinced that there must be a supreme mind which has thought them out. (I say "mind," not "minds," for ultimately there seems to be an underlying unity of government and co-relations through the universe, so that Primary Intelligence would seem to be a Unity.)

Digitized by Google

Applying these convictions to the question whether human thought, human reason, human sense of a moral law, and universal human instinct of a super-human order of Life and Power, are merely the results of the development of the material human brain, or whether they imply an immaterial, but real, personality above the material brain, I should, in view of my general conclusions, argue thus.

All manifestation of human intelligence, moral sense, and recognition of higher orders of being, are, without doubt, closely connected with the condition of the human, material brain. An injury to that brain is an injury to these manifestations; a cultivation of that material brain assists in their higher development. The close connection is proved. But is that the same conclusion as being certain that the destruction of the human material brain means the annihilation of that Power which has been closely allied, yet not absolutely identifiable, with it, up to the event which we call "death"? Can we assert this? It seems to me that we cannot. A strong spiritual nature may go with a weak physical nature; a powerful intellect with a weak moral sense, and, in each case, vice versa. The physical brain may be partly injured—yet will realize its injury—as in cases known to us, and endeavour to repair it. Whence comes this power? Can matter, of itself, have the power of memory, the power of imagination, the power of humour, the power of moral sense, the power of mathematical calculation, the powers of a Senior Wrangler, or of a Fellow of the Royal Society? Can matter compose an oratorio? I feel compelled to suppose a Power, which I will call Spirit, overruling matter, though for a time very closely connected with it. I cannot account for Life, for Thought, for Force, intimately as they are associated with matter, without feeling sure that there is a Power beyond, behind, above, though within them.

A young child of only five years, who was talking about her mother dying, was asked "What do you mean by dying?" and the person from whom I had the story said the child replied, "Why, her 'think' has gone away." I have never forgotten the child's instinct for connecting "living," "moving" and "thinking"—and "death" not as an ending, but a dissolving between them and the body.

I believe, with the writer of Genesis, God breathed the "Breath of Life" and (material) man became a "Living Soul."

JOHN BUNYAN.

I KNOW of no book, the Bible excepted as above all comparison, which I, according to my judgment and experience, could so safely recommend as teaching and enforcing the whole saving truth according to the mind that was in Jesus Christ, as the Pilgrim's Progress. It is, in my conviction, incomparably the best summa theologiae evangelicae ever produced by a writer not miraculously inspired.—S. T. COLERIDGE.

The style of Bunyan is delightful to every reader, and invaluable as a study to every person who wishes to obtain a wide command over the English language. The vocabulary is the vocabulary of the common people. There is not an expression, if we except a few technical terms of theology, which would puzzle the rudest peasant. We have observed several pages which do not contain a single word of more than two syllables. Yet no writer has said more exactly what he meant to say. For magnificence, for pathos, for vehement exhortation, for subtle disquisition, for every purpose of the poet, the orator and the divine, this homely dialect, the dialect of plain working men, was perfectly sufficient. There is no book in our literature on which we would so readily state the fame of the old unpolluted English language, no book which shows so well how rich that language is in its own proper wealth, and how little it has been improved by all that it has borrowed.—LORD MACAULAY.

His is a homespun style, not a manufactured one: and what a difference is there between its homeliness and the flippant vulgarity of the Roger L'Estrange and Tom Brown school. If it is not a well of English undefiled, to which the poet as well as the philologist must repair, if they would drink of the living waters, it is a clear stream of current English, the vernacular speech of his age, sometimes indeed in its rusticity and coarseness but always in its plainness and its strength. John Bunyan—the one man who has attained to write a successful prose allegory on a large scale, and to infuse true emotion into an exercise of ingenuity, and who probably owed less to study and training than any other of the great authors of the modern world .... of Bunyan's character there can be but one opinion; he was a truly Apostolic man. As no one's dictation is more forcible, unadulterated Saxon, so no life has better expressed the sturdy, sterling virtues of the Englishman.—RICHARD GARNETT.

A stranger who admires and loves Bunyan approaches Bedford as a poet or a divine would enter Smyrna; the former thinking only of Homer, and the latter only of Polycarp; and both trying how vividly they can realize the image of their favourite, amid the scenes once consecrated by his presence, and still enshrined by his memory. I felt no difficulty, on entering Bedford, and walking around it, to associate everything with Bunyan, or to enshrine anything with his Pilgrim. The town, indeed, did not seem to me "the city of destruction"; and the bridge was too good, and the water too clear to allow the river to be regarded as "the Slough of Despond": but it was hardly possible not to see Christian in every poor man who carried a burden, and Christian in every poor woman who carried a market-basket in one hand, and led a child with the other. One sweet-looking peasant girl, also, might have been Mercy's youngest sister. She would have been beautiful anyway; but she was enchanting upon the spot where Bunyan's Mercy (that finished portrait of female loveliness) walked and wept. In like manner, any ragged urchin, if only robust and boisterous enough, and evidently the ringleader of fun or mischief, seemed the boy Bunyan himself, although only a few minutes before a venerable old man had seemed the very personification of the Baptist Minister of Bedford; but no one seemed to be the Glorious Dreamer, although many looked sleepy enough.—ROBERT PHILIP.

HONOUR TO ENGLAND.

A FRENCHMAN'S TRIBUTE.

PROFESSOR JEAN LA CECILIA.

THE Nobel Prize is an excellent institution, but I should welcome the foundation of a prize to be awarded to the nation that since the beginning of the nineteenth century stands as an example to the world by her moral qualities, generosity, practical initiative, and devotion to the interests of mankind.

Although a good, patriotic Frenchman, if such a prize were instituted, I sincerely think it should be bestowed on England. To begin with, you delivered Europe and ourselves from the tyranny of Napoleon, whose regime has been called by a French thinker "the military orgy." You succeeded in that great undertaking, although you had a very small Army and scanty resources at your disposal. But you knew how to make a good use of them, and nothing is more admirable than the Peninsular War. Italy and Belgium are indebted to England for strong support ; nay, you partly helped them to come into being.

In 1873 Lord Granville stopped Bismarck from crushing France. Before 1914 the Entente Cordiale simply meant that you were to support us by means of your powerful Fleet. Unfortunately we were not as ready as we should have been ; 1870, nevertheless, might have been a useful preliminary warning of German intentions. We ought, ever since that fateful date, to have acted as a strong, united people, forgetful of previous discords, concentrating our attention on our home defence and sinking our party differences. Unfortunately it was not so. French heroism had to face an unprecedented ordeal. Well, you did not grumble at our lack of preparation and foresight ; you readily accepted a burden of increased responsibilities as an Ally—and then you realized that wonderful achievement—namely, raising nearly six million men, training, arming, equipping them in the very course of war. It was a miracle of organization thus to manufacture defensive weapons in the midst of a terrific struggle, when savagely attacked on all sides. England knows how to rise to any emergency.

Now for British generosity. A considerable number of our political refugees, monarchs or private citizens, Charles X, Louis Philippe, Napoleon III, and many others, found in England the comfort and assistance that were denied them in their own country. England, be it said to her credit, does not banish her citizens. Although the majority of your people belong to the Protestant creed, the Roman Catholic congregations and Sisters of Charity ejected from France since 1900-03 have been kindly received in England. Such a fact speaks highly in favour of the moral standard of a nation.

After the Great War, although sorely tried yourselves and confronted with so many economic difficulties, such as 2,000,000 unemployed, you came to the help of France, adopting 100 towns and villages of our devastated area. Mr. Bonar Law suggested that the Inter-Allied debts should be cancelled, but M. Poincaré declined the generous offer. Actuated by your Christian spirit, and also common sense, you declined to try to attempt to stamp Germany out of existence ; you thought you must be merciful to those who are fallen, however cruel the enemy may have been to you and others in the past.

The benefactress of mankind, England works with earnest zeal and more than any other nation for the success of the League of Nations. You endeavour to put the Bible and the Gospel into practice. This remark of mine may cause some of our sceptical boulevardiers to sneer, but those who sneer at peace and charity are not worth noticing.

In reference to your home policy in the nineteenth century, your statesmen were men of unimpeachable honesty ; they worked for the public good and succeeded in satisfying the claims of your different social classes ; they reconciled conflicting interests by their fairness and sense of public duty and justice. What was the result ? Your history is an organic whole, a sort of harmonious development, the course of which is not marred or disturbed by sanguinary and useless revolutions, such as we in France have known too many. That unexampled record of a nation is due to many causes, chiefly to the ideal fostered by public spirit, tradition, and education. That ideal is summed up in those few words, "Be a gentleman "—that is to say, avoid doing what you should blush to do, love your country but be fair to other nations, be idealistic but also practical if you want your ideal to be achieved and not to remain a vague Utopic conception of the mind. Byron unjustly said :—

"England, with all thy faults, I love thee still." He should have said :—

"England, with all my faults, I love thee still."

Other nations are frequently inclined to treat England unfairly ; often your intentions are misinterpreted through ignorance and bad faith. England often reminds me of the picture of the just man in Plato's Republic. Of course, I know that, according to the Greek philosopher, in the midst of his torments, the just man is supposed to be happier than those who persecute him. But such happiness is only negative. England is entitled to a better recognition for her services. It is high time that the other nations should pay to England the tribute she deserves.

Never give the child too much and bore it. I remember my eldest boy lying on the mat when only seven years of age, and I told him of the wanderings of the children of Israel through the wilderness, and he suddenly jumped up and said, "Why, mother, if all you say is right, we must be the children of Israel ; there cannot be anyone in the world who is Israel except ourselves." He has never doubted. My little girl is doing her very best to help her school, and here and there the children are coming in, and I believe the children will do the work themselves if they are put on the right lines.

It is harder for women than men to come out into the open ; we always shrink from it, but I do not think we ought to shrink from anything to save our children from the awful chasm of unbelief.

Do not let us waste one single moment of precious time.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

INTERESTING addresses were given at H.Q. last week by the Rev. R. G. F. Waddington, M.A., and Miss Hamilton Hunter. This week the speakers are Mrs. Bloxam and Mr. John Leech. Meetings will be held on Wednesday afternoon and Thursday evening as usual.

Our readers are asked to note especially that on Thursday afternoon, at 2.45, July 26th, we hope to give a welcome to and hear an address from the Rev. Dr. Lincoln McConnell, of Florida, U.S.A., one of the outstanding preachers of America, who is proclaiming Israel Truth to his great congregation of over 2,000 on Sundays, and an audience of 1,000 at his week-night meetings. After a few days in London, Dr. McConnell goes to Palestine, returning to us in September (D.V.).

* * *

Mr. J. J. Morey has addressed two large and successful meetings in Manchester. He has also spoken at two meetings in Sutton, Surrey, and one in Reigate, where he started a new Cause. His activities have embraced Paignton, Brixham, Exeter, Southampton and Worthing. His addresses everywhere have been well received, and he reports that without exception the keenest interest has been manifested in all branches of B.-I. teaching.

OPEN-AIR CAMPAIGN.

Two meetings were held in Brockwell Park on Sunday, 17th inst., Mr. Pilcher acting as chairman, and giving a short and interesting address. He was followed for a few minutes by Mr. R. Bradbury, after whom the Rev. Joseph Gay gave a splendid talk on "Did God Make Promises? How, when, and where were they fulfilled?" Keen interest was shown and several questions answered. In the evening Mr. Pilcher again opened up, followed with a talk by Mr. Tester on "Ancient Britons, and the Roman Invasion." Then Mr. Gay showed the necessity of an earthly Kingdom to function the Spiritual Kingdom, pointing out that the great outstanding acts of the Anglo-Saxon peoples revealed them to be the channel through which God is working; concluding with an account of the difference between the Common Law of England and the Civil Law of the Continent. The speakers are glad to have so many members present supporting them, and greatly appreciated their presence and help in showing the London Parks that we have a big following.

The next outdoor gathering will be in Regent's Park, on Sunday, July 1st, at 3.30 and 7.30, and on Tuesday, 3rd, at 7.30.

Two very successful meetings were held in West Croydon on June 8th, in the evening the attendance being a record one, and many new-comers and young people being present. The closest attention was given to Mr. Morey's eloquent and inspiring lectures. Many questions were replied to with full satisfaction. The local Press gave much better and more detailed reports than usual. This Branch has now started, under the able direction of Miss Hooker, a lending library, which is proving very helpful.

Barking enjoyed a splendid meeting on the 12th, in spite of counter-attractions. Mr. J. William Gray spoke on "British-Israel Truth—What it is. What it is not."

Our Midland Commissioner, the Rev. T. H. Whitehouse, is bringing a strenuous half-year to a close, and, so far as indoor meetings are concerned, is "slowing down" for a brief summer interval, but only to turn his attention to other phases of our work, and to gather matter and impetus for an even more vigorous campaign during the latter half of the year. Since early January he has journeyed incessantly, visiting our Branches, and missioning new fields, being warmly received wherever he has been, and delivering 140 lectures. During the last three weeks Mr. Whitehouse has addressed many meetings at Derby, Bedford, Coventry, Louth, Tetford, Grimsby, Worcester, Birmingham, Dunchurch, Rugby, Northampton, and Cheltenham. New districts are being opened up, and it is hoped that many new Branches will be formed. He reports that he finds everywhere the keenest interest in our Kingdom message, and an intense gladness on the part of the people to receive such coherent, intelligible and inspiring Bible teaching as it is our joy to be able to give them.

Will our friends residing in the Wimbledon district please send us their names and addresses so that arrangements may be made to commence regular meetings in that area in September next?

Prophetic Light on World Destiny

By Rev. WILLIAM HARPER, M.A., B.D.

Price 1/-, by post 1/2

A small work of 120 pages, this book covers, in condensed form, practically the whole B.-I. field. It is most interestingly written by one who is a master of his subject, and is very strongly recommended. It fits every purse and many pockets, and should have a place on every bookshelf.

GOOD ADVICE

To a friend in distress you would tender sympathy and helpful advice. You have many friends unwittingly ignorant of the greatest truth affecting our State to-day. Give them that word of helpful advice. Introduce them to "The National Message." Tell them the value of its teaching. Let them know the help you get from it week by week. Then get them to fill up the Subscription Form below and send it to us. This Message can then be addressed to them, and so our good work will go on.

The Torn Cloak

By M. C.

In simple yet graphic language tells the story of our race from the division of Israel to our glorious mission of the last days.

Rev. Commander Roberts in his Foreword says; "Go then little book, convince the children that Jesus spoke the Truth."

Followers of B.-I. Truth can do no better work than to ensure that every child of their acquaintance reads these little books, thus adding to the equipment of the next generation.

The Bible and the British Race.

By Rev. ARTHUR PRITCHARD, M.A. 36 pp. Paper cover.
Price 6d.; by post, 8d.
Canada and U.S.A. 20 cts. Post free.

Written by request and published by direction of the Council of the British-Israel-World Federation.
A luminous and inspiring essay. Presenting all the salient facts of the B.-I. case, it furnishes an invaluable stimulus to the enquiring mind.

The Bible and Science.

By Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD, F.R.G.S. Demy 8vo. 50 pp. Paper cover.
Price 1/6; by post, 1/8.
Canada and U.S.A. 40 cts. Post free.

Has the Scholarship of the day discredited the Bible? Mr. Goard takes up the challenge, and to those not blinded by specious modernist arguments, the truth is revealed; the Bible and Science go hand in hand and the modernist takes his true place as the retiring rearguard of an exhausted gospel.

The Earthly History of Israel.

From the time they became a Nation in the Promised Land until the Millennium, as typified by the order of March in the Wilderness. A Chart.
By A. A. COLES.

Price 1/6; by post, 1/8.
Canada and U.S.A. 40 cts. Post free.

The Epistle to the Romans.

By Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD, F.R.G.S. Demy 8vo. 94 pp. Cloth cover. Gold letters.

Price 2/6; by post, 2/9.
Canada and U.S.A. 70 cts. Post free.

A primary lesson in the doctrine of the Christian Faith. So skilful is the author that while the concurrence of all scholarly theologians is assured, yet the Epistle is presented in a light so new that a reconstitution of foundational beliefs is essential.

Esther.

A Keystone of The Bible.
By Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD, F.R.G.S. 8 pp. Paper cover. Second edition.

Price 2d.; by post, 3d.
Canada and U.S.A. 6 cts. Post free.

A most interesting pamphlet viewed as a sidelight on British-Israel beliefs. It recounts a promise given by the Almighty and the carrying out of that promise a thousand years later.

Fifty Reasons.

Why the Anglo-Saxons are Israelites of the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel.
By Rev. W. H. POOLE, D.D., 25th edition. Demy 8vo. 64 pp. Paper cover.

Price 6d.; by post, 7d.
Canada and U.S.A. 14 cts. Post free.

Reasons which prove conclusively that the lost tribes of the House of Israel are not found in Afghanistan, nor China, nor Mexico, nor Peru, but in the place set aside by Almighty Providence for a sanctuary "that they may dwell in a place of their own and move no more."

Foretold and Fulfilled.

The Church of Rome. A sign of the End.
By "DISCIPULUS." Demy 8vo. 94 pp. Cloth cover.

Price 2/-; by post, 2/3.
Canada and U.S.A. 55 cts. Post free.

A new light upon the visions of Daniel and St. John in so far as they refer to the Papacy. It foreshadows the time of deliverance from "The Beast," "The daughter of Babylon," when the Church of Rome must fall and utterly disappear.

The Fulness of the Times.

The Key to Bible Dates.
By "LUMEN." Demy 8vo. 486 pp. Index and three charts. Cloth cover.

Price 10/6; by post, 11/3.
Canada and U.S.A. $2.75 Post free.

God and My Birthright.

By THOMAS J. LLEWELLYN, F.R.C.S. Demy 8vo. 240 pp. Cloth cover. Gold letters. Second Edition revised.

Price 4/6; by post, 5/-.
Canada and U.S.A. $1.20 Post free.

The Author asks the question: "If the British be not Israel, how then comes it about that they are doing the very work that the unerring word of God tells us that Israel was to do?" He decides: "There is only one logical conclusion, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon Race is the long lost House of Israel."

God in British History.

By Rev. ARTHUR PRITCHARD, M.A. Sixth edition. 94 pp. Paper cover.

Price 1/-; by post, 1/2.
Canada and U.S.A. 30 cts. Post free.

The Divinity which has, from the beginning, shaped our National Ends is clearly demonstrated. Not only is there a God of History, but a God in History, and in the history of no nation or race as we ourselves find Him.

God in His Earth.

By Rev. ARTHUR PRITCHARD, M.A. Crown 8vo. 152 pp. Cloth cover.

Price 3/6; by post, 3/9.
Canada and U.S.A. 95 cts. Post free.

A telescopic, microscopic and stereoscopic view of the blessed truths enshrined in the Bible. God's in His Earth, working through a Kingdom, therefore, "All's well with the world," and the working out of His age long purpose is clearly shown.

God's Covenant Man.

By Prof. E. ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.G.S., F.R.C.I. Demy 8vo. Cloth cover. Second edition, revised and enlarged.

Proves that the Church in Britain owes nothing to Rome, but was established by those who learned the Gospel from the lips of Christ himself, within five years of the Crucifixion. The style alone makes the book worth reading, while the author's citation of authorities stamps it as the result of high scholarship and deep research.

Its great desire is to win India for Christ through the women.

What part will YOU take in this great work?

We earnestly desire your prayers and practical sympathy. Cheques should be made out to the Secretary (crossed Barclays Bank, Limited).

Offices: 33, Surrey Street, London, W.C.2.

"Cursed is man that putteth his trust in man and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord!"

FROM THE "MORNING POST."—"Sydney, January 29th: In conformity with the decision of the Bundaberg (Queensland) Borough Council to render children in the borough immune from diphtheria, medical officers inoculated a batch last Friday with serum, it is stated from the Commonwealth Health Department. Since then twelve of the children have died and six are in a very critical condition. There is a panic in the district."

The following, from Dr. A. S. McNeil's new book, The Cancer Mystery Solved, forms an excellent commentary on the above:—

"IN THE LAST ANALYSIS it must indeed be regarded as a just and certain Nemesis which has overtaken civilised man and is by way of rapidly destroying him, root and branch, for his hideous injustice in attempting to relieve or prevent diseased conditions of his body (for which he is himself largely to blame) by subjecting for the production of these evil substances—vaccines and serums—his poor defenceless fellow-creatures to agonies of body and mind."

For Reading and for Reference.

The list of books given in various pages of this issue are recommended to all those who make a careful and exhaustive Study of the British-Israel Question. Each one is published by the Covenant Publishing Company, Ltd., and is recommended as worthy to be added to any collection of B.-I. Literature. Buy one each week and let your B.-I. Library be a source of pride and intellectual profit.

The Earthly History of Israel.

From the time they became a Nation in the Promised Land until the Millennium, as typified by the order of March in the Wilderness. A Chart.
By A. A. COLES.

Price 1/6; by post, 1/8.
Canada and U.S.A. 40 cts. Post free.

The Epistle to the Romans.

By Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD, F.R.G.S. Demy 8vo. 94 pp. Cloth cover. Gold letters.

Price 2/6; by post, 2/9.
Canada and U.S.A. 70 cts. Post free.

A primary lesson in the doctrine of the Christian Faith. So skilful is the author that while the concurrence of all scholarly theologians is assured, yet the Epistle is presented in a light so new that a reconstitution of foundational beliefs is essential.

Esther.

A Keystone of The Bible.
By Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD, F.R.G.S. 8 pp. Paper cover. Second edition.

Price 2d.; by post, 3d.
Canada and U.S.A. 6 cts. Post free.

A most interesting pamphlet viewed as a sidelight on British-Israel beliefs. It recounts a promise given by the Almighty and the carrying out of that promise a thousand years later.

Fifty Reasons.

Why the Anglo-Saxons are Israelites of the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel.
By Rev. W. H. POOLE, D.D., 25th edition. Demy 8vo. 64 pp. Paper cover.

Price 6d.; by post, 7d.
Canada and U.S.A. 14 cts. Post free.

Reasons which prove conclusively that the lost tribes of the House of Israel are not found in Afghanistan, nor China, nor Mexico, nor Peru, but in the place set aside by Almighty Providence for a sanctuary "that they may dwell in a place of their own and move no more."

Foretold and Fulfilled.

The Church of Rome. A sign of the End.
By "DISCIPULUS." Demy 8vo. 94 pp. Cloth cover.

Price 2/-; by post, 2/3.
Canada and U.S.A. 55 cts. Post free.

A new light upon the visions of Daniel and St. John in so far as they refer to the Papacy. It foreshadows the time of deliverance from "The Beast," "The daughter of Babylon," when the Church of Rome must fall and utterly disappear.

The Fulness of the Times.

The Key to Bible Dates.
By "LUMEN." Demy 8vo. 486 pp. Index and three charts. Cloth cover.

Price 10/6; by post, 11/3.
Canada and U.S.A. $2.75 Post free.

God and My Birthright.

By THOMAS J. LLEWELLYN, F.R.C.S. Demy 8vo. 240 pp. Cloth cover. Gold letters. Second Edition revised.

Price 4/6; by post, 5/-.
Canada and U.S.A. $1.20 Post free.

The Author asks the question: "If the British be not Israel, how then comes it about that they are doing the very work that the unerring word of God tells us that Israel was to do?" He decides: "There is only one logical conclusion, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon Race is the long lost House of Israel."

God in British History.

By Rev. ARTHUR PRITCHARD, M.A. Sixth edition. 94 pp. Paper cover.

Price 1/-; by post, 1/2.
Canada and U.S.A. 30 cts. Post free.

The Divinity which has, from the beginning, shaped our National Ends is clearly demonstrated. Not only is there a God of History, but a God in History, and in the history of no nation or race as we ourselves find Him.

God in His Earth.

By Rev. ARTHUR PRITCHARD, M.A. Crown 8vo. 152 pp. Cloth cover.

Price 3/6; by post, 3/9.
Canada and U.S.A. 95 cts. Post free.

A telescopic, microscopic and stereoscopic view of the blessed truths enshrined in the Bible. God's in His Earth, working through a Kingdom, therefore, "All's well with the world," and the working out of His age-long purpose is clearly shown.

God's Covenant Man.

By Prof. E. ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.G.S., F.R.C.I. Demy 8vo. Cloth cover. Second edition, revised and enlarged.

Price 6/-; by post, 6/6.
Canada and U.S.A. $1.65 Post free.

A NEW HIGHWATER MARK

has been reached by two of our recently published works. Both break new ground, approaching British-Israel Truth from a new angle—examining it from a fresh view-point.

Israel in Prophecy & History

By P. W. Thompson, M.A.

Author of "The Whole Tithe," "The Old Book and The New Age," &c., &c.

The Wonder Race

By G. E. Altree Coley.

They are both "first books" on our subject. They build their case upon the events in our history during the past thousand years, and they discover in our rough island story so long a succession of coincidences that they become coincidences no longer, but a sure and certain proof of a Divine and guiding hand directing all our happenings. They are books carefully to be read and studied. They are books which cannot fail to convince.

"Be it known unto thee, O King, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the Image which thou hast set up!"

THIS WAS THE IMMORTAL CHALLENGE of three resolute men who, standing alone in a city of ferocious paganism, dared to fear their God and nothing else! To-day, after nineteen hundred and twenty years of Christianity, who can deny that a strangely Pagan Science—"falsely so called"—is the World's great Idol! A science that knows no moral code, no compassion, no reverence either for Creator or created.

A well-known medical scientist not long since demanded that students should be allowed to vivisect. He asked that they should be allowed to acquire operative skill by practising on living animals! He said, "One organ on which they ought to experiment first on animals is the eye!" CAN YOU ASK THE BLESSING OF GOD UPON SURGICAL SKILL SO ACQUIRED? You know you cannot! And you must realise that to put your trust in such men and such means in your time of trouble is nothing else than the worshipping of Idols.

An Excellent Book.

The Enduring Empire of the Brit-ish

BY

REV. P. H. PRITCHETT.

An account of the remarkable unconscious testimony of several Historians never before used in British-Israel evidence, which is shown to exactly fit in with the picture Scripture draws of the Scattered, Outcast, Wandering, Lost Ten-Tribed Israel led to the British Isles, and destined ultimately to become a blessing to the whole world.

A remarkable book, which strengthens every link in the British-Israel Chain. A work showing very deep research and productive of a fund of new corroborative evidence from outside sources.

Cloth, 101 pages. Price 2/6, by post 2/9.

"Not one of them is forgotten before God!"

"LISTEN TO ME, MY SONS. When the Lord came upon the Earth for the sake of Adam, and He blessed all His creation which He Himself had made, He called all the beasts and all the cattle and brought them all before the face of our father Adam, and he gave names to every living thing upon the earth.

THE LORD will not judge the soul of beast on account of man, but He will judge the soul of man on account of the souls of beasts in the world to come. For as there is a special place prepared for every soul of man according to their number, so there is also of beasts, and not one soul shall perish which God has made until the Great Judgment. And every soul of beast shall bring a charge against man if he feed him badly. And if anyone does an injury to an animal secretly it is an evil custom and he sins against his soul."

From the Book of the Secrets of Enoch.

NOW READY.

GOD'S COVENANT MAN: BRITISH-ISRAEL.

By

EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.G.S. F.R.C. Inst.

(Also Fellow of the American Geographical Society.)

A most amazing book. Its breadth of scope takes away the breath. Authorities of all races, and speaking all tongues, have been laid under contribution. Not by the pen of the writer, but by his researches, by his quotations from these world-famous authorities he proves the British-Israel case. It is unanswerable.

Rev. W. Pascoe Goard writes in his foreword :—

"I know of no man living who has carried on wider research than has Professor Odlum . . . he has brought together in this book samples of the opinions and contributions of the world's great scholars to the great truth that the Celto-Saxon peoples are the people chosen and ordained of God to carry out His great national purposes. . . . No such compendium will be found elsewhere."

THREE BOOKS BY
Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD.

Possibly the finest studies which have come from the pen of our most prolific writer. Deep thought, sincere belief and ripe scholarship go to the making of these books, which should be in every B.-I. library.

JESUS CHRIST TRIUMPHANT.

A work which first appeared as a series of articles in The National Message and Banner, in which form they attracted widespread attention and comment.

THE NAMES OF GOD OR
The Majestic Order of Divine Revelation.

The Rev. Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE wrote :
May I express my sincere gratitude to the Rev. Wm. Pascoe Goard for his book on The Names of God, which I have found of the highest value. It may enable others to grasp the progressive nature of God Himself, His Names, and His Personality.
It is a remarkable discovery, and deserves the closest attention. I have published a book on The Titles of Jehovah. I wish I had known half of what Mr. Goard has produced in his book.
I ask him to believe that he has helped a humble servant of Jehovah in his study of the Word.

"We believe that Thou shalt come to be our Judge!"

AND YET, AFTER TWO THOUSAND YEARS of this tremendous Belief, and on the very Eve of that world-shaking event, decent-minded men and women in "Christian" England and America have to form Societies to protest, almost despairingly, against the abomination before Almighty God of that most shameful form of animal abuse, Vivisection—the cutting up alive and otherwise experimenting upon the bodies of sentient creatures!

THE ANIMALS' HELL is the name by which the Rockefeller Research Institute in New York is commonly known, so otherwise indescribable is the orgy of scientific cruelty that takes place there in the interests of medical knowledge! And the same "hells" exist in every land where the white man's religion, civilisation and educational system are introduced, and the white man's God put to shame!

"THOSE OF US," said Mr. J. Bromley, M.P., speaking on the subject, "WHO SUBMIT TO THESE THINGS—the cutting out and tying up of their internal organs, filling them full of water till they go into convulsions, injecting poison into their eyes, and similar cruelties, in the cowardly belief that it may save us some pain, are not fit to call ourselves the 'higher creation'!"

EMPIRE DAY MEDAL

Distributed under the auspices of The

BRITISH EMPIRE UNION

WITH THE SUPPORT OF

British Empire Union in Australia.
Empire Trade Defence Association (Hobart).
National Association of Street Traders.
British Union in Egypt. Empire Group of South Africa.
New Zealand Welfare League. Links of Empire.

THE annual presentation of a medal symbolic of the British Empire on Empire Day was inaugura ed by the British Empire Union in 1926, and continued in 1927.

We are glad to announce that our 1928 Medal is being struck at the Royal Mint. It is made of bronze, not aluminium like the former ones, is a much more handsome production, and one which children will value very highly. The figure of Britannia on the reverse is from a design by the late Mr. F. Derwent Wood, R.A. and the head of the Prince of Wales on the obverse is by Mr. Percy Metcalfe. It will be suspended by a red, white and blue ribbon.

One of the most interesting lectures ever delivered on our subject was that given by Mr. Goard on "THE CHRONOLOGICAL TRAJECTORY OF PROPHECY."

This lecture, which filled the Central Hall, Westminster, to overflowing, will be given again in the near future. All should attend at the first opportunity and, fully to appreciate it, should read beforehand the lecturer's book.

ISAIAH.

An Outline Study.

The book is a searching analysis of this great prophecy, and is of extreme value in arriving at a true estimate of the weight of the evidence in favour of B.-I. Truth.

"The Society touches the sailor at every point in his life. It trains him, houses him, gives him recreation, tends him in his old age and helps his dependents. In short, it labours ceaselessly and devotedly for that magnificent body of men upon whom the prosperity of the British Empire so largely depends. The record of the Society is one of which we and it can be justly proud."

THE BRITISH SAILORS' SOCIETY
NOW IN ITS 111th YEAR

In one year, this oldest Sailors' Society provides over 200,000 BEDS and 34,000 FREE MEALS. Sailors pay over ONE MILLION VISITS. In addition, seamen's widows are cared for, orphans trained and libraries supplied to ships and lighthouses.

All who admire the loyalty and devotion of our Seamen are asked to help in this great spiritual and social work for the men to whom we owe OUR DAILY BREAD.

The NEW INDIA

must be won for CHRIST!

Where Christ reigns, the families of the earth are blessed.

The

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION

is the only Mission working exclusively for India's women and children. It has Women's Hospitals, Babies' Homes, Converts' Home, Village Dispensaries in Bombay Presidency, United Provinces and the Punjab. It is Evangelical, Biblical, Medical.

Its great desire is to win India for Christ through the women.

What part will YOU take in this great work?

We earnestly desire your prayers and practical sympathy. Cheques should be made out to the Secretary (crossed Barclays Bank, Limited).

Offices: 33, Surrey Street, London, W.C.2.

St. Paul in Britain

OR, THE ORIGINS OF BRITISH AS OPPOSED TO PAPAL CHRISTIANITY.

By REV. R. W. MORGAN.

This very scholarly work, entirely free from all dogmatic statements, states a case which is self-proven to every unbiassed mind, that the Church in Britain owed nothing to that in Rome, but was established by those who learned the Gospel from the lips of the Christ Himself, within five years of the Crucifixion. The style of the author alone makes the book worth reading, and his citation of authorities stamps it as the result of high scholarship and deep research.

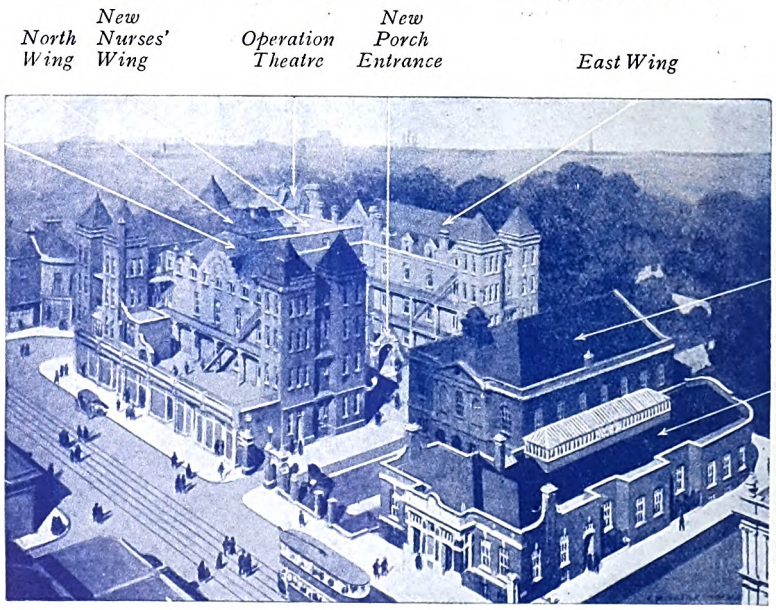
A GREAT HUMANITARIAN WORK IN SERIOUS PLIGHT



FOUR new In-patients—250 Out-patients—EVERY DAY. Imagine—if you can—this enormous tide of suffering which depends for its alleviation on the London Temperance Hospital. Yet so efficient is its management that £3 will keep open the hospital's doors for AN HOUR.

Will you keep this great home of healing for one hour or more, and so help the Committee to wipe out the deficit which is now causing grave anxiety?

As pioneer of the now general practice of healing without recourse to alcohol, this important institution has a special claim on all who realise that the well-being of the Empire depends on the health of the individual.

Although every Department of the Main Hospital Building is functioning efficiently, the Board are anxious to extend its SPECIAL DEPARTMENTS and are making a SPECIAL URGENT APPEAL for £30,000. Please send a Gift now and so arm us more completely in our fight for life and health.

GOD'S COVENANT MAN: BRITISH-ISRAEL.

By

EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.G.S. F.R.C. Inst.

(Also Fellow of the American Geographical Society.)

A most amazing book. Its breadth of scope takes away the breath. Authorities of all races, and speaking all tongues, have been laid under contribution. Not by the pen of the writer, but by his researches, by his quotations from these world-famous authorities he proves the British-Israel case. It is unanswerable.

Rev. W. Pascoe Goard writes in his foreword:—

"I know of no man living who has carried on wider research than has Professor Odlum . . . he has brought together in this book samples of the opinions and contributions of the world's great scholars to the great truth that the Celto-Saxon peoples are the people chosen and ordained of God to carry out His great national purposes. . . . . No such compendium will be found elsewhere."

The Sabbath that was made for man

BY

J. G. MODIN

With a foreword by Rev. JAMES MOUNTAIN, D.D.

This little work, dealing with one of the important marks of British-Israel identity, is by far the most valuable contribution yet made to the all-important subject of Sabbath keeping. It should be read and digested by every clergyman and every layman who loves our National Day of Rest, and who sees the urgent need for the observance of the Fourth Commandment.

GOD'S COVENANT MAN: BRITISH-ISRAEL.

By

EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.G.S. F.R.C. Inst.

(Also Fellow of the American Geographical Society.)

A most amazing book. Its breadth of scope takes away the breath. Authorities of all races, and speaking all tongues, have been laid under contribution. Not by the pen of the writer, but by his researches, by his quotations from these world-famous authorities he proves the British-Israel case. It is unanswerable.

Rev. W. Pascoe Goard writes in his foreword:—

"I know of no man living who has carried on wider research than has Professor Odlum . . . he has brought together in this book samples of the opinions and contributions of the world's great scholars to the great truth that the Celto-Saxon peoples are the people chosen and ordained of God to carry out His great national purposes. . . . . No such compendium will be found elsewhere."

A NEW HIGHWATER MARK

has been reached by two of our recently published works. Both break new ground, approaching British-Israel Truth from a new angle—examining it from a fresh view-point.

Israel in Prophecy and History

By P. W. Thompson, M.A.

Author of "The Whole Tithe," "The Old Book and The New Age," etc., etc.

The Wonder Race

By G. E. Altree Coley.

They are both "first books" on our subject. They build their case upon the events in our history during the past thousand years, and they discover in our rough island story so long a succession of coincidences that they become coincidences no longer, but a sure and certain proof of a Divine and guiding hand directing all our happenings. They are books carefully to be read and studied. They are books which cannot fail to convince.

WHAT TO READ—AND WHY

The books mentioned in the following list cover the whole field of British-Israel teaching—that the Anglo-Saxon race are the inheritors, under Divine Guidance, of the promises made to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. To those to whom the Divine Integrity is a vital thing, a careful study of these books is essential. They make many hidden things plain, and are a constant source of spiritual strength and guidance.

Fifty Reasons

Price 6d.; by post, 7d.
Canada and U.S.A. 14 cts. Post free

Reasons which prove conclusively that the lost tribes of the House of Israel are not found in Afghanistan, nor China, nor Mexico, nor Peru, but in the place set aside by Almighty Providence for a sanctuary "that they may dwell in a place of their own and move no more."

God and my Birthright

By J. LLEWELLYN THOMAS, F.R.C.S.

Demy 8vo. 240 pp. Cloth cover. Gold letters. Second Edition revised.

Price 4/6; by post, 5/-
Canada and U.S.A. $1.20 Post free

The Author asks the question: "If the British be not Israel, how then comes it about that they are doing the very work that the unerring Word of God tells us that Israel was to do?" He decides: "There is only one logical conclusion, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon Race is the long-lost House of Israel."

The Wonder Race

By G. E. ALTREE COLEY. Crown 8vo. 209 pp. Cloth cover.

Price 5/-; by post 5/6

This book sheds a strong spiritual light upon the events of secular history and shows the working of a Supreme Will and Purpose. The Anglo-Saxon reader will lay down the book with a fervent thanksgiving that his race has been called to such a high destiny.

The most vital book yet written by Mr. Goard

The Law of the Lord or the Common Law
By Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD

¶ Statesmen of every race and every tongue are seeking a system of government which will give security, establish peace—which is a final expression of ideal law-giving.

Is there such a system ?

This book demonstrates that such a system exists, and that that system is at the disposal of every nation.

It is the Common Law of the Anglo-Saxon Races.

¶ When an alien race is brought under British rule it automatically comes under the Common Law of Britain; privilege of class is abolished; personal rule no longer holds sway.

When the Pilgrim Fathers set forth in the Mayflower to escape the personal domination of the Stuarts, next to the Word of God, the old Anglo-Saxon Common Law was their most cherished possession.

¶ Yet the Anglo-Saxon Common Law is older than Anglo-Saxondom, older than Christianity itself. It had its first codification on Mount Sinai when the mouth of the Lord spake unto Moses.

¶ There then is the PRINCIPLE, the root of the only system of laws which can succeed. Its amplification, its application in the form of constructive co-operation, to the needs of the present are all that statesmen need consider. The ideal system is ready-made for them.

¶ Let every thinking man read this book.

British-Israel-World Federation

Headquarters :—

6, Buckingham Gate, London, S.W.1.

An OPEN LETTER to our readers in the United States of America.

Dear Friends,

Last week as you know we addressed our readers in various parts of the world. This week we take the privilege of addressing you, the citizens of the greatest Republic of all time.

We greet you most warmly as Brothers and Sisters in ISRAEL. There are societies known to you and to us in your country and in ours having as their object the promotion of fellowship and good will between our peoples. Some of us are members of one or more of these societies, but I declare to you without hesitation that none of them can equal the above Federation as a means whereby your people and ours can be united in the best and firmest bonds.

Our origins being identical, so also largely are our ideals and our missions. Together we have the essential spiritual dynamics for attaining the one and fulfilling the other. Shall we apply those dynamics and watch the results ? I venture to say the results will astonish us all.

You and we have started on the right track by embracing the truths for which this journal stands. Let us both speed up and drive home those truths among the communities with which we mingle. The Anglo-Saxon Race is the great civilizing, stabilizing, Christianizing Race. There was a saying, " Britain and America against the world " ; surely the one more in accordance with our principles and our mission is, " Britain and America FOR the world." To win the world for God is our mission ; nothing less. This was Israel's commission, and WE ARE ISRAEL, then let us be up and doing ; let us subordinate everything to this work ; let us consecrate our lives to it.

Brothers and Sisters, we in the Old Land invite you in the New Land to link up with us in a holy combination through this our Federation.

We want your co-operation and your support.

This great Interdenominational Movement of the day has in it all the elements for promoting the greatest CHRISTIAN FORWARD MARCH OF THE CENTURIES.

Will you give us the pleasure of your company at the CONGRESS commencing on October 1st next ?

May we enrol you as members of the Federation ?

Can you secure new subscribers to this journal ?

Will you send us a donation to help forward the greatest of all CAUSES ?

With thanks in anticipation.

Sincerely yours,

HERBERT GARRISON,

Secretary-General.

EXPERTS ALL.

The following opinions are those expressed by gentlemen who, to the knowledge of our readers, themselves are men of letters and whose authority on the subject of British-Israel Truth is very great. Their views then are worthy of attention, their opinions carry weight. Read what they say concerning

"ISRAEL IN PROPHECY & HISTORY"

By P. W. THOMPSON, M.A.

Happily for British-Israel truth-seekers, "of making many books there is no end," one book succeeding, and sometimes for truth-spreading purposes, somewhat superseding, the other that inspired it.

Such a book is Mr. Thompson's "Israel in Prophecy and History" which I have recently read with profound interest and profit. I think I am justified in saying that it is, in part, an advance of a truth-finder on what appear to be imperfect findings of Guinness, Lancaster and Thomas, besides being a valuable addition to the accumulated arguments of Mountain, the addition being a well-presented vista of the three millennium-days of Hosea that is alike unique, fascinating and thought-provoking.

As the author successfully proceeds along the main currents, religious and economic, which were made use of by Almighty God in preparing Israel for her prophesied destiny, he not only convinces his readers that British-Israel Truth carries with it "a terribly deepened sense of responsibility," but that its rejection (and particularly by those who, from childhood, have been the unconscious victims of a "complex of the sub-conscious mind" as regards their own racial origin) should not be definitely declared without a special appeal to the Holy Spirit for "a right reason." Most interesting are his acknowledgments of indebtedness to certain British-Israel writings and particularly "God and My Birthright," by Thomas, of which he writes "This book is conclusive."—REV. ARTHUR PRITCHARD, M.A.

We have read very many books upon British-Israel Truth, and some few are what one might call saying the same thing over and over again. This book, however, has most distinctive merits of its own. Its particular object is not simply to put forward a great Truth, but to put that Truth forward in such a fashion that no thoughtful person, and in particular no Christian believer, can possibly resist the application. If the British are not Israel then God's solemn promises to Abraham have utterly failed, and the Bible is a discredited Book!

We are thankful to Mr. Thompson for the clearness of his arguments concerning the reviving of Israel after Two Days. (Hosea vi.) This problem of the Third Day has often appealed to us personally as worthy of attention, but here we have the matter worked out to finality.

His insistence that every Israelite should, for the economic and spiritual uplifting of the nation, seriously ponder the advisability of surrendering to God the tenth of the increase, is worthy of deep consideration. This has been our belief for half a century and more. And in this connection our author might have said something about our responsibility for the evangelisation of our brethren the Jews.

The book contains so much original matter that no student of British-Israel can afford to neglect the opportunity of its perusal. —REV. COM. L. G. A. ROBERTS.

Mr. Thompson deals with the problem of British-Israel in an original manner. He lays great stress upon Hosea's prophecy of the revival of Ephraim-Israel on "The Third Day": and he proves, by apt quotation from Lord Macaulay, that this prediction had a startlingly literal fulfilment. We may remark that this "Third Day" prophecy has never previously been dealt with in extenso, which means that every student of British-Israel has now AN ENTIRELY FRESH FIELD for exploration under our Author's guidance.

In our opinion, the mystery of the existence for prophetic purposes of a year of 360 days has now been solved in this book; and students of prophecy in general will read with enthralled interest the pages relating to this topic.

On the whole subject of British-Israel, in all its ramifications, this volume is most illuminating; and there is a freshness of outlook, of style, and of masculine thought which will appeal to a large circle of the reading public.—REV. JAMES MOUNTAIN, D.D.

This able and brightly-written work is full of interest. It deals with the prophetic statements concerning the punishment and eclipse of Israel of the Ten-Tribed Kingdom under the two heads of Hosea's Third Day and of the Seven Times' Punishment—such is the "prophetic" side.

The author fixes the starting-points of the commencement of the Punishment, and then indicates very clearly (1st) the period of the dawn of the Third Day, and (2nd) the dates of the termination of the Seven Times in reckonings by Solar, Lunar and "Prophetic" years.

He then proceeds to give an epitome of the History of England in what was the beginning of the Third Day. This is done in a masterly and most interesting way. Special emphasis is laid on the periods corresponding exactly with the terminations of the Seven Times as worked out in "Prophetic" reckoning. This has not been done in detail before by any writer, and the results are very remarkable. Not only were these three dates striking in the political advancement of the nation, and accompanied in the last phase by unparalleled temporal blessings; but more emphatically were they the times of special spiritual reviving and progress in the religious life of the nation: A dual restoration, temporal and spiritual, exactly as was foretold for Israel.—By the Author of "God and My Birthright" (J. LLEWELLYN THOMAS, F.R.C.S.)

In his recent book, "Israel in Prophecy and History," Mr. Thompson has made a careful and most valuable contribution to the literature dealing with Bible chronology.

He traces the various chronological periods concerning the Captivities of Israel and Judah, the times of the Gentiles, etc., and shows clearly the years when such periods expire. He then examines with great skill the developments of our national life at such terminal points, and relates the Israel prophecies of old to the history of our own times. Beginning with the rise of Wycliffe and the Lollard movement and culminating in the great religious revival of the Wesley period, he traces the rise of Britain from darkness to light and power, exactly at the time when the House of Israel was due to emerge from the era of her punishment.

The book is splendidly written, is logical, thorough, and of surpassing interest.—JOHN J. MOREY.

Mr. Thompson has succeeded in writing a very readable book, and one which cannot be too highly recommended to those serious students who are determined to get at the truth of the matter concerning the claim made by British-Israel believers. The book is well planned and is not victimised by verbosity. Mr. Thompson's co-ordinations are distinctly good and very convincing; his relativities are also remarkably sound; while in his differentiations he is wonderfully correct. The principal value of the book, in our judgment, lies in the rehearsal of English History under the general title of "The Third Day." Dealing with that period known as the "Great Revival" (John Wesley and Methodism), under the title "The End of the Chastisement," Mr. Thompson exhibits the purpose for which he has written his book. A very forceful advocacy of the "Whole Tithe" brings a very interesting book to a close. "Israel in Prophecy and History" ought to find a place in every British-Israel library.—REV. JOSEPH GAY, A.T.S.

We commend the book by Mr. P. W. Thompson, M.A., on "Israel in Prophecy and History." It is an able analysis of British History from the twelfth century onwards, and shows that Wycliffe and the Lollards began a movement which culminated in the Wesleyan Revival, the influence of which had an enormous effect upon our nation, and was coincident with the great material expansion of the British Empire, and with a far-reaching spiritual restoration at the end of the "Seven Times."—HERBERT GARRISON, F.R.G.S., Secretary-General.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

[It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.]

STOCK-TAKING.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

The financial report of the Covenant Publishing Co., Ltd., the book concern connected with our B.-I. Movement, has just come to hand. It shows that we have turned out a large volume of literature during the year 1927, and that we have paid for the publication and distribution of this literature. When one thinks of this, it constitutes a matter for great thankfulness; and we shall carry on with renewed vigour the written side of the Message we have been charged to deliver.

The other branches of the work also show a clean balance-sheet. This is very satisfactory, and we hope the good work will continue.

Having taken stock in all these directions, it is well that we should take stock of the main work in which we are engaged; namely, in setting forth by word of mouth and by the printed page the Gospel of the Kingdom and of Grace. What is our position in regard to the doctrines we are preaching, and what of the spirit we are disseminating? Is our balance-sheet clear in this regard?

We shall tabulate certain facts and doctrines; part of which we hold in common with all evangelical Christians; and part of which is to our peculiar credit. In the catalogue of these facts and doctrines we shall find the major part of the stock-in-trade of our organization.

Facts.

We speak reverently when we say that among our inherited possessions, in a sense which the average Christian does not recognise, but in accordance with Bible revelation, the chief glory of our possession is

Jehovah,

Who is the God and the King of Israel.

In order to get the perspective of this statement, it is necessary that we should segregate that Holy Name from the other Holy Names by which the Almighty God reveals Himself to mankind. Jehovah is the Name which is the exclusive inheritance of Israel, extended as a free gift to those of other nations and races who have been adopted into Israel through faith.

Jehovah is the "oldest inhabitant" in Israel; for this we take the name "The Ancient of Days" to mean. He declares: "I AM the first; AND WITH the last." He is the fountain of life of the Adamic race. He is the One Who created, and formed Israel, who redeemed, and called Israel by name, and Who is the possessor of Israel. As the ten or more Jehovah name combinations show, He is the head of every department of Divine government in Israel. The generations of Israel come and go. They are born, attain manhood, serve their generation, reproduce themselves in the children who are to take their place; and then they die and pass away. Thus generation after generation are born, develop, serve, and die; each generation being succeeded by the next. But Jehovah abides in Israel for ever. He was with the father and mother of the race—Abraham and Sarah; and the firstborn of the race—Isaac. He was with the second generation of the race—Jacob. He has been equally with every succeeding generation of Israel; and is so with us who constitute this generation of Israel in this day. He will equally be with the last generation. He declares, I AM THE FIRST; AND WITH the last." So with the Psalmist we declare "FOR HE IS OUR GOD, and we are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand."

As this is the relationship which God assumes towards Israel, and towards those who are by faith adopted into Israel, exclusively, as the Scriptures so fully make manifest; and as the ordinary theologian has lost Israel, and therefore has lost this particular manifestation of God, we are fair and right in counting this great fact as among our exclusive assets in the British-Israel field of theology. We are eager to share this treasure with all who will open their eyes and their hearts to the glorious fact; both in the Brith, or British Church and Nation.

Place this on the credit side of the balance-sheet, and let the auditors make declaration that this fact alone makes the British-Israel Movement INFINITELY worth while.

ISRAEL.

The second great fact among our assets as a Movement which we here present for tabulation—it is difficult to tell in what order to enumerate the facts, so we will disregard the order in which they are presented in the summation of things—is the NATION ISRAEL.

How important is the life of this Nation to the great drama unfolded in the Bible, and enacted upon the stage of history!

We take into account that in the world of scholarship, and especially of theology, our competitors have lost sight of the Nation Israel as a going concern, and have assumed that Israel has been scattered and absorbed among the nations. What an indispensable part of the machinery of history is here lacking, if history is to fulfil prophecy. Without Israel, the prophetic historic machine will not operate at all. So, for the want of the knowledge of Israel, Dr. Driver exclaimed, "It must be manifest to all that many of these promises have never been fulfilled, and that now circumstances have so altered that they never can be fulfilled." Not numbering Israel among his present-day facts, Dr. Driver had to carry such a debit balance as to show his prophetic system bankrupt.

But we number ISRAEL the Nation, a present going concern, among our facts, by us exclusively held, but which we desire to share with all the world; and we find Israel revealed in the Anglo-Saxon peoples.

THE COMPLETE BIBLE.

Two major groups among humanity count the Bible wholly or in part among their treasures.

The Jew holds the Old Testament Scriptures as a sacred possession.

The Christian holds both Testaments as a sacred possession.

Among the latter, the Protestant world holds the Bible to be the supreme authority in matters of faith and conduct. Accordingly they hold it as a sacred possession and use and teach it as the guide and mainspring of individual and national life. They hold that the Bible is the Word of God—the Voice of God.

The rest of humanity, by far the great majority, have not the Bible among their possessions. So far Christianity is in the lead.

The Jew holds the Old Testament, as modified by the Talmudic writings. It is revered; but the Talmud writings are obeyed.

The Roman Catholic holds the Bible as interpreted by the Church. They hold that "the voice of the Church is the Voice of God."

The Protestant world has held the Bible to be the literal Word of God until lately. Now there are at least two groups in the Protestant world. They are the Modernist, and the Conservative believers in the Bible, sometimes called "Literalists."

The "Modernist" has brought the matter contained in the Bible to the test of action. "Will it work?" is the question. Now the Bible is largely made up of history and of prophecy, which is history prewritten. Chiefly it is concerned with Israel. The Modernist has not been able to make the matter contained in the Bible "work." Therefore, he is brought to the position where his judgment demands that he lay parts of the Bible aside, and no insignificant parts at that.

But why has he failed to make the statements and plan of the Bible "work"? We answer, because parts of the machinery are lacking for him. He has not used the complete machinery of the Bible in his tests of the Bible. Therefore it refuses to "work." It is a machine which in his hands refuses to run.

For instance, the Modernist knows nothing of Israel as a present and going concern. Therefore all the prophecies relating to Israel are to him unworkable. With Dr. Driver he cries, "It must be manifest to all that many of these promises have never been fulfilled." The position of the Modernist is logical in a way. But the error is in his reasoning. Many a man has tried to run his automobile, and finding that it would not go in his hands, he has concluded that it is radically and mechanically wrong. But the expert has come and found that he has been failing to use some important part. One had forgotten to insert the key which makes the electrical connection. Another had forgotten to fill the gas tank. Another had failed to note that his spark plug had been removed and not replaced. The fault was not with the machine, but with the man.

Now, the Modernist is not using the present Nation Israel. This is an essential part of the machinery of the Bible, and without Israel the machine will not run. We supply to the Modernist the missing part, viz., Israel-Britain. As many of the Modernist school take the part and use it, they find that the Bible machine functions perfectly and that no part of the Bible can be spared.

The "literalist" reader of the Bible, on the other hand, has brought the Book to the test of faith. He realises that for him there are parts missing. He is wise in assuming that the missing parts are in existence and that they will eventually be brought to light. He cannot make the prophecies fit in with history, but he has manufactured hypothetical parts to fit. For Israel he has supplied the Church; or for Israel he has invented a "parenthesis" during which Israel is hidden, but to be revealed in the millennium. So he keeps the machine in his showcase, and uses the usable parts of the same. He is simply giving a manifestation of the triumph of faith over reason. He manages to carry on for himself, and for like-minded people, but he cannot meet the difficulty of the Modernist. Israel is absent in his Bible demonstration also.

Now the British-Israel Movement possesses Israel, and the knowledge of Israel manifested in the Celto-Saxon race, a fact made manifest before men and angels. Applying this fact, the prophecies are shown to be working themselves out in history to perfection. Credit on our side, therefore—The Complete Bible—held by the tenure of both faith and knowledge.

THE HOUSE AND THRONE OF DAVID.

From the Books of Samuel onward, what a wonderfully important place the House and throne of David have in the sacred Scriptures. Their establishment is most impressive, and their continuance is guaranteed by the Oath of God. The history of the House is very wonderful, stretching as it now does over thirty centuries ; and the prophecies regarding it are still more wonderful, carrying forward to the end of Time.

To the House of David has come the infinite honour of the incarnation of Our Lord Jesus Christ, at once God the Son, and the Son of David.

To the throne of David shall come the supreme honour of the return and reign upon it of our risen Lord, as " King of kings and Lord of lords."

The head of the House of David is at once the King of Britain and of the Overseas Dominions, and the head of the Church of England.

The question is asked, " Why should the Church of England have a secular head ? " The answer is that it has not a secular head. Thereto is attached a very striking, even wonderful fact. In the former dispensation there was an hereditary priesthood, namely, the House of Aaron. These priests were consecrated by anointing with the holy oil. But that priesthood was removed and the hereditary consecration ended. No hereditary priesthood has since so been consecrated.

Since the establishment of the House of David, the head of that House has been consecrated by anointing with the holy oil : " With My holy oil have I anointed him." This is the declaration of the LORD regarding David and his successors. Perhaps the most solemn of all the solemn functions which falls to the lot of the Archbishops of the Church of England to carry out is the solemn anointing of the King of David's God-appointed line. It is the function of the Church in Britain alone to carry out the anointing of the head of the House of David as King of Great Britain and of the Dominions. Other branches of the Christian Church in other lands have not been privileged, nor called upon, to do this great act. Why ? Because it is the Church in Israel anointing David the King of Israel.

The House of David is the only House in the world thus hereditarily anointed with the holy oil of the Lord. There is no such hereditary succession in any ministry or priesthood. There is no such succession in the House of any other King. Now, if these solemn functions have any real meaning, and they have, then the head of the House so anointed is not secular any more, but by that very consecration becomes a consecrated personality. So as King-Priest he is anointed head of the State and of the Church.

It will be agreed that other groups of students of the Bible and of history have lost sight of the House of David as a present going concern, and that this must be numbered among our peculiar treasures of knowledge of fact.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD—IN ITS NATIONAL PHASE.

What a vital fact this is for the world and the nations which compose it ! That this is one of the facts the knowledge of which may be credited to the British-Israel Movement is manifested by the evident confusion of mind in other quarters regarding the matter. The Kingdom of God is simply not understood. The possession of this knowledge is like life from the dead in a great realm of fact and of truth.

What, then, is the Kingdom of God ? As we have again and again pointed out, it is based upon :—

I. Jehovah—the King.
II. Israel—the Nation.
III. And the Divine, or Common Law.

This organisation began at Sinai, and has run through the course of history, the course of its onward progress being outlined by prophecy, and, up to date, fulfilled in history ; the future, standing out as clearly defined as the mountain crests when the sun sets behind them, is made clear by prophetic foretelling.

That Kingdom organisation stands, and progresses to-day, in the Celto-Saxon nations. Outside of it are other nations, republics, and a few, very few, kingdoms. They are disturbed to-day by Anglo-Saxon expansion. But we are coming to the end of the process, when the other nations, after a struggle, will plead for a place in the Kingdom, and a share in its peace, its prosperity, and for the protection of its laws.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

Following this great fact last mentioned, we have the understanding of the Gospel of the Kingdom as taught by Our Lord and His Apostles. It is, in its earthly and national phase, that which we have set forth above. Our literature sets this out clearly, and those who would read further on the matter are referred to the books upon the shelves of the Covenant Publishing Co. for sale.

THE REDEEMER AND THE REDEMPTION.

With all the Christian world we share in the Gospel of the Atonement. But the Scriptures make it very clear that THE REDEMPTION wrought out by Our Lord applies to the Nation Israel. Because of the redemption, Israel will not be called upon to pass through the great tribulation. Because of the redemption Israel

Shall never be destroyed ;
Shall not be left to other people ;
Shall break in pieces all these kingdoms ; and
It shall stand for ever.

This is the direct result of the redemption.

Because of the redemption, Israel shall break forth on the right hand and on the left, and her seed shall inherit the Gentiles. (See Isa. liv.)

Because of the redemption—while other nations shall be swept away by the brightness of His coming, likened by our

Digitized by Google

Lord to the flood—Israel shall be protected against such sweeping away by the Covenant similar to that made with Noah, "that the waters should no more go over the earth." (See Isa. liv.) Because of the redemption, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn." (Isa. liv.)

Because of the redemption, Israel is re-espoused to God as "a bride of youth," and she is the BRIDE of the Old and of the New Testament, standing side by side with the Church, which is THE BODY of Christ.

It was of this redemption that Caiaphas, High Priest at the time of Our Lord's great sacrifice, speaking by the voice of the Holy Ghost that which he did not in the least understand, said, "Ye know nothing at all. It is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, that the whole nation perish not."

THE GREAT COMMITMENT.

"He called His ten servants and committed unto them His goods."

These "goods" are the treasures of the Kingdom such as we have mentioned. They are the things we are now considering in this statement of the balance-sheet of the British-Israel position. The point at issue at the present moment is the commitment of these things to His ten-tribed nation, "His ten servants." Now it is certain that the ten-tribed nation, "His ten servants," is Britain in the larger sense. To us is committed the great charge of the Kingdom; the crown, throne, sceptre, dominions, administration, and all that goes with it. How rich and great becomes the national task when it is realised that we are endowed with the task and responsibility of carrying forward the affairs of the Kingdom of God "till I come," and are charged with the responsibility of defending in the material, national, mental and spiritual world the things which belong to it in every phase thereof.

How terrible the treason of any who should, in Church or State, deliver the charge over to the hands of the alien and the stranger. May God make us faithful stewards of this great charge.

This knowledge of the Kingdom and of the great commitment, while at one time common in Britain, is to-day the exclusive asset of the British-Israel Movement. May it soon become universal in Britain again.

The return of Jesus Christ, the King, to take the throne of His father David in Israel-Britain.

The return of Our Lord to ESTABLISH a Kingdom is looked for by a great company of His people. But there will never be another Kingdom established by the Lord on earth. The Kingdom now is. It was established at Sinai. It was confirmed to David. It was committed to "a nation bringing forth the fruit thereof" what time it was taken from the Jews. It is in existence now. And to it Our Lord will come, in it to establish—not His Kingdom—but His reign.

Perhaps we have enumerated sufficient of the assets of the British-Israel position for the present occasion. Later we may add the consideration of the covenants, promises, prophecies and laws which are as vital to-day as ever. To speak in the language of the financial world: it will be seen that the balance is altogether on our side. We have a good profit to show, and absolutely no loss. Our shares are manyfold "above par." We strongly advise every Professor, Clergyman, Minister, Scholar and Christian to invest to the limit in the shares which are offered freely "without money and without price."

We are sure that if such a balance-sheet came within the scope of their profession, our auditors, Price, Waterhouse and Co., would cheerfully sign this balance-sheet also as they have the financial ones of the various branches of our Movement.

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL POSITION.

Things held in common with evangelical Christians.	Things exclusively held by the British-Israel position.
The Apostles' Creed.	JEHOVAH—the God and King of Israel.
The fall of man into sin.	Israel, the Nation; a going concern, namely, Britain.
The atonement "That Jesus Christ by the grace of God might taste of death for every man."	A completely intelligible Bible.
Justification by faith.	The House and Throne of David: the British throne.
Regeneration by the implanting of the very life of God.	The Kingdom of God; in its NATIONAL phase, viz.:— Jehovah, the King. Israel, the Nation. The Law, the Common Law.
The witness of the Spirit.	The Redemption of the Nation.
Sanctification.	The Return of Jesus Christ to reign in Israel, and over all the world through Israel.
Consecration to service.	The Covenants made with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob as valid and vital documents in force in Britain.
The baptism of the Holy Ghost.	The Covenants made with the Nation Israel, both old and new Covenants.
All the Scriptural articles of the Christian faith.	The Covenant made with the House of David.
Evangelising the world with the Gospel of Grace.	The Covenant made with Israel for protection against the great tribulation.—See Isaiah liv.
	The Common Law as the law of Israel-Britain.
	The administration of the law under the House of David.
	Evangelising the world with the Gospel of the Kingdom.
	Many other exclusive Israel things of value not at present enumerated.

THE MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF YORK AND PRINCESS MAY.

OUR PRESENT KING AND QUEEN.

THE Royal marriage took place, with much pomp and ceremony, and amid enthusiastic public rejoicings, in the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, on Thursday, July 6th, 1893. The Archbishop of Canterbury delivered the address to the newly-wedded pair. It is but seldom that such addresses are made public, and therefore we doubt not that our readers will be glad to read it here.

"The world's glad sympathy," said the Archbishop, "is with this bright hour. And Christ, the King of kings, does not fail, when invited to the marriage, to beautify with His presence the highest as much as the simplest feast. He is the unseen giver of its true joy, the real ruler of the feast, to all who, with firm will, enter on the holy estate. This is an age, and this a people, which, in spite of many outward changes, still, in its heart of hearts looks to the highest to do the common duties of all better than all. They desire to have before their eyes, and to be sure in their hearts that, amid all the splendour and care of a Kingdom, there is above its central hearth all mutual honour and reverence, all sweetness of domestic life, the faith and worship of God, the quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price. To some it is given that not their simplest ways are indifferent. Discretion and moderation, and wisdom of conduct, thought, and speech, are known to be consistent with deepest earnestness and enthusiasm for all that is noble and true, Nay, discretion, moderation, and wisdom alone give to earnestness and enthusiasm fair play and fair chance. To your union a glorious Empire and a strenuous, laborious people look to perpetuate among them the traditions that translate principle into life, that lets no responsibility seek the most desired ends by any but the purest ways; the tradition that can alone make society not an evil to itself, acting and reacting in imitation and intensification of that which is evil; the tradition that makes society a blessing to itself, ever receiving and working into its own Christian existence the real and undying blessings which spring from our knowing ourselves to be sons and daughters of the Heavenly Father, the followers of and believers in the Son of God through sorrow and through joy, the embodiment of the influence of the Holy Ghost. The first element of society is the family. The one prayer of all is that no blessing, no peace, no strength of the family may be lacking to the future, which is in the hand of God, for you."

There was an unexpected incident, of which the Queen was the central figure, at the Royal Wedding, which did not get into the papers at the time, but which has since been made public—in two versions—in two biographies. In his diary, under date July 6th, Archbishop Benson thus describes it:—

"In the very beautiful wedding of the Duke of York to Princess May, the sight of the Chapel in brilliance was impressive. Not a uniform but was traditional, not a ribbon or medal but had a great scene or period in history, a conquest or a battle at its birth. The really finest thing of all was the Queen's entrance. The newspapers have described it from the programme which stated what was to happen, and did not.

"The Bishops of London and Rochester and I (with others) were standing in front of the altar. I could scarcely believe my eyes when the Queen entered the Chapel by the lower end. There she was, alone, and began to walk up alone. The Duchess of Teck and her grandson of Hesse were behind her. On she came, looking most pleasant, slightly amused, bowing most gracefully to either side as she came, her black silk almost covered with wonderful lace, and a little crown with chains of diamonds on her head, walking lame and with a tallish stick. She looked Empire, gracious Empire; was helped on to the footpace by her grandson, and sat down in her chair looking so gallant and commanding, and kind too. Not a soul before her, backwards or any other way. I wouldn't have missed the sight of her for the world.

"The two were delightful—most reverent—followed every word of service and hymns—very grave, and at each change looking to make sure of what was right. When all was over they bowed and kissed the Queen and their friends; he quickly gave her his hand, and hand-in-hand they walked out of the Chapel."

A somewhat clearer account of what took place is supplied by Mr. C. Kinloch Cooke, in his "Memoir of the Duchess of Teck":—

"The Queen's cortège, in which were the Duchess of Teck and the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt, with their respective suites, left Buckingham Palace immediately before those of the bridegroom and bride. It was forgotten, however, that, as Her Majesty was to make her entry into the Chapel from St. James's Street, she would take a shorter time to reach her destination than those members of the Royal Family who were approaching the Palace by St. James's Park. The result was that the Queen arrived at the Chapel door first, instead of last—the position assigned to the Sovereign in the official arrangements—and only a gentleman usher was present to receive her. Princess May, taking in the situation at once, suggested that she should proceed to her place, and that the Queen should remain in a room on the left which had been prepared for her use. Scarcely had Her Royal Highness advanced a few steps up the corridor than Miss Thesiger, who was in attendance upon the Duchess, felt a pull at her dress, and at the same time heard a voice saying, 'I am going first.' Looking round, she saw Her Majesty on the arm of the Grand Duke; and in this informal way the Queen entered the Chapel. Some minutes later the Lord Chamberlain and the great officers of the Household arrived in breathless haste; but Her Majesty was not at all perturbed by the incident, only saying that she was glad it had happened so, for it was very amusing to see everyone come in."

ANNIVERSARY MEETING AT HEADQUARTERS.

A LARGE gathering of members and friends filled our Lecture Rooms on Monday, the 25th June, when we celebrated the anniversary of the opening of these Headquarters. The President, Major J. Knowles, O.B.E., presided, and the speakers included the President, Deputy-President—Rev. Commander Roberts, Rev. P. Husband Davies, Rev. Joseph Gay, Rev. T. H. Whitehouse, Mr. Herbert Garrison, Secretary-General, and Mr. John Leech, K.C., Commissioner-General.

Major Knowles referred to the splendid progress made in all departments during the past four years, showing that activities had increased about fourfold, including the circulation of our journal.

Major Knowles expressed the thanks of the Executive Committee to all the kind friends and supporters who had so generously given of their means towards the work of the Federation during the past year, without which it would not have been possible to carry on.

The Committee is now faced with the problem of securing a large hall for our own requirements in London, it being exceedingly difficult and at times impossible to hire halls large enough for our public meetings. The Committee feel they can rely upon members and friends coming to our aid and helping our Secretary-General in this new and stupendous undertaking. Efforts are now being made to secure a suitable site. We pray for Divine guidance in this very important matter.

With regard to the Great Pyramid and the 29th May, many were looking for some dramatic occurrence to take place on that day, and some very foolish prophecies were published, for which we had no responsibility whatever. We merely think that the Low Passage indicates a period of trouble for the world at large, and we have not taught that it necessarily indicated war.

We must preach British-Israel throughout the nations and the Empire, to prepare them for the great events which we believe are to take place in the near future.

The Rev. Commander Roberts, in a brief address, said it was a joy to him to see the advance which has taken place within the last few years. He was satisfied with the progress we had made, but felt sure that God has a great deal more for us to do. We need a hall of our own, and for that we want the prayers of everyone, that God will give a direct leading to our Secretary-General.

"I am an old man," said Commander Roberts, "but I do not think there ever has been a more critical period in the existence of our nation than that which we have just passed through." We must pray to God that there may be peace.

We must win those opposed to us by prayer and supplication to God, that they may follow us in the grand old Cause of still being witnesses for Almighty God.

The Rev. P. Husband Davies associated himself with the expressions of congratulation and thankfulness for the progress of our great Movement. He was very glad to recognise the splendid services rendered by the President and our Secretary-General.

Mr. Davies noticed with deep thankfulness a tone of deep spirituality about our Movement. Resting upon the sure rock of "The Identity" we can go forward and recognise its implications and responsibilities. Being the children of Abraham, we must, like Abraham, go forward in faith, obedience and loyalty. Note the present dangers and the present duties; note what is near to our hand.

Mr. Davies commended the women for their splendid work, and believed they had taken a large share by their prayers and their activities. He believed the call was for an ever deeper spirituality; great questions are going to be settled very largely in the "power house" of our homes and hearts. Continue instant in prayer.

Two great dangers beset Europe at this time. It would not be difficult to prove that they are on the same business and emanate from the same source in spirit. Modernism takes the centre course, and with its attacks upon the veracity and authority of the Holy Bible is taking spirituality out of religion. So carry on the work with redoubled energy and prayer, and preach, live and act the truths that are implicated and announced in the "Gospel of the Kingdom."

The Rev. T. H. Whitehouse, Commissioner for the Midland area, who had come down from Birmingham for the occasion, referred to various audiences he had addressed all over the country, and stated that recently the most frequent question asked had been, "What about May 29th?" He thought those present might like to know how he dealt with that question, which has relation to the Great Tribulation.

Looking only at the Bible indications of the Great Tribulation, we see from the 30th chapter of Jeremiah that the time of Jacob's trouble is a time of travail—birth-pangs. In the 24th chapter of St. Matthew Our Lord outlines how that birth-agony will have to be endured. These are the beginning of sorrows, but the days are to be shortened. In Revelation we have the Apocalyptic picture of the birth of the new Israel era or age, and then the modern picture of the "great red dragon" watching for opportunity to destroy.

The Granite of the second Low Passage floor, ceiling, walls, symbolise the Everlasting Arms underneath and around, protecting Israel.

There is war going on now between the angels in heaven and the devil and his angels. At the moment it is in the unseen spheres; presently it will materialise among us. Of that day and hour no prophet can tell, but be ye also ready.

The weapons of our warfare are spiritual, but mighty through God, Who casts down all strongholds of evil. Do not forget that the war is going on, and the victorious hosts, led by Michael, that great prince, can be helped by our prayers. We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, spiritual wickedness in high places.

The Rev. Joseph Gay expressed great pleasure at having the opportunity to join in the congratulations to Mr. Garrison and others. Strong, united effort had accounted for the success of the past year. The British-Israel Movement rings with certitude, and it is a Movement that helps one to come to a determination. In the midst of present-day happenings it is the voice of certitude that is wanted, and we can say without the slightest hesitation, "Thus saith the Lord." When it can be proved that God has kept His covenants, people must yield to our witness. We can register triumphs during the past year in this way. We are out to convert people to the faithful God of their fathers, and we are getting testimonies again and again that men and women are being won for God and established in the faith of the Bible.

This Movement restores the authority of Holy Scripture, and having established that everything else is established.

All the present strife in the Established Church of the Nation is but the "clearing of the decks" for action in order that God Almighty might be glorified in His people, when He has brought them to see that not one word of His has failed.

Mr. John Leech, K.C., Commissioner-General, referred to the very marked difference in the way the Press throughout the country is viewing our Movement. Reports are often asked for, and in many cases reporters are present at our meetings, chiefly in the Provinces, and in some cases splendid reports have appeared in the local papers. Some, of course, are against us, or misrepresent us, but on the whole the attitude of the public Press has greatly improved. Mr. Leech said that, to him, this was an important and encouraging sign of the progress of our Movement; it indicated our great Truth is going all over the country, and before long he believed it would sweep over the Empire. This should refresh our souls and invigorate our spirits, for these are signs of victory. May we go forward in hope and trust and prayer to our God.

Mr. Herbert Garrison, Secretary-General, agreed that the outlook is very encouraging, and becomes increasingly so as the years go by. He emphasised the urgent need of the Federation acquiring a hall of its own. He instanced a recent attack upon us in a certain religious paper, where it was urged that certain Church properties should be closed to us. We must be prepared for such an eventuality.

Amid much enthusiasm, Mr. Garrison told the story of how the new Headquarters at 6, Buckingham Gate were so Providentially acquired. This story will, by request, be published later. The meeting, at Mr. Garrison's suggestion, resolved that a message of greeting and affection should be sent to Mr. and Mrs. Goard.

At the close of the meeting a delightful tea was kindly provided by Mrs. Zoe Bell and served under her direction and that of Miss Alexander, to both of whom a hearty vote of thanks was passed.

"BUT WE TRUSTED THAT ——"

By C. L.

ALTHOUGH the companionship that existed between Christ and His disciples was of the most agreeable and noble order there were times when the Master was misunderstood very much by His devoted band.

Many of His utterances were as stumbling-blocks to them, and some were received and described as "hard sayings" —difficult to understand. In like manner His actions were not always in keeping with the anticipations and expectations of the faithful disciples, and at times their faith was tested to the utmost.

Often they questioned, and when He answered they would reason one with the other as to what He meant.

At times the very thing they expected Him to do He refrained from doing, whilst at other times, that which they least expected or even anticipated He accomplished first.

Instead of pitting His wisdom against Satan's, He answered from the Word of God; instead of baptising John, He suffered to be baptised by the Baptist.

Blessing was not unto the rich, joyful or exalted, but reserved for the poor, the mourners, and the meek.

Not an eye or a tooth for such, but the unsmitten cheek for the smiter; not public, but private prayer.

Not to the man lying sick with palsy, Be thou cured! but ". . . . thy sins be forgiven thee." Not to the mourners of the maid, Ah well, she is better off in heaven—but ". . . . the maid is not dead but sleepeth!"

That wonderful power He possessed to feed the multitude and to strengthen the faint He restrained when hungry and weary Himself, satisfying His every want in sweet communion with His Father in Heaven.

Those whom the disciples forbad He beckoned. But, even so, the faithful comrades trusted where they could not trace, believing that soon He would throw off former rôles, proclaim Himself King, and then be understood by them. It would seem they comprehended no other kind of redemption than a national redemption, which meant to them redemption from the yoke of earthly overlords and the restoration of the literal Kingdom of Israel under the Messiah and King, for even before His Ascension was not their burning question, "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the Kingdom to Israel?"

Little wonder then that after His Crucifixion we read of the sorrow that accompanied the disappointed hopes of His followers, "But we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel, and beside all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done."

It was hard enough to bear the criticism, scorn and scepticism of Rome, but what of their feelings when they heard from the Priests and Scribes of their own people of Judah —Israel, "He saved others, himself he cannot save"?

Had the followers of Christ been trusting in a fraud, a myth, because they had not seen the redemption they anticipated?

Nay, they were yet to know that a REDEMPTION had taken place of which they as yet knew nothing, and that the glorious restoration of the Kingdom they trusted to see come in miraculously was only just "at hand."

The patient still trusted, but there can be no doubt but that the impatient lost faith, turned and believed in Him no more. They had anticipated the spectacular, they saw nothing, and yet Israel had been redeemed, not with such corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the Precious Blood of the Redeemer.

The faithful visited the sepulchre; they too had trusted. "And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre, for they were amazed : neither said they anything to any man ; for they were afraid."

But their Christ was no fraud, no myth, but became the Redeemer in a way not anticipated, and for the National redemption of Israel He will yet vindicate the trust reposed in Him and effect another kind of redemption of which modern Israel has little comprehension. The glory of the King will yet be seen ; the splendour of His Kingdom revealed ! !

The followers of Christ trusted they would see what would be revealed to their descendants ;—Redemption and Kingdom come without observation. There are those to-day, followers of Him, who anticipated from their observation of the Pyramid a spectacular beginning to the second phase of the Tribulation.

They trusted, they believed there would be visible manifestation, not desiring to witness Tribulation ; not wishing for troublous times, but knowing from the Scriptures that until the time of travail came and passed there could be no ushering in of the King, and no joys of the new order and age.

They trusted, they stand at the sepulchre amazed ! They have heard the mocking of the priests and scribes of their own people Israel.

It appears as though many faithful followers of the Lord have been mistaken in trusting to see the visible manifestation of that which is beginning without observation.

Their witness is no fraud, no myth, their faith has been tried, but not destroyed !

FURTHER LIGHT ON THE SOLAR SCALE.

BY THE REV. EDWIN E. LE BAS.

THOSE who have made a study of Mr. Davidson's book, " The Great Pyramid ; its Divine Message," will hardly need reminding of the fact that this gifted author has applied two entirely different time-scales to the passage systems of the Great Pyramid. The first is based upon the length of the solar year, which the author determines to be 365.242465 days in length, corresponding very closely to the present accepted standard as calculated by Prof. Newcomb of 365.24219879. This scale is applied by him to the whole of the ascending passage system. On reaching the level passage leading into the King's Chamber, however, a radical change is made. Not only is the scale changed from 1″ to the year to 1″ to the month, but an entirely new month-length is adopted. Unlike the lengths of both the solar and the lunar months, which are determined astronomically, an ancient conventional month of thirty days—the academic month—is applied to the whole length of the King's horizontal passage leading to the S. Wall of the King's Chamber from the top of the Great Step.

Earlier investigators tried hard to apply to this level floor the length of the solar month of 30.436 days, but without success. Indeed, since Mr. Davidson published his work supporting the adoption of the academic month of thirty days, there seems scarcely to have been any serious attempt to revert to this effort of earlier students. Such non-discovery or neglect of this time-scale cannot, however, be taken as proof of its non-existence. Indeed, the adoption of the scale of 1″ to the solar year naturally implies a corresponding time-scale of 1″ to the solar month, assuming that any change is to be made at all.

Among much other work in connection with the Great Pyramid, the efforts of the writer have been directed to the discovery of this solar month-scale, and he ventures to submit the following information as indication of the result. Not only does he feel that the solar month can now be legitimately applied to the King's horizontal passage, but, when able later to publish this fact together with additional material, he hopes to vindicate abundantly from a new approach the application by Mr. Davidson of the scale of 1″ to the solar year to the entire length of the ascending passage system.

The discovery is tabulated below in a manner which will be readily grasped by all. Well-known structural features in the King's Horizontal Passage are indicated, followed by their respective distances from the Great Step as given by Mr. Davidson. These distances are then multiplied by the number of days in the solar month, here taken as simply 30.436 days, and the products added to the date of November 27th, 1905, standing opposite to the Great Step. These dates are followed by events corresponding thereto, each of which has been taken from " The Times Diary and Index of the War."

Structural features.	Distances in P″.	No. of inches multiplied by 30.436 days = days.	Dates reached.	Events.
Great Step	0.0″	0.0	November 27th, 1905	——
Vertical to S. Wall of Queen's Chamber ..	103.033″	3135.912	June 28th, 1914 ..	Murder of the Archduke of Austria.
End of First Low Passage	112.917″	3436.742	April 25th, 1915 ..	Landing at Gallipoli.
Beginning of Granite Floor	126.144″	3839.319	May 31st, 1916 ..	Jutland.
N. Face of Granite Leaf	134.233″	4085.516	February 3rd, 1917	U.S. broke with Germany.

Other dates and events might easily have been added, but the writer has confined himself to these supremely important dates. It is worth noting that on the above scale the date for the S. Wall of the King's Chamber is August 5th-6th, 1950.

Digitized by Google

A further, but far more highly complicated time-scale has also just been completed by the writer. It is based, as is the Jewish calendar, upon a luni-solar chronology, and commences with the cessation of the daily sacrifice in the Temple at Jerusalem during the siege under Titus in A.D. 70. Since its indications refer mainly to the future (apart from a striking correspondence with the dates of the rejection of the Amended Prayer Book on December 15th, and with the flood at Westminster on January 7th last, and one or two other features) its outstanding significance is not, as yet, equal to that of the purely solar time-scale above tabulated.

It should be added that these time-scales do not, in any way, invalidate the one adopted by Mr. Davidson and applied by him to these same features, but are supplementary to it. It would thus appear that each of the structural features occurring in the entire length of the King's Horizontal Passage would refer to different events, according to the length of the time-factor employed, whether that of the lunar, the academic or the solar month. The whole question, however, of the respective importance of these various structural features on the various scales is too great to be dealt with here.

A few words by way of acknowledgment are necessary. Apart from the great indebtedness of all students to Sir Flinders Petrie, the writer's special obligations to Mr. Davidson, both to his published work and to his letters personally received, are unbounded. It will ever be Mr. Davidson's glory that he, more than any other writer, has placed the entire theory upon a mathematical foundation which, in its central features, is as masterly as it is enduring. In addition to all such help, however, the writer must frankly acknowledge that the above time-scales could not have been solved by human aid alone, however brilliant and however gladly proffered. It is true that portions of the solar-month scale could have been discovered by "trial and error," but this has not been the writer's method. Although no one is more perplexed than he himself at the fact, yet he wishes it to be freely recognised that this critical help has come to him along lines that are emphatically inspirational in character. As the results reached could not possibly have been secured by any such ability as the writer possesses, and since he is becoming increasingly convinced that the Great Pyramid enshrines a special message from God to man, the full significance of which is immeasurably greater than anyone has as yet grasped, he has had to fall back, therefore, upon the theory that the source of such specialised guidance is to be sought not within but without his own personality, that it is, in other words, not human but Divine. Thus, however strange and inexplicable to the writer these experiences may be, and which need not here be detailed, and unpledged as he is to any one theory which may seek to account for them, he wishes to acknowledge most gratefully all help so unexpectedly, yet so generously and convincingly given.

"A penalty is affixed to the non-use of our faculties and abilities, both in nature and grace. The man who, like the Fakir in India, refuses to use his arm, will lose ability to use it. The man who refuses to use his moral faculties in the service of God will lose moral strength in the faculty which is not exercised. All our faculties gain strength by exercise, and lose strength by non-use."—WALKER.

By A. R. H.

FEAR of wars and rumours of wars still haunts the restless[1] nations of the earth. The spectre of war is not yet banished from the board of international council. The problem of war still remains the greatest of all problems exercising the minds of statesmen and world rulers.

And whilst the natural inclination of the people is to forget the facts of life which are unpleasant, they cannot long avoid an issue in persistent refusal of the facing of it.

War is an issue which must be faced. It is a problem which must be solved. It is a force which must be overcome or it will overcome mankind. And it is the problem above all problems which must be settled by the present generation of men and women.

Having fought the first round in the FIGHT FOR CIVILISATION [2]

—the War to end War—we needs must see this matter through to the very end. For this cause were we born into the earth at the present period of human history.[3]

Meanwhile, three outstanding events—one international and the other two domestic—have lately focused the public eye in this direction :—

(1) The PACT to Outlaw War initiated by the three great tricolour nations, BRITAIN, the UNITED STATES of AMERICA and (our Gallic Ally) FRANCE;

(2) David Lloyd George's challenge to the CHURCHES of CHRISTENDOM ; and

(3) The Pageant of our Nation's History as portrayed in panorama at the ALDERSHOT TATTOO.

Dealing with the first of these events we would say that the fact that such a PACT as this could have been made at all proves many things. One : that whilst war is not yet outlawed from the earth, it is at least the will of the three most resolute and powerful nations of the earth that it should be so outlawed.

Two : that the spirit of restraint is manifestly at work. And where the spirit of restraint is, there can be detected the influence and personal presence of "the Restrainer." [4]

Three : that whoever now, historically, shall shake the nations into further conflict, stands self-branded as the Outlaw of whom the Scriptures speak—the anti-Christ.

Meanwhile the prospect of a world relieved of the scourge of war arouses the strangest misgivings in the minds of intellectuals. Thus a correspondent to the Morning Post asks : "What is to be the supreme test of a Nation? Change is [1] Restless because not yet found in Him Who alone can give us rest.

[2] See inscription on the Allied Service Medal which describes the struggle of 1914 to 1918 as being the War for Civilisation. This was the War for Cosmos and for Christ Who is the Author of Cosmos.

[3] The present period of human history is under the mark of Christ. Note a significant connection between War and Christ in Isa. lx, verses 5 and 6. Specially to be noted is the force of the initial word "For" of verse 6. The birth of Christ is to be the signal for intensified conflict. Amazing paradox that the birth of the Prince of Peace should be made an excuse for battle and destruction. But not so strange when we remember that He Who holds the keys of Death and Hell has also sworn to seal the doom of War. The sons of men led by the Son of Man shall finally beat down Satan under their feet.

[4] Ferrar Fenton in his translation of 2 Thess. i, verses 6–9, speaks of "the Restrainer" and "the Outlaw." Christ the Restrainer is exercising restraint politically to-day through His Kingdom-nation in the earth, Great Britain—Great Land of the Covenant.

the law of the universe, and this is applicable to countries and races. In the past a race or nation has decayed and another people has pressed forward and occupied the country of the effete race. The classic instance is, of course, the fall of

THE ROMAN EMPIRE.[5]

"Hitherto the test of effeteness has been war; if war is abolished, what is to supply its place? If you abolish war as a test of virility, what is the precise method by which you are to change frontiers? For nobody can contemplate universal and perpetual stagnation."

Here we have sentiments akin to those expressed by Ruskin in his lecture[6] to the military cadets at WOOLWICH. It has been said that no gentler soul than Ruskin ever breathed nor any more savagely uncompromising in the matter of evil doing. Yet listen to his words on war:—"No great art ever yet rose on earth but among a nation of soldiers. There is no art among a shepherd people if it remains at peace. There is no art among an agricultural people if it remains at peace. There is no great art possible to a nation but that which is based upon battle.

"It is very strange to me to discover this and very dreadful—but I say it to be quite an undeniable fact. The common notion that peace and the virtues of civil life flourish together I found to be wholly untenable. Peace and the vices of civil life only flourish together.

"We talk of peace and learning and of peace and plenty and of peace and civilisation; but I found that those were not the words which the Muse of History coupled together; that on her lips the words were—Peace and Sensuality, Peace and Selfishness, Peace and Death. I found, in brief, that all great nations found their and strength of thought in war; that they were nourished in war and wasted by peace; taught by war and deceived by peace; trained by war and betrayed by peace—in a word, that they were born in[7] war and expired in peace."

There is much in these two testimonies that is profoundly true. But there is one thing that Ruskin never lived long enough to witness and one thing that many modern thinkers have not yet fully realised. For whilst this philosophy and experience holds good for the past (and would hold good for the future, too, if the Empires of the world were to remain inspired by the spirit of man only), with the passing of the ROMAN EMPIRE—last of the Gentile succession of World Empires—we have the advent of an EMPIRE set up and inspired by the spirit of GOD.[8]

And with the advent of the Kingdom of the Britains (or Lands of the Covenant) a new and living way of progress (or transition from decadence to virility) is opened to the nations of mankind.

No longer is the god of War to challenge the Gateway to a higher civilisation. The path of human progress is to be along the path of Peace. Not a negative and stagnate peace, but a peace of intensified constructive energy and high endeavour.

The KINGDOM EMPIRE of GOD on earth is founded upon LAW not War, upon FREEDOM and LIBERTY not Force.

Change is a law of the universe, and frontiers certainly must change. And in the past that change has come by conquest. But with the advent of the KINGDOM there has come the introduction of a new phase in human affairs. Absorption not Conquest is the process followed by the KINGDOM, and it cannot fail. For the spirit of GOD not of man is behind the KINGDOM. And this spirit is eternally vital and unchangeable.

Inclusion in the BRITH-ISH COMPANY OF NATIONS[9] is a guarantee of increased prestige and glory. There exists not a nation in the world that would have aught to lose by entering the membership of this great FAMILY. Fellowship in this COMMONWEALTH of NATIONS guarantees the surest progress from decadence to virility. The meanest State would find itself uplifted. For the spirit animating the heart of the EMPIRE reaches forth and quickens the whole in every part.

Brith-ain—GREAT LAND of the COVENANT—alone among the nations of the earth can offer a home to every other nation. It is the one nation constituted by law to form a nucleus around which the other nations of every clime and colour and creed can cluster. It is the nucleus of a new civilisation and a world Empire that will outlive the ages. It is a mighty cosmos held together by no legal or forcible dominion but by a spiritual unity, that of a common loyalty to the CROWN and throne of DAVID.

"But the fighting instinct is too deeply planted in the human breast," argues the sceptic. "Abolition of War and the substitution of Absorption for Conquest savour too much of repression to be safe. Repression would be dangerous; more deadly, perhaps, than release of carnal passion upon the fields of battle."

True enough! There is no transforming power in repression. As a method of restraint it is utterly futile. But we do not look to repression for deliverance but to sublimation.

The same energies, which if repressed after the first fashion make for chaos, can be sublimated after a better fashion to build a cosmos. This redirection being the work of

A NEW SPIRIT.[10]

Not Repression but Sublimation. Not Conquest but Absorption.[11] Not Force but Conciliation. Not Prohibition but Persuasion. Not Competition but Co-operation. Not the compulsion of an iron discipline but willing obedience. Not Slavery but Service.

These are the watchwords of the NEW AGE. These are the fruits of the new spirit animating the principles and inspiring the clauses of that New and Better COVENANT,[12] which remains at once the secret and the source of Britain's greatness.

The "breaking in pieces" of the Empires was military and came as a divine judgment. The "consuming" process of absorption is beneficent and peaceful, being a demonstration of that mercy which ever follows judgment received at the hand of Divine Power.
[12] See Jer. xxxi, 31–40. This covenant was sealed and ratified by Christ Himself, as Redeemer of His People Israel. The genius of this administration is that the dictatorial "I will" and "they shall" clauses do not come into operation until the silent unseen writing of the law upon the hearts of the people has secured the perfection of obediental love. God's Brith-ish People will gladly respond to the law for they consent in their hearts to the law that it is good. We also have the assurance of Ps. cx, 3, to the effect that God's People will be willing in the coming Day of His Power.

BELGIUM.

WHAT memories are called up by the words Belgium and Flanders; memories that must ever remain with this generation, and that will be passed on to the next and the next. How natural that those who need a holiday from strenuous labours should take it there and go over the ground for ever associated with the titanic struggle of 1914 onward, thus obtaining a deeper impression and a better perspective of the heroic stand and wondrous sacrifice of a brave little country; at the same time visit some of the historic and classic centres connected with art and literature, and enjoy the picturesque beauties and attractions of the Ardennes. It is said that about a million people go annually to Belgium. Cheap fares, reasonable hotel charges, railway facilities over 2,890 miles of lines, and a well organized tourist system have contributed to make Belgium a favourite country for holiday seekers.

Small wonder, then, that Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Garrison have gone there for their holiday this year. They hope to visit, and for lecturing purposes bring back pictures of, Ostend, Zeebrugge, Blankenberghe, Nieuport, Dixmude, Ypres, Courtrai, Bruges, Ghent, Termonde, Antwerp, Brussels, Mons, Malines, Louvain, Namur, Charleroi, Dinant, Liège, Verviers, Spa, Aix-la-Chapelle, Tournai, Waterloo, Aerschot, Audenard, Tongres, Bouillon, Grotte de Han, the Meuse, La Roche, Huy, Coxyde, Luxembourg, Nivelles, Leau, etc.

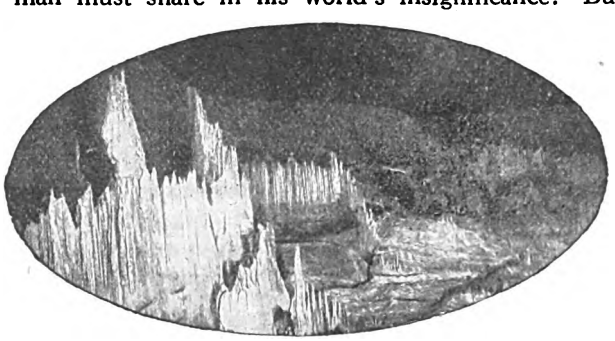
Should this enumeration of interesting places tempt some of our friends to emulation, they may perhaps communicate with Headquarters, with a view to "catching up" the Secretary-General and his wife.

Rochers de Faule, Belgium.

We may remind prospective travellers that cheap circular tours are arranged by the Belgian National Railways, the London Office of which is at 47, Cannon Street, E.C.4, and that in connection therewith there are attractive motor tours arranged. Bruges, an old-world town, the "Venice of the North," will delight those interested in naval architecture, old monuments and relics of the past. Here also may be heard the renowned Carillon concerts on the famous bells of the old belfry.

Antwerp is a world-famed port; it is also regarded as the metropolis of Flemish art. It is the city of Rubens, and contains many old houses in which lived and worked such artists as Van Dyck, Quentin, Matsys, and other famous men whose masterpieces are to be found in the churches, libraries and museums of the city.

Brussels, "the Paris of Belgium," is a city of fine streets, noble buildings, and a renowned centre of art, music and education.



In the country of the Ardennes there is magnificent woodland scenery, delightful valleys, and the largest and most impressive stalagmite and stalactite caves in Europe.

Indeed, Belgium affords many striking contrasts both in scenery and manner of living; all tastes may be said to be catered for.

THE FUTURE STATE.

BY WILLIAM HANNA THOMSON, M.D. (U.S.A.).

"A UNIVERSE of matter is of no more value than empty space if it be of nothing but matter. Some speak of this earth as being such an insignificant speck among the starry worlds that man must share in his world's insignificance. But as those worlds are so largely composed of burning hydrogen gas, how much hydrogen gas will it take to become valuable without a sentient being to make use of it? The truth is that it is matter which is insignificant compared with one imperishable human mind.

"But there is a perfectability in man, the thought of which deeply stirs the heart. This was shown by men in the darkest days of the Old Testament when, without a clear revelation of the Rest beyond, they nevertheless faced a cruel death rather than deny God.

"To appreciate poetry we should fully understand the poet's allusions. The xlii-iii psalms (one psalm) was composed by a poor Hebrew captive as he was driven past Mt. Hermon in winter on his way to Babylon. Of the thirty-three peoples which Tiglath Pileser says he caused to undergo that terrible ordeal of captivity, not one survived it. Little, but abiding, Judah survived the captivity, though this psalmist had witnessed the hideous spectacle of infants' heads dashed by brutal soldiers against the stones lest they would encumber the march. The psalmist's earliest journey had been with his parents—and who does not vividly remember such early journeys—to go up to the House of the Lord, and three times a year since he had joined in such pilgrimage to listen to the splendid antiphonies of Ps. cxviii, 19-29, from the battlements of the Temple and the answers of the approaching multitude keeping holy day. But now he was like the thirsty hart which dreads to approach the water-brooks because it well knows that lions are waiting there for it. No sight in nature ever impressed me (the writer) as a storm on the slopes near Mt. Hermon when four waterspouts rose simultaneously from the darkened Mediterranean to the black cloud which stretched for a hundred miles over the sea, as it approached the great mountain range. Incessant lightning, with thunder which echoed through the valleys, caused our horses to tremble under us as the mighty phalanx of clouds drew near. "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of Thy waterspouts; all Thy waves and Thy billows have gone over me." But worst of all, "as with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me, while they continually say unto me, where is thy god?" According to all then accepted standards Jehovah had failed. He could not protect His own people from the bitterest of calamities, nor even His Temple, for the Ark and the golden vessels were being carried by the heathen to put in triumph before the image of their mightier Merodach. But as each fresh recollection brought its anguish, this man could answer with that beautiful refrain, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him who is the health of my countenance and my God!" In comparison with Christians in these days of light, being disquieted at the ranks of unbelievers, what was this man's faith? Probably no archangel in heaven was ever subjected to such a test of loyalty to God as was this mourning captive. Heart preference being the deepest test of character, we now can understand what justification by faith means, and that it will be the special honour through eternity of the redeemed children of men.

"I am now an old man, and five times have I stood at an open grave to see it close over the remains of my own beloved. The associations connected with such experiences are too sacred for public mention or reference. It is only because I have been asked to write some words for the comfort of other bereaved ones that I do so now. An open grave is a cold and dark place. Vainly have I sought in human science or philosophy for a ray of light to dispel that darkness. There in our desolation and utter helplessness we do not ask for doctrine, not even for the doctrine of the Resurrection. We long for the presence of a mighty Friend. And as such He comes with His unmistakable personal voice saying, "I am the Resurrection and the Life. Whosoever believeth in Me shall never die." That is also in keeping with what Paul said as he approached his last day. I know—not what I believed—but whom I have believed. So when stricken ones turn to leave their scene of burial let them think of that inspired word. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so those also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." What will that Reunion be! Our loved ones are given us here for us to learn and know in advance Him whose name is Love. How plainly we are told that we shall do so because we shall be then in His likeness. When the beloved Apostle wrote, "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is," he was but echoing the words of the old Psalmist, "As for me, I shall be satisfied when I awake in Thy likeness." — (Extract from "In After Days." Harper Brothers).

SOME COMMENTS CONCERNING DAN.

II.

"Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?"

BY PROFESSOR EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., &c.

DURING the process of building and ornamenting Solomon's Temple, Hiram, King of Tyre, co-operated with Solomon, King of all Israel. In seeking skilled workers and special expert artistic overseers, Hiram selected as their master a clever Danite. He was "skilful to work in gold, and in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber, in purple, in blue, and in fine linen, and in crimson: also to grave out any manner of graving, and to find out every kind of device which shall be put to him, with thy cunning men, and with the cunning men of my lord David thy father."—2 Chr. ii, 14.

The above is an extract from a letter written by Hiram, King of Tyre, to Solomon, King of Israel.

The word device means building or artistic device. The word cunning means knowing or expert in knowledge and experience in relation to building and ornamenting.

The above, with much else, is a finger-point indicating something of the skill and varied abilities of the Danites.

Let us go afield from this Danite the chief expert, the master architect of Solomon's Temple. Among the many architectural methods of building temples, public halls, academies, theatres and cathedrals we read of the Doric, Ionic, Gothic, Corinthian, Norman, etc.

The Dorians of Greece crossed from Asia Minor and Western Asia into ancient Apia, Messenia and Sparta. These Dorians were Danites and men of Judah of the line of Darda.

Hence the wonderful Doric structures of Europe came largely from the skilled minds of the master masons and mechanics of the Danites.

Dan was a tribal landholder and one of the strongest military tribes. His people were expert as well-diggers, most capable builders, masons, architects and artists, and experienced in naval and commercial enterprises. Our authority is twofold, Biblical and secular. Just now, we give the former.

Digitized by Google

Ezek. xxvii, 19: "Dan also and Javan going to and fro occupied in thy fairs."

When we remember that Dan was an expert shipman, we readily conclude that his business was largely carried on by water. No wonder, then, that we read in the same verse of bright iron, and cassia, which were carried to Tyre by ships from distant lands.

We pass along and come to Ezek. xlviii, 1: "Now these are the names of the tribes. From the north end to the coast of the way of Hethlon, as one goeth to Hamath, Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus northward, to the coast of Hamath; for these are his sides east and west; a portion for Dan."

This remarkable chapter of Ezekiel is giving the twelve tribal territorial limitations or bounds, yet to be surveyed, when Israel of the twelve tribes is officially in possession of Palestine.

As Dan, in ancient days, held his lands largely in north Canaan, so in the future, the north will be his possession, and Ezekiel has given us the bounds thereof.

Next to Dan comes Asher and his yet-to-be homeland. All the limits are given by the prophet. Let us bear in mind the future referred to by Ezekiel is a concrete, material future when and wherein the tribes officially will hold, possess, occupy, use and operate their earth possessions, including land, water, houses, fields, cattle, sheep and all necessary for landed activity. "In summer and in winter shall it be." No heavenly abode! No spiritualizing here! No confusion of terms! No abstract visions of ethereal perching on the clouds! Just living, and using the old concrete things of earth!

But the conditions will be of a righteous, highly spiritual sort, when all men, women and children will have full and unhampered chances of making good among a people striving to help the other fellow at all times. And Dan will be there.

As aforesaid, the Greek statesmen, writers and generals knew the fighting Greeks to be of the ancient Hebrew race. When they appealed to them as men and heroes, they called upon them as Danaoi, plain Danoi or Dans.

THE MAJESTY OF DUTY.

"There is no evil that we cannot either face or flee from, but the consciousness of duty disregarded. A sense of duty pursues us ever. It is omnipresent, like Deity. If we take to ourselves the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, duty performed or duty violated is still with us, for our happiness or our misery. If we say that darkness shall cover us, in the darkness as in the light our obligations are yet with us. We cannot escape their power, nor fly from their presence. They are with us in this life, will be with us at its close, and, in that sense inconceivable solemnity which lies yet further onward, we shall still find ourselves surrounded by the consciousness of duty to pain us, wherever it has been violated, and to console us so far as God has given us grace to perform it."—DANIEL WEBSTER is the heading of a paragraph in Overseas Daily Mail in which it is believed there are only two places in England where the open-field system of agriculture has been in full operation from Anglo-Saxon times. These places are the Isle of Axholme (so called) in Lincolnshire, and Laxton, or Lexington, an old-fashioned village of 400 inhabitants in Nottinghamshire. Wide open fields around the village total several hundred acres; each field is distinguished by a name of its own and separated only by a narrow strip of grass from adjacent ones.

FARMING AS SAXONS DID

One field is planted with wheat, another with barley, and so on. Occasionally mistakes in ownership are made by the different proprietors.

The maintenance of this ancient system of farming must have had its origin in the normal agricultural life of the Anglo-Saxons, and as "in old Saxon villages there are no hedges and one steps into the fields off the high road," so the question arises, may we not see in this custom a resemblance or even identical repetition or continuance of the old system of farming common in olden times and in many places maintained to-day in Palestine, Mount Lebanon and Syria generally?

A new system of land division is being introduced in Palestine under British administration, whereby boundary stones of certain size and shape bearing numerals and letters are placed at regular intervals dividing and apportioning lands, but in Mount Lebanon no such system pertains and, especially where vineyards are concerned, it is sometimes difficult to determine the exact boundaries of the different properties.

What struck me in the paragraph referred to was the fact of this old Anglo-Saxon "open-field system of agriculture" persisting to our day, and in its continuance may we not see a harking back of the land to its origin—the Land of Israel?

NEWS AND NOTES.

MEETINGS will be held as usual at Headquarters during July. On Thursday, July 12th, at 7.30, Mr. J. J. Morey will be the speaker. The speaker for Wednesday, July 11th, at 3 p.m., will be announced later.

* * *

Mrs. Bell's monthly Bible Class for women will be held at Headquarters on Saturday, July 7th, at 3 o'clock.

The Bible Class for men, conducted by Mr. Sleeman, will hold its last meeting this session on Tuesday, July 10th, at 6 p.m. The classes will be resumed, D.V., after the summer holidays.

Speakers at the Glastonbury Convention, August 6th to 10th, will be Revs. Dr. Mountain, Guy Waddington, M.A., Joseph Gay, Mr. J. J. Morey, and others. To secure accommodation early application to Headquarters is necessary.

The afternoon meeting at Highbury Corner on Sunday, June 24th, was opened by Mr. W. Pilcher. Mr. McKelvey then spoke for an hour under a very hot sun, giving a fine general talk on the British-Israel position. Mr. Pilcher also opened the evening meeting and continued his talk of the afternoon, Mr. Tester following on the History of Britain and London before the time of Christ, giving facts of its antiquity. Mr. Barrow traced the Throne of David and the Coronation Stone from Jerusalem, through Ireland and Scotland to Westminster.

This meeting was the largest and best yet held. The speakers are greatly cheered to find that the people of this our country are waiting for such a Message, and thank God for their willingness to listen.

The next open-air meetings are to be held in Victoria Park on Sunday, July 8th, at 3.30 and 7.30, and on Tuesday, 10th, at 7.30.

The Rev. T. H. Whitehouse visited the newly-formed Branch at Northampton, where two meetings were held on Thursday, June 21st; Lt.-Col. A. A. James presided, supported by Capt. F. P. James, Rev. F. Martyn, and others. In the evening the chair was taken by Rev. F. Martyn, supported by Mr. W. J. Slade. There were special musical items by Madam S. Runham ('cello), Madam Lillian Brittian (piano), Mr. G. Runham (violin). A letter was received from Lady Knightly, who very kindly sent a donation to help forward the work in Northampton. Votes of thanks, proposed by Rev. F. Martyn, to Rev. T. H. Whitehouse, the musicians and the Secretary, Mr. D. Yeoman Young, were carried unanimously.

It is hoped this Branch will become a very powerful one, and readers having friends in this district who might become interested are asked to send names and addresses to the Commissioner for this Area—Rev. T. H. Whitehouse, 132, Gravelly Hill North, Birmingham.

Canon Savage presided on June 21st at a meeting of the St. Leonards Branch, when the Rev. T. H. Whitehouse was the speaker.

A good number were present at Barking on June 26th, when Mr. Daniel Farmer spoke on "Seven Reasons for the approval of British-Israel Teaching." Following the address, half-an-hour's intercession was held for prayer on behalf of the Nation and for God's blessing on the work of the Federation.

Four well-attended meetings were held in Manchester during June, the speakers being Dr. J. Mountain and Mr. J. J. Morey. Each address showed the high spiritual nature of the Truth we teach.

In presenting their Tenth Annual Report since reorganisation in 1918, the Queensland (Australia) Branch gave thanks to God for His continued mercies and manifold blessings to them, and all His people Israel. This Branch of the Federation dates back to the year 1880, when it was first formed in Brisbane. During the year 1927 twenty-two meetings have been held, the annual meeting being on March 31st, when the election of Officers and Committee took place. On a motion then carried, a message was despatched on April 5th to H.R.H. the Duke of York, on his arrival at Wallangarra:—"The Queensland Branch of the British-Israel-World Federation tenders to His Royal Highness, The Duke of York, member and representative of the most illustrious House of David, its humble and devoted service, and its assurance of the love and loyalty of the members of the Federation in Queensland for the Throne and Person of His Most Gracious Majesty—King George V." To this a message of thanks was received. Special public meetings are arranged and held each year to synchronise with the Congress held in London during October.

The finances of the Association stand in a satisfactory condition, the best thanks of the members being conveyed to the Treasurer for his services, and also to the Auditor.

The Library continues its sphere of usefulness, and proves to be a very valuable asset in the work.

Appreciation was expressed for the kindness and generosity of the minister and officials of the Ann Street Presbyterian Church for the continued use of their hall and church.

Special expressions of thanks were made to the President, Mr. A. Exley and Mrs. Exley, for their devoted service in the cause of the Master; and to all others giving yeoman service through the British-Israel teaching. The Vice-Presidents elected were: Mr. C. W. Gregory, Mr. W. H. Parker, Mrs. W. H. Bell, Mr. Wm. Poacher, Rev. O. H. Purnell; Secretary, Mr. M. Victor Rigby; Treasurer, Mr. A. G. Calow; Librarian, Mr. F. A. Ferguson; Committee, Misses Stewart and McConechy, Messrs. T. Moon, A. W. Ham, J. A. Rigby, A. S. Lang, T. Porter, Mrs. A. Exley.

At the conclusion it was decided to go forward this year with greater enthusiasm and unbounded trust in the Lord God of Israel.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

(It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.)

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—I.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

In the following series of articles it is our purpose to consider in outline the four great prophets and their message to Israel in the world.

Perhaps every thoughtful scholar, who has really made himself acquainted with the contents of the literature of the prophets, will agree that the critical examination bestowed upon them during the last quarter of a century has been the study of specialists rather than that of general students of the literature.

The study of the most ancient manuscripts is of interest and of some importance—perhaps of great importance, but not of supreme importance.

The question as to authorship, date of production and redaction of the documents are questions of a similar order, interesting, important, but not of supreme importance.

Two questions must arise above all others—namely, the relationship of the mind of God to the literature of the prophets and the content of the prophets.

As to the relationship of the mind of God to the prophets, one supreme test is available. We know the scope and limitation in general of the human mind. We know that the human mind, singly and collectively, if endowed with prevision at all, is endowed with an exceedingly limited prevision. It is incapable of pre-writing the rise and progress of a new civilization, the major parts of which should be played by nations and organizations not in existence at the time of writing, over a period of 2,520 years; such a feat we know to be entirely beyond the scope of the human mind.

Now the question is: Is the literature of the prophets bounded by the limitations of the human mind or does it overleap those boundaries?

Everyone who is acquainted with the content of the literature of the prophets is well aware of the fact that that literature has no such boundaries, but sweeps forward along various intertwined lines of pre-written history, giving bold outlines of national and international progress, and filling in striking and minute, though essential, details to the full end of the seven times of prophecy. Having completed the description of the civilization of that period, it again overleaps the boundaries and gives the outline of a subsequent civilization towards which, as history fulfils prophecy, we are now hastening.

In order to be assured that the message of the prophets does so overleap the boundaries of human foresight, it is necessary to understand in outline and detail the story contained in prophetic literature. We use the word "story" in the singular advisedly, for although there have been many prophets from Moses to John the revelator, of whom the chief was Jesus Christ Our Lord, and although each has contributed to the story, the story of the prophets is one.

For our purposes it begins with the call of and covenant made with Abraham, and sweeps on in the sequences of that covenant to the end of time, the eleven chapters which precede the call of Abraham being the necessary synopsis relating the Abrahamic and post-Abrahamic literature to the whole great scheme of universal history.

The study of the languages in which the Scriptures were written is important. Without it there could have been no translation of the Scriptures into our language. But so well has the translation of the Scriptures into our language and other modern languages been accomplished that the mastery of the ancient languages is not now of such importance. No great doctrines, no statement of essential fact, can ever now be changed by revisions of translation.

Etymological sidelights on details there may be of great value and interest, but essential change will not now be made through the knowledge of the classical language.

It is the custom of some to meet great statements of doctrine and of fact by opposing etymological difficulties in relation to details. It will be seen instantly that this process is faulty in the extreme and can never reach ultimate results.

It has been considered by others that to be master of Hebrew and Greek is to be master of the contents of the Scriptures. One might as well say that to be master of the English language is to possess the mastery of all the books which have been written in it.

Illustrating what we have been saying: over 1,800 translations of the sacred Scriptures have been enumerated, and among them all no fundamental doctrine, or statement of essential fact, has been changed.

We shall address ourselves then to ask: What is the message which the prophecies bear to us, having impressed upon it such broadness of scope and length of vision as indicates it to be the product of more than the mind of man?

The scholar who has approached prophetic literature from the critical standpoint has done so with the microscope in his hand. He has been handicapped by the fact that he has not had one single scrap of original text to put under his glass, but has been examining transcription or translation, and has not always been able to tell, neither has he yet been able to decide, whether the document under his eye is a transcription in the original tongue or a translation into another tongue. Therefore his microscopic examination is debarred from ultimate knowledge up to the present time.

While calling attention to the limitations of the specialist's critical analysis of the Scriptures, we would not refuse to give them their due value. The succeeding generations will find that they have reaped benefit from the critical approach, and will be able to estimate that benefit at its true value. They will also find that the generation now passing has suffered much in the interim between the critical approach and the true estimate of the value of critical work.

In order, however, to understand the full scope and meaning of the prophetical message, we must make use of other instruments in addition to the critical microscope.

The field of vision covered by the prophets is of as long range in the theological world as the field of vision in the heavens is in the astronomical world. We should accomplish very little in the astronomical field if we insisted on laying aside the telescope and on using the microscope only. The telescope of prophetic vision is necessary to the student of the prophets if he will view the field of vision they open up, and he will never so view them through the critical microscope alone.

As we have fallen into the use of astronomical instruments to illustrate our approach to the Scriptures we will use yet another, namely, the spectroscope. The telescope enables the astronomer to ascertain the place of the stars in the heavens, their grouping, their magnitude, their movements, and so on; but it gives him little or no information as to the material of which they are composed.

The spectroscope, while adding little to the knowledge thus obtained, reveals to the astronomer the material of which the heavenly bodies are composed.

It has been of the greatest interest to discover that the heavenly bodies are composed very largely of the familiar elements which enter into the earth's composition.

The spectroscopist obtains this information by first submitting to spectroscopic analysis the familiar elements of our terrestrial globe.

Having obtained a correct knowledge of the lines of the spectra produced by the various elements of the earth, he projects his vision to the heavenly bodies and finds reproduced in their spectra the lines which indicate the same familiar elements.

So we from our standpoint subject to a similar test the prophetic literature covering each period of world history as previously outlined in prophecy, and also the evangelical and devotional literature of the Bible, and the Apocalyptic literature yet remaining unfulfilled; and we find as the basis of it all the same familiar elements of God's covenants with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; with the nation Israel; with the House of David; with the divided nations, the House of Israel and the House of Judah; still in line with these, and not otherwise, are the great doctrines of the Atonement and the Redemption as incorporated in the Gospel of the Kingdom and the Gospel of Grace.

In the whole process from Moses to John the revelator there is not a strange element; there is not a shadow of a change of plan; neither is there a single parenthesis or halt in the steady forward march of our triumphant Lord. While within the Kingdom the absolute freedom of choice of every citizen to elect to render loyal service to the King, or on the other hand to elect to forswear that service and to enlist under the standard of Our Lord's great opponent, is fully secured to each individual, the purpose of the Kingdom itself from its foundation in the Abraham, Isaac and Jacob race, its organisation under Moses at Sinai to the Lord Jesus Christ coming to sit on the throne of His father David, is fore-ordained, predestinated and foretold, and no combination of powers in all the universe can hinder it or turn it aside.

Our spectroscopic analysis of the materials of which the histories, laws, prophecies, gospels, epistles and other Scriptures are formed show the covenants made with our fathers, ratified by Jesus, and inherited by us down to the present day, to be the basis of them all.

We shall carry the illustration a little further by a reference to telephotography. The photographing of the heavens has been important in several directions. Among other things it has enlarged the range of our knowledge of the heavens, for the sensitive plate of the camera registers heavenly bodies which lie beyond the range of vision even when aided by the telescope. It has also registered movements of the heavenly bodies which the eye alone fails to detect.

Now let us apply this to the approach of the prophetic message.

We may look upon the literature of each of the prophets as upon the plate exposed through the camera. Thus we find the Book of Genesis presenting to us in outline and detail, with well-defined lines of perspective, the conditions of a period obtaining in Western Asia and in Egypt about the same length of time B.C. as we are A.D.

Such are the details caught upon the sensitive plate, and such are the lines of perspective that no other period would answer to the picture given.

We take another plate of the camera, in fact a series of them, including the last four Books of the Pentateuch. These plates cover in a most unmistakable manner the period of the organization of Israel, which period covered the time from the Exodus to the death of Moses, and the plates are as follows :—

The organization of the Kingdom in Exodus.
The organization of the worship of the Kingdom in Leviticus.
The organization of the administration of the Kingdom in Numbers.
The digest of the constitution given at the end of forty years in Deuteronomy.

It would be impossible to fit this picture into any other period of world history, either from the standpoint of the international situation, of the history of religion, or otherwise. This is established beyond peradventure by details and lines of perspective included in the picture.

There is this difference between a photograph and a painting ; the photograph includes every detail, whether desirable or otherwise, with absolute fidelity. The painting corporates only such features as the painter may select or is capable of reproducing, with no guarantee that some of the features introduced are not distorted or even imaginary.

Had the Pentateuch been the product of post-captivity authors, such accuracy of detail and especially of such lines of perspective as are manifest could not have been found therein.

Any variation which may have entered in through transcription or translation, or transliteration out of ideographic symbols into alphabetical letters and words, does not affect this consideration ; the details and lines of perspective are there.

These examples are sufficient to justify the use of the illustration of telephotography.

It will be found that this principle not only can but must be applied to each of the prophetic Books in order to find its chronological place and relationship to the main current of prophecy.

In succeeding issues we shall take up an outline study of the prophecies from some such approach as the foregoing.

" Weak in yourselves, but strong in God, go forth on this Godlike enterprise ; the motto on your banner, the prayer of your heart, this wish of Brainerd, ' Oh, that I were a flaming fire in the service of my God.' "—DR. GUTHRIE.

WHAT IS THE VITAL POINT OF CONVERSION ?—II.

BY HENRY D. HOUGHTON.

THIS was expressly the practice of the Apostles in dealing with converts.

Take the case of the Apostle Philip and the eunuch from Ethiopia.

He could have known very little indeed about Our Lord. He never saw Him, never heard Him, and knew nothing whatever about Christ except what Philip told him in that short interview.

Indeed so ignorant was he, that as he read Esaias the prophet he said to Philip : " Tell me, does the prophet speak about himself or of somebody else ?"

But so impressed was the eunuch that he asked for baptism : " See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptised ? "

Now note St. Philip's answer : " If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest."

The confession of the eunuch which followed : " I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God " tallies exactly and minutely with Christ's own words. But it is a very insufficient standard of belief judged by the requirements of the churches of to-day !

And yet sufficient for Philip, for without another word he baptised him ; and then, his work being done acceptably to God, the Spirit caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more, and he went on his way rejoicing.—Acts viii, 34-40.

That brief confession of faith by the eunuch is not accepted to-day as the one thing which brings salvation ! Ought it not to be ?

It was sufficient for Philip ! It was sufficient for the Holy Spirit who sent Philip on that commission.

Now there are millions in our land to-day who could say that as really and as truly as the eunuch, and yet are outside the ring fence of the churches !

They do not believe in the parsons, they do not believe in religion as it is explained to them, they do not believe in the churches, they may not believe in those who call themselves " Christians "; but they do believe in Him ; and they could subscribe with all their heart to the eunuch's confession of faith !

The eunuch, evidently mistrustful of his own experience or confession of faith, very wisely threw upon St. Philip the responsibility of accepting or refusing him. But Philip had no hesitation, not for a moment.

I may be wrong, but I do not know of a single church that would now accept applicants on such a confession.

The eunuch " went on his way rejoicing." But what would he have done if Philip had refused him ? For his rejoicing came on Philip accepting him !

We have thousands in our churches who can fully and heartily subscribe to the same confession of faith as the eunuch's, but the church regards that as an empty nothing, and blackballs the seeker.

Is he likely to go away rejoicing ? The eunuch would not if Philip had turned him down. He would have gone away sad at heart indeed, but not refused nor rejected by God !

Digitized by Google

What about the thousands in our Churches and outside? Where do they stand? Are they rejected or accepted?

The eunuch was accepted on this confession, and most assuredly there has been since then no special messenger sent from heaven with any instructions to raise or alter the conditions!

But again, notice the very decisive words with which the beloved disciple closes his twentieth chapter: "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of His disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written" (now notice the purpose for which they were written) "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God"; (the very exact terms of the eunuch's confession of faith to Philip: but notice, further, what is the result) "And that believing ye might have life through His name."—John xx, 30-31.

There again, stated in the clearest language, are the terms on which salvation is dispensed: "That ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God: and that believing ye might have life through His name."

The whole preaching of the Apostles seems to have been directed to proving that Jesus was the Christ.

St. Peter, at Pentecost, voiced this very clearly: "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." —Acts ii, 36.

Look what St. Paul preached immediately after his conversion. Acts ix, 20, says: "And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, THAT HE IS THE SON OF GOD."

Take the case of St. Paul and the jailer. Awakened at midnight, alarmed by the earthquake, and the loosing of the prison doors, the jailer cries out, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" And the record goes on to give the condition, not conditions, for there is only one: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." And the record continues, "he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptised, he and all his, straightway."—Acts xvi, 29-33. There was no time here for any instructions except the barest and most elementary. Yet it was sufficient, for, without waiting for the morning, the jailer took them and washed their stripes; and was baptised, he and all his, straightway!

In all these cases the test seems to be belief on Christ as the Son of God. And this is in perfect accord with Christ's own words which we have quoted before: "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins."—John viii, 24.

That is the crucial testing-point!

Even the prophets gave the same testimony: "To Him give all the prophets witness, that through His name, whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins." —Acts x, 43.

Now if all this is true, belief in the Virgin Birth is the vital and essential condition! That goes with the fact that He is the Son of God! Otherwise, Christ was the son of man, and only man! For only as the Virgin Birth is true could Jesus be the Son of God!

If this is so, what about the position of those who reject the Virgin Birth? That is a vital question! For if the acceptance of Jesus as the Son of God be the one essential to salvation, where do those stand who think and say that Christ was simply Joseph's son? Now we may understand why the Devil has so earnestly sought to destroy faith in the Virgin Birth.

Why do we not follow the example of the Apostles? Why do we not take knowledge of what they said and did?

If I were a preacher, and had before me an audience, say, of 1,000 people, I should feel quite justified in saying to them something like this:—

"Very few of you are actually members of Churches; not above one in every ten are actually included in the inner circle of the recognized saints. But if I were to ask everyone to stand up who believes in his heart that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, nine out of ten would respond."

Now why this terrible discrepancy? The one ought to be exactly the same as the other, both in number, and also individually.

If we take the men in the street, the men in our large factories and workshops, and subject them to the same question, thousands of them who make no profession of religion would say, "Yes, I believe that Jesus Christ was the Son of God."

Now I would say to those 900 standing confessing people whom I am supposed to have before me, "I claim you for my Master everyone of you."

But says someone, "They are not good living men." Then my answer is, "This is the way to make them."

The Church has come down on these men and made them feel that this faith in Christ as the Son of God is an empty nothing. If I know anything of Scripture, it is the vital living faith of the Apostles, and the teaching of Our Lord Himself.

I would say to the 900 "You have confessed to the same faith as the eunuch, you have confessed it in the same words; who am I that I should say that the same results do not follow?"

How dare I refuse or exclude you and others of like faith to the eunuch whom the Apostle Philip received?

You have far greater knowledge than the eunuch! His instruction lasted only a few hours, from one preacher, on one solitary occasion.

You have heard hundreds of sermons, you are instructed. Yet he with his ignorance was not rejected! Ignorance which was so profound that only a few hours before he had actually exclaimed, "Does the prophet speak of himself or of some other man?"

So that when the enlightenment of the eunuch came, it was a new-found enlightenment founded upon instruction only a few moments before received.

Yours is a long and firmly established conviction of years. You can say, and could have said it for many years past, and with all your heart, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God."

I claim you all for my God!

But you say, "I am not converted." Aren't you? There is the trouble, and the Church's error! When did the eunuch's conversion take place?

His conversion took place the very moment that his heart seized hold of that thrilling, vital, transforming Truth, "Jesus Christ is the Son of God."

I know of no condition which was present in his case but which is also present in yours. And if that glorious confession was the conversion of the eunuch, is it not also yours? Surely, surely, it must be!

We have hung too many fripperies and follies round that great thing, conversion. We have added many things that the Scriptures do not add; and we have forbidden the knowledge and expectation of conversion to thousands who have complied with the Scriptural conditions!

St. John, the beloved disciple, declares without any qualification whatever, "WHOSOEVER BELIEVETH THAT JESUS IS THE CHRIST IS BORN OF GOD."—1 John v, 1.

That is wondrously clear, and is equally decisive and unalterable. And it for ever stands forth in God's Word as the definite deciding thing.

The Church of England in the Belief gives it great prominence and importance.

"I believe in God the Father, Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, His only Son Our Lord."

There is the whole belief in miniature in that one phrase! Having said that, all the rest follows. Refusing to say that, it is no use saying the remainder.

But someone says, "What about the other commands of Scripture?"

The first stage of the believer's life having begun, there comes at once upon him the obligations of discipleship.

"These things I command you that ye love one another."

"If ye continue in My word, then are ye My disciples indeed."—John viii, 31.

But let us never forget what the first work is. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent."—John vi, 29.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life." (v. 47.)

The Christian Church has made thousands of converts and never claimed them!

She is like the farmer who, sowing good seed in his field, finds it springing up abundantly; yet through neglect or ignorance it is never reaped!

Possibly, too, it may be because he thinks the crop no good: and so whole cornfields are never garnered; left to rot!

Sown indeed and grown; but never reaped! So with the Christian Church!

And why? Because we have looked for a different crop! We have thought the crop no good.

And yet that very result was what the Apostles toiled for and spent their lives to achieve.

It is greatly to be feared that we have erected purely human barriers between men and God.

God's terms of salvation and acceptance are clearly shown in His Word, and they are not the same as man's!

Man rears up the confessional box, the penitent form, the enquiry room, and many other hindrances and obstacles to entrance into the visible Church. None of these things obtained in the Apostles' days.

Their practice, as has been shown, was to preach Jesus as the Son of God, that hearers might believe that and accept it while they preached, there and then; for that was the aim and purpose of their preaching; and that, accepted and confessed by their converts, they were received as followers of their Lord and Saviour.

But someone says: "That is a great lowering of the standard of fitness." Is it? The true standard has never been any higher! Our Lord Himself fixed the standard and made the conditions! His Apostles and disciples all followed. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."—1 John v, 1.

There is the New Birth which Christ spoke of to Nicodemus!

But someone says: "What about the sacrifice of the Cross. Where does that come in?"

It all comes in as a consequence of the Divine revealing of Christ as the Son of God: for in that alone is it made effective.

If Christ be only a man, it has no atoning efficacy for anyone, and His death was simply a tragedy and a misfortune, but nothing more.

However good He was, if only a man, His substitutionary offering would be valueless! Nay, He Himself, being like all the rest, a sinner, would need other help.

Only because Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God, could this be said of Him:—"Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man." And this:—"The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."

"These things have I written unto you that believe on the Name of the Son of God: that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the Name of the Son of God."—1 John v, 13.

The whole purpose of the Epistle is that we may believe on the Name of the Son of God: and thus, by believing on that Name, have eternal life.

OUR TOUR IN THE EAST.—IV.

HEBRON.

BY HERBERT GARRISON.

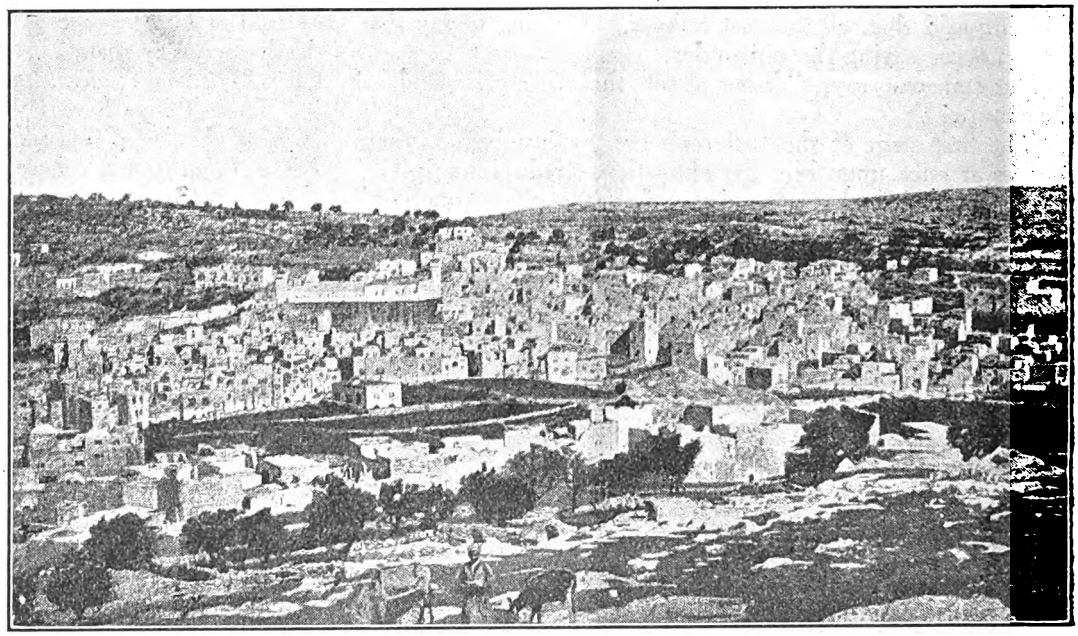
OUR visit to Hebron was one never to be forgotten because of the very special privileges which we enjoyed of entering the Great Mosque, and seeing the actual Cenotaphs of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Leah; and of looking down into the Cave of Machpelah, where lies their dust;—the most sacred grave to us on earth, save alone the place where Our Lord's Body was laid.

This inestimable privilege was granted to us by the Head of the Islamic religion in Jerusalem through introductions initiated by Major Knowles, President of the B.-I.-W.F.

At first I feared the privilege of entering would not be granted to the other members of our party, but my appeal that they might be included was eventually acceded to.

The officials of the Mosque were impressed by the order I presented and were courteous and obliging; but the natives of the town are very fanatic, and they made us feel that our presence was resented.

Some months afterwards the stringent restrictions were removed; now tourists can visit the Mosque on payment of a fee.



Hebron is one of the oldest towns of Palestine. A mediæval tradition even went so far as to localize in this vicinity the creation of Adam. Its ancient name was Kirjath-arba, derived from Arba, the father of Anak the giant (Joshua xxi, 11; xv, 13, 14). It was " built seven years before Zoan " (Num. xiii, 22), i.e., Tanis, the chief town of Lower Egypt ; and when Josephus writes, it is already over two thousand years old. In the time of Abraham it took the name of Mamre, doubtless after Mamre the Amorite, the friend and ally of Abraham (Gen. xiv, 13, 24 ; xxxv, 27). At that time it was probably a walled city ; for, when Abraham bought the field of Machpelah, a contract was concluded in the presence " of the children of Heth, even of all that went in at the gate of his city " (Gen. xxiii, 10). Mamre, however, appears to have been west of the town which later grew round the Cave of Machpelah (Gen. xxiii, 19). It was here that Abraham lived. To that fact is due the great reverence in which it is held by the three great faiths of the world. Dr. Norman Macleod, writing of this tomb, has said : " The Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem separates Moslem, Jew and Christian ; here they assemble together. The Moslem guards this place as dear and holy. The Jew from every land draws near to it with reverence and love. The Christians of every kindred and tongue and creed visit the spot with a reverence equally affectionate. And who lies here ? A great king or conqueror ? A man famous for his genius or his learning ? No ; but a Patriarch who pitched his tent 4,000 years ago among these hills, a stranger and a pilgrim in the land, and who was known only as El-Khalîl—'the Friend.' By that blessed name Abraham was known while he lived ; by that name he is remembered where he lies buried ; and by that name the city is called after him."

Digitized by Google

From Hebron Joseph set out to seek his brethren in Shechem ; and to Hebron those brethren returned, bearing with them the blood-stained coat of many colours. "And Jacob rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days " (Gen. xxxvii, 34). It was utterly destroyed by Joshua (Joshua x, 36–37), and became the chief city of the House of Caleb (Joshua xiv, 13). It became a city of refuge, in which fugitives found sanctuary. David lived at Hebron for a period of seven and a half years, when he reigned over Judah alone (2 Sam. ii, 1–11) ; and his son Absalom was born here. At the gates of Hebron, Abner was treacherously murdered by Joab, who " took him aside in the gate to speak with him quietly, and smote him there under the fifth rib, that he died . . . And King David himself followed the bier " (2 Sam. iii, 27–31). The traditional tomb of Abner is pointed out in the town, but is of little interest. Hither came the rebellious Absalom, under the pretext of performing a vow, and he " sent spies throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet, then ye shall say, Absalom reigneth in Hebron " (2 Sam. xv, 10). Hebron was later fortified by Rehoboam, and was re-peopled at the end of the Captivity. It fell into the hands of the Edomites and was recaptured by Judas Maccabeus. Josephus makes it a town of Idumæa. The city was destroyed by the Romans, and for a long time lacked any real importance. It revived, however, during the Moslem occupation, and was a considerable town when captured by the Crusaders, who called it Castellum, or Praesidiun ad sanctum Abraham, or, shortly, St. Abraham, and made it a feudal fief of the Knight Gerard of Avesnes. A Latin bishopric was established here in 1167. Twenty years later it fell into the hands of Saladin.

Hebron is divided into seven districts. The first of these, Hâret Bâb ez-Zâwiyeh, is seen to the right when entering the town. To the south-west, on the hill Djebel Rumeideh, stands the Mosque of Deir el-Arb'aîn, Convent of the Forty. On the same hill there are ruins of Cyclopean walls, and among these is the tomb of Jesse (Isai) father of David. Facing this, in the north-west of the town, is the district known as the Hâret Esh-Sheikh, so called because of the beautiful Mosque of the Sheikh 'Ali Bakkâ constructed in the thirteenth century and distinguished by an elegant hexagonal minaret. Through this quarter runs an aqueduct which carried the waters of 'Ain Khash-Bir Sârah, or Sarah's Well. In Hebron and its vicinity there are at least ten wells and twenty-five springs. To the south of Hâret Bâb Ez-Zâwiyeh is Hâret el-Kazzâzîn, the quarter of the glass-workers. Hebron is renowned for its blown glass. The principal articles made in its interesting furnaces are lamps and coloured glass rings. It has been a Hebron industry ever since the Middle Ages, and has been supported since the British occupation by the Pro-Jerusalem Society. East of the Hâret el-Kazzâzîn is the quarter of the water-skin makers, the Hâret el-'Akkâbi; south of this is the Hâret el-Haram, which is the quarter of the sacred enclosure, and the Hâret el-Mushâreka. South-eastwards lies the Hâret el-Kitûn, the quarter of the cotton workers. Interesting is the tiny mediæval Ghetto, with extremely narrow streets and an old Synagogue.

In the bed of the valley, south-west of the Haram, are two large reservoirs, Birket el-Kazzâzîn, the Pool of the Glass-blowers, and Birket es-Sultân, the Sultan's Pool. The former of these is 86 feet long by 56 feet wide by 28 feet deep; it is irregular, and in ruin. The latter is 21½ feet deep, and is a square measuring 44 yards on each side; it is solid, regular and well constructed, having been restored in 1280. This is traditionally the "Pool of Hebron" of 2 Sam. iv, 9–12.

North of the hill Kubb el-Jânib, to the south of the town, is the Quarantine Station erected to receive pilgrims returning from Mecca. Beyond this is a large Moslem cemetery.

The Haram.—Hebron's chief object of interest is the Haram, which encloses the Cave of Machpelah. A mosque occupying the south side of the Haram, and at one time a Crusaders' church, probably built on the site of a church of Justinian's time, encloses the cave. It is a spot sacred alike to Jew, Christian and Moslem, and recalls many touching scenes from the Old Testament. Sarah, the beloved wife of Abraham, "died in Kirjath-arba; the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan: and Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her. And Abraham stood up from before his dead, and spake unto the sons of Heth, saying, I am a stranger and a sojourner with you: give me a possession of a burying-place with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight" (Gen. xxiii, 2–4). The contract with the sons of Heth was made in the gate of the city, and in the presence of all the people; its details were such as are entered upon to this very day. The contract provided that the field, the cave, the trees in the field, all should be "made sure unto Abraham for a possession." The Patriarch then buried his wife, Sarah, "in the cave of the field of Machpelah before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan" (Gen. xxiii, 17–19). When Abraham himself died, he was buried by his sons Isaac and Ishmael in the Cave of Machpelah (Gen. xxv, 8–9). Later, when Jacob lay near to death, he reflected upon this quiet burial-place in the land of his fathers, and called his sons about him, charging them to bury him with his fathers "in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite, in the cave that is in the field of Machpelah, which is before Mamre, in the land of Canaan, which Abraham bought with the field of Ephron the Hittite for a possession of a burying-place. There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife; there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife; and there I buried Leah" (Gen. xlix, 29–31). Joseph with "all the servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt, and all the house of Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's house . . . both chariots and horsemen," carried the embalmed body of Jacob from Egypt into the land of Canaan to the Cave of Machpelah (Gen. 50, 7–9).

The outer wall of the Haram is composed of large drafted blocks, and reaches a height of about 40 feet; it is strengthened externally by square buttresses, and is probably of the Herodian period. The upper part of the wall is of Arab construction, and is crenelated. Of the four minarets which originally flanked it, one at each angle, only those on the north-east and north-west have survived. Two flights of steps, one from the north and the other from the south, lead between this outer wall and modern enclosing wall to the interior of the court.

The Mosque on the south side of the sacred enclosure measures 70 feet from north to south and 93 feet from east to west. Four columns divide the interior into a nave and aisles running north and south. The walls are overlaid with marble to a height of six feet. The Cenotaphs of the Patriarchs and their wives are hung with gold-embroidered green cloth. The pulpit of the Mosque is a fine example of twelfth-century Moslem wood-carving. A hole in the floor of the Mosque shows a square chamber below; in the east wall of this chamber there is a door, like that of a Hebrew tomb. It forms the entrance to the inner part of the "double cave" of Machpelah, which formerly could be reached by a stair from the church.

Benjamin of Tudela (A.D. 1160) claims to have entered the cave and inspected the tombs.

It was in 1862 that the Prince of Wales—later King Edward VII—and Dean Stanley had the privilege of entering the Mosque and seeing the Cenotaphs by special permission of the Sultan of Turkey. I cannot do better than give the account of this visit in Dean Stanley's own words :—

"Before our arrival at Hebron, the Governor of Jerusalem, Suraya Pasha, had made every preparation to ensure the safety of the experiment. Accordingly, as the protracted file wound through the narrow valley by which the town of Hebron is approached, the whole road on either side, for more than a mile, was lined with soldiers. The native population, which usually on the Prince's approach to a town streamed out to meet him, was invisible, it may be from compulsion, it may be from silent indignation. We at length reached the green sward in front of the town, crowned by the Quarantine. There Suraya Pasha received us. It had been arranged that His Royal Highness should be accompanied by the two members of the party who had given most attention to Biblical pursuits, so as to make it evident that the visit was not one of mere curiosity, but had also a distinct scientific purpose. It was, however, finally conceded by the Governor that the whole of the suite should be included, amounting to seven persons beside the Prince. The servants remained behind. We started on foot, two and two, between two files of soldiers, by the ancient pool of Hebron, up the narrow streets of the modern town, still lined with soldiers. Hardly a face was visible as we passed through ; only here and there a solitary guard, stationed at a vacant window, or on the flat roof of a projecting house, evidently to guarantee the safety of the party from any chance missile. It was, in fact, a complete military occupation of the town. At length we reached the south-eastern corner of the massive wall of enclosure, the point at which enquiring travellers, from generation to generation, have been checked in their approach to this, the most ancient and the most authentic of all the Holy Places in the Holy Land.

"Up the steep flight of the exterior staircase—gazing close at hand on the polished surface of the wall, amply justifying Josephus's account of the marble-like appearance of the huge stones which compose it—we rapidly mounted. At the head of the staircase, which, by its long ascent, showed that the platform of the Mosque was on the uppermost slope of the hill, and therefore above the level where the sacred cave would be found, a short turn at once brought us within the precincts, and revealed to us for the first time the wall from the inside. A later wall of Muhammadan times has been built on the top of the Jewish enclosure. The enclosure itself, as seen from the inside, rises but a few feet above the platform.

"Here we were received with much ceremony by five or six persons, corresponding to the Dean and Canons of a Christian cathedral. They were the representatives of the forty hereditary guardians of the Mosque.

"We passed at once through an open court into the Mosque. . . . . The whole building occupies about one-third of the platform.

"I now proceed to describe the Tombs of the Patriarchs, premising always that these tombs, like all those in Muhammadan mosques, and indeed like most tombs in Christian churches, do not profess to be the actual places of sepulture, but are merely monuments or cenotaphs in honour of the dead who lie beneath. Each is enclosed within a separate chapel or shrine, closed with gates or railings similar to those which surround or enclose the private chapels or royal tombs in Westminster Abbey. The two first of these shrines are contained in the inner portico or narthex. In the recess on the right is the shrine of Abraham, in the recess on the left that of Sarah, each guarded by silver gates. The shrine of Sarah we were requested not to enter, as being that of a woman. A pall lay over it. The shrine of Abraham, after a momentary hesitation, was thrown open. The guardians groaned aloud. But their chief turned to us with the remark, 'The Princes of any other nation should have passed over my dead body sooner than enter. But to the eldest son of the Queen of England we are willing to accord even this privilege.' He stepped in before us, and offered an ejaculatory prayer to the dead Patriarch : 'O Friend of God, forgive this intrusion.' We then entered. The chamber is cased in marble. The so-called tomb consists of a coffin-like structure about six feet high, built up of plastered stone or marble, and hung with three carpets, green embroidered with gold. They are said to have been presented by Muhammad II, the conqueror of Constantinople (A.D. 1453), Selim I, the conqueror of Egypt (A.D. 1518), and the Sultan Abdul Mejid. It was impossible not to feel a thrill of unusual emotion at standing on such a spot—an emotion enhanced by the rare occasion which had opened the gates of that consecrated place, as the guardian of the Mosque kept repeating to us as we stood round the tomb, 'to no one less than the representative of England.'"

WEEK BY WEEK.

By A. R. H.

In last week's article we considered the fact that whilst in the past the progress of Empires had been along the path of War, to-day a new path had been opened to the children of mankind. With the advent of Brith-ain, Land of the Covenant, with her galaxy of daughter Covenant nations, a new horizon has been opened to the life of peoples. Transition from decadence to virility, from chaos to cosmos, is to be brought about by a new influence—constructive, beneficent, cosmic in its power and effectiveness—the Pax Britannic influence of the Kingdom. Absorption, not Conquest, is to be the process of development followed by the nations in relation to the Kingdom, in a world and civilization which has abolished war as an instrument for the settlement of international disputes and the only effective means of changing frontiers.

For in the Brith-ish Commonwealth of Free Nations[1] there is presented to the world—for the first time—the nucleus of a Kingdom Civilization which any and every nation can join without loss of prestige or power.

If the spirit of man were behind this Kingdom Organization then history would repeat itself, for this Family of Nations, following in the tradition of the Empires of the past, would be subject to like laws of imperfection and decay.

But the spirit of God is behind the Kingdom. No historian is ever to record its decline or fall.[2] War may be safely abolished as the test of any nation for the presence of this new spirit[3] is a guarantee against the manifestation of an universal, perpetual stagnation.

[1] Cf. Gen. xxxv, 11. [2] Cf. Dan. ii, 44. [3] Cf. Ez. xxxvi, 26.

Digitized by Google

The spirit of man is frail and changeable. The spirit of God is vital and unchangeable. The works of God are permanent and enduring.

* * *

Turning from our consideration of the attempts being made by the civilized nations of the earth to outlaw War, we will examine the second of the three outstanding events which serve to show the tendency of the world's thought in relation to this great question. We refer to David Lloyd George's challenge to the Churches. Thus he declares:—"As one who was a Minister at the time war was declared I say that if the had come together and said, 'Halt! This murder must not begin,' there was not a single Minister or a monarch who would have dared do it. The last war was made by monarchs, statesmen and warriors, who were all Christians.

"We say we have learnt our lesson. But among the incidents depicted in the great pageant at ALDERSHOT was the most sanguineous battle of the Peninsular War—BADAJOZ.

"In the last war it would have been an insignificant skirmish as far as losses are concerned. After 100 years of Christianity has elapsed the carnage is infinitely more terrible.

"Judging by the beginning of the 20th century and the beginning of the 19th century, when these battles were fought, not only has the Church made no progress with its

and good will among men, but it has gone back.

"If the Churches were united they ought to force disarmament on the world. You will never get peace by declarations outlawing war.

"It is said that the Church is not responsible. I say it is. If the Church does not contain a majority of the population, it contains a majority of the people who matter, who govern, who rule, who dominate everywhere. If they all stood together for the Prince of Peace,[4] His cause would be irresistible.

"I think the Churches will begin to think of answering these questions. It rests with them, and if they do not do it I cannot see where the hope is to come from."

This outburst is of value in that it fairly represents the tide of public feeling. It reflects the confusion of thought which is the inevitable result of the inability to distinguish clearly between the separate functions of CHURCH and KINGDOM. It is symptomatic of widespread misconception and is not the isolated view of an individual only.

But what is the mission and the function of the CHURCH? The mission of the CHURCH is to exalt peace as the governing ideal for all men of good will on earth.

But if it is the function of the CHURCH to proclaim the Peace, it is the function of the KINGDOM to establish Peace.

The Church preaches peace in the name of the Prince of Peace. The Kingdom takes the Pax Britannica to the uttermost parts of the earth.

The CHURCH inspires men with a great ideal. The KINGDOM transforms ideal into practical reality.

[4] We seem to hear an echo of Isa. ix, 6, here. But Isaiah shows most emphatically that the establishment of peace on earth is not the work of the Church, but the prerogative of the Kingdom and Throne of David. See verse 9.

Meanwhile the effectiveness and permanent success of practical action depends upon clarity of ideal, of national aim and purpose. The CHURCH remains the nucleus for all regenerative influences in the national life. It remains guardian of the purity of our national ideals. Its vision, burning with the brightness of a divine flame, still inspires the heart of the KINGDOM, re-energizing and regenerating its forces, sending them forth renewed for further action in a workaday, a worldly and material environment.

The establishment of Peace in the earth is the prerogative of the KINGDOM and the THRONE of DAVID.

We cannot fairly blame the Church for failing to do that which is not her mission. The Church can proclaim the Peace. It cannot by the nature of its office uphold the Peace.

To-day we have a chaotic state of affairs. The Church is charged with preaching Peace, but doing nothing to enforce the Peace, whereas the Church was never intended to be used as an instrument of direct action in this fashion.

Moreover, the KINGDOM is under censure for not taking further steps to renounce the very weapons which God has provided for the maintenance of peace.

To force disarmament is no solution. For if every lethal weapon in the world were destroyed to-morrow there would still remain the resources and the human ingenuity to make new ones. There is only one solution. And that is the advent of

A NEW SPIRIT.

"Whence come wars?" cries the Apostle James,[5] and answers, "Even of your lusts." And psychologically he is right. For when Love not lust, when CHRIST not self, is enthroned in every heart, then will wars cease from troubling the earth.

Herein lies the fundamental cause of war. But historically (having regard now to immediate rather than fundamental causes) those who, prior to 1914, preached Peace when there was no Peace, are as much responsible for the last great struggle as anybody.

For it was Britain's unpreparedness and apparent tendency towards neutrality which tempted the Aggressor to set forth his hand. A strong Britain, unweakened by pacifist propaganda, would have given the Aggressor nation cause for pause and cause to think.

In 1914 the Churches were at work preaching peace, as their presence by representative in conference at CONSTANCE bears witness. But their voice was drowned in the clamour of a world whose temper could not possibly be restrained.

More than this—except the official calling of the nation to prayer—it could not possibly have done. Thus far the Church stands vindicated. For the Church is ordained to preach a doctrine, not to create political machinery.

The nation is provided with the guidance and counsel of the CHURCH and with the power and machinery for carrying out its purposes. But what is the use of preaching peace if the KINGDOM is deprived of the power for maintaining peace?

Disarmament is not the road to peace. It is the road to sure destruction.

[5] James iv, 1.

Digitized by Google

For during the present transition period, pending the universal spreading of the new spirit of the new covenant among the nations, the ancient exhortation, "Fear God, but keep your powder dry," remains a true doctrine, if somewhat crude in temper and expression. And it is as true in spirit as the parallel declaration, "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace."[6]

Both these dictums, the one a testimony of historical experience, the other, counsel from the lips of One Who was infinitely wise, confirm the necessity for Kingdom authority in support of doctrine.

The CHURCH exists to preach peace. The KINGDOM exists to establish it.

We cannot therefore justly blame the CHURCH because it fails to perform a function allocated to the KINGDOM. We cannot fairly blame the KINGDOM, if, emasculated by the false doctrine of disarmament, it fails to maintain the peace.

"Peace on earth to all men of good will" is transposed to read "Peace on earth and good will to all men."

There is a distinction with a difference here. Undoubtedly the will of GOD is good toward all. The FATHER is kind even to the ungrateful. It is the will of GOD that all men should repent and, turning back, find Him.

But there can only be peace on earth to all men of good will. There is and can be no peace to the wicked.[7] Why? Because they are not in Him Who is our peace[8] and alone can give men peace. The thoughts of the wicked (or lawless) are carnal, not subject to law.[9]

In conclusion, those who "cannot see where (apart from intervention by the Churches) hope is to come from" might well ponder the significance and derive comfort from this statement[10]:—

"Of the increase of His

GOVERNMENT AND PEACE

there shall be no end, upon the THRONE of DAVID, and upon His KINGDOM, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the LORD of HOSTS will perform this."

Thus it is written of the PRINCE of PEACE[11] and of His BRITH-ISH KINGDOM NATION in the earth.

MAN AND EARTH: A CO-ORDINATED CREATION AND INTERDEPENDENT.—PART I.

BY BEN ISRAEL.

THE purpose of matter may be an expression by which Deity demonstrates a phase of His power and processes. These latter as they pertain to angels, perhaps; most certainly with regard to man in his primordial sphere of activities, himself being in part matter and subject to its limitations.

Nature presents many paradoxes. Not least among them is the earth. It is one of the small heavenly bodies, but has such enormous potential value, apparently, that the sun himself may be viewed as an appendage together with the accompanying planets of the system. This proposition is easily demonstrable if we approach the subject above indicated from the angle of relative values.

MAN'S ESTIMATE OF THE EARTH.

Man reckons the earth by its size as compared with the sun and other heavenly bodies. To the physicist the sun appeals scientifically as the major unit, since it is the central luminary and gravitational centre of the family of spheres.

REVEALED VALUATION.

The theologian turns to the Bible and reads statements therein concerning the earth and surrounding heavens, couched in phraseology that mysteriously, though unmistakably, associate the heaven and the earth with the physical and moral history and development of man; disclosing some astounding facts for our reflection and edification; weaving into the warp a thread here, a thread there of the same colour, until a doctrine stands forth of the things specified, declaring their Divine appraisement.

This discovery leads us to suspect that the intelligent beings occupying the earth are the most essential among the works of Creation. We are understanding the habitat, earth, circumstantial, as involved with the fortunes of the inhabitants, and with them it will change according to a law of co-ordination which we see demonstrated in the history of the earth and man, verified by revelation. We shall present the argument from the standpoint of the foregoing allegations, based upon the following premises: 1. Man, in his relationship to God, is the most important work in Creation. 2. Earth, man's habitat, is to continue as now constituted through the period of man's material and moral development, to end with the perfection and change of the human race.

3. Earth, therefore, must be the superior orb in the solar system, its future change involving the reorganization of the whole.

It is evident that Elohim created the heaven and the earth as a means to the end of glorification of the Son; Whom we know in this world as Jesus; Who is the Word, by Whom all things were made that are made. "In the beginning, Elohim created the heaven and the earth. And the earth became 'desolation, destitution,' and darkness was upon the face of the 'tumultuous swellings.'"—Gen. i, 1-2. Vide Psalm cii, 25.

The face of the earth as we see it to-day reveals everywhere the gigantic scars and marks of former ruin. It is now undergoing a process of partial recovery under the active guiding genius of civilised man, assisted by the metamorphic agencies of nature. Regarding the earth as a recovering ruin, we refer the reader to the work of Professor George McCready Price, entitled "The New Geology," chapter xli being especially apropos.

As an ideal residence, our earth offers at present some pronounced disadvantages. Three-quarters of its surface is submerged in salt water. A considerable portion of its land surface consists of rocks and arid sand. The hemispheres, northern and southern, are capped by uninhabitable ice. These physical and geographical features are in perfect accord with the geological.

On every hand we see the strata of the earth exhibiting signs of stupendous, universal convulsion in the past, the annihilation of superabundant organic life, and the results of fire in numberless regions which do not always conform with volcanic activity, but rather with heat engendered by friction and block pressure when the strata were suddenly laid down, or displaced promiscuously, mountains and hills moved or turned over, and the extensive drift masses and areas formed.

So violent and vast must these movements have been that they may be sufficient to account for the phenomena of the anticlines and synclines of the present contorted exterior of the surface, the aftermath of a change from the former tropical to the now diversified climates distinguished by the extremes of heat and cold. As touching the pristine tropical garden, the everlasting snow and ice of Arctic America and Siberia yield up their proofs. Furthermore, a destruction and change of the old world is voiced and repeated in Scripture, and the cause attributed is sin and a broken law.

We are not bound to confine ourselves to this globe for indubitable proofs of past changes in the machinery of the universe on a stupendous scale in the adjacent heavens. Indeed, as we investigate the astronomical field before us, we are brought to the conclusion that the interruption there involves and accounts for the change here.

Lucifer's rebellion, fall and expulsion from heaven was the moral cause for the physical overthrow of his kingdom and throne, Eden, "the Holy Mountain of God."

There are all around us the remains, apparently, of a disrupted planet. A stream of star dust whirls around the sun, crossing at two nodes the path of the earth. Our globe has been picking up, ever and anon, during the era of man, masses of falling rock, meteorites, which contain nickel and iron; some yield diamonds. The great meteor of Arizona is different from ordinary aerolites, in that it contains platinum. Found and measured a few years ago, it is nearly 550 feet in diameter, and formed, at the impact, a crater which averages 3,750 feet across. The crater rim is nearly circular and is 200 feet high. So rich in platimun is the rock, that it is estimated a billion dollars' ($1,000,000,000) worth will be extracted, more than all the bulk of the world's present store of that metal. Besides platinum, which constitutes the chief commercial value, there are inferior diamonds; while the nickel steel, abundant in the composition, will assist materially in paying expenses of uncovering and reducing the ore. The character of this asteroid, in common with its smaller relatives found in various localities, indicates a planetary source for all.

A composite remnant of this old star is, perhaps, the moon. She presents a scene of utter and complete desolation. Lifeless, a stricken waste, pitted with gigantic craters and pot-holes, her usefulness consists, as far as we know, in highly reflective power; and in that capacity she "rules the night and the stars." Her craters, some of which are of enormous extent, are non-volcanic, and reveal by their structure a part, at least, of the moon's origin. Her mass has been literally built up and aggregated by an ancient bombardment of meteoric hail. So terrific was the impact in the case of many of the larger units that vast mountain peaks, thousands of feet in altitude, arose from the centres of the craters as the result of the reaction; and the curious spectacle is presented of craters overlapping at the rims which explains in a measure the nature of the phenomena. That the moon rather than the earth experienced this special, cataclysmic assault can be reasonably explained on the theory that the latter was not here at that time, but was moving in an orbit considerably distant from the scene of the planetary disaster, and previous to the time when the earth was "removed out of her place." That the asteriods which occupy the space between Mars and Jupiter are the remnants of a destroyed planet is no new theory. Why the bulk of Jupiter is greater than all the rest of the planets combined and in his infancy as compared with his lilliputian elders, Mars and the earth, might be answered by accrediting him with the gaseous, aqueous and unconsolidated matter pertaining to Eden which the Almighty has delivered into his keeping against the day of reconstruction, "A new heaven and a new earth."

We need not follow these suggestions further for evidences of a once splendid orb which we shall call Eden, the name indicated in the Bible, in which Lucifer ministered, occupied a throne, and "walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire." Eden signifies pleasure. It is used a number of times in the Bible as the locality, par excellence, with which to compare any delectable place.

When the disruption of this planet occurred and the fragments were projected, some downward toward the sun, others upward into or beyond the orbits of Mars and Jupiter, the solar system immediately went out of balance in consequence, and a readjustment had to take place. Venus was near the sun and, perhaps, the interior orb with the earth revolving in or near the present orbit of Venus. Thus we may fully account for the earth's tropical condition under its ancient organisation. It is quite evident this very climate prevails now in the Venus cosmogony, though her sub-aerial surface is too profoundly veiled behind a cloudy atmosphere to afford us much information. At all events, at such a time, the earth was removed out of its place, according to the teaching of Scripture, in mighty, cataclysmic convulsion. The oceans rose in vast, translation waves and covered the highest mountain, chaos intervening during the interval of adjustment while the earth was finding her new orbit. Meanwhile the sun's photosphere was in some manner affected, causing a temporary suspension of light, so that "darkness was upon the face of the tumultuous swellings." We prefer this rendering of the Hebrew word, tehom, as altogether expressive of the mundane exterior as seen in the third statement of the Mosaic account. Darkening of the sun is a fact several times mentioned in Scripture. It is in operation during the space occupied by the events spoken of between the first and third verses of the historical narration of Genesis. It occurred and lasted three hours at the Crucifixion of Our Lord. It will re-occur at the end of the tribulation in this present age. The last darkening will take place in the year, or thereabouts, 7000 Anno Mundi, when the solar system will experience its final change. In Isaiah xiv, 9, et seq., we read Lucifer, son of the morning, fell from heaven, because he said he would ascend into heaven and exalt his throne above the stars of God and would be like the Most High. From this we learn that Lucifer, before his fall, possessed a throne.

In Ezekiel xxviii, 12–19, we read that he was the anointed cherub that covereth. That he sealed up the sum full of wisdom and perfect in beauty; that he had been in Eden, the garden of God, that all the jewels symbolising the virtues had been his adornments, and that the harmonies of celestial music were in the essence of his being. He was appointed of God the covering cherub; and he had walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire. His name, character, privileges, indicate that he was the Archangel or governor over a world Eden (of which the garden occupied for a season by our first parents, Adam and Eve, is a replica in miniature), and it appears that the first Eden and the Holy Mountain of God are identical, since he, Lucifer, held there a throne which he thought to exalt above the stars. It is also rational that the Eden, Holy Mountain, was a part of our immediate neighbourhood beneath the stars, though not in the earth.

In Rev. xii, 9, we are informed that Satan and his associates were cast out into the earth after their defeat at the hands of Michael and his angels in heaven. While the results of his expulsion have been appallingly apparent in the history of the human race, we must refer the event itself back to a time antedating the advent of man to account for the presence of the Serpent in the Adamic Eden and his continuous agency for evil since then. With Satan's fall, his former seat and throne were destroyed, and himself cast into the earth, where he has been assigned the kingdoms of this world and all things therein representing rebellion against God. His former throne of glory in the world Eden has, by compulsion, been substituted by a latter empire of oppression and falsehood in the world; earth; and for the purpose, it would appear, of accomplishing his ultimate utter discomfiture and humiliation; and this outcome is the antipodes of the Redemption of man, who will replace Satan and his apostate angels in the Kingdom of God. From such view point, we can appraise worldly kingdom glory as Christ must have regarded in the temptation in the wilderness.

From the foregoing we get the induction: Lucifer, lord of a glorified Eden, sitting on a throne, aspired through pride to rule the siderial universe and make himself equal with the Most High. He fell, and the paradise over which he reigned was destroyed. Its destruction involved the solar universe in temporary anarchy. This is the debacle of nature seen and described by Moses in the initial paragraph of the Creation narrative of the Book of Genesis.

KINGDOM GOSPEL—JUDGMENT.

By H. E. TURNER.

PRELIMINARY to the the subject of judgment, articles have appeared in these pages under "Righteousness" and "Justice and Peace," illustrative of the "Gospel of the Kingdom" and leading up to supremacy of earthly judicature, in the government of Our Lord and Saviour as King on the throne of David. It may appear that the present subject should be kept distinct from Kingdom Gospel, which is anterior to judgment, yet, surely the perfect administration of justice in the future, by Jesus Christ, has a place among the good tidings of the Kingdom.

Judgment is the power of judging and act of judicature. We find an example of the highest order of human judgment in the 3rd chapter of 1 Kings, in a dispute between two women about a child. "Then said the king; The one saith, This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the dead: and the other saith, Nay; but thy son is the dead, and my son is the living. And the king said, Bring me a sword. And they brought a sword before the king. And the king said, Divide the living child in two and give half to the one, and half to the other. Then spake the woman whose the living child was unto the king, for her bowels yearned upon her son, and she said, O my lord, give her the living child, and in no wise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it. Then the king answered and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it: she is the mother thereof." King Solomon, even though of surpassing wisdom and assisted by the law of Sinai, being only human, achieved his verdict by means of artifice; his expedient was effective, but the sentence caused grief and alarm to the mother, and occasioned an exhibition of callousness from the false claimant. In these days of ours, when Divine laws have been considerably displaced or distorted by legislative Parliaments, the most astute and upright of judges is sometimes lacking of power in judgment, being bound by those man-made laws, so that between the human frailty of the judge and defective statutes the cause of justice is not always effected.

The awe of judgment is apt to impress itself on the mind, to the suppression of other perceptions, but the extreme of awfulness relates to the "great white throne," when "the dead, small and great, stand before God," and are "judged every man according to their works" the day of doom; whereas the judgments of Our Saviour "upon His Kingdom to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice" will be, in effect, to convert the woes, troubles, miseries and privations of life into the happiness and contentment of "peace on earth and good will towards men," when the House of Commons, having ceased to legislate, will no longer cause national troubles by their faulty Acts of Parliament.

Imagination is able to picture the twelve tribes of Israel settled in the land of Canaan, each in its own territory, each with its throned Apostle, judging the tribe. "Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations. And I appoint unto you a Kingdom as My Father hath appointed unto Me; that ye may eat and drink at My table in My Kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Luke xxii, 28). The judgment of the Apostles will, of course, be in compliance and submission to their Lord and King then reigning and judging on the throne of David, and themselves being superhumanly inspired by Him, the Son to Whom all judgment was committed by the Father (John v, 22).

The pre-eminence of Divine above human judgment was well known to King David, who, when in a great strait, elected to fall into the hand of the Lord, rather than into the hand of man, and sang in psalmody: "I will sing of mercy and judgment: Unto Thee, O Lord, will I sing."

In the days when the "King shall reign and prosper and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth" (Jer. xxiii, 5), there will be no possibility of any infraction of justice, for in the omniscience of His omnipresence nothing will be hid from His all-seeing eye; neither falsehood nor duplicity will afford a cloak or plea to the guilty, while the innocent will be free from suspense or dread in the purity of their integrity and their perfect trust in "The Lord, the righteous Judge," "The Prince of Peace," "The King of Kings."

ALFRED THE GREAT.

I saw the spirit of Alfred;
Alfred that whom no prince with loftier intellect gifted,
Nor with a finer soul, nor in virtue more absolute, ever Made a throne twice-hallowed, and reign'd in the hearts of his people.—SOUTHEY.

* * * *

'Twas Alfred first, with letters and with laws,
Adorn'd as he advanc'd his country's cause.—
THOMAS WARTON.

* * * *

Alfred! the mighty warrior, who quelled and drove afar from him the terrible enemy that had baffled the prowess of all his predecessors; the Father of his people, who listened to all complaints, and redressed all wrongs; the philosopher who raised up a barbarous age towards the height of his own mind, and founded the civilisation of England; the legislator whose laws, after a thousand years, make part of the liberties of his country!—JOHN WILSON.

* * * *

So stands the image of Alfred, shining brightly in the book of the world's history, never defaced by malice or ignorance, nor dimmed by his own errors. These he necessarily possessed, but they have been entirely forgotten in the blaze of his virtues, over which the lapse of centuries has cast no cloud. Severe trial and purifying cleansed him like a noble metal from all dross. Praise can never degenerate into flattery in the case of a great man whose strong sense of duty and exalted principles of morality have led him to employ his time in a truly noble manner. No king or hero of antiquity or modern times can be compared with Alfred for so many distinguished qualities, and each so excellent. Princes more renowned for power and glory, and reigning over greater nations, have always had some defect in their moral character which forcibly contrasts with our high estimation of their mental qualities; and although by the side of Alfred, ruling in his narrow Wessex, their forms appear to tower high amongst the stars, yet this figure, in its smaller proportions, remains one of the most perfect ever held up by the hand of God as a mirror to the world and its rulers.—REINHOLD PAULI.

* * * *

Alfred is one of the most perfect characters in history; a singular instance of a prince who has become a hero of romance, who, as such, has had countless imaginary exploits attributed to him, but to whose character romance has done no more than justice, and who appears in exactly the same light in history and in fable. No other man on record has ever so thoroughly united all the virtues both of the ruler and of the private man. In few other men on record were so many virtues disfigured by so little alloy. A saint without superstition, a scholar without ostentation, a warrior all whose wars were fought in the defence of his country, a conqueror whose laurels were never stained by cruelty, a prince never cast down by adversity, never lifted up to insolence in the day of triumph.—E. A. FREEMAN.

* * * *

"So long as I have lived," he wrote, as life was closing about him, "I have striven to live worthily." It is this height and singleness of purpose, this concentration of faculty on the noblest aims, that lifts Alfred out of the narrow bounds of Wessex, for if the sphere of his action seems too small to justify a comparison of him with the few whom the world owns as its greatest men, he rises to their level in the moral grandeur of his life. And it is this that still hallows his memory among Englishmen. He stands, indeed, in the forefront of his race, for he is the noblest as he is the most complete embodiment of all that is great, all that is lovable in the English temper, of its practical energy, its patient and enduring force, of the reserve and self-control that gives steadiness and sobriety to a wide outlook and a restless daring, of its temperance and fairness, its frankness and openness, its sensitiveness to affection, its poetic tenderness, its deep and reverent religion. Religion, indeed, was the groundwork of Alfred's character. His temper was instinct with piety. Everywhere throughout his writings that remain to us, the Name of God, the thought of God, stir him to outbursts of ecstatic devotion. But of the narrowness, the want of proportion, the predominance of one quality over another which commonly goes with an intensity of religious feeling or of moral purpose, he showed not a trace. He felt none of that scorn of the world about him which drove the noble souls of his day to monastery or hermitage. Vexed as he was by sickness and constant pain, not only did his temper take no touch of asceticism, but a rare geniality, a peculiar elasticity and mobility of nature, gave colour and charm to his life. He had the restless outlook of the artistic nature, its tenderness and susceptibility, its quick apprehension of unseen danger, its craving for affection, its sensitiveness to wrong. It was with himself rather than with his reader that he communed, as thought of the foe without, or of ingratitude and opposition within broke the calm pages of Gregory or Boethius; but the loneliness that breathes in such words never begot in him a contempt for men or the judgment of men. Nor could danger or disappointment check for an hour his vivid activity. From one end of his reign to the other every power was bent to the work of rule. His practical energy found scope for itself in a material and administrative restoration of the wasted land; his intellectual energy breathed fresh life into education and literature; while his capacity for inspiring trust and affection drew the hearts of Englishmen to a common centre, and began the upbuilding of a new England. Little by little men came to recognise in Alfred a ruler of higher and nobler stamp than the world had seen. Never had it seen a king who lived only for the good of his people. Never had it seen a ruler who set aside every personal aim to devote himself solely to the welfare of those whom he ruled. It was this grand self-mastery that won him love and reverence in his own day, and it is this that has hallowed his memory ever since. "I desire," said the king, "to leave to the men that come after me a remembrance of me in good works." His aim has been more than fulfilled. His memory has come down to us with a living distinctness through the mists of exaggeration and legend which time gathered round it. The instinct of the people has clung to him with a singular affection. The love which he won a thousand years ago has lingered round his name from that day to this. While every other name of those earlier times has all but faded from the recollection of Englishmen, that of Alfred remains familiar to every English child.—JOHN RICHARD GREEN.

NEWS AND NOTES.

THE Secretary-General resumes this week his sketches—"Our Tour in the East." Severe pressure of work has interrupted the series; other articles shall follow later.

We are looking forward to welcoming and hearing the Rev. Dr. McConnell on Thursday afternoon, July 26th.

* * *

By kind permission of Dr. and Mrs. Maxwell, our Hastings Branch have a Garden Meeting on July 25th, at 3 p.m., at Meopham Bank. Major Knowles is to preside, and the speakers are Mr. John Leech, K.C., Rev. G. H. Lancaster, M.A., and Mr. Herbert Garrison.

* * *

Mr. Henry Proctor will (D.V.) be the speaker at Headquarters on Wednesday afternoon, July 18th, at 3 o'clock, his subject being "Proofs of Holy Writ." On Thursday evening, the 19th, at 7.30, Mr. John Leech, K.C., will continue the subject of his recent address on "The Western Little Horn" of Daniel vii.

Several clergymen and many workers of various denominations were greatly interested in the meeting in Watts Hall, Southampton, on June 27th, when Mr. J. J. Morey lectured on "The Near Return of Our Lord to Reign." There was a large attendance, and many questions were asked and answered.

In Regent's Park on Sunday, July 1st, the open-air meeting commenced with a talk by Mr. Barrow on the objects for which the B.-I.-W.F. was formed; he pointed out that it is an organization of Bible students of all denominations, who are upholding the Bible as God's message, and emphasized the special nature of that message to the Brith-ish people. Mr. Tester gave an historical account of the wandering peoples comprised in the name Beth-Sak (in Hebrew, House of Isaac), giving instances of records on stones in the British Museum supporting the teaching of Anglo-Saxons being their lineal descendants. Mr. Bradbury reviewed the passage system of the Great Pyramid and the dates to which they applied.

During the evening meeting Mr. McKelvey spoke for about an hour, and Mr. Tester and Mr. Innis for shorter periods.

Will all members and other friends who have accommodation to offer visitors to the Congress in October please let the Secretary-General have full information—address, capacity, rates, telephone, etc.?

* * *

In the Annual Report of the Walsall Branch, thanks are made to Almighty God for the progress accomplished in disseminating British-Israel Truth, and to those who have lectured for them at the various meetings. Quantities of pamphlets have been distributed, and copies of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE sent out every week. Press reports, although short, have served to show the general public that the organization is a live one.

* * *

Our Branch in Winnipeg, Canada, presents a highly satisfactory Annual Report, which reflects a steady increase of progress. To meet additional opportunities, a number of new features have been introduced, all of which have abundantly justified their adoption. During the period under review twenty-one public meetings have been held, the attendances being most gratifying. The Rev. W. R. Johnson conducted twenty-seven meetings of the Bible Class, and Mrs. E. Todd addressed one. Addresses given under outside auspices have been most effective, the Rev. E. J. Springett having spoken to the Freemasons and other fraternal bodies, and Miss M. Harbour before the Empire Club and at Churches and Lodges in the city and suburbs. The Committee took a bold step in engaging a larger hall for meetings at four times the rental, and their faith has been fully justified by the splendid audiences. The reports of the Ladies' Auxiliary and the Book Department were received with acclamation, the volume of work and the distribution of literature being surprisingly large. Evidences are unmistakable that the people of the city and province are desirous of enquiring into the great Truth of British-Israel.

The recently issued report of the South Irish Branch, which was formed at the close of 1926, shows most satisfactory and encouraging progress. Fortnightly Bible Classes have been held by the Rev. Wm. Dungan, at St. Andrew's Hall, by the kind permission of the Rector, the Rev. R. Northridge. These Classes are greatly appreciated. A Study Circle meets once a month under the direction of Mrs. Rohu. The membership of the Branch grows steadily. At the end of 1927 an office was rented; a number of members came forward with promises of furniture, and the thanks of the Association are due to these friends, and also to those giving hospitality to lecturers, for help at the bookstall, for typewriting done, and meetings arranged. The Branch especially wishes to acknowledge its indebtedness for the unfailing courtesy and assistance received at the halls where meetings have been held.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—II.

MOSES THE GREATEST OF THE PROPHETS, NEXT TO OUR LORD.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

It is not well to set the eyes so closely on the Prophet as to forget the Holy Spirit, Who inspired the holy men of God to write and speak the words of life which we find in the literature of the Bible.

Moses stood midway between the past and the future. His mind registered the movement for the description of the origin of the material universe; the making of the earth and the creation, and formation of men in it. This is a very great theme indeed. It is surpassed by only one associated theme, and this also was registered and recorded by the mind of Moses, that holy man of God, who wrote and spoke as he was moved by the Holy Ghost, and as he was instructed to do by the voice of God.

The supreme theme introduced by Moses, and taken up and carried on by all the succeeding Prophets, including the greatest of the Prophets, nay, for He was not one of many Prophets—The Great Prophet—Jesus Christ Our Lord—was the personality of the Godhead. He, the Author of the universe, is greater than the universe. The theme of God, the Author of the universe, is greater than the theme of the universe. This was the familiar field of the prophetic activity of Moses, and greatly has he fulfilled this part of his task.

Elohim, the Creator of the heaven and the earth; and the heaven and the earth which He created is the opening theme of Moses, the man of God. It is a theme wonderfully and worthily opened in the first chapter of Genesis by Moses, the man of God, and it is followed by all the Prophets and is ratified by Our Lord in the succeeding Scriptures.

Modern writers on Moses and his message do not, as a rule, show up at all well when compared with the majestic personality and work of this man. As a rule they fail utterly to grasp the scope and the significance of the literature they so glibly criticise.

Jehovah Elohim, the Maker of the earth and the heavens; and the earth and the inhabitants thereof in the vegetable, animal and anthropic kingdoms which he made, is the second part of the great theme so majestically introduced by Moses, the man of God. The former deals with the physical creation; the second stage deals with the psychological and moral development of the man; and with the institution of the machinery for the administration of the eternal law of righteousness in the kingdom of men.

At this stage the evolutionary hypothesis finally and ultimately breaks down, and to deny that this is the case is only possible through ignorance of, or by ignoring, most obvious facts.

Jehovah and the family He had undertaken to develop and redeem, namely, the family of Adam, is the third stage of His great theme, and in it He opens the Book of human history.

No other literature on earth as far as it has come into the hands of our generation can equal the first stages of this record in antiquity, and none can equal it for absolute accuracy of statement.

The descent of the "appointed" seed is the line followed by the Mosaic history: it runs as follows:—God; Adam;

Digitized by Google

Seth . . . Noah; Shem . . . Terah; Abraham; Isaac; Jacob; Israel.

Outside of this line of history are all the descent of Cain, and all the branches of the Seth descent except the one continuous line to Noah. All the others perished in the Flood.

Outside of this line of history are all the descent of Ham and Japheth; and all the descent of Shem except that one line which ran directly to Abraham, for he alone, and his seed through Isaac and Jacob, were included in the Abrahamic Covenant.

Thus the purpose of the first eleven chapters of the Book was manifestly to relate the succeeding Scriptures and the Divine activities they record to God, the Creator of the universe, the Maker of the earth and the heavens, and the Redeemer of mankind; and to relate succeeding events to the history of the universe and of the cosmos from the beginning. In the most absolutely perfect manner this end is achieved; both by the things that are stated and by the silence regarding all matters of world activity not essential to this end.

Elyon El, the Most High God, Who manifests Himself through the pages of the book of nature—vide the 19th Psalm—to all the families of mankind, is next introduced, and like an atmosphere this phase of Divine revelation permeates the Scriptures; but the specific teaching and organization of worship connected with other phases of revelation is not provided in connection with the revelation of The Most High God.

El Shaddai, the God-Father of the Abrahamic seed, and the party of "the first part" to the everlasting Abrahamic Covenant, is now introduced. Concerning Him Our Lord said:—"When ye pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven," and the final proclamation of Whom is given by Our Lord in terms which are the equivalent of El Shaddai as follows:—"I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, THE ALMIGHTY." This is the Name of the Head of "the household of God," the Father of the Abrahamic seed, in connection with which household He says:—"I am the first, and with the last."

Once again Jehovah is introduced, making conjunction with the Abrahamic seed through Isaac and Jacob, now developed into a nation, and in conjunction with them, establishing the Kingdom of God in the earth, as is recorded so graphically in the 19th and 20th chapters of Exodus.

Thus the great Prophet Moses, moved by the Holy Ghost, filled in the great outline which constitutes a majestic synopsis to Israel history, and brings us to that point where the narrative takes the form of an eye-witness record of then present-day events. The lines of perspective contained in the narrative; the accidental details recorded in the picture; the amazing outburst of colour which was absent in the preceding pages, and which gradually fades away in the succeeding pages, furnish unanswerable Natural Science testimonies to the genuineness, authenticity, time of production and historicity of the record of the tremendous events at Sinai.

Consider the fact that the Creation of the universe is dealt with in ten short words, which well might constitute a telegram from heaven. The whole of the cosmic order on the material plane is set forth in one short chapter and three verses of the succeeding chapter. The whole Garden experience which records the setting up of the machinery of the court of Divine justice, and the beginning of the activities of the moral realm of mankind, is told in one short chapter.

But when we come nearer to the chronological standpoint of Moses so that figures and events approach more nearly to life-size and present-day happenings, the story of Joseph occupies more space than all of the foregoing universal events.

Still, even the story of Joseph is removed by centuries, and diminished by the perspective from the standpoint of Moses; but when we begin from the 6th chapter of Exodus which narrates the burning bush, and forward, the author is moving among life-size events and personalities, and is manifestly narrating the events by which he is from day to day surrounded, and in which he is taking active and vital part.

Thus by a system answering to telephotography in astronomy we find the place of the author of Genesis and Exodus in regard to the narrative.

Up to the present, all unconsciously, the author has been straining his eyes backward to the very beginning, gradually approaching his own standpoint, until finally his narrative has come up to include his own activities.

Now he turns away his face from the past, and from this time forward in the Mosaic records it is an obvious matter of fact that we are carried forward through Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, facing the same way with the author and passing from activity to activity in daily routine and sequence until we reach the final valedictory of Moses, and then see him depart for the mountain-top where his spirit leaves the aged body and ascends to God, while the messengers of God bury him in his unknown grave on Mount Nebo.

When thus we are separated from the individuality of the man of God, and enter upon the succeeding activities under Joshua, we pass out from under the influence of a tremendous personality. The idea that a later compiler or group of compilers could re-constitute the presence and personality which makes itself felt in every page of the Mosaic literature cannot be considered otherwise than as an absurdity, and never could have been entertained if these considerations had been taken into account.

We now approach the consideration of the amazing prophetic element found in the writings of Moses.

In the man of God, Moses, we have the only man among all the sons of men who has trained the telescope of Divine inspiration back into the immeasurable past. This is a great statement to make, and if it is found to be justified, as we have found it to be justified, it is a statement which is worthy of all consideration. True there have been and are many who are ready to displace Moses, the man of God, and to take his place armed, not with the instruments of Divine inspiration, but with improvised instruments such as can be "toggled" up, as the Westerner would say, out of fragmentary records of preceding ages caught and in fragments preserved in geological records; and out of the fragments of dead men's bones to which are attached apocryphal chronological datings.

Granting all that these can yield to the true student of natural science, it is known to every true scientist that such information is too fragmentary and too disturbed by geological upheavals to furnish even an approximately complete record of the period so covered; and that the beginning of geological time falls very far short of the commencement of the majestic and coherent synopsis presented by Moses, the man of God.

The statement is therefore justified that Moses is the only man who has trained his instruments of absolute precision, namely, those of Divine revelation, back into the origin of things.

The other Prophets which follow, the Psalmists, Evangelists and Apostles, constantly take up and use his presentation as being that of unquestionable fact; and Our Lord Himself, declared to be in the New Testament "He by whom the earth and the heavens were made," accepts and ratifies the statement in every particular.

Although in the realm of scientific literature authors may be found who criticise and attempt to set aside the Mosaic record of the past, it will be found that second only to observation of natural phenomena which is the basis of science, if indeed it is second, the Mosaic record imposes its influence upon the mentality and the literary productions of scientific men and literature. This can only be explained that behind the Mosaic record there is the driving power of actual fact and of Divine inspiration.

We will next turn to the prophetic element of the Mosaic literature which deals, not with the past, but with the future.

WHAT IS THE VITAL POINT OF CONVERSION?—III.

BY HENRY D. HOUGHTON.

IN looking over the four Gospels one cannot help but be struck with the great difference which St. John's Gospel presents to the records of the other three.

St. Matthew and St. Luke deal with the literal line of Our Lord, and commence particularly with the strange happenings connected with His miraculous birth. St. Mark goes straight into His life and work with the words: "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, THE SON OF GOD."

St. John, however, in his very first words takes us back long before time began, with the strange and thrilling words: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God."

Most authors begin their writings quietly, working up to the crisis of their theme later on; but St. John is so full of it, and sees so clearly its transcendent importance, that he bursts forth with it in his very first sentence, and declares at the very outset of his Gospel that the Word (Jesus Christ) WAS GOD!

Perhaps there is no parallel in all literature to the marvellous and astounding assertions of the first fourteen verses of this chapter.

"The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him (the Word) and without Him was not anything made that was made. . . .

"That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

"He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not."

GOD IN HIDING AMONGST MEN: THAT IS ST. JOHN'S CLAIM.

Then he proceeds to tell us that all who believe on Christ are made SONS OF GOD!

"But as many as received Him to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His Name."

Now whatever we may think about these fourteen verses, there is no uncertainty about the Apostle's claim, "CHRIST WAS GOD," nothing more, nothing less!

As the whole of this wondrous Gospel of St. John is read, this appears to be the purpose for which it is written, the proving to the sons of men that Christ Our Lord was the Son of God.

Indeed, that is the confessed purpose of his book, as he declares in St. John xx, 30, 31.

"And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of His disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through His Name."

This purpose of the Apostle accounts for the unique character of his message. He sets himself out to prove that Jesus is the Son of God, SO THAT ALL MEN BELIEVING IT SHALL HAVE ETERNAL LIFE!

Weigh well this last sentence, for if it is true it revolutionizes the whole of current theology!

St. John then declares that to be the one purpose of his book; and he begins it very appropriately by making the astounding claim clearly set forth in chapter i, 1-14.

Now if this theory is correct, and so much hangs upon it, see how important it is that St. John should establish the fact of Christ's Divinity with absolute certainty: as Eternal Life for all mankind hangs upon it!

So he establishes it in many ways:—

(1) By Christ's own words:—
"I and My Father are one." "I am the Bread of Life."

(2) By the Father's evidence:—
"The Spirit descending from heaven like a dove and it abode upon Him."

(3) By Christ's miracles:—
"The works that I do bear witness of Me that the Father hath sent Me."

(4) By the overwhelming convictions of His disciples:—
"We have found the Messias."
"Thou art the Son of God: thou art the King of Israel."

(5) By Christ's authority over all nature:—
Feeding the 5,000, walking the sea, raising the dead, and Himself rising again.

(6) By the fulfilling of all the Messiah prophecies.

But he does not leave it there. For every word and every line of his Gospel, and every incident recorded, is there for the one purpose of substantiating the claim.

Look at verse 18: "No man hath seen God at any time: the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him."

Look at verse 29: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Verse 32: "And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him.

Digitized by Google

And I knew Him not. . . . And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God."

Then in the same chapter we have Nathaniel's discovery of Jesus, and his delightful and surprising exclamation: "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God: Thou art the King of Israel." (verse 49.)

That was Nathaniel's conversion!

Take those emphatic words in chapter iii, 13: "No man hath ascended up to heaven, but He that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven."

There is the Divine claim very forcibly expressed.

Take that glorious verse 16, so often quoted: "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

"For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world." (verse 17.)

"He that believeth not is condemned already, because He hath not believed in the Name of the only begotten Son of God."

Take the words of John the Baptist as recorded in the same chapter, verse 31: "He that cometh from above is above all: he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth: He that cometh from heaven is above all."

Verse 34: "For He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him."

Verse 35: "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into His hand."

Verse 36: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

In almost every line of this marvellous Gospel of St. John there stands forth this claim, that Christ was Divine.

Look at chapter v: "Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto and I work. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill Him, because He . . . said that God was His Father, making Himself equal with God." (verses 17, 18.)

Look at verse 21: "As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom He will."

"For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son: that all men should honour the Son even as they honour the Father." (verses 22, 23.)

"For as the Father hath life in Himself; so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself." (verse 26.)

There is no hesitation or uncertainty about these stupendous words! They claim and assert with a confidence absolutely amazing that Christ was the Son of God, with life and power inherent in Him! LIFE IN HIMSELF!

Chapter vi, verses 68, 69: "Simon Peter answered Him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of Eternal Life. And we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God."

Chapter viii, 12: "I am the light of the world!"

Verse 18: "The Father that sent Me beareth witness of Me."

Verse 19: "If ye had known Me, ye should have known My Father also."

Verse 24: "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins."

Verse 42: "If God were your Father, ye would love Me; for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of Myself, but He sent Me."

Verse 58: "Jesus said unto them, verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am."

Chapter x, 37-38: "If I do not the works of My Father, believe Me not. But if I do, though ye believe not Me, believe the works, that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in Me, and I in Him."

"All things that the Father hath are Mine." (xvi, 15.)

"As the Father knoweth Me, even so know I the Father." (x, 15.)

"I am the bread of life: he that cometh to Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst." (vi, 35.)

"I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if a man eat of this bread he shall live for ever." (verse 51.)

Take that very remarkable declaration in John v, 25: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live."

Take the case of Martha. "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. BELIEVEST THOU THIS?" Now notice very closely the exact form of Martha's answer: "Yea, Lord: I believe that Thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world." There is Martha's confession and conversion; and it agrees most minutely with the confession of the eunuch before Philip baptised him.

Our Lord declared before all the assembled Jews that His purpose and reason for raising Lazarus from the dead was to prove that God had sent Him."

"Father, I thank Thee, that Thou hast heard Me. And I know that Thou hearest Me always; but because of the people which stand by I said it, THAT THEY MAY BELIEVE THAT THOU HAST SENT ME." (xi, 41, 42.) There is the purpose. Now note the result. "Then many of the Jews . . . believed on Him."

THE MODEL STATE.

Extracted, adapted, and condensed from the First Chapter of "Israel in Prophecy and History" by C. K.*

"THE Lord hath avouched thee this day to be a peculiar people unto Himself, as He hath promised thee, and thou shouldest keep all His commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which He hath made, in praise and in name, and in honour."—Deut. xxvi, 18, 19 (R.V.).

Many people cannot believe that God could be so unfair, as they say, to choose a people to do His work on earth, but if one will only consider for a moment, it seems almost inevitable that this is just the way He would proceed and His Kingdom must spread as forecast gradually, from one man who was chosen because he obeyed God, until it fills the whole world.

This man would be isolated and educated by dreams or visions and by direct reward in the material world as Abraham was. This procedure would result in this individual handing on to his descendants a strong tradition and belief in an all-powerful God, and they must be also so educated, the process being repeated generation after generation until further revelation of the character of God could be given through human beings specially chosen because of their personal fitness, such as the prophets.

Eventually the time would come when these peculiar people would be ready for a positive incarnation of God Himself. This is exactly what happened to Abraham and Israel in Egypt and at the Exodus, and the conquest of the Promised Land, succeeded by the order of the Prophets culminating in the first Presence of Our Lord Jesus Christ. Now before saying anything on the Gospel of the Kingdom, let us assert this; British-Israelites know that the first and chief work of Israel, the chosen Race, is and always has been to spread abroad through the whole world the Gospel of Salvation, an Israel reformed of the Spirit, ruling with God for the evangelising of all nations and teaching them the good news of the Saviourship of Christ. Alas that this has not been done in the past as much as it should have been. But the second work is of immense importance, for even if the world had never fallen and required saving, it would still have required a Lord or Ruler, and Our Lord would have come to satisfy this need. And this Gospel of the Kingdom dominates our whole life here on earth, involving our Government, health, wealth and life itself.

In considering the theocratic state of Israel, we note that Christ was Lord thereof; let us consider what laws He laid down for Israel. The first and a most important fact to notice is that Adam was a gardener and Christ a maker of agricultural implements. Remember that Cain, who went out from the Presence of the Lord, was the first maker of cities, and so it seems obvious that agriculture, and especially pastoral farming, must be the chief industry in the Model State. Again, the farmer must have security of tenure. The Mosaic code provides this. Israel was a nation of yeoman farmers, each man living in his own holding. The land belonged to God and security of tenure was given to the tenants, and therefore the land could not relapse into large holdings. A tithe or whole tithe was paid to God and settled on the Tribe of Levi and was the greater part of the pay of the priestly and professional classes.

Further tithes and dues made the total rent and taxes up to a double tithe, or 20 per cent., so the Israelite farmers were perpetual leaseholders under a theocracy, and so long as they paid their tithes would never have been dispossessed.

Individual Israel farmers could assign their leases to one another, but not beyond 49 years and never beyond the Year of Jubilee. So long as the Law was obeyed, there was prosperity for Levite and farmer, and sufficiency for the poor. Loans to the latter did not bear interest, and every seventh year all debts were released.

The Laws against theft were delightfully simple; according to Josephus, "Let death be the punishment for stealing a man, but he that hath purloined gold or silver let him pay double. If anyone killa man that is stealing something out of his house, let him be esteemed guiltless, although the man were only breaking in at the wall. Let him that hath stolen cattle pay fourfold what is lost, excepting the case of an ox, for which let the thief pay fivefold. Let him that is so poor that he cannot pay what mulct is laid upon him, be his servant to whom he was adjudged to pay it."

There were no gaols maintained at the expense of the ratepayer to reform the criminal. This was entrusted to the person wronged; if a man stole let him sweat for it at his own cost, not at that of the community.

In the administration of justice there were seven magistrates in each city; each magistrate had two Levites to help him. The Mosaic legal system was similar to our own, and this seems to have been largely due to King Alfred, who consulted his Bible when arranging these matters. For taxation, there were three tithes in all, an Israelite who gave his whole tithe paid two shillings in the pound of his income and was blessed for so doing. An Israelite who completely fulfilled the will of God gave four shillings in the pound. On the payment of these tithes and other donations depended the financial prosperity of the Israelite State. And Modern Israel cannot be blessed in things spiritual or material till individual Israelites voluntarily practise the habit of the whole tithe.

The observance of the Sabbath marked the close of a week of successful toil; for when the tithes were duly paid, even the "devourer" was "rebuked," and the labour of man was not destroyed by his terrible and eternal foe, the insect tribe. What the land received in work it repaid in crop. And so the Sabbath was a happy day of rest and rejoicing. Of the seventy-four days in each year kept by the Israelite in remembrance of his God, seventy-three were to be days of sheer rejoicing. It was only on the seventy-fourth—the 10th day of the 7th month—that the spiritual atmosphere was changed, and man afflicted his soul. He was to fast and pray and to remember that he was a sinner, and his Maker a righteous and holy God. The nation and every individual was to confess to God, to one another, and to themselves, that they have no spiritual standing before God. It was on this day alone that the High Priest entered the Holy of Holies with the blood of Sacrifice. It was a great event for the Israelite, the promise of a greater still. It has had its fulfilment. For us, Good Friday should be a day of strict and penitent observance, but at other times the worship of God should be much more joyous, than is customary.

The Biblical scheme of Economics is individualist and not communist, and there can be no such things as Christian Socialism. In the Old Testament we see the building up of the Model State and its ultimate fall and punishment through its flat disobedience to the Giver of all good things. The trouble with the Theocratic State in its earlier eras was in the fact that it did not sufficiently realise the Reign of God. Because the Ruler was invisible, He was not there. It seems that in the original occupation of the land, the fatal error was made of not extirpating the debased sexual stock of the Canaanites, and gradually by intermarriage the Canaanitish leaven did its work and involved Israel in disaster, save for the interregnum of David's reign when the land was temporarily purged of idolatry. Solomon had only to keep straight on and Israel would have attained the position that God had fore-ordained for His servant nation.

It was God's intention that the nation should be rich and wealthy; at their start they spoiled the Egyptians and were given a land abounding in all good things, and inherited great and goodly cities they had not builded. So great was the importance, in the Divine Mind, of this wealth entrusted to their stewardship and enjoyment, that it is recapitulated three times in the Old Testament. Jerusalem attained to enormous wealth about the middle of Solomon's reign, a wealth which it was intended should be utilised for the benefit of the whole earth, even as the wealth of England and America to-day; and America, in hoarding the gold that the world is languishing for, in her bank cellars, is committing the same crime that Solomon committed when he utilised the gold for the making of gold lions and other display which overpowered the Queen of Sheba, but which met with Our Lord's severe condemnation.

As the Israelites honoured God with their substance, so that substance was increased. So it is intended with us as a nation, but that wealth and power must be put to God's service. Money is only useful for what it can do. It is useless in itself. The primary utility is in its employment as a wage fund. The capitalist is a boon, the Christian capitalist may be and ought to be a stupendous godsend.

The prime reason for the existence of Israel was that it might become a medium for the revelation of God to the whole human race. This was and is true of Israel under both Covenants. Under the old Dispensation, religion was to be localised. The Temple of God was at Jerusalem. To this shrine the nations were to come. It was only after the Resurrection that Christ said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation." "And they went forth and preached everywhere." There was no provision for foreign missionary work in the Old Testament. The Divine plan was that a great, healthful, moral, upright and markedly prosperous State was to be set up, with Jerusalem as its centre of government and worship, and those of the heathen who had the wit to understand the mystery of this unbroken success were to come to Jerusalem and seek the solution there. The Theocratic State attracts inwards. The Christian Church was to hurl itself violently outwards. In the days of the Law God was in Heaven, with Jerusalem as His footstool, and men were to betake themselves there as to a throne of grace.

The message of Moses was, "Come in and be blessed." The command to the Church was, "Go out and bless everybody." Now that the seven times' punishment is over "and this Gospel of the Kingdom" is again preached, the message is again, Come into the British Empire and be blessed.

In the days of Solomon the whole world was on the very threshold of a tremendous revelation of Divine Truth. Solomon himself had to be faithful and he and his successors would have had the heathen for their inheritance. The Nations would have voluntarily come up to Jerusalem to attain knowledge of that Truth. The mere success, military and economic, of the Israel State would have brought about this result. Solomon relapsed into idolatry and soon there was nothing to be learnt there of Divine Truth. After Solomon occurs the cleavage of Israel into North and South; as regards the South, a succession of rulers in direct line from David led to the Babylonish captivity. Then a partial return of Judah, Benjamin and the Levites, a rebuilding of Jerusalem and a waiting of centuries for the Messiah. The Messiah came and was crucified.

Now for the North; under various rulers they plunged deeper and deeper into the pit of idolatry, iniquity and poverty. At length, round about 721 B.C., they were dragged forth from the land to which they have never returned and from that time they are lost to Biblical history.

Let us review their career. Abraham is brought from the North country, has an enormous domain promised him, and Isaac the promised seed is born to him. Isaac is the father of Israel. The patriarchs excelled as pastoralists and well-sinkers. The family went down to Egypt, the peculiar climate of which brought about an extraordinarily increased fecundity. A populous nation was produced rapidly from a trifling clan of seventy persons. When the fulness of time had come, they were led forth by a greater than Joseph. Then followed the wanderings in the desert, till the stock born in serfdom had died out and been succeeded by a generation of men. All this time God visibly led His people. Where the pillar of cloud stopped, there the people stopped; when it moved, they moved. The Law was given for soul and body. Sound theology, economics and hygiene; pure food, fresh air, drill, discipline, all worked to build up a people fit for the work God had in hand, the extirpation of the vile Canaanitish races, too far gone in sin for repentance, and the subsequent foundation and consolidation of the Model State.

The Promised Land was reached, and the Canaanites not altogether extirpated. The tribes settled comfortably, each in its own preserve. The sense of nationhood was inert, and that obligation to the God of Israel, which should have kept them united and loyal, unrecognised. A King was granted them as a material rallying-point, and for a time things went better.

But the partial transfer of national obligation from Temple to Court led, through human inefficiency, to the final undoing of the race. The Temple led men upwards, the Kings led the people downwards, and they cheerfully followed. The God of Israel allowed time for repentance, as He had done to the original possessors of the soil. It was unavailing, and there followed the Assyrian and Babylonish captivities; for there was this difference between the Canaanites and the Israelites: the Canaanites were of such a stock that there was no chance of repentance and recovery, and there only remained destruction; but Israel, though they attained an equal depravity, might yet repent and so do her work in the world.

The Canaanite was a filthy brute, the Israelite a vile-hearted man. So for the Israelite there was prolonged chastisement, and finally redemption through Our Lord to enable them to do "the first works."

The exact length of the two chastisements of Judah and Israel are given us, and as they began at widely different times, so therefore must the endings be.

SOME HARD SAYINGS OF JESUS.

No. 2.—FIRE ON THE EARTH.

"I came to cast fire upon the earth; and what will I, if it is already kindled?"—St. Luke xii, 49 (R.V.).

CHRIST was not self-deluded. Whatever view the disciples might have taken of the future, or whatever hopes they might have entertained concerning the Davidic rule and reign of Christ, He was not deceived. At this time, and for some time to come, He was upon the crest of the wave. The people flocked to Him, so much so that the Pharisees said, "Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? Behold! the world is gone after Him." The superficial observer might have concluded that Jesus of Nazareth was destined for a long career of unparalleled prosperity. Christ knew better than that. He saw most clearly the logical outcome of His teaching, the inevitable result of the attitude which His doctrines forced Him to assume. Hence the words of this text; "I came to cast fire upon the earth." There is no getting away from the fact that Christ, when truly apprehended, is a storm centre; and that because of the tremendous demands He makes upon His individual disciples, demands diametrically opposed to the aims, hopes and ambitions of the world. True goodness is always conflagrative. It sets on fire. It is never consumed but always consumes.

There is a cult to-day which would make Christ a meek and mild person, unable to defend Himself, quite acquiescent in the presence of evil, tied hand and foot, while gross iniquity stalks through the earth like a devouring lion. They speak of Him as the Prince of Peace, and that correctly, for so He is. They quote that familiar passage, "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearers"; and so He was. But this is surely only one phase of the Christ. They forget that passage which speaks of Him on this wise: "Who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth? for He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap." They have forgotten the Temple scene, and the whip of small cords.

The passivity of the Christ as represented by some to-day would give Him the unenviable position of the looker-on, able, but not willing, to lift so much as His little finger to defend the right, or to promote righteousness on the earth. I have not so learned the Christ; on the contrary, I find that around Him, in consequence of Him, fires have been kindled the flames of which have reached to heaven, and conflicts long and bloody have been waged. "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division." St. Matthew writes, "a sword."

Now the first thing that strikes me here is just this:

CHRIST IS THE AGGRESSOR.

He is not here on the defensive, He is attacking. He is not entrenched, waiting for the enemy to come on, He leads the battle into the enemy's country. It is not that fire is kindled by wicked hands in consequence of Christ's life and teaching, though that is true; it is something more, much more than that. He Himself sends fire. He Himself enters the home and breaks it up; the State and breaks it up; the Church and breaks it up. He divides even "as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." The forces of evil find in Jesus Christ an aggressive force almighty and eternal. He has drawn for us a picture which I think strongly emphasizes this phase. He says, "Or else how can one enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man, and then he will spoil his house." The application is obvious. Christ is referring to Satan and Himself. The one the strong man (Satan), the other the stronger man (Christ), whose avowed intention it is to bind the strong man and spoil his goods. The Church of Jesus Christ is, according to Holy Writ, the Body of Christ. If Christ has translated aught of His Spirit into His Church, then there should be no more militant and aggressive force in the world than the Christian Church. The Christian man is not in this world as a pacifist, crying, like the false prophets of Israel, "Peace! Peace!" when there is no peace: sitting down in a passive attitude, believing, as some do from the Book, that the world must wax worse and worse, God's people being unable to prevent it, until the day of His Coming; taking a detached view of things, as if he were not flesh and blood, subject to all the conditions of time and sense.

The Christian man is an aggressive warrior from his youth. He goes forth sword in hand to meet his foe, and does not wait for his foe to come out against him. He does not wait for the Midianites to fall upon him; he falls upon the Midianites with such resources as he may have at his command; humanly altogether inadequate, in God all-sufficient, crying, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

I am bound to admit that we have not always realized this aggressive character of our high calling in Christ Jesus; but where it has been so realized great results have followed to the glory of God and the salvation of men. What righteousness there is in the earth, what good in mankind, what elevated and elevating impulses, are due to this aggressive spirit. This is the spirit which, fostered in our people, will lead to a great advance of the Kingdom of God in the earth to the glory of God and the salvation of mankind.

But there is more here than the aggressive temper. The kindled fire is significant of much. It means the manifestation of

THE DIVINE PRESENCE.

Fire in the Bible stands for the presence of God—the manifested presence of God. When Christ brings fire on the earth He brings Himself manifestly in the midst. I have only to remind you of one or two instances in proof of this. Two in the Old Testament, viz.: Moses and the burning bush, and Elijah on Mount Carmel. Two in the New Testament, viz.: Christ and His baptism of fire, and Pentecost and the cloven tongues of fire. (Ex. iii; I Kings xviii; Matt. iii; Acts ii.)

There is no need so great to-day as the need of the manifested presence of God. We want the assurance that God is in the midst. Some of us seem pretty well assured that the Devil is in the world. The strong man is here, of that we have not much doubt. Is the stronger man here also?

"He hides Himself most wondrously,
As if there were no God."

"They continually say unto me, Where is thy God?" "Oh that I knew where I might find Him, that I might come even to His seat." It would seem as if the soul of man were destined to be always feeling after God if haply he might find Him. Here is indisputable proof of the presence of God. Is the fire kindled? Then God is there. Let me press home this question of the kindled fire.

Here is a soul longing after a nobler existence, a truer and sublimer experience. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God." There is a fire of earnest desire kindled in his breast. That fire is the evidence of God's presence within him. Mr. Boreham, that very charming Australian writer, tells how, happening by chance to saunter into the room of a certain debating society, out of the hurly-burly of a wordy conflict, one appeal from one young man struck him very forcibly and made an indelible impression upon his mind. After referring to the connection between science and faith, this young man, with intense feeling, and in deadly earnest said, " And, gentlemen, I would give both hands, and give them cheerfully, if I could believe as my old grandfather believed ! "

Mr. Boreham is well worth quoting here. He writes in comment upon the passionate desire which filled this young man's soul.

Was his grandfather's faith a true one or a false one ?

" Why does this young man sigh for his grandfather's faith ? If his grandfather's faith was a false faith, why does he himself so passionately covet it ? Does not the very fact that he so earnestly desires his grandfather's faith as his own faith prove that he is certain that his grandfather's faith was true ? And if, in the very soul of him, he feels that his grandfather's faith was true, does it not follow that he has already set his seal to the faith of his grandfather ? Is he not proving most conclusively by his flashing eyes, his fervent manner, and his quivering voice, that he believes most firmly in his grandfather's faith ? Is he not crying out that his soul is empty, whilst, in a secret and unexplored recess of that same soul, there reposes the very faith for which he cries ? "

The fire of a passionate desire kindled in the soul of man, I care not how it is kindled, by sorrow, trial, temptation ; by a harvest of misery reaped as the just fruit of sins committed, either by himself or by others, that fire is the surest evidence, it may be the only possible evidence, of the presence of God.

" I am come to send fire on the earth," and in that fire which He kindles He is. Christ is subjective more than He is objective. He is within more than He is round about. " Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven ? (that is, to bring Christ down from above) ; or, Who shall descend into the deep ? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead). But what saith it ? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart : that is, the word of faith ; . . . If thou shalt confess. . . . " CONFESS, that is the word. Confess the presence which the kindled fire manifests to be there. But there is the fire of a great cause, of a noble enterprise, of an abiding principle of righteousness ; and this fire Christ also kindles.

A GREAT CAUSE. A NOBLE ENTERPRISE. AN ABIDING RIGHT.

The Lord Jesus came into this world in the interest of the greatest cause which can occupy the human mind, or capture the human will, or fill the human heart, the cause of the Kingdom of God, which is the Kingdom of righteousness. He stood in the midst of the Home, the Church, the State, to advocate a great cause, to advance a great enterprise, to promote an abiding principle of righteousness in the earth. For this cause He came unto His own ; alas ! that His own should not have received Him. He sought to capture the mind of Israel, the whole of Israel and not merely the Jews, to set on fire her zeal for God, and for humanity. He strove hard to convince the people of His day that He came forth from God in order to lead them back to God. There had been a day when Israel had known what such a fire meant. When Moses led the people of the Lord from Egypt, when Nehemiah led the remnant of Judah back to Jerusalem, though the task was colossal the cause was great, and though hands were feeble, hearts were strong and brave. A fire from the Lord burned fiercely though it did not consume them. So was it in Christ's time ; if the people had only known the day of their visitation ; for none came with a greater cause, a nobler enterprise, a diviner righteousness. It was as a matter of fact the same cause, the same enterprise, the same righteousness which fired the God-anointed, and God-appointed Abraham, the father of our race which the incarnate Son of God brought, by way of His Cross, to the fullest fruition.

I pray that we may know the day of our visitation, for Our Lord has surely kindled the fires before our very eyes of the same great cause, the salvation of mankind from tyranny and oppression ; a noble enterprise, the brotherhood of man in the sovereignty of God ; and that abiding principle of righteousness which alone can exalt a nation. For this end has He revealed unto modern Israel—Britain-Israel—her long-lost identity, that she may be in His hands for salvation unto the uttermost parts of the earth. " I am come to send fire on the earth ; and what will I, if it be already kindled ?"

It is not the fire of a petty revenge such as James and John, the sons of thunder, would have Him call down upon the innocently offending heads of a few villagers ; not the fire of judgment stern and unrelenting, though it may be quite true that He cometh to judge the earth ; not the fire of conflagration overwhelming and devastating which the unrepentant wickedness of men and nations may make in these latter days inevitable ; but the fire of a holy passion, of pure and clean living, of dauntless heroism and unconquerable devotion in the Home, the Church, the State. The Lord kindle such a fire in us, in our Home, our Church, our State. May it consume all dross, destroy all sin, making us as gold refined and as silver purified.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM.

BY " CHELA."

" EYNSFORD " in your issue of June 23rd, 1928, raises an interesting point on the above subject, but it would seem to be not correct to assume that five empires are symbolized in the image.

Daniel in his interpretation mentions four kingdoms only, and the fact that five materials are mentioned in the composition of the image surely does not necessarily imply that five empires are concerned, in view of the fact that no mention is made of a fifth kingdom, whereas the " fourth " kingdom is the last one in numerical order.

In Daniel vii, verses 1 to 8, we have Daniel's dream and vision of the four beasts, and in verse 17 of this chapter is written, " These four beasts, which are four, are four kings which shall arise out of the earth."

Here we see a marked similarity between Nebuchadnezzar's dream and Daniel's vision.

In each, four is mentioned and especially emphasized in Daniel's vision by verse 17 quoted above.

In the fourth kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's dream the toes are especially mentioned in verses 41 and 42.

In the description given of the fourth beast in verse 7 we read it had ten horns, and in verse 8 special mention is made of the horns.

Digitized by Google

Ten toes and ten horns ; hence the numeral ten is common to both, omitting for the moment the other little horn mentioned in chapter vii, verse 8. We submit for consideration that the four kingdoms of Nebuchadnezzar's dream and the four beasts of Daniel's vision symbolise the same kingdoms, i.e., four in number, and the one confirms the other.

From " Eynsford's " article it appears to be an accepted fact that those portions of the image which were of gold, silver and brass represent respectively the Babylonian, Medo-Persian and Macedonian or Greek Empires.

The question then remains is, does verse 33 of Daniel ii, i.e., " His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay," represent one empire or two ? Dr. Adam Clarke in this connection says :—

" Legs of iron, and feet and toes of iron and clay."

" I think this means, in the first place, the kingdom of the Lagidæ, in Egypt ; and the kingdom of the Seleucidæ, in Syria ; and, secondly, the Roman Empire, which was properly composed of them.

(1) Ptolemy Lagus, one of Alexander's generals, began the new kingdom of Egypt 312 B.C., which was continued through a long race of sovereigns till 30 B.C. ; when Octavius Cæsar took Alexandria, having in the previous year defeated Antony and Cleopatra at the battle of Actium, and so Egypt became a Roman province. Thus ended the kingdom of the Lagidæ, after it had lasted 282 years.

(2) Seleucus Nicator, another of Alexander's generals, began the new kingdom of Syria 312 B.C., which continued through a long race of sovereigns till 65 B.C., when Pompey dethroned Antiochus Asiaticus, and Syria became a Roman province after it had lasted 247 years.

That the two legs of iron meant the kingdoms of the Lagidæ and that of the Seleucidæ seems strongly intimated by the characters given in the text. " And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron. Forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things ; and as iron breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise" (verse 40).

(1) The iron here not only marks the strength of these kingdoms, but also their violence and cruelty. History is full of the miseries which the kings of Egypt and Syria inflicted on the Jews.

(2) It is said that these legs should break in pieces and bruise. How many generals and princes were destroyed by Seleucus Nicator and Ptolemy, son of Lagus ! Seleucus particularly could not consider himself secure on the throne till he had destroyed Antigonus, Nicanor and Demetrius, and Ptolemy endeavoured to secure himself by the ruin of Perdiecas, and the rest of his enemies.

(3) The dividing of the kingdom, the iron and clayey mixture of the feet, point out the continual divisions which prevailed in those empires ; and the mixture of good and evil qualities which appeared in the successors of Seleucus and Ptolemy ; none of them possessing the good qualities of the founders of those monarchies ; neither their valour, wisdom or prudence.

(4) The efforts which these princes made to strengthen their respective governments by alliances which all proved not only useless, but injurious, are here pointed by their mingling themselves with the seed of men. " But they shall not cleave one to another " (verse 43). Antiochus Theos, king of Syria, married both Laodice and Berenice, daughters of Ptolemy Philadephus, king of Egypt. Antiochus Magnus, king of Syria, gave his daughter Cleopatra to Ptolemy Epiphanes, king of Egypt ; but these marriages, instead of being the means of consolidating the union, contributed more than anything else to divide them, and excite the most bloody and destructive wars.

In chapter vii, verse 7, the Prophet, having the same subject in view, says : " I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly ; and it had great iron teeth ; it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it," and in chap. viii, 22 : " Now that being broken," the horn of the rough goat, the Grecian monarchy, " whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand out of the nation, but not in his power."

Bishop Newton says with reference to the above : " They were to be kingdoms of Greeks, not of Alexander's family, but only of his nation. In the partition Cassander held Macedon and Greece and the western parts ; Lysimachus had Thrace, Bithynia and the northern regions ; Ptolemy possessed Egypt and the southern countries ; and Seleucus obtained Syria and the eastern provinces. Thus were they divided toward the four winds of heaven."

These and other declarations point out those peculiar circumstances that distinctly mark the kingdom of the Seleucidæ and that of the Lagidæ, both of which rose out of the Macedonian or Grecian Empire, and both terminated in that of the Romans.

These two legs of iron became absorbed in the Roman Government, which partook of the iron nature : strong, military and extensive in its victories, and by its various conquests united to and amalgamated with itself various nations, some strong and some weak, so as to be fitly represented in the symbolical image by feet and toes, partly of iron and partly of clay. Thus, as the Lagidæ and Seleucidæ arose out of the wreck of the Grecian Empire, so the Roman Empire arose out of their ruin. But the Empire became weakened by its conquests ; and although by mingling themselves with the seed of men, that is by strong leagues and matrimonial alliances, as mentioned above, they endeavoured to secure a perpetual sovereignty, yet they did not cleave to each other, and they also were swallowed up by the barbarous northern nations ; and thus terminated those four most powerful monarchies.

So much for the " legs of iron and feet and toes of iron and clay."

Let us now turn our attention to Daniel's vision, especially as regards the " fourth beast."

St. Jerome remarks :—

" The Fourth Empire which now possessed the world is the Roman, whereof it is said in the statue, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron, and part of clay ; and yet he mentions now the iron in part attesting that it had great iron teeth. And I greatly wonder, saith he, that when he had before placed a lion, and a bear, and a leopard in three kingdoms, he should compare the Roman Empire to no beast ; unless perhaps that he might make the beast more formidable, he concealed the name, so that whatsoever we could imagine the most fierce in beasts, that we should understand the Romans to be."

Digitized by Google

"It devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it." It reduced Macedon into a Roman province about 168 years, the kingdom of Pergamos about 133 years, Syria about 65 years, and Egypt about 30 years before Christ.

"It (the fourth beast) was diverse from all the beasts that were before it," not only in its republican form of government, but likewise in strength and power and greatness, length of duration and extent of dominion—"And it had ten horns."

Verse 7 seems to give the description of this fourth beast as it appeared to Daniel at first sight, and evidently after consideration (for the opening words of 8th verse are, "I considered the horns," etc.) Daniel, it would seem, noticed other characteristics of this fourth beast which he enumerates in verse 8, and if we continue to read the chapter much more detailed information is given, especially regarding this fourth beast, i.e., in verses 19, 20, 21, 23, 24 and 25.

In verse 24 we read that "the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise." As in verse 17 the four kings are not single kings but kingdoms, so in verse 24 the ten horns or kings are not single kings but kingdoms.

These ten kingdoms are reckoned by Dr. Adam Clarke thus—

1. The Roman Senate.
2. The Greeks in Ravenna.
3. The Lombards in Lombardy.
4. The Huns in Hungary.
5. The Alemans in Germany.
6. The Franks in France.
7. The Burgundians in Burgundy.
8. The Saracens in Africa and part of Spain.
9. The Goths in other parts of Spain.
10. The Saxons in Britain.

Here are ten kingdoms.

Now let us turn to verses 8 and 24. "Another little horn," "And another shall arise after them." What does this little horn represent?

Bishop Newton says, "In all the several respects which the Prophet notices, the Pope fully answers the character of 'the little horn.' He did not become a horn properly (which is an emblem of strength and power) till he became a temporal prince. He was to rise after the other, that is behind them, as the Greek translates it." Verse 8 reads, "before whom (the little horn) there were three of the first horns plucked out by the roots." What happened?

1. The exarchate of Ravenna was given to Pope Stephen II by Pepin, king of France, A.D. 755, and this constituted the Pope's temporal power.

2. The kingdom of the Lombards was given to St. Peter by Charlemagne in 774.

3. The state of Rome was vested in the Pope, both in spirituals and temporals, and confirmed to him by Lewis the pious.

These are the three horns which were plucked up from the roots before "the little horn."

The above would seem sufficient to allocate the fourth beast to the Roman Empire and Roman Empire alone.

The Rev. Thomas Wintle, B.D., a divine of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, says:—

"Though the dream of Nebuchadnezzar concerning the image, and this vision of Daniel's beasts agree in their general sense and interpretation, yet there are circumstances added to the latter, as well as some points more plainly illustrated than they were in the former. Nebuchadnezzar saw his kingdom flourishing: Daniel when its wings were plucked, and its end approaching."

It is clear that only four beasts are mentioned in Daniel's vision, actually only four kingdoms are mentioned in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, though in depicting them five materials have been mentioned; both the dream and the vision portray kingdoms and there is marked similarity in both; if they represent different kingdoms or empires, what are they? If they represent the same, then there are only four, and the Turkish Empire is not included in the image.

In our two previous articles we have studied the question of War in relation to Civilization, the Kingdom and the Churches. We have seen that War must inevitably continue to decimate the earth just so long as the spirit of man and spirit of man-made Empires remains unchanged. That history in this respect must continue to repeat itself. For, pending the advent of a new spirit, War remains the only test of nations, the only cure for stagnation and decay, the only guarantee of virility and progress. The Muse of History has written Peace and Sensuality, Peace and Selfishness, Peace and Death, in the records of human eventuality of the past. But Peace and Civilization will yet be wedded one to the other. For with the manifestation of the Kingdom-Empire set up by God—and peopled by a race of citizens inspired and led by the spirit of God—a new horizon is opened to the life of nations. Hitherto the test of national effeteness has been War. But now with the dawn of a new and better Age the test of virility will be Peace.

Ease and self-centredness remain the enemies of progress. To the soul whose centre is self, Peace may become nothing more than a snare and delusion; nothing more than opportunity for self-indulgence. But conditions of peace are no temptation to slackness to the Christo-centric soul firmly in league with Christ. An environment of peace to such is pregnant with opportunity for concentrated effort and achievement. Change of frontier is necessary and inevitable in a world where nations are subject to laws of imperfection and decay. But with the advent of the Kingdom set up by God—the Kingdom which shall never be destroyed nor left to other people—the Kingdom whose People delight to obey the divine law—a new and living process of development is initiated. Absorption not Conquest is to be the rule of Empire. With the expansion of the Kingdom the need for frontier and change of frontier is transcended. In the day that the kingdoms of the world are become the Kingdom of the Lord and of His Christ, then, the frontiers of the nations and of the Kingdom will have become conterminous and equipollent—one and the same. In the Brith-ish or Covenant Man Family of Free Nations we see the beginning of this process marvellously at work. We are presented with the spectacle of a Kingdom-Empire of Equal and Autonomous Nations—a League which any and every nation upon earth may join—held together by no legal or forcible dominion, but by a spiritual unity, manifest in a common love for and loyalty to the Crown and Throne of David.

It is now time to consider the significance of the third of the great events which recently focused public attention upon the question of War and its significance in the philosophy of history, namely, the Pageant of our Nation's History as portrayed in panorama at the ALDERSHOT TATTOO.

Thus the Morning Post reports the matter :—

" The Cross, symbol of man's sacrifice to his highest ideal[1] shone with dazzling radiance from the darkness of the Rushmoor arena while the great achievements of British Manhood which make up the ALDERSHOT COMMAND TATTOO were unfolded in its light ![1]

" There were thunderous cheers to greet the earlier phases of the TATTOO—the marching and counter-marching of massed bands of cavalry and foot ; the pageants of brave uniforms and glittering braid . . . But it was the told in deeds of bravery by men of the first Expeditionary Force to leave these shores, and of the last, which most deeply moved the hearts of the crowd who watched.

" The rallying of King Richard's army beneath the walls of a city of the coast line, came first. A valiant silvery host of barons in full armour and their men-at-arms in stout chain mail, they came silently as spectres from the darkness of the wooded hill on to a stretch of downland to form their ranks.

" Faint echoes of the ' Nunc Dimittis ' chanted by the clergy and the choir swelled up and drifted on the wind as a mitred bishop came through the city gate with monks and acolytes around him to give his blessing and God-speed.

" It was such a gathering of valiants as have never been seen since the age of chivalry, but it changed to one of knightly humility as the king with his lords and subjects stood for a moment with bowed head.

" One fierce encounter between the Christian armies and the Saracen forces of Mohammed, a charge of mounted knights, with gleaming swords and lances, a clanging of armoured trappings and a clash of arms before the burning and the days of the Crusade had passed.

" The field of battle gave place to Badajos and the arms of earlier times to ordnance and the rifle.

" . . . the din of battle passed, and the Iron Duke went apart in the fading light to scan the field of victory and with bowed head to count the cost.

" Once more the night was pierced with light to show the men in khaki marching to the old familiar war-time songs through the MENIN GATE, to death. Infantry, transport, artillery, ambulances—all went through the GATE to play their part in the BATTLE beyond, and the echoes of the distant cannonade sufficed to tell what each man suffered for the justice of the cause.

" As the field of poppies sprang to life, the soldier's cross hung luminous in its midst, resting on a grave of one of those whose inspiration it had been in life.

" The solemn words, ' Lest We Forget,' written in fiery characters across the field, and the soft music of a distant band, were not needed to rouse the silent crowds of watchers to thanksgiving for the

which has persisted through the Ages. In a mighty fervent voice they rose to sing the hymn of praise, ' Oh God, Our Help in Ages Past.'

" When the last note had died away, this sermon on sacrifice ended in silence—a mute tribute to the men who had made it.

" The fiery cross of sacrifice which had blazed from the skies[3] above the Crusaders appeared once more in the final scene over the massed troops five thousand strong.

" In the foreground of the arena the lay picked out by the lights of a myriad torches, and from the distance streamed ever wider the diverging rays of the rising sun."

The standard of the EMPIRE—the ensign of the KINGDOM—the flag of the triune CROSS, lit by the rays of a myriad torches and the gleaming rays of the rising sun ! A fitting climax to a great and marvellous demonstration. Beginning with the CROSS of CHRIST exalted at the CRUSADE in ages past, we are swept on through a vision of the present into the future where the CROSS of CHRIST is displayed on an ensign[5] before the eyes of all nations. And this ensign is the mark and symbol of a Kingdom-Empire upon which the sun—physical symbol of the Sun[6] of Righteousness, the King of the Kingdom-Empire of Heaven upon earth—never sets and never shall set. It is the flag of an Everlasting[7] Empire—

A RESURRECTION[8] KINGDOM

—a Kingdom whose manifestation, as a political organization, will mean for all nations nothing less than life from the dead. A Kingdom destined to bear to the nations of mankind a relationship, politically, similar to that borne by its King, personally, to every individual. Its rôle is that of Life-Giver, Regenerator, and Saviour of Civilization.

But let us look a little more closely into the significance of this great occasion as a whole. For the habit of emphasizing the close relationship between vital Christianity and the War efforts of the nation, is a post-war development. And it is none the less sound in instinct on that account.

Before the War, Christianity seemed officially confined to the sphere of religion. It seemed a monopoly of the Churches. It seemed divorced from the history of the people as a people, and concerned with one department only of the national life.

The War came. And all classes in the nation were welded, fused, united, in a common effort, aim and suffering.

To-day the Mark and Cross of CHRIST are deeply engraven on the heart of the Nation. So deeply and profoundly, that,

[1] Note the symbolic significance of the fact that this pageant of Britain's history was unfolded under the light of the Cross. The Cross is the symbol of the sacrifice of the Son of Man and of the sons of men, who, through the Son, are eventually to beat down Satan, the Author of War and Strife, under their feet.

[2] One million of the Seed of Isaac offered up their lives for the salvation of the Kingdom during the last great struggle.

[3] This incident rather strikingly provokes our mind to thought of the day, soon coming, when the sign of the Son of Man is to appear in heaven. (See Matt. xxiv, 30.) Ferrar Fenton rather strikingly renders this as follows :—" Then will appear the signal of the Son of Man in the sky."

in spite of ourselves, we bring the CROSS prominently to the fore in all great pageants[9] illustrating the life and struggles of the Brith-ish People.

This is a sign of dawning Kingdom-consciousness. CHRIST and CHRISTIANITY belong not only to the CHURCH but to the KINGDOM and the NATION. As a nation and kingdom we have fought under the CROSS. Our brethren died for the CROSS, and in protection of the life of the KINGDOM and PEOPLE of the CROSS. For BRITH-AIN, GREAT LAND of the COVENANT, is the nation which represents a nation and a people which, above every other nation or people, loves the CROSS and labours to bring the knowledge of that CROSS, with its redeeming power, to all the world.

We are told that the history of the Christian Era has been one of accumulative terror and warfare. We are told that this proves that the Churches have utterly failed in their mission of peace to all men of good will upon earth.

But to all who read the Scriptures it is clear that the

was to be the signal for intensified conflict, as it is written[11] :—"Every battle of the warrior is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood ; but this shall be with burning and fuel of fire. For[12] unto us a CHILD is born, unto us a SON is given : and the government shall be upon His shoulder . . . ."

Is it strange that the birth of the PRINCE of PEACE[13] should mean an increase in terror from blood to fire, from sword to high explosive, upon the field of battle? Is it strange that the Christian Era should have been marked by the most sanguineous struggles of historic time?

Is it strange that the City of Jerusalem, CITY of PEACE, should have been the scene of the world's most terrible sieges? Or that PALESTINE should have been chosen to be the site of the world's last and greatest military struggle yet to come?

No! None of these things are strange when we read and discern the significance of War in the philosophy of history, aright.

For the advent of the KING of PEACE and of His KINGDOM-EMPIRE in the earth spells the end of the dominion of all evil. The doom of War, of Death and of Hell, and of the Author of all Confusion, is sealed in the birth and sacrifice of CHRIST, and the birth and development of His KINGDOM in the earth. As it is written[14] :—"Of the increase of His GOVERNMENT and PEACE there shall be no end, upon the Throne of David, and upon His Kingdom,[15] to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the LORD of HOSTS shall accomplish this."

As we read this declaration we read the death warrant of War and Chaos. No wonder that the forces of evil are straining might and main for a great destruction. They know that they must fain destroy or be destroyed,[16] and their time is short.

But CHRIST is not responsible for the enmity aroused in evil minds by His very presence. Christianity is not answerable for the oppositions to her doctrine. The Churches are not accountable for the antagonism their witness calls forth. The KINGDOM is not responsible for the fury and jealousy aroused in minds of other nations as they watch her progress.

The great Antagonist alone is finally responsible for all these things.

Until the coming of Him Who alone can break the bow[17] and sword and battle from the earth, BRITAIN must remain God's Battle-axe[18] and weapons of war. Israel must remain a Nation of Soldiers.

The call has already gone forth amongst the nations "PREPARE WAR[19]! Wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near ; let them come up : Beat your plowshares[20] into swords and your pruning hooks into spears ; let the weak say, I am strong."

Until this final phase is finished all disarmament schemes are premature and doomed to failure.

The continual spread of the new spirit[21] of the new covenant[22] can but prepare the world for the coming of Him in Whose hand there will be no sword nor instrument of war. As a result of His rebuke and judgment, it is written, "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Meanwhile we have the strengthening assurance of this message. Seeing, with the eyes of the Spirit, that the path of the Dispensation marked with His name would be bathed [9] The Great Military Tattoo at Wembley was described in these columns in an article entitled, "Soldiers of the King," dated March 20th, 1926. This pageant concluded with representatives of every branch of His Majesty's Forces, Navy, Army and Air Force, together with one hundred thousand civilian spectators representing every walk of national life, standing and singing "Onward Christian Soldiers." "Onward Christian Soldiers, marching as to War, with the Cross of Jesus going on before . . ." What did all this mean? It meant that the Kingdom and People of the Kingdom were blindly trying to fight their way to a co-ordinated rational conscious conception of the exact significance, of the Kingdom's dual rôle in the earth as God's executant of Divine justice and Maintainer of the Pax Britannica. A Nation of Soldiers was trying to discover a basis of reconciliation between faith in Christ, the inevitability of War, and the ideal of Peace.

[10] Revelation also clearly teaches that the birth of Christ is the signal for war in the earth against Christ's kingdom. Thus we read in Rev. xii, 13, that "When the Dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the Woman which brought forth the Man Child." The Woman, of course, is Israel, or the Kingdom. That is why in Isa. ix. 6, we say "Unto us a Child is born, Unto us . . . ." etc. This persecution of the Kingdom on earth develops into war. (See Rev. ix, 17.)

[11] Isa. ix, 5.

[12] Note the force of the word "For."

[13] Isa. ix, 6.

[14] See Isa. ix, 7.

[15] Note that the extension and establishment of world peace is a political influence. It is a fruit of good Government. It is the function of the Kingdom and Throne of David, not of the Church. The Pax Britannica of modern times marks the stage of progress that this development has now reached. This Kingdom influence will finally cover the whole earth.

[16] Cf. Rev. xi, 18, where God, in His administration of immutable law (for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap) is described as destroying the destroyers of the earth. Thus, incidentally, is the prayer of David answered —"Lord! scatter Thou the people that delight in War." (Ps. lxviii, 30.)

[18] Jer. li, 20.

[19] This call sent out among the Gentiles (the result of which may be partly discerned in Mr. Lloyd George's recent claim that Europe since the War has become an Armed Camp) is offset by God's call to His Brith-ish People recorded II Esdras xvi, 40 :—"O My People, hear My word, make you ready to the Battle . . . ." This is God's call to the Nation for preparation against the Battle of the Great Day of God Almighty which must surely result from modern Russia's feverish organization for war. See also II Esdras xv, 22 :—"My sword shall not cease over them that shed innocent blood upon the earth."

[20] Note the contrast of this to Isa. ii, 4, and Mic. iv, 3.

[21] Ez. xxxvi, 26.

[22] Jer. xxxi, 33.

in a crimson flood, JESUS CHRIST enquired of the FATHER and gave to His People the enigmatic counsel: "When ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, Be ye not troubled . . . For these are the birth-pangs."[23]

Yes! Intensification of conflict spells the birth-pangs of a New Age, an Age wherein dwelleth righteousness and lasting peace. Let us then rejoice in tribulation, and lifting up our heads, look up, for our redemption, the redemption of the whole creation, and the time for coming of our Living Redeemer Himself, draweth near.

"WHERE ARE THE DEAD?"

THE REV. ETHELBERT GOODCHILD, M.A., on SIR ARTHUR KEITH'S ARTICLE in the "DAILY NEWS."

St. Luke's Vicarage, Nutford Place, W.1.

DEAR MR. GARRISON,—Thank you for sending me Sir Arthur Keith's interesting article and for honouring me with a request for my comments upon it.

It seems to me an admirable presentation of the ultimate implication of Physiology to the end of the nineteenth century.

Since that epoch, however, such researches as those of W. J. Kilner have revealed the necessity for a wider hypothesis.

These researches have proved that THE INFLUENTIAL FACTOR IN PERSONALITY IS EXTRA-CORPOREAL.

Assuming that this extra-corporeal factor is the creation (i.e., the radiation) of the nervous system, it no more follows that the disintegration of the latter is the annihilation of the former than that the dissolution of a star is the abolition of the light of which—before dissolution—it was the fons et origo.

In contemplating Nova Aurigae we are witnessing a catastrophe contemporary with Crécy and therefore a gigantic illustration of the principle that disintegration is most certainly NOT annihilation; and our rapidly growing knowledge of Radio-activity carries us one important step further by illustrating the still more remarkable fact that in this department of the universe DISINTEGRATION IS THE ANTECEDENT OF RE-INTEGRATION.

The disintegration of Uranium and Morium issues in re-integrations constituting the series of elements with their isotopes down to Lead and—though the process has not yet been carried further in the inadequate laboratories of this planet—astronomical phenomena (e.g., those of Nova Pictoris and the Giant Dwarf series) suggest that where conditions are more favourable the process is uninterrupted and that the universe as a whole is a vast synthesis of re-integrations.

Now let us endeavour to take the step the type of mind which still clings to Dualism finds so exceedingly difficult.

Sir Arthur asks the question: "Is not the whole universe really alive?" The answer, I believe, must be in the affirmative. But the practical factor in the problem is, WHAT IS CONSCIOUSNESS?

To that question I venture to think the answer is, THE FUNCTIONING OF THE APPROPRIATE INTEGRATION.

The fascinating researches of Sir Jagadis Bose have proved that, however low the scale of life, it invariably retains the possibility of consciousness. If, therefore, the whole universe is really alive, the possibility of consciousness is inherent in every constituent of it.

But Life and Consciousness are one thing, the measure of Life and Consciousness quite another.

The tiny corner of the universe we have just begun to study reveals to us every gradation of Life and Consciousness from the infinitesimal in the humblest ovum to the infinite in a Shakespeare or Newton.

WHAT THEN IS HUMAN CONSCIOUSNESS? For our purpose it may be defined as THE SYNTHETIZED REACTION-CAPACITY OF THE RECEPTORS AS CO-ORDINATED BY THE NERVOUS SYSTEM.

The Meissner corpuscles, the organ of Corti, the motor points, the corpuscles of Pacini and Gorgli, the rods and cones, the inter-epithelial nerve and the chromaffin of the cell nucleus respectively react to vibrations of from less than 1,600 per second to 60 billion billion per second. In other words, the specific characteristic of human consciousness is the immense range of radiation to which it reacts or the PERFECTION OF ITS INTEGRATION.

The ultimate problem therefore is this: Is the extra-corporeal element of Personality (which certainly survives in some form the dissolution of the nervous system which originally created it) DESTINED TO PERFECT RE-INTEGRATION?

Those of us who are interested in Television realize that RE-INTEGRATION IS THE ESSENCE OF THE PROBLEM WHICH IS GRADUALLY BEING SOLVED. And we cannot but ask ourselves the question: If imperfect physicists working under imperfect conditions can effect re-integration, however imperfect, CANNOT—WILL NOT—THE PERFECT PHYSICIST, WORKING UNDER PERFECT CONDITIONS, ULTIMATELY EFFECT PERFECT RE-INTEGRATION?

May I add one word on Sir Arthur's concluding paragraph?

It can only mean that the heroism of the Spartans at Thermopylæ and of our own Contemptibles across the Channel was the sacrifice of reality for a shadow.

Is that true, or was Browning right when he wrote:

"That low man seeks a little thing to do
Sees it and does it;
That high man with a great thing to pursue
Dies ere he knows it.
That low man goes on adding one to one,
His hundred's soon hit;
This high man, aiming at a million,
Misses a unit.
That has the world here—should he need the next?
Let the WORLD mind him!
This throws himself on God and—unperplexed—
Seeking shall find HIM."

Sincerely yours,

ETHELBERT GOODCHILD.

NEWS AND NOTES.

THE Secretary-General and Mrs. Garrison are having a very active and enjoyable holiday in Belgium. They are much missed at Headquarters. Their return is expected about July 24th.

The usual meeting will be held at 3 p.m. at Headquarters on Wednesday, 25th July. On Thursday afternoon, July 26th, at 2.45, Dr. Lincoln McConnell, of Florida, will give an address. There will not be an evening meeting on this day.

* * *

The fourth Summer Convention at Glastonbury will be held in the Assembly Rooms during the week commencing Monday, August 6th, opening at 8 o'clock in the evening and closing on Friday evening. Lectures will be given each day at 11 a.m. and 8 p.m. Picnics and rambles have been arranged for the afternoons.

* * *

The Committee of the Hastings and St. Leonard's Branch have sent out invitations to members and friends to attend a Garden Meeting at "Meopham Bank," Hollington, on July 25th, at 3 p.m. to 6 p.m., by kind permission of Dr. and Mrs. Maxwell.

About 100 B.-I.'s connected with the centres at Coventry, Rugby and Dunchurch met on Saturday, July 7th, for a Garden Meeting in the grounds of the residence of Mrs. H. E. Powell, Dunchurch. A delightful hour was spent about the lovely gardens, followed by tea on the lawn, after which hymns were sung, recitations rendered, and short "testimonies" to what British-Israel means to their lives, given by a number of those present.

The Rev. T. H. Whitehouse also gave some account of the position and progress of the work of the B.-I.-W.F., and its plans and hopes for the future.

Votes of thanks to Mrs. Powell and all the generous donors of provisions, and to the workers, were accorded. Profits are in aid of the work in the Midland Area.

On Thursday, July 12th, the Oxford Branch had a Garden Meeting at the residence of the Misses Allen. A good number of friends had tea on the lawn, after which, under the chairmanship of Major-General Sir Arthur Phayre, the Rev. T. H. Whitehouse gave a lecture on "Imperishable Britain, the Israel of the Bible." Gratitude was expressed to the organizers of the gathering, the workers, and the Misses Allen for their hospitality.

* * *

Mr. Robert J. Walker gave an address on "The Colonial Empire" to the Leicester Branch on July 3rd. He showed the tremendous help obtained and blessings enjoyed under British administration. Mr. A. E. Biggs presided.

A very successful Garden Party was held in Mrs. Pentland's garden in Bedford on July 11th, about 100 members and their guests attending. The Vice-President, the Rev. A. S. Cook, opened the meeting with prayer, and the President, Capt. James, briefly spoke on the growth of the Branch. The Rev. T. H. Whitehouse gave an address, emphazising that B.-I. teaching is not a new religion, but throws wonderful new light on the Scriptures.

The Harrogate Branch is making excellent progress, as shown by the enterprise and earnestness of the meetings. On June 19th the Rev. Guy Waddington addressed the meeting, and Dr. Rutherford presided.

The Sheffield Branch met their Thurcroft friends on the 7th inst. at Roche Abbey Grounds, Rotherham, where, after tea and games, a meeting was held on the hillside, the speakers being Mr. Wm. Whitton and Mr. Harkcom, followed by a general discussion.

Victoria Park open-air meetings on Sunday, July 8th, were a great success, both from numbers attending and the interest aroused. There was some heckling, but this was ably and convincingly met by the speakers. Many Jews closely listened to the speakers and bombarded them with questions, some coming up to shake hands after the meeting. Those in charge were greatly cheered, feeling that God had been present throughout the proceedings.

* * *

The open-air speakers wish to express their grateful thanks to the friends who have so kindly provided tea for them in the various districts visited during June and July.

* * *

Mr. J. A. Yoxall gave a most interesting address, greatly appreciated by a good audience, at Bingley on July 10th. He dealt with prophecies relating to the First Coming of Our Lord, His life on earth, death, resurrection, and His Second Coming. The chair was taken by Mr. B. Broadbent

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The coloured Chart depicts in clear, simple form, historically and by aid of maps, the amazing story of the Anglo-Saxon Race.

It traces the genealogies, by direct succession, of Their Majesties King George V., Queen Mary, and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, back through the Royal House of David to Adam. It shows how the British Coat of Arms is built up from ancient emblems given to our race some 4,000 years ago. The Chart illustrates the contemporary history of the Houses of Judah and Israel. Starting with the genealogy from Adam to Jacob's twelve sons, it shows the beginning of the chosen Race from Hebrew stock; includes the Covenant Promises to Abraham (fulfilled in the Anglo-Saxons, and in no other race); gives the Promises to Judah of the Sceptre; to Ephraim of the Birthright; and to David of the perpetual Throne. Continuing, it carries on the contemporary history of the two Houses of Judah and Israel till each went into captivity—the story of the House of Israel from the reign of David, 1056 B.C. to their deportation to Assyria in 721 B.C., then a consecutive narrative of their migrations (with map) down to their final arrival in the British Isles in 1066 A.D. The contemporary history of the House of Judah, till they also were carried captive, in two sections. Section I. follows the Jewish Race down to A.D. 70; includes our Lord's Life and Death; the final siege of Jerusalem, and the scattering of the Jews all over the world. Section II. traces Princess Tamar Tephi and the prophet Jeremiah into Ireland—her marriage, and the continuation of the Royal Line of David; tells the story of the Coronation Stone and how it was finally deposited in Westminster Abbey.

The history of the Anglo-Saxons in America—the Tribe of Manasseh—is also included in the Chart. The Book (numbered to correspond with the chart) amplifies the history and shows the identity of ten-tribed Israel with the British Empire and the U.S.A.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

[It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—III.

MOSES THE GREATEST OF THE PROPHETS, NEXT TO OUR LORD (continued).

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

It seems rather paradoxical to begin the consideration of the predictive element of Moses at a point centuries before Moses was born, yet this is the starting-point of our consideration of the prophetic element of the Mosaic literature.

In making this presentation we must venture to ask the reader to take his Bible in hand and read the passages indicated, as they are too voluminous to be included in this article.

The first one we deal with gives us a record of a prophetic act on the part of Abram—later promoted to be called Abraham—which prophetic act was the beginning of a specific movement which, according to the original promise, has swept on through the ages with unbroken progress and ever-increasing volume and power to the present day, and which is still prophetic of yet greater progress to follow, and that endlessly on into the eternities.

The act is recorded in the 12th chapter of Genesis in these words: "Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee: And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed. So Abram departed, as the Lord had spoken unto him."

This great prophetic act is the starting-point of all the movement of Biblical history. Four centuries later Moses found himself involved in that same movement when he went down to Egypt to lead God's covenanted people out from thence, and to organize them into the Kingdom of God on earth.

Looking down the ages from that standpoint, the vision of Moses was carried onward to the end of the period during which Israel should dwell in Palestine; on still, during all the continuance and to the end of the period of 2,520 years which he specifically named under the figure of seven times, during which Israel should suffer the indicated punishment as set out by Moses specifically in the 26th chapter of Leviticus; on to the period of Israel's restoration and to the day of Our Lord.

In all this activity the prophetic element is never wanting in act and deed, as well as in word and writing, and the effect of this movement has been the controlling factor in world history from the time Moses led the people out of Egypt.

The study of prophecy in action is equal in importance to the study of prophecy in the written Word.

The next passage to which we direct attention, while urging the reader to read carefully the intervening passages of these wonderful chapters, is the 15th chapter of Genesis, in which is set forth the Divine Prophetic Covenant specifically made with Abraham.

The covenant was made and ratified by the most solemn form of legal procedure. Victims were provided and slain, their bodies divided, and the tokens of the covenant made to pass between, indicating that the covenant is irrevocable even unto, or by, death.

Based upon this covenant, made with our father Abraham, has been built the peculiar people (the Abrahamic race descended through Isaac); the royal priesthood; the holy nation. That is to say, on this covenant has been built the race, the church, the nation, and the organized service through which the Lord has carried, and shall still carry, blessings to all the families of the earth.

The prophetic element in the covenant, and in its effect upon every generation of Abrahamic seed, has been present at every point of history, is present still, and shall be to the end of time.

The next passage to which we direct attention, which includes the setting-up of the prophetic family circle, is the 17th chapter of Genesis. As in the 19th and 20th chapters of Exodus the three elements of the Kingdom of God on earth are shown as brought together, namely, the nation (Israel); Jehovah (Israel's God and King); and the Decalogue (the statement of the underlying principles of Israel's law); so in this passage are brought together the three elements which form the family circle from which has sprung all the family of God on earth, and such as from it have ascended to Heaven.

The first of these is El Shaddai, the God-Father of the race born in Isaac.

The second element in the institution of the household of God is Abram for the purposes of the headship of the Divinely-established family, re-named Abraham; to whom should be born a son; of whom should descend a seed which, in its succeeding generations, should be the family of God on earth.

The third element in the constitution of this household is Sarai—re-named Sarah—the queen-mother of Isaac and of the Saxon race.

The chapter before us, which should be read with the utmost care, is the charter of the Divinely-established House of Israel.

Incidentally there is shown the beginning, the establishment and the blessing of the Ishmael seed, the founder of the Arab race, in the following words:—"And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation."

It is interesting and important thus to note that the institution of the Arabian House, and the promise that it should become a great nation, is included as a parenthesis in the great charter of the House of the sons of Isaac and of Israel.

The next great passage to which we call attention is included in the 22nd chapter of Genesis. It sets forth in the most graphic terms the dedication of the race, born in Isaac, to the service of the Kingdom for the blessing and enrichment of all the families of the earth.

The story is told in a few short graphic sentences, which, while holding one's attention to the great facts of the narrative, irresistibly carries one forward to the narrative of the greater transaction of the same order and in connection with the same great movement when the Greater Father offered the Greater Son, born of the same race, that through Him Israel might be redeemed and all the world might find a Saviour.

Let us read the chapter carefully, catching the significance of the record that in Isaac, the father of the Saxon race, was offered upon the altar, and dedicated even to the death, every generation and every individual of the Saxon descent that should be born from him who was thus offered.

As a result of that great offering the following oath was given to Abraham, "That by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast, and which entereth into that which is within the veil . . . . ."

"And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, And said, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice."

The next passage and prophetic fact to which we shall take space to call attention is the 32nd chapter of Genesis, and the event recorded is the

CONVERSION AND REGENERATION OF JACOB.

Returning from twenty-one years of servitude with his father-in-law, Laban—the sole result of his questionable bargaining with Esau for the birthright in the Isaac family, and his dissimulation for the purpose of receiving the official Patriarchal blessing—Jacob now awoke to the realization of the fact that the time of accounting had arrived. While he had been away in Syria, amassing wealth with Laban, Esau had been at home, acting head of the Isaac family, and had clothed himself with the actuality of the power of Isaac. Jacob had the de jure right to birthright, through his bargaining with Esau; Esau had the de facto right because he had remained at his father's side through all these years. Now the chief de jure and the chief de facto were to meet face to face, and it would appear that they were to settle their claims by force of arms. Thus it appeared from the fact that Esau approached with four hundred men.

Brought face to face with the consequences of his act, Jacob cried to the God of his fathers Abraham and Isaac, Who had revealed Himself to Jacob at Luz, where Jacob anointed the pillar.

The prayer is couched in the following words:—

"And Jacob said, O God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac, the Lord which saidst unto me, Return unto thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee:

I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth, which thou hast shewed unto thy servant; for with my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I am become two bands.

Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother.

from the hand of Esau: for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and the mother with the children.

And thou saidst, I will surely do thee good, and make thy seed as the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered for multitude." (Gen. xxxii, 9-12.)

Jacob waited for the answer to his prayer, as we see in verse 13: "And he lodged there that same night."

The answer to his prayer came as the following statement makes clear:—

"And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day.

And when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh; and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wrestled with him.

And he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh. And he said, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.

And he said unto him, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob.

And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed.

And Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name. And he said, Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? And he blessed him there.

And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." (Gen. xxxii, 24-30.)

Now what was all the wrestling about. Let the context show. Jacob went forward as soon as he received the blessing he sought. Jacob met his brother with his four hundred men, and there was no war between them. Now why should this be the case? The answer is evident. It was because Jacob made restitution to Esau of the headship of the House of Isaac. He sent forward a succession of three bands of presents which were not unworthy of the chief of a great family. It was worthy of the acceptance of Esau inasmuch as he had not entered in possession of the wealth of his father Isaac.

But Esau passed the presents by and pressed forward to the presence of his brother Jacob. There he put the categorical question:

"What meanest thou ——" "What MEANEST thou by all this drove which I have met?"

"These be to find grace in the eyes of my lord."

Thus was the lordship restored.

This evidently constituted the conflict over which the Lord wrestled all night with Jacob. It was only when he ceased to wrestle and to resist that the Lord blessed him and promoted him to be Israel.

It will be noted that never thereafter did Jacob either claim or exercise lordship over Esau.

When Isaac died and the brothers buried him, Esau gathered all together and took his departure to Mount Seir, and there established his own House, leaving Jacob to the inheritance of the land. Not until A.D. 1845 did Jacob (English St. James) begin to take permanent authority over Esau. At that time Britain compelled Turkey to take his foot from off the neck of subject Armenia and from other Christians in Esau—Turkey's land. From that day Israel-Britain has been more and more bringing the Edomite Turk under the power of his hand.

Once again we take up the prophetic story, at a point of marvellous significance, when God sent Jacob back to Bethel where he had anointed the pillar, there to set up the enduring family altar and to once more anoint the pillar. There the household of Jacob was made to partake of the glory of the name Israel; and there the pillar was again set up and anointed, and which has never since that day been separated from Israel, as we have the best of reason for believing. But the very same seed and the very same pillar are to-day in this land—the one as the inhabitants of the land and the other as the Stone of Destiny in the Coronation Chair, while the prophetic promise "a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee" is manifest in our race before the eyes of men and angels.

The next great act in the progress of the mighty drama of history to which we shall call attention is recorded at length in the 41st chapter of Genesis. Here we have the dream of Pharaoh regarding the coming time of famine. This leads to the discovery and to the advancement of Joseph to be the chief ruler of Egypt under Pharaoh. Thus was the representative of Israel, the heir to the hegemony of Israel, advanced to power in Egypt, especially in the matter of food supply, in preparation for the coming of Israel into Egypt. Thus the heir to the headship of Israel was made by Divine providence the Minister in supreme authority in Egypt.

In the same chapter is shown the birth—in the court of Egypt—in the home of the Prime Minister of Egypt—of the two sons of Joseph, one of whom should be the hegemon of Israel. The birth and education of these sons of the heir of Israel were to have a great and unending influence on the destiny of Israel.

In the 46th chapter of Genesis we have a most important movement in the great march of events; namely, the going of Israel into Egypt, a family forty strong. Thus was inaugurated a developing experience for Israel which should last for centuries, during which Israel should be transformed from a nomadic people into an organized federation of tribes which should be in due time organized into the Kingdom-nation of God. All the time that the tribes were being welded together and accustomed to act in unison, they were under the control and discipline of the superior Egyptian administration, thus preventing any possible outbreak of hostility among the tribes through emulation, jealousy, or any other cause. That such training was necessary is shown by their later struggles and inter-tribal wars.

Now we come to a most interesting and important prophetic event. That is to say, an event which was destined and intended to affect the whole of the history of succeeding ages. This event is the promotion and blessing of the two sons of Joseph.

These boys, Ephraim and Manasseh, were, as we have seen, born in Egypt, and were educated at the court of Egypt. They were trained in the statecraft of Egypt, and in its learning. They were two most well-born and cultured young men. Now, their father Joseph was the heir of Jacob, and as such was entitled to a double portion of the estate of Jacob, which estate consisted of the whole House of Israel.

But against Joseph's entering upon the enjoyment of that inheritance in his own person there were many and insuperable difficulties. As to Israel, Joseph had been separated from the household from youth, and had long been mourned as dead. His inheritance had been in effect divided among the remaining sons. It would be difficult to reinstate him in a double portion. As to Egypt, Joseph was not free to resign his position and authority, and it was in the interests of Israel that he should not do so. Therefore on all counts it was wise to pass over Joseph.

Therefore Jacob adopted his two sons.

Up to the present the House of Israel consisted of one family of whom the head was Jacob; no tribes had as yet been formed. Therefore the way was open for Jacob to adopt the sons of Joseph into his own family and to call them by his own name—Israel. By this action Jacob made the two sons of Joseph equal in status to their uncles, the sons of Jacob.

By this arrangement each of the sons of Joseph received an equal portion with their uncles, the sons of Jacob; and thus, apparently, the difficulty of a double portion for Joseph was overcome, although in the united share of the two boys the House of Joseph did in fact receive its double portion.

By inheriting the status of their father Joseph and receiving the name Israel, and by the direct appointment of Jacob, Ephraim, the younger son of Joseph, became the hegemon of the tribes of Israel and the President at its Council Board.

By this arrangement the liaison between Israel and the Government of Egypt was made perfect.

Official contact would take place between the two peoples by the coming together of Joseph, the Prime Minister of Egypt, and Ephraim, the hegemon of Israel.

Thus was avoided the danger of misunderstanding and quarrels through the coming together of the desert-bred tribesmen, the sons of Jacob, and the polished courtiers of Egypt. Under this arrangement Egyptian-bred Israelites, educated and cultured in Egyptian society, met the courtiers of Egypt and the liaison was complete.

We now come to chapter xlix, which we urge the reader to take in hand before him.

Up to this moment Israel had been one family whose head was Jacob. Now came the time, at the end of Jacob's life, when the family must be divided into tribes, and the Patriarch of each tribe must assume his responsibility. What a prophetic action this was! That is to say, an action destined and intended to affect the history of Israel and the world to the end of the ages.

Understanding the significance of this great function, the vision of the prophet Jacob swept forward as with astonishment he himself declared "to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills." It will be noted that this sentence embraces the full sweep of earth's geography and of the chronology of history.

Thus the tribes of Israel were constituted and blessed with a prophetic blessing, the force of which has progressed down through the ages and which is by no means expended at the present day.

Thus Moses recounts the prophetic acts of Israel which preceded his day and activity, and he next proceeds to show how Israel and he in their generation took up the standard of the onward march of Israel history and carried it forward to the end of the lifetime of Moses, the man of God.

To this we shall next turn our attention.

MAN AND EARTH: A CO-ORDINATED CREATION AND INTERDEPENDENT.—PART II.

By Ben Israel.

If facts so far presented warrant an induction, a light is thrown upon the relation of man to his material surroundings and their correlation to himself; for if the defection of Lucifer involved both himself and his kingdom in catastrophic ruin, how much greater change may be in waiting on account of sinful, disobedient men, as a testimony in highest heaven against them, and for earth, man's habitat and theatre of exploitations which we dignify by the name of progress and civilization! How much greater change, we ask, may be in waiting when they shall have at last not only rejected the crucified and risen Saviour, but also the triumphant, Millennial King, and set up their own Satan-inspired council against Him!

It becomes less difficult from this angle to discern the cause of good and evil. Lucifer, no longer to be known by that illustrious name, Glorious one, Light-bearer, but for ever after stigmatized by the appellations, Serpent, Abaddon, Apollyon, the Dragon, expelled into the earth, his preliminary judgment, lurks amid the tempests of chaos and watches Elohim during the marvellous reconstruction. With hatred he views the work. Enviously, he discovers his wondrous rival, man, walking up and down in the new Eden in the light and favour of God, whom we may conceive at this juncture to be regarded by him with contempt. Subtly he steals in, and by an artful and horrible revenge, mutilates the crowning masterpiece, the human soul, at which Death immediately takes possession of the body tabernacling that soul, and a curse settles upon the recently organized world over which he has but lately been given dominion. Here we note the quality and scope of the curse. The earth, Adam's habitat, experienced a sudden change for ill, commensurate and analogous with Adam's changed physical and spiritual nature. Here the conflict begins between good and evil, with all the consequent woes to mankind.

Notwithstanding that man had disobeyed and rebelled, Jehovah rendered first aid and ordered for him the line of defence, promising deliverance and restoration by faith in the future sacrificial offering of the "Seed of the Woman." For 1,650 years the conflict raged, and so resourceful was the Serpent in his campaign of deception that he nearly subverted the Jehovistic-human government in the earth. Angels left their first estate, became incarnate, and took them wives of the daughters of men. Vide Gen. vi, 1-2. Since the lost Book of Enoch has been restored to current literature, we have the record of the tradition of Enoch, the Scribe, in explanation of antediluvian angelology. We are definitely informed with respect to the identity of the sons of God, mentioned in Gen. vi, and that of the giants. There were 200 of the angels, and Senjaza was their leader. He had seventeen associated chiefs.

Digitized by Google

Each of the 200 took a wife of the daughters of men, and their offspring were the nephilim, giants, of Scripture. So huge were they that men could not compete nor contend with them; and they devoured the food of the land to such extent that the population was impoverished and famine oppressed. They subsequently fell to fighting among themselves and destroyed one another off the earth. Azazel, one of these angels, first taught men the art of making weapons of war, and the use of the metals. Herein is an explanation of the source of the knowledge of Tubal-cain, who was an instructor of artificers; also why there appears to have been no stone age in the early, Adamic, civilization. In the Book of Jubilees it is stated that great numbers repented at the preaching of Enoch, and that these all died before the flood. With the passing of the prophecy of Enoch together with his translation, evil of every sort gained the ascendancy, until, at last, Noah and his family were the only righteous remaining in the line of Adam. God foretold the flood, commanding Noah to build an Ark. Enoch had previously prophesied the same event. The 120 years' period, while Noah was a preacher of righteousness, seems to have been the culminating condemnation of the then universal, moral disorder. The flood came as foretold, Noah and his companions were saved, the rest of Adam's race perished together with the coetaneous land life; and the cosmos suffered a catastrophic change.

As to how much disturbance there may have been in the oceans at that time we have no data. Scripture states that the rain fell forty days and forty nights, indicating that a vast portion of it came from the sky. The Chinese record absolutely supports the Scriptural modus operandi, in that it describes the flood waters as coming from the West. It is silent about any movement of the Pacific Ocean.

The Sardanapalus tablet, recently translated, agrees with the Biblical account as far as the origin of the waters is concerned. That record affirms that the waters fell from the sky, and makes no mention of the ocean at all. Enoch had prophesied that the deluge would be attributable to both causes, i.e., the waters both above and below. If we study the Divine narration, we have clear and specific data in Gen. i, 6-10, and in Gen. vii, 11-12. "And all the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened."

An analytical survey of this quotation with a comparison of the tablet of Sardanapalus, proves clearly the responsibility of waters in the regions above the earth. In Gen. i, 10, the waters under the firmament Elohim called "seas" after the gathering together; but the tehom, deep, is mentioned prior to that event. It is the embodiment of the chaotic aspect upon which darkness rested. Its face would be the outer periphery of turbulent matter, aqueous, gaseous and otherwise. Its entity before the separation of the waters precludes its association with the ocean as we know it to-day. At the separation of the waters, part were given place in the region above the firmament, and constituted a striking feature of the cosmos once existing, but long since passed away. The author of the Book of Jubilees states that one-half of the waters were disposed of in this manner. If this testimony can be credited, a larger area of habitable land obtained in the antediluvian world than now. The chain of seas extending from the Straits of Gibraltar eastward to the Caspian and Aral must have been largely the result of the Noachian Deluge. The ocean of waters above the firmament should have revolved in concentric rings about the earth, as has been shown by Prof. I. N. Vail, the author of this hypothesis. The rings should have consisted of countless millions of globules, each globule of water rotating on its own axis, and to meet the requirements in the case the physical law of the rings would be that they rotate in the same direction and synchronously with the earth. A break in the ring, or rings, would bring the descending waters from the zenith continuously to one point on the land surface. That this was the actual mode of procedure a careful examination of the text of Gen. vii, 11-12 unequivocally discloses. "And all the fountains of the great deep (tehom rabbah) were broken up, and the windows of heaven (erubboth hashaymim) were opened." To search for "fountains" of the ocean would be a vain pursuit. There are no such things, but they were abundant and immanent in the firmament overhead. The erubboth hashaymim, rendered flood-gates of the heavens in the margin of our English Bibles, betray both the sinister and overwhelming horror of the situation. Erubboth, windows, come from the verb arabh, to lay an ambuscade. They had been a latent possibility since the day that Cain slew his brother, but had remained unsuspected by his devoted posterity.

It is in the outer periphery of the cosmos as then existing that we postulate the tehom rabbah, together with the fountains thereof. Since the beginning, the rings of water had served as a great, overspreading canopy, moderating the equatorial heat, and, if they revolved at an oblique angle with the terrestrial equator, ameliorated the cold of the Northern hemisphere as well. Since the sun's direct rays could only reach the underlying portions of the earth at intervals, a rainbow was of rare occurrence, if one were ever seen at all. Hence, the sign of the "bow in the cloud" was proof to Noah that the earth was exempt from any future destruction by a flood.

When the Ark was ready, and the elect passengers safely aboard, the storm, long predicted, began. We say storm, because it appears that the Deluge commenced in the ordinary way. The account in the Sardanapalus tablet relates that a black cloud came up from the horizon at the first flush of dawn. The storm filled the whole sky with darkness, and reached unto heaven! Turning to the Biblical record, we learn that in the self-same day that Noah entered into the Ark, after God had shut him in, the rain began. No man was permitted to view the miracle of God behind the cloud, above the natural tempest. At this juncture the finger of God touched a ring at a point over a region we call the "Near East." This was the breaking up of all the fountains of the great deep, and the opening of the windows of heaven. A series of gigantic water-spouts began to descend upon the soft cushion of the atmosphere, such as never were, never would be again. They spread through the air in vast, continuous, overwhelming sheets, so fast that they accumulated and prevailed in spite of gravitation which was overloaded, until the tops of the mountains were covered. The Ark, gently buoyed up, floated upon the face of the waters. The Divine purpose accomplished; at the end of 150 days, the Ark settled across a gorge in the Ararat range, and rested upon two peaks. We see nothing in the Genesis account to suggest translation waves of the ocean as a cause of the Noachian Deluge. Such movement of oceanic waters would have uprooted, thrown down, and carried away every bush, shrub and tree in the affected area. Submersion in salt water for 150 days would have rendered the land unproductive for a length of time and operated against Noah's beginning to be a husbandman, who had, just previously, received the green olive branch of peace from the beak of the dove. Antediluvian remains altogether discourage the translation wave theory. No trace of Sumerian culture could have survived the ordeal. However, we have the Sumerian language so well preserved under the ancient tels that it is now brought forth and reconstructed and is on the shelf beside Hebrew, Phœnician, Babylonian and Egyptian literatures.

The Noachian Deluge owes its origin entirely to cosmic conditions formerly existing thousands of miles above the atmosphere of the earth.

No wind is mentioned in the sacred narration, and the Ark did not drift very far from the place of launching. The enormous, sidewise thrusts and movements of the oceans in convulsion, accompanied by abysmal subsidences and upheavals, denudation and erosion, are evidently absent from this category, and must be referred back to the universal chaos of elements mentioned in Gen. i, 2. Here, on account of the Bible statement "whole earth" being involved in the flood, it is pointed out that the Hebrew erets is as often translated land as earth. Destruction by the flood prevailed as far as the Adamic race had spread. A deluge might have occurred in the Western hemisphere at the same time and for the same cause. This is digression leading into a discussion apart from the subject. Leaving the matter as presented, attention is invited to the aspect of Nature at the end of the forty days' rain. A phenomenal change of the cosmos had taken place; for the dark, rotating belts of water overhead had disappeared, and the metamorphosis of the planet which began at the former overthrow was again enhanced by the further intensifying of heat and cold, the narrowing of the thermal zones, and the establishing of the four seasons as they have been experienced since the beginning of postdiluvian time.

The corollary drawn from the foregoing is this: Rebellion against God, be it by Satan or man, has, in the retribution, been reflected in the domain and sphere of each by planetary, cosmic change. This leads us to inquire if similar phenomena will re-occur? Will an astronomical cataclysm accompany man's future?

SOME COMMENTS CONCERNING DAN. III.

"The Danaoi were expert well-diggers."

By PROFESSOR EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., &c.

WHEN the Palestinian New Jerusalem is built and the tribal possessions are occupied, as shown in a previous letter, then representatives of the twelve tribes will be in official charge of the twelve gates.

These gates are in groups of three, viz., three on the north, three on the east, three on the south, and three on the west. The three eastern gates will be occupied by Joseph, Benjamin and Dan.

Ezek. xlviii, 32: "And on the east side . . . three gates, one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, and one gate of Dan."

From this and the previous territorial quotation concerning Dan's northern land holding, we are safe in concluding that Dan will be in Palestine, and represented in Jerusalem officially.

Matt. xix, 28: "And Jesus said unto them: Verily, verily I say unto you,—That ye who have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

Very important! This shows clearly that since the twelve tribes are to be judged in the coming times, it follows that Dan will be represented.

In other words, Dan will be there, representatively, with his brethren.

Luke xxii, 29: "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

Luke herein tells us the same story which Matthew tells. This emphasizes the fact that Dan, one of the twelve tribes, will be there.

Rev. vii, 4: "And I heard the number of them who were sealed: And there were sealed 144,000 of all the tribes of the children of Israel." The sealing took in "all the tribes," therefore Dan was and is included.

If we look at Ezekiel, we find the names of Ephraim and Manasseh are dropped, and that of their father Joseph is used.

Now, if we read the names of "all the twelve tribes of the children," as found in Revelation, we see that the name of Joseph is inserted.

The name of Ephraim is dropped as it is dropped in Ezekiel.

But, strangely, the name of Dan is dropped in Revelation and the name of Manasseh is inserted.

This is evidently a mistake of translation. The word Manasseh is already taken up by the word or name Joseph, and should not be repeated.

Dan should be inserted and Manasseh removed. Then we get the natural and logical result of the whole story as set forth in the Old and New Testaments.

The whole Scripture context requires the addition of the name of Dan and the elimination of the name of Manasseh already covered by the tribal, parental name Joseph.

Therefore, we conclude that Dan will be there with his eleven brethren.

In addition to the above facts, which show that Dan will be in actual possession of the north of Palestine from the Mediterranean Sea eastward, along the southern borders of Syria, out to ancient Bashan, and also in possession of one of the east gates of the New Jerusalem, we have this further fact given us in Rev. xxi, 12: "And it had a wall great and high, having twelve gates, and in the gates twelve angels, or guardians, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel." Therefore Dan's name will be on one of these gates, and as Ezekiel tells us that Dan, Joseph and Benjamin hold the three eastern gates, Dan's name will be officially placed on the gate allotted on the east to his keeping.

An important phase of, and revelation connected with, these Scriptures is the fact that Ephraim and Manasseh will cease their tribal entities and be merged into the old-time tribe of Joseph.

This means that, in the near future, Ephraim and Manasseh will mutually embrace and annex one the other. Then will they take the name of Joseph their father.

Another remarkable event will be the restoration of Levi to his primal tribal position, when he takes the place of Manasseh who joins with Ephraim to restore Joseph.

CYCLE OF SEVENS.—I.

By W. J. FOSTER.

BEING convinced for several years that the cycle of seven plays a most important part in the purposes of Almighty God, it is my desire to place before the reader a series of sevens for consideration and use in our glorious Cause of "British-Israel Truth."

I must begin with the creation, for in all things there must be a beginning and a foundation. In the creation God established a fixed cycle which, in several respects, embodies other not less important cycles.

Seven days of creation: In the beginning, far beyond the ability of man to comprehend, God created the heaven and the earth. The earth was without form and void. No symmetry, nothing shapely, just a tremendous void.

God having made His plan for a creation of surpassing beauty, His Spirit moved upon and across the face of the waters; and then began the development of a wondrous creation, designed for the glory of the Creator and the pleasure of mankind it was His will to create.

The creation employed six successive days. On the first day was created Light. (Gen. i, 1-5.)

Second day, the Firmament or Air. (Gen. i, 6-8.)

Third day, the earth or dry land was separated from the sea, and Herbs and Trees were made. (Gen. i, 9-13.)

Fourth day, the Sun, Moon and Stars. (Gen. i, 14-19.)

Fifth day, Fishes and Birds. (Gen. i, 20-23.)

Sixth day, Animals and Man. (Gen. i, 24-31.)

Seventh day, God rested. (Gen. ii, 2.)

Seven Planets and the Moon changing every seventh day (Gen. i, 14) "and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years."

With this you can see an established cycle regularity, for fixation of time and period.

Seven days of 24 hours per day for man.

This follows in the same order as the week of Creation. "Six days shall man labour and do all that he has to do, and then rest on the Sabbath" (seventh day) from all work. The seventh day to be kept holy.

This order has continued through all times, and particularly with the British (Brith-ish) people, with whom God made His Covenant, and with whom same is statutory.

Seven days of a thousand years a day for the completion of Adamic Age and the millennium. In this there is believed to be three periods of 2,000 years each to the beginning of the millennium or the Sabbath of the cycle.

In the first 2,000 years we get the creation of man in the likeness of God, endowed with a most wonderful knowledge and understanding inspired by the Almighty God, and without doubt made for religion, for he was made only a little lower than the angels. But man fell from his lofty estate, through the temptation of the devil.

Immediately after man's sin we get the first prophecy mentioned in the Scriptures (Gen. iii, 14, 15), the promise of a Redeemer, given to fallen man: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head."

The fulfilment of this promise we read in Gal. iv, 4, thus:—"When the fulness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman," and in Rom. xvi, 20, "The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly."

The Lord Jesus Christ has triumphed over Satan, Death and Hell.

In this first period we also find man has become so corrupt that God repents that He made man, and, owing to the diabolical wickedness existing, decides upon the preservation of only one man and his family (Noah), through which the seed should come as promised.

This first period, or first watch, closes with the election of Abraham. The second period involves the establishment of an organization for the fulfilment of the Divine purpose, not only the final destruction of God's enemy Satan, but the restoration of His Kingdom on earth and the rehabilitation of man proven worthy by constant loyalty and service into that glorious communion with God from which man fell.

It is in this period that the cycle of seven is very much in evidence. To begin with, we read of a definitely determined period of service by Jacob to his uncle Laban (which period peculiarly coincides with the subject matter of this article) for his daughter Rachel.

Seven years Jacob served his uncle Laban for Rachel, which proved to be the God union through which the birthright Kingdom should be established.

If close consideration is given to this narrative of Jacob's service to Laban and the circumstances it involves, one will be convinced of the importance for which this cycle seven stands. The end of the first seven years of service was particularly distressing to Jacob, for, by deception on the part of Laban, he was compelled to endure the association of Leah, whom he did not love, and still serve another seven years in excess of the agreed period in order to be given Rachel, whom he loved, and whom without doubt was the intended God union.

Again, Joseph was not given of God to Rachel until the end of the second period of seven years had elapsed.

It seems very apparent to me that the children of the unholy union could not become heirs of the glorious promise of birthright.

Viewed from the human side, one would contend that Reuben was heir, but the promises made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob was of spiritual significance, and therefore must follow in that particular order. The brethren of Joseph must have realized something of the importance of this fact, for we early read in the life of Joseph that most of them were embittered against him—especially after he made known to them his dreams—and evidently purposed in their minds the removal of such possibilities as the birthright coming to Joseph.

Reading we find, as though in fairness to the whole family of Jacob affecting the temporal life, the birthright, which by virtue of the God-made union should have been Joseph's, was not entrusted to either, but descended upon the youngest son of Joseph. We read (Jeremiah xxxi, 9) the Lord said:—"For I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn."

Seven years of plenty and seven years of famine (Gen. xli), which brought Joseph into pre-eminence in Egypt, and reunion with his father and brethren. This was also the purpose of Almighty God for the preservation of His Covenant people.

Seven times ten Children of Israel go into Egypt.

Seven days of Passover. Four days prior to the infliction of the last plague the Israelites were instructed to prepare for a feast of the Lord by the killing of a lamb for each house, a lamb without spot or blemish, using hyssop to sprinkle the blood on the door posts. The lamb sacrificed at the Passover is to be considered typical of the sacrifice of Christ—the Lamb of God, without blemish, Who is our Passover.—1 Cor. v, 7.

Jesus was crucified in the same month, on the same day, and at the same hour, in which the Israelites were ordered to kill the Paschal lamb (3 o'clock p.m., 14th day of the month Abib or Nisan (March).

Seventh day, being the Sabbath of the Lord, no manna fell in the wilderness, but double quantity fell on the sixth day and peculiarly different from the manna falling on other days: it remained wholesome for two days.

Seven times ten Elders, together with Moses, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, were called up the Mount, when they beheld a resplendent vision of Almighty God.

Seventy Elders given absolute proof of the Great Jehovah.

Seventh day, or Sabbath Sacrifice, was looked upon as a memorial of the Israelites' deliverance from Egyptian bondage (Deut. v, 15).

Seven weeks: "Feast of Weeks": kept seven weeks or a week of weeks after the Passover. It was instituted so that the Israelites should acknowledge the goodness of the Lord and offer Him in His Temple the first-fruits of wheat harvest, and to commemorate the giving of the law from Mount Sinai on the 50th day following the Passover. Since Apostolic days the Christian Church have celebrated on the 50th day from the Crucifixion the resurrection of our Saviour and Redeemer, also the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Apostles in the shape of cloven tongues of fire, enabling them to speak several languages and to perform miracles.

Seven days' Feast of Unleavened Bread was held for thanksgiving to Almighty God for His gifts of Harvest.

We do the same, in a sense, but later in the year according to climatic season period, for we offer to our God the first-fruits of Harvest at our Harvest Thanksgiving Service.

Seventh year, Sabbatical year; and the year of Jubilee; commemorating the seventh year as the Sabbath for the land, in the same way as the Sabbath was a period of rest for man. God had made a covenant with Israel—providing they obeyed His law—to bless the sixth year of Harvest by 100 per cent. (just as He gave the manna on the sixth day plus 100 per cent. for the Sabbath in the wilderness) in order that the land may have its Sabbath. I believe that same conditions would operate at this time if only we were as faithful as we ought to be, for our land often fails to produce as it should, through probably neglecting to follow that course.

Seventh year was also the year of Release, there being a remission of personal slavery (Ex. xxi, 2); and all debts from one Israelite to another (Deut. xv, 1-3); and the public reading of the Law (Deut. xxxi, 11).

Seven weeks of years brought in the grand Sabbatical year held the first year after the seven weeks of years: the 50th year. It was the year of rest to the land; all debts were cancelled and all lands reverted to their original proprietors; when they had to proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof (Lev. xxv, 10). From investigation I have concluded that this law has very largely a close connection with industry. After very close research I fail to find any family remaining successful in large businesses past the third generation. I could mention no less than one dozen in the districts where I reside. My opinion is: should generation after generation remain successful in business and increase their possessions, the districts that would be acquired would simply and surely embrace conditions little better than slavery, for the people would have to be their servants or clear out altogether.

How wonderful are God's ways in His grand and glorious purpose for man. (Read Isai. xxi, 1, 2.)

Seven days of Purification. The ceremonies of Purification consisted in the individual being sprinkled with hyssop, dipped in water mixed with the ashes of a red heifer; it was bound to be of a reddish colour, without spot of any other colour, and never to have been put to the yoke; it was led without the city or camp and there slain. The Priest after would dip his finger in the blood and sprinkle it seven times towards the Sanctuary. The heifer was then burnt whole. Christ evidently was typified in these proceedings, for He was without spot, and the red was a fitting colour of the Blood of Christ which cleanseth from all sin. Christ was crucified without the camp.

Seventh time the Children of Israel murmured against God, and God sent a plague amongst them (Numbers xvi, 41). Moses in alarm for the safety of the whole race sent Aaron amongst them to make atonement before the Lord.

The plague was stayed, but not before 14,700 men had perished.

Seven times' chastisement upon Israel for sin beginning with the year 975 B.C.

Seven times is seven prophetic years of 360 days a year (or time), the same number of days as there are degrees in a circle. On the basis of one year for a day as purposed by God in Ezekiel iv, 6, makes a total number of years in the "Seven Times" 2,520.

Two thousand five hundred and twenty years from 975 B.C. brings us to the year A.D. 1545, when what was called King Henry the Eighth's Primer was published by Royal Authority. In the preface the King says: "We have set out and given to our subjects a determinate form of prayer in our own mother tongue, to the intent that such as are ignorant of any strange or foreign speech, may have what to pray, in their own acquainted and familiar language." This was also the commencement of the Reformation and evidently the end of God's threatened chastisement upon Israel for sin, as indicated in Lev. xxvi, 28.

Seventy years' captivity of the House of Judah in Babylon, as foretold by Jeremiah the Prophet because of their terrible abominations against God, the pollution of the Sanctuary, and the desecration of the Sabbath.

2 Chronicles xxxvi, 21 :—" To fulfil the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths ; for as long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbath," to fulfil three score and ten years.

Seven streams.—Isaiah xl, 15, 16 : " And the Lord shall destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea ; and with His mighty wind shall He shake His hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod, and there shall be an highway for the remnant of His people, which shall be left from Assyria ; like as it was to Israel in the days that He came up out of the land of Egypt." God will remove all obstacles from the path of His people Brith-ish Israel.

Read also the 11–13 verses of the same chapter.

Sevenfold light of the sun—Isaiah xxx, 26 :

" Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of His people, and healeth the stroke of their wound." This prophecy is very near fulfilment. Read on to the thirty-second chapter, which records the end of all war and the restoration of the glorious land, with our Redeemer Christ King.

" Behold : a King shall reign in righteousness."

Seven times from the captivity of Israel in 721 B.C., viz., plus 2,520 years, ends A.D. 1799–1800. We find at this period the great rebellion in Ireland, with the result that it was considered necessary to form a Union between the Parliaments of Great Britain and Ireland similar to that arranged between England and Scotland in the reign of Queen Anne. The measure was finally effected and ratified July 2nd, 1800. The Kingdom has thus become consolidated the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. In this same year, " The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts " was established, followed by the " Church Missionary Society." Evidently an unmistakable sign of a return to the God of our fathers, and a determined effort to carry out the mission for which we were chosen.

Seven times of Gentile Powers beginning with the year 603 B.C., when Nebuchadnezzar became first King of Jerusalem, ended in A.D. 1917, when General Allenby took possession of the Holy Land for Brith-ish Israel. We can clearly see that because of Israel and Judah's sin the glorious land was to be taken from them until that cycle seven had been completed. Now that God has restored that possession, events will move rapidly towards the consummation of His purpose for Israel.

Seven times from the captivity of Judah in the year 587, when the utter destruction of the Holy City was effected and the walls of Jerusalem were broken down, brings us to the year A.D. 1933. Is it probable that in the year 1933 Judah and Israel will become aware of each other's identity and a reconciliation take place ? Or will that year prove to be the final phase of world war and the tribulations, when Our Lord shall stand upon the Mount of Olives and be glorified in the sight of the heathen ? If so, then that will certainly be the time indicated when Judah shall behold Him Whom they pierced, and wail for mercy and forgiveness ; then the reconciliation of the whole of Israel will be effected. If we, as a people, desire the period of tribulation to be shortened, we must unitedly appeal to Almighty God, Who has promised to do so if asked, Ezekiel xxxvi, 37—" I will yet for this be enquired of by the House of Israel, to do it for them."

WEEK BY WEEK.

By A. R. H.

IT had been our intention, on concluding the recent series of articles on the subject of WAR in relation to CIVILIZATION, the KINGDOM and the CHURCHES, to turn to some other and perhaps more congenial topic. But in the meantime the preliminary announcement of the publication of a book[1] by a well-known American publicist opens up a further phase of the matter that cannot be allowed to pass without comment. Standing alone this book would be of little or no importance. But coming at a critical moment it rather dangerously crystallizes and makes audible the secret fears held by a growing number of persons on both sides of the ATLANTIC. Any work which tends to co-ordinate and harden misconceptions demands attention and critical opposition.

" PEACE cannot be maintained by repeating the lie that war between GREAT BRITAIN and the UNITED STATES is impossible." Thus the author issues his challenge, and continues :—" WAR is possible. WAR is probable, unless seek through mutual sacrifice to reconcile their many conflicting interests."

That a colossal struggle for world control of Oil supplies is in progress between the rival companies of BRITAIN and AMERICA is obvious to all. Even from the columns of the Daily Press we receive to-day a vivid picture of the combat. The war has reached a stage where the hidden fighting, hitherto suspected and known to few, is open and unashamed.

And, if we accept M. Clemenceau's statement at its full value —that " Oil is as necessary as blood in the battles of to-morrow " —we must admit that the gravity of the situation is not exaggerated when, according to Mr. Denny (who claims to be in daily contact with the State Department and Embassies at WASHINGTON), " little by little the American supplies for oil are exhausting themselves."

" The oil problem of the UNITED STATES is acute," he writes. " American acquisition of foreign reserves is blocked in many places by GREAT BRITAIN. The British have been more successful than Americans in securing foreign fields. The [1] " We fight for Oil," By Ludwell Denny.

Digitized by Google

British Government virtually excludes Americans from the productive areas of the EMPIRE. The British dominate the world's remaining supply. They are conserving their reserve while helping to drain American pools."

We are then encouraged by a reminder of Rear-Admiral Plunkett's recent outburst to the effect that "the penalty of industrial efficiency is inevitably war," and sobered by reflection on the declaration that "rightly or wrongly, we are actively preparing for the which our naval men believe will be fought to determine commercial supremacy."

"The AMERICAN PEOPLE are now less opposed than formerly to such preparedness against GREAT BRITAIN," continues the author, and believes that, "both nations would lose by war. But GREAT BRITAIN would lose more. Whatever happened to America, GREAT BRITAIN would cease to exist as a world EMPIRE.

"The United States plans to have naval equality or superiority before hostilities begin, if there is to be war. America's only major weakness, lack of adequate merchant marine for service of supply and naval auxiliary, will be less acute probably within the next decade. AMERICA is vastly superior in man-power, raw materials, food supply, financial reserves, and natural defences.

"GREAT BRITAIN is exposed to air and submarine attack by her European neighbours, some of whom might welcome an opportunity to complete her downfall. Not that they love us but they hate GREAT BRITAIN more, as the nearer of the two encroaching Empires.

"Though GREAT BRITAIN were unexpectedly the naval and military victor, she would have received external and internal injuries from which could not fully recover.

"Overshadowing all stands GREAT BRITAIN," he claims in conclusion, "blocking the path of AMERICAN EMPIRE. EMPIRE is built on sea supremacy, foreign markets and control of raw materials such as oil. Without these the American Empire cannot rise. Hence the conflict. Despite hands-across-the-sea speeches and talk of Anglo-American unity, the two Empires are now in combat on the economic fronts of the world."

A very stimulating prospect! But let us dissect the discourse bit by bit, and see if the issue is quite so deadly as depicted.

At the outset the author seems to answer his own questions and dispose of his own alarmist tactics when he plaintively declares that war is probable unless "the two Empires seek through mutual sacrifice to reconcile their many conflicting interests." That little word "unless" suggests a solution and is prophetic. For reconciliation is just exactly the process by which war will be avoided. But Mr. Denny has little faith in this possibility, and finally cheers us with the prospect that war is inevitable.

His judgment as to the outcome of such a struggle is purely speculative. "Whatever happened to America, Great Britain would cease to exist as a world-Empire," we are told. Well! may be. But not if Great Brith-ain, GREAT LAND of the COVENANT, is the WORLD-EMPIRE of Dan. ii, 44!

"The United States plan to have naval equality or superiority before hostilities begin, if there is to be war."

Well! The UNITED STATES may plan. But even so no equality or superiority in numbers or in arms has ever yet vanquished GOD'S KINGDOM NATION. We delight to fight against odds, for GOD is with us. And GOD is not on the side of the biggest battalions. At least, not in the way most people think.[2]

"America's major weakness, lack of adequate merchant marine, will probably be less acute within the next decade."

Probably so. Again, probably not. It will need a big push indeed to beat the present situation where BRITAIN is building yearly at the rate of 5 to 1. Even so. A nation may build ships, but can she man them? A nation of landsmen against a nation of seamen . . . .!

"America is vastly superior in man-power . . . ."

Yes! But which counts most at sea, quantity or quality? The Sea is a hard taskmaster. You cannot train a seaman in a year. Only an island race is fit to keep and hold dominion of the sea.

"European neighbours might welcome an opportunity to complete her downfall . . . ."

It is hard for men and nations to kick against the pricks. Why try to destroy an EMPIRE which shall never be destroyed or left to other people but shall stand for ever? Are we boasting in the confidence of our strength? GOD forbid. We are not boasting if with the REDEEMER of our NATION we turn and say:—"Who is mine Adversary? Let him come near to me!"[3]

We are told that there are nations which hate GREAT BRITAIN. But of the LAND and PEOPLE of the COVENANT it is written[4]:—"I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee"; Cursing and hatred are not far apart in the eyes of GOD. Hatred like a boomerang returns to smite its sender.

As for the AGED EMPIRE its age is not a sign of dissolution and decay. Its age is ageless. The BRITH-ISH or COVENANT MAN EMPIRE is the youngest and most virile political organism in the world to-day. Born again at the late IMPERIAL CONFERENCE it might well be called the

EMPIRE OF ETERNAL YOUTH.[5]

For the spirit of GOD not of man is behind the EMPIRE.

Now the spirit of GOD is both vital and unchangeable. The EMPIRE upheld and inspired by that spirit will continue therefore to manifest (what distinguished foreigners[6] love to call) "its magnificent continuity," and, at the same time, continually find its youth renewed like the eagle's.

For we are descendants of the people and nation borne on eagle's wings and dedicated to the service of humanity at the feet of GOD on Sinai's hill.

Meanwhile the Eagle remains the national symbol of MANASSEH. The UNITED STATES can share the life and progress of her mother—BRITH-AIN. She cannot oppose that life and progress. Neither can she, indefinitely, remain politically without the FAMILY of which she remains for ever, spiritually, a member.

As first-born and foremost of the DAUGHTER COVENANT NATIONS, whose branches[7] have run over the wall, she will yet find her place within the KINGDOM as chief of the FREE and EQUAL NATIONS which compose the COMMONWEALTH of the COVENANT. The destiny of MANASSEH is in higher hands than human.

Meanwhile, humanly speaking, what are the factors which will tend to prevent open conflict between the two great English-speaking Peoples and cause a reconciliation of conflicting aims and interests?

One of the most powerful factors is that of finance. Mr. Reginald McKenna's Monthly Review published by the Midland Bank shows that the UNITED STATES and UNITED KINGDOM "are currently supplying goods and services to other countries on credit," and that as a consequence "the rest of the world[8] is going into debt to these two countries."

"These two creditors have enormous claims falling due from day to day on account of interest and repayment of debt. It is a cumulative process by which the rest of the world is becoming mortgaged to the two leading Anglo-Saxon countries."

This is the first of the processes which are tending to isolate GREAT BRITAIN and AMERICA from the rest of the world and bring them closer one to the other. Nothing would serve the purpose of unscrupulous debtors better than to see their two great creditors fighting each other for world supremacy. We may be quite sure that Anglo-Saxondom will never allow itself to become stampeded into so ridiculous an exhibition of futility.

Moreover the signing of the PACT to renounce war as an instrument of international disputes confirms our optimism in this direction. It is not the tradition of Anglo-Saxon nations to treat a pact or treaty as a scrap of paper. An Anglo-Saxon's word is his bond, and the doom of BRITAIN-ISRAEL will indeed have sounded when a solemn declaration of this nature is confounded.

Who would have thought, in 1910, that within four years a war would be fought in EUROPE that would bring in the UNITED STATES on the side of ENGLAND?

The UNITED STATES know where their interest and advantage lie. They can do more for themselves by trading within and co-operating with the EMPIRE than by exploiting and destroying it. Moreover the have a will and moral power of conviction, which, if slow to move, once roused has never yet been known to fail in making itself felt and heard.

The history of MANASSEH as of EPHRAIM is a signal demonstration of the manner in which the will and character of PEOPLE can defeat the purposes and leadership of statesmanship.

The Stars and Stripes will yet again fly side by side with the Union Jack upon the field of Battle. For external aggression is another factor which will shortly bring these two nations into line for common action.

To-day's Russian newspapers claim, falsely, that ENGLAND is preparing for war, and that therefore the "entire Russian masses must be militarized. Every worker and peasant must learn to handle a rifle and become a real Red fighter."

ENGLAND has once more been declared the foe[9] in the second of the great Defence Week celebrations held throughout the length and breadth of the Soviet Union.

The attempt to brand BRITAIN as the Aggressor is a cunning attempt to persuade the world that Joel iii, 9 is the answer to II Esdras vi, 40, whereas the exact reverse is the case.

There are other sources of danger and menace, but the Soviet Union represents the chief and most obvious one.

In conclusion, Mr. Raskob's rather clever but damaging attack on the Hoover candidateship for the Presidency, wherein he said that if AMERICA was to have an Englishman for its President, he preferred the Prince of Wales, contains, in spite of its ingeniously sarcastic flavour, quite a prophetical significance.

For Manasseh means Forgetting.[10] And although Manasseh has forgotten and temporarily forsaken his father's HOUSE he will, with other separated members of the ISRAEL PEOPLE, turn again and seek DAVID his King.[11]

The spectacle of the richest nation upon earth turning to enter and strengthen the BRITH-ISH or COVENANT MAN FAMILY of FREE and EQUAL NATIONS will destroy the last vestige of hesitancy or pride which perhaps would cause the other nations to pause before following so excellent an example.

For BRITH-AIN remains the nucleus of a KINGDOM-EMPIRE which every nation upon earth may join without loss of prestige or power. All nations would have somewhat to gain by this association. None would have aught to lose. They surrender nothing of character or genius or freedom to the KINGDOM, but bring their glory into it.

When EPHRAIM and MANASSEH, the

TWO ENCROACHING EMPIRES,[12]

are become one, under DAVID their King, then, the new process of absorption (not conquest) can come to full fruition. The kingdoms of the world will become one Kingdom, the KINGDOM of our LORD and of His CHRIST.

Manasseh means Forgetting. But we are now in the Year of the Great Awakening. With awakening—the passing of national[13] and international[14] blindness—will come remembrance, and with remembrance, reconciliation and reunion.

BRITISH-ISRAEL.

THE British Empire is to-day the wonder of the world. There has never been anything like it. It would seem that the "origin" of the English-speaking people, upon whom this mighty Empire rests, is a subject of surpassing interest and importance—an ethnological question of the deepest significance.

This is the first factor in the consideration of "British-Israel."

The second factor is this: The Old Testament contains the story of the dispersion—the "loss" of the ten tribes of Israel (not Judah). The Jews were dispersed, driven out of their country, we can trace them in nearly all the countries of the world, but the ten tribes seem to have wholly disappeared.

The third factor is that the Old Testament is full of prophetic statements as to the future of these lost ten tribes—unmistakable pronouncements referring to a people that seems to have been merged and lost in the populations of the world.

The British-Israel teaching seeks to co-ordinate these three factors.

Either the British Empire is an accident or it is providential, that is, a part of the Divine plan. If there is any belief in the ordering of this world's destiny by the power of Almighty God, then there is nothing irrational in seeking to connect t English-speaking peoples with the ten tribes of Israel; the matter becomes one of evidence, of sound history, and of the sure Word of prophecy.

The British-Israel teaching is comparatively new. This is of no significance except that it may be a "revelation in due time." If there is a Divine plan, then there must be a belief in continuous revelation. We should find no real difficulty in believing this or any other teaching merely because it is new. A simple illustration shows this: we are all believers in "wireless"; that is new enough; it has, so to speak, been "revealed" to us—it is all a matter of evidence.

Now, if it can be shown that the English-speaking peoples fulfil in many remarkable ways the prophecies of the Bible that refer to these "lost" ten tribes, and if this is supported by sound learning—historical, ethnological, lingual—then there opens a revelation of the inner meaning of the British Empire that is of enthralling interest and importance. It is this that appeals to many. There is a longing in many minds to trace the Divine Hand in history, to be able to believe in a Divine plan. We are not Jews; we may be Israel, but the interest is not here alone—it is in the revelation of the Divine purpose—a revelation which does away with the secret heart of unbelief, makes the Bible another Book, and fills us with the humble desire to help forward and to live within the Divine plans for the world, for the British Empire, and for ourselves.

I have written these few simple lines in order to explain why it is that the British-Israel teaching makes an appeal to some of us, and to help to dismiss the idea that the whole thing is a mere fad confined to a few fanatic and cranky people.

Some dismiss the whole thing as "nonsense" (generally prefixed by a strong adjective). There are always these kind of critics; they can be disregarded. There is more sound evidence in the literature of the Movement than these critics are aware of. But this criticism is suspect when we remember all that is confused, contradictory and out of date associated with the words "higher criticism" and "modernism." It needs a high order of mind to co-ordinate all the facts which make up the British-Israel teaching.

I would, if I may, ask you to think of this matter in the light of the Divine plan in which we all believe if we are Christians. There must be some explanation of the British Empire. Is British-Israel teaching that explanation?

THE SPIRIT'S STRENGTH TO A NATION.*

BY THE REV. GEORGE MATHESON, M.A., D.D.

"Because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the forts and towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks; until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high."—Isaiah xxxii, 14-15.

THREE things are here said to depend on the Spirit—the palace, the city and the tower. The Spirit is the glory of royalty; to be a king in God's sense is to be the servant of all. The Spirit is the secret of citizenship; to be a citizen in God's sense is to be the brother of all. The Spirit is the root of warlike strength; to be a soldier in God's sense is to be the defender of all—the defender of that righteousness which is at last the universal interest. God's Spirit is for the nation as well as for the man, and these three are the blessings of the nation. What else can I ask for my country than this trinity of privileges—that her Court shall be always pure, that her cities shall be always flourishing, and that in the cause of righteousness her towers shall be always strong.

Lord of nations, bless our native land. Let Thy Divine Spirit be incarnated in its threefold life in its rulers, in its citizens, in its soldiers. Impress its rulers with the responsibility of being great, the weightedness of being ministers to all. Impress its citizens with the multitude of their claims, the vastness of that brotherhood of which they are members. Impress its soldiers with the fearlessness that is born of duty, the courage that comes from devotion to the just and true. Purify its palaces, cleanse its streets, strengthen its bulwarks. Teach its rulers to say "Thy will be done," its citizens to cry "hallowed be Thy name," its soldiers to pray "Thy kingdom come." Let its kings be priests unto Thee; let its citizens be fathers to the multitude; let its soldiers be peacemakers to the world. May Thine altars not be removed from the high places; may Thy Word not be silent in the homes of industrious toil; may Thy banner be unfurled in the camp and on the field. Then shall our land be full of Thy glory, a universal priesthood, a holy convocation. Then shall we be numbered amongst those nations which stand already at the right hand of Thy judgment-seat and receive from Thee the blessing of the ministrant, "Enter ye into the joy of your Lord." Thy Spirit shall be poured on us from on high when Thou hast exalted our palaces, our cities and our towers.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

BY THE REV. G. H. LANCASTER, M.A.

QUESTION.—Will you kindly help me by explaining the following points?

In the first chapter of The Lost Tribes of Israel by Reader Harris, K.C., he quotes Lev. xxvi, 18, and goes on to show that the end of Israel's "seven times" of punishment would reach to about the 19th century. I have been told that in the Hebrew there is no word equivalent to "times," that the word is supplied in English in this passage to make sense; that there are at least two Hebrew words for "times" meaning a "period," but that neither are used in this particular passage; that commentators understand the word "seven" in this passage as "idiomatical," meaning that God will punish Israel heavily for their sins. What authority has the author for his statement that a "time" is generally taken to mean 360 years? Is he justified in building up a theory on the meaning of "times" in the Bible on the verse quoted?—J. A. M. M.

ANSWER.—The word translated by "times" as above comes over fifty times in the Hebrew Old Testament, and so it is incorrect to say that there is no such word in the Hebrew language. On the other hand this word pa'amah has many meanings, coming from the primitive root pa'am, to tap, i.e., to beat regularly, and it will be best for you to have a look at a Hebrew Lexicon, or at a Concordance, such as Strong's or Young's, in which the actual Hebrew or Greek words of the English version are given, with their meanings.

There are several words in the Hebrew translated "time" or "times" in the Bible, of which it is impossible to give a list here. But when we read that "seven times" had to pass over Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. iv) a Chaldaic word is used, which is only used in the Book of Daniel (see also Dan. ii, 21; vii, 25).

Some commentators see in this passage (Lev. xxvi) a reference to the Sabbatical number proverbially used to remind the people of the Covenant (cf. Gen. iv, 15, 24; Psalm lxxix, 12; Prov. xxiv, 16; Luke xvii, 4). But in our opinion it has a prophetical significance, and means 7 × 360 years, i.e., 2,520 years, so that one "time" is 360 years. This is obtained by comparing many passages together, including some from the Book of Daniel and from the Revelation. Were it not for the fact that a system of chronology suggests itself to the student as consistently bearing out the period of 2,520 years, in whole and in part, and which period has been proved in history to date, there might be reason for thinking that the number "seven" here is "idiomatical" rather than prophetical. But there is abundant evidence to show that the whole system of Biblical chronology is based upon a historical and prophetical foundation, there being perfect harmony, symmetry, and co-ordination. I have not Reader Harris's book before me, but if he states that the "seven times" of Israel's punishment would reach to about the 19th century he has underestimated the duration of the "seven times," since the latter cannot expire before 1934. There are several books which have dealt with this prophetic period of time, and though he was not acquainted with the Truths of British-Israel, Grattan Guinness did more than any other writer to draw attention to this great study, and Reader Harris was by no means the first.

Briefly the facts are as follows:—The expression "time, times and an half" occurs three times (Dan. vii, 25; xii, 7; and Rev. xii, 14), while the expression "1,260 days" occurs twice (Rev. xi, 3; xii, 6), and the expression "42 months" twice (Rev. xi, 2; xiii, 5). Assuming that "time" is 1, "times" = 2, and "an half" = ½, it becomes clear that "time, times and an half" = 3½ (i.e., 1 + 2 + ½).

But 42 months are exactly 3½ years, hence the extreme probability is that 1,260 days synchronize with 3½ years also. This being the case, 1,260 days would be the half of 2,520 days, as 3½ years are the half of seven years. But we read of seven times and not of seven years, and of "time, times and an half" as the equivalent of 42 months or 3½ years. So we are driven to the conclusion that one day is one year, and that one time is 1/7th of 2,520 years. Hence "time, times and an half" (i.e., 3½) is the prophetic equivalent of 1,260 years, and so "seven times" are 2,520 years.

If, therefore, "seven times" be 2,520 years, it follows that one "time" is 360 years. Here, then, we have a most remarkable thing, for 2,520 is one of the most wonderful of all numbers, since it is divisible by all numbers from one to ten, a fact which emphasizes the importance of "seven times" and the completed finality of 2,520. Further, 360 is an equally important number, since it marks the number of degrees in a circle (the circle being the symbol of Divinity, "without beginning and without end," e.g., "I am Alpha and Omega").

This is why the whole scheme of prophetic chronology is built upon the foundation of "seven times" or 2,520 years, with all the manifold varieties, divisions and subdivisions of the latter. Similarly, one "time" or 360 is taken prophetically as the unit, or the number of days in a year, and this is practically the mean between a solar year (365¼ days) and a lunar year (354 days). Hence prophecy calculates in three methods, i.e., by lunar (354), by prophetic (360), and by solar (365¼) days per year, so that fulfilments of prophecy are found to exist automatically and consistently in all three ways. The whole subject of "prophetic time" is very involved, but as interesting as it may be difficult. It is a study of Bible and history which will well repay the labour spent upon it, and, further, one which alone provides the key to the understanding of the world situation—past, present and future.

For more detailed explanation, see my Prophecy, the War, and the Near East (chaps. III, IV, V, and also the Prophetic Chart at the end of the volume). This book is unfortunately out of print, although published in five editions, but it can be seen in most public libraries.

"All the genius and learning of the heathen world, all the penetration of Pythagoras, Socrates and Aristotle, has never been able to produce such a system of moral duty, and so rational an account of Providence and of man, as is to be found in the New Testament."—BEATTIE.

NEWS AND NOTES.

THE usual weekly meetings will NOT be held at Headquarters during the month of August. They will be resumed (D.V.) in September.

* * *

Mr. Henry Proctor and Mr. John Leech, K.C., were the speakers at Headquarters on the 18th and 19th inst.

Croydon Branch will not hold meetings during August.

On Sunday, July 15th, our open-air speakers carried on in Hyde Park under a blazing sun. Mr. Pilcher acted as chairman, and opened each meeting with some remarks concerning the B.-I.-W.F. The Rev. Joseph Gay addressed a very attentive audience in the afternoon for over an hour. Several people gave in their names for free literature. In the evening Mr. McKelvey dealt with points of identity, and Mr. Tester spoke on the early (B.C.) history of Britain and London. Mr. S. L. Frost also gave a short talk.

Open-air meetings have been arranged for Streatham Common on Sunday, July 29th, at 3.30 and 7.30, and for the following Sunday, August 5th, in Hyde Park, at the same hours.

* * *

The Rev. Joseph Gay will preach at Crouch End Congregational Church on Sunday, July 29th, at 11 and 6.30.

* * *

At the speakers' training class on July 18th there was a debate on the general question of Disarmament. Mr. Stevens, of Ealing Branch, led off in favour, and Mr. McKelvey, of Stratford Branch, spoke for the opposition. Considerable debating skill was exhibited. July 25th was the closing meeting of this class for the session.

Although the usual public meetings of the Southend-on-Sea Branch have been suspended during the summer, there is considerable activity going on. Members and friends hold gatherings in Cavendish Hall, pending the resumption of public meetings. These have been well attended. The Secretary, Mr. Jubb, gave a delightful address recently on "Edom, as a Sign of the End," and at a later gathering Mr. Bragg, of Ealing, spoke on "The Significance of B.-I. Truth to Believers." This speaker was greatly enjoyed and has been urged to revisit the Branch.

"Israel's Glorious Reconstruction" was the title of the very clear and convincing address given by Mr. H. Beckwith to the Leicester Branch on July 17th. The President, Mr. A. E. Biggs, occupied the chair.

The Rhymney Branch was favoured on July 10th with an address on the Great Pyramid by the Rev. W. T. Medhurst, who has recently returned from the United States, where he has done much to spread British-Israel Truth. The same speaker was at Cardiff on July 3rd.

* * *

Regular monthly meetings are held throughout the year in Pretoria, Transvaal, at the Hartley Hall, St. Andries Street, and, through the good work of those carrying on, fine progress is being made. Mr. J. W. Aves, the newly-appointed Secretary, made special mention at a recent meeting of the loss sustained by the departure of Mr. W. E. Oldroyd, the founder of this Branch, for Australia.

On the trip across Mr. Oldroyd gave an address on British-Israel to about 200 of the passengers and officers.

For the third time in a short six months the Bath Branch mourns the loss of one of its most enthusiastic members. In February the President, Col. Leigh, in April a former Secretary, Miss Short, and now Miss Constance Chadwick, one of the younger members, who for the past twelve months has worked indefatigably in connection with the library now housed in 5, Argyle Street, a venture in which the deceased lady took a keen interest. Miss Chadwick was a great Church worker, a prominent Girl Guide Captain, a social worker in the city, and an untiring advocate of our Cause, in season and out of season. She died of peritonitis following an operation for appendicitis, at Exmouth, where she had taken her mother to recuperate after a severe illness. Our sympathy goes out to the widowed mother in her bereavement.

We regret to report the death of Lady McGregor, of Hampton Court Palace, one of our members, who died recently in hospital as the result of being injured by a motor-car in High Street, Kensington.

* * *

The Rev. Guy Waddington has recently held excellent meetings at Bradford, Wigan and Sheffield, and has several lectures booked for parishes in his district in the immediate future.

* * *

We have been pleased to welcome a number of visitors and friends from Overseas during the summer. Much interest has been taken in our well-stocked Book Room, the large body of literature available being a surprise to many.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—IV.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

We have in our study of the prophet Moses glanced at the prophetic history which forms our synopsis of revelation concerning things prior to the time of Moses.

The first stage of this synopsis might be termed general, approaching step by step to particular revelation. The steps by which it approaches may be tabulated as follows:—

Universal—the creation of the heaven and the earth.
Cosmic—the formation of the earth and the heavens.
The World—as related to the Adamic family.
The Appointed Seed—descended from God, Adam, Seth.
The Noachic—Shem, Ham, Japheth.
Semitic—descended from Shem to Abraham.
The Abrahamic—descended through Isaac, the covenanted seed.
Israel—God's Kingdom Nation.

The second stage of this synopsis takes up the story with the call of Abraham, the organization of the household of God in the triunification El Shaddai, Abraham, Sarah, into which home Isaac was born and all his descendants in their generations.

The third stage of Mosaic prophetic history begins with the first chapter of the Book of Exodus and sweeps on to the end of the life of Moses. To this literature we must now turn our attention for the brief space at our disposal.

Lines of perspective are clearly visible in the Genesis literature; this we have already dealt with. No such lines of perspective are to be found in Exodus or the succeeding Mosaic Books. The author moves amongst living personalities immediately present, and among events contemporaneous and close at hand. Every figure and every description are life-size and immediate.

How shall we describe this wonderful literature, and how shall we compare it with other literature, sacred and profane?

In the field of literature Dante's great poem stands out like a clearly-defined hall of statuary. Milton's great poem, "Paradise Lost," presents to us transcendental personalities, ethereal, majestic, and abounding with vitality and action.

The mustering of the angelic armies in heaven; the tremendous activities of the strike which ensued; the overthrow of the hosts of Satan and their expulsion from heaven, showing the etchings of a bold imagination fired to unusual efforts by a transcendent theme.

These stately Books of Moses differ from each of these, as the living presentation must always differ from the picture.

We see the personalities involved: Ancient and Imperial Egypt dwelling on the banks of the Nile; Israel, the youthful nation, obtruded into Egypt from the hills and plains of the land of Canaan; Moses, the man of God—as infant, youth, and man of mature years. All these are shown to us by a few sentences from an infinitely skilful writer's pen.

The picture opens in the council chamber of the Pharaoh; they are discussing Israel, now dwelling in Goshen. Statistics show Israel to be more numerous and mightier than Egypt, and still increasing. How shall this menace be met? Power remains in the hands of Egypt as yet, because Egypt holds the governmental machine and the power to use it at will. It is a case of the organized minority ruling the unorganized majority.

The decision of the council is universal infanticide for the newly-born male children of Israel. This law failed of operation, and the reason was later given. Then came the decision to reduce the Israelites to servitude, thus bringing them under military control and making them revenue producing for the State.

Still failing to check the growing numbers of Israel, servitude was again reduced to grinding slavery, with the object of breaking and destroying the race.

Thus in a touch, Divinely inspired, we glimpse the condition of Israel in that they could not listen to Moses, the messenger of God, because of anguish of spirit.

Now the scene changes to the Sinai peninsula, where God undertakes to organize an expedition against Egypt for the delivery of Israel.

The expedition consists of two aged men, one of eighty and the other eighty-three years, armed with a "swagger stick" or rod.

A mighty expedition indeed to send against Imperial Egypt!

To Moses, the man of God, however, the Lord revealed Himself at the burning bush as El Shaddai, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, now to be known to Moses and Israel, and incidentally to Pharaoh, king of Egypt, as the God and King of Israel.

This puts a different complexion upon the expedition thus organized which was sent to Egypt with the demand, "Let my people go, that they may serve me."

Now we pass to the strange struggle between Pharaoh, backed by the might of Egypt and the gods of Egypt, and Moses, armed with the authority of Jehovah, the God and King of Israel.

To Pharaoh the Lord declared, "For this cause have I raised thee up, for to shew in thee my power"; and that demonstration is made deathless and perpetual by the inspired record.

Two aged men armed with a stick, in the power of Jehovah, the God and King of Israel, against the greatest kingdom empire of the day.

Thus throughout all the ages the messenger of Jehovah has been greater than kings and nations.

The authority and power of Egypt answered the call of the Pharaoh; the forces of natural phenomena answered the call of Moses. Finally, one angel of the mighty ones which surround the throne of Jehovah lent his aid, and smote in Egypt, and in every home and family there was one dead. Then Pharaoh let the people go.

Now we enter the religious life of the people and see that the commencement of their national life—we repeat, of their national life—was the ordination of that Passover Supper which carried on to the conclusion of the ministry of Our Lord, and which was by Him transformed into the Holy Communion or Supper of Our Lord.

Note that all the congregation of Israel must slay the lamb. There was no priestly office here; in fact, the very order of the priesthood had not as yet appeared. Note that the blood must be shed, and sprinkled upon the doorposts and lintels of the home; upon this act and fact depended the life of the firstborn in the home.

Note that there must be no reservation; every particle that remained over until the morning must be burned with fire; note further that this was an ordinance in Israel for ever. No authority of Bishops or Parliament can change that ordinance, and whosoever undertakes to do so in Israel must bear their responsibility before God.

The flight from Egypt; the passage of the Red Sea; the miraculous delivery from death by thirst at the waters of Marah, give to us glimpses of this great national experience, and leads direct to Sinai.

As the mountain tops of Sinai's rugged granite range tower above the plains, so the 19th and 20th chapters of Exodus tower sublimely above all other descriptive literature, except those passages of the Gospel which tell of the great ordinance accomplished on the hill of Calvary.

Here were brought together in the bands of wedlock, never to be wholly broken, and hereafter to be wholly renewed, Jehovah the King, Israel, His Kingdom of Priests, and the enunciated principles of the everlasting law of righteousness by which the Kingdom should be administered.

The descriptions contained in these wonderful chapters are such as to thrill the reader, who becomes the auditor and spectator, to the very depth.

Now we have the revelation to Moses of the pattern of that Tabernacle which should be the pavilion of the King, His dwelling-place, and the place where Israel should assemble to worship Him in the midst of the camp of Israel.

Thus this wonderful Book of Exodus carries on from chapter to chapter, translating into earthly materials the symbolism of the "greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands," and establishing prophecy incorporated in acts and facts, the message of which in spiritual conceptions and perceptions should be graven upon the hearts of Israel for ever.

Passing on, in the Book of Leviticus we see the ordination of the Aaronic priesthood, and of that worship which should be their charge and responsibility.

Again in this we have prophecy organized in action, and, by the symbolical actions of the priesthood, prophecy concerning the coming Christ as Saviour and King carried on through the ages until Our Lord appeared, and the actuality of the Gospels rendered the symbols unnecessary.

Proceeding further, we come to the Book of Numbers, and assemble with the marshalling hosts of Israel to take our place in the tribal regiments and brigaded armies of the four-square camp of Israel.

In this connection we see the dedication of the Levitical priesthood and the appointment of their secular service in charge of the material things of the Tabernacle, and the charge of all the congregation of Israel.

Again we have prophecy incorporated in national organization, predestinated and foreordained to continue until Our

Digitized by Google

Lord should come as King to rule over the House of Jacob for ever.

In Deuteronomy we have the digest of constitutional law, the valedictory of Moses, the man of God, and his final blessing pronounced upon the tribes of Israel, but of this we have dealt in a former article.

Thus we have considered in this issue the prophetic activities of Moses and of Israel during the time of Israel; we say prophetic, for the organizations here set up and the activities here begun were destined to continue on the ecclesiastical side until Our Lord should appear at His First Advent, there to fulfil the ordinances; and on the national side until Our Lord should come at His Second Advent to take over His rule, and establish His reign in Israel according to the law and the prophets.

In the next issue we shall consider the spoken prophecies of Moses.

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL IDEAL.

PART I.

"WHERE there is no vision, the people perish." Such is the statement attributed to King Solomon the wise, and such is the experience of history. Our present word "ideal" is, of course, only another name for "vision," and vision or idealism is the basis of all human progress.

One of the most fascinating studies in the world is the study of the growth and development of civilizations or empires under the influence of various ideals, and if we knew the inner secret of this rise and fall of nations, we should find it lay either in the relative value of their ideals or in the consistency with which those ideals were pursued.

Sometimes, in these days of massed and undigested knowledge when conflicting creeds and ideals seem to jostle each other for elbow room, we think with a sigh of the days when the earth was young. We picture to ourselves a world where the sun is sparkling on the dew, where everything is fresh and green, and a race who look out upon their surroundings with eager and adventurous eyes, unclouded with pre-conceived and wearisome beliefs and ideas, a world in which beauty and adventure walk hand in hand and may be encountered at every turning.

Such a world is of course imaginary and yet there have been approximations to it. Those times, however, have not lain in the eras of mere ignorance or even innocence, but in the ages of tremendous idealism. It is when the mind and spirit of mankind perceive the commonplace of existence transfigured in the light of an overmastering ideal that the days of youth are restored, and the light which never was on land or sea illumines the path which lies ahead. Such a light it was which enabled Michael Angelo to see the angel in a block of unhewn marble and unveil his glory to a wondering world.

The example par excellence of such an age is that of Greece—yet Greece fell. Why? The answer to such a question brings us back to the beginning—the relative values of ideals and the consistency with which they are pursued.

Much might be said concerning the differing values of the ideals which man has sought to follow, but the point of present interest lies not so much upon the comparison of ideal with ideal, but upon the relativity existing between any particular ideal and the needs and civil and spiritual development of those who pursue it.

Let us take by way of illustration the case of a people whose ideal is patriotism. Imagine such a people beset by enemies who threaten the liberty of their country. The civil relationship to the ideal will then express itself in militaristic skill and valour. When, however, the danger is past another aspect of the ideal must be perceived and the relationship of the people to it be expressed in very different activity—such for instance as economic and industrial effort. The failure to bring about this adaptation means disaster.

It may be said then that if an ideal is to be the guiding and continued light in any general sense, it must be capable of presenting aspects which will keep it in continual relationship with the needs and development of those who pursue it. Conversely those who fail to perceive the appropriate relative aspect of the ideal or reject it have become—consciously or unconsciously—its bitter enemies.

Now for Anglo-Saxondom, as well as for Christendom, the comparison of ideal with ideal lies a thousand years and more behind. For over a millennium the people of this our race have accepted and followed consciously or unconsciously the Supreme Ideal of all time—the Christ—and this is true of the atheist as well as of the believer in so far as they have been representative of Anglo-Saxon tradition. It is true that at times the ideal has been expressed but crudely both in the religious and national activity, but it has been there always, and is found to-day embodied in the language, in the thoughts and atmosphere, and in the outlook of the race.

Well and truly did our forefathers choose their ideal, for contained in it is the lofty and abstract, as well as the humble and personal; the mystical and the matter of fact; the human and divine. No intellect can soar beyond its infinity and no soul can sink below the range of its power, and whether it has been expressed in humble and imperfect terms, such as in mediæval chivalry and holy pilgrimages, or in the more enlightened forms of modern days, right well has it served the bearers of its ensign.

Who knows what this world would have been like to-day without the Anglo-Saxon ideal of Christ? Those who have imagination and knowledge of the plagues and pestilences which have threatened to engulf the Western world in the past—Spanish cruelty, French rationalism, German militarism, Bolshevik atheism and licence—may be able to guess at the hell from which Anglo-Saxondom idealism has saved the world time and again, but they can never fully realize it.

It is not possible to make more than this allusion to the historic evidence of the truth of Solomon's proverb before passing on to the practical problem of present-day Christian idealism.

The first thought to arise in the mind at the mere mention of this problem is that something is indeed very wrong with this idealism. It appears almost as if the Christian faith has not only lost its driving power, but that its very light has almost become darkness. No longer does it seem to the general consciousness to spur men on to heights of heroic endeavour, but rather to enmesh them in meaningless and profitless bickering and strife. From the Houses of Parliament and the Bench of Bishops to the local Parish Church and the individuals of a family, it is bringing division and perplexity, and naturally there is going up a cry from those most concerned as to what this dying of the divine fire may portend.

The answer to this problem of supreme importance can be found, all too plainly written in history. Christian idealism is at the point of a tremendous crisis. The needs—civil and spiritual—not only of this country and of our race, but of the whole world, is entering upon a new phase, and the burning question is whether Christianity can find in its ideal an aspect appropriate to present-day development of civilization, and an aspect which will render obsolete, in its greater light, the traditional and dogmatic disputes which are sapping its life.

Let us re-state this problem since it is of such paramount importance. The Christian—and I will add the Englishman—is rightly not concerned with comparing ideal with ideal. He is prepared to stand or fall by that which he has chosen and, since therefore the problem is not one of vacillation between alternative ideals, it becomes of necessity one of the relativity of the ideal to the idealist. Further, since the ideal itself cannot change, the problem must be due to the need or development of the idealist and must depend for its solution upon a perception of a new aspect of the ideal appropriate to that need or development.

Such a situation is not without its parallel in history, and we have, in some respects, an almost identical one in the time of Our Lord. Lofty and noble as was the traditional conception of the Jewish ideal, the time had come when the civil development of the world, as well as her own desperate needs, required the perception of a new aspect of it. That new aspect Christ came to reveal. He came not to overthrow the law and the prophets, but to fulfil, and had the descendants of Judah proved amenable to the Light they would have found the ancient ideal, not overthrown, but established for ever in the light of Grace. They, however, rejected the Light of the World. They were too busy with the niceties of ritual or tradition even to conceive of a wider conception, and because the Lord of Life did not conform to the steel-bound limits of their conceptions they crucified Him and thereby sealed their own doom.

The application of this classical and most tragic example to the present-day state of affairs is almost too obvious to need enlarging upon. The keen and stringent ritual, the loss of spiritual and prophetic power and the hide-bound intellectual views which are utterly unable to conceive of fresh idealistic aspects are all present in the religious bodies of this twentieth century.

In view of the tremendous importance of the crisis it is almost pathetic to observe the desperate efforts of Christendom to avert the threatening catastrophe. The paint of worldly and social concession sits ill upon the lips of the Church of Christ, nor does the seductive appeal of ritualism and music hide the poverty of her idealism. It is difficult to say whether these things or the swaggering boastfulness of the Modernist in his intellectual attainments and destructive criticisms are most fatal to a pure idealism. Certain it is that all such expedients are rapidly becoming out-of-date and can only hasten the final phase unless a change of attitude takes place.

It is indeed fortunate that while to all eyes the situation appears so dark and the flame of pure idealism seems almost to have disappeared there is, as always in such human crises, a light given and revealed which, if accepted, will lead out of the darkness into a greater and more wonderful world in which the Church and the Nation may renew their youth like the eagle, and in which the matters of dispute will dissolve and give way to a vital energy of progress and knowledge.

The ladder up which the British-Israel Movement has climbed to a perception of a new aspect of the great Christian and British ideal is that of the historical identity of Britain with ancient Israel. This method—whatever may be the individual opinion of it—is gaining force steadily from research into history and other kindred subjects, and from its extraordinary relationship to Scripture, especially prophetical Scripture; this relationship being entirely complementary and harmonious. It has moreover the advantage of being able to provide a platform from which the present state of affairs can be surveyed in an historical, logical and comprehensive way, and its answer to modern criticism of the Bible is deadly. This method therefore, beside possessing the credit for revealing the new aspect of the ideal, is invaluable for the work done in clearing the ground of the present out-of-date confusion and presenting the fresh conception in a perspective easily grasped and retained by the general intelligence.

It is true, however, that this ladder is distrusted by many whose ideas of history are fixed by the works of historians who have classified the present races of man on insufficient data. Others there are who view with apprehension the platform upon which they may find themselves in the end.

For the sake of such it may be pointed out that every great truth or ideal has more than one method of approach, and entirely ignoring the evidences of the historical identity of Israel-Britain, it will be purely by the laws of idealistic development that an endeavour will be made here to portray what is surely the appropriate aspect of the ideal which is so sadly needed in the world to-day.

The first possible conception of an ideal must be individualistic. Before a community can possess a concept which will provide a common goal and form a working basis for general activity and endeavour, there must be born in some man's soul the vision splendid. The vision which will take possession of his whole life and for which no sacrifice is too great. It may be that such a vision will be perceived apparently almost simultaneously in several or even many men's minds, but this in no way affects the fact that the ideal is first individualistic in conception. Its evolution from this stage may be very rapid, but unless its general dissemination is brought about by some crisis, the natural development results next in the formation of an organization where the conception of the ideal, modified to harmonize with collective requirements, is the supreme if not the sole object.

The final test, however, of the value of a truly great ideal is the dynamic power contained within itself to overleap the bounds of any organization formed specially to propagate its conception, and in its appropriate aspect to dominate and sway and elevate the general community whose interests are perhaps entirely different from those of the organization.

ETERNAL LIFE.

"My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me : And I give unto them eternal life."—John x, 27-28.

IF no atom of matter is ever lost, no unit of force ever wasted—if nothing is destroyed, although all is changed—will the Father fail to preserve the gift of immortality in His children ? Every true gift of God preaches this sublime truth. We have felt sometimes, when we have listened to beautiful music, that it must be an echo from those " choirs invisible " of which our great composers have often dreamed. And as of music, so of poetry ; for the real poet is by nature a seer and a prophet, and his noblest lines are full of the consciousness of the eternal. He takes his illumination from :—

" The light that never was on sea or shore."

Whichever way we look, into whatever realm of life we enter, the immortal truth is seen shining more and more brightly unto the perfect day. LIFE, not death ; restoration, not ruin ; growth, not decay, are our inheritance and possession.—HENRY WHITE.

MAN AND EARTH: A CO-ORDINATED CREATION AND INTERDEPENDENT.—PART III.

BY BEN ISRAEL.

WE understand ourselves as now living in a state of trial and probation. Man's first age of probation ended at the Noachian Deluge. Ours begins with the Noachian Covenant. The whole period of probation has been divided, on account of progressive stages, into dispensations. Human probation will continue through the course of time until the last rebellion is begun against the King, the Lord Jesus Christ, at Jerusalem. The early and middle dispensations are distinguished by the gift to man of the Divinely-inspired Scriptures for our " reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness." Their warnings refer us to past judgments. Their prophecies of the future are infallible. Their subject-matter is wholly appertaining to the salvation of man from sin and its consequences, the judgments and destruction to come. Things irrelevant to this supreme proposition are not mentioned. Natural philosophers have often assumed that the Bible is unscientific, and reject its statements when they appear to conflict with scholastic reasoning, or when its phenomena are beyond the reach of inductive investigation. The Bible, however, is always proving itself accurate. The truth is, there is no such amazing correlation of mathematical accuracy to be found in the composition of any other book. There are no waste words. Jots and tittles cannot be allowed to pass without due attention. There is not an embellishment, poetical or otherwise, in all the sacred Canon merely for the sake of such. In all, literal fact and truth are expressed, profound or sublime. There are no errors of statement, though many have thought they could point to such. The manifold subjects introduced illustrate, or explain, the Kingdom of God, and man's relation thereto. Every word has its intrinsic value which has to be reckoned with in defining it in the particular construction where it is used. We do not weigh the words of Aristotle, Aurelius, Lord Bacon, or Emerson, in the same scales by which we determine the meaning and value of the sayings of Scripture. These have to be considered within the entire scope of their etymological horizon. The Biblical text embodies another principle unknown in secular literature, viz., numerical potentiality. Numbers are constantly involved in arriving at complete, mathematical conclusions of interpretation. From the facts before us it is obvious that the Bible cannot be analysed, measured or judged by the eschatology, rule, or standard of world books.

The first great crisis to occur in man's moral affairs after the flood resulted in the revolt of the Ten Tribes of Israel, the setting-up by Jeroboam of the Northern Kingdom, its subsequent overthrow, and the carrying away of Israel into captivity by Shalmaneser in the year 721 B.C. Israel, the great historical subject of the Bible, both as regards the Old Testament and the New, is that part of the Semitic race to whom has been committed through Abraham the Covenants of God and by whom the world is receiving the Divine message of Salvation ; the elect agent, under the administration of Our Lord Jesus Christ, by Whom the world is to be nationally redeemed from the hopeless disorder and confusion of the Satanic programme which we, complacently, have long laboured to reform, and have styled modern civilization. Israel's national beginning as separate from Judah was a failure. Idolatry was the sin and cause. Jehovah gave them, the Israelites, into captivity because of their defection from Him. Unto them was the prophet Jeremiah sent, and his burden is their idolatry and its consequences. The cry we hear is so unlike the voice of a man that we forget the mouthpiece and look up to Jehovah Who inspires it. " Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods ? But my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid ; be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils : they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water."—Jer. ii, 11-13. The numerical value is alarmingly manifest here ; the numbers are ominous.

This is Jehovah's first national arraignment of captive Israel in Assyria. He serves the complaint and immediately addresses the heavens, as if the ancient Eden overthrow and the waters of Noah were imminent before Him. The very fate of the universe is in the balance. We cannot regard Jehovah's attitude as a menace, but merely reference to the fact that the existence of the heavens depends upon the choice of Israel as between gods. " Be afraid ; be ye very desolate." The quantum in the Hebrew of this word desolate is the condition of emptiness resulting from a concrete overthrow and destruction. If the captivity of Israel had been the end of his probation, well might he have looked for a recurrence of the scene depicted in Gen. i, 2, as far as his surroundings were concerned ; though in this case, fire, instead of water, must be the agent ; the scene screened upon the heavens in prophetic vision, illuminated by flames of exploding, universal gases, the fusion of falling or colliding worlds. This apostrophe of Jehovah to the heavens establishes, in our conception, the altogether serious interdependent relationship between the Solar system and man; the quality being the equation upon which the statics of the celestial order is conditioned. It reveals, moreover, an amazing standard of comparative valuation. It would seem as if Jesus had this in mind when He asked the question, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or, what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" We do not know the ultimate worth of a human soul to God, or to ourself. Scripture affords a wide and remarkable purview of the valuation of humanity in the estimation of God. The cumulative evidence forces the thought upon us that man outweighs the whole material universe in the Divine scheme and calculation. We can only speculate here. It is sufficient to know that we are created in the image and likeness of God. It is past human wisdom and understanding that Jesus, the incarnate manifestation of Jehovah, should descend from the heavens and lay down His life in behalf of a rebellious and apostate race, considering the fact that no such provision interposed in behalf of angels who kept not their first estate. On the other hand, how are we indebted to such infinite love and favour? What immeasurable loss will be ours "If we neglect so great salvation!"

However, Our Lord Himself testifies that we are of very great value.

THE DAY OF THE LORD,* OR THE PERIOD OF TIME BETWEEN 1928 AND 1936 A.D.

AS REVEALED BY THE PROPHET JOEL, WHO GIVES EACH INCIDENT IN PROPER ORDER OF SEQUENCE FROM THE INVASION OF GOG TO THE ARMAGEDDON, BACKED BY THE PROPHETS EZEKIEL, ISAIAH, MICAH, ZECHARIAH AND OTHERS.

BY WM. REEVE (Toronto).

PART I.

IT has seemed strange to me that so many writers on prophetic subjects, relating to the next period of trouble, mix up the invasion of Russia-Gog upon Palestine with the battle of ARMAGEDDON.

This period of time is definitely set forth in the Great Pyramid as the King's Chamber Passage, composed of granite blocks, but practically the same dimensions as to height and width as the Antechamber Passage, which expressed, in inches, the duration of the late Great War in months, viz., 51¼, except that it is 101 inches in length.

It is not in the spirit of controversy, but rather a study of God's Word regarding this important time and to gather such facts in their proper order that harmony should take the place of discord.

From 1914 to 1936 is the period of the judgment of the nations. It is THE DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY.

But it is divided into various periods of time. First War, then Peace in Chaos, then a period of intense trouble.

God has been pleased to give to most of His Prophets glimpses of this period, each Prophet, perhaps, seeing one phase; the trouble is to assign each incident of this time to its proper place.

Isaiah and Micah do not see anything of the invasion of Russia-Gog. Ezekiel does not see anything else; it takes all his powers of description to do credit to it; but if we would remember that Ezekiel was carried captive as a prisoner by the King of Babylon, and marched a prisoner over the very ground that later he saw in prophetic vision, where another would-be World Power went down to its destruction, we have the explanation.

It is supposed that Ezekiel was about twenty-five years old when taken captive on that long march northward up the Valley of Lebanon, or, as he calls it, "The Valley of the Passengers." This would stamp itself on his memory and no doubt help him in his description of his prophetic vision. The modern name of this highway for travellers passing through Syria and Palestine is El-Bukka, "The Valley." It runs for one hundred miles between Libanus and Anti-Libanus, being from fifteen to twenty miles wide and sheltering some many towns and villages within it; its northern debouchment is at the entering in of Hamath.

It was in a small town, Riblah near Hamath, and situated at the northern extremity of this valley, that the Kings of Babylon used to direct the operations of their armies in Phœnicia and Palestine. There Ezekiel was herded with the other prisoners until the further march began. Also, it was there that King Zedekiah was taken before the King of Babylon and had judgment passed upon him in loss of sons, sight, throne and liberty.

It is not necessary here to give the allies of Russia in this invasion; but certain it is that they do not contain "ALL NATIONS." Neither does this invader get down as far as Megiddo, sixty miles south of Libanus; nor Jerusalem, one hundred and thirty miles away. Neither does there seem to be a pitched battle with "The Young Lions." Those most interested in opposing this invasion seem to begin and end with asking questions, according to Ezekiel.

Again, the enemy seems to know that he cannot touch the Israel People, for they are dwelling safely in the place appointed; but there is nothing to hinder him from making a bid for their "Land," so lately won back with the sword from the Turk.

To say that there is nothing there that would entice a nation to make war for gain is to put aside facts that have lately come to light regarding the Dead Sea; its chemical contents being so valuable that the tenders called for by the British Government, and now let, to exploit that body of water run into millions of pounds sterling.

I am inclined to think that God is contemptuous of Gog's invasion. "THOU HE"! No, you are not the one my Prophets have prophesied about. Nevertheless by your invasion of My land will I magnify Myself and sanctify Myself, and I will be known in the eyes of many nations and they shall know that "I AM THE LORD."

If Gog is not that great and final enemy God has in mind, gigantic as he may be, who can it be?

Some say there cannot be two invasions in the given time of eight years by two different armies for the conquest of the same country.

But why not?

I state here that the Prophet Joel gives in his second and third chapters a clear, straight-cut order of events covering this very period of time as shown by the King's Chamber Passage.

No Prophet, with the exception of Ezekiel and Joel, sees the invasion of "THE NORTHERN ARMY," or Russia-Gog. But both are as a unit as to the outcome of the invasion in that it is defeated not by human agency, but by God Himself.

Naturally each Prophet presents certain facts pertaining to his vision which the other does not see, but there is nothing in which they oppose each other.

Ezekiel is full in his statement as to who the contestants are, while Joel does not say who they might be, except their vastness in number.

To state that Gog comes against "The People of Israel" is to state what the Prophets make quite clear, but that does not mean that the People of Israel are settled in the Land of Palestine. Not one of the twelve tribes are there.

If the Jews go back at the rate they have been going, it will take them some seven hundred years to accomplish their migration, so they hardly count!

Britain must, of necessity, defend Palestine against the invasion of any foreign Power as she would London itself. Britain, because of a pledged word, went to the defence of Belgium! How much more for Jerusalem?

Joel starts off by saying—"Blow ye the trumpet in Zion and sound an alarm in My Holy Mountain; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble."

It should be distinctly understood that "Zion" and "My Holy Mountain" are not at Jerusalem at the present time, but in a different part of the world altogether. It is where the "House, Throne and Kingdom of the House of David" is domiciled. The centre of the evangelization of the world.

Ezekiel xvii, last three verses, contains a puzzle; have you ever read it? Well, God says, HE WOULD TAKE "THE TENDER TWIG" AND PLANT IT IN THE MOUNTAIN OF THE HEIGHT OF ISRAEL. This was 580 B.C. The House of Israel was not there officially till one thousand years later.

Now where was that? It was not to stay there indefinitely! but to be "Overturned, Overturned, Overturned" three times geographically—Ezekiel xxi, 27—and then once more, for the circle to be complete, back to Jerusalem.

But as it is not at Jerusalem now, where is it?

We can trace the first—From Palestine to Ireland;
second—Ireland to Scotland;
third—Scotland to England, where it now is.

So THE HOLY MOUNTAIN covers the British Isles, while "Zion" is the City of London, where the King's Palace is and the Nation's representatives meet.

Meanwhile "The Tender Twig" has grown into the mighty Cedar, sheltering people of every race, colour and tongue.

Ezekiel mentions a great shaking in the land of Israel; is that Palestine? Yes; but it is not confined to that country only. It says—"All men that are upon the face of the earth shall shake at My Presence."

Is that the same earthquake that splits Mount Olivet in twain in Zechariah xiv, 4? No! most certainly not.

Let us gather up the facts:—

God is very careful to state the reason for taking the action He does in regard to Gog.

First—His Glory.

Second—That His Name should be venerated in the midst of His People.

Third—That the heathen shall know that "I AM THE LORD, THE HOLY ONE IN ISRAEL."

Ezekiel, in his mind's eye, follows the subsequent burial of Gog, at the place he himself was held captive and a prisoner, and portrays the feast prepared for the wild animals, while Joel contents himself with mentioning the "stink" that would arise from the sudden death of such a vast number. Joel is far more interested in working up the spiritual life of the nation through the shock occasioned by the actual prospect of near war.

WAR! WAR! That which the nation hates! Has a horror of! WHAT CAN BE DONE TO AVOID IT?

So God prompts the nation by giving them "the spirit of supplication."

"Therefore, saith the Lord, also now, turn ye even to Me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning; and rend your heart and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God; for He is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil: Who knoweth if he will return and repent and leave a blessing behind him; even a meat offering and a drink offering unto the Lord your God."

Joel ii, 15—"Blow the trumpet in Zion," which is London in England, and by wireless to every part of the Empire.

"Sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly; gather the People, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, and those that suck the breasts; . . . . let the Priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say—

"Spare Thy People, O Lord, and give not Thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen—'Should rule over them'—wherefore should they say among the people:—'Where is their God?'"

So here we have:—

First—The invasion: Israel is not the aggressor.

Second—God's prompting and incentive to the Israel People.

Third—The sanctification of the People.

Fourth—The answer: what is it?

There are two answers:—

"Then will the Lord be jealous for His Land, and pity His People. Yea, the Lord will answer and say unto His People, behold I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall 'Be satisfied therewith'; and I will no more make you a reproach 'Among the heathen.'" with his face toward the East Sea (Caspian Sea) and his hinder part toward the Utmost Sea (Mediterranean Sea), and his ill savour shall come up because he hath done great things." Tried but failed.

BUT I WILL

"FEAR NOT, O LAND: BE GLAD AND REJOICE: FOR THE LORD WILL DO GREAT THINGS." "Cannot fail."

"Be not afraid ye beasts of the field."

"Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God."

For He hath given you a teacher of righteousness, according to righteousness, and "He will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain."

This teacher of righteousness is no doubt Elijah.—See Malachi iv, 5-6. "Behold I will send you Elijah the Prophet,

BEFORE THE COMING OF THE GREAT AND DREADFUL DAY OF THE LORD, and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers."

SOME HARD SAYINGS OF JESUS.

BY JOSEPH GAY.

No. 3.—"And, behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last."—St. Luke xiii, 30.

WE must accustom ourselves to the Saviour's arithmetic before we can appreciate its truth, for it is so different to the arithmetic of the world. In the world the first are first, and the last are last. The revolution which Christ here suggests is unknown to the world. On this basis the cosmos, so we think, could scarcely be held together. The nations govern on the principle that the first must be first, and the last must be last. All laws are made to conserve the opportunities and privileges of the first, and the contentment of the last, "in the sphere in which they were born, and the station of life in which they were brought up," to quote Bishop Butler in his speech at the founding of the Westminster Charity School. Christ warned His privileged hearers, for so the Jews regarded themselves, that it was quite possible for many of them, first now, to be last then; while thousands, afar off in the darkness of heathendom, might supplant them and, though last, become first. Christ here warns against the insecurity of privilege. It is a warning which Israel-Britain might very well take to herself just now. Let us view the situation then from Christ's standpoint.

THE SAVIOUR'S STANDPOINT.

Christ was face to face with an almost insuperable difficulty in dealing with Israel-Judah, a difficulty which did not exist anywhere else, among any other peoples. It arose out of the undoubted privilege which the people of God enjoyed as the chosen of God. It was a privilege of which Jewry was fully conscious and in which she greatly rejoiced. "We be Abraham's seed and were never in bondage to any man." So blind was the prejudice which rested in the privilege which was theirs that, at the very time that they were smarting under the heel of the oppressor, they could say, "We were never in bondage to any man."

The teaching of Jesus was well suited to meet the need of the unprivileged Gentile, but was not suited to the superior requirements of the Jew, and that because it did not take sufficient cognizance of the fact that the Jew was already the chosen of the Lord. So they thought and so they viewed the Messianic claims of Jesus of Nazareth, rejecting them in consequence. Hence Christ's difficulty in getting a foothold amongst His own people. Christ saw the cardinal mistake which they were making, for they always regarded the Theocratic Kingdom of Israel as synonymous with the Kingdom of God, so much so, that in their esteem and regard it was the Kingdom of God and there was no other as far as this world was concerned. To be in the one therefore was to be in the other. To the Jew the Theocratic Kingdom of Israel was the Kingdom of God. Hence the evident surprise of Nicodemus when Our Saviour burst in upon him with vehement insistence, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

"You are a ruler in Israel," Our Lord said in effect, "but if you would enter the Kingdom of God there must be a change so radical and so complete as to constitute a new birth, an entirely new beginning."

Let us face the fact. You may be in the Theocratic Kingdom of Israel-Britain, enjoying all the undoubted privileges of such membership; you may even be highly placed in that Kingdom, and yet not even see the Kingdom of God, much less enter into it. Don't let us deceive ourselves. "There may be last which shall be first, and first which shall be last."

I pause here to observe that precisely the same thing pertains to the Church relative to the Kingdom of God.

Of course I know that there is a double use of the word Church which makes it a little difficult to follow. The Apostles taught that the Church was the Body of Christ. They never meant by that the Church, as we so often use the word, as signifying that organization represented by buildings and Church rolls of membership, etc. That Church may be regarded as organized Christianity, and such a Church is by no means synonymous with the Kingdom of God.

The Christian may regard himself as a privileged person, or even relative to the heathen a superior person; he nevertheless may not be in the Kingdom of God. It is just here that the last may be first, and the first last. If this be so, it may be well for us to enquire more nearly into the nature of the Kingdom, the laws which govern the Kingdom and the conditions of entrance into the Kingdom.

(1) THE NATURE OF THE KINGDOM.

"My Kingdom," said Christ, "is not of this world." It is therefore a spiritual Kingdom. As the Apostle James suggests, "It cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." No intelligent British-Israel believer denies that for a single moment. "The Kingdom of God is within you." (St. Luke xvii, 21.) "The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Romans xiv, 17.) It is a Kingdom eternal, invisible, yet always operative, always present. It lays hold upon man's moral and spiritual nature, and its appeal is to grace, and truth, and love. Though the expression, "the Kingdom of Grace," so familiar to us, is nowhere to be found in the Gospels, and even the word "grace," in the Pauline sense, is of rare occurrence, still it is a Kingdom of Grace. St. Luke says very significantly, "All bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth." (St. Luke iv, 22.) The reference is to the substance of the discourse, not to its manner.

Now we may get an insight into the nature of this Kingdom of Grace if we note the kind of people which, chiefly and by preference, Christ invited to enter the Kingdom. He preached the Gospel of the Kingdom to the poor. Both by direct speech and by parable He is always inviting the moral lepers to enter. The Book of the Prophet Isaiah was delivered to Him in the synagogue and He, with great deliberation, selected that passage which justified His actions. (St. Luke iv, 18.)

In self-defence and self-justification He said, "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners." "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." He threw the gates of the Kingdom open to all comers irrespective of antecedent character, even if they had been really as bad as the Pharisees deemed those whom they branded as "publicans and sinners." Yes! and the invitations He extended to these morally disreputable persons were accepted by them and they became His most loyal and devoted followers. The Kingdom of God had indeed suffered violence, and the violent had taken it by force. (St. Matthew xi, 12.)

"The Kingdom of God," writes Dr. A. B. Bruce, "was being made a cave of Adullam, whither everyone that was in distress or deep in moral debt resorted." It was being taken from those who thought they had an exclusive moral right to it, and that by those who knew that they could not possibly have any moral right to anything. They accepted Christ's invitation to enter the Kingdom of God as a gift of grace. It could not be anything else in their case. They looked upon it as God's sovereign unmerited love to unworthy men, blessing them with pardon, and so gaining power over their hearts and lives. The rule and reign of the Kingdom of truth and light, the Kingdom of God, was in them a very real rule and reign. By such behaviour Christ taught that the Kingdom of God is a Kingdom of Grace leading on to a Kingdom of Holiness. From all this it follows that the Kingdom of God in its nature moves out towards universalism. This is really the emphasis of the election of race as well as the election of grace. "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." (Gen. xii, 3; xxviii, 14.) In accepting the dwellers in the highways and hedges, in encouraging the publicans and sinners, in welcoming a Magdalene as well as a Nicodemus, Christ said in effect, "The Kingdom of God is for all who need it, and who make it welcome. It opens its gates, like ancient Rome, to all comers on condition that they conduct themselves as good citizens once they are within its walls. From east, west, north, south, let them come; they shall not be refused admittance."

In Christ's conception of the nature of the Kingdom of God lies the real reason for His command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." (St. Mark xvi, 15.)

There is an alternative name for the Kingdom of God which St. Matthew alone uses. He calls it the "Kingdom of Heaven." This again emphasizes the spiritual character of the Kingdom as if it hovered over us, as something above us though not beyond us. Christ did not mean by this alternative title for the Kingdom that it was something separate from the world; rather that its genius and spirit was from above, working through love in the hearts of all men; rather in its clear declaration that the Kingdom was not to be the fulfilment of the theocratic hopes of Israel, but the realization of the hopes of God in the redemption of Israel, and the salvation of the whole world.

(2) THE LAWS OF THE KINGDOM.

The laws which govern this spiritual Kingdom may be summed up in one word, LOVE. This love is no vague, weak, sentimental thing. It is rather that element in man which makes for strong and stable character. Christ defining His relationship to the Mosaic law and ritual said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." (St. Matthew xxii, 37.)

St. James has surely this word of Our Lord in his mind when he speaks of "the perfect law of liberty." "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus."

The law of love in the Kingdom of God creates an atmosphere in which the spiritual life, quickened in the soul as he enters the Kingdom, grows, a liberty in which it expands, and a freedom to do the will of the God of the Kingdom in which the bondage of conventional religious law has no power to bind either the will or the conscience. The law of the Kingdom is the law of mutual abiding in the love of Christ. Read once more in this connection that very familiar fifteenth chapter of St. John, which begins, "I am the true vine, and My Father is the husbandman." Have special regard to those words, "If ye keep My commandments ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My Father's commandments and abide in His love."

"A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another, even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

Christ's metaphors of the Kingdom indicate the laws which govern the Kingdom. Seed and seed sowing, vineyard and husbandry, nets and fishing, stones and building.

In the coming of the Holy Ghost and the cloven tongues of fire you have a great law of the Kingdom, the law of fire; the law of discipline and correction, the law of cleansing, the law of heart-searching power.

(3) THE CONDITIONS OF ENTRANCE INTO THE KINGDOM.

We have anticipated these conditions somewhat in dealing with the kind of persons which Our Lord invited to enter the Kingdom; still much more remains to be said along that line.

The entrance itself is by no means easy to find and in consequence involves diligent search on the part of the entrant.

"Because straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." (St. Matthew vii, 14.)

"For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." (St. Matthew v, 20.) The righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees can be easily discerned, analysed and understood; postulate its antithesis and you have the righteousness which will entitle you to entrance into the Kingdom of God.

There is an election of race as well as an election of grace. Yes! the Bible makes that abundantly clear. But it is the election of grace which is operative here. In entering the Kingdom of God the election of race avails nothing. No word of Our Lord is more emphatic than the one which destroys the Jewish notion that by election of race they are entitled to all the blessings and privileges of the Kingdom of God. "The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." (St. Matthew xxi, 43.)

"Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance; and think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father; for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." (St. Matthew iii, 8, 9.)

The fruits of the Kingdom of God are "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost"; all spiritual values, spiritually discerned and spiritually received. "Except a man be born of water (cleansed every whit) and of the Spirit (sanctified wholly) he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." (St. John iii, 5.)

When you judge by these standards then it is easy to realize that there are not a few first now who will be last then; and last now who will be first then.

If all this be true, then what is the precise value of the Israel Kingdom—what the precise relationship of that Kingdom to the Kingdom of God? This question St. Paul answered in dealing with the Jew. In the second chapter of his Epistle to the Romans, dealing with these selfsame spiritual matters, he drives home his conclusions with unfaltering precision. (Verses 28, 29.)

Then he asks the question about the Jew which we ask here about the Israel Kingdom: "What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God."

What advantage then hath Israel-Britain, and what profit is there in her calling and election? Much every way; chiefly because unto her is committed in a marked degree the oracles of God, and the Gospel of His Grace.

The call of Israel-Britain is not so much to privilege as to service. Would it not be truer to say, called to the privilege of service? Let us not despise our birthright nor reverse the order of God's Divine ordination.

AN OUTLINE OF AN ADDRESS AT HEADQUARTERS.

BY THE REV. R. G. F. WADDINGTON, M.A.

"IMPRESSIONS OF PALESTINE."

SOME of you, like Mr. Garrison, have been in the Holy Land, and have been on much the same tour that I was privileged to take only a few weeks ago. A good deal of what I may say will be familiar to you, and yet I hope it may be of some benefit, as all eyes do not see alike and all minds do not grasp the same ideas in the same way.

The background of my talk may be summed up in one word—CONTRASTS. If there was one thing that struck me and the other friends with me above everything else it was the amazing contrast between things British and things foreign.

From a British-Israel point of view Palestine is tremendously inspiring. If I had not been a convinced British-Israelite before I went, this tour would have made me one, because I should have had to ask myself this question—Why is there such a difference between British methods and foreign methods? It did not matter whether it was the Customs, traffic regulations, law and order, Government, or matters as food, the difference between the British and the foreign is most striking.

On our way we saw the Great Pyramid from the outside, the Sphinx and the Tutankhamen relics. It is a fact that every single discovery for the last 50 years or so in Palestine and other Bible lands have confirmed the Bible statements and confounded the higher critics. When I was in the Museum in Cairo, I was keenly interested in a vesture of gold. Psalm xlv is one of the Psalms which the higher critics have called utterly absurd. Verse 13 speaks of the clothing of the king's daughter being of "wrought gold." Some of the higher critics say there is no such thing as wrought gold, yet one of the things discovered in King Tutankhamen's tomb was literally a robe of wrought gold—gold beaten out into such fine, thin plates that under the glass it almost looked like golden crêpe-de-chine.

From the point of view of contrast, when Egypt was under British rule, and the police force directly under British authority, there was law and order in the land. One member of our party from Manchester had been out in Egypt before the war, when the British had complete control of Egypt, and he noticed a tremendous difference since Egypt obtained what is, to a large extent, Home Rule. There is now no law or order; it is all confusion. To-day, when the police give orders to crowds or individuals, there is a twenty minutes' argument, and the crowd goes on doing what it likes!

The Egyptian police do not regulate traffic nearly so well as the Arab policemen in Palestine.

One has a striking example of the confusion prevailing to-day when one reaches the boundary between Egypt and Palestine. On one side of the boundary there is confusion and on the other side peace. Such confusion would not be allowed in England, and you will not find it in Palestine under British rule.

As we moved from Kantara to Lud we passed Gaza, and at Gaza a British sergeant and 20 "Tommies" of the Palestine Police Force got into the train. Naturally we got into conversation with them, and we had an exceedingly interesting time up to Jerusalem. The sergeant told us that three weeks before there had been a religious riot, and he and his men had been sent down to put things straight. Notice it, an English sergeant and twenty men. At the end of a fortnight the sergeant considered things were sufficiently peaceable and orderly for him and his men to return to headquarters. Two years ago there was a religious riot in the streets of Damascus, which is under French control. The French shelled the city, laid nearly one-quarter of it in ruins, and killed and wounded many people, and it took the French months to restore order, as their action had resulted in a street riot developing into a rebellion.

Another contrast. As we passed through Palestine we saw everywhere the results of British administration. It is a very beautiful journey from Lud through the hill country of Judæa to Jerusalem, because there are no tunnels, in spite of the fact that it is a hilly country. There is a large area fenced off, where the British have planted olive, fig, pine and sycamore trees, so that the land of Palestine may be replanted with trees. In about ten years over four million trees have been planted. Towards Jerusalem one sees the restoration of the old terraced fields of gardens on the mountain sides. There are no fields such as we have in England, as there are no level plains in the lower part of Palestine. One also sees the wild flowers of Palestine growing in profusion, making a perfect picture.

Palestine is the home of our forefathers, and it is the Holy Land, sacred because of its associations with Our Blessed Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. But the Romans, the Greeks, Armenians, Coptics and Syrians seem to have vied with one another in the discovery of traditional sites, and have made no distinction between the sublime and the grotesque.

What a striking contrast there is between the Church of the Holy Sepulchre and that place discovered by General Gordon and known to-day as the Garden Tomb, which is outside the city walls. This was indeed a place where I felt I wanted to take my hat off.

Another place where I felt I was treading on holy ground was in Galilee. It is one of the most beautiful spots I have ever seen in my life. I felt it was a place that was blessed by the presence of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and I could feel it because there is not a single erection there. The whole countryside is utterly unspoilt by hideous erections. Even the traditional place of the Sermon on the Mount has not been touched, and there is a totally different atmosphere in Galilee. That was the most interesting part of our tour. An interesting thing from my point of view was to see the development that had taken place in Palestine during the last ten years. Everything in that respect is most interesting, most educational, and makes one feel proud of being British. It makes one feel thankful that Turkish rule has come to an end. One can see that prophecy being literally fulfilled, that the "land that was desolate shall become like the Garden of Eden."

One thing that surprised me was the response of the Arabs to British rule; it has been more pronounced than the response of the Zionist Jews. The opportunities that have been given to both have been made much more of by the Arabs. I think possibly the reason is that most of the Zionist Jews who have begun to develop the fields in the north of Palestine and round about Jerusalem have been so used to commerce and trading for centuries that they have not been able to "catch on" to agriculture; whereas the Arabs have been used to it all their lives. Certainly it is true, whatever the reason for the contrast.

I was tremendously interested in the Arab officials. The Arab policemen regulating the traffic in Jerusalem were as good, I think, as the London "bobbies." The order that was kept was excellent; this is worth noticing. There is a Palestinian police force; only 172 are British, the rest are mostly Arabs, and those Arabs have taken on to British methods in a most wonderful manner.

One other contrast. One of the interesting things we saw in French Syria was that old heathen temple of Baalbec. Tremendously interesting from the architectural point of view and from the standpoint of beauty, and it was most interesting to me from the "contrast" point of view. You will remember that it was the British who turned the Turks out of Palestine and Syria, and it was the British who turned the Turks out of Baalbec. When the British had taken possession of this old heathen temple, they held a Christian service there. The British chaplain in charge conducted the service, and thanks and praise and prayer were offered to the Lord Jesus Christ by a few thousand British "Tommies." Some few years afterwards, when the mandate for Syria was given to the French, they held a celebration in Baalbec; not a religious service, no glory to Almighty God symbolizing the defeat of heathenism and the victory of Christianity, but an orgy on the old heathen lines—dancing and rioting.

ISAAC NEWTON—WILLIAM BLAKE, 1927.

BY E. J. WHELDON.

BEYOND the mere coincidence of date, there might appear to be little significance in the almost simultaneous celebration of the centenaries (or, more correctly, the bicentenary and centenary respectively) of two men so characteristically British in personality yet apparently at such opposite poles of temperament as Sir Isaac Newton and William Blake. The one the precisian-mathematician, physicist, astronomer; the other the mystic-poet and artist.

Yet it is worth while to-day to inquire whether there be not in fact, despite the general failure to note it, a deeper significance than at first appears in the highest common factor in the outlook of two geniuses of so diametrically diverse types.

The obstinate obsession of the public mind with the supposedly materialistic basis of modern science (which ignores its supersession in the perception of the scientist himself) has obscured or glossed over one particular phase of Newton's gigantic intellectual activity in direct conflict with the so-called "rationalism"—a pose of complacent indifference—that is widely prevalent to-day. The fact remains, however, that for Newton, as perhaps more obviously for Blake, the Hebrew Scriptures—in the superb native idiom of the English Bible—constitute the real basis upon which the greatest work of each was founded.

Not the most dispassionate and unemotional scientist alive would dismiss as rhetorical hyperbole Lord Balfour's recent assertion that "never had there been in the world of science so great a mind as Sir Isaac Newton." But eulogist and commentator alike have conspired to burke the fact that Newton's achievement did not end with the mechanics of the Solar System, nor his analysis with the Theory of Fluxions. Even technically his preoccupation was centric. For the orbit of the furthest star in space the Law of Gravity demanded the definition of a centre—or, in the idiom of Einstein, a frame of reference that defined a centre. Is it then, by a conspiracy of silence, to pass unnoted that to Newton also the world is equally indebted for the solution of Hebrew prophetic cipher which has made possible the integration "from everlasting to everlasting"—from minus infinity to plus infinity—of the transcendent Purpose with which, in ultimate "relativity," the destiny of Man is for ever linked? Not only has this achievement unlocked the cryptic utterances of the Hebrew seers, but it has re-set the Bible (for those who will but take the trouble to study it) in its rightful position of supreme authority vice the sophistries of the school-men, transforming what they complacently deprecate and dismiss as "apocalyptic ecstasies" into a historically unfolding fact of such dazzling promise that human eyes, half-atrophied in a self-willed Twilight of the Gods, are slowly, if painfully, opening to the imminent Day-spring of the "Sun of Righteousness," dawning upon a world that needs, as never before so sorely, the potent healing in His wings.

Nor does Newton's significance stand alone. Let Blake—the Elisha of a century later—in turn decipher the decipherer'!

A review in The Times (August 12th, 1927) superbly stresses the esoteric implication of "the extraordinary popularity of 'Jerusalem'"—that poem whose flame of transcendent purpose burns in, but not consumes, a bush deep-rooted in English soil. "We bow to the authorities," the writer proceeds—those "authorities" whose brother-pundits in Biblical Higher Criticism equally fail to see wood for the trees—"but there is something more. Lurking in the 'Prophetic Books,' rising like an overtone from the chiming of the authorities, too hastily materialized by the 'Ancients' (as, for the Bible, too hastily 'spiritualized'—E. J. W.), there is something which has actually passed into the racial consciousness and found expression in the extraordinary popularity of 'Jerusalem.' It has become almost a second National Anthem—nay, if it be not disloyal to say so, it has come to stand for something that the National Anthem fails to express: the private loyalty to some Little England—the white and secret 'Albion' of Blake's imagination—upon which public loyalty to the larger England of the National Anthem ultimately depends."

Few of us but would unhesitatingly transpose "Little" and "larger" in the final sentence. The basic loyalty, here detected but not identified with its real focus, is the instinctive, racial loyalty to the British ISRAEL: the public loyalty, as yet superficial, is narrowed in application only to the Empire and United States which are the veiling synonyms of ultimate identity.

What need to look further, then, for explanation of the unifying and common intuition of Sir Isaac Newton and William Blake? The answer lies in the composite unity of the Bible and its prophecy—the "immanent, rather than the actual, in the England that we know" (still to quote The Times' article cited above).

But the community of intuition between these two British minds runs deeper yet. Newton's association with research into the ancient systems of metrology is well known to readers of Davidson or Piazzi Smyth. The findings of that research were essential prolegomena to the comprehension of the Great Pyramid's message to our time and people, precisely as the determination of the cipher-unit was the condition precedent to the modern understanding of the counterpart prophecy of the Bible itself.

Mark then the significance of the reviewer's next unconsciously invaluable obiter dictum: ". . . . . though reference is wanting, we have read somewhere that Blake was interested in some 'Druidical' cult"!

Here, indeed, is a clue for correlation after Mr. Davidson's own heart. Nor is it the only one. Not Colonel Waddell alone blazes the trail from Brit to Briton. So long ago as 1899, Prof. J. Morris Jones remarked the parallelism in structure between the Egyptian and Welsh languages (vide his "Pre-Aryan Syntax in Insular Celtic": Appendix B. "The Welsh People," by Rhys and Brynmor-Jones). To-day, the pages of Mr. H. J. Massingham's "Downland Man" are fresh with the dews, not only of recent publication, but of the thyme-scented chrism of the English Downs. Stonehenge . . . Avebury . . . Silbury "Hill" . . . "towering conceptions" in structural hieroglyph, each "a stone island (in the Stone Kingdom!) drifted nearly 4,000 years from the happy potencies of its past."

But what of Silbury, schematic outpost of metropolitan Avebury itself? A hill? No—nothing less than England's greatest Pyramid, whose flowered turf has blended its outline—as Time its symbolic meaning—with the fateful background of "England's green and pleasant land"!

Hear Mr. Massingham a little further in conclusion:

"Is it because the idea of culture-diffusion is so upsetting and the stream of Nile so erosive of petrified tradition that our wise men will not accept it? Or because within its ovary lies a seed promising a more dangerous growth than has ever been fertilized from the antiquary's garden? . . . . . The ruins of all these imposing monuments are everywhere about us. Yet, are they and all their fellows really gone—are they altogether dispossessed of that magic energy with which all men endowed them? No: something lingers, something not the work of unpremeditating primitives, but of men to whom, in the final account, you owe your cities, government, and social organism; and not one bone in the anatomy of the Leviathan of State but was built of their dust and of the thoughts that made the power in us."

We pride ourselves to-day upon the towering pinnacle of our empirical achievement. The conventions of our very mathematicians shame the narrow dogmatism of our own conventional ignorance. Shall we cling to the outworn "rationalism" of Euclid, or, tutored by those whom we acclaim, shall we conceive the possibility of rigid parallelism—between the water-tight compartments of our thought and knowledge—proving but radial lines within the circle of Infinity?

But parallel lines may be extended "both ways." If one extension—of origin—prove centric, why not that too of ultimate goal? Is there not One Who is both Alpha and Omega of our destiny—at once the Author and Finisher of our faith?

A JEW'S TESTIMONY.

I, CYRIL LEACH, a Jew of pure extraction, write testifying to the great light given me by British-Israel Truth, and how, through this wonderful key to the Bible, I came to the belief that Jesus Christ is of truth the Son of God and the Redeemer of Israel.

I come from a line of Rabbis on both my father's and my mother's side—teachers known far and wide in Russia and Palestine for their piety, charity and wide learning. Indeed, one of my great-grandfathers has to this day a synagogue dedicated to his name in the Holy City. My instruction in Hebrew and the Scriptures in general was not very profound, and it was not until I reached the age of sixteen that I began to reflect at all seriously or deeply about religion.

One of the first things that sorely perplexed me was the position of my own people in the world. As I looked around and saw the forlorn condition of the Jews, without king or country, with the God-given laws of Moses but subject to the man-made laws of the country they chanced to live in, I began to wonder whether the words " God's Chosen People " were not mere platitudes. The Jews were not even a nation, yet God Almighty had most solemnly sworn that Israel should not cease from being a nation before Him as long as the sun and the moon and the stars gave their light. Why had our people no king when God had sworn to David : " Thy throne shall be established for ever " ? (2 Sam. vii, 12–16.) God said to Abraham : " Behold My Covenant is with thee, and thou shall be the father of many nations." These and many other points led me to doubt whether the Bible after all was God's Word.

Another source of wonderment to me was the magnificent way Jews are treated all over the great British Empire and in America. No restrictions of any kind were placed on them, they were free to aspire to the highest positions in the State, and yet I was assured that the Saxon people were a Gentile people—inferior as regards race to the Jews.

I remember asking my father : " If the Jews are God's Chosen People, why is such a wonderful Empire, carrying justice to the uttermost ends of the earth, given to a Gentile people, who are doing the very work the Jews should be doing ? " I was told that it was impossible for the Jews as a persecuted race to do this work, but I thought that if God had said it would be Israel's work, He would take care to see that His people would be in a position to fulfil His words.

Mr. David Muir now appeared on my troubled horizon, and in a short time we began chatting about various religious topics. One day he put this question, one which set me on quite a new line of enquiry and thought : " Why do your people in Jerusalem," he asked, " stand every Friday at the Wailing Place and weep for their brethren of the lost tribes ? " I answered : " What lost tribes : the Jews are the whole of Israel, are they not ? " When I got home that night I put the same question to our people, but though I found it was a fact, I could get no answer. For weeks I interrogated everyone of my acquaintances I happened to meet, and at last I found that the word Jew is a generic name for the descendants of the Southern Kingdom of Israel, known of old as Judea. Where was the other part of the nation then ? That was the question I set myself to answer. Vanished, lost, destroyed, but all the prophets continued to speak of them.

One day Mr. Muir lent me a book setting out what appeared to me at that time a preposterous idea, that the Saxon race is the continuation of the Northern Kingdom of Israel carried into captivity in 721 B.C.—a long time before the Southern Kingdom of Judea (the Jews) was shattered by Babylon. I laughed at the notion that an uncircumcised people, who believed in an impostor called Christ Who set Himself up as the Son of God, could be of the seed of Abraham.

For the first time in my life I began a most careful search of the Word of God—the acid test of all religious movements—to see if there was any truth in this astounding assertion. To my intense surprise I found that prophecy after prophecy had materialized and was in the process of materializing in the Saxon people.

These were some of the prophecies relating to the Jews :—

That they should become a by-word and a reproach. (Jer. xxiv, 9.)—Fulfilled in the Jewish people.

To be without might. (Jer. xix, 7.)—Fulfilled in the Jews.

To be strangers in all lands. (Jer. xv, 4.)—Fulfilled in the Jews.

And scores of others.

Now why should not these material promises made to Israel also be materially fulfilled :—

To be a multitudinous people. (Hos. i, 10.)

To be a powerful nation. (Isa. xli, 12.)

To wander for many years and find an island home in the West. (Isa. xlix, 1–8.)

To have the kingdom and a national existence : A perpetual monarchy, and that monarch of David's line. (Jer. xxxiii, 21, 22.)

To be a Christian people " All taught of God." (Isa. liv, 13.)

Israel to be driven out from their own land, sown among the nations, lost to view, to be sought out and found, and to become the sons of God, and then to be used for the conversion of the world. (Hos. ii, 23.)

To be the chief among the nations. (Isa. liv, 15–17.)

And numerous others.

I now saw quite clearly that it is discrediting God's Holy Name and His reputation as a God Who fulfils His promises to the very letter to assert that the Jews form the whole seed of Israel.

I have since read many books, listened to many lectures, and have found, in addition to the pure testimony of God's Holy Word, the witness of profane history to the great truth that the Saxon people form the major portion of God's people Israel, and that it needs only the reunion of the House of Judah (the Jews) to form once more the whole House of Israel, to be ruled by one of the House of David.

From boyhood upwards I had been taught to regard the Name of Jesus Christ with contempt, as a false teacher, and many other epithets—sometimes, I regret to say, of a blasphemous nature. I found it a hard struggle even to listen to His Name, but once more I went back to the Bible, as I had been taught by British-Israel Truth, and faced the issue honestly. I already knew that the greater part of Israel knew Christ as the Redeemer of Israel and the Saviour of the World, but what brought the truth home to me with overwhelming force was the amazing fact that all the glorious promises in the Old Testament regarding the Messiah were literally fulfilled in Jesus Christ. Passages in Isaiah were a great help to me : " A virgin shall conceive and bear a Son and call His Name Immanuel, and He shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Almighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

MR. AND MRS. GARRISON returned from their tours in Belgium and the Duchy of Luxembourg on July 23rd, in time to welcome to London our American friends—Dr. and Mrs. McConnell and Captain and Mrs. Ward. Information gained and impressions formed will in due course be presented in articles and lectures, for which much material and hundreds of pictures were obtained. Courtesy and cordial assistance from Cabinet Ministers, officials and citizens made journeys and experiences easy and pleasant. Many scenes of great battles and many British cemeteries were visited; the latter are beautifully kept. The restoration of the whole country from the ravages of war, and the rich cultivation almost everywhere, astonished us. The Belgian people heartily welcome British tourists, who are going over in great numbers. The sea trip—Dover to Ostend—is at this time of the year quite delightful. Tourist fares are in force up to the middle of September. Season tickets are issued for either five days or fifteen days over the whole of the Belgian Railway system at fares so cheap that we marvel as to how it can be done at the price. Week-end tickets are also issued, and for these no passports are needed. Special cheap return tickets have been arranged for the August Bank Holiday, available each day from August 1st to 6th. All particulars can be obtained from the Office of the Belgian National Railways, 47, Cannon Street, E.C.4.

A delightful Garden Party for the members and friends of our Hastings and St. Leonards Branch was given on July 25th by Dr. and Mrs. Maxwell, at Meopham Bank, Hastings, under ideal weather conditions. The President of the B.-I.-W.F.—Major Knowles (who was accompanied by Mrs. Knowles)—presided over a large company and gave an address.

The Rev. G. H. Lancaster, M.A., Mr. John Leech, K.C., Colonel E. F. Gosset, and Mr. Herbert Garrison also gave addresses. Tea was served on the lawn, and gave opportunity for pleasant social intercourse. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Canon Savage, M.A. The proceedings were closed by the singing of the National Anthem. We offer our congratulations to Dr. and Mrs. Maxwell, Mr. and Mrs. Holbrook, Mr. and Mrs. Modin and their helpers on the success achieved in perfect arrangements, and we thank them for a very happy time. We also thank Mrs. Carter for her kind hospitality in providing lunch for the London party.

Our lecture rooms at Headquarters were crowded on July 26th, when we welcomed the Rev. Dr. Lincoln McConnell from Florida, U.S.A. The President, Major Knowles, presided. The Rev. Commander Roberts offered prayer. Dr. McConnell has a commanding presence and a strong personality, combined with natural geniality. His voice would easily be heard in the Albert Hall. He at once arrested the attention of the audience and held it throughout his striking address; indeed, he captivated his hearers. His telling points went home every time, and his splendid testimony to the power of the Gospel and the truth of B.-I. teaching called forth very great applause. Conviction and sincerity are absolute with him. He will be a great asset at the coming Congress. The President and the Secretary-General voiced the thanks and warm appreciation of the audience, to whom Major Knowles presented Mrs. McConnell and Captain and Mrs. Ward. A large number partook of tea after the meeting. Our visitors are now on the way to Egypt and Palestine. They return to us (D.V.) in the last week of September.

Reviewing the growth of the Bedford Branch during the past year, the Annual Report says: "A most successful year sums up the activities of this Branch, and by the grace of God we intend our Message to create a stir, and to counter the apathy towards the Bible. . . . Let us not fall short of our high calling for service in the Kingdom."

A special eight days' Mission on the Southport Sands was held from July 15th to 22nd by Mr. Wm. Whitton, who gave fifteen addresses, each lasting at least an hour. The audiences were deeply interested, many testifying to the benefit they had received; some, hearing the Message for the first time, gave in their names for further information. Several residents joined the Southport Branch as a result of the meetings. Another Mission is asked for during the winter months. Hundreds of copies of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE were distributed amongst the visitors.

A Mission on the Sands at Bridlington commences at 3 p.m. on Sunday, August 12th, continuing each afternoon and evening until Sunday, the 19th. The meetings will be held on the SOUTH SHORE, and friends are requested to look out for the FLAGS. The prayers of British-Israelites are earnestly requested on behalf of this Mission.

* * *

Good work was accomplished at Finsbury Park on Sunday July 22nd, by the interest aroused in some of the listeners. Mr. Pilcher acted as chairman, and Mr. Tester and Mr. Innes were the speakers at the afternoon gathering. The speakers in the evening, under the same chairman, were Mr. Barrow and Mr. McKelvey.

ENGAGEMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

GLASTONBURY, Assembly Rooms, Annual Summer Convention, Monday, 6th, to Friday, 10th. Two meetings daily, 11 a.m. and 8 p.m.

HULL, Church Institute, Albion Street, Tuesday, 7th, 7.30. Mrs. Foxhall.

HYDE PARK, Open-Air Meeting, Sunday, 5th, 3.30 and 7.30.

LIVERPOOL, Common Hall, Hackins Hey, Dale Street, Thursday, 9th, 7.45 Questions and Bible Study.

NOTTINGHAM, Friar Lane Schools, Thursday, 9th, 7.30.

OXFORD, Headington Baptist Church, Sunday, 5th, services at 11 and 6.30, Rev. Joseph Gay.

RHYMNEY, British-Israel Hall, Tuesday, 7th, 7 p.m.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—V.

MOSES THE GREATEST OF THE PROPHETS, NEXT TO OUR LORD (concluded).

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

We have looked at the Universal prophetic history, a synopsis of which is given by Moses under the following heads: Universal; Cosmic; the World; History beginning with the descent marked as follows:—God; Adam; Seth; and so on to Noah. Noachic; Shemitic; Abrahamic; to Israel.

We have looked at that history which is founded upon the Abrahamic Covenant which has its beginning in the 12th chapter of Genesis, and its continuation in the racial development to the end of time. The Covenant thus made with Abraham is the basis of all God's dealings with the peoples of the earth from both the national and the spiritual sense.

We have looked at the history of the activity of the person Abraham and of the nation Israel during the time of the organization of the Kingdom of God, up to the time of the death of Moses.

We must now turn to that other distinct phase of Mosaic prophecy which is contained in the predictive element of his writings.

Among the great prophetic messages of Moses, the first to which we should call attention—passing over many because of lack of space—is contained in the 40th chapter of Exodus. It is a wonderful chapter, and, considering the fact that it is taken up with details of the construction and furnishing of the Tabernacle, a wonderfully beautiful piece of literature. It begins with these specific words:—

"On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation. And thou shalt put therein the ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the vail."

And so on, to the end of the 16th verse.

Now comes the fulfilment of the instructions so given:—

"And it came to pass in the first month in the second year, on the first day of the month, that the tabernacle was reared up."

And so forth, to the end of the 33rd verse.

Thus were the Divine specifications carried out by the handicrafts' men of Israel, under the supervision of Moses, the man of God.

Now we come to the third section of this wonderful chapter, commencing with the 34th verse:—

"Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.

And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.

And when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel went onward in all their journeys:

But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till the day that it was taken up.

For the cloud of the Lord was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys." (Exod. xl, 34-38.)

Thus was the worship of the true God provided for, organized, and inaugurated in Israel for ever, and thus did the presence of Jehovah, the God of Israel, appear and take up His dwelling-place in the Tabernacle in the centre of the dwelling-place of Israel, never wholly to depart therefrom again.

Through all the Mosaic dispensation and through all the Christian dispensation the worship thus established has been carried forward through the ages in Israel, and; through the agency of Israel, in the world.

We must now overleap the chapters until we come to Leviticus xxvi. This covenant is divided clearly into three great sections : the first section is headed " if."

These are the clauses which convey God's guarantee of blessing upon Israel while they walk in His law, and do His commandments :—

IF.

" Ye shall make you no idols nor graven image, neither rear you up a standing image, neither shall ye set up any image of stone in your land, to bow down unto it : for I am the Lord your God.

Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary : I am the Lord.

If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them ;

Then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit.

And your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time : and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely.

And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid : and I will rid evil beasts out of the land, neither shall the sword go through your land.

And ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword.

And five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight : and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword.

For I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful, and multiply you, and establish my covenant with you.

And ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new.

And I will set my tabernacle among you : and my soul shall not abhor you.

And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people.

I am the Lord your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye should not be their bondmen ; and I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright." (Lev. xxvi, 1-13.)

Now we come to that section of the covenant which denounces and assigns specifically punishment in case of disobedience. This section of the covenant is headed " but."

Of all the passages in the Bible this one has had the most continuous national fulfilment in the history of Israel and Britain.

The seven times indicated hereafter cover a period of 2,520 years, and, as definitely included in this covenant, they indicate that from the time of the sentence going into effect under the clauses of this covenant 2,520 years should elapse in each case before the term of punishment should be expired, and Israel go free.

Let us read carefully and prayerfully these tremendous clauses :—

BUT.

" But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments ;

And if ye shall despise my statutes, or if your soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant :

I also will do this unto you ; I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart : and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it.

And I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies : they that hate you shall reign over you ; and ye shall flee when none pursueth you.

And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you seven times more for your sins.

And I will break the pride of your power ; and I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as brass :

And your strength shall be spent in vain : for your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruits.

And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me ; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you according to your sins.

I will also send wild beasts among you, which shall rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number ; and your high ways shall be desolate.

And if ye will not be reformed by me by these things, but will walk contrary unto me ;

Then will I also walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins.

And I will bring a sword upon you, that shall avenge the quarrel of my covenant ; and when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will send the pestilence among you ; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

And when I have broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver you your bread again by weight : and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied.

And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me ;

Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury ; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins.

And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat.

And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your images, and cast your carcases upon the carcases of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you.

And I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours.

And I will bring the land into desolation: and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it.

And I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you: and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste.

Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths.

As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest; because it did not rest in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it.

And upon them that are left alive of you I will send a faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall when none pursueth.

And they shall fall one upon another, as it were before a sword, when none pursueth: and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies.

And ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up.

And they that are left of you shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them." (Lev. xxvi, 14-39.)

The third clause of this great covenant might be headed "when." It refers to the time of Israel's repentance and of the repentance of each individual Israelite, whether that repentance should come during the period of punishment or after its elapse. It is a period to which we trust Israel is now rapidly approaching.

WHEN.

"If they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto me:

And that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity:

Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land.

The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them: and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity: because, even because they despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes.

And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the Lord their God.

But I will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I am the Lord.

These are the statutes and judgments and laws, which the Lord made between him and the children of Israel in mount Sinai by the hand of Moses." (Lev. xxvi, 40-46.)

Let us see to what point we have now attained.

The Kingdom of God has been organized, the basis of which is the nation Israel, as we see in Exodus xix and xx.

The worship had been organized, and the Aaronic priesthood consecrated to carry it on, as we see in Leviticus.

The national organization had been completed, as the reader may see if he will turn to the 1st chapter of Numbers.

All the machinery of the Divine administration had now been made effective, and there was nothing to prevent Israel marching forward in worship and in service to the end of her history.

The question now arose, Would Israel obey?

As then, so now, the choice was placed before Israel, but there were added rewards and penalties, so that obedience should bring blessing without measure, and disobedience suffering unspeakable.

Thus did Divine wisdom and grace go to the utmost limits to constrain the choice of Israel, short of taking away the Divine gift of freewill.

History has told a strange story of the outworking of this covenant.

At first Israel struggled along, endeavouring to keep the line of obedience to the covenant; and, in accordance with the measure of her obedience, enjoyed blessing and peace, or, according to the measure of her disobedience, suffered domestic trouble and foreign war. This lasted during a period of approximately five hundred years.

Then ten-tribed Israel definitely and nationally entered upon the path of disobedience. Accordingly she entered upon the pathway of suffering; until finally the first specific sentence went into effect against Israel, when the two and a half tribes were swept away into captivity.

The second sentence went into effect 721 B.C., when the remaining tribes of Israel, numbering seven and a half tribes, were also carried captive; and so there settled down upon ten-tribed Israel the long night of disobedience and punitive suffering which should continue seven times from each starting-point, i.e., 740 B.C. and 721 B.C.

Judah continued to struggle to keep the law more or less until 604 B.C. and 578 B.C., when she too was carried captive and entered upon her period of night and suffering for 2,520 years from these dates.

All the succeeding history of Israel and Judah in the Mosaic dispensation was passed under the cloud of punishment.

From the beginning of the Christian era to A.D. 1799-1820 Israel in Britain carried on under the punitive clauses. Not because of Israel's repentance, but because the term of her punishment was ended, Israel-Britain then began that wonderful period of history which is continuing to this day.

During all the nineteenth century, in addition to the earlier centuries of the Christian era, Judah and Jerusalem marched under the night of punishment and suffering until 1917, when Jerusalem was delivered; and the end of that night is not due to come by lapse of time, although it may come earlier in case of Judah's repentance, until the date 1934.

What a wonderful effect this great national covenant has had upon the progress of world history, and especially upon the history of Israel-Britain.

Now approaches the time when, by the spirit of repentance poured out upon the tribes of Israel by the grace of God, and further because of the ending of all the sentences through the lapse of time, the tribes of Israel, now constituted into nations, shall pass back under the clauses of blessing and the experience of the gladness of restoration set forth so graphically in the last clause of this great covenant.

Now comes the time when the new covenant, sealed with the blood of Jesus, as to the writing of the law of the Lord upon the hearts of Israel, of which time God says "I WILL be to them a God, and THEY SHALL be to me a people." Now comes the time also of the confirmation of the nation before God for ever, and of the rebuilding and extension of the city of Jerusalem in the Name of Jehovah.

It is a time of gladness and of blessing beyond measure.

What lies between us and the final dawning of that day, when the last of the punishment will have expired in 1934, will depend very largely upon the spirit of repentance in Israel.

The predictive messages of Moses are carried on to the end of his writings, but they all have to do with the story told in the covenant above quoted, and we must refer the reader to the text of the sacred Scripture in the remainder of the Books of the Pentateuch.

WELCOME AT HEADQUARTERS

ON THURSDAY, JULY 26TH, TO THE REV, LINCOLN McCONNELL, D.D., LL.D., G.D., OF ST. PETERSBURG, FLORIDA, U.S.A.

IN introducing Dr. McConnell, the President, Major J. Knowles, O.B.E., referred to the occasion as a privileged one, as he had been told that Dr. McConnell was one of the outstanding preachers in the United States, and is preaching British-Israel to a great congregation. "We are very pleased," said Major Knowles, "that Mrs. McConnell is with him. In view of the short time our friends have in London before leaving for Palestine, it was particularly good of Dr. McConnell to spare us an afternoon for an address. In answer to enquiries about Dr. Fowler Ham, who was with us at our Congress in 1926, he was delighted to hear that he is very much better, and has made a wonderful recovery from the very serious injuries he received as the result of being knocked down by a motor-car."

Major Knowles expressed his great pleasure at hearing that Dr. McConnell would delay his return to America in order to be with us during the first week of the Congress.

Dr. McConnell was given a very warm reception; he said:

"Mr. President, Commander Roberts, Ladies and Gentlemen: I confess to you that I am in a state that is rather unusual for me; not exactly embarrassment, for I am a stranger to that feeling, having been on the platform so long, but I am not accustomed to addressing English audiences. Your delightful Secretary-General—whom I loved before I ever met him—gave me a great deal of pleasure when he let me know that I might possibly have the privilege of meeting a few of my Israelitish friends over here. I confess that I was not quite prepared for the splendid warmth of heart that has been so expressively shown since I came into these splendid Headquarters. We in America are rather under the impression that Englishmen are so phlegmatic that they are afraid to let their feelings be known, and we hardly know whether they are pleased or not!

"I have been visiting to-day the tombs of many of your illustrious dead, but I find that everybody is by no means dead in England! You are extremely alive, especially to Bible Truth. A good many folk in the United States are aware of the situation that England finds herself in in these days; we recognize something of your responsibilities. On several occasions I have had to refuse to participate in certain meetings that were called by those folk who did not understand. I believe I understand why you hold so tenaciously to some of the principles that you are practising, and why you cling to some of your great fundamental and governmental policies.

"One cannot keep from going back to the simple beginnings of things. I remember when I first heard of Anglo-Israel teaching, from reading the little magazine published by Professor Totten, of Yale University. His writings were compiled into twenty-six volumes, many, if not all, of which I possess. When a young man I was an agnostic, studying law; I did not believe the Bible; there were too many questions in my mind that were not answered. I had not asked them, because it was a disgrace to be labelled an infidel. A good many of us boys did not believe, but since I became a grown man I have learnt that there are reasons why we do not always get the answers to our questions. During many years as a minister and platform speaker I found that one of the causes of a great deal of scepticism is the inability to understand even when the Truth is presented.

"I have been speaking on Israel Truth and giving mid-week lectures on the Bible. A thousand is my ordinary Thursday evening audience. We had to build a tabernacle in St. Petersburg, Florida, as large as the one we previously built in Oklahoma City. We have had it packed over and over again with folk anxious to hear the Word of God. A minister in our town—an Englishman—announced that the reason he reviewed books and talked on popular plays on Sunday evening was because the people of this day and time are not interested in the Bible, and there is not enough in the Bible that a minister can find to interest them. At the same time I was talking to six times the number of people on the Bible!

"I have had a varied experience. I was a platform lecturer for thirty years, besides my evangelistic and ministerial work. I have never in my life seen anything so grippingly thrilling as the Word of God to the great mass of folk in the light of this revelation of Anglo- or British-Israel Truth. This is not a personal boast; it is a mere statement of truth. I do not wish to exaggerate—but I am sure more than 5,000 people in the last two or three years have been converted to the Truth of Anglo-Israel in my ministry, through my radio, my paper, and my public utterances. They seize it with avidity; they are anxious to have it, and they are glad to know that the Old Testament is something more than an uninteresting genealogical record of people dead and gone. There never has been a time when the Word of God was so full of meaning as to-day. Our country is full of cults and isms, and my training has brought me into contact with them for thirty years. There has never been a time when the person who believed that the Bible is God's Word, and will attract attention to that belief in a manner that leaves the mind open to be interested, could find it so easy to interest the mind of the unprejudiced, or even the ordinarily prejudiced person, interest and grip their attention until they come to the conclusion that there is something vital in it, and that it means something for them. I have never been able to convert anybody to Jesus Christ until I could convince them they needed a Saviour. What men and women need to-day is the conviction in their souls that men are not only immortal, but that they are doomed and going the downward path unless a supernatural Saviour is presented to them. Rationalism and agnosticism are the natural children of modernism. The modernist would rob us of our Old Testament.

" Ignorance is the friend and mother of prejudice. There are many ministers in my country who dare not espouse Anglo-Israel teaching for fear they would lose their jobs. This prejudice makes it difficult for some folk, and lay men and women should have a profound respect not only for the intellectual, but the moral courage of your ministers who take up their position on this subject. I am sympathetic towards those ministers who dare not espouse a thing that has not always been a part of the doctrine of their particular Church. It takes courage to do it, but we are making some headway in our part of the country. It is spreading into the minds of those people who are delighted to know that the Word of God can be proved. This may not mean so much to you lay men and women as it does to us ministers, the fact that our position can absolutely be proved. We have a line of argument now with which we can go into a court and make our case. I have never presented a case to a jury with as many facts as I can take for British-Israel and the Word of God, and verify them in English history. The only voice that has penetration, the only message that has power, in my opinion, is the message that comes from the absolute assurance of its truthfulness in the heart of the speaker. The man who quotes someone else's opinion that does not have an answering 'Amen' in his soul does not have the power to look straight in the eye of his opponent.

" I have the idea that we are only in the primer of this teaching even in this country. You men and women will be honoured in the days to come as the pioneers who embraced the Truth and had the courage to stand back of it and send it forth.

" For two days my party has been following guides in various places—Windsor, Westminster Abbey, and so on—looking at the tablets and tombs erected in commemoration of your honoured ancestors. Why do you revere them as you do? Because they stood fast, and handed down to their posterity a better country than they found. You have a heritage of which to be proud. I believe that is true of us to-day who are standing by this newly-resurrected Truth in this the dawn of the millennial age. I am profoundly convinced that we are near the end of the Gospel dispensation, so-called. I have no disposition to give dates, but I believe this Truth is in its infant stage. We must attract the attention of others that we may be able to awaken their interest, and then play upon that interest until they are convinced that there is a vital verity in the message, and they will become convinced of the personal aspect of it. We live in a day that demands evidence, and I am thankful beyond words that we have 'the goods,' have the evidence, have the facts, and the kind of facts that when given out react in an answer in our own souls.

" Christianity is the only absolutely scientific religion. Christianity starts with statements of fact, and we are asked not merely to believe those statements of historical fact, but if we believe them we can find the answer in our own soul, the witness of God's Spirit to the veracity of the things we have been believing.

" During the War I was connected, unofficially, with our Government. I furnished a great deal of data to our Government on who did this and who did the other. We had the idea over in the States that the great majority of the really beneficial discoveries were Germanic in their origin. I found that only a very few of the beneficial inventions were Germanic; the real inventors were Englishmen. The reason I said that Christianity is the one scientific religion is because it is a demonstrable religion. 'If any man shall do His Will, he shall know,' not merely with a satisfactory intellectual knowledge, but with the answer in the depth of his soul—I KNOW. That is the glory and the need of it. One of the reasons why I am so extremely happy in the possession of Israel Truth is because it adds to that part knowledge which I so long possessed with regard to the Deity of my Lord and Saviour, and it throws such a bright illumination upon the future of this old world. If it were not for that I would be in despair for civilization. If it were not for that I would lose hope in man's ability to solve the problems presented to the mind of man in these days.

" In conclusion, I want to thank you again with all my heart for the extreme cordiality of the welcome you have given to me to this great city of the great Isle of Empire. I am glad that we are members of the same family. You will understand that I have not made a prepared address. I hope to come back with some new information as the result of my travels."

A very hearty vote of thanks to Dr. McConnell was moved by the Secretary-General, Mr. Herbert Garrison, and carried with acclamation.

THE GREATER SHORTENING OF THE " SEVEN TIMES " OF THE GENTILES.

BY C. C. OGILVY VAN LENNEP.

OF all the proverbs of Solomon it would be hard to find one that is more to the point for British-Israelites than that " It is the glory of GOD to conceal a thing." It has indeed been a marvellous thing that He has concealed our Identity for so many generations! And so also is it that He has concealed other matters, even more obvious when perceived, than that Identity.

But never is such concealment made, as we may fully believe, without very definite and wise purpose, even though that purpose may, or may not, appear to our limited understanding of the Divine Mind.

The matter of which this article treats was originally concealed but slightly; and yet, though so slightly hidden, it has scarcely even yet been perceived at all. But while we may humbly acknowledge that our thoughts are not as His thoughts (a fact that cuts both ways), we may equally humbly suspect that we do see the reason and purpose of the concealment in this case; at least we may be sure that had we discovered the thing so hidden even only twenty years ago, much that has greatly helped us all in the past decade would have been incomprehensible, to our very great loss. The ways of our GOD are indeed most wonderful.

This particular matter requires only to be plainly and simply stated for all to see at a glance. It is this: When Daniel was told in Darius the Mede's first year as king of Babylon that the "Commandment" had already gone forth, that it was to be "seven weeks, and three score and two weeks" "unto the Messiah the prince," it was but very slightly concealing the fact that it was (49 plus 434 =) 483 years from the beginning of the first year of Darius the Mede to the days of Our LORD.

And yet, what would have happened if this had been clearly perceived and generally known (for it has been known to some of us, almost fully, since as far back as 1913, when Martin Anstey published his "Romance of Bible Chronology") before the present time. I say that, because if it had been generally acknowledged, grave doubt must have been thrown upon a matter which has been of a very great help to us. We should then have perceived that if the first year of Darius the Mede were only 483 years before Christ, the first siege of Jerusalem nearly seventy years previously could certainly not have been as early as 603 B.C. Therefore we should have seen that the full length of the "Seven Times" of the Gentiles, and of Israel's punishment, would not have come to an end in A.D. 1917. We would have been so much the poorer in the loss of a vision that has helped us so much; the prevision that something great would happen in 1917; the realised vision that something very great indeed actually did happen in 1917; to our comfort, to the fortification of our faith, and, be it added, to the glory of GOD!

And yet, when we consider the matter fully, how could it have been otherwise than it all actually was? We know, we had long known, that the promise was that the "days shall be shortened." How could the Seven Times of the Gentiles have been shortened if they had been made to run their complete length? They were really shortened, but we did not perceive it; moreover, if we had perceived it too soon we would have lost the realization that Jerusalem ceased to be trodden down of the Gentiles exactly in the year and at the exact time originally intended, and yet exactly when, by GOD'S marvellous concealment of the true dates of ancient events, He had permitted us to be able to foresee it, as actually was done.

Never was there the slightest doubt in the mind of most of us that the A.V. margin dating of the first siege of Jerusalem was at least approximately correct. True, there was doubt of a few years on one side or the other of the exact year 603 B.C. But of so few that we held that the date 603 B.C. was proved to be correct by the very fact that we considered it to be exactly "Seven Times," i.e., 2,520 years, before A.D. 1917. So much so was this the case that, in spite of the clear and obvious nature of the wording of Daniel's famous Chapter ix, the present writer wondered, paused, considered, and hesitated many a time and oft before he became convinced that 603 B.C. was not the true date of the first siege of Jerusalem, and that a very wonderful and astonishing use had been made of an ancient human error. Moreover, he saw that the revelation of the truth had been made in such a way and at such a time that no single one of us, least of all the writer himself, need have the slightest hesitation in expecting the further completion of the Seven Times over the remaining years of the period 1917–1936 in exactly the manner hitherto awaited.

In fact, we learn from all this that whereas the true date of the first siege of Jerusalem was in the latter half of A.A. 3450 (i.e., 551 B.C. "historical"; or 550 B.C. "astronomical"), and that 2,520 years thence would bring us to A.A. 5970 (i.e., A.D. 1970), the major shortening of the whole is indicated to have been 53 years. Of course there have been other shortenings, but the full Seven Times have never hitherto been taken to have been shortened, as Our Lord's words require that they should.

Just imagine what an extra 53 years of Gentile control might have meant to the world. Our late enemy, Germany, under the old imperial regime, would, at the rate it had been progressing up to 1914, have obtained such a grip on every important element of the world's economy in those 53 years that we may well suppose that no flesh would have survived in the struggle to overcome them, when the full Seven Times were completed!

Let there be no misunderstanding, however, of the implication of all this. The "Seven Times" were indeed shortened by about 53 years; but, nevertheless, the reckoning that we all follow, from the days of Drs. Grattan Guinness and Aldersmith to these very days of the enlightened writers in the current issues of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE, holds just as good as though they had run completely to their bitter end. This is as true of things future as of things past.

Let us also acknowledge and marvel at the wonderful comfort and help that we have hitherto received and that we look yet to receive from the fact that this thing was concealed—to the Glory of God.

THE TEACHING OF THE SPIRIT.

BY HENRY PROCTOR, F.R.S.L.

"THOU hearest His voice" (John iii, 8, Greek).

Every child of God should cultivate the habit of listening to the voice of the Spirit.

How was it that Enoch, without any Bible, reached such an altitude of spiritual experience that he was even translated without dying? He not only walked with God, and talked with God, but allowed God to talk to him, not by an outward voice, but by the "still small voice" within. Everyone who encourages, wishes for, prays for, the conscious presence of the Holy Spirit within (Luke xi, 13) and LISTENS, will hear His Voice speaking in the conscience (Rom. xi, 15). The Holy Spirit is distinct from the conscience, but it is this remarkable faculty in man that HE uses as a means and instrument first of convicting men of sin, of their need of righteousness, and of the certainty of a judgment to come; then if men take heed to this inward voice of the Spirit, they thus obtain a GOD-given repentance, and faith (Acts v, 31; xi, 18; Ephes. ii, 8), for God writes His laws in their hearts (Rom. ii, 14, 15) even where men have no outward revelation of law or Gospel.

Without the inner law of the Spirit of Life we cannot possibly live up to the requirement of the New Covenant, but it is this law, working within me, which makes me "Free from the law of sin." Which would otherwise bring me into bondage and spiritual death (Rom. viii, 2; Heb. viii, 8-10).

Digitized by Google

This is the Royal law, the "Law of Liberty," because by its means God produces in me both the will and the execution. In other words, makes me want to do the things which He wants me to do, so that there is no bondage or restraint, but

"I find HIS YOKE EASY

and His burden light." In fact, I enter into rest, by ceasing from my own works (Heb. iv, 10) and henceforth only BEARING FRUIT—"The fruit of the Spirit" spontaneously; working no more than a tree works, but letting CHRIST, Who is now my Life, work in me, just as life is working in the tree, to bring forth fruit (Psalm i, 1-3). This is the soul rest of Matt. xi, 29. The body is dead because of sin; the Spirit is life because of righteousness. "We . . . . worship God in the spirit, ... and have no confidence in the flesh" (Phil. iii, 3).

There is a complete cessation of all self-confidence, for I have no confidence in the flesh.

One of the things the flesh would naturally suppose it could do unassisted would be to pray, but the Holy Spirit assures us on the point that: "WE know not how to pray as we ought, but that He maketh intercession for us." Now this is done in two ways:

(1) When we wait upon God in perfect, i.e., not only outward, but inward silence, He makes intercession, in conjunction with our inarticulate sighs and groanings longing for we know not what, but groaning and travailing in spirit. He, knowing all our need, intercedes for us, "According to the Will of God." This fact demonstrates the importance of inarticulate prayer, during which the soul is silent to the LORD (literal "dumb to Jehovah") (Psalm xxxvii, 7).

(2) The second method of praying in the Spirit is when HE HIMSELF provides the words; when prayer is inwrought, or energized by the Holy Spirit. When we know definitely what our petition is, and that being according to the WILL of GOD, we know that we have the petition that we have asked of HIM. This kind of prayer, being inspired, is of course infallible.

WE may pray, however, when we do not know what the will of God is, as Paul did respecting his thorn (or stake) in the flesh, and God will graciously inform us, through the Spirit, what His Will is in the matter (2 Cor. xii, 8, 9). Men ought always to pray—to pray without ceasing. In everything to let our requests be made known to God. But let it be

A MUTUAL COMMUNION

(French ver. 1 John i, 7). Listen for the still small voice within. If under the old dispensation they had Urim and Thummim by which they could enquire of God, and receive direct replies, how much more we, for whom God has provided the better things. If God talked with Enoch and Noah, and Abraham, yea and even with Cain and Balaam, how much more will He talk with us.

God is grieved that we want so little of His conversation, that we give Him so little opportunity to talk to us, by waiting in silent expectation upon Him to hear what "God the Lord will speak."

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL IDEAL.—PART II.

IN all branches of thought and activity to-day the individual, while more or less preserving his individuality, has become part of the organization. The organization itself in this era of rapid transit and accessibility of all kinds of knowledge finds itself not only in contact with hostile organizations, but even interpenetrated by alien influences, and seeks its only safety in a wider and still wider unity in which the basis principles for which it stands may be established.

Is it not strange that in this unique and world-wide development of civilization Christian organizations should present so outstanding an exception? The processes we see at work there are the processes of disintegration. Organizations which were one are dividing into many, and the conception of a new and wider aspect of the old ideal, so obvious to the humblest Trades Unionist, does not appear to have entered the heads of the intelligentsia of the Church.

Let us now apply the results of our enquiry into idealistic relativity and development to the greatest of all ideals—the Christian ideal.

To trace the origin of this ideal it is necessary to go back to the remote past, and there we read of a man who became possessed of an ideal so tremendous that for its sake he left home and kindred and became a wanderer on the face of the earth. In pursuance of it, wealth, life, and even the life of his only son, became of secondary importance. Here, indeed, was the birth of an ideal entirely and severely individualistic in its conception, yet carrying with it a vision which comprehended its utmost possibilities and results, and a power which should endure until the end of time.

This was the origin of the Christian ideal and this the true ground upon which St. Paul and the Jewish Nation claimed, and we ourselves in our National Church Prayer Book claim, Abraham as our father, whether spiritually or materially. It was not the material claim of the men of Judah which Our Lord rebuked, but the lack of vision. "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad." Abraham, though his was a supremely individualistic relationship to the ideal, had the vision to see that ideal in ever-widening relationships, and from Our Lord's lips we know that the new aspect which He came to reveal was perceived by him, whereas the Jews, centuries later than he in time and knowledge, could not see it. Bound down by their fixed conceptions, they were not able to adjust themselves to the changing aspect of the ideal and so became the bitter enemies of the ideal and forfeited their spiritual right to call Abraham their father.

Centuries after Abraham, came the second great idealistic relationship through the organization, the Church, not superseding the more ancient individual relationship, but intensifying it, while at the same time attaining to a wider conception of the same ideal. For many centuries more the Church has carried out her duties nobly, waging an unending fight against foes of all kinds, and lifting her sons and daughters to pinnacles of spiritual glory and power, but at last the tide seems ebbing. No modernist re-statement of Christianity can stem the tide, for modernist lines of thought appear utterly regardless and unconscious of the elementary laws of idealism.

The gist of the whole matter is that the crying need to-day is for a new vision—a revelation of a fresh and wider relationship to the ideal, and that those lines upon which it is being sought must fail, since none of them conform either to present needs and development, or the requirements of a pure and single-minded idealism.

Before proceeding, however, to define the necessary and logical development of Christian idealism, we must note carefully the most fundamental point of all. That point is that the Christian ideal is not a mere abstraction or belief, but that it is a Person—a Person Who is not only incarnate goodness, beauty and truth; holiness, righteousness and love; but a Person Who demands personal relationship in addition to idealistic relationship.

Apply this great truth to the two dominant relationships experienced by Christendom up to the present and we find indeed how appropriate and perfect have been the relationships of the ideal to the idealist.

The individualistic relationship needs no elaboration as regards its effects as an abstract idealism. It has transformed and transfigured life, both believing and non-believing, wherever its influence has reached.

Where, however, it has assumed its true form of personal relationship, it has done far more than transfigured life, it has regenerated it.

Christ to the individual is Friend and Saviour. Thus appropriately we find Abraham, the father of all Christian idealists, spoken of as the friend of God.

Similarly we find the organization-relationship existing between the Church and the ideal to be the mainspring of piety and learning.

Christ in His personal relationship to the Church is High Priest—the Fount of all spiritual and idealistic knowledge, the One Who has entered into the secret and holy place and Who stands as Head of the consecrated Body.

So far Christian thought and experience have gone, but there they have stopped. Yet there they cannot stop if Christianity is to survive. Individualism and specialized organization, essential and fundamental as is their place, are too circumscribed in their influence and outlook to retain their hold in these days of comprehensive conceptions. If a wider view is not obtainable, then individual and Church must fall a prey to the encroachments and infiltrations of idealists with more comprehensive ambitions, and this is exactly what is beginning to happen, as, for instance, in the case of leading Churchmen ceasing to teach Christ from their pulpits and substituting Science.

Curiously enough the most majestic aspect of the ideal, the aspect which we seek, is to be found implied in the extremely materialistic promises made to Abraham as a reward for his transcendent idealism specifically defined—a seed numberless as the stars; a land in the possession of the seed, and "I will be their God." If we add to these particulars Abraham's vision of the Christ—a vision which caused him to rejoice, we are led inevitably to the final and logical aspect of the ideal—"Christ the King." Here we have an aspect of the ideal in perfect accord with the laws of the development of idealism and fully attuned to the needs and progress of modern life, no matter how comprehensive such needs and progress may be. At first sight it may appear that this is no new conception, since the words themselves are perfectly familiar, but when we begin to realize that the term "Christ the King" has been employed up to the present exclusively in a metaphorical, spiritual or futuristic sense, and under such presentations it has no actual significance, we shall be prepared to realize whither our study of Christian idealism is leading us, and the strange way in which the simple conclusion has been hidden.

For the individual to limit the term—Christ the King—to his individual relationship with Christ is simply illogical. Kingship denotes a relationship to a Kingdom, and it is only as a unit of the Kingdom that the individual can claim relationship to the King. His personal relationship is something quite different.

Equally inappropriate is any reference to Christ as King in the Church. Christ must, of course, exercise Kingly dominion over the individuals and organizations within His Kingdom, but the functions of Christ as Head and High Priest of His organized Church cannot be the same as His functions as King of His Kingdom, any more than His personal dealings with an individual can be confused with His guidance and leadership of His organized Church.

The spiritual as well as the literal conception of Christ as King demands a material manifestation of a Kingdom as surely as a spiritual conception of the Church demands and receives a material manifestation of such an organization.

It is essential, then, if the Kingship of Christ, the apotheosis of Christian idealism, is to be realized that a relationship must be established between Christ and a literal community where the functions of King can operate as in a Kingdom.

To attain this the Gospel of the Kingdom must be preached not only to all the world, but particularly to a race which is already conversant with the preliminary aspects of the ideal—the individual and the organization. If this Gospel is accepted by any race, then of necessity that race becomes the seed of Abraham—Israel—and to him who opposes it, applies Christ's solemn denunciation of the Jews who claimed Abraham as their father.

Neither the individual nor the Church can form that Kingdom. They can only preach the Gospel to the races of mankind, endeavouring to inspire them with the ideal they have in view.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized, however, that the apostles of this Gospel must be prepared to proclaim to whatever race they approach "Ye are Israel." The laws of idealistic development demand that not only must the aspect of the ideal be revealed, but also the relationship of the recipient to the ideal. In vain would it be for the preacher of individual salvation to speak of a Saviour to those who were ignorant of their relationship as sinners needing salvation, or for one to speak of Christ as Head of the Church to those who were not members of such a body. Similarly, any race to whom it is announced the fact that Christ is their King must be conscious of their national or racial relationship to Him, namely, that they are the seed of Abraham—Israel, God's chosen people. Here the ladders of British-Israel investigation and idealistic research debouch upon a common platform. There is only one race upon the face of the earth to-day to whom such a vision is likely to appeal racially. It is that race which, in conformity with idealistic requirements, is steeped in the knowledge of the fundamental relationships to the ideal and has been portraying them to an extraordinary degree in the post-war councils of the nations ; a race which also by virtue of its needs, civil development and Kingdom consciousness urgently requires, nay, is demanding, a new revelation of the ideal ; a race which, by the way, is exercising dominion over the very territory—from the Euphrates to the Nile—promised to the seed of Abraham by God Himself. That race is the British Anglo-Saxon race.

This, then, is the British-Israel ideal—or, rather, aspect of the Christian ideal—Christ the King.

It must be said here that while many of the clergy and laymen of this country and its dominions beyond the seas are catching a sight of this vision and embracing its faith, there are many more in the Churches of the land who are constituting themselves the relentless foes of the Movement and its conception. To such, a warning as solemn as any that can be expressed is surely due. Though they continue to present and preach Christ to the individual as Friend and Saviour and to the Church as Head and High Priest, yet if the new revelation of the relationship of Christ is from God and of the Divine Will, as surely it must be, then their hostility towards it becomes the hostility of those of Judah against their Messiah, and their cry is " We will not have this Man to reign over us," and they become wittingly or unwittingly the bitter enemies of the ideal they profess to follow. It is surely without question that the duty of the Church is to strive to give the nation that which she herself claims to possess—the Christ—and that she should present Him in the relationship appropriate to national consciousness as King. The British-Israel claim is only the claim of the Church—to be Christ's, and the Church has no right to resent our offering ourselves nationally to Him as His realm.

Let us, in conclusion, try to imagine the result of such an ideal being accepted nationally. If the British King, his Parliament, Colonies and Dominions, supported by public opinion, were to recognize officially the Christ as Supreme Lord of our Empire, and were to commence immediately to revise the whole Constitution in the light of that recognition ; if our laws, our economic usages, our business dealings and our political and diplomatic activities became impregnated with that ideal, what would happen ? None of us, I think, have sufficient imagination to guess, but of this one may be quite sure : the British Empire would enter upon a period of spiritual power and material prosperity which would stagger the world. The Christian business man would attend his office feeling not only that he was entering taking Christ with him, but that he was entering a place where the spirit, the laws and the atmosphere of Christ would surround him. The feeling of confidence engendered throughout the business and economic world would cause a revival of trade which would be unprecedented. There would also of a certainty immediately be a spiritual revival which would intensify a hundredfold the individual and Church message and power, and from abroad we should cease hearing of missionaries taking the Bible and of traders following in their wake with poison. The bickerings as regards textual criticism of the Scriptures and reservation of the Sacrament would disappear before the tremendous amount of constructive work demanded, whilst, surely, a wonderful sense of joy and brotherhood would fill the nation.

Such is the British-Israel ideal for the race. Is it an impossible one ? Who shall say definitely, since it has not yet reached the general knowledge of the people, but this much can be said :—The nation, as a whole, including every strata of society from the highest downwards, is exhibiting an attitude of mind consonant with such an idealism. It may be that great tribulation will be necessary before Britain's cry to her rightful King is heard, but the signs are becoming more and more evident that sooner or later that cry will be made.

May it be that some will continue to regard this ideal as an egotistical and limited ideal ? Even if this view were justified, which it cannot be unless the Christian individual's claim to belong to Christ is also egotistical—it could not remain so. Is it conceivable that the rest of the world would regard unmoved the results of its operation and not clamour for inclusion at any price ? It is more than probable that our whole race would scarcely suffice to provide missionaries to teach the Gospel of Salvation and of the Kingdom.

We do not know how near is the time when Our Lord shall return in person to take His Kingdom, but surely such an ideal as this should fire every Christian Anglo-Saxon to become British-Israelites, if not in name at least in act.

No more inspiring and inspired hymn than that of Blake's can be imagined for those who have caught the Vision :—

" Bring me my bow of burning gold,
Bring me my arrows of desire,
Bring me my spear—O clouds unfold,
Bring me my chariot of fire.

I will not cease from mental strife ;
Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand,
Till we have built Jerusalem
In England's green and pleasant land."

" WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT ? "

—Isa. xxi, 11.

By Daniel Farmer.

The darkness comes upon us because that portion of the earth upon which we dwell turns from the light of the sun—and the moral and spiritual darkness was first caused by man turning by disobedience from the face of Him Who is the Sun of Righteousness.

Darkness may be of varying degrees—very dark—pitch dark—and " a darkness that may be felt."—Ex. x, 21. The student of Holy Scripture will not fail to notice how these varying degrees of darkness come upon the Church and the world—and especially so as a period, or dispensation, closes in. How long the period of probation lasted we do not know, but it was a dark night when our first parents were driven from the first paradise and fellowship with Him Who placed them there ; 4,000 years later another " went out, and it was night." —John xiii, 30.

Further, we notice how dark it became as the next period closed in, a time lasting some 1,656 years. If we read

Digitized by Google

Romans i, 18-32, we see how the night darkened as time went on, until the midnight hour of judgment was reached.

Coming down the stream of time some 2,000 years we find the "Light of the World."

Shining amongst men—but alas! it "shined in a darkness which comprehended it not"—John i, 5—and sought to extinguish the same—which brought a "darkness over all the land"—Matt. xxvii, 45, and a still denser darkness in the minds and hearts of those who "hated the light."

Now, by general consent, we are rapidly nearing the close of another great period of time, the end of the "times of the Gentiles"—Luke xxi, 24, commonly spoken of as the Christian dispensation. It will be noticed that although these periods close in darkness, they are always followed by a time of ever-increasing light. In the age in which our lot is cast, how much greater is the light of Divine revelation than was afforded the Israelitish period—and in the rapidly approaching age the world will witness the personal reign and presence of Christ Himself. Now we have the light of Holy Scripture, the Lamp "whereunto ye do well that ye take heed"—2 Peter i, 19, also we have been fully warned that as our time closes in, a desperate attempt will be made to put out the light of Holy Scripture—2 Tim., chapters iii and iv. Thus, bearing these facts of revelation and history in mind, let us apply the question "What of the night?" to the hour at which we have arrived.

1. THE HOUR IS LATE.

The great prophecies of Daniel have run almost to completion. The four Empires prefigured by the great image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream have nearly completed their course—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome, for we are living in the final stages of the last of the Papacy—the "Little Horn" of chapter vii has nearly run its course, it being the Western apostasy foretold. Whilst Mohammedanism, the Eastern apostasy, predicted in chapter viii, is likewise nearing its end. Both these Satanic counterfeits arose almost together, and both are also going down in company, though "their dying struggle will shake the world."

The above group shows about half of those who were present at the Garden Party, at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. Maxwell, Meopham Bank, Hastings, on July 25th, 1928. Unfortunately, the photographer was late in arriving, and half the company had already left.

The coming of—and the work of—the Messiah is fulfilled in chapter ix. The events of chapters x and xi are mostly past history, and the year 1917 brought us to the 1,335 day (year) of chapter xii. The hands of the great chronological clock point to the "Eleventh hour," and the return of Judah—the Jews, under the escort of Israel—viz., the British, to their own land—Jer. iii, 18, indicates the closing hour of the world's Saturday night and "the dawn of God's own Sabbath."—Psalm lxxii. There are some twenty calculations as to when this present period of time and order of things will close, not one of which extends beyond 1940. If such conclusions are anywhere nearly right, then 1928 is indeed a late hour of the night, and we do well to awake and take heed.

2. THE NIGHT IS FOGGY.

Fog is caused by watery vapour rising from the ground and condensing as it comes into contact with the coldness of the atmosphere. It leaves the traveller absolutely at a loss as to his whereabouts. Never was this state of mind more noticeable in the spiritual realm than it is to-day. The great foundation truths of Holy Scripture are denied and distorted. Nay, the Book itself is challenged. In place of its sober and reasonable teachings of history, morals and religion, we have offered to us the incredible vagaries of spiritually blind men discoursing on divine colours, many of whom have passed the cuttlefish stage of hiding their meaning behind a cloud of learned wordiness, as the said fish throws off an inky fluid to conceal its escape, and growing bolder by added numbers, and dealing with a professing Church too worldly and ignorant to be able to reply, they are now rapidly hastening on to the stage foretold of "even denying the Lord Who bought them." This cold and worldly atmosphere condenses the vapourings of these earthly-minded teachers, with the result that both they and their followers are in a dense fog as to the historical, prophetical and spiritual teachings of God's Word, a fog which it seems that nothing but the heavy rain of Divine displeasure, or the strong wind of disaster, can ever dissipate. Well may the Lord's people pray :

"O may no earthborn fogs arise
To hide Thee from Thy servants' eyes."

3. THE NIGHT IS COLD.

That, as we have just seen, is one cause of the fog. Now the inspired Apostle has anticipated—under Divine guidance—this condition of things, and bids us, as a corrective, to draw near ; hold fast ; consider one another, and to provoke (incite) each other to love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together . . . . and so much more as we see the day approaching.—Heb. x, 22-25.

We all know that nothing can be tightly held if the hands are cold, nor can the great truths and principles of the Christian religion be firmly held if the heart grows cold. Never was it more necessary for Christian people thus to gather together in spirit around the Person of the Lord, and, thus gathered and warming each other, to continue in the Faith and in well-doing. "That which ye have already hold fast till I come!"—Rev. ii, 25.

4. THE NIGHT IS DANGEROUS.

In Job xxiv we read of the evil-doers who mark a house in the daytime, and dig (enter) the same in the dark. The clear and brilliant lamps of Holy Scripture have long shone in our beloved land and in the Christian Church, but the evil-doers of Romanism, Ritualism, Spiritualism, Modernism, etc., are hard at it trying to extinguish the same. They know that as long as these are kept burning in home, Church and State, they are helpless and our valuables are safe. Let the countries where Rome has been able to put out the light of God's Word be a warning, for the map of the world will show the condition of these countries now "sitting in darkness and the shadow of death."

When Israel passed through the Wilderness the pillar of cloud was a protection by day, and as night came on the Divine Presence in it flashed out as fire. Ah! who shall say how many fiery serpents and savage beasts were kept at bay by its brilliance? Even so has Great and Greater Britain been preserved by the bright light and cloudy shelter of Holy Scripture.

Said M. Guizot to Lord Shaftesbury, during the Commune of 1870, "You will not have the violence in your country we have on the Continent—you have the influence of the Bible." What a grand testimony, but what if Britain lets go this wondrous Book? God forbid! That would lead us to the bitter experience that the higher the organism the greater its corruption and decay, and the abhorrence with which it is got rid of.

5. IT IS NEARLY MORNING.

A magazine speaking on this subject said : "It is ten minutes to twelve on Saturday night." Our days commence after the stroke of midnight, and according to the Scripture this long night of moral and spiritual darkness is to be followed by "a morning without clouds"—2 Sam. xxiii, 4, a day in which the "Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His wings (rays)"—Mal. iv, 2.

Men of science tell us that before the advent of man our world was occupied by enormous beasts of savage nature, before whom man could not stand. These were displaced, and Psalm viii tells us man, "who was made a little lower than God" (R.V.), was given dominion.

It is very significant that the four great Empires of Daniel vii are all prefigured as wild beasts, all of which are superseded by "One like the Son of Man, to Whom was given dominion, and glory, and a Kingdom that all people and nations and languages should serve Him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and His Kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." The title "Son of Man" belongs to Our Lord, it was His favourite term when speaking of Himself, and occurs some eighty times in the Gospels. Now, He is coming back, for it is the plan and purpose of God that in the very world where they said "Away with Him" He shall be "Lord of all"—and in the very city in which He suffered He shall sit on the throne of His father David as promised at His birth—Luke i, 32, reigning "King of kings and Lord of lords"—Rev. xix, 16. Every knee in the universe doing Him homage—Phil. ii, 10.

"Brethren, this Lord Jesus
Shall return again,
In His Father's glory,
And the angel train,
For all wreaths of empire
Meet upon His brow,
And our hearts confess Him
Lord of glory now."

It is to this glorious "day of joy and gladness" to all who "love His appearing" that we are hastening. We are told the darkest hour of the night is just before dawn, and as we listen in the lengthening shadows of our fast closing time we recall to mind the language of the Psalm which speaks of the beasts of the forest creeping forth, then of the sun arising, when they lay them down in their dens and man goeth forth —Ps. civ. So it seems to-day. We can hear the growl of these wild beasts of superstition and violence in both Church and State, but they little know that the hour of their anticipated victory is the hour of their final defeat, for "His enemies shall lick the dust"—Ps. lxxii, 9.

"A battle day is coming,
A morning promised long,
When girded Right with holy might
Shall overthrow the wrong,
When God the Lord will listen
To every plaintive sigh,
And stretch His hand o'er every land,
In justice by and by."

"Which in His times he shall shew who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords"—1 Tim. vi, 15.

JEREMIAH.

By GEORGE GILFILLAN.

THE first quality exhibited in Jeremiah's character and history is shrinking timidity. His first words are: "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak; for I am a child." The storm of inspiration had seized on a sensitive plant or quivering aspen, instead of an oak or a pine. And yet this very weakness serves at length to attest the truth and power of the afflatus. Jeremiah, with a less pronounced personality than his brethren, supplies a better image of an instrument in God's hand, of one moved, tuned, taught, from behind and above. Strong in supernal strength, the child is made a "fenced city, an iron pillar, and a brazen wall." Traces, indeed, of his original feebleness and reluctance to undertake stern duties are found scattered throughout his prophecy. We find him, for instance, renewing the curse of Job against the day of his birth. We find him, in the same chapter, complaining of the derision to which he was subjected in the discharge of his mission. But he is reassured by remembering that the Lord is with him as a "mighty terrible one." His chief power, besides pathos, is impassioned exhortation. His prophecy is one long application. He is distinguished by powerful and searching practicalness. He is urgent, vehement, to agony. His "heart is broken" within him; his bones "shake"; he is "like a drunken man," because of the Lord, and the words of His holiness. This fury often singles out the ignorant pretenders to the prophetic gift who abounded in the decay and degradation of Judah. Their dull dreams he tears in pieces, for "what is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." For their feigned "burdens" he substitutes a weight of wrath and contempt, under which they sink into ignominy. Mingled with this ardour of spirit and earnestness of appeal, there are touches of poetic grandeur. Witness the picture, in the 4th chapter, of the tokens attesting the forthcoming of the Lord to vengeance. Chaos comes again over the earth. Darkness covers the heaven. The everlasting mountains tremble. Man disappears from below, and the birds fly from the darkened air. Cities become ruins, and the fruitful places wildernesses, before the advancing anger of the Lord. Byron's "Darkness" is a faint copy of this picture; it is a catalogue of horrible circumstances, which seem to have been laboriously culled and painfully massed up. Jeremiah performs his task with two or three strokes of lightning.

Before closing his prophecy, this prophet must mount a lofty peak, whence the lands of God's fury, the neighbouring idolatrous countries, are commanded, and pour out lava streams of invective upon their inhabitants. And it is true martial fire which inspirits his descriptions of carnage and desolation. In his own language, he is a "lion from the swellings of Jordan, coming up against the habitation of the strong." All tears are now wiped from his face. There is a fury in his eye which makes you wonder if aught else were ever there; it is mildness maddened into a holy and a fearful frenzy. In a noble rage, he strips off the bushy locks of Gaza; dashes down the proud vessel of Moab, consumes Ammon, makes Esau bare, breaks the bow of Elam, and brandishes again, and again, and again, a sword over Babylon, crying out at each new blow, "A sword is upon the Chaldeans; a sword is upon the liars; a sword is upon her mighty men; a sword is upon their horses; a sword is upon her treasures." We have difficulty in recognizing the weeper among the willows in this homicidal Energy, all whose tears have been turned into devouring fire.

Besides his Lamentations—which have occasioned the general mistake that he is wholly an elegiac poet—fine strokes of pathos are scattered amidst the urgency, the boldness, and the splendour of his prophecy. His is that melting figure of Rachel, weeping for her children, and refusing to be comforted, because they are not. His is that appeal to Ephraim —"Is he my dear son? Is he a pleasant child?"—which sounds like the yearning of God's own bowels. His the plaintive question—"Is there no balm in Gilead?" and his the wide wish of sorrow—"Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep night and day for the slain of the daughter of my people!"

And was not this wide wish granted, when, in the Lamentations, he poured out his heart in those deep melodies of desolation, mourning and woe? Here, to use the beautiful language of one departed. "The scene is Jerusalem lying in heaps; the poet, the child of holy inspiration, appears upon the ruins, and, with notes of desolation and woe, strikes his harp to the fallen fortunes of his country. It was not that the pleasant land now lay waste—and it did lie waste; it was not that the daughters of Jerusalem were slain, and her streets ran red—and they did run red; but it was the temple—the temple of the Lord, with its altars, its sanctuary, its holy of holies levelled to the ground—rubbish where beauty stood, ruin where strength was; its glory fled, its music ceased, its solemn assemblies no more, and its priesthood immolated or carried far away. These had shed their glory over Israel, and over all the land, and it was the destruction of these that gave its tone of woe to the heart of the Israelite indeed." Yet the feelings which fill his heart to bursting are of a complicated character. A sense of Israel's past glory mingles with a sense of her guilt; he weeps over her ruin the more bitterly that it is self-inflicted. There is no protest taken against the severity of the divine judgments, and yet no patriot can more keenly appreciate, vividly describe, or loudly lament the splendours that were no more. We can conceive an angrier prophetic spirit finding a savage luxury in comparing the deserted streets and desecrated shrines of Jerusalem with his own predictions, and crying out: "Did I not foretell all this?" as with swift, resounding strides, flaming eyes, gaunt cheeks, and dishevelled hair, he passed on his way through them, like the spirit of their desolation, to the wilderness. Jeremiah views the scene with softer feelings, identifies himself with his country, feels Jerusalem's sword in his own heart, and lingers in fond admiration of its happier times, when the sons of Zion were comparable to fine gold—when her Nazarites were purer than snow, whiter than milk, more ruddy than rubies—when the beloved city was full of people, great among the nations, and a princess among the provinces—the perfection of beauty, and the joy of the whole earth.—From "Bards of the Bible."

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

MEETINGS and afternoon teas at Headquarters are suspended during the August holidays.

We have pleasure in announcing a gathering in Kew Gardens for Saturday afternoon, August 25th, at 3 o'clock, just inside the Lion Gate. An hour and a half will be spent in the beautiful gardens, and then tea will be served in the hall attached to Christ Church, Richmond, a few yards from the Lion Gate, to be followed by a public meeting at which a number of addresses will be given by speakers to be named later. Two years ago a similar gathering attracted large numbers, and we feel sure many will again wish to attend and bring their friends. Buses 27, 65 and 127 pass Lion Gate.

C. E. S. writes from U.S.A.:—"I was glad to read your letter on the cover of the 'N. M. and B.,' June 30th. This is the desire of my heart, and to see Israel awake and seeking God's will and way. I praise the Lord for all I have learnt through the pages of the Bible, aided by the writers in your journal. Please accept the enclosed donation for your great work."

A correspondent in Queensland, Australia, writes:—"We are quite thrilled by the knowledge that we are British-Israelites. I have been ever so well since I felt certain of this Truth. On account of ill-health and many losses I had been having wicked thoughts, questioning the why and wherefore of existence, but now I am well and happy, and looking forward to the Advent of Our Lord."

On Tuesday, July 17th, the Kingston Branch held their sixth Annual General Meeting at the Masonic Hall, Surbiton. Mr. Morey, as their Commissioner, took the chair and carried through the business until the new President was elected in the place of the late Mrs. Modin, of whom there were many expressions of affection and esteem. Miss Modin was unanimously elected to fill her place, Miss Fry becoming Secretary. The Branch kept the day as a Day of Prayer, and intend to hold a regular Prayer Meeting throughout the winter. Mr. Morey gave of his best in a short address, and the meeting closed on a high note of expectancy for great things next session.

The Rev. Joseph Gay, A.T.S., has been appointed our Commissioner for South Wales. The Area reaches from Llandrindod Wells in the North to Tenby and Pembroke Dock in the South. We are hoping to establish a chain of Branches along the Great Western Railway main line from Swindon to Pembroke Dock. Will all British-Israel believers residing in the towns along this route please communicate with Mr. Gay at No. 6, Buckingham Gate, S.W.1? If there are any who can give part-time service in organizing or addressing meetings, Mr. Gay will be specially pleased to hear from such. He will be making Cardiff his headquarters as from September next.

OPEN-AIR CAMPAIGN.

Our speakers were at Streatham Common on Sunday, July 29th, and held meetings afternoon and evening; Mr. Pilcher, the chairman, opening each meeting with a short account of the activities of the B.-I.-W.F. Messrs. Bradbury, McKelvey, Barrow and Tester in turn addressed the meetings. Prophecy, the British Empire, and the correct forecast in the Bible of the development of Israel (Britain) into a great Commonwealth of Nations, were dealt with.

ALIENS IN THE DOMINIONS.

"DR. BIDWELL, formerly Bishop of Ontario, preaching yesterday in Southwark Cathedral, uttered a warning against the settlement of aliens in the British Dominions. He said that in the area of Canada with which he was so well acquainted aliens from Central Europe, Russia, and from other parts of the world were settling, and unless the Empire saw to it that a considerable proportion of settlers came from British stock, then the whole outlook and the whole character of the British Empire, so far as the Overseas Dominions were concerned, would be very largely changed. Communist propaganda was taking place, and non-Christian schools were being established. There were ample funds behind these schemes, and the only way to counteract such propaganda was to settle on the land people of British stock."—Times, 30.7.28.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—VI.

ISAIAH.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard.

It has been generally assumed that the Book of Isaiah is an ecclesiastical Book.

It has been also assumed that the setting of Isaiah is exclusively Oriental. The latter statement will be illustrated by the fact that not one of the Bible maps included in copies of the Bible, or of the maps at present to be obtained in London for use in Sunday Schools, etc., extend their boundaries to what we shall see is the extent of the geography of Isaiah.

Let us make a statement which will develop later on.

The Isaiah literature is not ecclesiastical but national. It is both Oriental and Occidental. Its geography extends itself to the ends of the earth.

It is a Book that is written primarily to governments, nations, peoples, countries, and is not by any means addressed, primarily, as chapter headings and page headings would lead us to believe, to the Church. It has more significance to the King and his ministers than it has to the Archbishops and their clergy.

Doubtless it is the duty of the Church and its ministers to master and make the message clear to the government and the people, for to this they were called and ordained. They are the messengers, but the message is to the government and the people.

The form of the Book as it stands to-day is that of a collection of separate messages, each addressed specifically to a particular country or a particular people; these messages were delivered at various times concerning various peoples, each of which is mentioned by name and address in its own appropriate message, and these have all been gathered together, and being bound into one volume constitutes the Book of Isaiah.

In each of the messages there are chronological references indicating the time, or times, at which the events indicated should take place.

Some of these dealt with the past from our standpoint, although the event was then future, and ended at the period so indicated.

Some began with movements in the then immediate future which, once started, should sweep on through the ages for the period of the seven times of prophecy.

These datings are not given in specific figures, but time indications are sufficient to enable the careful reader to understand whether the prophet was speaking of times and things now in the distant past connected with the ancient Asiatic civilization, or with things which should transpire and reach their culmination in our day when European civilization had ripened at the end of the Christian dispensation as Asiatic civilization had ripened in Isaiah's day.

We shall not here deal largely with the chronological element of the Isaiah prophecies in this article.

The Isaiah prophecies do not deal with the origin of great movements, but they cross-sect the history of the nations then existing, and break in on great movements which had their beginning long before the prophet's day. Especially the prophecies of Isaiah find their place in the onward march of that Israel history which began with the call of Abraham; reached the specific development of national organization in Moses' day; swept into the land of Palestine under the leadership of Joshua; progressed in logical sequence through the centuries-long period of the Judges; saw the establishment of the throne, first of Saul then of David, in Israel; witnessed the dividing of the nation into two kingdoms; and finally reached the prophet's day.

Digitized by Google

The preceding historical books of the Bible constitute the foreword to the Isaiah literature, and the vision of the prophet Isaiah cuts in upon the vision of Moses some 700 years later than Moses, and makes its contribution to the main body of the same prophetic story.

Two factors stand out as the basis of the Isaiah literature, namely, the geography of the countries involved and the ethnology of the peoples included.

These two elements form the basis of the Isaiah literature.

We shall therefore turn our attention to the consideration of

THE GEOGRAPHY OF ISAIAH.

It will be wise for the reader to turn to a map of the world as it was in the period covered by the Isaiah literature; he will find in that map three nations occupying the coastline at the east end of the Mediterranean, namely, Judah, Israel and Syria, with the territories subject to Tyre north of those three.

Behind the nations thus bordering on the Mediterranean he will find the territory of Ammon; south of that, Moab; and south and east of that again, Edom.

Eastward still on the lower reaches of the Euphrates he will find Babylon; and northward from that, Assyria; he will also note Arabia.

Now taking the various messages of Isaiah he will be able to put a pen on his map for each of the countries named, and will notice that one by one the prophet Isaiah addresses a message to every country of Western Asia.

The reader will now turn to his map of Egypt. In the 18th chapter of Isaiah he will hear the call "Woe," or rather "Ho," for the form of the word is the same which commences the 55th chapter of Isaiah: "Ho, every one that thirsteth," this being the form which the context must decide: "Ho, to the land shadowing with wings beyond the rivers of Ethiopia."

Now it is well known to every geographer that the rivers of Ethiopia are the Blue and White Nile rivers, with their tributaries. The geography of this message therefore lies to the south and west of the lake region and other sources of the Nile river; in fact, it embraces all that part of Africa that is not drained by the Nile river.

This is most interesting and important, especially when we recognize the fact that the time indications of the 18th and 19th chapters of Isaiah indicate that the prophecies deal with the latter days in which we are now living and playing our part.

"The people scattered and polished which have been terrible from their beginning" to whom the land shadowing with wings send swift messengers for aid are certainly the Israel people, and the great march of the Anglo-Saxon, led by the great African explorers, into and through the dark continent of Africa is evidently the answer to the prophecy. We are dealing, however, with the geography at the present moment. The land shadowing with wings to-day includes manifestly Kenya, Uganda, Rhodesia, East Africa, South Africa, West Africa.

In the 19th chapter we have a synopsis of Egyptian history, Upper and Lower, culminating in the day and activity of British occupation.

The particular passage summing up the situation declares "The princes of Zoan are become fools," etc., indicating that wisdom has departed from Egypt in connection with her national affairs. An echo of this was published from the responsible British Minister the other day, who declared that Egypt's rejection of Britain's offered treaty was a piece of incredible folly. But again we are dealing with the geography. It will be seen that the 19th chapter deals with Lower and Upper Egypt, or, as we should say to-day, Egypt and the Sudan, and that this message fills out the geography of Western Asia and Africa.

In estimating the literature of Isaiah from the standpoint of Isaiah being two books by two Isaiahs bound together into one (which, however, we do not esteem the last word), the countries named are included in what would be so termed the first book.

The explanation of the difference between what is so termed the "first book" including the first 39 chapters, and what is termed the "second book" from the 40th chapter onwards, does not lie in authorship, but in the material entering into the literature and the objects under discussion.

When we read carefully the messages to the countries in Western Asia we find that they are predictions of coming national destruction.

The three countries bordering on the Mediterranean would immediately fall; Ammon, Moab and Edom would be included in national overthrow. These at the hands of Assyria and later Babylonia. Finally Assyria and Babylon would both be overthrown.

It is the story of a civilization which was tottering to its fall, and which the Lord in due course would remove out of His sight.

Impressed with this sweeping forecast, Isaiah cries in the 24th chapter: "The Lord maketh the earth empty, . . . and turneth it upside down."

Thus the prophet sings the requiem of a departing Oriental civilization.

But in the midst of that very song of desolation and overthrow a new note is introduced; a note of hope and of triumph, because of the fact that in a new territory untouched by predictions of overthrow in Western Asia or Africa a new civilization is being born. These are the words of that interjected strain. (Isaiah xxiv, 13-16.)

"When thus it shall be in the midst of the land among the people, there shall be as the shaking of an olive tree, and as the gleaning grapes when the vintage is done. They shall lift up their voice, they shall sing for the majesty of the Lord, they shall cry aloud from the sea. Wherefore glorify ye the Lord in the fires, even the name of the Lord God of Israel in the isles of the sea. From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous."

ETHNOLOGY OF ISAIAH.

Let us now glance for a moment at the ethnology of the nations of Western Asia at the period covered by the Isaiah literature.

Digitized by Google

First, there were the Israel nations, namely, Judah and Israel, otherwise called Ephraim.

Next, there were the Abrahamic group of nations which, of course, included Israel and Judah, together with Esau or Edom, and Ishmael or the Arabs.

Then we come to the larger group of kindred nations descended from Heber, "the father of all the Hebrews," which included Israel, Judah, Edom, Ishmael, Moab, Ammon and Syria.

The Syrian nation being descended from Nahor, the brother of Abraham, and Moab and Ammon being descended from Lot, who was the son of another brother of Abraham.

Thus it will be seen that massed on the Mediterranean the founders of the "Mediterranean type" were the Abrahamic descent and kindred nations.

Judah, Israel and Syria occupied the Mediterranean seaboard, and the kindred nations lay between them and the nations Babylon and Assyria, which occupied the Euphrates Valley.

It is interesting to note, as every historian and ethnologist will know, that the British type of Western civilization came directly from the Israel nations which centred on Jerusalem and Samaria, a Mediterranean type of civilization; whereas the Teutonic and Slavic types of Western civilization came from Babylonian and Assyrian sources established on the banks of the Euphrates.

Lying between the Anglo-Saxon nations on the west of Europe and the Teutonic and Slavic types of Western civilization in the east are our kindred peoples of Scandinavia, Holland, Belgium, Normandy, much as the kindred races divided the two types of civilization in Asia in the ages gone by.

The jealousies that existed between Euphratean nations on the one hand and Israel nations on the other have continued through the ages, and, as a learned German scholar suggested during the war, accounts very largely for the antagonism to be found between Anglo-Saxondom and Teutonic-Slavic Europe down to the present time.

In our next issue we shall follow the geography and ethnology of Isaiah into the then newly-born continent and civilization of Europe, for Europe then occupied much the same relationship to the Israel civilization of Western Asia as America occupies to European civilization at this time; while the Islands of Great Britain occupied the same relationship to Israel and Judah in Palestine as North America, Australia and New Zealand occupy in relationship to the British Isles at this time.

CYCLE OF SEVENS.—II.

By W. J. FOSTER.

Seven years: Nebuchadnezzar for his pride and arrogance is deprived of his reason and driven from the companionship of men, and made to dwell with the beasts of the field, until he acknowledged the omnipotence of God.

At the end of the seven years his reason returned to him, and he glorified God, admitting the infinite power of God over the affairs of men. Would it be stretching the imagination to presume that not only were the Gentiles to have power for seven times from 603 B.C. until A.D. 1917, but that, because of Nebuchadnezzar's pride and the relative impression such pride would inculcate in the Gentile people, a further period of seven times were applicable until their arrogance be destroyed, similar to the tree of Nebuchadnezzar's vision "whose branches reached to Heaven, was cut down, leaving the stumps of the roots in the ground"?

May we not presume that, just as the stump of the roots of the tree was left to grow, so shall the remnant of the Gentiles (the stump of the roots) be left following Armageddon to grow to the glory of God, just as Nebuchadnezzar glorified the God of Israel after restoration to reason?

Seventy weeks of Daniel ix, 24-27. Several opinions are expressed respecting the seventy weeks of Daniel. Some connect the Rapture and the Tribulation with the seventieth week. Others the birth of Our Saviour and Redeemer. The twenty-fourth verse reads: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people (Judah), and upon thy Holy City, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy."

Seventy weeks of years (490 years) according to the twenty-fourth verse was a period definitely intended by God to effect a reconciliation between God and man, and the redemption of Israel by the incarnation and sacrifice of the Messiah.

There were four decrees made relative to the building of Jerusalem. The first was made by Cyrus in 536 B.C. (Ezra vi, 3-5), the second by Darius Hystaspis in 518 B.C. (Ezra vi, 3-12), the third in 457 B.C. (Ezra vii, 27), and the fourth in 444 B.C. (Neh. ii) by Ahasuerus. The first and second decrees related to the building of the Temple; the third for restoration of proper order in the city, and the adornment of the Temple; and the fourth for rebuilding the walls and gates of the city. The beginning of the seventy weeks is generally dated from the third of these four decrees, that is 457 B.C., the seventh year of Ahasuerus. By taking the year 457 B.C. for the basis for calculation, we find the first period mentioned of seven weeks, or forty-nine years ending 408 B.C. were occupied to complete the building and establish organized government in Jerusalem.

The next period mentioned is 62 weeks, or 434 years. If we take the end of the first seven weeks, viz. 408 B.C., plus 434 years, it brings us up to A.D. 26, when Our Lord was baptized: Messiah the Prince—verse 25. Our Lord being born in the year 4 B.C. would make his age 30 years in A.D. 26: so that halfway through the "one week" or seven years Our Lord was crucified ("Messiah be cut off.") The second half of the "one week" or seven years would be spent by the Apostles preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom among the Jews before going to the "Lost House of Israel."

Other calculations may be made, but I offer the foregoing as a probable solution only.

Seven Eyes.—Zech. iii, 9: "For behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone shall be seven eyes." Zech. iv, 10: "For who hath despised the day of small things? For they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord which run to and fro through the whole earth." Here we have a complete cycle of control and vision, for we find in 2 Chron. xvi, 9, "to show Himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him. Herein thou hast done foolishly therefore from henceforth thou shalt have wars." This statement based on the latter verse evidently embraces seven graces, for we read 2 Corinthians xii, 9 : " My grace is sufficient for thee." During the seven great trials through which Israel have been passing, with the last portion through which Israel have yet to pass, those seven eyes of the Lord are running to and fro in all parts of the earth, watching the interests and well-being of His people and His grace upholding them, until at last war shall end, and " The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." (Hab. ii, 14.)

Seven Churches.—Our Lord when on earth founded a perfect Christian religion, but through the fact of many strange doctrines entering and becoming embodied into the ministry, Our Lord makes clear to those seven Churches, or seven distinct peoples, that He has been witness. To the Angel, or the Head of the First Church (such as our Archbishops) : " I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil : and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars." We then seem to hear Our Lord say : " Thou hast borne all this with patience and for My sake hast laboured. Nevertheless I have a charge to make against thee, ' Thou hast left thy first love.' Thou hast introduced, or permitted to be introduced, an erroneous doctrine. Now first remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works." (Do those things you swear to do in your ordination vows) " or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."

Head of the Second Church : " I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty (but thou art rich), and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer ; behold the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried ; and ye shall have tribulation ten days ; be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Thus we find, just as a specific message was sent to the first two Churches, so it was to the other five Churches.

By close study of the recorded messages to the seven Churches of Revelation, we are convinced that it was not intended only as a warning during the Apostolic age, but as a warning until the consummation of the age of grace. The apparent reason for the number mentioned, being seven, shows, as in other cases, that it is the number of perfection either for purpose or period. This being so, we may reasonably believe that Our Lord's reference respecting seven Churches has a direct reference to time, for He clearly states : " He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." God grant us wisdom to apply all those warnings to ourselves, for inasmuch as we are entrusted with " talents " for service, so Our Lord will expect of us a suitable return.

Seven Stars and Seven Candlesticks.—Revelation i tells us that the seven stars are the Angels of the seven Churches, and the seven candlesticks are the seven Churches. We are also told in this same first chapter : " And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the foot." Zech. iv, 2, says : " A candlestick all of gold." There can be no mistaking the fact that Our Lord is here represented as being in the unassailable position of headship. It also says that there are "seven pipes to the seven lamps," from the centre golden Candlestick. This would show that the seven " lamps " or seven Candlesticks could have a plenteous supply from the central reservoir. Our Lord Christ is this central reservoir, and has been, and is, the source of all light and life for those seven Churches throughout the whole cycle period of grace. If only our Church could realize to-day the terrible warning and the awful catastrophe overhanging her given in this message and would use only the oil from the reservoir, the " Golden Candlestick," Christ Our Lord, Great Britain would indeed be great spiritually to all the world.

Seven Seals.—Revelation v, 1-3 : " And I saw in the right hand of Him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with ' seven ' seals. And I saw a strong Angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof ? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon."

Oh Friend ! what a Book this must be, this private Ledger of Almighty God, bearing a record covering the whole period of the Adamic race.

Who but the most trustworthy and capable man would be permitted to examine the private ledger of an industrial chief ? This Great " Book " of life is incomprehensible to even the greatest human scholar that ever lived, and the most worthy Apostle of Our Lord was found unworthy.

What could be the nature of those entries, sealed as they were, and why " seven " seals ? Even John the Divine wept to find that even he, to whom was entrusted so glorious, but terrible a vision, was not worthy, no, not to take one look or even to touch one seal.

Our dear Redeemer ; the Lamb of God ; the Saviour of the world, the root and offspring of David, the Lion of Juda, He Who was slain to redeem us to God by His blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation (ninth verse) alone was found worthy. As we read the sixth, seventh and eighth chapters of Revelation respecting the opening of the " seven seals," we see in great panorama the whole period from Babylon unto the establishment of God's Kingdom on earth. In Zech. vi we have a further description which begins : " And I turned and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came four chariots out from between two mountains." If this refers to the Valley of Jehoshaphat, then we may follow in sequence the great powers of the world in relation to the " seals," for we find that, at the opening of the fifth seal the record of the redeeming grace achieved during the fourth seal by Our Lord's triumph over Death and Hell. And when He had opened the fifth seal, " I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held." This period certainly refers to the Christian Dispensation, therefore the fourth seal involves the Roman Power, the Crucifixion and Ascension of Our Lord.

The sixth seal is of most momentous importance to this present generation, for without doubt the sixth seal would refer to the immediate future ; in fact, this seal is about to be loosed, if not already happened. Please turn up Rev. vi, vii and viii, and read from the loosing of the sixth seal.

You will there find the period of tribulation definitely outlined. You will also find in the first, second and third verses of the seventh chapter the definite instructions given to the four Angels, saying: "Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads."

God's Word says: "The righteous (only the righteous, the pure and white) shall be hid in the day of trouble." Rev. viii, 1: "And when he had opened the 'seventh' seal, there was silence in Heaven about the space of half an hour."

Here we have the end of the greatest trial, in the greatest Hall of Justice, throughout the ages. The great Judge sits upon His throne ready to pass judgment; the angels standing before the Judge waiting for the command to carry into effect the sentence. In that Great Court are assembled "a multitude which no man could number of all the nations, kindreds, and people, and tongues," who were witnesses during their life on earth of the abominations recorded in that greatest Book of books—the Book of Life—which our Great Redeemer had read out to that vast assembly. The charges having been proven, the "seventh seal" is loosed. How awful the silence, not for one minute, no! for a full half an hour. Just imagine a court scene; the case is one of murder most foul; the jurymen having been closeted to decide if the prisoner is, or is not, guilty; they agree and are brought back before the Judge. The moment they are again in their places, a deathly silence pervades the whole court; a cold chill begins to affect all their nerves at almost breaking tension; their breathing becomes more laboured, their eyes riveted upon the Judge, and their bodies leaning at an angle of several degrees, in order not to miss one word when the silence breaks, when, guilty! vibrates through the air. It is a just verdict and deserved, but look at the prisoner; deathly pale, and near collapse; a pathetic object, full of terror, with all the past in panorama before his mental vision. The power of speech has left him, but oh; those appealing eyes, if only the Judge would alter that dreadful sentence, how he would like a chance to atone for wrong: the death knell is ringing in his brain; too late!

Think now again of the great "seventh seal" and the great Judge. The crime has been committed against the Lord, the Redeemer, and the Saviour of the World, and against the Holy Ghost, also against the servants of God and Our Lord Jesus Christ.

Seven Trumpets.—These may be taken in exactly the same order as the seven seals, and each one applicable to the distinctive periods represented by the seals. Just as the sixth seal is about to be loosed, so is the Sixth Trumpet about to be sounded. We read that after the Sixth Trumpet is sounded pardon could be obtained, but many would not repent of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornications, nor of their thefts, which they had committed. The sentence upon such must have been terrible, for we read that immediately "Seven Thunders uttered their voices" and John was about to write down that terrible sentence when he heard a voice from Heaven saying: "Seal up those things which the Seven Thunders uttered, and write them not." Rev. x, seventh verse: "But in the days of the voice of the Seventh Angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as He hath declared to His servants the prophets."

THE DAY OF THE LORD,* OR THE PERIOD OF TIME BETWEEN 1928 AND 1936 A.D.

AS REVEALED BY THE PROPHET JOEL, WHO GIVES EACH INCIDENT IN PROPER ORDER OF SEQUENCE FROM THE INVASION OF GOG TO THE ARMAGEDDON, BACKED BY THE PROPHETS EZEKIEL, ISAIAH, MICAH, ZECHARIAH AND OTHERS.

BY WM. REEVE (Toronto).

PART II.

JOEL continues as if Elijah had done good work.

"And it shall come to pass afterward,

"That I will pour out My spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions: And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out My spirit.

"And I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood.

"BEFORE THE GREAT AND TERRIBLE DAY OF THE LORD COME."

So Ezekiel's invasion of Gog (the Russian Army) and Joel's invasion of the Northern Army are over and done with before the "Great and Terrible Day of the Lord come."

"And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the Name of the Lord shall be delivered, for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call."

Here we find Mount Zion coupled with Jerusalem. Why? Then has the final transference of the Throne of David taken place?

It has!

And Jerusalem become the centre of Israel-Britain's world-wide Empire?

It has!

And is the Palace of the Great King of the Empire there?

It is!

Now is the time that Jerusalem has its rightful honour. Because "Jerusalem has received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins."

Now see the change of affairs.

Joel iii, 1.—"For, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the Valley of Jehoshaphat and will plead with them there for My People and for My heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the Nations."

Joel iii, 9.—"Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong.

"Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about.

"Thither cause Thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord." —Earth's forces against heavenly powers; are they equal?

Joel iii, 16.—"The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter His voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake. But the Lord will be the hope of His People, and the strength of the Children of Israel. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, My Holy Mountain; then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more."

Zechariah xiv, 2.—"For I will gather all Nations against Jerusalem to battle."

Zechariah xiv, 4.—"And His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives."

Zechariah xiv, 9.—"And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be One Lord, and His Name One."

Joel in chapter ii, verses 1 and 15, did not couple Zion with Jerusalem, and for a good reason; Zion was not at Jerusalem at that time.

From these extracts it seems most definite that the destruction of Joel's Northern Army, and Gog's Federated Army, being one and the same in their attempted invasion of the Holy Land, while being in the Day of God Almighty, is not in the section called "THE GREAT AND TERRIBLE DAY OF THE LORD."

Then the question can well be asked: Why does the Great Pyramid make no distinction in these events? seeing they are included in the King's Chamber Passage. Because it is a definite time of trouble decreed upon the whole world; sin has to be punished, and banished; Israel and Judah are here included. But this is where knowledge of British-Israel Truth comes in to give light.

The Israel People are in a different position toward God than all others.

Not that they are pets, but designed for service.

It was necessary that they should be equipped for service.

God wanted pure men, good men, righteous men; He wanted the whole Nation that way. So Jesus came and redeemed the Nation of Israel, paid their debt of sin by His Blood, at the same time paying the debt for every individual that will accept the fact; this is Salvation for the individual as distinct from Redemption for the Nation.

The whole Nation could have availed themselves of this gift at any time since the transaction, but had failed up to now.

Yes, a vast number of individuals availed themselves of this offer, and have accomplished a great work in the world; but how few in comparison to the Nation?

Not only is the time of Israel and Judah's punishment up, but the Gentile Powers must relinquish the power they have had since Nebuchadnezzar's day.

This they will not do without a struggle.

But how is God going to get the Nation to accept this free gift?

There are two methods open.

One—Reward. (This has been ignored.)

The other—Fear. "The Big Stick of Invasion and War."

The British Nation has never awakened to the fact that, when they took over Palestine, they took over the old National Homeland; not knowing they are the daughter of the Nation of Israel, as Canada is the daughter of Britain to-day, they give the Land to the Jews; that seems the thing to be done.

But the Jews have been constrained from going there, for a purpose. Why? The centre Land, God's Land, Israel's Land is practically lying untenanted to-day; so see the covetous glances cast by the other Nations!

Here is Russia-Gog's chance. Get the Land, and the world is ours. But they know not the mind of the Lord.

However, as soon as the Nation knows of the invasion, as we have already stated, they throw themselves upon the mercy and protection of God, doing the very thing God has been waiting for them to do ever since His Son took His seat at the Father's right hand. "Henceforth expecting, till His enemies become His footstool."

He then flashes out the receipt. "THESE PEOPLE ARE FREE! THIS LAND IS FREE. I have paid the debt. You have to settle with Me. I am the Defender."

Romans xi, 15.—"For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?"

Now see Isaiah's prophecy for this very time, Chapter xxvi, verses 19-21.

FERRAR FENTON'S VERSION.

"Your dead shall rise, your corpses live, awake and cheer who sleep in dust, the morning's dew shall drop on you, but earth o'erwhelm the oppressors. So go my people to your homes, and close your doors behind. Hide till the storm has passed away; for see, the Lord comes from on high to bring the man's crimes on himself.

And turn upon his land his blood."

KING JAMES'S VERSION.

"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs; and the earth shall cast out the dead.

Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast.

For, behold, the Lord cometh out of His Place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain."

Is not this the very time Ezekiel saw in the vision of "The Valley of Dry Bones."

First.—The bones scattered and very dry.—The House of Israel scattered.

Second.—Bones brought together again, united.—Israel gathered to "The Place Appointed."

Third.—Sinews knit bones together.—Israel united in the Isles.

Fourth.—Flesh comes upon them.—Britain develops the waste places of the earth.

Fifth.—Skin covers the flesh.—Beautiful homes, education, invention.

Sixth.—Spirit enters the bodies.—NOW COMES LIFE. GOD'S SPIRIT. Life from the dead.

Certainly this prophecy of Isaiah is very definite, to the joy and comfort of some people. Who can it be? Surely the Israel People.

Why hide in their chambers? or in each Anglo-Saxon country?

Why shut their doors about them, and close their ports?

Because God's indignation is going to sweep over the whole earth, as when the destroying Angel swept over Egypt on the Passover night. God issued orders for that "Night."

This the order for British-Israel for this time.

Is there any recent history where such events have happened in two countries, but in miniature? Yes, Britain and France.

In fact, one French minister declared: "We will hurl thither 50,000 Red Caps of liberty, we will plant there the sacred tree of liberty."

While one was under the religious revivals of Wesley and Whitfield, the other had red revolution.

But no! Two positives always repel each other.

How the countries are discarding their kings and setting up dictators in place thereof. Some kings are still retained; it is for a little while only.

One Throne is the exception, "The Throne of David."

It is on record that "Solomon sat on 'The Throne of the Lord' instead of David his father."

That Throne can never be overthrown.

As one arose out of the French Revolution and laid Europe under stress of war at that time, so one individual will arise and one nation will back him to lead all nations against Jerusalem to smash the centre of the British-Israel Empire.

That nation is called Assyria by Isaiah and Micah.

This is where Psalm ii has its fulfilment.

Review the world's condition as I have described it, now notice as the Psalmist describes it:—

"Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against His anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision. Then shall He speak unto them in His wrath, and vex them in His sore displeasure. Yet have I set My king upon My holy hill of Zion."

Because there is no Nation of Israel in Palestine to-day, it would not be true to assert that there is no Nation of Israel somewhere under another name.

Neither would it be true to assert the same respecting Assyria.

All Isaiah's prophecies concerning the destruction of Assyria cannot be summed up in the destruction of Sennacherib's Army which he saw personally in 710 B.C.

Some have a more far-reaching effect than that local affair.

There is a prophecy respecting Assyria in Micah v, 5:—

"And this Man shall be the peace, when the Assyrian shall come into our land."

Surely this prophecy could not be fulfilled until "This Man" was born in Bethlehem?

Although "Whose goings forth have been of old from everlasting."

Moreover this prophecy is wholly progressive in sequence of history.

1.—The Birth in Bethlehem—of The Ruler.... Verse 2.
2.—The insult to the same—The Judge ..... Verse 1.
3.—The destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans Verse 1.
4.—The giving up of the Jews to the Romans, as the Jews had given "The Judge or Ruler to the Romans"..... Verse 3.
5.—For a certain length of time, or "until".. Verse 3.
6.—A "Certain Nation" had brought to birth other Nations..... Verse 3.
7.—Then the Jews, here called "The Remnant," should be joined to "The Many Nations," of the stock of Israel..... Verse 3.
8.—That He, "The Judge," shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord..... Verse 4.
Instituting THE SACRAMENTAL BREAD AND WINE, in remembrance.
9.—Declaring that His People Israel, as well as those that believe on Him, should abide, be safe, unmovable ..... Verse 4.
10.—Declaring He should be great or known world-wide ..... Verse 4.
11.—Now comes "The Invasion" of Assyria that this Judge or Ruler meets and settles with once and for all.

All in proper place as to order of events and time.

Zechariah xiv, 2, says: "I will gather all Nations against Jerusalem to battle."

Zechariah xiv, 3.—"Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those Nations as when He fought in 'The Day of Battle.' And His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives."

Zechariah xiv, 9.—"And the Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be One Lord and His Name One."

Surely this is the close of this dispensation.

"THE END OF THE DAY OF THE LORD IS BY THE COMING OF THE LORD."

May He come soon.

Amen.

SOME OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

EXTRACT FROM "FULNESS OF THE NATIONS" BY DR. ALDERSMITH.

"Lo, it is a people that dwell alone and shall not be reckoned among the Nations"—R.V. (NUMBERS XXIII, 9).

How is Israel to dwell alone?

(1) "NATIONALLY, as the words imply; and God pledged: 'as the ordinances of heaven and earth remain, so shall the seed of Israel be a NATION before Me for ever.' This at once excludes those called Jews, as much as the Gipsies, for they are a sect, scattered over the world as individuals, or in small knots or communities; having no national Territory, no national Constitution" ....

(2) "GEOGRAPHICALLY. The nation of Israel was expatriated en masse, and became settled apart in certain definite localities. God solemnly engaged not to destroy the nationality of Ephraim. They kept together in large bodies, under their own chiefs and rulers, and subsequently came under a Davidic king (Hosea iii, 4, 5). They were not reckoned among the nations of the Roman Empire . . . Josephus is a witness of Israel's separation from Rome in a political and geographical sense; AS WELL AS FROM JERUSALEM IN A RELIGIOUS SENSE. For he tells us that in Ezra's time, while many belonging to the Median Israelites took their effects with them, to be worshippers of Judah's God, the ENTIRE BODY OF THE PEOPLE OF ISRAEL REMAINED IN THAT COUNTRY: Wherefore, he continues, 'there are but two tribes in Asia and Europe SUBJECT TO THE ROMANS.'" . . . .

(3) "SOCIALLY. They were divinely, and from the force of their early history and habits, endowed with a strong instinct of racial exclusiveness in order that thus, BY A MIGHTY SECRET LAW, UNIVERSALLY PERMEATING THEIR MASS, they might fulfil this prophecy. 'The Scythians,' says Herodotus, 'have not only a great abhorrence of all foreign customs, but each province seems unalterably tenacious of its own' . . . Thus our forefathers dwelt alone, and were not reckoned among the nations. The same EXCLUSIVENESS OF ENGLISHMEN to this hour is proverbial and notorious all over the world."

(4) "THEOCRATICALLY; or as having God's Presence among them. This was THE mark, PAR EXCELLENCE, of Israel. So Moses said unto God, 'For wherein shall it be known that I and Thy people have found grace in Thy sight? Is it not in that Thou goest with us? SO SHALL WE BE SEPARATED FROM ALL THE PEOPLE THAT ARE ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH' . . . Ezekiel says, 'I will be'—not to Judah, but to Israel—'a LITTLE SANCTUARY in all countries whither they shall come' (xi, 16) . . . Where is the observance of the sabbath and the possession of the oracles of God, the sword of the Spirit? Where is the confession of a true Creed and a Scriptural faith? Where is an Established Church? Where is a multitude of men and women (notwithstanding abounding evils) whose hearts are living temples of the Holy Ghost, and whose lives are continual burnt-offering? The answer of judicial impartiality is 'Among the Christian Anglo-Saxons.' By a lofty spiritual pre-eminence, these, through the grace of God, thus 'DWELL ALONE, and are not reckoned among the nations': not that they may selfishly exalt or aggrandize themselves, but glorify God; not that they may 'deny the lamp of life to other nations, but that they may be saved and blessed. Thus they are proved to be the Israel of God.'"

"This last mark of separation also implies that Special Providential Government and national overruling which are as conspicuous in English as they were in Israelite history."

"I WILL LEAVE NONE OF THEM ANY MORE THERE."

Ezekiel xxxix, 27, 28, is a favourite passage with some, as it is thought this at once shows our view to be incorrect. For if Israel is "as the sand of the sea," how can they all go back?

The Rev. R. Douglas' answer is as follows:—

"It is an accepted canon of interpretation that one passage of Scripture, and that which, from the imperfection of language itself, may be ambiguous, must not be so explained as to contradict other plain texts, or the dictates of common sense. Now the words 'this is my body,' as much prove transubstantiation, as Ezekiel's words here prove Mr.———'s absurd and impossible contention that 'all descendants of Israel living at the Restoration will return and settle in Palestine.' . . . A people at that time, relatively to, and in contrast with, other races, 'as the sand of the sea,' 'the dust of the earth,' 'the stars of heaven,' 'a fulness, or multitude of nations' (Rom. xi, 25), are to be jammed or compressed in Palestine." His theory "not only requires that there should be no Israelites anywhere else than in Palestine at the Restoration, but that there should be none in any other place AT ANY FUTURE TIME. If the words, 'and have left none of them ANY MORE there,' mean what Mr.——— says, they mean this too. They thus, we imagine, prove too much even for him. But his explanation is against the sense of the passage. The word 'there' may refer to two places: (a) to their 'ENEMIES' LANDS' of the preceding verse; i.e., they shall not any of them be left in the lands of their enemies; not that no other lands shall be in their possession or occupation as their own, as we maintain, and which is a widely different matter. (b) The word 'there' according to the most grammatical construction, rather seems to denote Palestine itself. In this case, 'left' is the word to be explained. It means 'to remain over,' like the uneaten manna (Exod. xvi, 20), or other food (Ruth ii, 14; 2 Kings iv, 43, etc.). It is also the word used in Isaiah i, 9. In this case the meaning is,—God will no more reject them, or leave them over 'as a small remnant' in Palestine—just the opposite of Mr.———'s fancy; but they shall 'inherit the nations,' and 'fill the face of the world with fruit.' The words that follow dovetail with this explanation of 'left'—'neither will I hide my face any more from them, for I have poured my Spirit on the House of Israel.'" "The Restoration of Israel, by chosen representatives, is accurately described in that text strangely perverted by Mr.———, 'I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion' (Jer. iii, 14): words pointedly addressed to Ephraim, as possessing 'a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations,' or as multiplied and increased in the land of the north. To give Mr.———'s interpretation is quite enough to refute it. He says the one of a city, etc., are from the cities and families 'LIVING IN JEREMIAH'S TIME'; which would evidently require the impossible resurrection of a former generation for its accomplishment! To what expedients will men have recourse to evade the truth they dislike! The only possible meaning of this passage in harmony with the text itself, or with reason, is the future Restoration of Israel, now 'a fulness of nations' inhabiting the whole earth, on the Representative principle; and the land of the Covenant itself, not being Palestine within the Old Testament limits, but from the Nile to the Euphrates, as covenanted to Abraham in Christ (Gen. xv, 18). This Scripture, moreover, demolishes Mr.———'s notion of the non-conversion of Israel before the Return, for that conversion, in part and effectually, is plainly stated to be the reason of Israel receiving the prior 'heritage of the host of nations.'

"The foregoing samples serve to show how objections, commonly urged with much ignorant assurance, melt away in the light of maturer knowledge and criticism. We are far from saying that in a subject so mysterious, and one as to which we have been kept in the dark on purpose, or providentially 'blinded' for so many ages, there are no serious or perplexing difficulties. These are inevitable. But our own experience, after years of careful inquiry, is that alleged or apparent objection, when closely sifted, go to confirm and illustrate our doctrine. And were these objections tenfold more numerous or considerable than they are, they would not weigh a feather against the overwhelming evidence we have brought forward, proving that just as truly as the God of Prophecy is the God of Providence," the "Chief of the nations," in the "Isles afar off" in the West, is the veritable "ISRAEL" of the Prophets, and the Promised "FULNESS OF THE NATIONS."

MAN AND EARTH: A CO-ORDINATED CREATION AND INTERDEPENDENT.—PART IV.

BY BEN ISRAEL.

IN this year of Our Lord we are near the end of the classified dispensations. There is not, for the age coming, a serial taxonomy; but the whole length of time is prophesied as a thousand years under the reign of King Immanuel. The divisions of the millennial age, we apprehend, are yet sealed in the "Seven thunders" of Rev. x, 3. Since St. John, the Revelator, must prophesy again before many peoples and nations, and tongues and kings, we interpret that he will be commissioned to bring forth the "Little Book" of the new or amended Gospel and laws of national and civil government of the Kingdom of Immanuel. We note that the book spoken of in the Apocalypse is "little." Our world code of laws, "The Statutes of Omri," like the "Traditions of the elders," has become so ponderous that no lawyer can learn it. All the lawyers combined, Supreme Court Judges and Lord High Chancellors, utterly fail to render unanimous decisions. Be not surprised at this foreword; the millennial government of Our Lord, administered by the Twelve Apostles, will have a Constitution, short, no doubt, but comprehensible, and all comprehensive.

We have long since reached the open sea of prophecy, and are assured direct sailing. The horizon in our wake is rich with fulfilment, and the course ahead completely charted. The Captain of our Salvation has freely given us our clearance papers and set His own seal upon the packet, and named the port for each individual sailor, and for the race. We have passed beacons, heard the trumpet blasts of warning signals, and explored His ancient lighthouses. As we scan from the look-out, we descry, in island and continent, other lighthouses of His building which we are just beginning to make use of in our nautical calculations. But they are not dissimilar from the ones we left behind. Now the wonder of wonders is, that in this voyage, the Captain Himself is our Pole Star by night, Sun of Righteousness by day. Day Star from on high, from Whom we take both orders and bearings, day and night. Our sea-faring is peculiar and different from the merchant mariners in that we can, by careful seamanship, quite largely control or prevent storms, and enjoy a transparent sky. "The heavens declare the glory of God," and their stars are a perpetual memorial of the Divine fiat, "Let there be light." We perceive that they, too, are pursuing a voyage of destiny. Since the Bible so frequently refers to the stars, we are persuaded that they are indissolubly linked with the future human processes. The Witness of our redemption is written in their constellations. "Jehovah knoweth their number and calleth them all by their names." For the utilitarian purposes of science, the stars are time-markers. Scripture declares they will be changed. There comes a day when the angel of the "Seven thunders" will proclaim that time shall be no longer. That moment, scientifically expressed, would be when worlds cease to revolve around worlds throughout the universe. Several texts prove the orthodoxy of a cataclysm in the heavens at the end of time. The prediction is clear and emphatic. It has much to do in the closing scene of Redemption for the saved and perdition for the lost. Let it be again distinctly noted; the stars mark time. Time is the full period of man's probation. With probation ended, Time ends, and history will repeat itself in the signs of the heavens manifested in that last day. "All the host of heaven shall be dissolved and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree."—Isaiah xxxiv, 4. This word of the Lord is all comprehensive, pertaining to the universe. It is applicable in particular to the sun and his dependents, as a vine and a fig tree, the leaves and figs answering to planets and satellites. It is, moreover, a metaphor of the impending destruction of Idumea and Bozrah. The fate of this people is projected forward and reflected back in a prophecy of astronomical scope at the end of the millennium.

"For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine.... Therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger."—Isaiah xiii, 10–13. This, again, is metaphor, foretelling the downfall of Babylon. The number of this chapter is the symbol of rebellion. The number 10 expresses Divine order in contrast to Babylonian or world disorder. The metaphor ends in number 13. Babylon's imaginary gods and goddesses set up in the heavens should fall with the dissolution of that Empire. Literal and astronomical fulfilment of the prophecy occurs at the close of the millennial age. We note distinctly that the "earth shall remove out of her place."

"For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts."—Mal. iv, 1. The numerical value of this terrifying passage demands particular attention. The prophecy is stamped with the earth number 4. It is direct, and foretells the gathering and destruction by fire of the unrepentant, presumptuous rebels against the millennial government of Our Lord at Jerusalem in the last day of probation for the human race. Vide Rev. xx, 9. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken."—Matt. xxiv, 29. The metaphor of the Old Testament is brought forward and projected into the New by the Saviour as recorded here, presaging the fall of Jerusalem in the year

A.D. 70, and includes some of the miraculous phenomena attending the close of the Great Tribulation. It doubtless symbolizes the casting down of the planetary gods and goddesses of the Beast, heathen Rome, that came to naught upon the adoption of Christianity by that Empire during the reign of Constantine. Its literal fulfilment synchronizes with the beginning of post-millennial epoch, or Eternity. The scope of this prophecy is co-extensive with the preceding. The stars may reasonably refer to the planets of our system, since they were deified and worshipped by the heathen. The powers of the heavens, on the other hand, embrace all the forces, cosmic and gravitational, of the Universe. The forecast is pregnant with mighty, cataclysmic, celestial revolution. "The heavens were of old and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. . . . But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. . . . What manner of persons ought ye to be . . . looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Peter iii, 5–13. This prophecy we regard as all inclusive of our original allegations, and, of itself, sustains the argument based upon the initial premises. It differs from previous statements and allusions in Scripture relating to this subject in that it is concrete, foretelling a universal suspension of natural laws as we know them now, and a metamorphosis of matter, for which science makes no provision while leading us out into the celestial spaces, and demonstrating our spiral pathway among the stars. We are not to be mistaken that any figure of speech lies hidden under cover of sensational verbiage. The term, "great noise," stamps it as material matter of fact. It is definite and explicit in detail as to the earth, and the heavens also; certainly as far as the Solar system constitutes a part thereof; and we are indeed justified in extending the interpretation immeasurably farther, since the Apostle employs the word "heavens" in the plural, which gives his prophecy as comprehensive a scope as Isaiah xxxiv, 4. The antecedent of this scene is the judgment and doom of ungodly men, and, as in former catastrophes, is the result of utter and unpardonable sin. The time of this event is Dispensational, coming as it does at the end of all the probationary periods of the world, the last Thunder in the book of Time, the opening of the portal of Eternity. The casus belli occurs in the day of Kuriou, Our Lord Christ; the judgment result is in the day of Theou, God. To the materialist who is not overpressed by Scriptural dicta we will here submit two facts: first, that the Bible repeatedly affirms that the Universe will be dissolved; and, secondly, that this mode of change is accurately in accord with the latest findings of chemistry. Matter has been analysed to its essential, electrical energy. Destruction of an element involves the dissolving of its atomic proportions in the eliminating of one or more of its constituent electrons. The result is a different element. This much we have learned, theoretically at least, about the chemistry of matter.

The Divine Architect, Structural Engineer, and Chemist of the Universe, Who is obviously the Author of that primordial, basic, material manifestation, electrical energy (science confesses she does not know what this is), has actually put matter together in such a way that He can take it apart, dissolve it at will. Chemists are experimenting with processes of transmutation to find out how this can be done. In the face of a laborious, patient and laudable undertaking, let not the little wisdom of this world vaunt itself foolishly, proclaiming an evolution of things by involuntary accretion, or a Bible outworn and behind the needs of this much advanced and knowledge-increased generation. Rather, let us go back and sit in sackcloth and ashes with Job, and listen to his rehearsal of Divine operations. In Job ix, 4–6, replying to Bildad, he says: "Against Him, . . . which shaketh the earth out of her place." Job, evidently, was well aware that the earth had formerly moved out of her orbit into the present one. This seems to have been common knowledge among his several philosophical friends. They do not dispute it. Attention is called to these facts to emphasize the mathematical accuracy of the Bible. There is not a hint in all Scripture that matter will be destroyed; but abundant prediction that it will be dissolved, changed. The realism and magnitude of cosmic chaos unfolded in the context of 2 Peter iii, 5–13, may be better comprehended when we appreciate the significance of the feature, "great noise." To have sound, there must be a medium of vibration. Can ether conduct sound? Would the latter travel at the rate of a hundred thousand or more miles a second through the inter-stellar, attenuated, ethereal ocean? Imagination can measure, perhaps, the super-appalling uproar of bursting, falling, crashing spheres, millions of miles away, borne to our ears upon the waves of inflammable gases expanding and co-extensive with the Universe. The anarchy of Time's parenthetical order begins as earth shakes from centre to circumference, her elements on fire and melting with fervent heat, and the works that are therein burned up, as she turns, flies, falls to join nature's gigantic holocaust in the sun. The monuments of man's boasted genius and wisdom go into that limbo and oblivion where lie the ghostly shades of Lucifer's paradise, the perished civilization of Azazel and Tubal-cain. The earth was reserved unto fire, and has removed out of her place, according to the word of the prophet Isaiah. Will she lose her identity in the dissolution, disorganization of fiery, reorganizing, universal matter? The Apostle assures us, "Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

OBITUARY.

WE have to record with deep regret the death of our good friend, Dr. Heywood Smith, M.A., M.D., though he lived to the great age of nearly ninety-one. He was well known as a leading specialist in certain diseases. He had been Senior Physician to the Hospital for Women in Soho Square, and to the British Lying-in Hospital, and House Physician at St. George's Hospital. He was a Vice-President of the British-Israel-World Federation, and he had been identified with the Imperial British-Israel Association for many years before its amalgamation with the Federation, both as a Vice-President and a member of Council, which he regularly attended. He had been a British-Israelite for seventy years, and his father, the late Dr. Prothero Smith, was a believer in and a worker for Israel Truth also for many years. Our friend was a very genial and earnest Christian. We tender our most sincere sympathy to his widow and family.

THE LATE DR. HEYWOOD SMITH, M.A., M.D.

NOTES AND QUOTATIONS IN RELATION TO BRITAIN-ISRAEL.

BY PROFESSOR EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., &c.

[The following articles should be read with the thought in mind that they are not intended as a glorification of the Empire, nor of the Anglo-Saxon people, but as a recognition that Jehovah, the God and King of Israel, has in the Celto-Saxon people the basis of His Kingdom on earth. The Anglo-Saxon people have been trained for ages to be the Administrators of that Kingdom, and to carry its benefits, its liberty and its peace to all mankind.]

No. 20.

IN the Express (London) A. G. Gardiner writes:

"Democracy has come, and not only farm labourers but shopwomen have votes; farmers are permitted to shoot rabbits; Ireland has got Home Rule; we have fought by the side of 'insolent France' and against our 'old allies the Turks'; we have survived the greatest convulsion in human history, and at the end we are more definitely the first Power in Europe than we have ever been, and the British throne, the last great monarchy left in the world, is more secure than at any period in its history."

The paper comments as follows:

"What Mr. Gardiner says is the simple truth. While empires have been destroyed, and emperors have disappeared, our King and Kingdom present to the world a stability unparalleled. With as wise a monarch as Britain has had, and a Prince of Wales to succeed him, loved and trusted by all classes of the people at home and throughout the Empire, the permanence of our system and its institutions is more firmly established than ever before."

If the British are not God's own people, they are enjoying the blessings promised to the seed of Abraham.

Hannay says: "The disintegration, collapse and disappearance of the Beth-Sak, or House of Isaac, caused the destruction or decadence of the Golden Age of ancient Phœnicia in its extensive maritime wealth and enterprise."

"The Beth-Saks were the creators and sustainers of the Golden Age of Phœnician navigation."

The spirit of the sailorman has never died out. It is as intense to-day among our Jack Tars as it was among their ancestors on the seas of Europe, Asia and Africa in the days of the judges and kings of Israel.

Trogus Pompeius says of our ancestors, the Scyths or Skolotoi:

"Justice is observed among them more from the temper of the people than from the influence of laws."

He further says: "It appears extremely wonderful that nature should grant that to them which the Greeks cannot attain by long instruction from their wise men, and precepts of their philosophers, and that cultivated morals should have the disadvantage in a comparison with those of unpolished barbarians. So much better effect has the ignorance of vice in the one people than the knowledge of virtue in the other." A wonderful statement and true too!

The following from Herodotus will show that our ancestors, the Goths or Scyths, were not so wild, savage and barbarous as our average historians teach:

"The Euxine Sea, to which Darius led his army, of all countries, except the Scythians, exhibits the most ignorant, for we are unable to mention any one nation of those on this side of the Pontus that has any learned man among them except the Scythian nation and the Scyth, Anacharsis."—Bk. 50, Ch. 46.

Thucydides, speaking of our Gothic or Scythic ancestors, says :

" In respect of military strength and numbers of soldiers, no single nation, either in Europe or Asia, could match the Skuths."—Bk. 2-97.

As a matter of fact the Scythic nation never was conquered by Rome, Greece, or Persia. Darius tried it and retreated in confusion. Cyrus tried it and lost his life. Rome built walls to hold these Israelitic Scyths in check, as she built walls in the British Isles to hold back the unconquered Israel people of North Scotland.

BRITISH RULE IN INDIA PAID A HIGH TRIBUTE.

At the weekly luncheon of the Gyro Club, Monday, May 28th, 1928, Mr. White, of Illinois, U.S.A., was the guest and speaker.

Referring to British rule in India, Mr. White said : " The British are carrying out what I consider the most difficult task in the world, and their work is in the best interests of the Indian people."

He spoke strongly of the high efficiency and wonderful humane spirit of the English civil servants.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER.

August 4th, 1928.

DEAR SIR,—To-day we celebrate the fourteenth anniversary of Great Britain's entry into the Great War. As each year passes it becomes increasingly important that the younger generation, for whom our elder brethren died, should be reminded of the part their brothers played in this great struggle. Memory fades with passing time, and our national tendency to belittle the efforts of our own people robs our children of a pride and inspiration which should be their precious heritage. Above all it seems necessary, in the face of an extraordinarily prevailing ignorance, to emphasize the part played by Ephraim-England.

" What would England have done without her Colonies? " is a question asked almost contemptuously by many of the younger generation to-day. The answer to this question is most important, and it is the duty of all who love their country to know the answer.

No one, for one moment, wishes to disparage or belittle the magnificent support which Great Britain received at once from every corner of the Empire. But let us see these things in right proportion. For it is a fact that little England alone sent into the British Army more men than the total number of men contributed by all the rest of the Empire put together, including Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

The total enlistment of the Empire was seven million men. England sent four million. India one million. The Dominions one-and-a-half million, and the Colonial Empire, including Scotland, Ireland and Wales, provided the balance of half a million.

If we exclude the Empire of India from our calculations—for India contains more than half of the total population of the whole Empire—then England's proportion of men sent to the Army stands out at 4 to 6. Out of six million little England alone sent four million. This is a wonderful record and one we should never forget.

Yours sincerely,
A. R. NELSON HEAVER.

IN CAMP AT ALDERSHOT.

BY CAPTAIN THE REV. G. H. LANCASTER, M.A., C.F.

As has been my custom for many years past, I always go to Camp as a Territorial Army Chaplain with the 47th (2nd London) Division, and this time I am acting Senior Chaplain attached to Divisional Headquarters.

As is probably well-known to our readers, a Division is a very large affair, and is practically an Army in itself, being fully equipped with every possible kind of unit, and consists of many Infantry Brigades, Field Brigades (R.A.), Divisional Engineers, Divisional Signals, Divisional Train (R.A.S.C.), Ordnance Company, Field Ambulance (R.A.M.C.), and other units.

The annual training for our Division is taking place this year at Aldershot, where we are grouped in some 23 Camps, which necessarily occupy a very large number of square miles within the area known as the Aldershot Command. For example, I had to go over to see the C.O. of the Gunners of the 64th Field Brigade the other day, camping at Longmoor, and I found that the journey there and back was some 50 miles ! It is also a long way to Borden Camp, where the London Scottish, the Artists, the Kensingtons (13th London), etc., are. I am messing with my own 17th London Regiment, 141st Infantry Brigade, at Bourley Camp, and though attached to Divisional H.Q., have pleasure in living thus with my own Battalion, amongst whose Officers, N.C.O.'s and riflemen—men of all ranks—I have many treasured friendships.

Upon arrival in Camp it was at once my immediate duty to commence making provision for Divine Services to be held in such a way that all troops of whatever unit might find it possible to attend a Church Parade. This was no easy task, since the War Office only allows six Padres (including one United Board and one Presbyterian) to one Division, so it became my responsibility to travel to and fro throughout the above area, visiting Commanding Officers and Adjutants in all directions, with a view to grouping geographically the many units for attendance at such Drumhead Services as could be conducted by this small staff of Chaplains. I have received nothing but the greatest kindness and helpful co-operation from all the C.O.'s, while the Divisional H.Q. Staff have helped in every way. The result was that the Church Parades on Sunday—each with its Massed Bands—were very " successful," while I personally conducted the Service for the Divisional Royal Engineers at Watts Common Camp, near the Tattoo Arena, whose Colonel stood by my side, and kindly read the Lesson.

Digitized by Google

It is always a disputed point as to whether or not the troops like Church Parades. But my belief or experience is that the men love the actual Service (if properly conducted), the singing of the hymns (if suitably selected), the music of the bands (if well played), and last—but perhaps not least—the Padre's address (if carefully adapted)!! But—and this is a big BUT—what they are more inclined to kick against is the well-known "spit and polish," and certain forms of ceremonial (military) which precede or follow the Service. Many a time I have found, when walking down the lines and talking to the men in the week following, that they have listened to the address, and are quite keen upon telling the Padre how much they may have enjoyed it, even to the point of asking questions, or seeking some spiritual enlightenment.

The Padre is an officer with a great privilege, as he can meet as man to man with men of all ranks, and so has the entre into all Army messes, canteens, tents, etc. And if he abuse not this privilege, he is welcomed everywhere, and may be looked upon by all as a friend, from the G.O.C. downwards.

Numerous opportunities arise at any moment for the Padre to be of service. If he is not marching with the troops or going out with them on tactical operations, he never seems to have an idle moment, since there are so many ways in Camp in which he can be a real help. Nor do officers, sergeants, etc., ever fail to turn to the Padre in any matter regarding which he can be even of the slightest assistance.

Personally, I always find that sick cases give untold opportunities of service. In a large Camp there are always cases of minor sickness or accident (a man may be kicked by his horse, or thrown, etc.), which will immediately involve the Padre's sympathetic ministrations. As Divisional Chaplain I have an arrangement with the Field Ambulance Staff, over a mile away from my tent, to be informed of any sick cases that come in, while I have an arrangement with the Staff of the Cambridge Hospital (Military) down in Aldershot town to be informed of any Territorial cases that go there. For example, I was sitting till 2 a.m. early one morning last week with a young Territorial who was at death's door with pneumonia, but who, I am very thankful to say, is now out of danger and progressing.

Now just a word about the military side of things. Are we militarists? No, we are not! Are we pacifists? Yes, in one sense we are! To be forewarned is to be forearmed, and conversely, to be forearmed is to be forewarned. We believe in a strong Regular Army, and in an efficiently trained Territorial Army (the latter, the second battle line, being greatly respected by the former), in order to keep down war, and to maintain peace. War is not our ideal; it is our dread. The Briton hates the very thought of war like poison, but the British Armies exist in order to safeguard our glorious Empire, as does our immortal Royal Navy. The Police Force exists to keep order, and to prevent burglaries, etc. The Fire Brigade exists, not to promote incendiarism, but to put out fires. And so, until all nations agree to give up armaments, to seek peace and ensue it, we must be ready and prepared—much as we loathe the very thought of another war—lest those evil forces, whose shadows are creeping over the Continent, the Near East, the Far East and elsewhere, should suddenly burst upon us and our inheritance, and pour out the vials of their wrath.

Nor must we forget that we are "the Lord's battle-axe." He has used us in the past; He may use us in the future. He may again ere long call upon us to defend His righteousness and even to smite His enemies, for His Kingdom is entrusted to our care—humanly speaking—"for my sake and the Gospel's." To this end recruiting is expedient, and training is necessary, and so that is why we are here at Aldershot just now—once again on the same site as we were some four or five years ago. Our glorious 47th Division did great things in the war, and bears an honoured name. Who knows whether—and if so when—we shall be mobilized once again? May God grant to us here, and to all the Lord's people at home or "scattered abroad," His wisdom, grace and strength, so as to hasten—each in our respective spheres—the coming of Christ and the peaceful reign of Zion's KING. "To your tents, O Israel."

"All beauty is a gleam from the fountain of beauty. No work of beauty can be more beautiful than the mind which designed it. I do not think a sculptor can possibly chisel a marble so as to make it more beautiful than his own ideal conception. I do not think a painter can produce a painting more beautiful than the thought of his mind which led up to it; I do not think a musician can express in sound, or a poet on paper, anything beyond the thought within him. I know, indeed, that the conception of either may grow with the process by which it is presented to others, and that the man may, as he proceeds, have a fairer and noble view of what he is trying to express; but after all the mind of the sculptor is more beautiful than the marble which he has sculptured; and the mind of the painter is a more beautiful thing than the work of art which he has painted; and the mind of the musician is better and higher and nobler than the most exquisite symphony which he has composed and reduced to writing; and the mind of the poet is better than his most beautiful piece of poetry. And so we must rise from all the fragments of beauty which God has scattered so widely over His world, to say with Milton—

'Thine this universal frame,
Thus wondrous fair; thyself how wondrous then!'"

E. H. BICKERSTETH.

Immortality is not demonstrated scientifically. Human wisdom is utterly at fault in spiritual mysteries. These things can only be spiritually discerned, and God has hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes.

It may appear very commendable for a great daily newspaper to set forth divers opinions of clever men, professedly religious and otherwise, on this enthralling topic; but "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

The speculative thought of many minds uncontrolled by the Word of Truth can only lead to utter confusion.

Take your ground simply on the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever, and immortality is assured.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

WE remind our readers of the gathering in Kew Gardens for Saturday next—August 25th, at 3 p.m., inside the Lion Gate. It is hoped that many of our friends will join us. Tea will be served at 4.30 p.m. in Christ Church Hall, just outside the Lion Gate, and this will be followed by a public meeting in the same Hall, when the Revs. W. H. Stuart-Fox, M.A. and Kenneth Dodds, and Messrs. John Leech, K.C. and Herbert Garrison are expected to give addresses.

Buses 27, 65 and 127 pass the Lion Gate.

The B.-I. Convention at Glastonbury last week proved a very happy and successful event. Meetings were held daily from Monday to Friday inclusive, and they were well attended. Many came from long distances, by train and motor. Special parties came from Bath, Bristol and Salisbury. Helpful expositions and addresses were given by the Revs. Dr. J. Mountain, Joseph Gay, R. G. F. Waddington, Messrs. Morey, Ozzard, Sleeman, Garrison and others. Pleasant excursions were made to Wells, Cheddar, Pilton, and other places. Our Hostel, Abbots Leigh, had, of course, a full complement of guests.

Mr. W. Ozzard most kindly rendered valuable and greatly appreciated services in taking parties over the wonderful Abbey Ruins and explaining them. His excellent report of the proceedings in the Central Somerset Gazette extends to three columns, and the whole issue was quickly sold out. The second part of the report is to appear in the issue for 17th inst. The general arrangements for the Convention were ably carried out by Mr. J. J. Morey as usual.

The Ilkley and Ben Rhydding Branch held two successful meetings last month. Mr. J. A. Yoxall spoke on July 11th on "Prophecy Fulfilled and Soon to be Fulfilled"; Mr. J. Foster Beaver presided, and effectively replied to an article which had appeared in a local Parish Magazine. On July 25th the Rev. R. G. F. Waddington, M.A., gave a fine address, in which he dealt with the main objections put forth against British-Israel. Keen interest has been aroused by the letters which have appeared and are still appearing in a local paper between the Vicar and Mr. Beaver.

* * *

The many friends of Professor Odlum, M.A., of Vancouver, are delighted to hear of his definite promise to the Secretary-General to attend the coming Congress. Those who heard his addresses at the Congress in 1921 will look forward keenly to hearing him this year.

The Rev. Pascoe Goard is booked for a number of meetings on his way Eastward across Canada. He sails (D.V.) for England on September 14th, and should be with us about September 23rd. We shall rejoice to see him again and to hear him deliver his wonderful messages.

Among others coming from Canada for the Congress are the Rev. E. J. Springett, of Winnipeg, a champion of B.-I. in that city; Mr. Blackaller, of Victoria, B.C.; and Mr. Frame, of Toronto, Vice-President of the Canadian B.-I. Confederation. With those named, and with the Rev. Dr. McConnell and the Rev. G. Arnold Hodgson, M.A., of U.S.A., and our well-known speakers in the Homeland, we may consider the platform next October as a specially strong one, if not indeed the strongest we have yet had.

We are busy at Headquarters with arrangements for the Congress, and in a few days we shall all be at high pressure completing the organization. Those who wish for reserved seat tickets are urged to make application as early as possible to avoid congestion during the last week of September. Tickets also for the Lantern Lecture on October 3rd should be secured quickly to avoid disappointment; these are 3s. first reserved; 2s. second reserved; 1s. unreserved. No free tickets. The whole of the proceeds without any deduction whatever are for the B.-I. funds. It is requested that applications for railway vouchers entitling to reduced fares should be made early.

* * *

E. J. A. writes from Australia: "I simply cannot do without your journal. I am getting a liberal education through it, and the Bible becomes more precious to me every day."

* * *

The holiday season is bringing us visitors at H.Q. from many parts of the world. On Monday last before 11 a.m. we had at the same moment visitors from U.S.A., Australia and South Africa, in addition to others from various parts of the Homeland. All received a hearty welcome.

* * *

Encouraging meetings continue to be held in various Parks. Messrs. Pilcher, Barrow, Tester and others are doing good work in this way.

* * *

The Rev. Commander Roberts goes to Teignmouth on August 23rd, thence on to Bath. Particulars of meetings will be given later.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The coloured Chart depicts in clear, simple form, historically and by aid of maps, the amazing story of the Anglo-Saxon Race.

It traces the genealogies, by direct succession, of Their Majesties King George V., Queen Mary, and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, back through the Royal House of David to Adam. It shows how the British Coat of Arms is built up from ancient emblems given to our race some 4,000 years ago. The Chart illustrates the contemporary history of the Houses of Judah and Israel. Starting with the genealogy from Adam to Jacob's twelve sons, it shows the beginning of the chosen Race from Hebrew stock; includes the Covenant Promises to Abraham (fulfilled in the Anglo-Saxons, and in no other race); gives the Promises to Judah of the Sceptre; to Ephraim of the Birthright; and to David of the perpetual Throne. Continuing, it carries on the contemporary history of the two Houses of Judah and Israel till each went into captivity—the story of the House of Israel from the reign of David, 1056 B.C. to their deportation to Assyria in 721 B.C., then a consecutive narrative of their migrations (with map) down to their final arrival in the British Isles in A.D. 1066 The contemporary history of the House of Judah, till they also were carried captive, in two sections. Section I. follows the Jewish Race down to A.D. 70; includes our Lord's Life and Death; the final siege of Jerusalem, and the scattering of the Jews all over the world. Section II. traces Princess Tamar Tephi and the prophet Jeremiah into Ireland—her marriage, and the continuation of the Royal Line of David; tells the story of the Coronation Stone and how it was finally deposited in Westminster Abbey.

The history of the Anglo-Saxons in America—the Tribe of Manasseh—is also included in the Chart. The Book (numbered to correspond with the chart) amplifies the history and shows the identity of ten-tribed Israel with the British Empire and the U.S.A.

GOOD ADVICE

To a friend in distress you would tender sympathy and helpful advice. You have many friends unwittingly ignorant of the greatest truth affecting our State to-day. HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—VII.

ISAIAH (continued).

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, F.R.G.S

In the last issue we considered the geography of Isaiah as indicated in the first part of the Isaiah literature. We found this to cover Western Asia and Africa.

Connected with the geography we considered the ethnology of the nations of Western Asia.

We did not take space to consider the Oriental civilization then developing into its final phase in those ancient territories. Perhaps we shall be justified in assuming the familiarity of our readers with the two forms of Asiatic civilization then in existence, the one in the Israel nation on the Mediterranean, and the other in Assyrian Babylonian nations in the Euphrates Valley.

Biblical expositors have busied themselves with making clear the details of Eastern civilization.

We are now to turn from the Asiatic civilization which was tottering to its fall to European civilization, then in process of being born.

We quote again the striking words of Isaiah who, with tears mingled with laughter, sings at once the song of the fall of the civilization of the East and the birth of the civilization of the West. Thus he says:

> "When thus it shall be in the midst of the land among the people, there shall be as the shaking of an olive tree, and as the gleaning grapes when the vintage is done. They shall lift up their voice, they shall sing for the majesty of the Lord, they shall cry aloud from the sea. Wherefore glorify ye the Lord in the fires, even the name of the Lord God of Israel in the isles of the sea. From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous."

To what direction is the prophet now pointing, geographically speaking?

Let us call attention to the fact that although the geography of the nations included in the first part of Isaiah is well known, it is not because of any metes and bounds indicated in the Isaiah literature; the knowledge of the geography of Western Asia and Egypt is assumed.

Only when the prophet overleaps the boundaries of general knowledge, and points to the unknown wilderness of Africa, does he give, in the first part of the book, specific indication. In that particular case he indicates the land addressed as living "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia."

A good deal of knowledge is assumed in regard to the second portion of Isaiah, but not such complete knowledge as is assumed in regard to Western Asia.

Thus at the very introduction of the rise of Western civilization, at the very period of the fall of the Eastern, we are told that the latter is "In the midst of the land," and in contrast with that the new civilization is arising

From the sea;
From the isles of the sea;
From the uttermost parts of the earth.

Let us note well these geographical indications. The first indication, "the sea," might be shouts of gladness from those who had escaped from the invading hosts in shipping, as doubtless many did.

Digitized by Google

The "isles of the sea" might indicate the Grecian isles or other isles of the Mediterranean to which the people might retire in order to escape the land forces of Assyria and Babylon; but when the three are conjoined—"the sea," the "isles of the sea" and "the uttermost parts of the earth"—then we must of necessity extend our geographical pointer to the British Isles, which were, as a matter of fact, thus designated in classical literature.

Again we take a geographical indication from the story as it progresses: Isaiah xlix, verses 11, 12:

"And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted.

Behold, these shall come from far; and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim."

We cannot quote more of these indications, but they will be found clearly enough stated in the Isaiah literature from chapter xl to the end.

We have then "the sea," the "isles of the sea," "in the uttermost parts of the earth" in regard to their planting, and we have the indication that returning they shall come from the North-West, or from the North and from the West, whichever is the proper reading of that passage.

Let us now for a moment take our stand at Jerusalem on the East shore of the Mediterranean Sea. Let us run a line Northward, and it will take us into the Crimea, Southern Russia, and the rivers which run into the Black Sea from the North, which undoubtedly, for a long period, was a dwelling-place of Israel during the ages of its captivity.

Let us return to Jerusalem, and from thence run a line Westward, and it will bring us to Gibraltar, the ancient pillars of Hercules.

Now let us fill out the square, and we shall find that we include the British Isles.

Without labouring the point of the details of the geography of the second part of Isaiah, we are on sure and safe ground when we say that the centre of the new civilization, which is the subject of the second portion of the Isaiah literature, is not in the East, but is in the West; is not Oriental, but is Occidental; is not Asiatic, but is European. Thus when we read the message in the 41st chapter of Isaiah, "Keep silence before me, O islands, and let the people renew their strength," we are reading of islands set in the sea at the uttermost parts of the earth, as they were then esteemed, North and West from Jerusalem.

That these things are so we believe every student of the geography of Isaiah will agree; to do otherwise would be to impose the picture of a rising civilization upon the ground occupied by the decaying civilization of Asia, and neither prophetic literature nor historic fulfilment will warrant that procedure.

What we have just stated we believe to be a self-evident fact to everyone whose attention has been called to the subject.

But what is a self-evident fact when once attention has been called to the subject has been strangely overlooked by the generality of students and expositors of the Isaiah literature.

The things that we have said call for a re-reading of the whole of the Isaiah literature, and a re-stating of the last chapters of Isaiah from the standpoint of European civilization.

We cannot too much emphasize this point, for we have all gone astray together in this regard.

The writer has concluded fifty years of more or less intense study of this and kindred literature, and in the major portion of that period he followed the general leadership in esteeming the last 26 chapters of Isaiah to have an Oriental setting.

Needless to say, the unveiling of the geography of Isaiah has had a profound effect upon his understanding of the prophetic Scriptures in their relationship to the Israel-British type of Western civilization.

With open and sincere minds let us read these wonderful Scriptures with this in view.

We conclude then at this point that the second part of Isaiah refers to Europe, not Asia; to the Occident, not the Orient; and, under the terms "Israel in the isles," to the Anglo-Saxon continuance of the Israel people, and under the term "Babylon" as carried forward through the prophets and through the Apocalypse as the continuation of the Euphratean civilization; these two continuing in conflict together to the end of the age.

Zion and Jerusalem in the Isles.

As we see the rise of the Israel civilization in the West, destined to be the ultimate prevailing type, not only of Western civilization but as the prophets declare of world civilization, we are met with the difficulty of the use of the two names, Zion and Jerusalem, in the beginning of the Isaiah literature which deals with the new order in chapter xl. We must get this clearly before our minds, or we shall find confusion at the outset.

Let us make a positive statement, which the reader can verify at leisure, that, as there is a York in Britain, and a New York in America, as there is a London on the Thames in Britain, and a London on the Thames in Canada, and so on—so there was a Zion and Jerusalem in Palestine, and Zion and Jerusalem in the isles. The term "Zion" is an official name designating the place of the throne and the centre of the government carried on by the House of David. It is the name of "The city of the great king." The term "Jerusalem" is also an official name designating the centre of worship in the midst of Israel, hard by the place of the throne.

Again and again those names will be found in this great Isaiah message; the one always referring to kingly and governmental authority; the other always referring to Divine worship and the preaching of the Gospel.

Let us take two passages of Scripture indicative of the transfer of the official names "Zion" and "Jerusalem" from the geographical position in Palestine.

The one referring to Zion which we shall quote is the following: "My people shall see eye to eye when I bring again Zion"; manifestly that cannot be "brought again" which had not first been taken away.

The quotation we shall present concerning Jerusalem is that striking promise contained in the 12th chapter of Zechariah: "Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in its own place, even in Jerusalem."

In connection with the use of these terms there is the promise of a kingdom which should girdle the earth. These are the words :

Digitized by Google

" It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers." This circle has been incorporated in our national Coat of Arms, and is indicated by the official Belt of the Earl and Garter of the Knights.

Having these considerations in mind, let us now turn to the 41st chapter and read the call : " Keep silence before me, O islands, and let the people renew their strength."

To this passage we are justified in applying the threefold geographical indication of chapter xxiv, namely, " the sea "; " the islands of the sea " and the " uttermost parts of the earth." These are manifestly the islands referred to in the 41st chapter and again later on.

In view of these considerations, and as we have seen the indication the North and the West, which gives a quadrant of the compassed circle in the centre of the circumference of which lie the British Isles, are we not justified in saying that the geographical indications point to the British Isles?

The strength of the people had been exhausted in the struggles of the East, finally to be broken by Assyria and by Babylon. Now in the isles, let the people keep silence before the Lord that they might renew their strength.

Thus we are introduced to the early Israel colony in the isles of the sea at the uttermost parts of the earth from Jerusalem.

It is interesting to note that when the people are thus silent before the Lord, He calls them to His feet in worship that they might receive from Him instruction. The very first lesson introduced is that of their Abrahamic connection indicated in the following words :

> " Who raised up the righteous man from the east, called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings? He gave them as the dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow. He pursued them, and passed safely ; even by the way that he had not gone with his feet. Who hath wrought and done it, calling the generations from the beginning? I the Lord, the first, and with the last ; I am he. The isles saw it, and feared ; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came."

It will be distinctly remembered that the isles of the sea at the uttermost parts of the earth are introduced to us at the very period that ten-tribed Israel in Palestine was falling before the power of Assyria, and being led away North-Eastward inland into captivity.

It is no fanciful statement to say that from Jerusalem we have here two geographical lines, one pointing to the isles of the sea at the ends of the earth, and the other pointing North-Eastward to the banks of the Euphrates.

However the scholarly reader may be inclined to put away this statement as being contrary to recognized authorities, he will hesitate to do so when he sees that the geographical indications of the Isaiah literature clearly indicate such to be the case.

At the end of these pointing lines, one in the isles of the sea and the other inland on the banks of the Euphrates, there were to be found, during the period of the captivity, an Israel people.

The one is termed " the islands " and " the isles " ; the other is termed " the captivity." The " isles " consisted of a colony established by free migration ; the " captivity " was established by the mandate backed by the power of conquering Assyria.

Having this division of the Israel people in mind we shall now understand that from chapter xl to the end of chapter xliv the prophet is dealing with Israel in the isles alone. The last verse of chapter xliv introduces the name of Cyrus, and the prophet now swings his vision to Israel in the captivity.

He speaks of the fact that Cyrus should be his messenger to end the captivity of Jacob. This excursion of the prophetic vision carries on to the end of chapter xlviii, where the following marching orders to Israel to leave the place of their captivity are given, and a warning is included to those who wickedly disobey their marching orders and remain behind in the land ; here are the striking words :

> " Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the end of the earth ; say ye, The Lord hath redeemed his servant Jacob. And they thirsted not when he led them through the deserts : he caused the waters to flow out of the rock for them ; he clave the rock also, and the waters gushed out. There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked."

It was with no little astonishment, and with some amusement, that the writer heard a brother minister, who worthily carries the honours M.A., D.D., and one or two other degrees, reading this passage to his congregation, solemnly assure them as follows : " This passage refers to the march of the Jews out of Egypt into Palestine at the time of the Exodus." In the first place it was Israel including the Jews as one-twelfth of Israel who marched out of Egypt, thus eleven-twelfths and the national name by which the whole were called, namely, Israel, was ignored, and the geographical information consisted of meaningless terms for our brother theologian.

Babylon and Chaldea are geographical terms referring to a location on the Euphrates, North and East, and not on the Nile in the South.

Without question the marching orders were to Israel in the captivity, and now, in the very next verse, we find the prophet swings his vision back to the isles, making a new call to the people inhabiting them, and this is that call : " Listen, O isles, unto me . . . and hearken ye people from far."

It is manifest that the people from far had now been added to the people of the isles, and that they were those who in the preceding paragraph were ordered to march out from Babylon with singing " even to the ends of the earth."

Thus were the two branches of the people prophetically brought together in the isles, and, following this conjunction, there comes the wonderful story of their reunion with God, their redemption by the Holy One of Israel, and their great colonizing and Christianizing mission to the ends of the earth.

That story will be found told in outline in a booklet by the author entitled : " Isaiah—an Outline Study." But as we are now dealing with the geography of Isaiah, and have traced the Israel people into the isles of the sea at the ends of the earth from Jerusalem, we must close this hour with the prophet Isaiah.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD OVER ISRAEL.

LECTURE GIVEN AT BATH BY THE REV. COMMANDER L. G. A. ROBERTS, R.N.

THERE may be some here who do not realize that David's throne over Israel is the throne set up by the God of Heaven in the British Islands to-day. This plan runs throughout the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation. It is an earthly Kingdom, whose King is the Lord (Jesus Christ) Jehovah, just as Moses was King in Jeshurun, whereas the Lord their God was truly their King. "Until He come Whose right it is, and I will give it Him" (Ezek. xxi, 27), there is always an earthly representative. The promise to the Virgin Mary uttered by Gabriel sent from God was concerning her Son of the line of David. "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David, and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of His Kingdom there shall be no end." (Luke i, 32, 33; Isa. ix, 6, 7, 8.)

The first mention of this earthly sceptre is in Gen. xlix, 8-10: "Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise: thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee. Judah is a lion's whelp: from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up? The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come (Ezek. xxi, 27); and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." Apparently it was a long time (633 years) before David was set over the throne of Israel, and these words received corroboration. But there was also another view, from the apparent, already taking place.

Judah it must be recalled had (besides Er and Onan, whom God slew) three sons, Shelah, Zarah and Pharez. We all know the story of the birth of these two (Gen. xxxviii, 28-30). Zarah with the scarlet thread.

These truths are anti-typical, that is, they are written with an intent of making history. It is not our intention of making much of Irish legends, but we cannot get over the fact that Zarah's sons, Ethan, Heman, Chalcol and Darda, never went into Egypt, whereas Pharez' sons did. They are not mentioned in Gen. xlvi, 12, whereas the sons of Pharez are. Achan, the troubler of Israel, was the son of Carmi or Zimri (Josh. vii, 18).

When Solomon succeeded David his father, for the first time we have mention of Ethan, Heman, Chalcol and Darda, sons of Zarah, as being so wise that Solomon's wisdom exceeded theirs. Again we find these names in the list of sons of Zerah, the son of Judah (1 Chron. ii, 6). We accept therefore the very early record that these young Zarahites got away and founded cities such as Dardanus in Asia, Zaragossa in Spain. Chalcol and Cecrops are said to be the same, who founded Athens, and Darda Ilion or Troy. If the name Zimri can be changed to Carmi, as 1 Chron. ii, 6, 7, I see no reason why the Cymri should not be descendants of Zimri! We are told the early Kings of Ireland were Zarahites of the scarlet hand. (See Royal House of Britain, p. 36).

Judah, Zerah, Darda, Erichthonius, Tros, Assaracus, Capys, Auchises, Æneas, Brutus. Ilus, Laomedon, Priam . . . Odin.

This we need not labour, except to say that Heremon, who subsequently married Tea Tephi (of Zedekiah of David of Pharez) was in the Royal line of Judah from Zarah; and in him and Tea Tephi the sceptre of Judah is intact.

It is after the Exodus we first find mention of the throne of Jehovah. Here in Exod. xvii, 16, margin, "Because the hand of Amalek is against the throne of the Lord," the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation. In Exod. xix, 6, Israel is constituted a Kingdom of priests, a holy nation. It is not, however, founded in any early King, as other nations; though Moses is said to be King in Jeshurun (Deut. xxxiii, 5), he was not King in the sense of David or Solomon. The Lord God was their King (1 Sam. viii, 7; 1 Sam. xii, 12).

But we are told positively that Solomon sat in the throne of the Kingdom of the Lord as King over Israel (1 Chron. xxviii, 5). "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord" (1 Chron. xxix, 23); 2 Chron. ix, 8: "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on His throne, to be King for the Lord thy God." Here then we see the intention of the Lord our God as to the earthly throne.

The sin of Solomon brought about the disruption eighty years after David was first set upon the throne of Judah, then over Israel. Israel was cast out of the land. Judah only remained, but under Zedekiah lost the Kingdom.

We must retrace our steps to the time of "that Ahaz." "This is that King Ahaz." We are told in 2 Chron. xxviii, 19, that "the Lord brought Judah low, because of Ahaz, King of Israel, for he made Judah naked and transgressed sore against the Lord; and Tilgath-pilneser, King of Assyria, came unto him, and distressed him, but strengthened him not . . . and in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the Lord; this is that King Ahaz. For he sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus, which smote him; and he said, because the gods of the Kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that they may help me. But they were the ruin of him and of all Israel." When we come to see what Isa. vii tells us of Ahaz, we gather the character of a weak-minded, unfaithful king, who forsook the ways of both his father and grandfather, following the bad advice of some of his courtiers. From what is told us in Isa. xxii, there appears to have been an alien as the treasurer at the Court when Hezekiah, the son of Ahaz, came to the throne. Shebna, described as a foreigner from the fact that his name is un-Hebrew. The curse pronounced against him marks him out. Isa. xxii, 15: "Thus saith the Lord God of Hosts, Go, get thee unto this treasurer, even unto Shebna, which is over the house and say, What hast thou here? And whom hast thou here that thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that heweth him out a sepulchre on high, and that graveth an habitation for himself in a rock? Behold the Lord will carry thee away with a mighty captivity, and will surely cover thee. He will surely violently turn and toss thee like a ball into a large country: there shalt thou die, and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy lord's house. And I will drive thee from thy station, and from thy state shall he pull thee down." What follows, taken with Isa. vii, 10: "Moreover, the Lord spake again unto Ahaz, saying, Ask thee a sign of the Lord thy God, ask it either in the depth or in the height above. But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord." In fact, he refused to have anything to do with Israel's God. Coupling these things together, we think we see the influence this foreigner must have had on Ahaz. Then follows, in Isa. xxii, a prophecy concerning the transference of the sceptre of David, called here "the key of the House of David" (read 20-25). Now this could not be said to have happened in Judæa. We propose that subsequent events with the sequence of the narrative lead us to the unravelling of the story. The key of the House of David is an expression very much the same as in Rev. iii, 7: "These things saith He that is holy, He that is true, He that hath the key of David, He that openeth and no man shutteth, and shutteth and no man openeth." (Isa. xxii, 22.)

The sure place could not be Palestine, it must be "the place appointed" (2 Sam. vii, 10). This is metaphorically represented in "Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah," "whom God establishes"—"Jehovah is my portion." Anti-typically, "the government shall be upon His shoulder." (Isa. ix, 6; xxii, 22; Rev. iii, 7.)

The 23rd chapter, immediately following this transference of the key of the House of David, gives us the history of Tarshish, with the burden of Tyre. Here it is the ships of Tarshish that are to be so much concerned at the fall of Tyre. The chapter tells us that Tyre is "the daughter of Tarshish" (v. 10), and also that Tarshish is a daughter of Zidon (some com. say this is probably Zion). We can understand from Josephus that Tyre was built 240 years before the Temple of Solomon; this may be the building upon the rock, not the mainland city; for in the time of Joshua it was then "the Strong City of Tyre" (Josh. xix, 29). Great Zidon in the verse before. Great Zidon is previously mentioned (Josh. xi, 8), but we never hear of either of these two having been besieged, nor in the conquests stated as a city taken. We infer that the old Canaanites, Zidonians (Gen. xi, 5-19), were not the same, but had probably made way for the Shepherd Kings, the Hyksos, who built Jerusalem and conquered the country to a certain extent; from these came the Phœnicians, they spoke the same language as the Hebrews, but had some Canaanite mixture in them. There is no doubt that Dan, Asher, Naphtali, over against them Tyre and Sidon and contiguous, greatly assisted or were the backbone of the trading element. Josephus, and also the Word of God (Jos. Ant. viii, iii, 4; 1 Kings vii, 13; 2 Chron. ii, 14), give us to understand that the father of Hiram, Ur, was an Israelite, "a man of Tyre"; his mother of Dan and Naphtali. The makers of the benches for Tyrian ships were Asherites (Ezek. xxvii, 6). Dan and Asher we know had shipping in 1296 B.C. (Judges iv, 17). The ships of Solomon were called "the ships of Tarshish," and the seamen of Tyre helped them in their Navy, both at Ezion-geber, the Arabian coast, and also in the Mediterranean. We are informed by Sir Edward Creasy, "History of England," that the tin from Britain furnished the alloy to the gold of Solomon's Temple. In the reign of Solomon there were Hebrew colonists in Spain, and at Segontium (modern Murviedro), near the river Iber, there were Hebrew epitaphs and other inscriptions, two of these relating to the time of Solomon: one an epitaph to Adoniram, the collector of Solomon's tribute (see Villanpanto's Ezekiel). We also have a connecting link to Britain. Seguntium occurs twice or three times, in the province of the Segontiaci, and in Wales. In the Ulster King-at-Arms', Dublin, "Etruria-Celtica," we are told the language of the ancient Irish was Hebrew, and the colonization of Ireland from Etruria is given as prior to 700 B.C.

The Rev. Charles Forster, in "A New Key to the Discovery of the Ten Tribes," also tells us of the colonization of Spain by Simeon, Judah, Benjamin and Levi at the time of Nebuchadnezzar, and gives us from tablets in Holland to-day the story of four cities in Spain bearing the same names (or Hebrew names of cities) in Palestine: Makkeda, Lusitania, Ashkelon, and Toledo; in the latter place is the most ancient Jewish foundation of that era (583 B.C.). Now all Irish tradition, "History of Four Masters," etc., etc., give the coming into Ireland of these Hebrews from Spain, bringing with them the Laws of Moses.

In F. R. A. Glover's "England the Remnant of Judah and the Israel of Ephraim," we have the most graphic account of Tea Tephi and Jeremiah coming to Ireland about the year 583 B.C.

Now Isaiah xxiii gives us the lament of Tarshish (Israel) at the fall of Tyre, and gives us some excellent accounts of what became of the wealth of Tyre. First, the Bible says, Tyre left nothing for Nebuchadnezzar to take. "Her own feet shall carry her afar off," i.e., by her own ships. All her merchandise came to Britain, where Israel had already come before. The 24th chapter, first part, tells us of the devastation of the land of Israel, and that when it is overthrown some of them shall come into the Isles of the West. "When thus it shall be in the midst of the land among the people, there shall be as the shaking of an olive tree, and as the gleaning grapes when the vintage is done, they shall lift up their voice, they shall sing for the majesty of the Lord, they shall cry aloud from the sea. Wherefore, glorify ye the Lord in the fires, even the Name of the Lord God of Israel in the Isles of the sea. From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous."

The transplanting of Tea Tephi is graphically told in Ezek. xvii, 22-24, and the exact date is when Nebuchadnezzar took Tyre (Ezek. xxix, 21).

Jeremiah also tells us a good deal about this. First of all, his commission was "to root out, to pull down, to destroy, to build, and to plant." Where did he build and plant? He refers in xvii, 12, to "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary; O Lord, the hope of Israel, all that forsake Thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the Lord, the fountain of living waters. Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved, for Thou art my praise." "The earth" means the Babylonian earth, afterwards Rome. Not written amongst Israel.

In xv, 11, Jeremiah is told: "The Lord said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant; Verily I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well in the time of evil and in the time of affliction. Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel? . . . And I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not. . . . Thy words were found, and I did eat them," etc. The iron is Rome, the northern iron and steel is Britain. Ezek. xvii, 22-24, shows it is God's work. " I will take," " I will set," " I will crop off," " I will plant," etc., etc. The story of Jeremiah's shipwreck and his finally finding himself where he did to the North of Ireland.

Here we leave the story. However, let us call to mind Our Lord's injunction, " Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and His righteousness." Surely these words mean what they say. This is a Kingdom set up by the God of Heaven. There is a Kingdom (Luke ix, 27) of God, even then to be discerned, before all standing about Jesus had passed away (Mark ix, 1). Whoever came to Britain with Joseph of Arimathea saw it here set up in Christ over Israel. St. Paul must have known of it, and most likely himself came to Britain. Aristobulus also saw it.

We are privileged to see God's work in building up this Kingdom. Is it not an appeal to all in justification of God's promise to David? That here Jesus, Who knew all men and would not commit Himself to the Jews, yet committed Himself to Israel, as the Epistle to the Hebrews, St. James and St. Peter testify. Therefore He commissioned His disciples to go to the uttermost part of the earth (Acts i, 8; Isa. xxiv, 16), and there they should find His Kingdom.

CYCLE OF SEVENS.—III.

By W. J. Foster.

Seven times of Revelation xi.

The Seven times of this prophecy are divided into two, three and a half times.

Second verse reads :—" But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the Holy City shall they tread under foot forty and two months" (42 months).

Forty-two months, on the prophetic basis of 30 days to the months, would be $30 \times 42 = 1,260$, and on the one year to the day would be 1,260 years.

The treading-down of the Holy City began by Nebuchadnezzar in the year 597 B.C. (Historians' History of the World); 1,260 years from 597 B.C. ends in the year A.D. 663. At the close of A.D. 663, a conference was organized by British (Covenant Man) and Anglo-Saxons (English Sons of Isaac) to discuss the question of Pagan aggression and Papal abominations; the conference lasted until A.D. 666, when the decision arrived at was: we as a Church and people would never more acknowledge or tolerate Paganism or Papacy.

I think we may reasonably presume that the treading-down process applied to a people equally as much as a land; that being so, it must have been a Covenant people, and, at the expiration of the period indicated, that people must in consequence make a stand against the unholy element involved in the treading-down, not of land only, but of that particular people. The Gentiles therefore must meet with opposition at the end of 1,260 years, to break the oppression by which Israel's spiritual and temporal aspirations were held in check.

We find in history that the action of British and Anglo-Saxons from A.D. 663 to 666 was against the very powers that crucified their Lord, and that was Pagan Rome.

The decision of A.D. 666 was sufficient to prove a connection in history of the fulfilment of the period in question; it coincides with the 666 of Rev. xiii, 18, which foretold and identified this particular apostasy. This same year, A.D. 666, is recorded as the Lateinos and Romiith, the Greek and Latin numerical equivalents of which is 666; the words also signify that same oppressive Gentile Pagan Rome.

This definite stand by God's Covenant people brought about the establishment of the National Christian Church of British-Israel. We now get the second half of "Seven Times": third verse:—" And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days clothed in sackcloth."

We now take our starting-point for this second period of 1,260 prophetical days, which are years, from the end of A.D. 666, or the beginning of A.D. 664, that is:—663 + 1,260 = A.D. 1923-4. This period, too, concerns the trodden-down and homeless people of God, but a great change has taken place, for whereas they were previous to A.D. 663-4 under the despotic heel of Rome, they now have to witness, but even that witnessing must be done while being clothed in sackcloth.

The period through which sackcloth was worn was a period of repentance and suffering, following an offence to Almighty God. We therefore may understand that the 1,260 years of witnessing must be a period of great suffering and persecution. If we read history throughout this period, we find that Christianity was only established through much persecution from the declining Gentile despotic Power.

In spite of "Smithfield Fires" and the "Executioner's Block," besides thousands of other terrible persecutions, the Lord's people persevered in their witness, as recorded, and established the Church of Christ. The proof of the British people being the testimony bearers, the witnesses of God, are given in Rev. xii, 6. " And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there 1,260 days" (years). This is the period of witness, and the British (Covenant Man) are the people implied.

This period of witness being ended, we read what is to follow (Rev. xi, 7, 8, 9): " And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually (not geographically) is called Sodom and Egypt, where also Our Lord was crucified. And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves." This, too, must be considered on the same prophetic basis as the other days, and would mean $3\frac{1}{2}$ years (half Seven Times), beginning A.D. 1923-4. By examining closely this prophecy, we notice in the eighth verse: " Which spiritually," a definite expression certifying that it could not be the geographical position of the earth's surface where Our Lord was crucified. It therefore must have a spiritual application.

Again, we read in the ninth verse: " And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies," etc. This again proves the spiritual application, for even a schoolboy would understand the impossibility of all people, of all nations, being able to see dead bodies lying in one small area of the earth's surface. We again are those people, and, beginning with the year 1923-4 up to the end of that specified 3½ years, were very largely spiritually dead as a nation and people. Consider for a moment our Established Church. At the beginning of 1924 there began a definite open move on the part of our Bishops and Clergy, in conjunction with the English Church Union and the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, for a return to and incorporation with that very Power by which the spiritual life of our ancestors was trodden down and crushed.

All peoples and kindreds and nations (Gentile) have (10th verse) "Rejoiced and made merry," and even gloated over the fact of our spiritual decadence, knowing well that when Britain forsakes her God she becomes a weakened Power, but "they shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves." They shall not be able to take such steps that would permanently destroy the spiritual power which to a large extent is dormant.

Moses foretold this period of spiritual decadence (Deut. xxxi, 26-29). God had instructed Moses to write a book of law for guidance to the children of Israel, and when it was finished Moses said: "Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee. For I know thy rebellion, and thy stiff neck: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious against the Lord; and how much more after my death?" This command was to the Priests.

"Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may speak these words in their ears, and call heaven and earth to record against them. For I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you: and evil will befall you in the latter days; because ye will do evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke Him to anger through the work of your hands."

Moses speaks of the "latter days," not the early days. This evidently means the days approaching Our Lord's Second Coming, and, in keeping with Revelation, must be in our day. Can we see anything of this in the Established Church? Moses spoke first to the Priests, and then called the nation of Israel to witness. On those grounds the onus rested upon the Priests.

To-day ("the latter days") the onus rests upon the ecclesiastical order of Levitical Priesthood. What were they doing in the period of 3½ years of spiritual darkness? They were organizing to set up, in conjunction with the "Treading-down Power," new gods newly made, "the work of their hands," to do evil in the sight of the Lord. Transubstantiation? Yes; from A.D. 1923-4 they have worked to get transubstantiation statuary—the worship of bread and wine. They want Israel to believe that the blessing by mortal flesh (the priest), the physical properties of both bread and wine can be changed, and become the actual flesh and blood of Our dear Lord. Moses called the elders, the officers, and heaven and earth to witness, and also to make a stand. Our Bishops and Clergy want Paganism; the nation through Parliament says "No," but still they (the Clergy) do evil in the sight of God.

God says: "Call no man Father," "for I only am Father of all," yet they call each other Father, and demand their Church members to call them "Father" in open defiance to God's command. The conduct of the Clergy has resulted in making the Church appear in the sight of the people very little more than a secular organization.

Throughout the whole of the 3½ years ending July, 1927, very little opposition was shown to the erroneous doctrines of the Clergy, which fact strengthened their efforts to carry out the wish of Lord Halifax: that a union with Rome be effected before his death. Thank God there were a few trustworthy ministers of God who kept the faith: yes, just a little wholesome leaven. Now read the eleventh verse: "And after 3½ days the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon them which saw them." Have we seen anything which would confirm this verse at the end of that 3½ years?

Yes, most assuredly we have: when the House of Lords passed the revised Prayer Book on July 6, 1927, the Clergy (that ecclesiastical Levitical order of English Church Union) believed the carpet was laid to the Vatican.

Moses said: "Go call the elders and the officers of the tribes." Yes, "the tribes," not only Levites, but the twelve tribes; they shall be warned; they shall be prepared to oppose these new gods. And so it was with us: did not the elders and officers of the tribes, those who represent the tribes in the House of Commons, witness against the Priests? Certainly they did, and great fear fell on all sane-minded men and women, and upon the Clergy; as proof of that, we find even in the Church Assembly the votes against doctrinal abominations have grown. The spirit of life from God is entering in, and is causing terrible fear among the Bishops and Clergy, who have not yet received the spirit of life from God; they are fearful of the future, and, I believe, hope that the representatives of the tribes will again reject the Book. Another sign can be found in community singing; 93,000 people at Wembley uniting to sing God's praises, with millions joining in by wireless. Again, Communism, Bolshevism, the direct enemy of Almighty God, which gained ground during the 3½ years of spiritual chaos, is being cleared out by the representatives of the tribes, by the very people who have to witness against the Levitical Priesthood. Why had not the Established Church taken the lead in this? How could they, when their time was entirely absorbed in framing and scheming for idol worship? Why are the Commandments removed from the once conspicuous place in the Church, and relegated to an almost obscure position; are they not conscious that it would be contrary to their desired, and even engaged in, idol worship? "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or the likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters beneath the earth. Thou shalt not bow down to them, nor serve them."

The nation must condemn such practices, and must show these Clergy that they must give up such Pagan practices, or be moved from office.

It is an awful thing for the people to be compelled to pray Our Heavenly Father's mercy upon those who are self-righteous, and who occupy the position of teachers. God grant them the light of His Spirit on His Holy Word. In these enlightened days of prophetical fulfilment, it is a sad and sorry position for the Clergy to be in; one that brings to mind Our Lord's own words in Luke x, 31: "And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side." This is just what they are doing to-day: passing by on the wrong side.

THE SHORTENING OF THE TIME.

By Dr. W. Gornold.

In view of the remarkably original interpretation of specific prophecy made by M. Van Lennep in The National Message of 11th August, it may be wise to pause and enquire if this interpretation is well founded. The statement made is, in brief, that whereas it is popularly believed that the first siege of Jerusalem by Babylonia occurred in the year 603 B.C., according to the A.V. marginal dating, and whereas the "seven times" which had to pass over Israel would on this basis extend to the year A.D. 1917, the first of these dates is not historically to be associated with the invasion of Jerusalem, but that the true date of the first siege was 551 B.C., and therefore the seven times are due to expire only in A.D. 1970, and since they are held to have expired in effect by the cessation of the "treading down by the Gentiles" in 1917, there has been a Divine "shortening of the times" by some 53 years. That is the general impression which is conveyed to the reader in the article referred to.

But is it a fact that the "seven times" appointed for the "times of the Gentiles" was ever prophetically spoken of as being possibly shortened? Scripture history tells me by its unerring calendarics and successive unbroken genealogies that King Josiah died in the year -604, that he was succeeded by Jehoahaz for three months, and he again by Jehoiakim, whose first year was -604. Now the statement in the Book is that "In the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim the king of Judah, came Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem, and besieged it." This gives us the date -602 for the first siege of Jerusalem. Ptolemy's Canon gives the last of Nabopollaser and the first of Nebuchadnezzar 604 B.C., which is -603. It is therefore clear that profane and sacred history are in close accord as to the date of this event, and it is further proved by Ezekiel's "thirty years" which had expired in the year -592/3, which was the date of the second siege. "Seven times" from -602/3 will indicate the date A.D. 1917/18. Darius the Mede took the kingdom of Babylonia from Belshazzar in the year -533 and was succeeded by Cyrus, and he by Cambyses (Ahasuerus), in whose second year the "seventy years" were accomplished, having begun in the year -593, in the ninth year of Nebuchadnezzar. But the departure of the Shekinah (Gr. Parousia) was in the sixth year of the Captivity and is therefore dated -588, and the period of "seven times," equally with that of sheboim shanah (seventy cycles), will therefore expire in A.D. 1932. It is not generally known that the word shanah means merely a repetitive period, and though usually applied to the period of 354 or 365 days to indicate a lunar or solar year respectively, yet it may be and is definitely applied in prophecy to the successive planetary periods which give their names to the days of the week, and are thirty-six years (one-tenth of 360) in duration. The seventy shanah therefore indicate a period of 70 × 36, or 2,520 years, equal to "seven times."

The statement that the first siege of Jerusalem was in -550 is historically and scripturally inaccurate, and to say that this year was the first of Darius, son of Ahasuerus, is a further inaccuracy which ought not to be allowed to pass into circulation. The first year of Darius (Dan. ix, 1) was undoubtedly -516, but there is nothing in the text which should conduce to the idea that the desolations of Jerusalem began then, and indeed we know that there were two Captivities of Judah, the first being -602 to -532, and the greater deportation which took place in -593 and ended in -523. In the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus (-456) we have the commencement of the "seven weeks and threescore and two weeks" of Daniel's Messianic prophecy. In this same year Ezra went up to Jerusalem. The "seven weeks" or forty-nine years expired in -407, and the "three score and two weeks" or 434 years would therefore end in A.D. 27, the year of the beginning of the ministry of Jesus, which extended for two and a half years, and was finished in A.D. 30 at sunrise on Sunday, the fifteenth day of the seventh month (Nisan) in His glorious Resurrection.

It will be apparent, therefore, to anybody who will take the historical calendar in hand and study it in terms of the Hebrew record, that the only epoch from which it can be said the "seven times" expired in 1917 is that first year of Nebuchadnezzar and the third year of King Jehoiakim which fell in the year -603. There is no Scripture authority for the "shortening" of this period, and reference to Matt.. xxiv will show conclusively that the Lord's prophecy of the "shortening" applies solely and specifically to "that time" of tribulation which is coming upon "all the world." May the consolation of the prophets be ours also in the days to come.

NOTES AND QUOTATIONS IN RELATION TO BRITAIN-ISRAEL.

THE AFGHANS—SONS OF ISRAEL.
KING AMANULLAH.

Portions of the Israel exiles, as Sak-Geloths from Sakland on the Araxis River, established themselves in Arya, and parts of Turania, as Saghs and Sughudu. There they inaugurated the worship of Asha, Asa or righteousness. Thus, then, the land of Asha, Asa or Asia, a name later given to the whole continent.

This colonial empire of the Sakland Asen began to develop about 705 B.C., when they were fully liberated from Assyrian bondage, and had become a free and independent people.

The ancient country of Bactria seems to have been the central land of their home and power.

These Sack-Galuths established several colonies, self-governing while under paternal care and protection.

Of the north-west Asiatic colonies and centres, the city of Van was chief and the actual capital.

These Saxon exiles or Sack-Galuths became so powerful as to defeat the Assyrians, capture and destroy their great capital Nineveh, and so break the Assyrian power that at an early date Cyaxares of Persia and Nabopolassar of Babylon finished the work. Thus Assyria was punished by the hand of Israel as predicted by the prophets.

Speaking of this event, Hannay says: "In 619 B.C. the Sak-Geloths swept down like a blizzard on Nineveh, destroyed the city, and broke the power of Assyria."

These Israelitish Sak-Geloths were now masters of all Asia as then known. For twenty years they remained in Sak-land, retaining their military ascendancy over other nations. During that period they founded several powerful colonies in Ariana, and established their own form of civilization wherever they went.

Many of the descendants of these people were in Bactria and adjoining regions in the time of Alexander the Great. He found these hardy, high-spirited Northern Highlanders to be a restless, ungovernable people, and sent a portion of his highly-trained army to subdue them.

Like Darius with the Scythians, he was unable to catch them, for as a people they moved eastward, invaded North China and settled there for a period of three generations. About 159 B.C. they returned from China as Yu-chi, took possession of Bactria and their fathers' old homes, and, in the wars connected therewith, forced a portion of their own stock southward.

Those whom the Yu-chi dispossessed and drove south were known as the Tahia or Daciae and Tokhari. Being forced southward by the Yu-chi, they came into collision with the Parthians, who made war upon them, and under their King Mithradates II defeated and drove them into the regions now called Afghanistan and North India.

In these highest highlands of Asia the Israelite ancestors of Amanullah and his subjects established themselves as the nucleus of a people who are yet to write their greatest history in mighty and heroic acts, that will astonish the world and co-ordinate them with the other Israel nations and peoples of this earth.

This year 1928 shows these Afghans their danger of being invaded from the north. They see and know full well that Russia is determined to invade India by way of Afghanistan at an early date.

That Russia so intends, and has so intended for a long while, is amply proved by the openly declared statement set forth in the will of Peter the Great. This declaration has been repeated hundreds of times since then, in the most public manner.

Just as the Prussians sang to the day—Der Tag—the day when Britain would be crushed by Prussian brute strength, so Russia has boasted for long years of the day when Britain would be driven out of Asia, and the great uncivilized Bear become dominant therein as civilized Britain's successor.

The reading, understanding world, during and before the Great War of 1914-1918, knew that Germany's war plans were undertaken, perfected and launched with brutal force upon the world for the purpose of destroying Britain and taking her place in the world.

So it is to-day. The reading world knows Russia has long aimed at, and is now planning, the conquest of Britain in Asia and North-east Africa. Just as numbers of British people are deeply conscious of the impending struggle, so the enlightened Afghans see a mighty war menace on their northern horizon.

When the struggle will come we cannot tell, but it will come without any declaration of war, and like a cloud-burst upon the astonished world. And the honest peace prophets will be astounded at their long-cherished peace delusion.

In the meantime the world peace manipulators will rejoice, imagining that they have successfully fooled the good of all nations of our Great Commonwealth into a perfect state of unpreparedness.

However, the God of peace is also the God of war, and holds the nations in leash. His is the plan; His the method; His the power; His the control; and His the perfected outcome through the refining process of Divine training for the good of all peoples.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM.

To the Editor of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER.

DEAR SIR,—The interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream that the feet and toes represent a fifth empire which is Turkey, as set forth by "Eynsford," is the most reasonable that I have read. The old solution created a hiatus between the end of the Roman Empire and the Great War, which has never been satisfactorily explained. The solution usually given cannot be accepted as satisfactory, as it introduces two great religious systems instead of military powers as expressed by the image; the whole period of the image was 2,520 years which, if you carry your identity only as far as the Roman Empire, leaves a gap unfilled by any great military power. If the military power of Turkey is included in the 2,520 years, then also the Turkish power should be represented in the image, and this is correctly shown by the mixture of iron and clay in the feet and toes.

This interpretation seems to be more in accord with the prophecies than the one with the two "little horns" or the ecclesiastical systems of Rome and Mahomet, as a study of history clearly shows that the little horn of Dan. viii was fulfilled in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, and it can be equally as clearly shown that the little horn of Dan. vii has been fulfilled in its proper time and order by the late Kaiser, ex-Emperor of Germany and King of Prussia.

This new solution of Nebuchadnezzar's dream means the recasting of the whole of the prophecies of Daniel, and the severing of the connections that have hitherto bound the image of the second chapter to the fourfold vision of beasts in the seventh chapter.

A solution of the fourfold vision of beasts has been shown to me which is quite in accord with this new solution of the image of Nebuchadnezzar, and I welcome the article by "Eynsford" on that account.

Digitized by Google

If you closely study the vision of the seventh chapter of Daniel and compare it with the vision of John in the thirteenth of Revelation, it will be seen to be the same vision, only Daniel saw four beasts and John saw one great beast comprising the four of Daniel, and then if you take the description of these beasts as given by Daniel, taking them word by word and sentence by sentence, you will find that they exactly describe the four great powers that fought against us in the Great War.

Now why did John see these four beasts as one great beast? I believe the answer to be that when the four beasts should arise they would do so altogether as one great organization or alliance of powers, bound together with one common impulse, and that being the destruction of the "saints of the Most High" (or the British Empire) as we know them to-day.

I will briefly identify them from the marks as given by Daniel.

"The first was like a lion and had eagle's wings; I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man; and a man's heart was given to it."—Dan. vii, 4.

This beast represents Turkey, with empire spreading over three continents. This great empire was gradually reduced by the breaking away of various countries over which she ruled; this is signified by the wings being plucked. After the Balkan War the despotic rule of the Sultan was broken and a new system instituted, a new constitution was given to it.

The second beast was like a bear and it was raised up on one side, and three ribs were in his mouth between his teeth: and they said thus to it, Arise, devour much flesh.—Dan. vii, 5.

Bulgaria the treacherous, seen here lying down, after being severely mauled by her three allies upon whom she had turned, after the Balkan War, and the emblem of her treachery, the three ribs in her mouth. Then came the Great War and Germany called upon her for help, signified by the words, "Arise, devour much flesh."

The third beast was like a leopard, which had on the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast also had four heads; and dominion was given to it.—Dan. vii, 6.

Hungary is here depicted, the four wings signifying states into which the country was divided, viz., Hungary proper, Transylvania, Crotia and Slavonia. By heads dynasties are signified. Hungary has had four. They were Arpad, Anjou, Hunyardi and Hapsburg. "And dominion was given to it." In these few words the whole history of the addition of the Austrian states to Hungary is given.

The fourth was terrible and powerful and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth; it devoured and brake in pieces and stamped the residue with his feet and it was diverse from all the other beasts that were before it and it had ten horns.—Dan. vii, 7.

It needs little description of mine to identify modern Prussia with this beast. Her history has been one long chapter of ferocity and barbarous treatment towards her enemies, a treatment which had its complete example in her occupation of Belgium during the Great War which fully justified the description "it devoured and brake in pieces and stamped the residue with his feet."

The ten horns signify kingdoms. The empire as ruled over by the Kaiser and which was developed by the Great War comprised ten kingdoms, besides many smaller states and principalities. They were Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, Wurtemburg, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Serbia, Montenegro and Belgium, and we are told that the "little horn" plucked up and rooted out three of them, and we know that the war had not been on long before Belgium, Serbia and Montenegro were completely plucked up and rooted out; so the natural sequence is that the ex-Kaiser represented the "little horn." Was he not known as the great blasphemer of Europe, and did he not say many bold things and generally act to the life the description given by Daniel of the "little horn"? Power was given him to continue forty-two months, and if you calculate from the time that Bulgaria joined the alliance, March, 1915, when the fourfold beast became manifest, until she was forced to capitulate, September, 1918, you will find that the number of months that the beast held together was exactly forty-two. It then suddenly fell to pieces, culminating in November, 1918.

Much more detail could be given, but it would unduly lengthen this article. Suffice it to say that it becomes necessary for us to look again into those old prophecies of Daniel, and see that by the failure of our forefathers to see a fifth kingdom in the image of Daniel in the feet and toes has led to many erroneous ideas.

Yours, etc.,
"ASTEL."

MAN AND EARTH: A CO-ORDINATED CREATION AND INTERDEPENDENT.—PART V.

BY BEN ISRAEL.

SUFFICIENT evidence is presented thus far to prove the assumptions of this argument, though the treatise would be incomplete without an answer to the final question of the last chapter. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea."—Rev. xxi, 1. Turning from Peter's prophecy to the twenty-first chapter of the Apocalypse, we have the marvellous fulfilment both of 2 Peter iii, 5-13, and Isaiah xxxiv, 4. Physical details do not concern us so much now as the amazing fact that the earth, in the final reconstruction, is assigned her place as the representative of universal matter. Even more overwhelming is the added knowledge that the new earth, eternal, is the Throne of the Everlasting Father, Almighty God!

How far short do our concepts fall when we presume to set standards and explain the way with respect to the economy of the Kingdom of God! How forcibly the announcement of Jehovah strikes home! "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."—Isaiah lv, 8-9. Please mark the significance of these numbers. In the holy light of the marvellous Revelation, we learn that in the new earth, He, Theos, the Father, will found His capital city of the new Jerusalem. Its fortunate inhabitants, for ever blessed, are the multitudes of the saved who washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. They overcame in this present world, not by culture, but by acceptance of the atoning, sacrificial blood, and the resurrection power of Jesus. In the old world, men in unbelief seek rest in the possession and exploration of matter. In the new earth, the employment, joy, rest, of the glorified multitudes appear expressed in praise and glory and honour to Him Who was dead, but liveth for evermore, falling down continually before Him in adoration of His Divine majesty, of His ineffable love and glory. We are not impugning human endeavours by contrast, but would call to mind that, subsequent to 6,000 years ago, man lost a considerable portion of his God-given knowledge by rejecting the God of truth and taking unto himself the gods of error. Certain ancient documents prove this, and the Great Pyramid stands to witness. One of the sad results is the occasion of several thousands of years of laborious research to regain, by human means, scientific facts, many of which we now know were understood in the beginning as revealed knowledge. Ancient Hebrew astronomy is evidence in proof of the latter. The Book of Enoch, prophet and scribe, is quite illuminating as to how we might have attained unto secular knowledge and wisdom under the direct favour and tutorage of "The Head of Days." But to return to the Apocalyptic scene before us; there is now no discord among the terrestrial notes, since they have been perfected into the harmonies of the heavenly. Human voices blend with celestial harps, and even nature, at last, is at peace with her Maker: for the voice of the cruel, remorseless sea is for ever hushed, and the sun's blazing photosphere no longer parches the desert, nor nurtures the dreaded cyclone in the heart of oceanic solitudes to devastate that happy, glorified, country. For they have no need of the sun by day nor the moon by might: for there shall be no night there, "and the glory of God did lighten it and the Lamb is the light thereof." Listen to the further testimony of the eye-witness in Patmos. "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Rev. xxi, 3-4.

In conclusion, we have in mind a sublime passage from the Psalms which has a bearing in the direction of modern research. "Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou shalt endure; yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed. But thou art the same, and thy years shall have no end."—Psalm cii, 25-27.

This is one of the most comprehensive references in Scripture to the material creation, and definitely establishes metamorphosis of matter as the time policy of the Creator. The datum of the age of the earth is with respect to its foundation; the writer, evidently, having in consideration the fact that it had already experienced change since the founding.

God's creation of the heavens and the earth is reiterated and emphasized in Scripture, as if He has the egotistical scepticism of man constantly before Him. Many students, in conformity with the evolutionary theory, regard the earth as now diversified as at her best, having passed through a long series of changes into the higher, organized state of the current period. That changes have occurred is evident. That such, if due to evolutionary development, would require an incomprehensible lapse of time may appear rational, and may be satisfactory to them who cannot receive the vital truth of Scripture; but we are compelled to substitute their postulated millions of years with the catastrophic theory which agrees in all particulars with the sacred record. Indeed, it is the only explanation harmonizing with the known facts of geology and earliest historical data. It is the only adequate answer as to the cause of drift, and the manifold confusion in the stratigraphy of the earth's surface. There has not been since man's advent in the earth a co-ordination of natural forces of a character sufficient to engulf the hemispheres, form the coal measures, accumulate subterranean lakes of oil, burying the flora and fauna of the world—at once, so deeply, so quickly, and in such a way, that their remains are brought to the surface now in the form of fossils, concerning which thinking men are so much in disagreement. Fossils, far from proving a long succession of evolutionary ages, are, on the contrary, mute evidences of the awful catastrophe that overtook this planet when in a highly organized state as pertaining to plant and animal life, the overthrow and ruin of which we glimpse in Gen. i, 2, and in the partial recovery from which we see in the physical and geological features around us. As regards the so-called "Geological Ages," we respectfully refer the reader to the argument of Professor George McCready Price, "New Geology," in extenso. Past changes are enough in evidence, but the Psalmist informs us the foundation was laid of old.

If the evolutionist can get comfort out of that, he is welcome to it; it is for him as well as us. It is fundamental truth. Geology, so far, has to do with surface rocks, not over a mile and a quarter toward the interior, and tells us many interesting things of the diversification of the stratified formations, and but little with respect to primary rocks. They may be much older than the most enterprising of evolutionists aver. They may excel in age some of the distant luminaries in the heavens that have already burned up. Speaking about the stars, the Psalmist impresses us with their really ephemeral nature. To be sure, he is drawing a comparison between matter and Creator, but reveals thus His settled policy of change with respect to matter, manifestations of which have been witnessed in the "stellæ novæ" and nearer conflagrations in our immediate universe. In contrast with the finite, changing creation, attention is fixed upon the changeless, infinite God, Creator. The physicist has discovered and demonstrated many laws governing matter; and, if he sets Revelation aside, it has occurred that natural laws are "fixed," unchangeable. This would be true if matter were eternal. Since all forms of matter with which we are acquainted are temporal, we conclude that natural law proceeds as far as the subject governed. We have become accustomed to observe the phenomena of natural laws in the revolving systems around us until we have formed the habit. Some of these things we are at a loss to explain in spite of our habit. We have never seen a planet or star at rest. Some rotate so slowly upon their axes that we can comprehend, possibly, an absence of diurnal rotation. That a body could remain fixed and motionless in mid-space is entirely beyond our experience. Acquired science says, "Impossible"; the Bible replies, "All things are possible with God."

What we know of the operation of physical laws is confined to the region dominated by the telescope, and to our limited experience within the limits. The range seems enormous. What is beyond we have no knowledge. We are plainly told that the heavens will wax old like a garment, and, like a scroll, be rolled up and vanish away. We are assured that God will set up His throne in this earth after He has purged, changed, and removed it to another place; and that He will dwell among men.

We cannot conceive of God's throne revolving around some other centre. Our theology compels us to the belief in God as the centre of all motion, the origin of all law. In Psalm ciii, 19, David makes this statement, "The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens." This preparation, we believe, began with the dawn of time and is still in process. At the mighty rolling up of the heavens and the consolidation of the spheres and the founding of the THRONE and CAPITAL of GOD in that consolidation which St. John assures us is a "new earth," the latter must be centric, and, like the King, established for evermore. Those of us who are so happy as to be awarded a place in that marvellous, celestial, terrestrial "House of many mansions" will, doubtless, experience laws, constitutions, functionings, demonstrations of energy, undreamed here; for, are we not assured: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

REVIEW.

THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES.*

BY BASIL STEWART.

MR. BASIL STEWART is a writer on the Pyramid, and he is an investigator of Prophecy from the standpoint of the Historical School.

Much space is given in this work to combating the claims of the Futurists. Mr. Stewart caustically reminds these gentlemen that their school is founded upon the prophetical investigations of the Jesuits, and he regards such foundation as probably unstable. Nevertheless, despite Mr. Stewart, this mode of thought will continue, and for two reasons.

The first reason is, that there may be just an atom of truth in their conjectures. For instance, though Mr. Stewart disagrees with them in toto on the point of Antichrist being a person—he points out that Antichrist is a system—nevertheless he at length admits (p. 112) what is virtually their main contention, that there may be and perhaps will be in the future an atheist ruler possessing enormous power for a space of three and a half years. Again, he foretells a direful overthrow for the Church of Rome, and that in times near at hand. But so did Cardinal Manning. To Manning "the apostasy of the City of Rome from the Vicar of Christ and its destruction by Antichrist" was certain. "Malvenda," wrote Manning, "states as the opinion of Ribera, Gaspar Melus, Viegas, Suarez, Bellarmine, and Bosius, that Rome shall apostatize from the faith." So really it seems as though Mr. Stewart, the Futurists, and the ghost of Cardinal Manning have nothing to do but to shake hands over the coming Roman debacle, gleefully or otherwise.

The second reason is this—that there is, in the minds of many Christian men, a deep-rooted distrust of British-Israel teaching, such distrust being in some cases traceable to the perusal, in earlier life, of the works of the late Mr. David Baron. Mr. Baron, unfortunately, only saw one half his subject, and saw that half wrongly, and his writings have done harm. Now, you cannot be a Historicist without having the fact staring you in the face that if the punishment of Judah terminates at three definite points, 1917 (capture of Jerusalem), 1923 (abolition of the Caliphate), and 1936, then the punishment of Israel has also terminated at three definite points, which we personally take to have been 1780, 1800, and 1845. The Historicists admit the Judah cycle. They are compelled to. They are logically compelled therefore to admit the Israel cycle. But this pins them down to the British-Israel position, because no other nation inherited the promises—as Britain most certainly did—between 1780 and 1845. As we have elsewhere expressed it, "If you are a Guinnessite, then you are a British-Israelite." Sooner than honestly face this fact, multitudes will weakly transfer their allegiance from the Historicist to the Futurist camp. Frankly, the Futurists are welcome to them.

One of the most interesting questions dealt with in this very thought-provoking volume is the interpretation to be placed respectively upon the "little horns" of Daniel vii, 8, and Daniel viii, 9. The former Mr. Stewart considers representative of the Roman Church, the latter of the Greek. Concerning the former we have no quarrel with him. Concerning the latter we should like to quarrel but can't.

We confess to a certain respect for the Greek Church, at any rate as compared with the Roman. The late Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh, stated that on the matters of the being and attributes of God, no writers were worthy to compare with the Fathers of the Greek Church. Mr. Stewart, on the authority of another writer, charges this Church with the error of transubstantiation. This charge is erroneous. Between the transubstantiation of the Romans and the consubstantiation of the Greeks there is a difference so vast that some loyal Anglicans and some loyal Wesleyans could hold the latter view. At any rate Mandel Creighton and Hugh Price Hughes seem to have leaned that way. The Romans, as our author proves, have sedulously kept the Bible from the laity. But the Greek Orthodox priests, as Stephen Graham proves, urged the Russian peasantry to the study of the Gospels.

At the same time it has to be admitted that all is not well with that Church. Dean Stanley thought more hopelessly of it even than the Roman. Its final Nemesis may come. In the mind of Mr. Basil Stewart there is no doubt about the matter. Neither is there any doubt, in our own mind, as to the ability which he has displayed in dealing with this thorny subject.

The "Times of the Gentiles," Mr. Stewart believes, will have their termination in 1936. He has supplied us with a valuable prophetic chart, which greatly aids in the clarifying of the problems at issue. And in the said chart there is a section—explained at full length in the text—devoted to this year. The proof is fourfold. His starting-points are the final captivity of Judah (585 B.C.), the battle of Issus (333 B.C.), and the setting up of the Mosque of Omar (A.D. 639), the latter event leading him along two lines of interpretation. All these prophetic sequences bring him to one and the self-same year, 1936, which he alludes to as the " final year of the Times of the Gentiles and close of the present dispensation."

British-Israel teaching has, thank God, transformed hundreds of atheists into God-fearers, thousands of nominal Christians into vital Christians, Reader Harris the agnostic into Reader Harris the founder of the Pentecostal League. Said a retired clergyman recently to the present writer : " I should be glad to study any literature you have on the question of British-Israel, for during an experience of fifty years in the active ministry I have found that, in whatever parish I laboured, the most believing, most praying, most spiritually-minded members of my congregation were British-Israelites."

We commend this work. It is thoughtful, compact with information, the result of prolonged investigation. It is optimistic. It does not pander to the sensation-monger. It is for the serious student. We hope its circulation will be in accordance with its merits.

JERUSALEM.

NEW Y.M.C.A. BUILDING—CORNER-STONE LAID BY LORD PLUMER.

A MOST impressive ceremony marked, on Monday afternoon, the laying of the corner-stone of the huge new Young Men's Christian Association Centre, which is being erected at Nikephoria, on the right hand of St. Julian's Way going down towards the railway station.

A large crowd of notables, religious and lay heads of community, Government officials and foreign consuls, a full attendance of members of the Y.M.C.A. and inhabitants watched His Excellency the High Commissioner formally laying the stone. The preceding and subsequent ceremonies, which were brief and simple, were very impressive, and added to the solemnity of the occasion.

The ceremony commenced at about five o'clock, with an Invocation spoken by His Beatitude the Greek Orthodox Patriarch, and was followed by a statement made by the Vice-President of the Jerusalem Y.M.C.A., Mr. D. G. Salameh, who stressed that their intention was to create a cultural and social centre for the youth of all creeds. He thanked the anonymous donors and all those who assisted in the matter, particularly Dr. Harte, the General Secretary, the indefatigable worker of the Jerusalem Y.M.C.A., who is more than anybody else associated with the building project.

Mr. Salameh, in conclusion, extended the best wishes of the Association to Their Excellencies on the occasion of their forthcoming departure from the country and presented Lord Plumer with a life membership of the Jerusalem Y.M.C.A.

His Grace the Armenian Bishop followed with a reading (in the melodious Armenian tongue) from the Prophets, reading the first to third and tenth to twelfth verses in chapter lxii of Isaiah. Pastor Rev. W. H. Hertzberg then read Psalm xxiv, " The earth is Jehovah's and the fulness thereof," in Hebrew.

The congregation stood to hear spoken in Aramaic by the Syrian Metropolitan of Jerusalem verses 24 to 29 of chapter vii of St. Matthew. The next item in the ceremony was a reading in English from Corinthians, chapter iii, verses 9 to 23, by the Rev. C. T. Bridgeman. An Arabic prayer by the Rev. Saleh Saba, and a hymn sung by all (" O God, our help in ages past "), terminated the first part of the proceedings.

After a short interval, a case containing the documents relating to the building was placed in the corner-stone, and the trowel presented to His Excellency by Mr. Manassah Hannush, the Recording Secretary. After having laid the stone, the High Commissioner delivered a short address. The new building, he said, will stand as one of the most distinctive features of the modern Jerusalem. The youth will come here for studies and recreation, and learn here a spirit of brotherhood. If this spirit prevails, Palestine problems can be solved and success is certain. His Excellency expressed on behalf of all those present his sincerest thanks to the Board of Directors who dealt with the building, and especially to Dr. Harte.

Following the laying of the stone, all members of the Y.M.C.A. present said a short prayer, and all joined in with the Lord's Prayer.

A Benediction by the Rev. Canon Hanauer and the singing of the British National Anthem ended the proceedings.

The new building will be an imposing one, and its site commands an excellent view of Old and New Jerusalem and the outlying suburbs, with an excellent perspective over the Moab and Judean ranges.

The site is eight and a half acres in size, and it is hoped that the whole building will be ready for occupation at Easter, 1930. It is understood that the funds for the sites—considerably over £100,000—were secured from America and Australasia, that the building is being constructed from anonymous funds donated through the Central Union Trust Company of New York, and that £10,000 have been secured in Great Britain through the English National Council of the Association. Workers of all creeds are employed on the building, and their number ranges from 225 to 300. When completed, it will be the largest Y.M.C.A. building in all Asia.

Provision is being made in the building for a commercial school, industrial trade classes, a small school for the training of Y.M.C.A. workers, and a mid-winter school for Christian workers in other countries. A large auditorium, to seat almost 900, will also be a feature of the Centre.—Palestine Weekly, July 27th, 1928.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

WE are glad to hear of a goodly number who propose to join the party for Kew Gardens this (Saturday) afternoon at 3, inside the Lion Gate, and for tea at 4.30 at Christ Church Hall, and the public meeting thereafter. As we said in our last issue, if the weather should prove too wet for the Gardens, the party will please meet at the Hall.

* * *

In response to enquiries, we would say that the vouchers for cheap railway fares for the Congress are now ready, and we shall be pleased to supply any number required. They are signed by the Secretary-General, as stipulated by the railway authorities. The recipients must fill them up; they may then present them to the booking office at any railway station (outside the London area) in England, Scotland and Wales, when tickets will be issued on payment of the reduced fare to the booking clerk. It must be distinctly understood that reduced fares cannot be obtained without the vouchers, and that we cannot issue railway tickets; only the booking clerks at the stations can do that. No money therefore for railway tickets should be sent to us. Travellers can, if desired, begin their journey to London on Saturday, September 29th, or any day thereafter up to October 13th, and may return any day up to October 15th. Travellers may have reduced fares for as many journeys as they wish between the dates named, provided they secure from us vouchers for each journey, and this privilege is, of course, of special advantage to those who are unable to stay in London for the whole period of the Congress, but are able to attend certain meetings, return to their homes and come back for others, which those residing within easy distance of London can do daily if they wish.

* * *

Posters and leaflets for the Congress and for the Lantern Lecture are now ready, and may be had in any quantities by those who can use them. We earnestly ask that all who can help by the display of posters and the circulation of leaflets will please do so. We want to fill the great Hall at every meeting, so that the greatest possible numbers may hear the wonderful messages the speakers will deliver. No British-Israelite should miss these meetings, and all should endeavour to bring as many as they can who are not B.-I.'s. The tickets for reserved seats are selling well, and those who wish to secure seats should apply without delay. All can be sure that experienced speakers will address every meeting.

* * *

Our Branch officers are requested to inform us of the names and addresses of their delegates to the Congress. Morning sessions for delegates and members will be held at Headquarters as usual from Tuesday, October 2nd, to Saturday, October 6th, inclusive, at 11.15.

The adjourned Annual Meeting of members for the election of the Council of the Federation will be held on Thursday, October 4th, at 5.45.

Branches are invited to join Headquarters in holding Prayer Meetings for the Divine blessing on the Congress.

* * *

We appeal to our readers for liberal donations for the expenses of the Congress. Publicity is an expensive item, but money is well spent thereon. We think we can venture to say that long experience has taught us this, and that our friends can trust us to use what they are kind enough to give to the best possible advantage, and the amount of publicity we can undertake must depend upon the donations we receive. We beg that no effort may be spared to make sure that great numbers shall hear the exponents of the Israel Bible Truth. We need help quickly.

Erratum:—In our issue of August 11th, page 505, second column, last paragraph, third line, "Ye are Israel" should read "We are Israel."

* * *

The South London Branch will resume meetings on the first Tuesday in September, at 8 p.m., in the Y.W.C.A. Hall, 195, Lavender Hill, S.W.

* * *

Good meetings have been held in Brockwell and Barking Parks by our open-air speakers, and names were handed in for B.-I. literature.

* * *

A successful Garden Meeting has been held at Leamington, by kind invitation of the Misses Dartnell. Miss Beck gave a deeply spiritual address. A rally for the Midland Area is to be held in Leamington at the end of this month.

* * *

The Rev. Pascoe Goard and Professor Edward Odlum are to address a series of meetings in Toronto, from September 5th to 11th, on their way from Vancouver to London for our Congress.

The Law of the Lord or the Common Law

by

Rev. W. PASCOE GOARD

¶ Statesmen of every race and every tongue are seeking a system of government which will give security, establish peace—which is a final expression of ideal law-giving.

Is there such a system?

This book demonstrates that such a system exists, and that that system is at the disposal of every nation.

It is the Common Law of the Anglo-Saxon Races.

¶ When an alien race is brought under British rule it automatically comes under the Common Law of Britain; privilege of class is abolished; personal rule no longer holds sway.

When the Pilgrim Fathers set forth in the Mayflower to escape the personal domination of the Stuarts, next to the Word of God, the old Anglo-Saxon Common Law was their most cherished possession.

¶ Yet the Anglo-Saxon Common Law is older than Anglo-Saxondom, older than Christianity itself. It had its first codification on Mount Sinai when the mouth of the Lord spake unto Moses.

¶ There then is the PRINCIPLE, the root of the only system of laws which can succeed. Its amplification, its application in the form of constructive co-operation, to the needs of the present are all that statesmen need consider. The ideal system is ready-made for them.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—VIII.

JEREMIAH.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, F.R.G.S.

The Book of Jeremiah is a contribution to the great prophetic story. Taken by itself it is a fragment without beginning and without ending as far as the great drama with which it deals is concerned.

The Pentateuch and all the succeeding Books form the preface to the Book of Jeremiah; especially does the Book of Isaiah form the foreword of the Book of Jeremiah.

In the Pentateuch the whole Israel story is told in prophecy which overleaps the ages to the end of time.

Of that great story of prophecy from the call of Abraham upwards of 500 years were translated into history during the period which the Pentateuch covers.

About 1,100 years of the prophetic story had been translated into history at the time of Jeremiah, and yet there were thousands of years of the prophetic story to run.

As we saw in the hour with Isaiah at the period of the Isaiah writings, Judah, Israel and Syria; Ammon, Moab, Edom and other nations were in existence, and Isaiah pre-wrote their fall.

Now at the time of Jeremiah, Israel and Syria had fallen before the power of Assyria; Judah had been much weakened, and the position of the other nations rendered precarious.

The march of the history of the preceding century and a quarter indicates the distinct periods covered by Isaiah and by Jeremiah.

The last several kings of David's line to rule over Judah at Jerusalem swiftly succeeded each other in Jeremiah's day, ending with Zedekiah. In the meantime Assyria had fallen under the impact of Babylon, and the Nebuchadnezzar line of the kings of Babylon had incorporated all Assyria into what from thenceforth has been known as "Babylon," or "the Babylonian Empire."

The epoch in world history is well marked as the beginning of the great period and the great succession of world Empires.

Jeremiah gives to us a graphic eye-witness story of one personally active in the experiences of Jerusalem at that critical time.

Jeremiah was the ambassador of Jehovah at the court of the kings of the House of David, endeavouring to wake them to the consciousness of their responsibility as God's representative in the earth, and endeavouring to turn them back from that rebellious and idolatrous course which had already involved Israel in ruin and was bringing about destruction for the city, the temple, and the kingdom of Judah.

As at the present time, the kings and people of Judah accepted the Kingship of Jehovah as a doctrine to be professed and taught, but had ceased to consider it as a matter of "practical politics."

They rendered lip service in the temple, but refused actual service in the national life.

Jeremiah's commission from the Almighty was as follows:—

"Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before

Digitized by Google

thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations.

Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child.

But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord.

Then the Lord put forth his hand, and touched my mouth. And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth.

See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant." (Jeremiah i, 4-10.)

It was under this commission that Jeremiah faced the kings of Judah and his Cabinet, and it was armed with this commission that he sent letters to Edom, Moab, the Ammonites, Tyre and Zidon.

The conflict which went on between Jeremiah and the government at Jerusalem is striking. Especially did he come into collision with the priests of Jerusalem, who promptly demanded his death, and who, but for the interference of the king and the princes, would have proceeded to put him to death. There is no intolerance stamped upon the pages of history like the intolerance of the priestly class.

The nobles themselves were enraged again and again to the point of putting him first into the court of the prison, and then into the deepest dungeon of the prison, but when their rage had exhausted itself, either the king or the nobles always took him out again.

It seemed to the king and his nobles that they were heroically fighting to save Judah and Jerusalem; and that Jeremiah was marring their effort. In reality their course was sealing the doom of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jeremiah was fighting a losing fight to save both it and them. No wonder the conflict has come down to us in such graphic form.

Jeremiah's commission in this regard was to call the attention of the king and government, the priests and prophets of Jerusalem to the fact that they were still carrying on under the national covenant, made with Israel at Sinai, the text of which is given in the 26th chapter of Leviticus.

Because Israel had disregarded this covenant, under the punitive clauses thereof she had been dashed in pieces and had gone into captivity. Because Judah was disregarding this covenant, she was in process of falling before the power of the king of Babylon.

Jeremiah proclaimed to the king and government that if they would restore the Divine Law and observe the national covenant, kings and princes of David's line should go in and out of the city of Jerusalem endlessly; but if they continued to disregard the covenant Judah and Jerusalem should immediately fall.

So important was this matter then; so important is it to Israel-Britain to-day, that we shall make a somewhat long quotation:—

"The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem;

And say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel; Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant,

Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God:

That I may perform the oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day. Then answered I, and said, So be it, O Lord.

Then the Lord said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.

For I earnestly protested unto your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice.

Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination of their evil heart: therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, which I commanded them to do; but they did them not.

And the Lord said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers.

Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them." (Jer. xi, 1-11.)

Will the reader take these words as though they were written in the largest type? For there hung upon the decision—the final decision—of the nation, not only the destruction of Jerusalem and the kingdom of Judah, but the 2,520 years of punishment provided for in that covenant which has continued to the present day, and the ending of which, coming in 1934, bears such a probability of world disturbance in its train.

The armies of Nebuchadnezzar appeared before the city of Jerusalem, and of other fenced cities of Judah. The government prepared for a desperate defence, and in the meantime made application to Egypt for aid. The armies of Egypt were mobilized and took the route toward Judea. Before this menace the armies of Babylon retired from before Jerusalem, and the government and inhabitants rejoiced.

Jeremiah warned them that it was a false hope; there was no aid for them in the "League of Nations" but only in Jehovah, to Whom they refused to turn.

The armies of Egypt retired within their own boundaries; the armies of Nebuchadnezzar resumed the siege of Jerusalem and captured the city.

Zedekiah, the king, fled from the city by night, crossed the Mount of Olives, descended into the Jordan Valley, and was captured in the Plains of Jericho.

He was brought, according to the prediction of Jeremiah, before the king of Babylon, and there transactions occurred which have affected history down to the present time.

The sons of Zedekiah were brought before the king of Babylon and Zedekiah, and there they were slain before the eyes of their father.

Evidently the king of Babylon was under the impression that he had thus ended the succession of Zedekiah's House, and that Zedekiah had looked upon the destruction of his line as the last object upon which his eyes would gaze; for then the eyes of Zedekiah were put out.

The king of Babylon was unacquainted with the fact that as the law stood in Israel, "under the judgment of the Lord" given in the case of the daughters of Zelophehad, the death of the male heirs transferred the succession to the eldest daughter, who, from thenceforth, should "inherit among the brethren."

Thus, Tea Tephi, the daughter of Zedekiah, became heir-apparent to the throne of David.

The dramatic record goes on to show that Jeremiah and the king's daughters were given their liberties by the king of Assyria.

The record goes on further to show that they were carried by force with other refugees into Egypt, against the warnings and pleadings of Jeremiah.

In Egypt this group of refugees resorted to Madonna worship, or the worship of the Queen of Heaven. To them Jeremiah gave warning upon warning, and was met, first, by the answer of the women, and then of the men, that they would in no case cease burning incense, pouring libations, and offering cakes to the Queen of Heaven. Then this tremendous sentence was passed upon them, that not only should the major part of the men be slain by the sword, pestilence and famine when Nebuchadnezzar extended his conquest to Egypt, but that the Name of Jehovah should never again be used or called upon by them.

From thenceforth, conscious of their origin, and conscious of their punishment, they should wander, a marked fragment of a race, to the end of time. Here, in all probability, is the origin of the gypsies.

Is it not astonishing that the worship of the Queen of Heaven, burning incense to her, and offering cakes or wafers, is still in progress and still a stumbling-block in Israel?

Thus the prophet Jeremiah completed his mission of "pulling down"; for he lived to see Syria, Israel and Judah utterly swept away; the city burned and the temple destroyed, and the House of David removed from Jerusalem, to which it was never to be restored, either personally or by representative until A.D. 1917.

The constructive part of Jeremiah's mission, the planting and the building, were doubtless accomplished according to Divine appointment, but we must look for the fulfilment of that in the prophetic Scriptures and in the secular history of ancient Britain.

This is an outline of the contribution of Jeremiah to the great prophetic story.

Certain documents of vital importance are included in the Jeremiah literature, but we must reserve the consideration of those until the next issue.

EGYPT.

By Dr. T. G. Wakeling, O.B.E.

THE refusal of the Egyptians to accept a most generous treaty, and their act in practically flinging it back into the face of Great Britain, naturally brought on another crisis, in which they received a serious warning and, being yet obdurate, their Cabinet fell, their Parliament was dissolved for at least three years, a Dictatorship was formed, and the position between Great Britain and Egypt "reverts to the Declaration of 1922, in which Great Britain, being responsible for the safety of foreigners, embodies the conditions subject to which independence was accorded to Egypt, a responsibility which His Majesty's Government will not permit to be either modified or disregarded."

The position of the Egyptians is best stated in their own words: "We want Britain to protect us with her Army and Navy, but otherwise leave us alone."

Those who know the Egyptians will realize how impossible it is to grant them such terms; born masters of intrigue, it would not be long before our Forces would be called upon to wage war to protect them from the consequences of their own folly.

It is interesting to look back over the last twenty-five years and recall the number of attempts on the part of British statesmen to leave Egypt. Even that great Bible student, W. E. Gladstone, aware of the fact that "the land from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the Euphrates" had been promised to a people, but ignorant, apparently, that the British people were the descendants of those to whom the promise had been made, frequently stated his intention to leave Egypt, but his Cabinet fell before he could with safety carry out his plan. After him, Minister after Minister spoke of the intention to leave the country. A French official stated: "Yes, certainly you ought to go, but every wise man would leave with his money in the ship before your soldiers. The unwise would leave in the ship after without their money."

I look back with pleasure to the happy relationship that existed years ago between the British, the Arabs and Egyptians. Egypt was then hopefully toiling up out of the morass of debt left by Ismail Pasha. The people enjoyed a freedom such as we do not know in England, their crops were their own, their taxes were very light, and that only for the water; the English inspectors saw to it that there was no injustice in the distribution of water, and that the poorest Fellah got his fair share. These inspectors were young men from home who gave their best, and during my long association with Egypt I never heard of one of them against whom a finger could be pointed. This was the acid test of honour, for in Egypt it was always easy for a disappointed man to hint at wrongdoings and, once started, a story lost nothing in the telling. The relationship between them and the Egyptians was most cordial; between an old man and the young inspector it was almost that of father and son, and often the old Omdeh would use the term, "Oh, my son."

Between the English people and the Egyptians the same cordiality existed, for the former seemed by some curious intuition to understand the psychology of the Egyptians. They knew that they were a people quickly swayed, liable to tumult when carried away by religious or other excitement, and made allowance. This was quickly seen by the Egyptians and appreciated by them, for they are certainly conscious of their own failings, and in their way they showed their gratitude by invitations to feasts, to shooting over their land, and to their powder plays. The Arabs who, although racially distinct, are for the purpose of this article included in the term Egyptians, claimed even a closer friendship with the English. "We are of the same father," they said. "You have forgotten, but we have not. We have the same family characteristics. We are both thieves. We take small things, but you take continents and cities." This happy condition lasted for some years. The people were steered through epidemics of cholera and plague, and many an Englishman paid for his devotion with his life. It was a difficult task, for in the face of such a trouble the people were as children. During an outbreak a pump was put down in a man's yard, and when the water flowed clear and bright, different from the foul water of the village pond, the cry went up that it was magic, for how could water come out of such dry sand? Nor would the owner drink of it, but sent his fowls to drink first, then his goats and sheep, and watched to see if any died. Then he sent his cows and horses, and waited for the result; as none of them died, he sent his wives and children to drink first, and after drank of it himself and all his house. This was his own story. How difficult the task of protecting the people may be gathered from the following story of a sharp outbreak of cholera. On the return from the pilgrimage to Mecca, a man secreted a bottle of water from a holy well and brought it home with him; he gave a few drops to his friends, and, in order that the whole village might acquire merit, emptied the remainder of the water down the village well; a severe outbreak occurred, and in a few hours a large number of the villagers were dead.

The well was disinfected with Condy's fluid (permanganate of potash); at once the cry went up that the well was poisoned. Carefully explained, the incident passed over and harmony was restored.

Egypt's wealth increased; the people were getting rich and, as was inevitable, there were those who saw a prospect of extorting money in the old way. It was unfortunate that at that time there was a move made to place the Egyptian upon a pedestal, a position for which he was and is totally unfitted. This opened the way to agitators. Then there came Radical members of the British Parliament to fan the unrest. These were followed by Socialists, whose doctrines were not understood by the people. A chief once asked, "What is a Socialist?" He could not understand the explanation. Then he mused for a moment. "There is one in Cairo," he said, "I will speak with him." "These people are without God or grace" was his verdict later. Then followed the land campaign in England. This was known and keenly debated. A desert Arab asked for an explanation. At the end he said, "England looks to us like a beautiful fruit, but when it is cut open it is found to be rotten at the core."

It will be readily understood that these acts on the part of responsible statesmen at home weakened our influence in Egypt. All the time there were coming members of the House of Commons who added fuel to the fire by deliberately running their own country down and advising to revolt. Nothing was done at home to prevent this. Statesmen refused to listen, or would not believe, and repeated the assertion that "We are going to leave Egypt." "If you have something pleasant to tell, let us hear it; if it is unpleasant, keep it to yourself," was another saying of responsible officials that made the hearer check himself and keep his knowledge to himself. It was always so, but let an agitator, a traitor, begin to talk, and whatever his tale, he was sure of a sympathetic hearing. It is incredible, but it is true. It seems, now, like a rebellion of our Governments against a decree of the Almighty. As though He had hardened their hearts so that they should not understand that His will and purpose might be made more clear.

Then came the Egyptian Parliament, forced by us upon the country against the pleadings of those who knew best, and now the Parliament is dissolved for at least three years. Meanwhile Egypt and its people are slipping back into a state that makes the best friends of the country sad. Drug-taking is rife, and from the Egyptian Prime Minister's statement it is clear that corruption and bribery are rampant.

"It is not like the old days," mourned a Greek to me, "now you don't know where you are."

A spirit of bitter hatred fills the hearts of the majority of the Pasha and Effendi class against Britain. Murder of British officials has ceased for the moment, but the campaign of insult and vilification against everything British will certainly bring its fruits. This is a direct result of a policy of weakness, if not of sheer cowardice on the part of our Governments. Could anyone imagine France, Italy or Germany acting in the way we have done?

"It is not good the way you have treated us," declared an old man. "You have given children fire to play with." Egypt was once part of the Roman Empire, and Italy is watching keenly for signs of weakness on our part, and is credited with "having a man ready to fill every post in Egypt." This France would never tolerate; the result would be a devastating war between the two countries, into which we should undoubtedly be drawn. Now another great war would mean the end of civilization in Europe and the triumph of the most bestial form of Bolshevism, a fate too dreadful for Christian people to consider, and yet it must be faced, for the fate of Europe hangs upon Britain standing between two nations which both desire the same thing. Italy on account of Egypt having once formed a part of the Imperial Roman Empire, and France from the fact that she constructed the Suez Canal.

Can we not see the will of God, to whom all things are known, in this? Long ago He knew what would happen and placed a sacred trust upon us. With this our politicians have played. We have had our warnings: the murder of the Sirdar was one; the failure of the Egyptian Parliament is another. Do we know the Egyptians better than the Almighty? Our politicians seem to think that they do. We were given Egypt to have and to hold; it could not have been by accident that we went there. God has shown, I think, an affection for Egypt, "The work of My hands," and, knowing what should come to pass, committed it to our care. Can we look up and say that we have done well? or that we have not become weary in well doing? It has recently been stated that "there was a strong disposition to exaggerate the importance of our interests in Egypt. The circumstances in which we should want to control the Suez Canal were very rare, and, if there were war, we should go to the East round the Cape." This is deliberate and a gross mis-statement. Let anyone consider the difference in time, which is of the utmost importance in these days, of a voyage to India via the Canal or round the Cape. Even were it so, Egypt is the half-way house by air to the East and to Africa. It may be objected, "But the rights of small nations?" The answer to this is "Would you give matches to children to play with among straw?" These are facts which cannot be gainsaid; let anyone take a map and consider the situation; then think of the responsibility placed upon our shoulders and the disaster to the whole world that a failure on our part to carry out faithfully our duty will involve, and let each one ask himself, "How will you answer for your share?"

Digitized by Google

God in His infinite wisdom knew what would happen, and selected His people to bear the burden. Not the people, but the politicians, who seem to repudiate the responsibility.

CYCLE OF SEVENS.—IV.

By W. J. FOSTER.

Seven Heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. (Rev. xii, 1, 2). In the first and second verses of this chapter we read:—"And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars: And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered." The third verse brings us to the cycle by which the woman is very seriously affected. Without doubt the "woman" here referred to is Israel, for we read in the fifth and sixth verses: "And she brought forth a man child who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God and to His Throne. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three score days." The red dragon with the seven heads knew distinctly the purpose of the "Child," Who was to rule the nations with a rod of iron. He knew that the influence exerted by himself among the nations (you will please notice that the fifth verse distinctly states "nations," which mean Gentile nations, over which the dragon, (Satan) with his seven organizations, or powers (heads), rules in distinct opposition to Almighty God) would be ultimately abrogated. He therefore employed the powers at his command to seize the "Child" (Christ) immediately He was born. Joseph and Mary had to take Jesus beyond the confines of the dragon powers in order to preserve His life. And even after the Crucifixion the dragon powers endeavoured to bind Our Lord to earth, but He burst the bonds, and after giving tangible proof of His divinity was caught up, ascended, to Heaven, to His Holy Father God. Following this disappointment the dragon turns to arrest the "woman" (Israel), who is commissioned to complete the abrogation of Satanic power, but God provides an island (known to the Roman Powers as the wilderness) where Israel could be safe, and where God could feed, strengthen, multiply, and restore them to healthy spiritual life, for the accomplishment of His great purpose for mankind against their seducer the Devil. The seven heads may be considered in conjunction with the seven crowns, seven hills; or mountains, seven kings, and also the ten horns. These represent the bestial powers of Satan, which were to exert themselves to the uttermost to defeat the promise made to mankind by God: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's (dragon, devil's) head." Satan also knows that he has very little more time to accomplish his purpose, so is making his gambler's last throw. Satan has used the powers involved one by one, until at last he finds himself in the Saturday night of his expiring time, so now in a wild effort he is combining the residue of his forces—"Communism," which involves every abomination of all time, to undermine the spiritual aspirations of mankind, all law and order, and to prevent the establishment of God's Kingdom on earth.

"Seven Vials" of the wrath of God (Rev. xvi, 1):

"And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels: Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth." These "vials" of God's wrath are definitely purposed upon those who have the mark of the "Beast," so if you will please read the following verses of this chapter you will find how Almighty God has dealt with His enemies, through the periods indicated by the vials.

It is generally believed that we are in the period of the sixth vial. If it is correct to interpret Euphrates as the Ottoman Turkish Power, then the drying-up as mentioned in verse 12 has already taken place by the removal of the Caliphate.

The Turkish Power is no longer the House of Esau, but is the Assyrian Japhetic Angolian stock who, in concert with the Ezekiel Powers mentioned in chapter xxxviii, are under the sway of the dragon, and would complete that prophetic fulfilment of verse 12, Rev. xvi.

"And the sixth Angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared." (The House of Othman has been dried up.)

Rev. xvi, 13, 14: "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet, for they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

We have evident proof of this prophecy being fulfilled at the present time; are not the spirits of devils at work throughout the whole world? The Soviet of Russia are spreading their poisonous literature, and their Communistic abominations, among the working classes in every country, inciting them against law and order, with a view to even mutinous conduct by both Army and Navy: the destruction of defensive system, and the bankruptcy of industrial organization. There is also the anti-Christian propaganda to poison the minds of little children and make them believe in the non-existence of God. We also have the false prophet who, "having the form of godliness denies the power thereof"; he is saying: "Look to the bread and wine, I have blessed it, and it has become the very being of Christ; eat it, all of it, and it becomes Christ within you." Christ Our Lord said: "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." He was lifted up, and that was sufficient. He did not say: Lift up the bread (Host)—called procession of the Host—and it shall draw all men unto it; no, the false prophets are saying, when standing before the altar blessing the bread and wine, this is Christ. Yes, and they want people to believe that they can take Him with them in their bags into the sick chamber.

These are the spirits of the devils which are going forth through the whole earth to gather all the unwary and the Satanic elements to the battle of God.

God says (Rev. xviii, 4): "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities."

The seventh Angel will soon pour out the seventh vial, which will be the end of Satanic influence: this the fierceness of the wrath of God Almighty upon His enemies: thunders, lightnings, a great earthquake such as was not since men were upon the earth; the cities of the Satanic nations will fall; and the wicked will come in remembrance before God, and shall drink the cup of the fierceness of His wrath; great hail shall fall upon them large enough to crush the life out of them, and terrible plague upon man and beast.

Rev. xix, 19, 20: "And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse, and against His army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

Reviewing the prophecies herein mentioned on the basis of the perfect number seven with their historical and chronological fulfilment, we may very reasonably assume that the events given through the Scriptures up to this 19th chapter of Revelation will precede the Millennium.

That being the case, we may well and truly state that the seventh day (of a thousand years per day) will be the period of Our Lord's reign on earth.

As previously stated: God alone set this greatest of all cycles (seven days), and if it embodies—as it is reasonably believed—a thousand years per day, we may calculate the time on the basis of God's Creation.

"In six days God created the heaven and the earth," etc., and His command to man: "Six days shalt thou labour and do all thou hast to do." Then we read: "And God rested on the seventh day, and sanctified it." God says to man: "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

Of a truth the seventh day or seventh period has been, and will be, God's. We are now living in the year A.D. 1928: this number of years added to the number of years B.C., viz., 4,004, would show us to be living in the year 5,932; taking six days of a thousand years per day, or 6,000 years to usher in the Millennium, there can only remain barely sixty-eight years to complete the "Tribulation," Rapture, Armageddon, the cleansing of the sanctuary, and the final preparations for the Coming of Our Lord, the King of kings, to reign from Jerusalem.

None of us are sure that even this short period will not be shortened, for time is God's and He will decide.

1 Thess. v, 1-6: "But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night, for when they (God's enemies) shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others, but let us watch and be sober."

When Our Lord takes control of the seventh day (Millennium), what then?

Rev. xx, 4-6: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

"But the rest of the dead (those who died in sin) lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years."

ENGLAND.

BY THE LATE DEAN FARRAR, M.A., D.D.

NATIONAL blessings involve national responsibilities; the greatness of England is entrusted to her that she may work the work of Christ; God will not accept external decencies for true service; the duty of a nation means the duty of each and all of her individual sons; the Prophets are no dead moralists, but—

"In them is plainest taught and easiest learnt
What makes a nation happy and keeps it so,
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat."

The England of to-day! What majesty, what exultation there should be in the sound! A great land is ours, a cause magnificent and awful, a splendid heritage, an immense responsibility. England! Is there one of you with soul so dead as not to find inspiration and ennoblement in her very name?

"This royal throne of kings, this sceptred isle,
This other Eden, demi-Paradise;
This precious stone set in the silver sea."

England, whose daughter colonies are mighty empires great as that of Rome; England, on whose dominions the great sun never sets; England, for whose infancy Alfred laboured; for whose youth Edward fought; whose manhood Elizabeth ruled; England, on whose banners are woven the names of Waterloo and Inkermann, side by side with those of Crecy and Agincourt; England, whose battle-brunt the passionate genius of Chatham inspired, and who, when the nations seemed to be gathered against her, "roused herself like a strong man out of sleep, and shook her invincible locks." For England how many great explorers, from Raleigh down to Livingstone, traversed all earth, from the sultriest depth of Africa to the eternal silences of Arctic snows! It was for England that Chaucer became the morning-star of song, and Shakespeare flung wide the gates of laughter and unlocked the fountain of sacred tears, and Milton trod the azure floors of Heaven. For England, in her victories of peace no less renowned than those of war, how many sages have outwatched the stars; and for her sins the uplifted eyes of how many a saint have been wet with tears! To England the Puritans bequeathed the lofty ideals of their righteousness, and from her white cliffs the Pilgrim Fathers sailed forth to found the great Republic of the Western World. England! She is our home, our heritage, and it is for us to make her a source of light, a centre of peace—mistress of learning and of the arts—faithful guardian of great memories in the midst of irreverent and ephemeral visions.

We, then—the children of this mighty kingdom, the heirs of these unparalleled traditions—we to whom is entrusted this splendid supremacy, we "the heirs of all the ages, in the foremost files of time"—how are we best and most faithfully to maintain the honours of this ancient and God-fearing commonwealth? England—what are the true sources of her strength? Whereon must rest the granite bases of her stability?

First and foremost I would say that the true glory of a country is in her sons. You may say that what constitutes her greatness is the inviolate sea which compasses her shores, which she has turned from an estranging barrier into the sapphire marriage-ring of the nations; or the deep rivers—Thames, and Severn, and Mersey, and Humber—which are the avenues to her palace front; or the temperate climate, and the fertile soil, and the mineral resources, and the material skill in shipbuilding and manufacture. But all these would be valueless without the courage and character of her people.

"Vain mightiest fleets of iron framed,
Vain those all-conquering guns,
Unless proud England keep untamed
The true heart of her sons."

The great thinker, confined in prison in 1793, and awaiting the death which any moment might bring him in the red terror of the French Revolution, said, "Even at this incomprehensible moment, when morality, enlightenment, love of country, all of them only made death at the prison door or the scaffold more certain—yes, on the fatal tumbril itself, with nothing free but my voice, I could still cry 'Take care!' to a child that should come too near the wheel. Perhaps I may save his life, perhaps he may one day save his country." Yes! every child born in a Christian country should be a potential source of her grandeur and happiness. "These are our wings," said a statesman, pointing to the assembled children.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM.

WITH regard to the item on page 390 of the N.M. and B. for June 23rd, under the above heading, I for one quite agree with the suggestion thrown out by "Eynsford" that the Stone Kingdom, referred to in Daniel ii, is the sixth, and not the fifth, Kingdom, as is generally supposed.

My reason for thinking so is based on the number seven. All Bible students agree, I think, that the number seven in Scripture means completeness.

Now I contend that the Kingdom over which Our Lord will rule at the end of this age will be the seventh in order from Babylon, and that the Stone Kingdom will be the sixth.

We are all agreed, I think, that the first four Kingdoms represent, respectively, Babylon, Media-Persia, Greece and Rome. Now what Power does the fifth represent?

For an answer I would ask you to note the Power in possession of the Holy Land when General Allenby entered with his men in December, 1917.

We find the Turk in possession; therefore I contend that Turkey is the fifth Kingdom.

If my readers will turn to Daniel ii, verses 32, 33, 34 and 35, they will see that the image is divided into five, not four, parts—viz., (1) head; (2) breast and arms; (3) belly and thighs; (4) legs; (5) feet. We read that the head was of fine gold, the breast and arms of silver, the belly and thighs of brass, the legs of iron, and the feet, part iron and part clay, pointing to instability of government. We read on and see that a stone, cut out of the mountain without hands, struck the feet of the image and broke them to pieces, thus causing the collapse of the whole structure, as was only natural. Verses 35 and 45 mention five divisions of the image, though not in chronological order. Ezekiel xxv, 14, reads: "I will lay my vengeance upon Edom (Turkey) by the hand of my people Israel," and, as the British drove out the Turk from Palestine, Britain must be Israel. We are all aware, I presume, that Great Britain at one time formed part of the Continent of Europe, but Jehovah, in order to protect His people Israel from their enemies, formed the English Channel to come between us and the Continent of Europe, so as to fulfil His promise to David in 2 Sam. vii, 10, where He says: "I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime."

I don't know why the Stone Kingdom is always referred to as the fifth, we have no Scriptural authority for it. We have no more right to include the feet of the image as part of the legs than the thighs, but you will see from Daniel ii, verse 32, that the thighs are included with the lower part of the body. Five Gentile Powers have held sway in Palestine since Nebuchadnezzar's day, viz.—Babylon, Media-Persia, Greece, Rome and Turkey, and to-day Britain, the sixth Power, is in possession.

I, along with "Eynsford," would like the views of some of our leaders on this question.

There is this basic fact to remember, the Kingdom over which Christ will reign in the Millennium will be the seventh in order from Babylon.

ADDRESS

BY THE REV. MAXWELL CARNSON, F.R.G.S., F.R.S.A.

MR. GARRISON has told us about volcanoes and earthquakes. He has experienced both in his travels, and he knows that you cannot have the re-casting and renovating of the fabric of the earth without enormous upheavals. With all their awe-inspiring terrors, with that sense of human minuteness and impotence which they bring, earthquakes and volcanoes are a manifestation of the re-creative wisdom of Almighty God at work in the sphere of the material. When earthquakes cease, Mr. Garrison tells us, the earth will become as dead as the moon. The same is true in the mental and spiritual world. When earthquakes cease upon this earth, then the earth will fall into a deadness as the deadness of the moon. That is true of a good many organizations—that we have become so content to go on in the same round, repeating the same line of truth, that we have fallen into a sleep from which there is sometimes little hope of awakening. When there is no upheaval of thought, there is the calm placidity of sleep or of death. The study of the British-Israel Truth does, in the mental sphere, what earthquakes and volcanoes do in the material. You come into a mental sphere ; you experience one of those earthquakes which are the beneficent operations of God. It re-forms, it re-creates, it lets in air and light, and eventually new forms of life spring up to replace those which have disappeared in the cataclysm. You have God's world re-made in material, and mental, and spiritual things ; the re-making of the material universe in preparation for the great outpouring of His Spirit before the eyes of the nations. Now to take up the study of the British-Israel Truth means that you have got to revise your estimate of the scholars whose writings have formed your thinking in the formative years. It means that you are entering into a new world. It is as true now as when our King declared it, " Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

I want to quote some recently printed words of one of the great leaders of Christian thought to-day, a man whose works you well know ; a man of great reputation in the Church, who allies himself with what he calls the moderate critics, as opposed to the critics of the extreme school. In a little pamphlet recently published, this writer says that " moderate criticism admits the same principles as the extremer critics, and reaches many of the same conclusions, such as the following : (1) That the early chapters of Genesis are based on folk-lore, and cannot be treated as history ; (2) That even the more historical tradition cannot always be relied upon as accurate ; (3) That the codes of law in the Pentateuch date from different epochs down to the return from captivity : though they were all ascribed to Moses, and critics differ as to how much was actually Mosaic ; (4) That the development of the ceremonial law and the centralization of worship at one only shrine of Jehovah, and the threefold ministry of high priests, priests and Levites was the result of a gradual process which has left its marks on the records ; (5) That the Book of Chronicles gives us history not strictly as it was, but as it ought to have been in the view of the priestly writer ; (6) That considerable portions of the Books of the Prophets were not the work of the Prophets whose names they bear ; (7) That the Book of Daniel, as we have it, dates from the years of the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes." I felt that I must either drop the pilot, or drop the Bible. I want to ask, what about the Book of Esdras ? It seems that neither Genesis, nor Daniel, nor Chronicles can be relied upon according to the moderate critics ; and if that is the view of moderate critics, then where do the extreme critics come in ? As a matter of fact, the whole question of the relation between the Old Testament and the New Testament is a bigger one than the critics seem to have realized. It is not a question of dates and authorship, of emendations and accretions. We were taught to believe that the New Testament followed on the Old Testament. It does not merely do that. The revelation of God is interwoven into the warp and woof of the Scriptures, Old and New, and we cannot separate the New from the Old. The union is a deeper and more far-reaching one than human minds can grasp. The union, indeed, is so close, that you have not got two Books ; you have got a library of Books, and yet it is only one Word and one revelation of one God, the Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ. And if Mr. Goard has proved anything at all to us it is that very fact.

In drawing your attention to one item only of the revelation of the Old Testament, namely, " the Branch of Jehovah," as given to us in Isaiah, Jeremiah and Zechariah, I am aware that I incur the danger of those who " rush in where angels fear to tread," but my treatment is quite elementary and merely suggestive for the further pursuit of the subject. It is a subject that we do not often talk about because it is only given to us in broken passages, and in verses that easily escape our attention. It is not my intention to enter into the question of the place which the doctrine of the Branch holds in other religions, where we find relics, albeit vitiated, of the pure Hebrew ideas of our prophetic Scriptures. For instance, " the man whose name is the Branch " was worshipped in Babylon under the name of El-Bar. He was the Son of God, celebrated not only as the Branch of Cush, but as the Branch of God. In the Assyrian and Babylonian religion there was a threefold Godhead—the Father God, the Mother God, and the God Who was a descendant of both. Where did they get it from ? God the Son, the Branch of God. You can take one of two points. Either the Hebrews took it from Babylon, or the Babylonians came under Hebrew influence quite early in their career. This is the esoteric meaning of Virgil's Golden Branch, and of the mistletoe branch of the Druids, and of the wide extent of the worship of a sacred branch in the religions of Africa, Egypt and India.

What I propose to do now is to take four outstanding passages relating to the Branch, in which He is spoken of successively as King, as Servant, as Man, and as God ; and while remembering that in nearly all cases the statements of the Prophets have a primary as well as an ultimate fulfilment, to see how the four Gospels of the New Testament give each its own interpretation of one of the four presentations of the Branch in the Old Testament.

First, the Branch as King in Jeremiah xxiii, 5, 6 : " Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute justice and judgment in the earth . . . And this is His name whereby He shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." Is it a mere coincidence that Matthew commences his Gospel with the Royal Genealogy, tracing the descent of the Branch of David, and showing Christ as King? I am a little afraid that our modern love for the Man Christ Jesus has tended to make us over-emphasize the humanity of Jesus Christ, that humanistic interpretation which has sometimes overlooked His Kingly power and dignity. How often, for instance, do we hear Him spoken of as the Carpenter of Nazareth, whereas the phrase only occurs once in the New Testament, and that is in St. Mark's Gospel. In the parallel passage in Matthew He is spoken of as the Carpenter's Son; and in both cases the people of Nazareth seem to have known very little about Him at the time of His first public appearance. Do you realize that Jesus, in all His illustrations, was continually using commonplace things; drawing His illustrations from the market place and the streets, the hillside and the flowers and the birds; and not from that which is so often unduly emphasized as His normal trade? The people of His own village knew His mother and knew His brethren quite intimately, but this new Star Who had arisen—who was He? They were in considerable doubt as to who He might be. In the silence of those years of waiting, until the time of His manifestation to Israel, we have as much right to think of our King as engaged in study and travel and survey of the conditions of the time as others have to envisage Him as working at the carpenter's bench, making stools and tables and doors for the villagers of Nazareth. In any case, it was as King that He was announced to the world; it was as King He was received; it was as King that His disciples expected Him to manifest Himself, and He never corrected their supposed misapprehension. It was as King that He rode into Jerusalem, and as King He died upon the Cross; and we believe that He will also come again in glory as King. "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold thy King cometh unto thee: He is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass."—Zech. ix, 9. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." In association with this Kingly presentation, we have the nation, the Royal Throne of David, established in the Isles; we have the Kingly dignity of Israel in the latter days; we are to be made unto our God Kings and Priests, "and we shall reign on the earth."—(Rev. v, 10.) The first appeal of the Branch is the appeal of Kingship—the challenge to the Bolshevism of the human heart which refuses all authority and desires to be a law unto itself. With what boldness shall we who serve the King advance the claims of Christ with the certainty of His ultimate victory and the crown of our high calling.

Secondly, the Branch as Servant. "Behold, I will bring forth My servant the Branch." (Zech. iii, 8.) Mark gives no genealogy. Christ comes straight forward as the suffering Messiah, as Servant of all, as Isaiah had pictured the Servant, an interpretation of their Messiah which the Jew did not believe or desire. But they will have to accept the fact that their Messiah was One Who could suffer and die. Nor is it always acceptable to remind believers in this great truth of the National inheritance, that if we are called to Kingly dignity, we are only called in order that we might serve. While we are rightly proud of the position we hold, we remind ourselves that we are set to be the servants of all nations, as we have been in the past, and shall be in the future. This is what Britain has been doing throughout her history. Giving ourselves, and always being taken advantage of, it seems, but, nevertheless, serving the world with our resources. You, who have come to realize that we share the Kingly dignity of the Kingdom of Israel, are not going to serve the less because of that, but rather the more. We find in the centre of our national life that Red Cross of sacrifice, as on our flag. The call of our Federation is to service. The challenge of our Federation is to those idlers who can never give a good account of themselves. Our aim is to send forth, with increasing zeal, the Truth of God in helping other nations.

Thirdly, the Branch as the Man. "Behold, the Man whose name is the Branch." (Zech. vi, 12.) The genealogy of Luke gives us the descent of the Man, Christ Jesus. There is grave need of a new emphasis on the manliness, the virility of our King. I do not know whether you saw "I.N.R.I." In that film, and in so many other presentations of the same kind, you have an emasculated, weak, pale Galilean, submissive and pacific to the last degree. The Christianity which follows such a leader is as pale and washed-out as its false ideal—without a voice, without conviction, pacifist, weak-kneed, and submissive to any who can bully it into quiescence. We need the champion who will re-limn for us the virility of Christ, His essential manliness, the moral indignation which could take a whip of cords to lead the attack on vested interests, on cant and humbug, on religious officialism, and on disbelief. Jesus Christ is the strength of the weak, the support of the friendless, the champion of the oppressed. "And a man shall be as an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." (Isaiah xxxii, 2.) The symbol of the first Gospel was the Crown; and the symbol of the second was the Cross; and the symbol of the third was the Rock, Christ Jesus, upon which you and I are built. So also must His Kingdom be; we who follow such a King shall be, not a company of cranks, but a company strong and unmoved by all the shocks of fortune or of opposition, putting backbone into the national life, and confidence into individual waverers.

"Oh, strengthen me, that while I stand
Firm on the Rock, and strong in Thee
I may stretch out a loving hand
To wrestlers with the troubled sea."

Who, as we, can bring comfort to the weary; who, as we, shall be wise to build upon a rock, and not upon the sand; wise to understand the man whose name is the Branch; wise to win souls into the Kingdom.

Finally, the Branch as Jehovah. "In that day shall the Branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious." (Isaiah iv, 2.) Need we stay to emphasize that this Branch of Jehovah, whom Matthew has pictured as King, Mark as Servant, Luke as the Man, is painted by John in colours which make Him indistinguishable from God Himself. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." "Have I been so long time with you and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Would it be right to say that if the Crown is the symbol of the First Gospel, and the Cross of the Second, and the Rock of the Third, the Fourth Gospel is a symbol more human, yet more Divine, more understandable by mortal minds, yet more supernal than any, in the Father God Himself? You and I believe in the essential deity, nay, in the everlasting deity of Our Lord Jesus Christ. You and I are to be as a rock that shall establish the fearful and the wavering. We shall be perfectly certain that whatever happens in the future, we are in God's hand, and no harm can come to us. Browning found comfort in singing, "God's in His Heaven, All's right with the world"—

"And behind the Dim Unknown
Standeth God within the shadow
Keeping watch upon His own."

But we have a better message even than that. "O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold, your God!" (Isaiah xl, 9.) So stands the Branch of Jehovah, Royal, Sacrificial, Unshakable, Eternal God; so, too, stands the Israel we love, of Royal lineage; sacrificial service, founded upon a rock, borne by Jehovah God upon eagles' wings. Milton, in his Areopagitica, has given us a picture of what he saw. "Methinks I see a noble and puissant nation, rousing herself, and shaking her invincible locks. Methinks I see her as an eagle renewing her mighty youth, and kindling her undazzled eyes at the full mid-day beam—while the whole noise of timorous and flocking birds, with those also that love the twilight, flutter about, amazed at what she means."

LET THE BIBLE SPEAK FOR ITSELF?

BY THE LATE REV. PREBENDARY H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE, M.A.

"SEARCH the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of Me." We all know the words; the question is, of course, whether we carry out the duties, and take the high privilege accorded to us as the Lord Jesus Christ would have us to do.

With regard to the Bible as a whole, what is it that we stand for? Surely we do not stand to have proofs given to us as to the source, origin, or purpose of the Bible; we stand absolutely before all men to say, "I know—I know Whom I have believed, and what I have believed, and I know experimentally that that Book cannot possibly have been formed by men, however clever or learned or thoughtful they may have been, by any power that they possessed in themselves." That is the first line we should adopt in dealing with the teaching of the present day, whether the direct blasphemous teaching of the atheist and sceptic, or that of the higher critic within the Church. The Bible speaks for itself, and a humble student of Scripture, from Genesis to Revelation, if he is faithful to his study, and honest in his own convictions and desires, is driven, I think at last, to the conclusion, as so many of the most learned philosophers and scientists of later days have been driven, that the Book shows him a God Whom he could not otherwise have known, and proves that it comes direct from Him and must be accepted as the Divine revelation.

Have you contemplated the Book as a whole and learned what kind of a picture it is you may take from the succession of books as they follow each other, sixty-six in number—thirty-nine in the Old Testament and twenty-seven in the New? If you look at the Book as a whole in this way you will, I am sure, be driven to the conclusion that that Book could not have proceeded from any human fancy, passion, desire, hope, or intellect, and that it took something superior to man to put together such a course of teaching as that Book gives—a Book which took fifteen hundred years or more before it reached its completion, and at the same time shows perfect consistency from beginning to end. People are now criticising the details of the Book, but let us rather begin with the whole, and let me take it as a fact that you have studied the whole, and studied it again and again, and have then asked yourselves, "What conclusion may I draw from this general study?" Surely no human being could ever have thought out, and put together, such a line of teaching—a line of teaching which is absolutely consistent, which does not interrupt itself at any point, but goes on from, and to, exactly what one instinctively feels to be necessary.

Let us begin at the beginning: There is a God; then He is sure to reveal Himself. What would He necessarily make known? The origin of the human being, the purpose for which he was created, the intentions of the Divine Originator, and the methods by which He would guide the creature of His making into a better, and, if possible, an everlasting enjoyment of Himself. Is that not what we find in the Bible? It begins at first with the act of creation; and the commending words after each act are, as you know, "Very good"; "and God saw that it was good." Then having made known why and how creation exists, the Creator proceeds to tell us how He formed man as an intelligent being who could apprehend Him. Then He shows us the fall of man and his turning away from the Divine. All is wrapped up in the one idea that man was intended to "enjoy God," as the Scotch catechism puts it, but he falls away from the Deity because he listens to another who advocates the idea that man can elevate himself to a position of equality with the Deity Who created him. It seems an essential method of temptation. It is just as we would expect, that we are told exactly how the failure on man's part came, and the whole thing stands to reason as so perfectly natural that we cannot conceive anything invented by any creature equalling the realities put before us.

From that time forward you see necessarily the proving of the creature under different circumstances. What will the creature, now weakened by the fall and turning to another instead of to God, do under the different circumstances that can arise? And we come to this conclusion: that the human has been tested in every possible way; everything we can imagine is brought before us step by step as a method of testing the creature to see whether he can be induced by these means to turn back to the Deity. Step by step we are taken through promises, law, history, and prophecy, and all of them are seen to fail, more or less; but stage by stage we run right through the Book, and we see how the story is carried on in a manner beyond anything that the most clever and thoughtful and earnest man could invent or conceive. At length we have a pause. Why that pause of three or four hundred years takes place we none of us know. And after that we have a new method altogether, in the New Testament. There we are shown the birth of an Infant, Who is revealed as God manifest in the flesh, and who exactly carries out all that we could wish, or conceive, or aspire to, a story infinitely more beautiful than man could have made by any wit or cleverness of his own, the revelation of the Divine in the human. Then the offering of salvation through Him is made universal, if only men will fulfil their high calling and duty. In all this I think we must recognize a scheme so wonderful as to be beyond the imagination of man or the possibility of invention —a scheme so carried out stage by stage as to produce the impressions that it is perfect in conception and intention.

Now, there is more in that Book to my mind than a great many people say they see. And I would only mention two or three things that have come to me in the later years of my life as proofs of its Divine origin—quite small and incidental, but most definite—things which could not have found place without Divine revelation. I will mention two of them. First of all, in the New Testament, the manner of speaking of the Lord Jesus Christ. We have perhaps failed to see the remarkable distinction that in one passage there will be one formation of the name of Jesus Christ, and in another passage very close to the first, a different formation. I ask you to account for that fact. Take such an instance as the first verse in the Epistle to the Philippians: "Paul and Timotheus, servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus. . . ." There the two forms are brought close together in two lines—"Jesus Christ" and "Christ Jesus." It suddenly struck me one day to enquire what can be the meaning of the transfer from one form to another, and that within two lines of a single verse, a single utterance of the breath? I began to search right through and to try to discover the meaning of it: why Paul, and not only Paul but the other writers also, will say "Jesus Christ" in one light of the name and "Christ Jesus" in another. My humble conclusion—and of this I feel quite certain—is this: that the writer says, or rather, the Holy Ghost says, "Jesus Christ" in every single passage when the thought is of the human going out towards the Divine, and that the other form "Christ Jesus," is used when the movement is from the Divine to the human.

Always we have that order at every point in the New Testament. May we not challenge those clever, learned, and thoughtful men in their own line who resist revelation and ask them "Could you ever have thought of that? Would you ever have done it yourselves in writings of your own?" But this transfer is made by the Apostles everywhere. It must have a solemn purpose; and I take it with all humility that that solemn purpose is exhibited in what I have just indicated. When Paul says, "The servant of Jesus Christ," he puts the human first and rises towards the Divine; but when He says, "The saints in Christ Jesus," he indicates the Divine origin of the saintship, how it comes from God to man, and brings the blessing of salvation to them that take it. So at least I have a reason, and I think a sufficient reason, for the change that is unceasingly made Is it possible that can be an invention of the human mind? Are we not driven to the conclusion that there is something superior to the ordinary way of the thought of man in such a usage as this?

Then take another instance. All the way through the New Testament, whenever the Holy Ghost is mentioned, invariably the article will precede the words, in the Greek, the Spirit, or the Holy Spirit, to Pneuma, when the writer is speaking of the Person as He comes from glory; but when he is speaking of the effect, the word "Spirit" is used without the article. Now, we are dealing here with from ten to thirteen writers. Imagine any such number of authors conforming to such a rule of grammar or thought without knowledge, purpose or concert. It is impossible for human beings of themselves to have done it in the three hundred and eighty-five cases in which the Holy Spirit is mentioned in the New Testament. In all these hundreds of cases there is never a single variation from this striking rule, that if the purpose of the writer is to mention the Person he introduces the article to Pneuma, and if he wishes to mention the effect or the experience of a man the article is omitted. This holds true even with regard to the experience of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. He was "filled with Spirit." The one sense is objective, as we should say, and the other is subjective. That never fails in a single instance from the beginning to the end of the New Testament. I challenge the most learned man among the critics to carry out such a rule as that, and to engage several authors writing independently to do it with him, so that the rule shall prevail throughout so many books and portions.

We may go a step further in taking this Book as a whole. It is a Book which took hundreds of years to frame, and had a multiplicity of authors; and yet there is never once a contradiction in its pages, never once an opposition of theory or principle, but always it proceeds on the same lines, always with the same object manifest to the thoughtful reader. The matter of the Book never once even appears to an earnest student to contradict itself as between one part of the volume and another. It is consistent throughout, and so consistent as to astound the honest reader and make him ask how it is that this agreement has come about. In view of the number of authors involved and the time involved in the formation of the Book, it becomes impossible to allow the theory that it was invented by man, and made by intellects as weak as ours are.

Now, a step further. This Book must be taken not from the human point of view of argument, but as a thing that stands to prove itself. I mean that it is not on a basis of ordinary argument that such a revelation can be properly tested. But does it meet every point of reason when required? Does it consistently show itself as written by one Divine Author, and does it so testify to what men require as to commend itself to the heart and mind of every honest and thoughtful student? We may safely affirm that whatever the intelligent higher critic, as he calls himself, or the more thoughtful scientist, has to say, the Book lends itself by proof with enjoyment and blessing only to those who study it closely and humbly. It is not by argument that man is brought to know and realize the Divine. And the Divine as revealed to us here is unquestionably very much beyond the sphere of man's mere mental existence or powers. To have taken fifteen hundred years to produce and yet be perfectly steady and consistent in its presentation of its theme and reasonable, in the highest degree of the word "reason," is a fact of profound and far-reaching significance.

I come back to the words I took at the beginning: "Search the Scriptures." Dig down to the bottom. "For in them ye think"—and think rightly, he says—"that ye have eternal life." I suppose that the most godless critic or scientist would allow that Jesus Christ was a very beautiful character, and being that—if we may say so with reverence—He was not mistaken in His thought and teaching. The One Who could say such wonderful things as He says must be regarded as superior to any ordinary being called man; and when He says "Search"—get to the bottom of—"the Scriptures," it is implied that they are writings of no ordinary character. Nobody can have doubted what the so-called Peasant of Galilee meant when He spoke of the Scriptures. The Jews had one body of writings entitled "The Scriptures"—the writings we have in the thirty-nine books of the Old Testament. Jesus says of these, "Search the Scriptures." Dig deep into them. And at the bottom you shall find they speak to you of eternal life, and that life is come from God. Go back to the ultimate idea presented to you by the thirty-nine books of the Old Testament, and you see at first simply history, or, as the critic says to-day, stories made up to appear as history. Take that as the first phase, and as you get deeper you will find that there is one consistent revelation. From the first chapter of Genesis, from the very words, "In the beginning," we find the presentation of one consistent reality—the presentation of a Person, either there at the moment, as God, or about to appear in the days to come. Step by step the whole coming is revealed, and I do not think for a moment we need to admit the idea which men are putting forward that the Old Testament is in part an invention, made up by man in later days. We know enough of the Book to be sure that the very last pages of it stand back hundreds of years before the coming of Jesus. We have these many writers of thirty-nine books consistently bringing before us a coming phase of humanity and of world-history that was totally contrary to experience of mankind as they knew it, that was unexpected altogether so far as nature was concerned: and yet that very set of circumstances which they traced out did in fact come to pass, step by step, even as they foreshadowed it. And when this is the case, are you not driven to the conclusion that they must either have been able to see things beforehand by a miraculous action in their own being, or must have had it revealed to them by God? And so we come to the conclusion that it could not have been invented, that it is utterly false and foolish to talk of it as made up of traditions, or, of something added after the events by man. Nobody can honestly reach that view by a close, humble study of the writings themselves. And so we are driven to this conclusion: that it took "the only wise God"—the God Whom we worship—unseen, omnipotent, and omniscient, to bring into being and to bring together the items that make up the Holy Scriptures, and teach us the way of life.

We may thank God that many of the most powerful and thoughtful sceptics have been convinced against their own inclinations, tastes, and preconceived ideas, and against their own habits of study, that the Bible is a Divine revelation. It comes to this: no man or woman has given himself or herself to an honest, deep, faithful, or prolonged study of the Book as it is—letting it speak for itself from the beginning to the end—without having reached this conclusion: that it cannot be merely human, that it transcends all the experience and unaided thought of man, and that it opens out to the searching mind an assurance of everlasting bliss for them that take the Divine gift as revealed to them in it.

My God, it is Thine! I have stood before that Book, and I have asked myself: How would you sum up the whole of the Old Testament? Psalm xlvi, 10, supplies the answer: "Be still, and know that I am God." And the New Testament—how would you sum up that? The answer is in Philippians i, 21: "To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." And the two put together reveal to me all that I want, all that I can take, and all that speaks to me of certainty and assurance and hope. The Old Testament tells me to be still and know the righteousness, the holiness, the judgment, the power of the Deity, and I see God! God! God! Then I turn to the New Testament, and when the Lord asks me what I want I reply, "What I want, Lord, is life and hope for the future." And He says to me: "To live is Christ." And the Person is revealed, the Deity coming down to humanity. For me to live is Christ. That is life. And to die means going straight to Him, to be "for ever with the Lord."

"Amen, so let it be;
Life from the dead is in that word,
'Tis immortality:
Here in the body pent,
Absent from Him I roam,
Yet nightly pitch my moving tent
A day's march nearer home."

I am not afraid when I take Him. He is "All, and in all," as St. Paul says in Col. iii, 11 (which is another text which sums up the New Testament). "Christ is all, and in all." The Gospel brings the fulness of the blessing of Christ to every one who really takes Christ as his LIFE.

So we just say, "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift!" And when the critic scoffs and taunts we can confidently counsel him to "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" the inspired writings. Let the Bible speak for itself, from book to book, right through from Genesis to Revelation. Those who do that will soon come to the conclusion, which, God knows, has been pressed in upon me more deeply year by year, that man could never have invented the Book at all, but that from Genesis i to Revelation xxii, if I can get at the original, I shall find that every single word is inspired of God.

I have been brought to this: I am not afraid now of the term "verbal inspiration"; but taking the original—getting at the Hebrew and the Greek as originally given to the several writers—I am humbly convinced, and affirm with certainty, that every single word emanates from God, and is God's revelation to man, that men may become partakers of the life of God, receiving the gift of Eternal life in Jesus Christ Our Lord.—By courtesy of the Secretary, Bible Crusade.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

By the Rev. G. H. Lancaster, M.A.

QUESTION.—Will you please tell me if anything of importance happened on May 29th last, according to the alleged predictions regarding that date? I cannot trace any incident of importance, and I should be glad to know your opinion on the subject.

ANON.

ANSWER.—I have received a large number of enquiries similar to the above question, and many of them I have answered personally. I will submit the following answer here.

While I have studied prophetic chronology very carefully for many years past, it was not I who suggested that anything definite would happen on May 29th, 1928. Whether rightly or wrongly the Press took the matter up, sometimes with humour, and sometimes with caustic sarcasm, which led to a great many alarmist ideas in certain directions. Witness, for example, the unfounded rumour that Weymouth was going to be destroyed by a tidal wave! Dame Rumour is a funny lady, and her "wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth." Nothing happened on May 29th of a spectacular nature, but, assuming that there was reason for the prediction of that date, it is too early days yet to state definitely that the prediction was wrong, for great events spring from small or almost invisible causes, and sometimes years may pass before the cause of any given effect may have been noted. Who would think that a little rivulet pouring out from a mighty glacier, for example, would evolve into a mighty river? Yet the world's greatest rivers (cf. the Danube, Rhone, Rhine, Nile, Amazon, etc.) spring from glaciers and ice-fields high up in the mountains.

Again, thinking backwards just over fourteen years ago, who would have thought that the murder of the Archduke Ferdinand at Serajevo on June 28th, 1914, would bring about the greatest war in human history? Murders are common things, alas! while "uneasy is the head that wears a crown." Yet that one shot, just that one murder, was the incidental cause which fanned the spark of war into a mighty flame.

Yet, I am not perfectly certain that something did not take place on May 29th. For the placards of the evening Press had in bold type "Italy's ultimatum to Jugo-Slavia" on that day. For a long time past there has been great tension on both sides of the Adriatic Sea, nor have things settled down yet. Perhaps in days to come this date may arise in connection with the international Adriatic or Near Eastern tension that may recall or point to movements in certain political circles which may now be apparently slumbering or quiescent. Who knows?

On the other hand, since the end of May this year we have had most wonderful weather in Britain. Possibly this is a sign of God's blessing upon Parliament for finally rejecting the proposed Prayer Book, which sought to change the doctrine of the Church of England. Further, and as I explained somewhat fully in THE NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER of March 10th, 1928, this year is a year of maximum sun-spots, which seem to harmonize with prophetic movements. There is no limit to the way in which God works, for as Cowper says:—

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

And better still:—

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain."

If only the scales of blind unbelief might fall from people's eyes, how wonderful would God's purposes through Israel redeemed appear to be, and how marvellous the fulfilments of prophecy!

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER.

DEAR SIR,—If, as Mr. Davidson has outlined, the four grooves with chiselled edge indicates the withdrawal of the Spiritual Forces as foretold in 2 Thess. ii, 7: "Only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way," then it would seem to me in the light of the following Scripture there might not be any visible manifestation of the beginning of the Tribulation period:

Luke xxi, 34–36: "And take heed to yourselves," etc.

"For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth," etc.

Jesus was talking here to believers, not to the worldly-minded, and was warning them as also in Luke xii, 45: "But and if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming," etc., "the lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware," etc., as well also noted in other Scripture.

Now in this connection take Ezek xxviii, 12, with reference to Satan: "Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty." The subtlety of Satan is often spoken of, and this, coupled with his being "full of wisdom," would preclude, it seems to me, any outstanding visible manifestation of the works of darkness, for that would be too self-evident and destroy in a large measure his efforts to seduce the world; for "multitudes in the valley of decision" would otherwise be converted. This is certainly the time of the "valley of decision," and we are told that "the Day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision."

The Tribulation has some years to run, and if there were a visible manifestation of great moment, "that day" would not come on all the world as a "snare."

So the fact that there is no outstanding manifestation of the beginning of the Tribulation on May 29th, 1928, does not, to my mind, preclude or hold for naught the fact that the Tribulation period actually begins on that day, according to the Pyramid, all in the light of the above and other Scripture.

Yours very truly,

D. G. WHITE.

DEAR SIR,—The First Low Passage of the Great Pyramid (representing the Great War period, August 4th–5th, 1914, to November 10th–11th, 1918) is in limestone and signified a period of chaotic conditions of a physical nature. The Second Low Passage (May 29th–30th, 1928, to September 15th-16th, 1936) is in granite and signifies a Tribulation of a different nature (apparently spiritual), with burdensome conditions due to chaotic factors emerging and continuing over a prolonged period. It is essential, therefore, for the development and significance of the Pyramid's Message to be appreciated, to watch the progressive penetration of the (spiritual) forces of chaos into man's environment as manifested in the gradual unfolding of events at home and abroad from May 29th onwards. Since that date, events have already occurred and are occurring which are causing concern to serious-minded people. It should be remembered that Isaiah defines the final stage of travail as "the earth languishing and fading away" and being "moved exceedingly" before the regeneration. Before this goal is reached many will look back with understanding to) the sequence of now apparently unrelated events in physical phenomena, trade, commerce, finance, economics and international relations, and will then realize the Truth of the Pyramid's Message.

D. DAVIDSON.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

We are now within a month of the opening of our Ninth Annual British-Israel Congress, and those of us who are busily engaged in organisation and publicity will find the days speed past all too quickly. We are glad to say that there is a continuous demand for tickets, and we urge that all who wish for reserved seats should lose no time in sending in their applications, thus helping us to avoid congestion in the last week of September.

* * *

It should be remembered that in order to secure the cheap railway fares we have had to guarantee a certain number of travellers; it is therefore necessary that we should have the support of our readers by way of applications for vouchers in large numbers—many we are pleased to say have already applied. Particulars were carefully given in our last issue.

* * *

A happy time was spent by a large number of members and friends under ideal weather conditions at Kew Gardens on August 25th, followed by tea and a public meeting in Christ Church Hall, Kew Road. The tea was kindly arranged by the Honorary Secretary, Miss Gyllencreutz, and members of the Richmond Branch, aided by members of the Kingston Branch, and they were kept very busy. The hall was filled for the evening meeting. The Rev. Kenneth Dodds, the Vicar, presided. In the unavoidable absence of the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, addresses were given by Messrs. Daniel Farmer, Nicholson, and Wakeford. An organ recital was kindly given in the Church by the organist, Mr. L. D. Ashworth, and sacred musical items were rendered by a lady member of the choir and by the Vicar and Mr. Lynam Knight. On the motion of Mr. Wakeford, seconded by Miss Alexander, a vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to the Vicar for kindly lending the hall, and to all the helpers.

The Hon. Secretary of the Hounslow and District Branch, writes:—

"It is with extreme regret we learn of the Rev. Joseph Gay's transfer to South Wales. Our branch was formed in January last, and has met with remarkable success. This is in no small degree due to Mr. Gay's untiring efforts to help us in every way. He visited us on every possible occasion, giving of his best at each meeting, thereby becoming very popular in the district, and drawing large crowds to every public lecture.

"He will be a great loss to us, but we are sure that he will be just as popular in South Wales, helping the Cause in his usual way, and bringing many believers to the REAL TRUTH."

The Crouch Hill British Israel Study Circle will commence its autumn session (D.V.) on Thursday, September 6th, at 8 p.m., in the Jubilee Hall, Hanley Road, Crouch Hill, and will continue throughout the autumn and winter on the first Thursday in each month.

* * *

The Leicester Branch, on August 14th, enjoyed a fine lecture "The Development of Joseph's Birthright in Modern Times," given by Mr. H. Phipps. The chair was taken by Mr. A. E. Biggs.

* * *

A splendid meeting was held by our open-air speakers in Victoria Park on Sunday evening, August 19th, many Jews in the audience showing a very keen interest in our facts of history. Several expressed a wish for further meetings.

* * *

The open air meetings to be held in Hyde Park on Sunday, September 2nd, at 3.30 and 7.30, are the last arranged for a time, and it is hoped that a large number of friends will be there to support the speakers.

* * *

An inspiring lecture was given by Rev. Guy Waddington at Harrogate on August 13th, when numerous questions were asked. This branch is extremely optimistic for the coming winter session.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—IX.

JEREMIAH—continued.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, F.R.G.S.

In the last issue we presented an historic outline of the book of Jeremiah and shewed how it formed an integral part of Israel history and of world history.

In this issue we shall devote the space to what, for a better word, we shall term "the doctrinal elements of the book." We wish to guard the reader from immediately relating this to articles of abstract faith and to urge him on the contrary to view it as it is presented in the Bible as basic elements of national righteousness.

As a matter of fact Israel and Judah had broken away from the Jehovah administration of the Divine law—that is to say, the "common law" in Israel.

The prophet opens his address by a general call to the "House of Jacob and all the families of the House of Israel."

This general address is to be found in the second chapter, verses 1-8. From this point onwards the prophet deals with Israel as contrasted with Judah. It is a terrible indictment, presenting a picture of utter pollution and of separation from God.

These passages, including the 2nd, 3rd and 4th chapters of Jeremiah, should be read as a part of this article.

In order that it may be seen that we are justified in saying that this word is addressed to Israel as distinct from Judah, the separation having existed in Jeremiah's time for upwards of four centuries, we quote as follows:—

> "And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord. And the Lord said unto me, The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah."

Thus the two kingdoms are set over against each other and compared.

Now the prophet, carrying on his ministry in Jerusalem, is instructed "Go and proclaim these words toward the north . . ." Four centuries before had this instruction been given, our minds would have rested in the land of Israel; but over a century before this instruction was given, Israel had been moved farther north still, to the head waters of the Euphrates. So with quite logical, geographical indication of the resting-place of Israel in captivity, the prophet Jeremiah is instructed "Go and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord; and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever. Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord."

"Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you: And I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:"

Digitized by Google

"And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding."

These words are quoted from the 3rd chapter, verses 10-15.

We now come to a predictive verse which should be written in letters of gold; it is the 18th verse of the 3rd chapter, a part of the same address:—

"In those days the house of Judah shall walk with (to) the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers."

He closes this address to Israel in the following words:—

"If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lord, return unto me: And if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remove."

"And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; and the nations shall bless themselves in Him, and in Him shall they glory."

Now the prophet proceeds to address the men of Judah and of Jerusalem. This passage should be read from Jer. IV, commencing with the 3rd verse. It also carries a terrible denunciation, and declares that national destruction is imminent upon Judah and Jerusalem. The first verse of the 5th chapter carries this marvellous challenge:—

"Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it."

That is to say, the iniquity of Jerusalem should be pardoned if one man, wholly given to righteousness and truth, could be found therein.

The chapter concludes with another remarkable statement: this is it:—

"A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land;
The prophets prophesy falsely,
And the priests bear rule by their means:
And my people love to have it so:
And what will ye do in the end thereof?"

There are two sets of prophets to-day which have the ear of the people, and the priests are bearing rule by their means.

1. The Romanizing prophets, who substitute the voice of the church for "The word of God written," which is the Bible, and

2. The extra Biblical modernist class, who substitute the voice of "scholarship" instead of the Word of God written, which is the Bible. And I think all will agree that the priests rule by their means, and the people love to have it so.

Well may the Lord ask the question: "And what will ye do in the end thereof?" The manifest end in this case being the removal of the Bible, the Word of God.

The 6th chapter opens with a specific call to the children of Benjamin. It will be remembered that at the beginning of the separation of the tribes of Israel into two kingdoms, the one kingdom consisted of the tribe of Judah, over which alone David ruled for seven and a half years; and the other kingdom consisted of eleven tribes under the rule of Saul of Benjamin.

When the kingdom was re-divided under Rehoboam and Jeroboam, Benjamin was lent to Judah; now the loan is to be recalled.

This is the call to Benjamin: "O, ye children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire in Beth-Haccerem: for evil appeareth out of the north, and great destruction."

It is agreed that this call had reference to the final destruction of the Roman army under Titus, at which time, remembering this prophecy, the Benjaminites withdrew from Jerusalem and finally separated themselves from the Jews.

Let us remember that the march of Nebuchadnezzar against Jerusalem was imminent. Yet, as a last appeal, the Lord addressed such messages as are to be found in Jeremiah VII, which gives the promise that upon repentance and the restoration of the Divine administration; "Then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, for ever and ever."

There was no safety for Judah in military opposition to Nebuchadnezzar, but there was safety and protection in a return to the Lord. Let Britain learn this lesson by the experience of Judah rather than by bitter experience of her own.

Judah selected her pathway. The king of the House of David would have, in all probability, yielded to the pleadings of Jeremiah; but the vivid living picture of the great national drama, presented to us by Jeremiah, indicates that the stiff-necked princes of Judah forced his hand, and prevented his obeying the voice of the Lord through the prophet.

Let it be clearly borne in mind that as a driver of a four-horse team carefully separates the reins in his hands, so does Jeremiah the prophet carefully separate Judah from Israel and recognize Benjamin as distinct from Judah.

We now come to the 31st chapter of Jeremiah, and in that 31st chapter to the new covenant recorded verbatim therein.

It is a covenant made with the House of Israel, separate from the House of Judah.

Let us visualise the conditions.

Israel had gone into captivity more than a century before, and at that time were dwelling on the upper waters of the Euphrates.

Judah was now in process of being uprooted, and carried away captive under the hand of Nebuchadnezzar.

The House of David was also in process of being "overturned" from Jerusalem. It is at this time that the new covenant is recorded which shall later go into effect in Israel as soon as the former covenant has expired.

Reaching up towards the proclamation of the new covenant we have the promise "At the same time, saith the Lord, will I be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people. Thus saith the Lord, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest."

This is evidently a reference to the terrific conflict between Israel and the Assyrian power. Those who escaped from the sword of that conflict found grace in the wilderness to which they were deported. The striking statement is "I went to cause him to rest."

The prophet goes on: "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: Therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee .... For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the Mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God. For thus saith the Lord: sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: Publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel .... Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock. For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he. Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord ...."

Digitized by Google

It will be necessary to read all these beautiful chapters, xxxi, xxxii and xxxiii to get the scope of this wonderful message to Israel dealing with the latter days.

The new covenant itself made with the House of Israel is contained in Jeremiah xxxi, verses 31-40. It consists of a preamble and three clauses. Clause 1, verses 33 and 34. Covenant for the restoration of the Divine law in Israel, and of the reunion of Israel with God. Clause 2, covenant; that while sun, moon and stars continue in their courses, the seed of Israel shall continue to be a nation before Him for ever. Clause 3 provides for the re-building of the city of Jerusalem for the Name of Jehovah under the new covenant.

We come now to the consideration of Judah, and we find a covenant made with them as included with Israel in, for instance, the following quotation, the context of which should also be read. Jer. xxxiii, verses 7-9.

> And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first.
> And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.
> And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it.

And now we come to God's dealing with the House of David, which at that time was being uprooted from Jerusalem. We must quote at least the following verses:—

> For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel;
>
> Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifice continually.
>
> And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying.
>
> Thus saith the Lord; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season;
>
> Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers.
>
> As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured: so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me.
>
> Moreover, the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying,
>
> Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them.
>
> Thus saith the Lord; If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth:
> Then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them.

Thus was the rule of the House of David solemnly transferred from the House of Judah to the House of Israel.

One passage to which we must refer before we leave the consideration of the prophecies of Jeremiah, namely, chapters l and li.

In this remarkable passage it will be found that two great kingdoms are presented as marching across the stage of history contemporaneously and as waging an endless conflict the one against the other. The one of these is "Babylon," and evidently includes all of Babylon that Daniel saw, and presented so graphically in the 2nd chapter of Daniel; and that St. John saw and presented, also so graphically in the Apocalypse—the book of Revelation.

The other is Israel, at the time of writing a captive nation in Babylonia, soon to be freed by Cyrus, to march through the ages distinct from, and antagonistic to, the Babylonian system, to join forces finally with Israel in the isles, and there, as the kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the British Empire plus the United States of America, who finally, upon the waters of the sea, from the Persian Gulf to the North Atlantic, and upon land from the North Sea to the Persian Gulf, should utterly break the whole Babylonian system, and visit it with utter destruction.

These two chapters form a complete book incorporated in the book of Jeremiah.

Thus the far-flung vision of the prophet follows Israel and Judah down to the end of the 2,520 years' sentence imposed under the first covenant, and its introduction into the final glories of the kingdom of God at this our date, developing under the freedom and glories of the new covenant made with the House of Israel and of the renewed covenant made with the House of David.

Thus the prophet Jeremiah makes his contribution to the great prophetic story which other prophets in the Old Testament and the New take up and carry forward to the triumphant end.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

By Rev. Commander L. G. A. ROBERTS, R.N.

We must distinguish between the parables of St. Matthew, which speak of "the Kingdom of heaven," and St. Mark and St. Luke, which speak of "the Kingdom of God." It may be that our Lord's words are intended to convey more in them than we have been in the habit of thinking.

If we might suggest, we see in the expression the Kingdom of God a more perfect condition than that of the Kingdom of heaven. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God." Those who are in the Kingdom of heaven are in a material condition, and are subject yet to be cast away like those in the draw net or the tares. Those in the Kingdom of God must go on to perfection. "The Kingdom of God is righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

Digitized by Google

St. John says, "Except a man be born again (i.e., from above) he cannot see the Kingdom of God." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit [or spiritual water (regeneration)] he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." But we believe the Kingdom of heaven is a preparation for the Kingdom of God, as, at the end of the world (Matt, xiii, 41), "The son of Man shall send forth His angels and shall gather out of His Kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." . . . "Then shall the righteous shine in the Kingdom of their Father."

It is true St. Matthew tells the Jew, "the Kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." (Matt. xxi, 43.)

The Kingdom of heaven may be looked upon as an earthly sphere, or shall we say it is "the Kingdom set up by the God of heaven." (Dan. ii, 44.) It must therefore be the Kingdom of Israel, whereupon the throne of David is established. But this is not necessarily the Kingdom of God, for this Kingdom of God is universal, and all who receive the Lord Jesus Christ and are born not of blood nor of the will of the flesh merely, but of God, to them He gives power to become the Sons of God.

When our Lord bids us to seek first the Kingdom of God, He bids us to come to Him as our King, and if He rules in our hearts then are we in the Kingdom of God.

The formation of the Kingdom of heaven was first signified in Exod. xix, 6. Speaking to Israel through Moses, "Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation; if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine." The constitution of this Kingdom is seen in Exod. xii, 41, 42, to be composed of the stranger also, who is willing to keep the Passover and God's covenant, and he is to be admitted into the family of Israel as one born in the house. We also see from Exod. xvii, 14-16, that because Amalek had his hand upon the throne of the Lord, the Lord will utterly destroy Amalek.

This Kingdom of Israel was in abeyance for very many years, until Daniel was chosen of God to reign over Israel, and then it is said of Solomon: "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father; and prospered." (1 Chron. xxix, 23; xxviii, 5; 2 Chron. ix, 8.) This earthly throne was transferred into Britain when Zedekiah was taken captive to Babylon and his sons slain before his eyes. The method of its transplanting is told us (Ezek. xvii, 22, 23, 24; xxi, 26, 27.)

And yet at this very time Jeremiah xvii, 12 had said: "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary. O Lord, the Hope of Israel, all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth." Where then did Jeremiah go?

Jer. xv, 11: "The Lord said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant; verily I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well in the time of evil and in the time of affliction." So Nebuzaradan was kind to Jeremiah and the King's daughters, and Baruch and Eben-melek. This remnant clinging to God's Word was preserved in Egypt, and returning with Jeremiah to Palestine, they then escaped into the north and the west, into the mountain of the height of Israel.

Here the young Kingdom grew, "set up by the God of heaven" (Dan. ii, 44). Jeremiah is then given an assurance, "Shall iron break the northern iron and steel"? In the "Book of Invasions" (early copy) and other ancient documents, it is stated "that it was the Mosaic law which first came into Erinn, brought by Cae Cain Breathach, who was himself an Israelite." Jeremiah must have restored the Mosaic law. So we are led to understand by Irish tradition. When our Blessed Lord came He preached the Kingdom of God, but the Jews refused Him. And yet He told them, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and His righteousness." And what did He mean when at the transfiguration He told His disciples, "Verily, I say unto you, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in His Kingdom." (Matt. xvi, 28.) Or, "I say unto you that there be some of them that stand here which shall not taste of death till they have seen the Kingdom of God come with power." (Mark ix, 1.) Or, "But I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Kingdom of God." (Luke ix, 27.)

I think we may infer that some of the Apostles would see before their death the Kingdom of God given to Britain, never to be taken away. Or, what is the meaning of "Come with power"? It certainly came into these islands before St. Paul or St. Peter died, and long before the death of St. John, and it has never been taken away from Britain. The growth of this Kingdom here, compared to any other country, has been the act of God. It may not be known to some of you that the Laws of God's Kingdom were set up in these islands under Mulmutius about 500-400 B.C., not for the first time, but reconstructed, as afterwards also Alfred the Great did the same. We have but to compare these with the Bible and we see whence their principles were derived.

I have purposely omitted the prophecy of the coming Kingdom of God, as told us in Isa. ix, 1-8, because here we have more than the merely temporal aspect of the Kingdom. It is expressly here stated to have come to the Northern Kingdom. The Southern Kingdom had already had its trial, and Israel had justified itself more than treacherous Judah. We find in Isa. vii, how that KING AHAZ (2 Chron. xxviii, 22) "in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the Lord . . . for he sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus which smote him; and he said, Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that they may help me. But they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel." We have in Isa. vii how Isaiah did his best to bring Ahaz to his senses, but he turned with scorn against him and said, "I will not tempt the Lord." Or, I will not make trial of the Lord. It was then that the virgin-birth of the Lord Jesus was announced to him, but he scorned it. Then (in Ch. ix) the fuller revelation is made which transfers the promise of the Messiah to Galilee of the Nations, to the people who had just been afflicted in the land of Zebulun and in the land of Naphtali, that dwelt in Galilee of the Nations, upon them would this glorious Light shine! After giving the nature of the conflict as one of enthusiasm, a "burning and fuel of fire," the prophet announces to these northern regions of Palestine, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of His Government and Peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his Kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this. The Lord sent a word into Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel, and all the people shall know, even Ephraim and the inhabitant of Samaria." Since you Ahaz refuse your God, lo! we must turn to Ephraim and they will hear!

So it is that the Lord Jesus, despised of the Jew, selected His ten servants to occupy in His Kingdom, till He come (Luke xix, 11-13.)

The Gospels now set forth both the Kingdom of heaven and also the Kingdom of God. In the Kingdom of heaven we have the visible in which there may be tares or bad fish, so Matthew presents it thus as a visible Kingdom, but "the Kingdom of God cometh not by observation," it is the inner man of the heart which accepting Jesus Christ as King is not necessarily merely material but also spiritual. (Rev. xiv, 17.)

This Kingdom of God, therefore, at present is unknown, but the Lord knoweth who are His, when He comes He will sever "between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not." (Mal. iii, 18.)

In the meantime, the Kingdom of God is within us, "in our midst," and it depends very much upon whether we are willing to do His Will whether we are to see this Kingdom of God or to enter into it. If we are satisfied with a mere outward religion, such as any man or woman who enters a Christian community may obtain, i.e., if we have not the desire to serve God, to obtain the Holy Spirit as our Teacher and to follow Him in His Word, we may belong to the Kingdom of heaven, but we are certainly not in the Kingdom of God. The test is righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. And unless we have this Spirit of Christ, we are none of His. The Spirit, however, beareth witness with our Spirits that we are the children of God. (Rom. viii, 14-16.)

Now, let us continue the promise, "the Kingdom of God shall be taken from you (Jews) and given to a nation bringing forth the fruit thereof."

It is true that the earliest messengers of the Gospel came to Britain in the person of Joseph of Arimathea within a very few years of the Resurrection. That within a very short time there were very many in these islands, as Dr. Pryce (late Vicar of Bangor), in the Prize Essay on "The Ancient British Church," says: "In the scattering abroad of the disciples in the persecution which arose upon the death of S. Stephen, Joseph, with Lazarus, Martha and Mary . . . set sail from Judah, trusting themselves to the mercy of the sea. Providentially, carried to Southern Gaul, they are received by the Apostle S. Philip, who was already there, christianising the country. From thence the Apostle sends S. Joseph with twelve companions to convey the Word of Life to Britain." Cardinal Baronius gives this story stating it as taking place in the year A.D. 35. Gildas, the British historian, tells us Christianity came here at the end of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, i.e., A.D. 37, for then Caligula succeeded him. Dr. Lingard, a Roman Catholic writer, says that Pomponia Grecina, the wife of Aulus Plautius, was a British Princess, and a Christian in A.D. 43. This is confirmed by both Tacitus and Dion Cassius. We are further told that the Druid Religion was a preparation for the reception of the Gospel. Dr. Pryce: A people "was being prepared ready for the Lord," p. 26. Dr. Wylie's "History of Scotland," bears out this idea. Quaint old Bishop Fuller, in his "History of the British Church," gives us the establishment of Christianity in Britain as our National Religion during the second century. So we claim that to be the meaning of our Lord's words in Matt. xvi, 28; Mark ix, 1; Luke ix, 27. Bishop Burgess, late of Salisbury, proves that St. Paul himself came to Britain.

WHAT IS THE VITAL POINT OF CONVERSION?—IV.

By Henry D. Houghton.

THE Advent Witness, in speaking of Darwin's theories, says —"In two of his principal works he announces his conclusions in these words: 'We may fairly presume.' And in those two works he uses those words over 400 times!" And the Advent Witness goes on to say: "They are 400 guesses." AND THIS IS THE MAN WE ARE INVITED TO FOLLOW! Why, he did not know himself, he only presumed!

Now if there is any guessing to be done, we had much better do our own!

But mark the contrast with THE BOOK. We may search it from one end to the other, and we shall not find one "We may fairly presume."

On the contrary, the Book speaks of certainties.

"We know that we have passed from death unto Life." (1 John iii, 14.)

"We know that He abideth in us." (iii, 24.)

"Hereby know we that we dwell in Him, and He in us." (1 John iv, 13.)

"And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in His Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life." (1 John v, 20.)

Man essaying to teach Divine things says: "We may fairly presume"! He does not know himself, then how can he teach others?

On the contrary, notice how decided was Our Lord in all His teaching. "HE SPAKE WITH AUTHORITY, AND NOT AS THE SCRIBES." He said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you."

Christ does not say: "I think," "I presume," "I imagine," "I guess." Oh no! And men in search of Eternal Life do not want any presuming or guessing: they want certainty: and Christ alone gives it!

"HE THAT BELIEVETH ON ME HATH EVERLASTING LIFE." That is not guesswork; it is positive declaration.

"And this is the will of Him that sent Me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." (John vi, 40.)

Digitized by Google

These are not guesses, nor empty promises, for remember that all judgment is committed to Him; and, as one of the disciples said, "Thou hast the words of everlasting life."

The story of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus is very instructive, and is always regarded as a very clear and typical case. "For a tupos or pattern." See I Tim. I 16.

Now surely if the theory that has been propounded is correct then it will be confirmed in this well-known instance.

Saul, proceeding to Damascus with letters from the High Priest authorizing him to arrest all who followed the New Way, is struck down by a light from heaven, and hears a voice: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?"

Notice very particularly the form of the questions and answers, all direct to proving the Divinity, the Messiahship of Christ.

"And he (Saul) said, Who art Thou, Lord?" "And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks."

Then there comes the altered attitude of Saul. "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Thus there was a miraculous intervention on purpose to prove to Saul the Divinity of Jesus: and the acceptance of Jesus as the Son of God became the testing-point, the turning-point in the great Apostle's career, the vital point of his conversion.

The acceptance of it culminated in the obligation to preach it. And so we read: "And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that He is the Son of God!" (Acts ix, 20.) The vital point of his conversion became the chief point and purpose of his preaching.

And in verse 22 it confirms it all: "But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ."

Peter standing up at Pentecost boldly declared the condition of Salvation; and note how simple it is:—

"And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." (Acts ii, 21.)

Simply "call"! That is the Scripture.

And St. Paul in Romans not only repeats this word for word, but endorses it.

"For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." (Romans x, 13.)

And previously, in verses 8-9, he had brought the conditions of Salvation within the reach of everybody.

"The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith which we preach: That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

But where does the change of heart come in? To that we reply, "That is God's work!"

To every believer there must come the being born of God, and by God.

Birth must always come from the parent, never from the child! Of necessity it must be so! And so it is here. St. John makes it very plain. For he is as positive and decisive as he is clear.

"But as many as received Him, to them gave He power" (notice this word, it is much more than the privilege or the right; it is THE POWER) "to become THE SONS OF GOD, even to them that believe on His Name: WHICH WERE BORN, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, BUT OF GOD!"

Now let us pause a moment and ask, "But what about repentance?"

There is nothing in that word "Repentance" to hinder anyone from coming and taking hold of Christ by believing in Him straightaway without a probation period of a single hour!

Thousands of earnest souls have stumbled at that word "Repent." [METANOIA=A change of mind].

The Devil has taken that word, and, feigning himself as an angel of light, has kept thousands out of the knowledge of salvation by telling them they have not repented enough.

It is not a call to the seeker to halt and beware lest he go too fast!

It is a call to the indifferent, the despiser, the careless to hurry up; a clarion call to awaken out of sleep and call upon God.

Repented enough? No! And we never shall though we continue so to do till our dying day. God does not bargain with us for so much salvation in exchange for so much repentance. Repentance is simply a turning right round, and then proceeding in the opposite direction.

One of the best descriptions of repentance in the Scriptures is that word of the Psalmist, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto Thy testimonies." A similar one is found in that trumpet-call of God to Israel, "Turn ye, Turn ye, for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

To wicked, unrepentant, persistent sinners who have neither purpose nor desire to serve God the words ring out with startling applicability:—"Repent and be converted that your sins may be blotted out." Which means, "Arouse ye, and seek the Lord."

"God commandeth all men everywhere to repent." This is a trumpet-call to all men everywhere, for they have all gone astray.

But the moment there is any turning, even if it is only a wistful desiring look, the command is not to repent at all; that stage is passed, the command is "Believe."

When the Children of Israel in the Wilderness were bitten by the fiery serpents and the poor dying people lay on every hand, the command was not to Repent, but TO LOOK! And looking, everyone was healed.

And Christ said, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, SO."

Christ Our Lord did not say to the blind man, "Wait till you have repented enough." Oh, no! He said, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"

Philip did not thrust this between the eunuch and salvation. Oh, no! "If thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest."

Even St. Paul did not command the jailer to wait, nor even question him on these grounds; but in an instant gave the jailer the true answer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

No true seeker need tremble and hesitate lest he has not repented enough.

The command to-day is the same as that to the jailer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Repentance will be there present, and will last as long as the man shall live.

Digitized by Google

The cry of the Apostles was "Believe," and most surely no man can truly believe unless there comes also with that belief a hatred of and a turning from sin.

So far as repentance is a turning, it comes very early in the career and life of the Christian.

But so far as it is a sorrow for sin, it never, never ceases, but acquires more power and force every day that the man lives, and never dies till life is over.

The Evangelical Churches say that repentance comes before conversion. Spurgeon used to say that it comes after. In so far as it is a turning, it must come before. So far as it is a sorrow for sin, it may come before, but it certainly comes after, and that continually, and is everlasting.

I may be wrong, but I know of no case in Scripture where a true seeker after salvation was pointed to repentance, but always straight to the great Healer Himself!

Even to the persecuting Saul of Tarsus having in his pocket letters authorizing him to imprison believers, there was no interruption of his conversion by questions about his repentance! No! But Ananias said, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the Name of the Lord." —Acts xxii, 16.

While we are looking at repentance, it will not be amiss to notice that misunderstood but tremendous passage in Acts v, 31: "Him hath God exalted with His right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins."

It does not mean to give repentance to a new and spiritual Israel, to make them into and supplanters of old Israel. That would be a strange reversal of things. Any spiritual Israel must previously have repented, or they could not have become such Israel.

It is rather a prediction that Christ will give repentance to wicked, unrepentant, divorced Israel; and bring forgiveness for her sins.

There we have Christ becoming Israel's sponsor to give to the whole nation repentance and forgiveness.

That is exactly what Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel all foretold. That is what St. Paul himself boldly declares, "And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer; and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."—Rom. xi, 26.

But in all these the essential and vital thing is the acknowledging of Christ as the Son of God.

Now how does this affect the various theories and isms of to-day?

Where will the Modernists stand who deny Christ's Divinity? The Jews who reject it? And on the contrary the many sects who, though despised and misunderstood, but yet who accept this one vital elementary saving truth? What about these?

This is the one vital saving truth upon which He will build, nay, is building His Church; and this applied to the isms of to-day will make a great clearing of rubbish, and will mark out as for or against Him every section of the so-called Church, and every grade and station of all mankind.

Looking carefully into these things, we must be convinced that in the past we have restricted and minimized the free Grace of God.

It has been harnessed around, strangled with the trappings of human theories and human ideas.

THE GRACE OF GOD IS INFINITELY FREER THAN THE THEOLOGY OF ANY OF THE CHURCHES. "BUT THE WORD OF GOD IS NOT BOUND."

We have thought that it was, preached that it was, and thus it has been strangled at birth.

The only true conditions of salvation are the conditions stated in the Book.

"What shall we do that we might work the works of God?" . . . . "This is the work of God" (one work, not a hundred), "THAT YE BELIEVE ON HIM WHOM HE HATH SENT."—John vi, 28-29.

Those are Our Lord's own words, the words of Him Who knew, and could not lie!

HEAVEN AND EARTH.

BY HENRY PROCTOR, F.R.S.L., A.V.I.

IT is very necessary that British-Israel believers should be clear in regard to what is involved in the terms: "Heaven and Earth." We have had for centuries teachings about Heaven, which excluded entirely the Scriptural idea of the earth being inhabited in the "ages to come" by "the nations of them that are saved." It is clear, however, that there will be nations on the earth throughout the Millennium, for we read that Satan shall "go out to deceive the nations" (Rev. xx, 8) after the thousand years are finished.

And in Rev. xxi, 24, we read: "The nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it (the Heavenly city): and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it." But we must not lose sight of the fact that, according to the Scriptures, Heaven is a place quite distinct from the earth, or otherwise how could the Heavenly Jerusalem be seen "coming down from God out of heaven"? *

"Heaven" in this place, and in many others of Holy Writ, is referred to as a definite locality into which Our Lord Jesus ascended (Acts i, 9-11). The Apostle Paul also was "caught up to the third heaven" (2 Cor. xii, 2), and John saw it as a place in which a "door was opened" and into which he went. He saw the Throne of God and those of the twenty-four Elders, and many angels round about the Thrones (Rev. iv, 1-6), and an innumerable multitude out of every nation standing before the Throne. In the face of these facts we do not see how it is possible to assert, as many do, that there is no heaven for the saints, but that their destiny is connected entirely with this earth.

There is certainly to be a new earth as well as a new heaven, for the present heaven and earth are said to pass away, but as Alford says: "The expression does not necessarily suppose the annihilation of the old creation, but only its passing away as to its outward and recognisable form, and its renewal to a fresh and more glorious one." Peter speaks of the earth having been destroyed by the Noachic Flood, and just as the

* κατα βαινονσαν εκ τοῦ οὐρανου ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ.'

Digitized by Google

earth did not pass away but was purified then by water, so it will be hereafter purified by fire. But of annihilation there is here no trace, the Flood did not annihilate the earth, but changed it, and as the new earth was the consequence of the Flood so the final new heavens and new earth shall be of the fire †.

And the earthly kingdom is a literal kingdom; the fifth in a series of earthly monarchies. But we must banish the notion that the reign of Christ and His saints over the earth (επι της γης) necessarily implies a perpetual presence of the rulers among the ruled, or exclusion from the place which the Lord Jesus has gone to prepare for us. The glorified saints will not be confined to this earth because they reign over it, any more than George V is confined to England or India or any other of his dominions because he happens to rule over them. They will have a special home of their own, for wherever their Lord is that is where they must be in fulfilment of His prayer: "That they may be with me where I am." They will not be limited to any one of the Father's mansions, which are as numerous as the stars of heaven, but will probably be able to visit them all.

We see, therefore, that there must be a heavenly phase of the kingdom as well as an earthly, the one represented by the Heavenly Jerusalem, which, during the Millennium, is above the earth and the other by "the camp of the saints, the beloved city" which the hosts of Gog and Magog are to invade at the close of the Millennium. Nothing tends to show the destination more than this fact, for it is not possible that the Heavenly Jerusalem should be invaded by earthly armies (Rev. xx, 9).

It is not likely that the New Jerusalem will then be on the earth—a city which has no need of the sun, nor yet of the moon, for these twain will yet continue to shed light upon the earth, for Jehovah's covenant with day and night cannot be broken. The earthly phase is to continue "for ever" as well as the heavenly, for unto Israel He saith:—

"They shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever: and my servant David shall be their prince for ever" (Ezek. xxxvii, 25). "It shall be an everlasting treaty." (v. 26—F.F.).

SOME HARD SAYINGS OF JESUS.

By JOSEPH GAY.

No. 4.

"If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" (St. Matthew vi, 23.)

"The light of the body is the eye," and there is no other light. Through these two windows the soul looks out upon the world, and the world looks in upon the soul. How entirely dependent the body is upon the eye for its light! If by any means the eye should be so injured that the light could no more enter through it, then the body would be all darkness and nothing on earth could repair the damage. But here Christ suggests a darkness which is not due to blindness. He says, "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light, but if thine eye be double," not blind, "DOUBLE," "thy whole body shall be full of darkness." What does He mean? Let the physical speak to us for a moment. There are two eyes in the body, but only one vision. There are two ears in the body, but only one sound. There are also two hands and two feet. These may act separately without much confusion; but let the eyes act separately, or the ears act separately, what then? Let me see one thing with one eye, and another totally different thing with the other eye. Let me hear one sound or one voice with one ear, and another sound or voice quite different with the other ear, and what confusion would ensue. It were better that I should be utterly blind and deaf than that I should thus see and hear. Life would be unsupportable under such conditions. The darkness consequent upon such confusion would be unspeakably oppressive. The brain would give way under the pressure of it, and the whole body would speedily become a total wreck. I have never met, and I pray God I never may, anyone so afflicted; but I have seen this very thing temporarily in a man made drunk by alcohol. I have seen such a condition prolonged in what is called "delirium-tremens," and I cannot imagine a deeper or darker hell. He sees two of everything, and hears strange, conflicting sounds. You shudder to think, what if he were always like that without hope of recovery! You put him to bed with the comforting thought that he will be all right in the morning when he has slept off the effects of the alcohol which has poisoned his blood. But supposing with the morning light he still sees two of everything, and still hears strange, conflicting sounds? You could only cry in your utter helplessness, Poor wretch, thou art consigned to a doom more terrible than a thousand deaths. "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

The heart is the eye of life. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. x, 9, 10—R.V.)

If a man will only keep his heart pure, and true, and sincere he cannot lose his way, he cannot stumble as a blind man along the highway of life. We have in the heart three things at least. I shall content myself in speaking of them.

(1) Knowledge. (2) Experience. (3) Motive.

(1) KNOWLEDGE.

In the heart and through the heart we have knowledge. The Apostle Paul writes, "I know whom I have believed." (2 Tim. i, 12.) If with the heart man believeth, with the heart also he comes to know that which he believes. Some may demur and contend that it is with the mind man gets to know. Others may say that it is a question of physical science, and that it is by the use of his brain man gets to know.

Let us not confuse the issue. The brain is the instrument of knowledge, a man therefore must use his brain; the mind is the filter-bed, as it were, for through the crucible of his mind he passes the impressions which his brain registers; but the heart receives the residuum which is left after the process of separation and purification has taken place. What the heart receives therefore is knowledge indeed, knowledge which settles down into a solid conviction not to be shaken or uprooted.

St. John says of Our Lord: "There was the true light, even the light which lighteth every man coming into the world." (St. John i, 9—R.V.)

Christ is the true light. Well, where is Christ? Christ as a Person is in the heavens, which must contain, and retain, Him until the day of His return; but He is, by the glorious ministry of the Holy Ghost, "in you the hope of glory." (Col. i, 27.)

The place of Christ by His Spirit is in the heart of man. "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." (2 Cor. iv, 6.)

"IN OUR HEARTS." When once that knowledge is there, what then? You may do one of two things; you may either receive it and live by it, in which case your eye will be single and therefore full of light; or you may compromise it, and strike out in paths which are neither wholly of the world nor yet wholly of God, in which case your eye will be double and your whole being will be full of darkness. If you compromise the truth, to the degree in which you compromise it you will dwell in darkness. The light which is in you will be darkness, all the greater because it is light which you have compromised. Our Lord follows His metaphor up with direct speech which can brook no misunderstanding. "No man can serve two masters . . ." (St. Matthew vi, 24.)

(2) EXPERIENCE.

Experience is a matter of the heart. Man can only confess truly with his mouth what he believes in his heart, and the knowledge upon which such a belief is based is experimental. We sometimes forget that our holy religion is not a philosophy, nor a theology, nor a formulated creed, it is not even a church; it is a profound experience from beginning to end.

"And hereby we do know that we know Him, if we keep His commandments." (1 St. John ii, 3.)

"But whoso keepeth His word, in Him verily is the love of God perfected; hereby know we that we are in Him." (1 St. John ii, 5.)

"Hereby know we that we dwell in Him, and He in us, because He hath given us of His Spirit." (1 St. John iv, 13.)

And so we might go on quoting. This definite knowledge, as you will see, is all experimental, and experimental not by the searching out of our own unaided wisdom, but by the revelation of God.

Experience, I repeat, is a matter of the heart. Here, as in the knowledge of which I have written, both the mind and the brain, that is to say, both the moral nature and the physical are operative, but it is the heart which feels and the heart therefore which experiences. A man may in his heart have a very definite experience of the grace of God; O! yes, he may. That experience is of the very essence of light. It is illuminative and illuminating. But what if his soul should refuse to steer its course according to the direction of that experience? The darkness which would ensue would be far greater than if he had never had such an experience. We speak of the gross darkness of heathendom, do we not? But if Christ be correct, because of the experience of Christendom consequent upon the grace of God which has been shed abroad, the darkness of Christendom is greater than the darkness of heathendom.

The darkness of heathenism is the darkness of ignorance; the darkness of Christendom is the darkness consequent upon a refusal to follow the light of experience, even the experience of the grace of God, which Our Lord has made known.

A man doesn't know, and he stumbles. A man does know, and he stumbles. The fall is greater in the latter than in the former; or, to retain Christ's metaphor, the light of the one who knows and yet stumbles is greater darkness than the darkness of the man who doesn't know and yet stumbles. Our Lord put the whole matter clearly before us when He said:—"And that servant, which knew his lord's will, and made not ready, nor did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not, and did things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. And to whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom they commit much, of him will they ask the more." (St. Luke xii, 47, 48—R.V.)

Heart experience carries with it heart responsibility. If we say we see and then go on as if we did not see, then our sight is hopeless blindness. None in Christ's day possessed more light than the Pharisees and scribes, and yet Christ said of them, "Ye blind guides." (St. Matt. xxiii, 16.) Wherein were the Pharisees and scribes blind?

In that they refused to embrace the conclusions of their own experimental reasoning. "Ye blind guides, which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor! Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that sanctifieth the gold?" etc. (Matt. xxiii, 16, 17.)

According to the woes of Christ pronounced against these people, in much detail, in that 23rd chapter of St. Matthew, the whole trouble lay in the fact that expediency waited upon conviction and nullified it. Spring back from experience and blindness must inevitably ensue. Motive is impugned where experience is not followed in a sincere and honest heart.

(3) MOTIVE.

But what is our motive? What is our purpose? Dare we, my brethren, throw back the screen and show the motive in heaven's light? We dare not. Why? Because we have doubled back on reservations, and ambiguities, and uncertainties. Our inner life has become a hesitation, a compromise, a trick in expediency, or even something more definitely negative towards God, and we are in consequence blinded in the very centre and source of light. If our supreme manhood is debased, how utter is the degradation! If a man goes down in his motive, he goes down altogether. His professions may be all that can be desired, his zeal may leave nothing to wish for, his good works in the Church of Christ may be full and complete, he may be among the ablest of the able exponents of British-Israel Truth, a veritable champion of the Word of God, but if, in the midst of it all, his motive be wrong, then all is wrong.

Digitized by Google

"Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven." (Matt. vii, 21.)

"Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils, and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. vii, 22, 23.)

Why didn't He know them? Because Christ can only know the soul with the pure motive.

If we have heart knowledge, and heart experience, and heart motive, then we cannot be weak; we cannot be the subjects of long-continued depression and fear. Give God thine heart and, though your mistakes may be many and your failures not a few, they will only prove thee mortal and evermore needing the guidance of the Holy Ghost. You may even come to that tragic hour in St. Peter's experience when, before the cock shall crow, herald of the new dawn, you shall have denied your Lord thrice, yet if you can look up into His resurrected face and exclaim, "Thou knowest that I love Thee," all will be well. There is no real darkness where love is. There can be no night there. Why is the Cross of Christ the centre of all light? Because it is the expression of infinite love. Fall down at that Cross in heartfelt repentance and tears, then walk in the light of the love of that Cross and you can never again know darkness.

"If we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John i, 7.)

"Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given Himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour." (Eph. v, 2.)

"For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light." (Eph. v, 8.)

"Walk in the light—and thou shalt own
Thy darkness passed away,
Because on thee the light has shone
In which is perfect day."

THE PURPOSE OF THE HEAVENS.

By Ben Israel.

"בלאש'ת, (In beginning), Elohim created the heavens and the earth." "Εν αχρη (In beginning) was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made."—John i, 1-3. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath, in these last days, spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds."—Heb. i, 1-2.

Under the head of the first proposition above quoted, God states that He Himself, together with the Divine Hierarchy, created all material things which we see around us; in the second and third quotations, that these were created by and for the Son, of which things He is the heir: by Whom, in these last days, He hath spoken unto us whom, we infer, to be the sequence and cause of His having made or ordained the ages.

The creation of the heavens and the earth, therefore, thus far, involves three established facts, viz., the glorification of His only begotten Son, His glorious inheritance, and His mysterious manifestation to humanity "in these last days."

"The heavens declare the glory of אל, (Omnipotence), and the firmament sheweth his handywork. Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night sheweth knowledge. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth. — Psalm xix, 1-4. Physically considered, the stars are the power-plants of the universe. The dynamo, mighty in itself, is a means not to be compared with the object for which it works. The latter is more important. In the solar system, the earth at present is the most highly organized among the worlds upon which the quam, line of the sun, operates. Man is the crowning climax of Creation in the earth, and over it he has been given the dominion under the law of obedience to Divine command. We discover in the system around us a vast aggregation of matter which seems to be waiting, having been halted in its progress by the interjection of foreign factors and elements which prevent fruition as long as their malign influences remain. The Kingdom of God is preparing, not finished, because of the fact of evil, and the affairs of the former are in the hands of the Lord Jesus, Who sits at the right hand of the Father, "expecting until" He, the Father, shall have made His enemies His foot-stool. Meanwhile, the Kingdom preparation is actively going on in the hearts and lives of His discipleship in the Church, and in the polity of the elect nation, Israel, which is to survive the putting under foot of the enemies.

The fact that enemies exist, on account of which our Lord has to wait, has everything to do with the Cosmos—past, present, and future.

The crisis which occurred in this mighty universe when sin was first manifested is scarcely within the reach of human comprehension. It was found in Lucifer, Archangel of light, in the Holy Mountain of God, where he had walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire.

From that time forth he is the father of lies, author of sin, and transmitter of sin and death to earth. Because Man was seduced to believe a lie, the earth was cursed for his sake, but not then destroyed. As the consequence of Man's developed enmity, his world was overthrown, himself destroyed, and the earth cleansed, passing through her baptism in water, but is now reserved unto fire against the day of final judgment and perdition of ungodly men.

We have already pointed out the unique position our world occupies in the economy of Creation in our thesis entitled, "Man and Earth: A Co-ordinated Creation and Interdependent."

The reaction on the physical universe of Lucifer's rebellion was far-reaching. Its marks, indelibly impressed upon the earth, justify the conclusion that it overthrew in this planet the first organic structure raised upon the original foundation. The same principle is evidenced in the disobedience and fall of Man, though the reaction is tentative, owing to the redemptive plan being operative during the period in which the force of the reaction is being withheld. A very serious consideration confronts us here. As determined opposition to God crystallizes in the world, the tension becomes more and more intense, until the breaking-point, ending in far greater cataclysmic results than occurred at the conclusion of Lucifer's recency. This is reasonable in view of the fact that his rebellion has been actively continued and only partially punished, his doom to be complete at the restoration and re-establishment of the original perfect order. This we are told is "A New Heavens and a New Earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

We are not exceeding Scriptural authority in our emphasis of the importance of Man in the Divine scheme of Creation. Its startling truth is demonstrated in the climax of human history, the vicarious offering and atonement, death and resurrection of the Jehovistic-human manifestation of God in Jesus Christ, the God-Man; and in the ascension into the heavenlies of that Divine Person Who is our advocate at the right hand of the Father, where He sits, "expecting," until His enemies be made His foot-stool; in other words, until the power of the adversary is put under subjection. Nearly 2,000 years have elapsed since the Ascension; yet they are less than two days by Divine reckoning, and in the third Our Lord will raise us up, when He returns a second time to reign in power and glory, during the final preparation of the Kingdom of God as Man is related to it in the earth. We wish to stress the point that the Millennial reign of Christ is for the specific purpose of bringing back the human race into perfect reconciliation to God, before the accomplishment of which God can do nothing in the way of creating "New Heavens and a New Earth," because it is His avowed purpose to people that wonderful region from the multitudes of the "chosen seed," Israel. Here is the Scripture in support: "Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it that hath cut Rahab and wounded the dragon? Art thou not it which hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over? Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head: and sorrow and mourning shall flee away. I, even I, am he that comforteth you. Who art thou that thou shouldest be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass, and forgettest the Lord, thy maker, that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and hast feared continually every day, because of the fury of the oppressor as if he were ready to destroy? And where is the fury of the oppressor? The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed, and that he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail. But I am the Lord thy God, that divided the sea whose waves roared: the Lord of hosts is His name. And I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I MAY PLANT THE HEAVENS, AND LAY THE FOUNDATIONS OF THE EARTH, AND SAY UNTO ZION 'THOU ART MY PEOPLE.'"

These are the "chosen seed" of the Exodus, the posterity of Abraham, that should be as the sand of the sea shore and as the stars of heaven for multitude. They are the Zion nation, the most valuable asset of El Shaddai in His nursery preparation. They were captives once in Egypt, and were then in Assyria, but their captivity would be of short duration. (The Ten Tribes remained captive in Assyria from the year 721 B.C. until the joint expedition of Cyaxares and Cyrus against the Assyrians, when the Cadusians and Sacæ (Sons of Isaac) espoused the Medo-Persian side of the controversy, the latter furnishing Cyrus with a division of 10,000 archers on foot and 2,000 horsemen wielding bows. The Cadusians mustered 4,000 horse and 20,000 targeteers. Gad-ates, whom we recognize as a mighty man of Gad, but whom the Greeks knew as an Assyrian, was one of Cyrus's foremost generals who did yeoman service for the Medes, because of his hatred of the Assyrians. (Vide Xenophon, Cyropædia, Lib. V. Cap. ii, sec. 12, and Cap. iii, sec. 12). Babylon was taken in the year 538 B.C. This ended the Assyrian Empire and, incidentally, the Israelitish captivity. It had not lasted over 183 years.) Because the Lord of Sabaoth is directing the destiny of Israel, He has put His words in their mouth, and covered them in the shadow of His hand; and for what? That He may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art My people. This Scripture proves the necessity of the Israel nation in the future economy of the universe.

It is glorious to obtain the universal kingdom and inheritance in Earth. It is marvellous to multiply as the sands by the sea shore for multitude. But this is only the initial preparation. Israel, as the espoused wife of Jehovah, is being perfected unto the higher destiny of populating the heavens. Here must the seed of Abraham be reckoned as the stars for multitude; for their countless retinue of worlds must be planted, according to the promise, from the "chosen seed" which El Shaddai has nourished at such cost in the old earth, one foundation.

Of the foundations of this earth which we know, two are passed, one is now functioning. The buildings upon the former foundations have been destroyed to the extent that they are known only as relics and in history. The third building in which we are participating is proceeding in two ways: one for good, the other for evil. Under the Millennial sceptre of Immanuel, the good will have been perfected, and the Earth will have lived out its usefulness as to its superstructure, Man. The earth must then pass into the fire and crucible of the Divine Alchemist for His use and service in another form. Meanwhile, the ransomed of the Lord shall pass over; He shall cover them in the shadow of His hand, and the Lord shall plant them in the heavens, that house of many mansions of which the Saviour advised His disciples, saying "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also."

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER.

DEAR SIR,—"Astel," in his letter which appeared in your issue of the 25th August, 1928, is ingenious, but we submit is not convincing or apparently correct.

He makes the statement that "As a study of history clearly shows that the little horn of Daniel viii was fulfilled in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, etc."

Digitized by Google

Now does history clearly show this? It is not accepted universally as correct. Let us examine it.

Bishop Newton says: "This little horn has been supposed to mean Antiochus Epiphanes, King of Syria, who was a great enemy and persecutor of the Jews. And at first sight does in some features very much resemble the "little horn"; but on a nearer view it appears, that in other parts there is no similitude or correspondence between them. Sir Isaac Newton with that sagacity which is peculiar to him, and with which he penetrated into Scripture as well as into Nature, perceived plainly that the little horn could not be drawn for Antiochus Epiphanes, but must be designed for some other subject."

Dr. Hales, D.D., says: "The description of it throughout is exactly applicable in all its parts to the Roman temporal power; and this application is sanctioned also by the prevailing opinion of the generality of commentators."

Now let us examine some characteristics of this "little horn" "which waxed exceeding great towards the south, and toward the east and toward the pleasant land."

Sir Isaac Newton remarks on this:

"This horn therefore was to rise in the north-west parts of those nations, which composed the body of the goat, and from thence to extend his kingdom towards Egypt, Syria and Judea."

Bishop Newton says: "The actions of the little horn here described well accord with the Romans. He "waxed exceeding great"; and so did the Roman Empire, even within the territory of the goat. "Toward the south": the Romans made Egypt a province of their Empire, and kept possession of it for several centuries. "Towards the East," the Romans grew very powerful in this direction, conquering and making a province of Syria, which was the eastern kingdom of the goat. "And toward the pleasant land" that is Judea. (See Psalm cvi, 24; Jeremiah iii, 19; and Daniel xi, 16, 41.) The Romans effectually conquered and subdued the Jews, first made a province of their country, then destroyed their city and temple, and dispersed the people, so that after so fatal a fall they have never been able to rise again."

Then, again, in Daniel viii, 11:

"Yea, he magnified himself even to (marginal reading "against") the prince of the host" the Messiah, the prince of the Jews, whom he put to death. Sir Isaac Newton. "And by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down." The Romans took away the daily sacrifice of the Jews, and utterly destroyed their temple. Bishop Newton.

It is submitted with reference to the above that the little horn corresponds exactly with the Roman temporal power and not with Antiochus Epiphanes.

"Astel" endeavours to place the four beasts of Daniel's vision as Turkey, Bulgaria, Hungary and Prussia. Now these beasts are called "Four great beasts," chapter vii, verse 3. When has Bulgaria, for example, ever been classified as "great," any more than Williams Deacon's Bank has been classified as one of the "Big Five Banks" of Great Britain? Consequently we would ask does the cap fit?

Daniel vii, 24 reads:

"And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise." This refers to the fourth kingdom. See verse 23.

The ten horns "Astel" enumerates as under: Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, Wurtemburg, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Serbia, Montenegro and Belgium, but did all these kingdoms arise out of one kingdom? If not, they do not coincide with Daniel's prophecy.

Further, they were not even all joined by alliance or treaty in the Great War against the Allies. What about Serbia?

Was not Serajevo, in Serbian territory, the scene of the murder of the Archduke Ferdinand and his wife? And in consequence Austria first declared war on Serbia.

Continue the verse. "Another shall rise after them, and he shall be diverse from the first." Who is this according to Astel?

Time is implied in this verse, at the beginning there were only ten, than another came into being unlike, we are told, the others and absorbed three.

See our article in the NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER of the 21st July, 1928.

We would suggest to "Astel" that he should read "Six verbatim lectures on the Book of Revelation," by the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, and are of opinion that the reading of that book, if he has not already done so, will enable him to bridge over the hiatus between the end of the Roman Empire and the Great War. The opening words of these lectures are: "The Book of Revelation is the sequel in prophecy to the Book of Daniel. The Book of Revelation is historically a continuation of the Gospels."

We also suggest that "Astel" should read the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard's speech at the Albert Hall meeting in the NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER of 12th March, 1927.

We do not agree that the prophecies of Daniel require recasting, and would remark that Daniel is only one of the prophets of the Bible, and any other book which is referred to in Daniel would be affected, so where would one end? And we further contend that it is absolutely unnecessary to sever the connection between Nebuchadnezzar's dream and Daniel's vision, and moreover maintain that they are so intimately connected with each other that it is quite impossible to disconnect them in any way.—Yours, etc., CHELA.

To the Editor of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER.

DEAR SIR,—I trust some step will be taken to publish openly and decidedly our feelings of horror at the proposals to bring out a shortened Bible, which to our National shame have been proposed and supported by some of the clergy of the land and some of the laymen. Is it not enough to bring God's judgment upon us, this attempt to mutilate His Holy Word, by claiming to decide what is necessary to retain for use and what is not required. As we believe that all Holy Scripture is written for our learning, and that the Bible is given us in its entirety by God for our use and guidance, surely we should show our detestation of this latest move (inspired undoubtedly by Satan) to upset the knowledge and love of the Bible which, thank God, is still one of "The Covenant People's" great characteristics.

Cannot our leading clerics, of all denominations, be asked to express their opinions in our journal, of the proposed outrage.

Yours Very truly,

EDWARD F. GOSSET, (Colonel).

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES SIMPSON.

MR. JAMES SIMPSON, born 1842, was the youngest son of Mr. John Simpson, a merchant, of Edinburgh, and was early given a post in the Commercial Bank of Scotland. He graduated through the different departments of the Head Office and for many years was engaged in the Foreign Correspondence Office of the Bank, where his knowledge of languages was of great service.

But for a most retiring disposition he would have been appointed General Manager of the Bank, his qualifications being such that he could have well filled the position. He remained at his desk, preferring the life in his office to that of manager, and he continued in this capacity until his retirement. Although he had many opportunities of interesting himself in such games as golf, cricket, etc., he much preferred the study of astronomy, the Great Pyramid of Egypt, and Ancient History. His knowledge of these subjects was considerable, and in the case of the Pyramid his calculations were both interesting and valuable. He was also a strong British-Israelite, and held decided views on this question, although he never advanced his opinions in an arbitrary manner. He wrote many short but interesting papers on the occupation of Britain by the Romans, and his knowledge of the various Roman remains throughout Britain was considerable. He married late in life, and died at the age of eighty-four, being survived by his widow but a short time. He was a staunch Christian man, upright and just, and was well known and beloved by the poor of Edinburgh, his native city.

REVIEW.

THE HERITAGE OF THE ANGLO-SAXON RACE.†

BY M. H. GAYER, O.B.E.

THIS very valuable work has with it a most excellent map giving the peregrinations of the British, Anglo-Saxon race from Egypt, Palestine, Media, East and West of the Caspian by several routes. The stories of these migrations starting from Egypt, again from Palestine, begin with section vii (there occurs a printer's error: 1700 should be 17, par. 4). These sections as arranged in the book are illustrated on a beautiful chart, quite original in its design, each number on the map corresponding to the same numbered section in the book.

By this means the reader can follow up the history of the people from first to last.

Section xv, par. 4, contains a remark which from Scripture it would be hard to prove, for it makes out that Jeremiah of Libnah (2 Kings xxiii, 31) is the same as Jeremiah of Anathoth, a mere youth in the thirteenth year of Josiah; whereas their pedigrees are different.

The arrangement of these sections gives a very comprehensive history, the first six have to do with the promises unconditionally made to Abraham. The next twenty are historical fulfilment of the prophecies, and then follows God's present-day mission to our race. Sections on Heraldry, "Signs of the Times," and the Return of Our Lord, with answers to "What is the good of it?" make a most interesting and instructive book, which we can heartily recommend to all.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

DAILY teas are resumed at Headquarters, and are available from 4 to 5.30, except Saturdays and Sundays.

* * *

A Secretary-General's Round Table Conference will be held at H.Q. on Wednesday next, September 12th, beginning with tea at 4 p.m. Members, Associates and supporters are invited to bring suggestions and to contribute to a discussion for promoting publicity and general organization in connection with the coming Congress.

* * *

Weekly Prayer Meetings for the Divine blessing on the Congress will be held on Thursday evenings during this month, commencing on Thursday next, at 7.30.

* * *

Special attention is directed to an announcement in our advertising columns of the meeting to be held on Wednesday evening, September 26th, in the large Central Hall, Westminster, when the Rev. Dr. McConnell is to give his address on "Who was Jesus?" This address has been blest to the conversion of hundreds of infidels, and we ask for the earnest efforts of our friends to secure a very large attendance of young men especially. We will gladly supply thousands of leaflets to all who will help in the distribution thereof.

* * *

We hear a great deal about empty churches, but it is a fact that people will flock to hear a man with a message, provided that man has a knowledge of the Bible, is obviously sincere, tremendously in earnest, and has the power to carry conviction to the hearts and minds of his hearers.

* * *

An outstanding example of this is to be found in the crowded congregations attending the ministrations of the Rev. Dr. Campbell Morgan, at Westminster Church, Buckingham Gate. So eager have people been to hear him that we are informed from 500 to nearly 1,000 have been turned away on Sunday evenings; while the Friday night gatherings have also crowded the church, which holds nearly 3,000, and overflow meetings have been held in two halls attached to the church, and this in the month of August.

Two of Dr. Morgan's addresses have been published in pamphlet form: "The Romance of the Bible," and "Christ and the Bible"; they are on sale in our Book Room.

* * *

At a meeting of clergy and ministers held at our Headquarters in May last it was decided to ask for a Ministerial Day of Witness to B.-I. Truth at our next Congress. The day appointed is Tuesday, October 2nd. We shall be glad to hear from all clergymen and ministers who will accept this invitation to assemble for a Conference from 11 a.m. to 12.45 p.m. at H.Q. on that day, and who can attend the afternoon and evening meetings in the Central Hall, Westminster. There are hundreds of ministerial readers of this journal, and we earnestly hope that a goodly number of them will be able to accept this invitation. Railway vouchers for cheap fares will gladly be sent to all who desire them.

* * *

We have already sent out hundreds of posters and scores of thousands of circulars concerning the Congress, and we want to distribute many thousands more. We are very grateful for donations received for expenses, and we require much further help towards cost of same and for Press advertising. Will all who can undertake to get circulars distributed, and posters exhibited, kindly communicate with us as early as possible? We want to cover the whole of the London area as well as towns and districts of the Home Counties.

* * *

We have earnest appeals from several of our readers, who are ill, for prayers on their behalf, and we commend these appeals to our members and friends.

* * *

The Annual "Rally" of the Midland Branches around Birmingham was held on August 25th at Leamington Spa. Contingents from Birmingham, Handsworth, Walsall, Stourbridge, Burton, Coventry, Oxford, and Northampton joined the Leamington members at the lovely Jephson Gardens, and enjoyed social converse. Tea was served in the Urquhart Hall, after which a service was held in the Pavilion of Jephson Gardens, kindly lent by the Mayor. The Revs. J. W. Adams (Lichfield), Gilbert Davies (Burton), J. T. Childs (Handsworth), T. H. Going (Rugby), and T. H. Whitehouse, Commissioner (Birmingham) took part.

* * *

The Rev. Joseph Gay has made a successful start as Commissioner for Wales. He has visited several centres and expects to have six new branches going very shortly.

* * *

The Rev. Maxwell Carnson, our Missioner, in South Africa, is doing a wonderful work. He is having a strenuous time in that land of magnificent distances, making long journeys and addressing many meetings hundreds of miles apart.

* * *

The Hon. Secretary of our Nottingham Branch writes:—"We have sustained a sad loss in the death of Mr. R. F. Brister, of West Bridgford. He joined us in 1923, and became a keen student of B.-I. teaching. He was a Vice-President and an active member of our committee, as well as a zealous worker for his church. He filled his preaching appointments on Sunday, August 18th, was taken ill on the following day, and removed to the hospital, where on August 21st he passed peacefully away. Verily, in the midst of life we are in death. We shall long retain happy memories of his useful work amongst us, and we tender our sincere sympathy to his widow and family."

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—X.

EZEKIEL.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, F.R.G.S.

In approaching the study of the prophecies of Ezekiel it is necessary first to relate them to the general prophetic plan; for, as with the other prophets who succeeded Moses, Ezekiel has made a contribution to the general story of prophecy, but his work is only fragmentary, intended to fit into the mosaic of the great story.

The preceding Books of the Bible form the preface to Ezekiel; as with Jeremiah, the Book of Isaiah is the foreword to Ezekiel.

At that period three great prophets of Jehovah were each making their contribution to that stage of history and prophecy which covered their particular period.

That period relates itself to world history in the rise of the Babylonian Empire, the overthrow of the Kingdom of Judah, and the overturn of the Throne of David.

The great movements involved covered Western Asia and the newly-organized Babylonian Empire.

Jeremiah was prophesying in the city of Jerusalem, and was telling that part of the story in process of being worked out by Judah.

Ezekiel, as we shall see, was appointed God's prophet among the captivity of the House of Israel, and told the story from the standpoint of Israel.

Daniel was appointed God's prophet at Babylon, and told the story from the standpoint of the Babylon system of Empires.

Studied separately, each of these prophets contributes a fragment dealing with a different branch of people, such branch having a prophetic destiny different from the others.

Studied as a threefold contribution the united body of prophecy thus contributed throws light upon the great plan of world development and progress through the age then starting which should nationally continue for 2,520 years, the full seven times of prophecy.

Taking in hand the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, and viewing the bold outline of their procedure, we find that each and all concern themselves first, with the approaching overthrow of the Mediterranean nations of Western Asia, and after that of Egypt and Babylon, thus showing that Asiatic civilization was rapidly approaching its end.

Isaiah then turns to the development of Israel in the Isles, and the wonderful progress in world affairs which should be made by that European continuation of Israel or Mediterranean civilization.

Ezekiel tells the same story concerning Israel, and the transformation Israel should undergo at the end of the period of punishment when the Continental Empires had been swept away.

Unlike the other prophets, Ezekiel carries the story forward on a practical national plane to the re-establishment of twelve-tribed Israel. Judah having been reunited at the end of the age, coupled with the re-establishment of the House and Throne of David in the re-established city of Jerusalem in Palestine. To this re-established Israel the Lord shall come to reign, and into the new Temple then to be built the glory of God shall return again.

Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel follow the Israel line to the end of the age.

The contribution of Daniel fills in the story of the rise, progress, succession and final destruction of the Continental Empires constituting the Babylon system. This we shall see when we spend an hour with the prophet Daniel.

It becomes manifest that when these contributions are fitted together we have in our hands a chart of world history, including that of Judah; of Israel; of the House of David; and of the Babylon succession of Empires to the end of the age which is now upon us.

We now take up the study of the outline of Ezekiel's contribution.

Take in hand the Book of Isaiah and turn to the 6th chapter, there to read the marvellous unveiling of the ever-present Jehovah granted to the young prophet at the beginning of his ministry. There, at the foot of the Throne of Jehovah, he received his commission directly from the hand of God.

With what irresistible confidence and strength was Isaiah furnished by this personal contact with Jehovah, Whose person he saw and Whose voice he heard.

Turn now to the 1st chapter of Ezekiel, and see that a similar experience was granted to the young prophet at the commencement of his ministry.

Remark carefully that the manifestation of Jehovah thus granted to Ezekiel was not in Jerusalem, nor at the Temple, but out in the midst of the captivity of Israel. It was the Throne of God "on circuit."

With what confidence and baptism of the Spirit did this personal contact with Jehovah clothe the prophet Ezekiel!

As with Isaiah, so with Ezekiel; the commission of the prophet and the indication of his field of labour were given to him directly from the voice and the hand of God, then visibly present.

The commission is contained in the 2nd and 3rd chapters of Ezekiel. Isaiah was commissioned in connection with the burden of Judah and Jerusalem "to go and tell this people."

Ezekiel, on the other hand, was definitely and specifically sent to the House of Israel.

Let these chapters, constituting the commission of Ezekiel, be read as a part of this article. Yet so important are they that we feel constrained to quote the following verses:—

> "And he said unto me, Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israel, to a rebellious nation that hath rebelled against me: they and their fathers have transgressed against me, even unto this very day.
>
> For they are impudent children and stiffhearted. I do send thee unto them; and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God.
>
> And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.
>
> And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions; be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.
> And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear: for they are most rebellious.
>
> But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee.
>
> And when I looked, behold, an hand was sent unto me: and, lo, a roll of a book was therein;
> And he spread it before me; and it was written within and without: and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe." (Ezek. ii, 3-10.)
> "Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel.
>
> So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll.
>
> And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.
>
> And he said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them.
>
> For thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech and of an hard language, but to the house of Israel;
>
> Not to many people of a strange speech and of an hard language, whose words thou canst not understand. Surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened unto thee.
> But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for all the house of Israel are impudent and hardhearted." (Ezek. iii, 1-7.)

The prophet now enters upon his ministry, and the first part of his message, given as a sign to the House of Israel, is the coming destruction of that city which, although no longer the national capital of Israel, remained nevertheless the centre of their worship, where the priesthood still ministered, for all the tribes of Israel as one congregation. It must be remembered that while in order to carry out the purposes of God "sanctuary" on the one hand, and the purposes of "His dominion" on the other hand, the congregation and the worship remained, and must always remain in the sight of God one and undivided.

To make clear that the national division for the whole prophetic period was an actuality, the prophet is instructed, first, to lie upon his left side 390 days, thus to bear the iniquity of Israel; and afterwards to lie upon his right side 40 days, thus to bear the iniquity of Judah.

The national separation and the separateness of the Divine handling is thus once again made clear, as it had already been in Isaiah and again in Jeremiah.

The number of days indicated were days in which Israel on the one hand, and Judah on the other, should suffer oppression as captives, driven to hard labour, and receiving in return coarse fare in limited quantities, even their water being doled out to them by measure.

After the period of 390 days, or years, for Israel, and 40 days, or years, for Judah, their condition should be ameliorated, leading up to freedom of action to remain or depart in or from the land of their captivity. History verifies this process.

The captivity of Israel began in 740-721 B.C. Let this continue for three hundred and ninety days, and we get the date 350-331. During this period it seems the captivity of Israel should continue onerous and active. There could be no moving away on the part of Israel during this period it would seem.

The captivity of Judah began 604-587. Let this continue onerous for forty years, and as we know let it restrain the freedom of the people for seventy years, and Judah would be freed to remain or return to the land of Judah in 564-527 by adding forty years (to add forty years of history in the B.C. period substract the number from the date), or in 534-497, by adding seventy years, the full period of the captivity of Judah.

Thus Judah would be free to go in 534-497. Israel would not be free to go until 350-331. This is the era of Alexander the Great.

History seems to substantiate these matters.

The sign to the House of Israel that the days of their "iniquity" should be 390 and 40 respectively is bound up with the judgment executed against Jerusalem, in which both Israel and Judah were still interested.

It will be apropos here to point out that Jerusalem is not assigned as a possession to any one tribe in the sacred Scriptures. From 975 B.C. to A.D. 70 Jerusalem is coupled with Judah; thus "Judah and Jerusalem." Thereafter in the prophecies she is generally coupled with Israel. But then and now Jerusalem is the centre of the worship of all Israel. Jerusalem occupied exactly the same relationship to the tribes of Israel politically as Washington, D.C., the Capital of America, does to the States of America. It is the Capital of all the States: it is a part of no State. It is directly administered by the Federal Government. It was therefore a matter of interest, of supreme interest, to Israel in captivity that Jerusalem, the centre of their worship, was about to be destroyed. It seemed to be a danger that, with the destruction of the Temple, the removal of the priests, the cessation of the sacrifices and the worship in the Temple, the faith of Israel might be shaken and she might be given an impulse to relapse into Baal worship, from which she had been saved at Mount Carmel by the ministrations of Elijah. Therefore it was necessary that it should be made clear that the captivity of Judah should be short, that the services should be restored at a given time, and for this reason the shortened captivity of Judah should not compare with the longer captivity of Israel, although it was judged that treacherous Judah had justified herself less than Israel. This would steady the faith of Israel and even heighten it by the facts that the event followed the course of the prediction.

Moreover, it was necessary that the House of Israel should know, and that beyond the shadow of a doubt, why such judgment was to be executed upon Jerusalem, the centre of worship; so the reason is given. This is it:—

"Thus saith the Lord God; This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her.

"And SHE HATH CHANGED MY JUDGMENTS into wickedness more than the nations, AND MY STATUTES more than the countries that are round about her: for they have REFUSED MY JUDGMENTS AND MY STATUTES, they have not walked in them.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord God; because ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and HAVE NOT WALKED IN MY STATUTES, NEITHER HAVE KEPT MY JUDGMENTS, neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you;

"THEREFORE thus saith the Lord God; Behold I, even I, am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee in the sight of the nations . . ."

Thus was the rightness of the judgments on Jerusalem made clear in the sight of all Israel.

The putting away of the Commandments, Statutes and Judgments of the Lord always has been, and always will be, a fruitful cause of disaster to the people and nations of the Lord. Let the present-day statesman and ruler take note of this. It should be the basic consideration of the statesman from day to day.

The mountains of Israel are now dealt with.

It will be remembered that the House of Israel had been removed from Palestine a century and a quarter before this time. It will also be remembered that the present prophecy is stated in the future tense. The reference to the dwellings of Israel that are far and that are near at hand shows that the vision of the prophet is taking in all the dwelling-places of Israel, even among the nations. Listen to the refrain, "Altars; images; idols; high places; altars; idols." "I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes which go a-whoring after their idols."

> "Thus saith the Lord God; Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel! for they shall fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence.
> He that is far off shall die of the pestilence; and he that is near shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth and is besieged shall die by the famine: thus will I accomplish my fury upon them.
>
> Then shall ye know that I am the Lord, when their slain men shall be among their idols round about their altars, upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols.
> So will I stretch out my hand upon them, and make the land desolate, yea, more desolate than the wilderness toward Diblath, in all their habitations: and they shall know that I am the Lord." (Ezek. vi, 11-14.)

Read also chapter vii, which is part of the same heart-broken denunciation.

Listen to the shepherds of Israel in this land to-day. "Altars, altar tables, reservation, adoration." God help the people. The leaders are following in the same old path, and the fact that the law of the Lord concerning the Passover Supper, which is the law of the Communion Supper, with the bread and the wine substituted for the Lamb, absolutely prohibits reservation. God knew the needs of His people better than the Bishops do; and knowing, He made that law. "Altars, idols, images " brought Jerusalem and the Temple to captivity at first and the priests to captivity; and finally brought the destruction of the Temple and the taking away of the Aaronic priesthood.

Digitized by Google

Let the men of the British Parliament know that they must still bear the responsibility of this decision before the people and before God. The Bishops cannot relieve them of it. Idolatry has caused our fathers ages of suffering. Why should the nation be thus brought to suffer any more? It is a question which will never be finally settled; it is a victory which will not be finally settled until Our Lord shall come. Let us stand in the breach and defend the nation from disaster in this our day.

Because of sincere men who are trying to bring about the legalizing of reservation we write this with pain. But the writing must be done nevertheless, lest responsibility be found in part to lie with us.

The terrible picture of chapter vii apparently deals with the experience of the land of Israel during the period of the prophetic times.

When one reads the story of that land; the marching of armies; of he fighting of battles; of the sieges of cities; of inter-racial and inter-tribal warfare among the polyglot inhabitants in the meantime, right down to 1917, surely the terrible prophecy was but a forecast of history!

Babylonian armies; Egyptian armies; Persian armies; Grecian armies; Roman armies; Saracen armies; Turkish armies, have all in turn trodden down the land.

Not until the British Army of liberation marched from Basrah—Isaiah's Bosrah—and from Egypt, sweeping before them the Turkish hordes, did the land get even a foreshadowing of peace again.

THE BOOK OF LIFE.

By Henry Proctor, F.R.S.L.

A good title for the Bible would be—" The Book of Life." It begins and ends with Life. In the first chapter of Genesis God is seen creating Life—vegetable, animal, human and spiritual. In the second chapter is seen the Tree of Life, in the midst of Paradise, and in the last chapter of the whole Bible (Rev. xxii), the whole earth has Become the Paradise of God, for, as John says:—

" The Angel showed me a river of the Water of Life, as clear as crystal, issuing from the Throne of God, and of the Lamb, in the middle of the street of the City, even of

The Holy City Jerusalem." (Rev. xxii, 1.)

The New Earth has now become the Garden of Eden of God, for " The Tabernacle of God is set up among men." (Rev. xxi, 3—20 Cent.)

Again, therefore, we see not only the River that went out of Eden to water the Garden, but also—" On each side of the river was a Tree of Life which bore twelve kinds of fruit, yielding its fruit each month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." (Rev. xxii, 2.)

And not only does the Bible begin and end with Life, but its whole theme is Life—Life given, Life lost, and Life restored. For the promise of the Law, the Prophets, the Psalms and the Gospel is all one, and that is of Life. And with the promise of Life is included every blessing that heart can wish for.

The word itself denotes, in the originals, every kind of enjoyment and satisfaction.

To the first Adam this Life was granted as a free gift, when God breathed into his nostrils the Breath of Lives (Nishmath-Khayyim).

He was destined to live for ever, for even to his body this Life was imparted. In one way only could it be forfeited, and that was by eating of the Tree of Knowledge.

In this way Eve and Adam sinned and forfeited their right to Life, as it was said to them: " In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

The Zoe, or spiritual life, was immediately forfeited, and the natural life (psuche) alone remained to them. But as there is a time coming of the " Restitution of all things," or the " Days of Universal Restoration " (Acts iii, 21, R.V.—20 Cent.), so every blessing that Adam had will be restored to all mankind: " For if by reason of the offence of the one man the whole race died, far more were the loving-kindness of God, and the Gift given in the loving-kindness of the One Man—Christ Jesus, lavished upon the whole race." (Rom. v, 15—20 Cent. N.T.)

The Lord Himself sums up His mission in one pregnant sentence: " I am come that they might have Life, and that they might have it more abundantly." He said:

" I am the Bread of Life which cometh down from Heaven, and giveth Life to the world." " I am the resurrection, and the Life." " The Way, the Truth, and the Life."

He is the Source of All Life—Natural and Spiritual. " That which came into being in Him was Life." (John i, 4—20 Cent.)

All the time of His earthly ministry was spent in imparting Life to Spirit and Soul and Body. And finally: " He gave His Life a ransom for all." " By the Grace of God, He tasted death for every man. He bore our sins in His own body on the tree. But He also bore our sicknesses and carried away our pains." (Isa. liii, 4—Heb.) " Himself took our infirmities, and bare our diseases " (Matt. viii, 17) in order that we might not have to bear them. And when on earth He healed every disease and every sickness, that this promise might be fulfilled.

On the Cross He became a curse for us, for it is written:—" Cursed is everyone that hangs on a tree."

The curse of the law included every kind of sickness, but Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law. Plainly, therefore, He has redeemed us from every kind of sickness.

DANIEL IX, 25, 26, 27.

By F. S. Dobbs.

(1) Know therefore and discern, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto the anointing of the Prince shall be seven weeks, and three score and two weeks.

(2) And after three score and two weeks shall the Anointed one be cut off.

Digitized by Google

(3) After that the people of the Prince that shall come will destroy the city and the sanctuary.

(4) And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week.

(5) And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease.

(6) And he shall desolate to the extreme.

(7) And at the last shall wrath be poured out upon the Desolation.

Probably no passage in the Bible is less understood than that from which the above sentences are taken. Let us consider them one by one and try to show how this pronouncement of Gabriel was actually and literally fulfilled in every detail.

(1) " From the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the anointed one, the Prince, shall be seven weeks; and three score and two weeks, it shall be built again."

The original edict of Cyrus issued in the first year of his reign, 3468 A.M., authorizing the Jews to return from Babylon and rebuild Jerusalem became abortive owing to local opposition and the work ceased. The building was, however, at length accomplished in accordance with the decree granted to Ezra by Artaxerxes on the fourteenth of Nisan, 3543 A.M. The above words therefore refer to this " commandment." Seven plus sixty-two, that is sixty-nine weeks are mentioned, $69 \times 7 = 483$ solar years $= 483 \times 365 = 24225 = 176412$ days. By adding this number to fourteenth Nisan, 3543 A.M., we arrive at the twenty-second of Tebeth, 4026 A.M., or 8th of January A.D. 28 as the day on which the coming Prince was to be anointed. This anointing " with the Holy Ghost " (Acts x, 38) actually took place on that day as foretold by Gabriel, immediately after Jesus was baptized by John, when He was thirty years and fifteen days old.

(2) " And after three score and two weeks shall the Anointed one be cut off." Up to this point a long period is dealt with and a large unit used, but when the Messiah had actually come an everyday unit is substituted, and these sixty-two weeks are now of seven days instead of years as before. They refer to the $62 \times 7 = 434$ days, extending from Christ's Anointing at 3 P.M. on Thursday, 8th of January, A.D. 28 to 3 P.M. on Thursday, 17th March, A.D. 29, the hour at which He announced " It is finished."

(3) After that " the people of the Prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary."

These words refer to the Romans under Titus, who in fulfilment of Christ's words " there shall not be left here one stone upon another, which shall not be thrown down " (Mark xiii, 2), utterly destroyed Jerusalem.

(4) " And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week." The " week " here referred to was primarily that of the seven years Jewish war itself, which lasted from 4063 A.M. to 4070 A.M. Josephus placed the events that were the immediate cause of this war in the year 4063 A.M., that is, A.D. 64-65.

The situation in Judea was daily becoming more and more strained till the Jews treacherously slew the unarmed Roman garrison at Masada after they had capitulated, on the Sabbath day (Sat., Aug. 10th, A.D. 65). Josephus also relates that " on the very same day, and hour, which one would think must have come to pass by the direction of Providence, in one hour's time above 20,000 Jews were killed in Cæsarea and the place emptied of its Jewish inhabitants " (Jos. W. II, xviii, 1). Thus reprisals and counter-reprisals continued with increasing frequency, till in the beginning of the next year, 4064 A.M., Cestius Gallus, Governor of Syria, marched to Jerusalem and encamped at Scopus; he refrained from assault, however, for five days, and then " after several ineffectual attacks on the Temple he got everything ready for setting fire to its gates, when suddenly without any reason in the world he withdrew his soldiers from the place and retired from the city on the 7th of Bul, 4064 A.M. (II., xx, 4-6). The retreating army of Cestius was pursued by the Jews as far as Bethhoron and completely routed. Thus was the Lord's " promise to many " fulfilled. The sign had been given, the desolating beast had stood in the holy place, and now a whole week was granted, from Sunday the 9th to Friday the 14th of Bul, both inclusive, in which to make their escape, while the Jewish army was away reaping the fruits of their unexpected victory. Might not this be the " week " of which Gabriel spoke? But be this as it may, obedient to Jeremiah vi, 1, the sons of Benjamin at once took advantage of the opportunity thus given them and prepared for instant flight, and in accordance with the Saviour's warning the Christians made haste to escape to the mountains (Matt. xxiv, 15-16), or, as Josephus puts it, "after this calamity had befallen Cestius, many of the most important of the Jews swam away from the city as from a ship when it is going to sink " (II, xx, i). The fate of Cestius, now a ruined soldier, is somewhat of a mystery, Tacitus tells us (Tac. Hist. B. V. cx). Nero at once appointed Vespasian to carry on the war in his place, and the latter, together with his son Titus, forthwith began a systematic invasion of Palest ne. " Jotapata (where Josephus was in command) was taken by storm on Thursday the 1st day of the month of Panemus, May 15th (Tamuz) in the thirteenth year of the reign of Nero " (Jos. III, vii, 33-36). Josephus himself surrendered on the Sabbath, two days later, and was taken before Vespasian and Titus; hearing he was to be sent to Nero he foretold the Imperial elevation of them both. Thereupon they kept him instead, as a hostage and guarantee for the truth of his words, according him at the same time a certain amount of honour (III, viii, 1-9). This remarkable man was a Jew, a general, a priest, a prophet and a historian of such minute accuracy as to suggest that he was indeed " called of God " quite as much as Ezra or Nehemiah. He was also a celebrated writer. Whiston says that " Josephus, 'Against Apion' is to be regarded as one of the most learned, excellent and useful books of all antiquity" and, from the tone of the memoirs of his own life, which he wrote as an appendix to the " Antiquities," presumably he had become a Christian. The war continued with varying success to the Roman arms for the next three years, till in 4067 A.M. Vespasian handed over to Titus the greater part of his forces to enable him to finally destroy Jerusalem (Jos. W. B. IV, c, xi-5). This army is estimated to have numbered at least 100,000 men, as the minimum required to surround the city with a continuous line of works from six to seven miles in length. This vast undertaking was completed in the incredibly short interval of three days. The approaches to the city were, however, left open, and as the Passover was drawing near, Jerusalem was fast filling with pilgrims coming up for the feast, undeterred by the surrounding armies. From the number of lambs (256,000) chosen on the 10th of Nisan, as recorded by Josephus (B. VI, c. ix, § 3), it is not extravagant to suppose that on this occasion there were at least 1,000,000 male strangers within the city. The 14th of Nisan fell that year on the 26th of March, and this enormous addition to the population must have increased tenfold the appalling suffering caused by famine during the siege which actually began on the 3rd of April. And yet in God's mercy a period of three and a half years' grace had been granted since the "sign" was given, at any time during which the "wise" might have escaped from the doomed city, and probably many of them did.

(5) "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease."

The "daily sacrifice" actually did come to an end "in the midst of the week" in accordance with these words of Gabriel, on the 25th of June, A.D. 69, 4067 A.M. as related by Josephus, "for lack of men to offer it as well as there being nothing left to be offered" (VI, iii).

(6) "And he shall desolate to the extreme."

After inconceivable horrors the city at length fell on the 14th of August, A.D. 69. It was then given over to the fury of the soldiers, or rather they "took it" in every sense of the word, for Titus lost all control of his men, and it was sacked as probably no other place had been or ever shall be. They brought the victorious Eagles into the Temple and sacrificed to them, little dreaming that the God of that place, as indeed of all other places, had delivered it into their hands as a judgment on it for the rejection and crucifixion of its King, His Son. After three days of conflagration Jerusalem was little better than a heap of smouldering ashes. And "now as soon as the army had no more people to slay or to plunder, because there remained nothing alive, Titus gave orders that they should demolish the entire city and Temple." A certain part of the wall was, however, spared, together with its towers, "in order to demonstrate to posterity what kind of a city it was and how well fortified, which the Roman valour had subdued; but for the rest of the wall it was so thoroughly laid even with the ground by those that dug up its foundations that there was nothing left to make those that came thither believe it had ever been inhabited (W.B. VII, ci.). Thus were the Lord's words fulfilled to the letter (Matt. xxiv, 1-2).

Nero had committed suicide upon Tuesday the 9th of June A.D. 67 (Tamuz 8th) and Galba succeeded him, but he was slain on the 15th of January, A.D. 68. He was then succeeded by Otho on the following day. The Legions, however, revolted and made Vitellius Emperor, and Otho committed suicide on April 17th. When news of these events reached Judea about the end of June, Vespasian, Titus and their own hardened veterans were filled with just indignation. (Jos. IV, xi.) The latter at once hailed Vespasian as Emperor in accordance with the word of Josephus, whom he immediately released. Vitellius and Vespasian continued as joint rulers until the death of the former in a drunken brawl on December 21st, A.D. 68, when Vespasian became sole Emperor. Masada was the last stronghold in Judea to resist the conquerors; but when all hope was gone, preferring death to falling into the hands of the Romans, in the spring of A.D. 72, 4070 A.M., the male population first killed their wives and children and then themselves. Thus ended the Jewish war, seven years after the first attack on Jerusalem by Cestius and three and a half after the city was taken by Titus.

Vespasian died on the 23rd of June, A.D. 78, and as foretold by Josephus was succeeded by Titus, the actual "Desolator" of Jerusalem.

(7) "And at the last shall wrath be poured out upon the Desolator." And so it came to pass, for, as a matter of fact, his reign, which only lasted a few months, was phenomenal for disaster and he himself perished, it is thought, by poison the following year.

There are very many incidents of intense interest recorded by Josephus in his account of what was one of the most terrible episodes in the history of the world, which it is impossible for me to touch upon, but there is one I cannot omit to mention:

The Idumeans and Zealots were in power in Jerusalem during the year 4065 A.M. After officially slaying Annas the High Priest they set up a mock Sanhedrin for the trial of "Zacharias the son of Baruch, one of the most eminent of the citizens." "His hatred of wickedness is what provoked their animosity against him." Zacharias pleaded his own cause so well that the seventy judges "brought in their verdict that the person accused was not guilty, choosing rather to die with him than to have his death laid at their door." "Then a great clamour arose among the zealots upon his acquittal, and two of the boldest of them fell upon Zacharias and slew him in the middle of the Temple, and threw his body into the valley beneath. Moreover, they struck the judges with the backs of their swords and thrust them out of the Court of the Temple" (Jos. IV, v, 4). That Moses, Daniel and particularly the Saviour foretold the coming of the Romans, the destruction of Jerusalem and the scattering of Judah is an accepted fact, but there is another prophecy of the Saviour, a most explicit one and the bulk of which is cast in the future tense, which is not generally recognized. I refer to that given to us in Matt. xxiii, 31-36. Many commentators, however, and especially Benjamin Wilson, as set forth in the Emphatic Diaglott, from which I quote below, maintain that Jesus Christ foretold the death of this very Zacharias the son of Baruch (Heb. the Blessed or Barachias the Greek form of the Hebrew Barachia, Blessed of Jah) in so many words and which came to pass as related above. "Ye also will fill up the measure of your fathers. Serpents, progeny of vipers, how can ye escape the judgment of Gehenna? On this account I send you Prophets, and Wise Men and Instructors; and some of them you will kill and crucify, and others you will scourge in your synagogues and persecute from city to city: So that all the innocent blood being shed in the land may come upon you from the blood of Abel the Just, to the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom you will murder between the Sanctuary (entrance of the Temple (F. Fenton)) and the altar. Indeed I say to you that all these things will come upon this generation." Mr. Wilson says that "in agreement with the context and with recorded facts he has thrown ἐ φονεύσατε, a word in the first aorist tense, into the future instead of the past" as usually translated. "Thus Abel was the first just person and this Zacharias the last whose blood should be required of that generation." This particular prophecy as to the slaying of Zacharias the son of Barachias nearly forty years later is one of the most remarkable to be found in the Scriptures, in that a definite name is mentioned.

THE PLACE AND VALUE OF THE ATONEMENT.

By HENRY D. HOUGHTON.

IN recent articles ("What is the Vital Point of Conversion?"), the Atonement has been scarcely touched; let us now look at that marvellous work.

Atonement and conversion are two separate and distinct things. Let us not confuse them.

Atonement is a punishment received or price paid by an innocent one on purpose to free the guilty. Conversion is a work done in man himself.

Atonement is something done for man, conversion something done in him.

Atonement is something undergone by another, conversion something undergone by man himself.

The ground of the sinner's acceptance with God is the one all-prevailing sacrifice of Christ, accomplished, finished, completed long ago on Calvary, and available for all men of every colour and race; but that is not conversion!

All are atoned for; but all are not converted! All have the price paid for them, and freedom offered; but all will not accept it!

But all may: indeed they may; but how?

What is the point or process of accepting?

By taking Christ as Lord, believing and confessing His Name!

But now as to the Atonement.

We are told that "Without shedding of blood is no remission." But there had been of old a long-continued daily shedding of blood which we are told "could never take away sin." Why? Why? The sacrifices were not good enough!

Our children's hymn is absolutely true to Scripture:—

"There was no other good enough
To pay the price of sin:
He only could unlock the gate
Of heaven and let us in."

"For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins." (Heb. x, 4.)

And Christ Himself would not have been good enough if He had been only man!

No man can offer a ransom for his fellow, much less become a sacrifice for all the world.

The Divine Sonship of our ever-adored Lord alone has made this possible. He is "The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

The prophets, as they looked down the ages and saw the coming of the One Sacrifice for sins, did they see the thief on the right of those three hanging on Calvary, as the Sin-bearer? Oh, no! Or the thief on the left, as the Sin-bearer? Oh, no! It was the One in the centre! Why? Why? Where was the difference? Note the similarity of their position. All three were crucified on the same day: all nailed to the cross by the brutal soldiers of Rome: all nailed to a similar cross: all reared up together on the hill Calvary: all alike a spectacle to angels, devils and men: all taunted and jeered at by an unfeeling crowd!

Where was the difference?

The difference lay in WHO HE WAS!

St. Peter says: "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree." But who is he speaking of? The thief on the right? The one on the left? Oh, no! There must be a better and nobler One than either of those to bear the world's guilt! They were not good enough!

But why the Man in the centre? The only answer is this, "He was more than man!"

Take the case of the dying thief on the cross, of whom we sing:

"The dying thief rejoiced to see That fountain in his day."

Though saved by Christ at the last hour of life, it is only by poetic imagination that it could be said that he saw the fountain.

He never did see it. It had never been shown to him, he knew nothing at all about it. But he did know that the strange figure who hung beside him was no mere man!

He had never heard of the Atonement, though he was present at the awful tragedy. Nevertheless, by the gracious compassion of God, its full benefits were all to be his.

But note, the saving portion of the cry he utters lies in the very first word, "Lord!" "LORD, remember me when Thou comest into Thy Kingdom."

St. Matthew says that both thieves at first railed on Jesus. But through the awful happenings of those hours upon the Cross there had come to one of them the conviction that Christ was Lord, not man. And thus the great Sacrifice (though not yet quite complete) became available for him in all its fulness!

And if the other thief had but said the same worshipful words to the same Divine Being, there would have been two saved thieves; though neither of them knew the why and wherefore of that Cross of agony, nor why Christ (like they) hung dying upon it.

The one thief, feeling in his heart that Christ was the Son of God, exactly as did the Roman centurion, cried out, "Lord, remember me." And that simplest of all prayers was heard!

Now there are thousands to-day who have uttered (more than once) a cry exactly similar to that of the dying thief, and to the same (but now exalted) Lord, what about these?

This strange simplicity of the Gospel plan is current right at the end of the Age, for in Acts ii, 21, we read: "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."

Oh, there is a great army going to march into Heaven under that banner! Saved? Yes! But how? Of course by the Sacrifice of the Cross: there is no other way. But the calling on the Name of the Lord shall make its virtue theirs, exactly as it did to the dying thief.

But some may say, "If salvation comes by belief, what about the devils? They believe and tremble."

Indeed they do, and with full cause. There are three insuperable reasons why devils cannot be saved.

Digitized by Google

(1) They were the wicked authors of the revolt against Jehovah! Man was only a deceived dupe of theirs.

(2) Devils are not included in the scope of the Atonement! It was "FOR US MEN." "Jesus Christ, by the grace of God, tasted death FOR EVERY MAN."

(3) They are, and for ever will be, unrepentant!

Let it be said that if man can break down the Deity of Our Lord, then His atoning Sacrifice falls to the ground.

On the contrary, let that Deity be established as it is by the life, miracles, death and resurrection of Our Lord, then the full force of the atoning work on Calvary comes into operation, and is seen to be a living, vital, renewing thing, with all the force and power of the Godhead behind it.

But what next? Is there something more? Great and even glorious as the discovery and acknowledgment of Christ as the Son of God is, yet that is not all. The new life having been given, the new calling begun, there is with it a new responsibility.

And only those who acknowledge Him as Lord, and so receive through Him eternal life, can consciously begin to live that new life, engage in its finer and diviner work, and shoulder its sweet responsibilities.

The life, however, having been begun, it must be lived. The new Spirit put within the man must now take control. And this is not mere religiousness. It is the new nature growing and expanding, so that every evil habit of the old nature shall be swallowed up in a sterner and more unyielding impulse. "CHRIST IN YOU the hope of glory."

But what about the words, "Ye must be born again"?

Let us never forget that all birth, whether animal, human, or Divine, must proceed from the parent.

No offspring ever created itself! Only as the parent gives life to the child can any child be born! Exactly so with God.

We cannot "born" ourselves of God! He alone can do that!

Man cannot even born himself into a higher family on earth. He must be born in the family to be of the family!

Further, man can only reproduce man! By no process of education or improvement can he ever make himself Divine!

The impulse of the Divine must come from the Divine!

Man, left alone, must ever remain what he is; simply man! Nothing more!

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." (John iii, 6.)

Though Christ declared to Nicodemus the fact that he must be born again, He does not tell him that he can climb up into that New Birth!

Indeed, He showed him very clearly that the Divine impulse must come from without.

"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." (John iii, 8.)

The wind lights upon our faces, wherefrom we know not; we feel its reviving yet unseen influence, and we know not who it passes on to next: the Divine blessing seeming as erratic and uncertain as the wind, yet as surely coming from God.

Perhaps one may then ask, "Then how can we be blamed if we do not possess it?"

Now though man cannot call down upon himself that Divine influence or seize upon or claim the Divine nature, it is the privilege of all to possess it. God gives it, and gives it to all who comply with the condition—believe and confess Christ. "To as many as received Him" (Christ the Lord) "to them gave He power to become the Sons of God, even to them that believe on His name, which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

Notice that word "POWER." This is not merely the privilege, great as that would be, it is the "POWER TO BECOME."

It is not merely the right to the estate, it is the entering into possession.

Thus the believing on the Name of Jesus, the accepting and confessing Him as the Son of God, makes the believer also a son. That is clearly the meaning and promise of the word in John i just quoted.

St. John, in his Epistle (1 John v, 1), sums it up very briefly, but with tremendous force and power:—"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."

And this comes to "Whosoever"; there does not seem one single exception.

The giving of the new nature, the generation, is directly from God! Man's part is to believe on and accept Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and so by believing have life through His Name.

Then there follows the practical part.

"Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" (1 John v, 5.) There is the outcome of the faith! Believing that Jesus is the Son of God WE ARE MADE OVERCOMERS!

St. John, in his Epistles, is very definite and forceful. "Beloved . . . try the spirits whether they are of God." Then there follow instructions how to try them.

"Hereby know ye the spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God. And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist whereof ye have heard that it should come." (1 John iv, 1-3.)

"Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God." (v. 15.)

This is the true Scriptural test for all faiths, for all theories, and for all professions.

It would be well for all men to try their beliefs and theories here.

What about all those of many professions and many isms who deny Our Lord's divinity? How will these stand?

It seems very startling to be told that all who refuse to confess Jesus as the Christ are not of God; and form the spirit of Antichrist. But that is evidently what it says. And no good can come of hiding the truth.

Methinks if these sweeping passages are true, they will make some sad and unexpected changes when the testing comes.

WAS JESUS CHRIST THE SON OF GOD?

That seems the cleaving, dividing thing! Do we so believe in Him? Is that our confidence and our hope, even as it was that of all the Apostles?

If not, St. John says that we are displaying the spirit of Antichrist, and we are not of God! A most terrible conclusion!

Digitized by Google

Now we do know that the great Antichrist is to appear, and certain people are to side with him. Will all who display the spirit of Antichrist follow their leader in the great day of testing? Most probably they will!

But St. John indicates that they are siding with him now! "And this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come, and even now already is it in the world." (v. 3.) So then the Antichrist's agents are doing his work before he appears in person!

If the teachings of Christ were only the teachings of a man, however sincere and upright He might be, then their force and power in our lives will be much diminished, and His Sacrifice of no avail.

But if He was the Son of God, the knowledge of this truth being treasured in our hearts will have a vital and energizing effect on our lives and conduct; and the great scheme of Redemption through Christ, the Crucified One, will become to us an accomplished fact.

"He that saith, I know Him, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him."

"He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk, even as He walked." (I John ii, 4-6.)

"He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." (v. 12.) So then, as none can have life but those who have the Son of God, and none can have the Son of God except they believe in Him as the Son of God, the whole world stands to be tried by those simple but far-reaching words of Our Lord, "DOST THOU BELIEVE ON THE SON OF GOD." (John ix, 35.)

Happy indeed are we if we can take up with our hearts those words of Peter, and say:—"Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God." (John vi, 69.)

Dear readers, let us try the spirits: let us try our own, let us be sure that Christ is to us not merely a man, a good man, a super-man, but nothing less than God manifest in the flesh, the one complete Sacrifice and Atonement for the world's guilt, an offering once for all, never, never to need repeating. AND EVERY MAN MAY SHARE IN IT BY BELIEVING AND CONFESSING CHRIST AS THE SON OF GOD.

The writer is encouraged to hope that through this simple testimony, and while these words are being read, and similar intense words of recognition and confession uttered like to those of the dying thief, "Lord, remember me," or, perhaps, "Lord, save me," there shall come to many more, like him, the healing and help and blessing they so earnestly desire. It may be so: for Jesus Our Lord is still the same to-day.

KINGDOM GOSPEL—THE LAW.

BY H. E. TURNER.

IT may have been observed throughout this series of articles on "Kingdom Gospel" that they were resumes of the Rev. Pascoe Goard's subjects, sketches in brief of the more important points; this article likewise is the result of a study, mere gleamings, from Mr. Pascoe Goard's masterly work on "The Law of the Lord, or the Common Law."

The law in its inception was enacted by Almighty God; at Sinai it was delivered by the Lord to the children of Israel, decreed for their use. The law is composed of the ecclesiastical law consisting of Ordinances, and the national law, the first or law of sacrifice, which ceased with the Aaronic ministry in A.D. 70 at the destruction of the Temple, does not come within our subject.

The National Law of the Lord, consisting of Commandments, Statutes and Judgments, pre-eminent for the use of man, continues its procedure, and remains in force to Israel, but outside the pale of Israel its adoption is by free choice as its name "Common Law" betokens, free to all people. The law in Great Britain consists of the "Law of the Lord," or the Common Law and Parliamentary Law; fundamentally it is the "Common Law," and legislatively it is a departure from the Common Law "unchangeably fixed in the Bible, which is the authoritative expression of that Law," whose statutes are distinct and concise, but adequately comprehensive and wise, immeasurably superior to Parliamentary Law, which is so often abstruse and wordy, imperfect and defective. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes. The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." (Psalm xix, 7, 8.)

The Common Law is the Law of the Kingdom of God, and is interwoven in the Gospel of the Kingdom. King of kings the "Lord is our Lawgiver"; "and His Kingdom ruleth over all"; as Monarch on the throne of David, King George V. is our ruler and lawful authority; by the Common Law, Great Britain, her Empire and the United States inherit exceptional freedom, "in the perfect law of liberty"; under the Common Law the covenant people possess a regal constitution, combining Church and State established on the foundation of omnipotence; the disestablishment of other Churches has confirmed the perpetual establishment of the Church of England, the mother Church, so that anticipated consideration of the disestablishment of that Church is puerile and a waste of time, for the gates of hell will not prevail against it.

Parliamentary legislation, having produced an overwhelming flood of statutes, in which the brain of an attorney-general is out of its depth, is an ineffectual burden on the nation; difficult of administration, costly to the individual, cumbrous and uncertain in action, it must, before long, give way before the restoration of the Law of the Lord in its perfection and integrity. "For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." (Matt. v, 18.)

The law was made necessary by the coming of sin into the world through disobedience; but for this, the perfection of an essentially good creation would have remained unimpaired, and then would not have been needful the tremendous sacrifice of the Son of God for the sins of the whole world, nor the occasion for the selection of a nation (Israel) to be God's servants and witnesses, necessary to convey, to all the families of the earth, the blessings of Abraham, awarded for his obedience, and to impart to all people the Gospel of Salvation, through Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ our King, by Whom, in the "times of the restitution of all things" the Kingdom of God will have become boundless, the felicity of the Garden of Eden will again gladden mankind, and the will of the Father "be done in earth as in heaven," for "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein." (Psalm xxiv, 1.)

AN ANSWER TO "HISTORICUS,"

WRITER OF AN ARTICLE APPEARING IN THE PUBLIC PRESS.

By Geo. Robert Gair.

"Historicus" makes many ambiguous and inaccurate statements, none of which have any foundation in the historical sciences or logical deduction. An example of this is given when he says: "The Rev. Pascoe Goard in his recent lecture on Armageddon . . . brushes aside the proved fact of our mixed race." The statement so emphatically made by this writer is contrary to known historical science. Prof. Huxley has said, "The invasion of the Saxons, the Goths, the Danes, and the Normans changed the language of Britain, but added no new physical element. Therefore we should not talk any more of Celts and Saxons, for they are all one. I never lose an opportunity of rooting up the false idea that the Celts and Saxons are different races." ("Race Origins.") Further, the same authority has stated: "I miss no opportunity of uprooting the notion that the people who form the British Nation are descended from various races. All the detachments who flowed into Britain are branches of the self-same stock." (See Huxley's Address at St. George's Hall, London, in "Unorthodox London," by the Rev. C. M. Davis.)

Freeman informs us that the Angles, Saxons, Jutes, Frisians, Danes and Normans and the peoples that swarmed across the sea into Britain were of the same stock. He says: "Thus grew up the English nation—a nation formed by the union of various tribes of the same stock. The Dane hardly needed assimilation, he was another kindred tribe, coming later than the others. Even the Norman was a kinsman." ("The Origin of the English Nation.") Whilst Jas. Bonwick, F.R.G.S., writes in "Who are the Irish": "The argument about the difference between the Anglo-Saxons and the Celts is a mere sham and delusion." L. A. Waddell, LL.D., C.B., C.I.E., says: "The Britons and Saxons are of the same race." In like manner Sir F. Palgrave ("English Commonwealth," Vol. I, p. 35) remarks: "Britons, Anglo-Saxons, Danes and Normans were all relations; however hostile, they were all kinsmen, shedding kindred blood."

Nicholson, likewise, supports the opinions already expressed by our foregoing authorities when he says: "A comparison of the various languages spoken in Britain, Ireland and Gaul in the time of Cæsar, in so far as these elements are now ascertainable, leads infallibly to the conclusion that those tribes and 'nations' who spoke them, though torn asunder by dissension, and widely separated by locality, constituted substantially but one people." ("Pedigree of the English People Investigated," p. 28.) Again he writes: "The researches of modern historians unequivocally favour the opinion that under the names of κελται, Γαλαται, Gauls, Gaels, Gwyddils, Celts, Cimmerii, Cimbri, Cymry, Brython, Lloegrians, Scots and Picts, only one race, under different tribe or clan divisions, political organizations and periods of existence, is spoken of . . . Still no such diversity prevailed as would materially affect their unity and integrity, and hence their classification as one people." (p. 36.) One might make one further very pointed quotation from the same writer: "The fundamental rule of science, whether in history or elsewhere, is not what has been believed, but what is true. The inquiry into what is true on the present subject discovers a strong link of relationship between the Cymry and the English."

An examination of the skulls of Scots and English clearly proves the purity of stock of the British Nation. This not only proves that contention alone, but also clearly evinces one paramount fact of ethnology in connection with the present matter, and that is, the British and Continentals are not of one stock. One writer has said: "The more we dig into the physical character of the English, Scottish, Welsh and Irish peoples, the more do anthropologists become convinced that all four nationalities are compounded out of exactly the same racial stocks of mankind." ("The British Medical Journal.")

We see that the purity of descent of the British race is not a matter of mere hypothesis, but is an established fact of science. The result therefore clearly shows that "Historicus" has built his first salient point upon inaccurate history.

The article in question goes on to say: "Our ancestors in these islands consisted mainly of Anglo-Saxons, a low German-speaking race." By this statement one concludes that he takes the evidence of philology alone as a positive proof of ethnic relativity—for he quotes no other evidence. Upon this authority therefore he goes on to say: "the Low-Germans, ... are the same blood as the Anglo-Saxons, and so are the Dutch, the Danes, the Norwegians and Normans."

Evidence of descent based entirely upon philology is not always authentic. To prove how futile such an hypothesis is, one need only quote the following example. In the Southern States of U.S.A. there is a large English-speaking population, but of ethnic negroid type. Upon the evidence of philology alone, without consulting the other sciences bearing upon this subject, one would classify these ethnic negroids as Aryan British. One, by this and other examples which could be mentioned, sees how ludicrous the position is when built simply upon the evidence of language. In the present question it is equally false to classify the Anglo-Saxons as Low-Germans because they spoke a Germanic tongue. The bare statement that the Anglo-Saxons are a people akin to these Low-German races is not sufficient when the only basis for such a theory is and has only been comparative philology.

The weakness of the whole of this position is easily seen from the statements of well-known anthropologists. Prof. Sir Arthur Keith, F.R.C.S., F.R.S., says: "It is undeniable, from an anthropologist's point of view, that the British and Germans belong to opposite European types." Prof. Sir Walter Raleigh, of Oxford University, has said: "The alleged kinship of England and Germany is based on bad history and doubtful theory." Raleigh further says: "The British hat will not fit a German head," which remark clearly shows the difference in craniological type.

Digitized by Google

The theory of relationship between the Germanic (or Teutonic) races and the British is further destroyed by other well-known ethnologists and historians. Dr. Latham has said: "Throughout the whole length and breadth of Germany there is not one village, hamlet or family which can show definite signs of descent from the Continental ancestors of the Angles of England. There is not a man, woman or child who can say, 'I have pure Angle blood in my veins.'" ("Ethnology of the British Islands," p. 217.) Prof. W. J. Ripley speaks of the head as being the best available test of race known, and states that the British people are remarkable in the uniformity of the head shape. He says: "This ethnological comparison proves that the Anglo-Saxon peoples must be of an entirely different stock from the present German race, and that they therefore do not belong to the Teuton stock." ("Races of Europe.") J. R. Green, the historian, has written: "The whole of the Engle people forsook their earliest seats for the shores of Britain." ("The Making of England," Vol. I, p. 56.)

These statements are all supported by certain of our ancient chronicles. The "Anglo-Saxon Chronicle" says that all the Saxons left the Continent of Europe for Britain, whilst Roger of Wendover's "Flores Historiarum"—"Flowers of History"—gives the impression that in process of time the Angles and Saxons gradually emigrated from the Continent altogether, for he says, speaking of the old home of the Angles, that it "is said to have remained desert from that time to this day."

A scrupulous examination of history and ethnology lucidly reveals the fact that the British people are not a heterogeneous mass descended from various races and peoples, but are one people of one stock, and that the Anglo-Saxon portion of the British people is in no wise related to the Continental peoples known as Low-German or Teutonic.

Another factor to be taken into consideration in trying to establish this futile argument of relationship is the invasion of Saxony by Karl the Great (Charlemagne). History informs us that the remnant of the Saxons in the country in those days were deported to Flanders, and appear in British history in connection with William the Conqueror (A.D. 1066) and his settlement, and later as the Flemings. In their stead non-Saxons were placed in Saxony, who took the honours and names of their predecessors, and were ruled by an Elector of the true Saxon line; thus they became foisted upon the world as "Saxons," whereas they are Teutons.

"Historicus" falls into another grievous error when he classifies the Danes, Norwegians and Dutch as of the same stock as ourselves. These peoples are admittedly nearly related to the present Germanic races. It follows logically, therefore, that they cannot be connected ethnically with the British, seeing that this race is not related to the German. Therefore we must conclude that the Danes and Norwegians, of modern times, are nationally not related to the Danes and Norsemen who invaded these islands of ours. From historical evidence it has been found that the peoples forming the present British race were continually superseded in their ancient Continental homes by races who adopted their names, although of totally different stocks. From an ethnological standpoint, the Danes of the present time are largely Teutonic, whilst the dark Teutonic strain can be traced throughout the whole of the modern Danish race, which is entirely the antithesis of the ancient fair Aryan type of Dane or Vi-King. The same applies largely to the Swedes and Norwegians. In these nationalities, however, there are large admixtures, not only of Teutonic blood, but also of Finnish and Slavonic. The Swedes, in fact, now generally recognize themselves that they are not the descendants of the ancient Goths who once inhabited Scandinavia, but are descended from the invading races following upon the evacuation of the Gothic tribes.

This opponent also speaks of the Welsh, Irish and Highlanders of Scotland as being totally distinct from the other British races which he mentions. This position, as we have already demonstrated, is entirely wrong. These peoples are entirely identical with the Gothic or Sakian portion of the British race. In fact, upon good authority one can say definitely that "Ibhrian" (Keltic) and "Sakian" (Gothic) are of one and the same origin and race. The very fact that "Historicus" quotes Mr. Weigall's statement that the "Anglo-Saxons inter-married with the ancient British in the parts settled by them" does not disprove our position, but assists in establishing it. The fact of rapid amalgamation demonstrates the nearness of relationship between the Briton and Saxon.

The statement that the "French Bretons . . . are of the same blood as the Welsh" is likewise untenable. The Bretons, according to M. Paul Broca, so far from being of the Aryan physical type, are a short, dark-complexioned and round-headed race. Davis and Thurnan, in their "Crania Britannica" and Dr. Beddoe's papers, disclose conclusively that the Welsh people are a long-headed people and, therefore, of a markedly different racial type to the Bretons. The Bretons are a race of people who came into contact with the original Galli (ancestors of the Britons). In fact, the Bretons were conquered by the Galli and derived their Armoric language and culture from that race. Hence, although linguistically having affinity, these races, according to ethnology, are of opposite types.

Hence one clearly sees that the British race from history, ethnology, craniology and philology are undoubtedly pure in race; whilst, on equally good authority, no relationship of a national or semi-national character exists between them and the Continental races. The result is that the pioneer work which this Society has undertaken from this view-point is amply justified and authenticated.

MEDITATION.

BY DR. T. G. WAKELING, O.B.E.

ONE of the great drawbacks to the present-day life is the want of time and opportunity to meditate, to think over things and get their right perspective, to let our minds run smoothly on until there comes stealing almost subconsciously the solution to problems that have troubled us. This, amid the din and turmoil of life to-day, is almost, if not quite, impossible, whereby we lose our sense of proportion. We take hasty decisions and pass hasty judgment, many of which we later find to be wrong. Life to-day, compared to that of half a century ago, is much more strenuous, our body and brain works at a much higher speed, and questions, which had they come to us when calm and collected would have been easy of solution, now vex and assume an importance far beyond the reality; thoughts crowd us of things left undone and with them comes a feeling of distress of inability to cope with matters that press us. We force ourselves to deal with them and the work leaves behind it a feeling of thankfulness that it is over, combined with a feeling of irritation that the effort had been necessary, and we look forward with a longing to the time when a rest can be taken. For the young this partakes more of the character of a change of air and scene, with new things to see and fresh experiences to encounter.

To the more elderly the craving is for bodily and mental rest, when the thoughts can turn to matters that seem to become more important as the years pass by, but which in the struggle of life, though always present, tend to be pressed to one side; regretfully this is permitted, and somewhere in the future, it is hoped that an opportunity may be given for quiet consideration of questions that haunt and will not be repelled.

In a lesser degree our forefathers felt this, although in their day bodily and mental strain was not nearly so severe.

In religious history there are many examples, striking in their results to mankind, where withdrawal from the world with its daily worries has enabled messages of the highest importance to be given.

We do not know what inspires our thoughts nor whence they come, but we do know that when rested and at peace beautiful thoughts come to us; faith is strengthened and hope renewed, and charity, not the mere giving of alms, to our brothers is not so difficult; for this was commanded of us, and in obeying we have felt a sense of relief, our sense of proportion comes back to us and we see things in a different light; the world becomes again a beautiful place, and our duty less distasteful.

Where can we go? The atmosphere must be friendly, not repellent. The associations must be fitting, not entertaining. We must be left alone with our thoughts to arrange them, to put them in order, to look back over the years, and then to look forward, to remember and give thanks for the Divine guidance that has been ours, that now we have the time to think is so plain to us that we wonder we had thought so little of it, and a feeling of shame creeps over us combined with a determination that we will not err in so doing again, but will give thanks for the watchfulness, for which we had not asked, that has guided our footsteps and controlled our actions.

At Glastonbury, in the quiet season, we may find, there in the cradle of our faith in Britain, the atmosphere that we crave. There we can step back into the past and think of what that sacred spot has seen, if it could speak and tell us of those who came after the Crucifixion of Our Lord; of the Spirit that led them there and comforted them with the presence of their kinsmen. Of the wondrous rays of light that spread out from that place over our land an confirmed to the British their birthright of which they knew so little; of what it has meant to the world, not only to ourselves. A sense of awe will creep over us and wonder that our God has been so patient and long-suffering with all our faults; truly we have suffered, but not as we deserved, for humility has not been our characteristic. We are as our forefathers were then, "a stiff-necked generation," but He has fulfilled with a generous hand all the promises made to our forefathers. And the least we can do is to come apart, sometimes, and in some quiet place meditate upon the goodness and mercy that have been shown to us, and to those whose hearts are sore at the loss of dearly-loved ones. There will come the assurance that all is well, otherwise why Glastonbury at all? The very place proclaims the Saviour's words: "In My Father's House are many mansions, I go to prepare a place for you."

THE SHORTENING OF THE TIMES.

By C. C. Ogilvy Van Lennep.

My previous article on this subject has recently been questioned, in The National Message and Banner, as seriously as its importance deserves by no less an authority than Dr. W. Gornold. But as Dr. Gornold considers that I had made at least one unpardonable blunder in my article, I venture to reply that he seems to have missed one of my main points, from which the date that I did give was a natural consequence. What I wanted to make quite clear was: (a) That the Angel Gabriel's words to Daniel, taken in conjunction with the context of the whole of that prophet's 9th chapter read in the light of simple common sense, tell us that it was 483 years from the first year of Darius the Mede "unto the Messiah the Prince"; and (b) That it was not quite seventy years from Nebuchadnezzar's first siege of Jerusalem to the first year of Darius the Mede.

Naturally I am aware that influences other than the context above mentioned have "concealed" these facts, but facts they are, none the less—self-evident facts, as Mr. Goard calls another range of equally unrecognized facts in the same issue of The National Message and Banner. Daniel's words are so clear that it is astounding that anyone should ever have imagined that Artaxerxes Longimanus, who reigned about eighty years after this "Commandment" went forth, should have had anything to do with the matter.

These are the days of specialization, and I have specialized for nearly a decade in the study of Bible chronology as set forth in its own words. By that I mean that I have followed the very words of the Bible whithersoever they have led me, whether in agreement with Ptolemy and other sources of ancient chronology or not. Such specialization has forced upon me the opinion (amounting to certainty) that a great deal of the usually accepted dating of later Old Testament events is untrue; moreover, it has forced upon me the belief that certain other mighty truths have been thereby obscured. To explain would demand far too much space, so I can only refer Dr. Gornold to the result of my long years of study, which is to be published this autumn in a book called "The Measured Times of The Bible," a copy of which I should be happy to be allowed to present to him.

Of course Dr. Gornold is entirely right when he speaks, in delightful phrase, of the "unerring calendarics" of Scripture. But those "calendarics" have proved a stumbling-block to most chronologers, for it is notorious that no two—except perhaps Ussher and his imitator Lloyd—are agreed about them. Human error enters largely into the matter, and obviously they must be interpreted aright in order to be of value. Naturally I do not say that I have never made a mistake, but I do affirm that

I have reverently and faithfully, I might almost say blindly, accepted the words of the Bible as my only guide, sometimes even against my own preconceived inclination; with quite remarkable results.

As an instance of a specific date, my studies have forced upon me the belief that Hezekiah was besieged by Sennacherib's army in A.A. 3336, or, as Dr. Gornold would call it (in a wholly desirable and unmistakable manner) in minus 664. This unexpected date is proved by the Bible itself in a very remarkable and wonderful way; therefore I ask him to withhold his own, possibly shocked, incredulity until he has seen the proof.

A PERSONAL TESTIMONY TO THE VALUE OF BRITISH-ISRAEL TEACHING.

As a son of a Nonconformist minister, I was naturally brought up in a religious atmosphere. Both my parents sought to lead their three children from the cradle in the ways of righteousness, and my mother often used to devote Sunday evening to giving her children Biblical teaching. I happened to be the only boy and, being of a studious temperament, my father's library was my happy hunting-ground. Those who know what a Nonconformist library would be likely to consist of twenty years ago will have a fair idea of what was taking root in a fertile mind. However, in this century no amount of home training and seclusion can utterly keep out the deceptive yet very virile seeds of modern thought, broadcast as they are from Press and platform. Prior to the outbreak of war and my going to France, I had succeeded in battling against the current to this extent: I really desired to do right and serve Christ. Instinct told me modern thought was tantamount to respectable atheism. On the other hand, that system of spiritualizing the prophecies which, of course, impregnated all the religious literature that came my way, really jarred against my mathematically exact instincts, but knowing no better, I made myself believe, yet never felt totally at ease.

Then came France and its struggles. I fought and fought and fought to retain faith; all to no effect. For truth I pined, but could never bring religious teaching sufficiently to earth to feel anything like a firm foundation. In all the agony of mind of one who felt there lay only the choice of complete religious indifference or something worse, I definitely prayed, "Give me understanding, oh God, give me understanding." Just at that time, my father, who had no idea of my state of mind, came into contact with one who had conscious knowledge of our racial origin, and who passed him on some literature. This in a purely casual manner was sent on to me. I instantly recognized the truth when I saw it. I wrote to the publishers for various works advertised, and got into contact with the donor, who kept me supplied. How wonderful it was that I could look upon the fulfilment of the prophecies in a literal manner, and then when I found Biblical chronology confirmed mathematically in the Great Pyramid, I could have danced with delight.

I got sufficiently interested to be thrilled when I saw Jerusalem captured by Lord Allenby in the 1335th Mohammedan year; and to look forward to June, 1919, seven times from the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, and see the Treaty of Versailles signed at that exact time.

But it brought a sword too. Open confession inevitably must, and all those who value the teaching have felt it in a greater or lesser degree. Shortly after my return from France, in a turmoil of conflict, I read the second book of Esdras again and again, and how open and unsealed it is to a British-Israelite.

But whatever conflicts have been experienced since, the greatest conflict was fought and won in France. There I obtained a bed-rock, which, according to promise, no powers have succeeded in shifting. It used to be, "I tried to believe and could not." But now, so surely have I traced the works of the God of Israel, it is just the reverse. "If I tried to disbelieve I could not," no more than could an Israelite who had witnessed the plagues on Egypt and passed through the Red Sea.

I have been spared much in that my own family have received it, and my elder sister, who is responsible for two little ones, is wide awake to the fact that her children will need teaching like this to keep them in the way of truth.

Open-air meetings have been held at Clapham Common and Leytonstone Road, and on Sunday, the 2nd, in Hyde Park, afternoon and evening. After the street-corner meeting in the East End, many went along to our book-room in Leytonstone Road for literature. The Hyde Park meetings were splendid, and considered by the speakers to be the most successful, and a delightful ending to the series for this season.

During August Mr. Wm. Whitton addressed twenty open-air meetings—twelve at Bridlington, six at Beverley, and one each at Sheffield and Barnsley; these in addition to the usual indoor meetings.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

TIME flies. We are now almost within a fortnight of the Congress, to which thousands have been looking forward with eager expectation. Applications for tickets and railway vouchers are pouring in daily from all parts, including places as far apart as West Cornwall and Inverness; the Isle of Man and Jersey and Guernsey; Ireland and East Anglia. Here we would remark that the cheap fares include the sea passages from the Irish ports. Our Branches advise us of the coming of many of their members. Canada is sending a strong contingent, America also; while Africa, Australia, New Zealand, India and the East will be represented. All will be cordially welcomed. No British-Israelites should miss these gatherings. If any are hesitating, we earnestly beg them to come to a quick decision, and not allow any obstacles—save insurmountable ones—to stand in their way. We want this Congress to be the greatest yet held and to have the widest possible influence. Will every reader please help in some way or another; a blessing awaits everyone who will. There is a great hall to be filled daily. There are people who might come if YOU invited them or sent them a leaflet, and who might not if you failed. Please remember, though Headquarters' staff works night and day, success cannot be attained without the co-operation and active support of the readers of this journal. Posters and leaflets are available in any quantities for those who will make use of them. The latter we are posting in thousands. You can surely post a dozen or two to people whose names and addresses you have, and we have not. Think of the good that may accrue from perhaps even one leaflet reaching a particular person.

Our very best and warmest thanks are hereby tendered to all who have so kindly responded to our appeal for funds for the heavy expenses of the Congress—publicity especially. Like Oliver Twist, our cry is for more, please. In a Cause like ours little can be done without publicity, and it is a heavy item, as we feel sure our readers will recognize. Again, "He gives twice who gives quickly" is the old saying; and as a clergyman said at one of the meetings not long since: "If our Movement is of any importance, it is of PRIME IMPORTANCE!"

* * *

In response to enquiries, we would say that the programme will, as before, be ready for the first day of the Congress, and we can assure all enquirers that they may expect experienced speakers at each meeting. The Rev. Pascoe Goard, the Rev. Dr. McConnell, and Professor Odlum will (D.V.) speak at the opening meeting, Monday afternoon, October 1st, and at several subsequent meetings.

Morning sessions for delegates and members will be held daily at 11 o'clock at H.Q. from Tuesday, October 2nd, to Saturday, October 6th.

The adjourned Annual Meeting of members for the election of the Council will be held at H.Q. on Thursday, October 4th, at 5.45 p.m.

* * *

Meetings will be held at H.Q. each Wednesday afternoon and Thursday evening during this month. All are invited.

On August 20th and 21st the British-Israel Association in Vancouver, B.C., held two meetings in Wesley Church, at which Rev. W. Pascoe Goard and Prof. E. Odlum gave their farewell addresses prior to leaving on their lecture tours across Canada and the United States, en route to England.

In June Mr. Goard kindly gave three lectures in the same large church, a thousand people being present each evening, and later on he addressed a meeting in St. Paul's Parish Hall. His presence among his Vancouver friends and the reports he gave of the growth of the Movement, as well as concerning Empire affairs from the standpoint of the centre of the Empire, lent a great stimulus to the Vancouver Association.

Mr. Goard has been addressing meetings in U.S.A. and Professor Odlum in Canada; they and Mr. W. H. Blackaller are leading speakers at the Toronto Conference proceeding as we go to press. They sail from Montreal for London on 14th inst., also Rev. E. J. Springett, Mr. S. J. Frame and others.

Our promising Branch at Harrogate held a successful meeting at the Y.M.C.A. on September 4th, when Dr. Rutherford presided, and Mr. J. Foster Beaver gave an excellent address, which was received with much applause. There was a good sale of literature.

* * *

The Rev. Commander Roberts reports on a successful visit to the West. He addressed a number of meetings in Teignmouth and Bath, and had many conversations with clergymen and others, and he finds that opposition is giving way to enquiry.

* * *

We regret to hear of the death of Mr. W. H. E. W. Roberts, a brother of Commander Roberts. He had attained the ripe age of 86. He accepted Israel Truth in early life, and was a regular reader of our journals. He passed peacefully away on September 4th. We tender our sympathy to our beloved Commander and his family.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The coloured Chart depicts in clear, simple form, historically and by aid of maps, the amazing story of the Anglo-Saxon Race.

It traces the genealogies, by direct succession, of Their Majesties King George V., Queen Mary, and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, back through the Royal House of David to Adam. It shows how the British Coat of Arms is built up from ancient emblems given to our race some 4,000 years ago. The Chart illustrates the contemporary history of the Houses of Judah and Israel. Starting with the genealogy from Adam to Jacob's twelve sons, it shows the beginning of the chosen Race from Hebrew stock; includes the Covenant Promises to Abraham (fulfilled in the Anglo-Saxons, and in no other race); gives the Promises to Judah of the Sceptre; to Ephraim of the Birthright; and to David of the perpetual Throne. Continuing, it carries on the contemporary history of the two Houses of Judah and Israel till each went into captivity—the story of the House of Israel from the reign of David, 1056 B.C. to their deportation to Assyria in 721 B.C., then a consecutive narrative of their migrations (with map) down to their final arrival in the British Isles in A.D. 1066. The contemporary history of the House of Judah, till they also were carried captive, in two sections. Section I. follows the Jewish Race down to A.D. 70; includes our Lord's Life and Death; the final siege of Jerusalem, and the scattering of the Jews all over the world. Section II. traces Princess Tamar Tephi and the prophet Jeremiah into Ireland—her marriage, and the continuation of the Royal Line of David; tells the story of the Coronation Stone and how it was finally deposited in Westminster Abbey.

The history of the Anglo-Saxons in America—the Tribe of Manasseh—is also included in the Chart. The Book (numbered to correspond with the chart) amplifies the history and shows the identity of ten-tribed Israel with the British Empire and the U.S.A.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—XI.

EZEKIEL—continued.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, F.R.G.S.

The Elders of Judah.

We now come to a dated occasion for which the year, month and day are given. The sixth year; the sixth month; the fifth day of the month in Ezekiel's house. Before him sat the elders of Judah.

Let us take particular note of this, for the preceding part of the message has been given to the elders of Israel.

In a later part of the prophecy the elders of Israel again appear before Ezekiel.

The difference between the two sets of persons coming from the two branches of the people would be similar to the difference to-day between an Anglo-Saxon congregation and a Jewish congregation, each assembling at different times to hear the same preacher.

Ezekiel, the minister to the Israel captivity, was on this occasion called to speak to a congregation of the elders of Judah.

It will be remembered that, as the Apostle declared, to Judah was committed the oracles of God. From the beginning the Bible declared "Judah was his sanctuary and Israel his dominion."

The character of the message to the elders of Judah was different from that to the elders of Israel; and the above may stand as the explanation why.

Let us read carefully the 8th chapter of Ezekiel. The prophet is taken in the spirit to Jerusalem, and there is caused to see the false worship and the abominations carried on in secret and in public in the Temple of God. (Ezek. viii, 3, 4.)

In the third and fourth verses we read:—

"And he put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north; where was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.

And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I saw in the plain."

"Strange statement is made that in the Temple was both "the image of jealousy which provoketh to jealousy" and also "the glory of the God of Israel was there." (Ezek. viii, 5, 6.)

"Then said he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold northward at the gate of the altar this image of jealousy in the entry.

He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations."

This matter was open to the light of day.

Now for the secret hidden thing. (Verses 7-12.)

"And he brought me to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold a hole in the wall.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door.

And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here.

So I went in and saw; and behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, pourtrayed upon the wall round about.

And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan, with every man his censer in his hand; and a thick cloud of incense went up.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, The Lord seeth us not; the Lord hath forsaken the earth."

This secret chamber of imagery manifestly refers to the impure imaginations of the spiritual leaders of the people, which were substituted for the pure Word of God. (Verses 13, 14.)

"He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do.

Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord's house which was toward the north; and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz."

This was the ancient worship, still perpetuated in the worship of the Madonna and Child. (Verses 15, 16.)

"Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these.

And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east; and they worshipped the sun toward the east."

Here we have Natural Science in the ascendant; the handiwork of the Creator usurping the place of the Creator Himself in the worship of the people. (Verses 17, 18.)

"Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger: and, lo, they put the branch to their nose.

Therefore will I also deal in fury: mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them."

Now we are given to see in chapter ix a bit of the ceaseless activities which are carried on in the Superior Administration; that is to say, the direct Administration of Jehovah in Judah. It is not a frequent procedure; it is ONE OUTSTANDING ACT OF DIVINE JUSTICE AND PURIFICATION which has been finally taken after ages of warning.

It is a terrible thing when the High Court of Eternal Justice pronounces sentence, and orders the execution of the sentence, upon a nation! Read carefully and prayerfully chapter ix.

Mark how in the midst of the administration of justice verse 4 declares, "And the Lord said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof." Thus in the midst of general disaster those who bear the seal of God in their forehead walk safely.

Read now verse 10 and see that fire was taken from the altar and scattered over the city, evidently by way of making an atonement.

Read also with reverence the marvellous chapters x and xi. Note that one of the rebellious princes of the people fell down and died as Ezekiel prophesied. Immediately Ezekiel prayed for the remnant of Israel.

THE FALSE ASSUMPTION OF THE INHABITANTS OF JERUSALEM.

There is now pre-written that attitude of mind assumed by the Jews, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, when Israel had been removed from the land, namely, that from that time forth Israel was cast out, and they were inheritors of Israel's land and rights. This attitude of mind continues among them at the present day, and in this attitude of mind that part of the Christian Church which is interested in missions to the Jews is mistakenly doing their best to fortify them.

Because this is a standing statement, as true to-day as it was when uttered, we must quote it in full. (Ezekiel xi, 14-21.)

"Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the Lord: unto us is this land given in possession.

Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.

Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel.

And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof and all the abominations thereof from thence.

And I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh:

That they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

But as for them whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things and their abominations, I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord God."

THE DEPARTURE OF THE GLORY OF GOD.

We come to one of the very great days in history.

We know of the time, and the significance of the time, when Our Lord withdrew from the Temple at Jerusalem. He had tried in vain to secure the co-operation and conversion of the Aaronic priesthood. He had tried in vain to cause the Temple at Jerusalem to continue to be the centre of Christian faith and activity; and He had failed!

Digitized by Google

We say He had endeavoured to induce the priesthood to continue to be the ministers, and the Temple the centre of Christian faith. It should be remembered that up to the time of the rejection of Our Lord the priests, the faith centring in the Temple, and the Temple itself, were essentially CHRISTIAN.

It is true that they were Christian in the sense that their faith looked forward to Christ Who should come. They were believers in the prophetic Christ. This is proved by the fact that when the three wise men arrived at Jerusalem, and made their enquiry of Herod the king, he in turn called the Sanhedrin together and "demanded of them where the Christ should be born." They answered immediately "In Bethlehem of Judea, for thus it is written by the prophet . . ."

They had been believers in the prophetic Christ; they rejected the contemporary Christ, and deny still the historic Christ.

When that rejection was made in the Temple, Our Lord said, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate, for henceforth ye shall see me no more until ye shall say Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

This, on the natural plane, was the repetition of that which had been enacted in the spiritual plane centuries before. From the time of the dedication of Solomon's Temple to the year, month and day indicated by Ezekiel, the glory of the God of Israel had dwelt in the holiest place.

But now the time of His departure had come. He could not continue to dwell in a House defiled by idolatry and the practice of abominations. Therefore we read (Ezekiel xi, 22-25)—

"Then did the cherubims lift up their wings, and the wheels beside them; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

And the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city.

Afterwards the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity. So the vision that I had seen went up from me.

Then I spake unto them of the captivity all the things that the Lord had shewed me."

It is difficult to decide whether to leave this quotation without comment, but we fear that in doing so the importance of this dated testimony would be overlooked. Evidently by Divine constraint, on that very day the elders of Judah came before Ezekiel in his own house, waited before him as the wonderful vision of what was transpiring in the spiritual realm was made clear to him, and when they separated from his house, if indeed they believed his word, they knew that the once glorious Temple of Solomon was left desolate.

ZEDEKIAH: THE LAST OF THE KINGS OF JUDAH.

"This burden concerneth the prince in Jerusalem." Here is the definite statement that Zedekiah, the king, shall be brought "to Babylon, the land of the Chaldeans; yet he shall not see it though he shall die there."

This had literal fulfilment in the fact that after the sons of Zedekiah had been slain before his eyes, his eyes were put out and he went to Babylon, lived the remainder of his life, and died there but did not see the land. Chapter after chapter proceeds with warning after warning of that which is happening at Jerusalem, and shall happen to the people.

In chapter xiv the congregation is changed from the elders of Judah, and we read "Then came certain of the elders of Israel unto me and sat before me." We quote this to show how clear is the distinction between the two peoples, Israel and Judah, and between the elders of them.

What a beautiful picture is the love song contained in the 16th chapter. What infinite patience God has had with Jerusalem! And what a wonderful ending. (Ezekiel xvi, 60-63.)

"Nevertheless I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant.

Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant.

And I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord:

That thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God."

We must ask the reader to read the intervening chapters as a part of this article.

We now come to the fortunes of the House of David.

This important matter of the continuation of the House of David will be found clearly set forth in the 17th chapter of Ezekiel.

First Eagle. (Ezekiel xvii, 1-4.)

"And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

Son of man put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel;

And say, Thus saith the Lord God; A great eagle with great wings, longwinged, full of feathers, which had divers colours, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar:

He cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffick; he set it in a city of merchants.

These verses evidently refer to the Royal House. The next verses (5 and 6) quite as evidently refer to the people of the land. "The seed of the land."

"He took also of the seed of the land, and planted it in a fruitful field; he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree.

And it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs."

Digitized by Google

Second Eagle. (Verses 7-10.)

"There was also another great eagle with great wings and many feathers: and, behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation.

It was planted in a good soil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine.

Say thou, Thus saith the Lord God; Shall it prosper? shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring, even without great power or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof.

Yea, behold, being planted, shall it prosper? shall it not utterly wither, when the east wind toucheth it? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew."

The explanation of all this is given in verses 11-21.

Thus is the connection of Zedekiah and Judah with Babylon and with Egypt set forth.

Still dealing with the matter of the king and princes of Judah, the record goes on. (Ezekiel xvii, 22-24.)

"Thus saith the Lord God; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent:

In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell.

And all the trees of the field shall know that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: I the Lord have spoken and have done it."

Let us read carefully now. The whole of this prophecy has been dealing with very real persons and events in Jerusalem, in Judah, and in the captivity of Israel. We are reading of what was then contemporary national and international movements. Particularly are we now reading of the disposition of the family of Zedekiah, and of the princes of Judah. What warrant is there for suddenly leaving the national and personal, and for jumping to the Messianic? The king of Babylon tried to dispose of the line of the House of David and failed. He killed the sons of king Zedekiah, put out the eyes of the king, and took him in chains to Babylon. By so doing the king of Babylon unwittingly made the eldest daughter of king Zedekiah the heir apparent to the throne of David. This took place by virtue of the judgment rendered in the case of the daughters of Zelophehad, in the time of Moses. Not knowing of this law, and like the Euphratean Oriental that he was, despising women, he allowed the daughters of the king to go free. This we are clearly told by the prophet Jeremiah.

The daughters of the king were taken to Egypt with Jeremiah. This also is historic, as we see in Jeremiah. So the first eagle took the king to Babylon. To Egypt, the place of the second eagle, the king's daughter was taken. History accompanies her no further. But this very chapter declares that the Lord Himself would take the tender twig and plant it "in a high mountain and eminent; in the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it; and it shall bring forth boughs," etc.

Now it is held by some to be Jesus who is referred to as the tender one of the House of Zedekiah, the king of Judah. But was Jesus descended from Zedekiah? We believe that such descent will not be found in either genealogical table of Our Lord. Joseph, supposed by the Jews to be the father of Jesus, was descended from Jechonias, who was one time king of Judah. He, however, was the nephew of Zedekiah, and for the purposes of the kingly inheritance was disinherited, and written childless. From him the line was transferred to his father's brother, Zedekiah, as though he were without children. This change was made with Divine authority. Therefore the Zedekiah line does not thus run to Jesus. Now the other genealogical table, which is believed with good reason to be that of Mary, is in another line from David down, namely, from Nathan. That is to say, the line of Joseph is from Solomon. The descent of Joseph, "who was the husband of Mary," and who as son-in-law is thus entered in the Mary line of descent, is from Nathan, the brother of Solomon. In neither case does the line of Zedekiah descend to Jesus. Now the Lord clearly declares that He is dealing with the line of the king of Jerusalem, Zedekiah.

Take now the map of the geography of the prophets, and see where the Divine pointer is directing attention. The scene is primarily in Jerusalem. One pointer goes straight to Babylon. The second pointer goes straight to Egypt. The third pointer goes to "the mountain of the height of Israel," in some other country than either of the three named. Where is Israel? The throne, and the king-right, did not go to Israel in captivity. That is most certain. Where did it go? The alternative is to Isaiah's Israel in the Isles. Where is this? Isaiah makes answer: "In the sea," "In the Isles of the sea," "From the uttermost parts of the earth," and, further, that we must look for these in that quadrant of the compass circle which lies between the north and the west from Jerusalem.

Without quibbling, we say that the "Israel in the Isles" are, by many a test, seen to be the British Isles. The "High Mountain and eminent" we know to have been, by the outworking of history for ages, Tarah in Ireland.

The planting; the bringing forth of boughs; the bearing of fruit of the kingdom; the becoming a goodly cedar, "and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell"; all these have been literally fulfilled in Israel-Britain, and in no other land or nation.

We have reason, logic, and every constructive reason for thus understanding the geography of this great chapter of the transfer of the House of David from the throne of Judah to the throne of Israel. When one seeks for a reason for not accepting this reading he is met with emptiness, and the lack of all evident reason. Prejudice is the only barrier for readily accepting this evident truth.

ERRATA.—Issue September 15th, page 581, first column, line 27: "483 × 365 = 24225 = 176412" should read "483 × 365.24225 = 176412 days." Second column, line 47, "Josephus, 'Against Apion,'" etc., should read "Josephus' 'Against Apion,'" etc.

AN ADDRESS

BY THE REV. DR. MOUNTAIN AT THE GLASTONBURY CONVENTION

"DR. MOUNTAIN dealt with the weaknesses of the various commentators on the Bible. No Church, he showed, could speak with full authority, though many claimed to do so; they contradicted each other. Nor could professors and others do better. The only real authority was the Word of God itself, and it repaid careful study and comparison of its different Books. He urged the necessity for such study, as against the mere formal reading. Proceeding, he showed how many proofs there were of the fulfilment of God's covenant with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, renewed by Him to Joseph. He quoted various distinguished leaders of religious thought in their acceptance of the view that God's promises and covenants towards Israel must be fulfilled, and their endorsement of the ultimate identification of the various portions of that people. As had been said so well by Mr. Leech, British-Israel teaching was founded on the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible. They welcomed the support of archæology, ethnology, history and other sciences, but their teaching was founded on the Bible alone. They were not out to form a new religion, or for the self-glorification of the race, but to prove that God never failed to redeem His promises, and that He was doing so in the case of the children of Israel, the chosen race. They desired to promote simplicity of life and truth with all humility. British-Israel teaching and study followed the right method of Bible study. Every Book of the sixty-six in the Volume had its right place in the citadel of truth. Studied as ordinary literature the Bible was the finest specimen ever compiled. It stood out as the greatest Book that had ever been made. But it did not stop there. It needed to be studied with prayer and with spiritual quickening, in the Divine light and holiness. It adopted the proper method of interpretation, the acceptance of the words of the Book in the natural way in which they were written. There were portions which must be interpreted spiritually, but for the rest they must be interpreted in the reasonable and natural sense. Dr. Ryle spoke out boldly and fearlessly on this subject to his brother bishops, and admitted that in many of their interpretations they had been wrong in not taking the Bible literally; they had made great mistakes in not doing so, and, he said, it was high time that they faced that fact. Zion, Jerusalem, Israel, Judah meant just what they said in the Bible; they did not mean the Church, but the places and the peoples, and that would be proved correct. God's promises were to the people, not in a spiritual sense, but literally. He contended, and quoted reasons for doing so, that the descendants of Israel still existed, that they were to be found in the positions and in the conditions foretold, and that the British peoples alone fulfilled the conditions. They were to be found as a nation and a company of nations. The Jews ha never been a nation since the days of Hezekiah. British-Israel teaching alone explained the British Empire. He had visited that Empire in all quarters of the globe. He knew it from his own experiences. It fulfilled the promises in regard to Israel that God had made. He showed the vast territory it occupied, which was continually being ad ed to without attempts to secure new territory, till the British were occupying nearly all the waste places of the earth as it was said Israel should do. There was a big waste place, for instance, which Germany had the chance to acquire; they had the first chance, but they declined it. France then had the opportunity, but it was not taken. It was not God's will. Then came John Bull's turn; he did not particularly want it, but he took it, and now they realized what that waste place, Australia, was really worth to them. Other parts of the world came to them in like manner till now 450,000,000 of people were under the rule of the British King of the House of David, and governed under the laws of the Israelites. He asked them again to try to realize the truth of God's promises, and to attempt to carry out more earnestly their commission under those promises."—"Central Somerset Gazette."

WHAT WE SAW AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

BY BISHOP J. H. ALLEN.

EARLY in the year 1920 I received official notice that I had been selected to deliver an address on July 5th at the opening of the first World Congress of believers in the identity of the Saxons and Anglo-Saxons with the one-time lost or unidentified house of Israel, the ten-tribed kingdom, whose territorial home was formerly Samaria; at which session certain distinguished persons were to grace the Congress with their presence.

My address was delivered and published in the official report of the Congress.

All of the American delegates were given a warm greeting and greatly appreciative applause before the Congress ended.

After which we were invited here and there and given many treats, and had experiences which gave us opportunity to vindicate and corroborate many facts concerning our racial identity with the lost house of Israel, the political head of which is Joseph, the holder of the national birthright of the seed of Abraham. Which birthright carries with it the promise of the "Many nations" promised to Abraham in Gen. xvii, 4. The final disposition of which was given to Joseph in his two "sons" according to 1 Chron. v, 1-2. Which sons according to Gen. xlviii are Manasseh and Ephraim. One of which—Manasseh—was to develop into "A great people"—a great nation, and the other, Ephraim, was in the last days to develop into "A company of nations." Such are the U.S.A. and the British Empire.

One of the most important vindications we were permitted to make while in the British Isles was made on our never-to-be-forgotten visit to the Royal Library in Windsor Castle.

But before we can tell you what we found we must tell what had led up to that visit and its special purpose. During the seven years in which we were compiling facts and writing the book, "Judah's Sceptre and Joseph's Birthright," what was declared to be the genealogical record of the family line of Queen Victoria was placed in our hands, showing that she was descended from King David the Psalmist, and which carried her genealogy on past this famous king of Israel to Adam, showing that she was the 150th generation from Adam.

We were wondrously pleased and delighted, because if it were true, it would furnish proof positive in regard to one of the most important truths of the book, namely: That David should never want (lack) a man to sit on his throne so long as the sun and the moon remained in the celestial heavens. "If it were true." Ah! there's the rub! For as we pursued the endorsements which accompanied the record we found the following: "The descent of our Royal Family from the royal line of Judah is, however, no new discovery. The Saxon Kings traced themselves back to Odin, who traced back his descent to David, as may be seen in a very ancient MS. in the Heralds College, London, and in Sharon Turner" ("History of the Anglo-Saxons," Vol. I). The full and complete genealogy of Victoria from David does not appear ever to have been printed; and it has, therefore, been thought that it would be useful, as well as interesting, to put it on record, both for reference and testimony. In its compilation reliable works of reference have been used—such as Anderson ("Royal Genealogies," London, 1732), Keating ("History of Ireland," Dublin, 1733), Lavoisne ("Genealogical and Historical Atlas," London, 1814), and others. "Perfect accuracy is hardly to be expected in such an attempt; but it is believed that the genealogy is as correct as our present knowledge of this obscure and intricate subject will permit." This last compound sentence dampened our zeal, and made us feel that we had not reached security on this matter. Another worker in our cause, and an endorser of the published genealogy in our possession, says: "From the tables we are able to furnish a complete list of the royal line from David and Zedekiah (the last king of David's line to reign over the Jews) to Queen Victoria. We believe the account here given is very nearly correct," etc. This was another damper, because we wished so very much to be able to put the entire genealogical record, endorsements and all, in the text of the book then in process of making, namely: "Judah's Sceptre and Joseph's Birthright." But we felt that we could not put anything in the general text of the book that was not absolutely correct. And yet we wanted the people to know how very nearly we were able to prove our chief point, so we compromised the thing and put it in as an appendix, because we feared it might possibly be proven as untrue.

But while that first World Congress of Anglo-Israel believers was in session (it lasted six days) a genealogist of repute—the Rev. W. M. H. Milner, M.A.—gave an address on the genealogy of the Royal Family, in which he told how he had searched the records of the Royal Family, for which task he was furnished with every possible help, and at which task he worked long and faithfully, the accomplishment of which resulted in perfect victory, for he found that it was absolutely true that the Royal Family were descendants of the Judo-Davidic line, the royal family of Israel. He wound up his climax of declared absolute vindication by saying: "And," with a wave of his hand at us and a victorious sweep in our direction, "I have vindicated the absolute truthfulness of the genealogy of our Royal Family as prepared by the Rev. F. R. A. Glover as published in Bishop Allen's book."

How glad we were, and our first thought was I wish I had put that genealogy in the general text of the book instead of as an appendix. But the very next thing to be done was to go to the Royal Library and verify the fact of that Genealogical Chart. It was soon accomplished through mine host, Herbert Garrison, F.R.G.S., Secretary-General of the B.-I.-W.F., who together with my adopted daughter accompanied us on this wonderful mission.

Consequently, as soon as that parchment, with its marvellous facts, was spread out before us, they were down on their knees pointing and tracing with their index fingers; and I with my dislocated hip managed to hunker down on one knee, and when I could not use my finger, I could and did use one of my crutches to point out this line and that branch and where this and that family came into the record by marriage or on the death of some certain one, until we had actually traced Queen Victoria back step by step, generation by generation, and found her genealogical line went back through the house of Eliezer the High Priest, of the house of the tribe of Levi, on to David, Jesse and Judah and on to Adam, according to Luke, the third chapter: which shows that the priestly line of Israel's race was merged into the kingly line, thus forming a kingly priesthood with its line of kingly priests for the Gospel-Church age; the final victors of which are to be "Kings and priests unto the Lord our God."

All of which is in fulfilment of the following: "For thus saith the LORD, David shall never want (lack) a man to sit upon the throne of Israel (not Judah—the Jews). Thus saith the LORD; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season, then may also my covenant be broken with David, my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David, my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me.

"Moreover, the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, saying: Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families (the two houses, Israel, the ten tribes, and Judah) which the LORD hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation (a political commonwealth. Israel is such to-day. Judah, the Jews, is not. They are scattered among the nations) before them." In reputation of which the Lord further declares, "If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth (which in their revolutions thus produce day and night); then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them." (Jer. xxxiii, 17, 20-26).

Rev. S. B. Conway, B.A., in his homily on this Scripture (Jer. xxxiii, 17-18), asks, "Do the prophets prophesy falsely?" He answers his question as follows: "If the statements of these verses be taken literally it would seem as if they did. The house of Israel never, since its exile, has had a throne at all, nor has any descendant of David been acknowledged as its prince. Yet these verses say, 'David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel' (not the house of Judah), etc. And literally, it never came to pass, for in the lapse and confusion of the ages their genealogical tables have been utterly lost, so that none can certainly say who is of the house of David or who is of the house of Levi. The Asmonean princes who occupied the throne of Judah were of the tribe of Levi, and Herod was no Jew at all (Herod belonged to the house of Esau). Now, the promise of these verses is one that is repeated (2 Sam. vii, 16; 1 Kings ii, 4; Psa. lxxxix, 4-29,

THE CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER.

36 ; Num. xxv, 12, etc.). How, then, are they to be understood, since events have most surely falsified them if understood in any literal way? And so the prophet Hosea cheered the ten tribes of Israel—those of whom we speak now as the lost ten tribes—by promises of their restoration ; and Jeremiah oes the same. But in spite of all these prophecies, the ten tribes never were restored and never, as a whole, received any favours from God after they went into captivity. Our own belief is that, in regard to this world, these promises were illusions, but in regard to the world to come, they shall in substance and in reality be fulfilled there. Meanwhile let us have faith in God, Who, in ways better than we think, will fulfil that which now sometimes seems as if it will be never fulfilled at all."

It is a marvel that this man has any faith at all, and yet he not only has faith in God but exhorts others to have faith also ; even though the case seems hopeless. This is as it should be, and it gives us a measure of joy. But if he, and thousands of bewildere believers like him, could but know the great truths that we bring in our published works they would be giants in faith. For we know, and these eyes have seen the absolute proof that " The genealogical tables " have not been utterly lost, and that God has not left Himself without witnesses to the inviolate integrity to name and word. Which still further declares : " My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me." (Psa. lxxxix, 34-36.)

The sun still shines, we still have day and night, the throne of David still exists on the earth, on which a seed of the Royal Family of Israel, the ten-tribed kingdom, is reigning; out of which has come the foretold great nation, the U.S.A., which as a nation was born in one day, whose natal day was July 4, 1776, which, as the years roll on, is celebrated by her teeming millions of prosperous, happy and law-abiding subjects, while the mother nation has since developed into her prophetically foretold "company of nations."

THE HISTORICAL LINKS BETWEEN JOSEPH AND THE NORMAN-ENGLISH.

By Major B. de W. Weldon

(Author of "The Evolution of Israel" and "The Origin of the English").

One of the earliest recollections I possess is of a big family prayer-book in which all the references to "our forefather Abraham" were heavily underlined in blue pencil, with notes of exclamation following all the more telling passages in the Church ritual which had reference to the people of Israel.

As hereditary beliefs are not, at present, taxable assets, I cannot remember if I would have been inclined to file an inherited faith in British-Israel at Somerset House.

The vast majority of people, where they are interested at all in the subject, approach the question of a British-Israel up the grand staircase of Faith. They believe, or they reject, according to what their own accepted religious belief might be—not troubling to consider that this is, perhaps, the one question which is capable of being examined in the cold, impartial light of historical evidence. If the people of Israel have settled in these Western isles, how do they get there? By what roads did they come? What historical traces did they leave behind them on these roads?

A large army cannot transport itself from one geographical point to another without leaving signs discernible to the trained eye along the route by which it passed. A great nation cannot march through the history of two thousand years without leaving some impression behind, or history. Israel, so the faithful contend, became the British people. Very well, then. Israel disappeared in the seventh century B.C., the English appeared in the fifth century A.D. What was this great nation doing in the intervening periods of time? Did it take up its abode at the North Pole, or was it miraculously wafted away to heaven and miraculously wafted back again to earth at the appointed time?

If the people followed the ordinary vicissitudes that befall human races, it must have had a history. And history has a knack of getting itself recorded somehow or other. The history of Israel ought to be exceptionally easy to follow, since many of the books of the Old Testament profess to contain forecasts of the future of this people. And a belief in the inspiration of these books is still retained as part of the official religion of this country—a fact which is sometimes forgotten by men who are paid to remember it.

It was not up the grand staircase of Faith, but through the backstairs of history that, three years ago, I came to inquire closely into this history of Israel. I was not seeking the lost tribes; I was merely endeavouring to trace the curious circumstances which surrounded the disappearance of a people called the Ostrogoths, who vanished from Italy and from history in the month of March, in the year 553 A.D. The Ostrogoths themselves claimed to have been a people called the Getae, who, in their time, had played a prominent part in the barbarian world, and had likewise disappeared in a somewhat mysterious manner from their country on the Danube in 106 A.D. Studying the historical evidence available I came to the conclusion, on military grounds, that the Ostrogoths might very well be correct in their assumption that they were indeed the descendants of those Getae who had been driven across the Danube by the armies of Trajan. The Getae themselves possessed a history stretching back beyond the time of Herodotus, who incidentally mentions that they were former colonists with the Medes. A thousand years at least of consecutive history, therefore, lay behind the Ostrogoths at the time when they vanished. Now, the only native Gothic historian was Jordanis, who wrote at the very time when the Ostrogothic nation was disappearing. The Ostrogoths, according to his account, were of the same race, not only of the Getae, but of the Massagetae—another people of whom Herodotus left us an account. The Massagetae once dwelt on the east of the Caspian—not far from the country of Media, whence the Getae claimed to have issued—the country, be it noted, to which the people of Israel had been exiled between the years 741 B.C. and 676 B.C.

A very curious suggestion occurs in one passage of Jordanis. Closing his account of the Ostrogoth disasters of the year 540 A.D., the writer uses the following words:—

"And thus a most valiant race and a most famous kingdom, which had long held sway, was destroyed in almost the two thousandth and thirtieth year of its existence, by that conqueror of many nations, the Emperor Justinian, and his most faithful Consul, Belisaruius."

The Goths, so Jordanis believed, became a nation circa 1490 B.C.

The coincidence in dates is somewhat remarkable, since 1491 B.C. is the date of the Exodus, when Israel also became a nation, born in a single night. A prophecy in Daniel concerning a certain Greek king, by whom the power of the holy people was to be destroyed, reads almost as a paraphrase of the words quoted from Jordanis, and as though this prophet was actually foreseeing the events of this age of Justinian.

The history of the Ostrogoths does not end in 540 A.D.—it continues until 553 A.D., when, completely crushed and absolutely defeated, the remnants of the race sought permission to depart from Italy and find fresh homes in the lands of their distant kinsmen. Who were these "kinsmen"? I suggest the Angles, the ancestors of the English, and that it was to the North German country, then being evacuated by these tribes, that the former people of the Getae passed the Median exiles of the days before Herodotus, passed—or desired to pass. Was the migration successful? I think so, for the following reasons:—

Analysing the existing military situation of the time, it was not difficult to arrive at the conclusion that such a migration en masse would have completely solved a most perplexing problem that confronted, not the Ostrogoths themselves, but the general who was opposed to them. In following the in 553 A.D. to attempt the hazardous march from Cesena across the Brenner into Bavaria, the country of the Allemanni. Beyond Bavaria lay the country of the Warni, beyond this lay a whole district absolutely denuded of inhabitants. It was the country of the Angles, who, in 553 A.D., would have almost completely migrated to Britain.

The objective of the Ostrogoths, as stated by themselves, was some land of their distant kinsmen. Could the Angles be described as such?

Well, in this connection some very curious facts may be noticed. The earliest Angle literature which has come down to us shows an intimate early connection between themselves and the Goths. Further, the name Angle itself is merely a Getae translation, not only of the name Goth, but of the name Asar—the mysterious "semi-mythical" followers of Odin from Asgard.

Gott happens to be the name of God in the German tongue; An is the name of God in Getic; As is the name of God in Scandinavian.

Curiously enough, considering the claim of the Ostrogoths that they were the Getae, and the claim of the Getae that they were "former colonists of the Medes," the name of God also entered into the national name, Israel (in its Hebrew form of EL)—and Israel's "last known address" was likewise Media. The coincidences that arise here are so remarkable that they are worth while bringing to the notice of the reader.

(a) The national names, "Goth," "Angle," "Asar," and "Israel," all contain the name of God in different languages.

(b) The name Getae, in all its various forms, as "Scutai" (Scythian), "Gutai," People of Guta; People of Guti does not contain this Holy Name.

(c) "Goth" and "Angle" are both found mentioned first by Tacitus in the 1st century A.D. "Asar" can be traced to the Eddas of a much later date than this.

(d) Of Israel, Hosea says that they are not the people of God, and He is not their God; but that eventually they are to be called His People, and He is to be their God.

(e) The 65th chapter of Isaiah is addressed to "a nation that is not called by My name."

(f) The 63rd chapter of Isaiah has "Doubtless Thou art ou Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not . . . Return for Thy servants' sake, the tribes of thine inheritance. The people of Thy holiness have possessed it but a little while; our adversaries have trodden down Thy sanctuary.

"We are thine; Thou never barest rule over them; they were not called by Thy name."

(g) Ezekiel, chapter xx, has: "As for you, O House of Israel, go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, but pollute ye My Holy Name no more."

The date of this declaration is 593 B.C.

(h) 1st Epistle Peter, chapter ii, has: "Which in times past were not a people, but are now the People of God."

The date of this Epistle is A.D. 61; it is addressed to "Strangers scattered abroad" in countries south of the Black Sea at a time when the Getae dwelt to the north of that sea.

The coincidences are these: (1) Israel was not to be the God, and Israel was to be the People of God. not to be called by God's name, and Israel was to be called by God's name. The date when Israel was to cease polluting the Holy Name was 590 B.C.; the date when Israel was to become the People of God was 61 A.D.

(2) The name of People of Guti occurs first in Babylonian history, i.e., subsequent to 605 B.C. This name, in its various forms, does not contain the name of God. The names "Angle" and "Goth" are first found in Tacitus, i.e., immediately after the Epistle of Peter was written. Peter writes of those who in times past were not a people. There was one tribe of Israel alone of whom it was written that, at a certain fixed date, they were not to be a People. This tribe was not Judah, but Ephraim. The reference is Isaiah, chapter vi.

Psalm lxxviii also speaks of Ephraim as rejected, and Judah as the chosen. Isaiah lxv says of "the people who are not called by My name," that they are to leave their name as a curse to the chosen. The name of Israel has, in truth, been a curse to the Jews.

All these coincidences are very remarkable, even if we view them merely as coincidences.

The 15th chapter of Jeremiah also contains a reference to certain enemies (presumably of Israel) who "were not called by Thy name"—the inference being that Israel, at the period when their particular prophecy was fulfilled, would be found bearing the name of God.

It was the purely accidental "discovery" of this particular chapter that first made me seriously consider whether there might not be some connection between prophecy and Gothic history. I had not opened a Bible for years, but seeking to verify a particular quotation (the verse about Israel being "sown through all nations like corn in a sieve, and not the least grain escaping"), I was turning over the pages when suddenly my attention was attracted by these passages in Jeremiah. I had just been writing about a people who had been destroyed by the sword and by famine, whose remnants had escaped side by side with their enemies into a land they knew not of, who had had to abandon their national treasure "without price."

The Kingdom of Iron, so I had always understood, was Rome. The verse about "Shall the iron break the Northern iron and the steel?" seemed almost naturally to permit itself to be paraphrased with "Shall Rome break the North Goths and the Ostrogoth?" The Franks had appeared also on the scene as the foes of these persecuted Goths, and remembering later French and English history, there seemed to be something particularly apposite about the concluding verses of the chapter: "And I will make thee unto this people a fenced brasen wall; and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee . . ."

The question: "What really did become of these Ostrogoths? Did they really succeed in the march they were planning; did they eventually reach these lands of their distant barbarian kinsmen where they hoped to find sanctuary?" was a tantalizing one. Obviously the Ostrogoths did not join in the immediate settlement of Britain; for that country was already divided up by the different sections of the Angles.

Northern history, it must be remembered, is an absolute blank for the next two centuries after 550 A.D. Not until the middle of the 8th century does the curtain rise. It is most interesting to find, in the story of Ragnar Lodbrok and similar poems, frequent mention of "the Goths" as fighting as organized and disciplined bodies of mercenaries in the armies of the time. The Gothic name soon dies away, and does not reappear again until the Middle Ages, when it is appropriated by the Swedes. But, about 812 A.D., a famous people begin to appear in history. They call themselves the Northmen, or Normans, and they issued from Norway, "where dwelt Goths and Huns and Getae." And it is certainly a most remarkable fact that all the earlier Norman histories begin by claiming the Getae, ancestors also of the Ostrogoths, as the progenitors of the Normans. Scythia, the ancient home of the Getae, and the countries of the Black Sea, is the real home of this Norman people, and not Norway. At least so the earlier Norman chroniclers relate, and they mention places, such as the Caucasus and the Caspian, and the river Araxes—places familiar enough in the pages of Herodotus and Jordanis, but exceedingly remote from the Baltic and Scandinavia. If the Normans were the descendants of those remnants of the Ostrogoths who had fled from Italy in 550 A.D.; if the Ostrogoths in their turn were the descendants of the Getae who fled from the Danube in 106 A.D.; if the Goths really fought in a great battle against the Egyptians at a time when "they were friends of Sornus, King of the Medes," as stated soberly by Jordanis, then Normans and some of the tribes of Israel are somewhat closely connected. For the battle against the Egyptians would be Carchemish, fought 608 B.C. by the Medes and Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar against Pharaoh-Necho.

It was after this battle, so we learn from Jeremiah, chapter 46, that "Israel was to be saved from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid."

A full end was to be made of all the nations whither Israel was to be driven, but a full end was not to be made of Israel yet, the people were not to be left wholly unpunished.

From the year 606 B.C., Ephraim (the people which had been "broken" in 676 B.C.) was to be sent forth in wanderings, and Israel henceforward was to be a "nation for ever," as long as sun, moon and stars existed. (Jeremiah xxxi.)

Further, in the days of these kings, beginning with Nebuchadnezzar, the victor at Carchemish, God had called into being a kingdom which never had been destroyed, and which eventually was to fill the whole earth.

The complete story of this Kingdom of Israel, which became the Massagetae and the Angles, and of this people of Joseph, which became the Getae, Ostrogoths, and Normans, and the marvellous adventures which Joseph passed through whilst separate from his brethren, and before, in 1066 A.D., he came to rule over his brethren, is a fascinating one.

REST.

By Dr. T. G. Wakeling, O.B.E.

THERE are few who can honestly say that there has never crept into their subconscious minds a doubt, or that the spirit of unrest has never troubled them.

We read the arguments of the atheist, and a feeling of anger arises within us that anyone should be so blind, so perverse, as to deny the presence of a living Creator. To claim that all things, so wonderful in this world of ours, happened by chance, that the beauty of the countryside, the flowers, the fruit, all that is necessary for our comfort and well-being, came by the purest chance out of chaos. We look at the order of crops, of day and night, and we know that without a guiding hand there could be no order. The certainty of this brings mental rest; but there comes a statement from an eminent scientist, given with all the assurance of conviction, that we are descended from primeval apes; another assures us that "some time, æons ago, a primitive protoplasm split in two, one branch becoming the human race, the other the apes; in any case both branches had a common origin." We are asked to accept this as truth in place of the Bible statement that "God made man in His own image."

The mental unrest caused by these statements hardly subsides before we are confronted with the Higher Criticism —the denial of the divinity of Christ, the denial of the Virgin birth, made again on the authority of those claiming to be scholars.

The common man may be forgiven if doubts arise and inward searchings trouble him.

The voices of the scientists are strident.

The faith of his forefathers calls to him with "a still small voice." In his perplexity he may turn to his Church and find few words of comfort there, but an elaborate ritual and a sermon on an abstract idea, that conveys no help and leaves him a prey to unrest.

As when, on the outbreak of the Great War, a service was held in our National Church, the place was crowded with people longing for words of comfort and reliance upon our God. The disappointment was keen; as a musical effort the service was superb, as an oration the sermon reached a high level of culture, but there was no clarion-call to the people to fall to their knees before their God in the National Crisis.

There was no rest for their troubled spirits.

Life is a continuous battle till death claims us. The strain on body and mind becomes greater as the conditions of our daily life change.

Our God knew that it would be so, and in His Commandments to us ordered that the seventh day should be one of rest for the body, the brain, and a refreshment, if we will, of our faith.

How little we realize the wisdom and forethought of "Our Father in Heaven," Who, knowing beforehand the strain that would be placed upon us, commanded the day of rest.

Our bodies are exceedingly complex machines, delicately poised and beautifully made.

The least alteration in the balance causes trouble to arise, which at the beginning a day's rest may rectify. A gracious boon was given to us, for we are directly named; others might do as they chose until they understood, but "My people" were commanded to obey.

How reasonable this is, and how in moments of spiritual unrest the thought of it may bring peace.

No wise man would work a horse seven days a week. No engineer would run a locomotive without one day's rest in seven. How much more then do we who are made of weaker material require a rest?

Digitized by Google

Should we disobey, then our work is not well done, and somewhere in body or brain the strain is felt.

Voltaire said: "It is the English Sabbath that has made England great."

So in our land there is a hush of the noise of machinery. The horses are taken off the land. The great cities are empty of the bustling life of the weekdays, while the people rest and renew their strength.

That Sunday is misused is no fault but our own. What a man does must be left to his own conscience; but whatever he does, surely thanks should be given to our God, Who has given us what He knew to be necessary for our well-being, and we should not think that as it was given so many years ago there is no need to be grateful for it now. We are very apt to think in terms of days, weeks and years, forgetting that time does not exist for our Almighty Father.

We may be sure that the gift and the beneficial effect of it upon our nation has not escaped the attention of those that hate us; and we may be sure that every endeavour will be made to destroy the British Sabbath.

Let those of alien birth do as they choose, but let those of our race remember the command to rest on the seventh day.

THE PROMISE OF ANGELIC COMPANIONSHIP.

BY L. A. BANKS, D.D.

"He shall give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways."—PSALM XCI, 11.

THERE are so many windows into the soul from the world of physical phenomena surrounding us that we are constantly in danger of becoming materialists and thinking of life as only a place for eating and drinking and making sure of our physical comfort. When we thus permit ourselves to be deceived we are great losers. It is the glory of our humanity that this world is only the vestibule of our existence. The human body is only one of our houses. It is the first one, and it is not strange that we feel kindly toward it, that we patch it up the best we can, and keep it as long as we can. But when we are tempted to act as though it were our only house, and that when it falls to pieces and goes down, beaten to rack and ruin by the storms of the years, we are homeless, we are cheated beyond all our power to conceive.

We are spiritual beings living in this material world, clothed for a time with this physical body, so marvellously constructed that it is obedient to the control of the spiritual personality which occupies it. There are other spiritual beings in the world, at least who visit our world and have duties connected with it, who are not clothed with physical bodies which may be discerned by the natural eye or by the touch of a human hand. In the Bible they are called angels. They are pure and holy beings who have never sinned against God, who have always been dominated by the spirit of perfect love, and who give themselves with complete surrender to the Divine purposes of God in the salvation of men. We are assured that God sends them on missions of mercy to men and women on the earth. If we examine the Divine record we note many different classes of missions where angels have served the purposes of God.

Sometimes God sends them in warning. When Lot moved into Sodom, and settled down to do business in that wicked city, God did not forget him. Although he had not lived as he should have lived, God did not give him up without an effort. Oh, the infinite mercy of God to His children! Some of you know what that means. You have been cold and lukewarm in your service of the Lord, and faulty in the doing of your duty, and you have pitched your tent toward Sodom; and yet God has followed after you with warning angels, to turn you back to righteousness.

At last Sodom waxed so very bad that God determined on its destruction. But He would not destroy it without giving Lot a chance of escape. And He sent two angels to him to warn him and give him an opportunity to save his family if he could. But, alas! they had been drawn away into such wicked associations that many of them would not leave. And the angels, tugging at Lot's hand, hastened the old man with two of his children out of the city as the judgment of God fell upon it.

In the case of Balaam you may see another very conspicuous instance where God used angels to warn of temptation to sin. Balaam's love for money was drawing him rapidly on the road to ruin. He was on his way to take a bribe from the enemies of God. But God gave him another chance. At a narrow place in the path on his journey the Angel of God stood with a drawn sword, warning him of his danger. Balaam understood the warning, but did not heed it, and the end of the man was dark and desperate. Are God's angels warning you? Have they come to you in the quiet of the evening, and spoken to you of the danger of your course? Have they come to you with drawn sword and revealed to you the impending ruin if you did not change your course? It may be even now that they are tugging at your hand, as they tugged at the hand of Lot, to pull you out of your Sodom. Heed God's angels and hearken to their warning!

We are assured that angels are greatly interested in the conversion of sinners. Christ says that there is joy among the angels of God over every sinner that repenteth, and Paul declares that one of the things the angels are very curious about, the mystery of which they are constantly desiring to look into, is the plan of salvation. Angels have always followed the plan of salvation from the very beginning with loving interest. It was an angel who announced the birth of Jesus to the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem. It was a choir of angels who sang the first Christian anthem. Angels came to comfort Jesus in the wilderness after He had been forty days tempted of the devil. In the garden of Gethsemane, in the hour of Christ's agony, angels came and comforted Him. On the first Easter morning it was an angel which descended from heaven and rolled back the stone from the sepulchre, and angel guards remained about the empty tomb to speak messages of loving comfort to the disciples. At the ascension of Jesus angels remained behind to say to His astonished friends that He would come again in glory. So, throughout the whole earthly history of Jesus Christ and His loving sacrifice for men, angels watched with tender interest and helpfulness. Every time a sinner listens to the Gospel, and turns his feet toward the Cross of Christ, angels fill heaven with joy at the good news. Our Saviour has declared that the angels shall be witnesses to His confession of us before the throne of God. One of His sweetest promises is that if we confess Him here before men, He will confess us before His Father and the holy angels.

Angels watch the pathway of those who trust God and do His will, in their defence. The Psalmist says that "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them." How splendid is that figure! The thought is that of an army which goes into camp to defend against any enemy that may come. So God's angels camp between His children and their foes.

One of the most beautiful illustrations showing how God sends His angels to encamp about those who trust Him is in the story of Elisha. The king of Syria, finding that Elisha was the chief counsellor of the king of Israel, conceived the brilliant plan of capturing the prophet. So he sent a large army and surrounded the town of Dothan, where his scouts had informed him Elisha and his secretary were staying overnight. In the morning, when his young man arose and went out to see what kind of a day it was to be, he was astonished and horrified to see a great army of Syrian soldiers entirely surrounding the town. To him it could mean only one thing: they were after his master, and would certainly take him prisoner. He hurried back, and at the door he met Elisha coming forth, and he cried out to him, "Alas, my master! How shall we do?" But Elisha placidly responded, "Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." And Elisha prayed, and said, "Lord, I pray Thee, open his eyes, that he may see." And the Lord answered that prayer, and the young man's eyes never had opened so wide as when he saw that the mountain about the town was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha. God's angelic armies were encamped about His prophet, and they threw the hosts of Syria into confusion, and Elisha went forth unharmed. Let us not fail to realize the comfort of this beautiful picture. Are you doing God's work with unselfish devotion? Then you may trust Him to send more soldiers to guard over you than can possibly be brought against you. Be sure you are doing right, then you may have absolute rest, because angels will see to your defence.

God sends His angels to minister to His children in their sorrow and trouble. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, speaking of angels, says, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" And it is not only some aristocrats of righteousness, like Abraham and Isaac and Jacob among the patriarchs, or like Paul or Peter or John among the apostles; but the humblest and poorest and meanest of those who have loved the Name of God, though they have blundered and sinned until they scarcely dare lift their faces out of the sand in their humiliation, are ministered to by God's angels, who come to comfort them in the deep sorrows and troubles of life.

Angels conduct Christians home to heaven at death. Jesus made this very clear in His story of Dives and Lazarus. The Master says that Lazarus was carried by angels to Abraham's bosom. If we take into our heart all these illustrations of angelic ministry and love, it must protect our ideas of life from loneliness. God sends His angels to warn us when we are tempted to sin. His angels watch over us with rejoicing when we give our hearts to Him. Angels defend us when the armies of Satan come against us with wicked intent. Angels minister to us in every emergency of sorrow and trial, and when at last the time shall come for us to lay aside this earthly tabernacle and go to dwell in the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," the house which Jesus our Saviour has been preparing for us, the angels who have been ministering to us all the way will bear us home.—From "The Great Promises of the Bible."

REVIEW.

"ISRAEL IN PROPHECY AND HISTORY."

BY P. W. THOMPSON, M.A.

THOSE who disparage the British-Israel Movement are sometimes found asserting that there is no real scholarship in it, thereby passing judgment before hearing, which, as Solomon reminds us, is the sign of a fool. A perusal of only a few of the books issued by the Covenant Publishing Co., Ltd., which acts as publishers for the Federation, will make obvious that on this score it has little to fear in comparison with the output of larger and much older publishing houses: in fact, if its youthfulness be taken into account, its record is one which might well be envied, and proves that the Federation numbers in its ranks scholars of high standing.

Amongst the several volumes recently issued from 6, Buckingham Gate of exceptional standing, Mr. Thompson's Israel in Prophecy and History deserves special mention. It not only asserts a great Truth, but asserts it in such a fashion as to hold the reader's attention—particularly if the subject be new to him—right to the end. History as usually purveyed is generally dry and uninteresting, often because the average historian has not the true key to it. Mr. Thompson has the key and has used it well. His particular key is the "Third day" of Hosea, the promised revival therein foretold being found in the great religious revival of the Wesley period.

Few writers have drawn attention to the "three days" of Hosea in connection with British-Israel history, and our author expands in greater detail the arguments of Weldon and Thomas, and in doing so has given us an original and most entertaining work, frequently enlivened with flashes of dry humour. With apt argument and illustration is combined sound logic, clearness of expression and the highest literary standard. His final pages, which set forth an urgent advocacy of the "whole tithe" as a means of advancing the spiritual and economic advancement of the nation, deserve close consideration. In the course of his pages, Mr. Thompson advances an original suggestion to account for the 360-day year of prophecy which is certainly ingenious but, at the same time, highly debatable from the scientific point of view.

We sum this book up as one of the best we have yet read on the subject of British-Israel Truth, and it should convince the most hardened sceptic. B. STEWART.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

WE have the pleasure to announce a very important address at Headquarters on Wednesday next, September 26th, at 3 p.m., by the Rev. Morris Morris, Master of Science, on "The Story of Man's origin and fall in Genesis considered from the standpoint of the Doctrine of Descent as distinguished from Evolution." A number of the Congress speakers are expected to be present, including the Rev. Pascoe Goard, the Rev. Dr. McConnell, the Rev. E. J. Springett, Professor Odlum, and Mr. W. H. Blackaller. We hope to see our rooms quite full. In the evening of the same day we anticipate a great audience for Dr. McConnell's address in the Central Hall, Westminster. on "Who was Jesus?"

There will be a Prayer Meeting on Thursday evening.

* * *

We are very grateful for the response to our appeal for donations for the expenses of the Congress, and for the offers of help in distribution of circulars and display of posters. We have a number of requests for tickets for the Lantern Lecture on Wednesday evening, October 3rd, from those who cannot afford to pay for them. If any of our friends care to help us by subscribing for tickets for such ones, we shall be glad to place them. Every penny of the receipts are for the British-Israel Cause.

* * *

The first meeting of the session for our Harrow Branch was attended by a large audience on September 13th. The Rev. Commander Roberts, R.N., was the speaker, and his subject, "The Kingdom of God," was eagerly listened to. Mr. D.S. Burges presided.

* * *

The Rev. R. G. F. Waddington, M.A., has addressed good meetings at Preston, Leicester and other places.

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—XII.

EZEKIEL—continued.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, F.R.G.S.

In chapter xviii the Lord defends the equality of His ways. The statement is one of wonderful clearness and brevity. Such a statement of fact woven into such a defence will not be found in all modern literature. Let the chapter, which speaks for itself, be read as part of this article.

The chapter concerning Israel, is of the greatest interest. The chapter refers to the mother-nation Israel, formerly of Palestine, now, at the time of the writing of the lamentation, Israel of the Captivity. It leaves her bereft, and planted in the wilderness.

The Lioness,

We shall meet the lioness again later on, in the twenty-eighth and ninth chapters, under the name "The merchants of Tarshish; and all the young lions thereof." At that time she will be found in ultimate and deadly conflict with Rosch, of Meshech and Tubal, or, in modern terms, with Russia, of Moscow and Tobolsk.

"In the seventh year, in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month, that certain of The Elders of Israel came to enquire of the Lord, and sat before me."

It was a congregation of Israel this time.

The occasion was a solemn one and the sermon marvellous. It constituted a solemn refusal on the part of the Lord to be enquired of by them. It seems a pity that this remarkable chapter is too long to reproduce here. Let the reader take it and read it as part of this article. It is chapter xx.

The chapter recapitulates God's dealings with Israel from the time of the Exodus forward. He brings them to the terms of the national covenant, the text of which will be found in the twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus, and now he charges them with the deliberate breach of that covenant.

In Leviticus we read:—

"But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments; and if ye shall despise my statutes, or if your soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant:

"I also will do this unto you:

"I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, etc.

"And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then

In Ezekiel xx we read:—

"And I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them. Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them.

"But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness: they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live

Leviticus—continued.

I will punish you seven times more for your sins, etc.

"And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you, etc.

"And if ye will not be reformed by me by these things, but will walk contrary unto me;

"Then will I also walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins.

"And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me; Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins."

in them; and my sabbaths they greatly polluted: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them . . .

"Because they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths: for their heart went after their idols.

"But I said unto their children in the wilderness . . .

"I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them;

"And hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God.

"Notwithstanding the children rebelled against me: they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; they polluted my sabbaths.

"Because they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and their eyes were after their fathers' idols."

There can remain no doubt under what covenant Israel was undergoing punishment; there can also be no doubt that that punishment, subject to the repentance of Israel, should continue for seven times.

And now we come to the terrible statement made to the Elders of Israel on that fateful morning. The Lord had declared to them that in the latter days He would bring the people back to Himself; but for the "now," the terrible "now" of the time and date indicated, the Lord said to Israel: "As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God; Go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me: but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.

"For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me: there will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings and the firstfruits of your oblations, with all your holy things.

"I will accept you with your sweet savour, when I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered; and I will be sanctified in you before the heathen.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers. And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall lothe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord God."

Three stages of Israel's prophetic history are here mentioned. As to the period of their captivity it is said to them: "Go ye, serve every one his idols, and hereafter, if ye will not hearken unto me, but pollute ye not my holy name . . ."

The second stage is this: "For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel . . ."

Turn back now to the seventeenth chapter of Ezekiel and read concerning the planting of the "tender one" of the House of Zedekiah: "I will . . . plant it upon a high mountain and eminent: In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it."

As we have seen, the mountain of the "height of Israel" was not in Palestine; was not in the Babylon Empire; was not in Egypt, but most certainly was in the place termed by Isaiah "the Isles," and in the seventh chapter of the second Book of Samuel is called "the appointed place."

During the wanderings of Israel on the Continent they should be given to idol worship.

Coming into the mountain of the "height of Israel," namely, the British Isles, they should "serve me," and later on still should be returned to the land promised to the fathers.

As Our Lord said to the Jews at a later date: "The kingdom of God is taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," so in this earlier time in effect the Lord said to Israel in the Captivity, "Go and serve idols if ye will not hear my voice until ye are brought to the mountain of the height of Israel."

So these wonderful chapters go on giving to us an insight into the psychological and spiritual struggles of Israel, Judah and Jerusalem.

We simply call attention to the fact that now the prophet Ezekiel proceeds to give judgment against the nations which still remain which had been previously covered by the prophecies of Isaiah.

Turn to the map already presented in connection with the Isaiah prophecies and see that he prophesies concerning the Ammonites, Moab, Edom, the Philistines.

Then comes a remarkable judgment upon Tyre, which should fall by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar. There is a wonderful story contained in chapters xxvi, xxvii and xxviii of Ezekiel in this most remarkable of judgments upon Tyre. It is told more fully in Ezekiel than in any of the other prophets. It opens up the vision of a commercial and colonial commonwealth which was active in Western Asia, whose caravans penetrated to India, whose fleet circumnavigated Africa, and whose colonial expansion probably covered the Southern Hemisphere. But we may not pause to consider this story, which would take a series of articles to cover.

The prophet goes on with a judgment upon Egypt; depicts the glory and fall of Assyria ; laments over the fearful fall of Egypt.

Digitized by Google

In chapter xxxiii God once more shows the justice of His ways.

In chapter xxxiv we have a tremendous indictment of the shepherds of Israel, which everyone should read.

And now this part of the Book which has dealt with the overthrow of the nations of Western Asia and the crumbling of Asiatic civilization brings in a belated statement of God's judgment upon Mount Seir.

Why should this be kept until the very last of the judgments, and why should the chapter dealing with God's justice and the chapter dealing with his indictment of the shepherds cut this particular judgment off from those that have gone before? The answer is clear. Because the final judgment on Mount Seir was delayed for a whole dispensation. The former nations were in process of falling at the time Ezekiel was writing, or approached their fall at the end of that particular dispensation.

Esau, Edom, Mount Seir, Turkey, as this people have variously been called, preserved their power and position during the Christian dispensation, and only began to fall under the hand of Britain about A.D. 1840. The final phase of their fall began when they entered the Great War against us, and their expulsion from the Holy Land took place in 1917.

Still one final phase of judgment remains to be laid upon Edom by the hand of "My people Israel."

Thus ends the first part of the Book of Ezekiel, or, if the same judgment be applied to Ezekiel as is supplied to Isaiah, we should be constrained to say, "Thus ends the first Book of Ezekiel," for the literature of Ezekiel divides itself in exactly the same way as does that of Isaiah ; the former part dealing with the crumbling of Western Asiatic civilization, and the latter dealing with the upspringing of the new civilization in "the mountain of the height of Israel."

Reviewing the ground over which we have come, several things stand out clearly before our eyes.

We have been carried by the spirit of the Ezekiel literature, up to the end of chapter xxxv, out from Jerusalem, into the Captivity of Israel, and we have been the guests of the prophet, abiding in his own house.

Before us have appeared in succession groups of the Elders of Israel and groups of the Elders of Judah. These gatherings seem not to have been intermixed.

To these groups certain very definite messages have been given, as we have seen in outline ; and as we shall see more clearly still if with these thoughts in mind we study the Ezekiel literature.

In connection with the giving of these messages we are privileged to see behind the veil which holds our eyes to semi-blindness, there to see the present Personality of Jehovah, and to witness His judgments on the nations Israel and Judah, and even to witness that which is at all times and fully visible to glorified men and angels ; namely, Divine activity in carrying forward His overlordship in Israel.

There is an intense spirituality manifest in the literature of Ezekiel, as there is in the literature of the other prophets. But we look in vain for the spirit or the activity of such spirituality in connection with the worship. The worship was void of any such thing, as the Word of the Lord testifies in no uncertain sound. But the spirit and the activity of the Lord is manifest in connection with the things of the nation.

In this day things have been reversed. He would be an unfair judge who should say that the Church has been void of spirituality, or the worship lifeless. But he will be very fair who declares that during the last generation or two national life has been divorced in our thought and practice from spirituality and activity. We have erred grievously in regard to this matter.

The day is coming when the Church and the Nation equally will be filled with the true spirituality, and will be energized into activity by the infused life and personal presence of the Lord.

May that day speedily come to us, both in Church and in State.

WHAT DANIEL MEANT.

By Dr. W. Gornold.

In the Dream-Image of Nebuchadnezzar, the Hebrew prophet foresaw the existence of Babylonia as the first of four great World-Powers, to which three others would succeed. These Powers were defined by four main divisions of the Image, in which the head of gold stood for Babylonia—"Thou art that head" ; the breast and arms of silver, denoting the dual Power of Medo-Persia, which in the person of Darius the Mede succeeded to Babylon (Dan. v, 31) ; the belly and thighs of brass (or copper) indicating the Macedonian Empire which established its power in Babylonia by the defeat of Darius III at the hand of Alexander the Great ; and the legs of iron, indicating the Roman Empire, The feet of iron and clay which are denoted as an extension of the Roman Empire into ten principalities or powers obviously refers to the latter-day condition of the fourth World-Power, for it is said: "The kingdom shall be divided, and there shall be in it the strength of iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay, and as the toes of the feet were partly iron and partly clay, so the kingdom (Roman) shall be partly strong and partly frail ; and whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men, but they shall not cleave together, even as iron is not mixed with clay." Here we see the disintegration of the great Roman Empire fully portrayed. Four distinct kingdoms have been defined, and a graphic description of the rise of the third Power, the Macedonian Empire, is given by Daniel in the 8th chapter, where the Ram is assailed by the Goat, "and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground and stamped upon him . . . therefore the goat waxed very great, and when he was strong, the great horn was broken, and instead of it there came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven, and out of one of them came forth a little horn which waxed exceeding great towards the south, and towards the east, and towards the pleasant land (Palestine)." It was in -334 that Alexander crossed the Hellespont and began to assail the Power of Persia, then under the rule of Darius Condomanus, who began to reign in Persia in the same year that Alexander began his reign in Macedonia. He did not finally reduce the Persians until -327 at Arbela.

Digitized by Google

At his death the Macedonian Empire was greatly weakened, and when at length the country was conquered by Rome -167, it was split into four districts, having Pella, Pelagonia, Thessalonica and Amphipolis as their respective capitals. Thus arose the four " notable horns towards the four winds of heaven " from the great horn of the Goat, and one of these four horns produced a little horn which " waxed exceeding great." This was undoubtedly Seleucus, the Syrian kingdom, by far the most extensive and powerful of those that were formed out of the dominions of Alexander, and in direct descent from this " little horn " was Antiochus Epiphanes, who sought to overthrow the Jewish religion and establish pagan ritual in Palestine, and according to some historians even to exterminate the Hebrew race. (See " History of the Jews," by Dr. Milman, D.D.) " By him the daily sacrifice was taken away," as predicted by Daniel (chapter viii, verse 11).

Thus there are four distinct World-Powers or Empires spoken of by Daniel, but note the contemporary founding and development of a collateral Fifth Kingdom, which is the Stone Kingdom, destined eventually to subdue all these, and itself to endure for ever. The words are very explicit. " And in the days of these kings (the four Empires with their successive rulers) shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom thereof shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." Here is a picture of a veritable kingdom which has been in building since the days of the Babylonian Empire. The Secret Builder has been preparing a kingdom and a people for that everlasting dominion which in Dan. vii, 13-14, is given to one like the Son of Man, who came in the clouds of heaven to the Ancient of Days, " and there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him : his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." From this we learn that the kingdom is a real terrestrial kingdom in succession to those others which Daniel found to be represented by the Dream-Image of Nebuchadnezzar, which has been in process of building up ever since, and which eventually will be given to the Son of Man for an everlasting possession.

Now the extension of the Roman Empire in its later development included the countries of France and Germany. The latter country has been a great Empire in succession to the Roman tradition, having passed through seven dynasties, and being subdivided into ten principalities which are described in the Apocalypse as " seven heads and ten horns," and the ten horns gave their power to " the Beast " when Bismarck brought them under the supreme rule of the dominant Hohenzollern dynasty. In 1815 France was a Republic (miry clay), and at that time the iron-handed rulers of Germany did not cleave together with them. In the 100 years between Waterloo and Valenciennes the Stone Kingdom fell upon the feet of the Image and the dream of Nebuchadnezzar came to an end. The feet of the Image cannot by any means be identified with the Mohammedan rule, for they are a natural extension of the Roman legs of iron, and are both dynastic and republican, iron mixed with clay, that do not agree together as history attests, although Napoleon tried the experiment of uniting them by his marriage with Marie of Austria; and because Daniel defined only four kingdoms ruling in succession as World-Powers, we speak of that Stone Kingdom which the God of Heaven set up as the Fifth Kingdom, and thus it is portrayed in the constructional number 5 throughout the Great Pyramid, which is the " Witness in Stone " of this same Stone Kingdom of the Lord, for the downfall of which the enemies of Christ are now working mightily. We rest in the assurance of this same prophet Daniel that the Kingdom will stand and that the last of its earthly enemies will be broken without hand. Without an intimate knowledge of Cosmic Symbolism and the Cyclic Law it is impossible to understand either the imagery or the chronology of the prophets, and Daniel gives us the lead off in the second verse of his 9th chapter where he says : " In the first year of the reign of Darius, son of Ahasuerus (Cambyses), I Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that He would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem." Here the words sheboim shanah indicate seventy cycles, ten of which make an od or " time " of 360 years, and they are never prophetically used to signify years, the word " yomim " (days) being always employed in that connection. Hence when Daniel speaks of " seventy weeks " we know that he means 490 days, which " days " are years of our time. Seventy shanaim therefore will be a period of 70 times 36, or 2,520 years, and the desolations of Jerusalem having begun under Nebuchadnezzar in -592, the Shekinah having been taken away in -588, and the Temple having been burned in -583, we are led to the years 1928, 1932 and 1937 as years of fulfilling in connection with this prophecy, and in this computation we have to remember that the prophetic year begins at the Vernal equinox, or at that new moon whose Full comes next after the equinox, as the case may be, so that the year now current is 1927 (plus) and is not complete as 1928 until the Spring of 1929. Time did not start with the year 1, but a whole year had to pass before the date denoting completion could be affixed to it. A child is not born a year old, but after it has passed the age of twelve months we are able to say it is one year old. But in dealing with the great issues of Scripture prophecy a year more or less can hardly signify. A far more important consideration is that causes are not attended by their effects, but are followed by them. But in these times of paragraphic hustle and multifarious distraction the " patience and faith of the saints " is easily worn out. " They see an egg and expect to have broiled duck for supper," as the great apostle of Quietism has said. What inspiring and encouraging chapters are those " Hours with the Prophets," now appearing in THE NATIONAL MESSAGE; not only prophetic but reminiscent, and good to sit down with when one wants a real " think." What Daniel meant will be the better understood from reading them.

" PREACH THE WORD."

BY HENRY D. HOUGHTON.

ST. PAUL brought before Nero the second time, and conscious that his days were numbered, leaves these words as the principal charge to his young friend and successor, Timothy.

Full of years, experience, and full of wisdom, the very best and highest this world could give, endowed with a mind and intelligence and oratorical gifts far exceeding those of any known contemporary, he voluntarily leaves and subordinates all these in giving parting advice to his beloved Timothy, and urges, nay, charges him to "PREACH THE WORD."

But more than to Timothy, for The Preacher, the greatest of all human preachers, here preaches to preachers.

The greatest of the Apostles, through Timothy, gives command to all preachers of either that or any succeeding age, as to the sum and substance of their message, "PREACH THE WORD."

But what is meant by "The Word"? Most assuredly the New Testament, as we have got it, was then only partly written, for these very words, and the Epistle to which they belong, could not then be part of it.

If we take it to mean simply "the Gospel Message," leaving that message undefined, it would allow great liberty, and perhaps licence to the speaker, and might lead to considerable error.

There was at that time a "Word of God." A written Word: St. Paul often quoted from it. A greater than St. Paul did too.

He said, "Thy Word is Truth." (John xvii, 17.) And at that time the only written Word of God was the Old Testament Word!

One thousand years before that, the Psalmist wrote, "Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness, and Thy law is the Truth." (Psalm cxix, 142.)

And again, "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto "according to Thy Word." There is the test, there is the incentive, there is the power, and there the truth.

It is never safe to leave the written Word. Scores of preachers do, and thus lead us into intricate ways, and sometimes questionings of God that are unsettling and disastrous.

Instead of preaching The Word, they preach Shakespeare, Tennyson, Browning, and such subjects as education, politics, science, economics, ritualism, forms, ceremonies and human theories.

Their own thoughts and ideas take the place of the written Word.

Is there any wonder that their word lacks certainty and conviction?

Only recently a Methodist class leader, a good Christian lady, said to the writer:—"We come to chapel, and we get nothing to feed us; we go home hungry as we came. We do not want to know what the preacher thinks: we want the Word of God explained, we want to know what God Himself has to say."

That cry is repeated throughout our land. There is a great hunger for the Word of God, as distinct from the word of man.

WHAT DOES GOD SAY? THAT IS THE THING!

All over the country there is a great unrest, people leaving their respective churches and chapels that they may find elsewhere more definitely the Words of God!

Even in these degenerate days, though there is a great falling away, yet the hunger for God's Word still abides with a faithful few, and wherever that Word is truly and earnestly preached, people are to be found who will travel long distances to hear it.

We do not want to hear the wisdom of this world. We get that six days per week, and year after year. On the seventh we want to hear heavenly wisdom. Besides, "Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" (1 Cor. i, 20.) And again, "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." (1 Cor. iii, 19.)

We do not want to know men's thoughts, we want certainties, and only in one Book can they be found.

Some time ago a minister was examining a class of scholars, and he said to the boys, "Now which of you can tell me why a minister takes a text? Hands up those who can."

One boy held his hand up, and the minister told him to jump on the form so that all could see him, and tell them all why a minister takes a text. The boy climbed the form, and then said:—"Please, sir, a minister takes a text to make it a peg to hang on it something he wants to say." At which answer the minister was so delighted he said, "Excellent."

That story, with the minister's answer, is in itself a great condemnation of the practice.

The man that takes God's Word in order that he may preach something he wants to say, some theory of his own, is not a true servant, to say the least.

There is a vast amount of this second-hand ulterior kind of preaching, viz., foisting some words of man upon us as the sacred Word.

Instead of taking the words of Scripture and explaining them in order to bring the people to light and to obedience, they take a text in order that they may have a peg on which to hang something they wish to say!

On the contrary, the true servant of God looks to Him to see what He has to say; not to find a text that he may spin out some theory of his own!

Pegs? Pegs? Pegs? They are everywhere, and used to further the most ridiculous and antagonistic theories. For preachers, both lay and ministerial, are preaching theories of their own, and using Scripture texts to help them to do it!

Something they want to say, indeed! Then let them go into the fields and into the mountains and say it as loud and as long as they like. But let them not use the sacred, incorruptible Word of God for so private and sinister a purpose.

We ought to be most careful lest we attribute to God something He has not said, and make His pure Word minister to, and bolster up, what are only the vain imaginings of men. Jeremiah v, 30-31, is very searching:—"A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?"

So then the time-serving teachers and preachers of to-day had their counterparts in olden times. Look at Jeremiah xxiii, 16:—

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you: they make you vain: they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord."

"I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied." (v. 21.)

Here we have so-called prophets speaking words out of their own hearts, and calling them God's!

But God says of them, in verse 25, "I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in My name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed."

Digitized by Google

Then God calls upon those prophets who have dreamed to tell it as a dream, and not as His Word.

"The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream: and he that hath My Word let him speak My Word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." (v. 28.)

Then there comes the announcement of the marvellous effect of God's Word when faithfully proclaimed.

"Is not My Word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" (v. 29.)

Now what is God's attitude to these men? Verses 31 and 34 tell us very plainly.

"Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues, AND SAY, HE SAITH."

"And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people that shall say, The burden" (the message) "of the Lord, I will even punish that man and his house."

We have the same thing in Ezekiel xiii, 2, "Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say thou unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts, Hear ye the Word of the Lord."

The old false prophets there spoke words of their own and foisted them on men as God's.

"They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The Lord saith: and the Lord hath not sent them: and they have made others to hope. . . . Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination; whereas ye say, the Lord saith it; albeit I have not spoken?" (vv. 6 and 7.) A terrible charge indeed.

Taking a text to hang on it something they wish to say is surely a most reprehensible practice.

If such men were strictly honest they would be warned by the words of Balaam.

"If Balak were to give me his house full of silver and gold I cannot go beyond the words of the Lord."

What does that word "cannot" mean? Does it mean a physical impossibility? It might mean even that! For the impulse of God upon a man might be so great as to compel him to say the words of God.

The restraint of God's Spirit upon a man might be so great as to free him from error when speaking in His Name: but such could only be possible to Spirit-filled men.

But mark the contrast: Men now take the words of God on purpose that they may tack on to them something they wish to say! Thus using God and His sacred Word for the purpose of giving authority to words of their own!

Some months ago a clergyman of an important church in one of our large cities in his search for a text to fit a chosen subject made a most inappropriate choice.

His sermon was upon the necessity of joining together the two forces of Religion and Education.

In his search for an appropriate text, and one that would lend itself to his object, he fixed on that singular passage in Ezekiel xxxvii, which predicts the joining together of the two sticks of Israel and Judah!

My informant did not say which Israel represented and which Judah: indeed, the minister did not say that that was the meaning of the text, but he did use the text to hang on it something he had to say.

No wonder that one of his audience, who was better informed, as the sermon progressed and the preacher floundered, said to himself, "Ah, my dear fellow, you may well hesitate." Such unauthorized perversions of God's Word only serve to bring it into contempt.

God's message to the prophet Jonah was, "Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee."

Such is God's message to-day, and this always has been His message.

Men do not like it! Some preachers do not. They want to preach a message of their own and call it God's.

Thousands of them take some words of God which may be made to fit their purpose, and tack them on to some words of their own, and then deliver it as God's message!

That is fraud, and of the very worst and most insidious kind.

Would the king of Nineveh have repented if Jonah had preached like that? NEVER!

"Preach the preaching that I bid thee." That is the only safe thing, and the only effective thing.

What a difference it would make if all our preachers at once began to drop the messages men have given them, the theories learnt at their colleges, and began to preach the messages of God undefiled by any admixture of men!

The man who adheres most strictly to God's holy Book is the man who is giving God's message.

Jonah, in running away from God, acted the honourable part as compared with some preachers to-day, who deliberately alter the message. They foist another message upon the people and call it God's! Jonah did not descend to such depths. He simply ran away!

That man takes upon himself a great responsibility who dares to alter God's written Word.

If Jonah when he eventually went to Nineveh had preached his own words, or had tampered with God's words, the people of Nineveh could not have been saved!

Their only hope was in receiving the Divine warning exactly as God had given it. Bad as Jonah was in running away, he did eventually obey the command, and gave to the people of Nineveh the exact words of God! AND THOSE WORDS SAVED THEM!

Even St. Paul tells us that "The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise that they are vain." (1 Cor. iii, 20.)

And long before that a very wise man said:—"I hate vain thoughts: but Thy law do I love." (Ps. cxix, 113.) And again:—

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." (Ps. xix, 7.)

But which law? Remember that there was no New Testament law written then, nor for 1,000 years afterwards. And yet "The law of the Lord," it says, "IS PERFECT, CONVERTING THE SOUL!"

Now whatever authority the New Testament may have acquired in later years, it can never cancel or supersede that law of the Lord which is perfect!

And Our Lord coming straight from the Father expressly repudiated any intention to repeal the law or the prophets;

but gave to them His emphatic approval down to the very last jot and tittle.

THE BIBLE IS THE WORD OF GOD TO US. WE HAVE NO OTHER!

And mark you, its authority does not diminish as we turn its pages backward, and we get to the beginning of the Old Testament.

No! Its authority begins with the very first word of the very first Book: "In the beginning God."

Its authority does not end till its very last word has been said:—"Surely I come quickly. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." (Rev. xxii, 20.)

And there is no part of it in all the pages between where it surrenders that authority and gives place to that of man.

These words ring out innumerable times in the Old Book "Thus saith the Lord." And in the very last Book of the Old Testament we find the unchangeableness of Jehovah very clearly declared:—

"I am the Lord, I change not."

If God has spoken, let us know what He has said, be it praise or blame, instruction or warning; and let no man presume to alter in the least the message given, for therein lies our safety and our hope.

NOTES AND QUOTATIONS IN RELATION TO BRITAIN-ISRAEL.

BY PROFESSOR EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., &c.

[The following articles should be read with the thought in mind that they are not intended as a glorification of the Empire, nor of the Anglo-Saxon people, but as a recognition that Jehovah, the God and King of Israel, has in the Celto-Saxon people the basis of His Kingdom on earth. The Anglo-Saxon people have been trained for ages to be the Administrators of that Kingdom, and to carry its benefits, its liberty and its peace to all mankind.]

"AREUS, King of Sparta, wrote Onias, High Priest of Jerusalem: "It is found in writing that the Lacedemonians and the Jews are brethren, and that they are the stock of Abraham."

Herodotus says the Skuthoi were "one of the chief peoples of the earth."

Himilco, 480 B.C., says of our ancestors, the people of Tarshish in Spain and France: "They were a numerous race, endowed with spirit, with no little expertness, and all were busy with the cares of trade." They seem to have been a "nation of shopkeepers" then, as in the days of Napoleon.

The Belgæ were similar to the Brythons and akin to the Senones and Lœgrys. They entered Britain from Spain between 100 and 200 B.C.

We quote from Hannay as follows: "At last came the memorable year 619 B.C., when the Sakhi or Sak-Geloths in their quiet accumulated might from Sakland in the northern highlands, having first, in the neighbourhood of Ararat, not only overwhelmed the Vanites, but also crushingly defeated the forces of Media under Kyaxares (who had been investing Nineveh, but hearing of the advance of the Sakhi, had marched north to intercept them) descended like a tempest upon Nineveh, took and sacked it, scattered its armies, and practically destroyed for ever the power of Assyria or Asshur."

"The Sak-Geloths were now masters of all Asia, as then known, though not called Asia. For twenty years they remained in Sakland, retaining their military ascendancy over other nations; and during that period they not only founded many powerful and flourishing colonies throughout Arya, but they also established their own form of civilization wherever they went."

"The Arardhan revolt took place 710–705 B.C. against Assyria, led by Arza, king of Van, or Biania. This revolt led to the escape of the Sak-Geloths, or the Beth-Sak or Bit-Khumri from Media. They moved to and settled among the hills north of the Araxes or Aras."

"When the Sagh-Geloths (Isaac exiles) arrived in Europe along the shores of the Baltic, they forced southward the Vandals and Goths, who then proceeded to do the work of God's 'Battleaxe,' and gradually wear down and destroy the fourth world empire of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, as interpreted by Daniel. They destroyed Rome, not knowing they were doing the Divinely-given work."

"The Dahæ, as the Skolotoi or Scythæ, of South-east Russia, overwhelmed the armies of Persia with confusion and disgrace, and compelled the all-highest Darius himself to seek refuge in breathless and ignominious flight.

"In 390 B.C., these Scyths, Saghs, Dahæ, as Senones, under Brennus, overwhelmed the legions of Rome on the banks of the Allia, and reduced Rome to ashes; one step in the direction of wearing and grinding the Tiberian city and dream empire to chaff. These people under the name of Kimbri from 115 B.C. onwards, at Noreia, Arausis and elsewhere, ANNIHILATED, ONE AFTER ANOTHER, NO LESS THAN FIVE ROMAN ARMIES.

"It was these people who from 115 B.C. onwards, as Parthians and Arsaces, under the 'Sun of Syria,' triumphed over the eagles of the eternal city many times.

"Under the name Cherusci, these people destroyed the Roman legions and forced Imperial Rome, stricken and cowed, to relinquish for ever the territories she had seized north of the Rhine.

"It was the same race, under the name Asen, that drove the Goth nations, one after another, out of the Germanic regions, out of their seats in the north of Europe, and hurled them southward upon the frontiers of the Roman Empire with a force so terrible that the Empire never recovered from the shock.

"How much more dazzling becomes that glory, how much more splendid become those annals, when it is also known that it was in very deed the same British Race who from 715 B.C. onwards, under the name of Sak-Geloths, and Sakhs, colonized and reclaimed the desolate heritages of Trans-Caspia and Central Asia, and caused them to 'blossom as the rose'; breathed into the chaotic life of the undeveloped races dwelling around them the spirit of a lofty civilization; humbled in the dust the haughty pride of Media; and in 628–619 B.C. shattered for ever the ancient and mighty power of Assyria."

Herodotus, 450 B.C., says the Persians called all the Skuthai or Scythians, Saki. His words are "These, though they are Aryrgian Skuthai, are called Sakai."

Here follows a Hebrew epitaph taken from a CEMETERY IN THE CRIMEA:

Mighty, a man of the tribe of Naphtali WHICH WAS CARRIED CAPTIVE WITH THE TRIBE OF SIMEON and other tribes of Israel, by the Prince Shalmaneser, from Samaria during the reign of Hoshea, King of Israel. They were carried captive to Halah, to Habor, which is Cabul, to Gozan and to the Chersonesus which is the Crimea."

This shows that some of the stock of Israel lived and died in the Crimea.

PARABLE OF THE FIG TREE.

BY JOHN H. TENCH.

"HE spake also this parable; a certain man had a fig tree planted in His vineyard; and He came and sought fruit thereon, and found none. Then said He unto the dresser of His vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground? And he answering said unto Him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it: and if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after that Thou shalt cut it down." (Luke xiii, 6-9.)

At the present time there are special signs of Our Lord's speedy Advent, such as a marked movement among the Jews. We know that in 1897 the Zionist movement started, that in 1918 we saw Britain's Proclamation to the Jews concerning a Jewish National Home in Palestine, and we know about their present prominent position and widespread activities. Is this the "budding of the fig tree"? which name is always the Scriptural emblem of the Jewish people, and the "putting forth leaves" the sign which would show His Second Coming to be nigh, "even at the doors; verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be done."

The parable of the Barren Fig Tree follows closely upon Our Lord's rebuke of those who told Him of the cruel judgments concerning those that perished. Jesus said:—"Suppose ye that these Galilæans were sinners above all the Galilæans, because they suffered such things?" He does not deny that they were sinners, justly obnoxious to this or any other severe visitation from God, but only the blood bath in which they perished marked them out as sinners above all their fellow-countrymen; and then He leads His hearers, as was His wont, to take their eyes off from others, and to fix them upon themselves:—"I tell you, Nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish"—not these Galilæans alone; but all of them as well. This is the meaning for ourselves of the calamities which befall others; they are loud and earnest calls to repentance. Instead of exalting ourselves above and against the sufferers, as though we were more righteous than they, and therefore exempt from like tribulations, we shall rather acknowledge that whatever befalls another might justly have befallen ourselves.

This event must have occurred at Jerusalem, which was the only place where sacrifices were offered; they were men "whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices"; thus blood was mingled with blood, their own with that of the slain beasts which they offered; the narrators possibly urging this as evidence of the peculiar anger of God against those who perished.

Our blessed Lord, more fully to illustrate the truth He has in hand, Himself brings forward another instance of a swift destruction overtaking many persons at once:—"Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwell in Jerusalem?" While none might attribute a pre-eminence in guilt to those who were crushed by that falling tower, yet here also, in sudden and strange catastrophes like this, all were to recognize a call to repentance. For all discords of outward nature, of fire and flood, of earthquake and storm, all fearful accidents like that of the falling tower, all speak to sinners in the same warning language, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

Archbishop Trench says:—"The near resemblance between these two calamities just instanced, and the doom which actually did overtake the rebellious Jews, the nation which refused to obey this bidding and to repent, can scarcely be accidental, and demands that we shall give to that 'likewise' of the Lord all its force. It was indeed 'likewise' that they perished; for the very same forms of violent death overtook them. As the tower in Siloam fell and crushed eighteen of the dwellers in Jerusalem, exactly so multitudes of its inhabitants in that last siege and assault were crushed beneath the ruins of their temple and city; numbers also were pierced through by the Roman missiles—or more miserably yet, by the swords of their own frantic factions—in the courts of the temple, in the very act of preparing their sacrifices, so that literally their blood, like that of these Galilæans, was 'mingled with their sacrifices,' one blood with another."

Olshausen says:—"The discourse of Jesus, severe and full of rebuke, is closed by a parable in which the merciful Son of Man again brings the side of grace prominently forward. He appears as the Intercessor for men, before the righteousness of the heavenly Father, as He Who obtains for them space for repentance. This idea of the deferring of the judgment of God, so to leave men opportunity to turn, runs through all Scripture; before the Deluge a period of a hundred and twenty years was fixed; Abraham prayed for Sodom; the destruction of Jerusalem did not follow till forty years after the Ascension of Our Lord; and the coming again of Christ is put off through the patience of God." (2 Peter iii, 9.)

We have here then a parable concerning the long-suffering and the severity of God. "He spake also this parable, A certain man had a fig tree planted in His vineyard." Stanley, in his book, "Sinai and Palestine," p. 413, says:—"The peculiarity of the image—that of a fig tree in a vineyard—however unlike to the European notion of a mass of unbroken vine-clad hills, is natural in Palestine, where, whether in cornfields or vineyards, fig trees, thorn trees, apple trees are allowed to grow freely wherever they can get soil to support them."

In this vineyard the Jews were set in the midst of the world that they should bear much fruit, so that they should bring much glory to God, Who commanded His people by His servant Moses:—"Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep therefore and do them, for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people."

Instead of keeping God's laws and commandments this is what Christ Himself says of the Jews :—" And when the time of the fruit drew near, He sent His servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it. And the husbandmen took His servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another. But last of all He sent unto them His Son, saying, They will reverence My Son. But when the husbandmen saw the Son, they said among themselves, This is the heir ; come, let us kill Him and let us seize on His inheritance. And they caught Him, and cast Him out of the vineyard and slew Him."

So the Lord said to them, " I say unto you the Kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. This nation is Israel of the Lost Ten Tribes, lost no longer, but visible as the British nation, bringing forth the fruits thereof both in a spiritual and material manner.

" And He came and sought fruit thereon, and found none." There is a wonderful fitness in the simple image running through all Scripture, which compares men to trees, and their work to fruit—the fruit of a tree, like the works of a man, being the outcome of the inner life, not something attached or fastened on from without. The Psalmist says of a good man : —" He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season ; his leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." Our Lord says, in His parable of the True Vine :—" Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away ; and every branch that beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine ; no more can ye, except ye abide in Me."

The three kinds of works whereof Scripture speaks are, first, good works, when the tree, having been made good, bears fruit after its own kind ; then dead works, such as have a fair outward appearance, but are not the genuine outgrowth of the renewed man—fruit, as it were, fastened on externally, alms given that they may be gloried in, prayers made that they may be seen ; and lastly, wicked works, when the corrupt tree bears fruit manifestly after its own kind. Both the two last kinds of fruit the Jewish fig tree only too abundantly bore.

A CORNER OF ONE OF THE STAFF ROOMS AT HEADQUARTERS.

What is here related as a parable was on another occasion done in a typical way, for in the last days of His ministry, " seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves, He came, if haply He might find any thing thereon." (Mark xi, 13.) But He then, as the Master of the vineyard now, " found none." Long since the prophets had upbraided their people, that, having been ordained to bring forth much fruit to the glory of God, they had fallen short of the purpose for which they were set in the world ; bringing forth either bad fruit or none. As Isaiah said to the inhabitants of Jerusalem and men of Judah, " When I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes. . . . He looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness but behold a cry."

"Then said He unto the dresser of His vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none." Theophylact says:—"Christ came thrice, by Moses, by the prophets, and thirdly in His own person; He comes, when application of the parable is made to the individual—in childhood, in manhood, in old age."

"Cut it down; why also cumbereth it the ground" (R.V.). The word also helps to explain the sentence passed upon the tree. The Authorized translation has missed this word, but not so the Revised. Why should the tree remain, when beside being itself barren, it "also" injured the soil in which it stood? for that "Why cumbereth it the ground implies something more than that it occupied the room which might have been filled by another and a fruit-bearing tree. The barren tree mischiefed the land, "troubled" it, as Bishop Andrewes renders the word, spreading injurious shade, and drawing off to itself the fatness and fertility which should have gone to trees rendering a return. It was thus with the Jewish Church, which not merely did not itself bring forth fruits of righteousness, but through it the Name of God was blasphemed among the Gentiles. (Rom. ii, 24.) The Jews hindered in many ways the spread of the Gospel among other nations through the mischievous influences of their pride and hypocrisy.

On that "cut it down" St. Basil bids us note the love which breathes even in the threatenings of God:—"This is peculiar to the clemency of God toward men, that He does not bring in punishments silently or secretly, but by His threatenings first proclaims them to be at hand, thus inviting sinners to repentance." Before the hewing down begins, John the Baptist says:—"Now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees; therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire."

"Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it." The vine-dresser, who pleads for the tree, and would fain avert its doom, is the Son Himself, the Intercessor for men. The writer to the Hebrews says of Christ:—"This man, because He continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

This great Intercessor pleads for men, yet not that they may always continue unpunished in their sins, but only that their sentence may for a while be suspended so to prove whether they will return and repent; just asking for it one more year of grace:—"If it bear fruit, well; and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down." During this year He will dig about it and dung it; will hollow out the earth from around the stem, filling up the space about the roots with manure, as one may now see done to the orange-trees in the south of Italy. By these appliances is signified that multiplication of the means of grace, which is so often granted to men and nations in the last period of their probation, and just before those means are withdrawn from them for ever.

Thus before the Flood they had Noah, a "preacher of righteousness"; before the great catastrophes of the Hebrew people, some of their most eminent prophets. Thus the Northern Kingdom of Israel had prophets sent to them like Hosea and Amos; before the great catastrophe of the Southern Kingdom of Judah—the capture of Jerusalem by the Chaldæans the prophet Jeremiah was sent—and before its final doom they enjoyed the ministry of Christ and of His Apostles.

The words of Our Saviour are brought to our mind when He lamented over it, and said:—"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate."

Theophylact says:—"Though they (Jews) were not made better by the laws and the prophets, nor yielded fruit for repentance, yet will I (Jesus) water them by My doctrines and passion; it may be they will then yield fruits of obedience."

Such a time of visitation to the Jewish people was the Lord's and His Apostles' ministry; then was the last digging about and manuring of the tree which had continued barren so long. But it abode in barrenness; its day of grace came therefore to an end; and, as here it is threatened, it was inexorably cut down.

In another of Jesus' parables He said, "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh shall He find the faith (margin) on the earth?" People living in the end of the age have been warned of His Coming to take vengeance on a wicked world by the prophets, by the Great Pyramid, by Our Lord Himself—a threefold cord—yet men mock at these foretellings. "The Son of man cometh." Though Our Lord uttered these words, is it not strange that ministers of the Gospel, teachers and students do not believe it? They tell us that it merely means the coming of death. But when you die, the Son of man does not come to you, you go to the Son of man. In the Acts of the Apostles it states that the return of the Saviour will be "in like manner." As He went away visibly, so He will return visibly. As the last place on which His feet trod was the Mount of Olives, so the first place on which His feet will alight will be the Mount of Olives. (Acts i, 11; Zech. xiv, 4.)

The belief of British-Israelites is founded on the light of prophecy fulfilled, or now in the course of fulfilment, as given to us in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, which are the only infallible Word of God and the final Court of Appeal as taught by the Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England.

There is a terrible falling away in the faith at this end of the age, and the day of vengeance of our God will come as a snare on the whole world, for "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man."

In the year A.D. 325 persecutions of the Christians ceased and a Council of over 300 Bishops and Church officials was held at Nicæa, and the doctrines of the Christian faith were settled. In the Nicene Creed the Lord Jesus was called "God of God." The Modernist of to-day refuses to believe it. "When the Son of man cometh shall He find the faith?" No!

"He shall come again with glory to judge the quick and the dead." Our teachers of these last days tell us this merely means the coming of death. "When the Son of man cometh shall He find the faith?" No!

"Whose kingdom shall have no end." The Kingdom of Israel was made a nation at Mount Sinai, the Lord came down on that Mount to be their King—the King of Israel—and gave them those just laws called "The Ten Commandments." The King of Whom the angel Gabriel said, "God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David; and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end." Our clergy and ministers state this means the Church, thus contradicting the Lord Himself and His blessed Word. "When the Son of man cometh shall He find the faith?" No!

CHRIST, THE IMAGE AND GLORY OF GOD.

By HENRY PROCTOR, F.R.S.L.

CHRIST is the Image of the Invisible God, the firstborn of all creation, or: "Born first before all creation." When, therefore, God created man in His own image He created him in Christ, who is the image of God: "For by Him were all things created, that are in heaven and that are in earth" (Col. i, v. 16). So that Our Lord did not first become Man when He was born in Bethlehem, but He was the archetypal or pattern Man although, subsisting from the beginning (hūparchon) "in the form of God." (Phil. ii, 6.) This duality of natures explains how He could be, at the same time, "The only begotten Son of God," and as Son of Man the Firstborn among many brothers. For before He came down to earth He was the Son of Man in heaven. (John iii, 13.) When He ascended up on high He ascended "where He was before." (John vi, 62.) And now "He fills the universe with Himself." (Eph. i, 23, Weymouth.) But the glory He shares with every member of His Body, for they together constitute the plērōma, or "fulness of Him who filleth all in all"—for the Church which is His Body is filled by Him who fills the universe entirely. (Eph. i, 23, Moffat.) The word "plerōma" as applied to the Body signifies that the Christ is not complete until "the whole structure is welded together and rises into a sacred temple in the Lord." (Eph. ii, 21.)

A CORNER OF THE BOOK-SALES ROOM AT HEADQUARTERS.

"Who spake by the prophets." Do our teachers believe this? No! They look upon the prophets as back numbers, in fact some of them go so far as to say these prophecies cannot be fulfilled. "When the Son of man cometh shall He find the faith?" No!

Those of us who hold to the faith once delivered to the saints have now to bear ridicule and abuse; such names as "Bogey," "Blasphemy," "Side-tracked by the devil," "Degrading prophecy," etc., etc., are applied to the faith of British-Israelites. "Shall not God avenge His own elect, which cry day and night unto Him, though He bear long with them? I tell you that He will avenge them speedily."

Digitized by Google

For this purpose He granted some to be apostles, some to be prophets, some pastors and teachers . . . for the upbuilding of the Body of Christ, till we all attain to the unity of the faith, unto a full-grown or perfect man—"the one Man in Christ Jesus, for the Christ is not one member but many." (Eph. iv, 11-13; 1 Cor. xii, 12.) "We cannot know too much of the glory of our unity and identity with Him." For "He reflecting God's bright glory and stamped with God's own character, sustains the universe by the word of His power." (Heb. i, 3, Moffat), and we also "Reflecting as bright mirrors the glory of the Lord, with face unveiled, are being transformed into the same likeness as Himself; passing from one glory to another—for this comes of the Lord the Spirit." (2 Cor. iii, 18.) So that "when we see Him we shall be like Him," not only in spirit, but in body. (Phil. iii, 20-21.) For all the time, as we walk in Him, and He in us, the glory is being reflected upon the face of our inward man, transforming it into the same image from glory to glory, and the effect is sometimes seen upon the face of the outward man although the glory is hidden by the veil of the flesh, yet it shines through as a kind of transfiguration, in times of spiritual exultation or upliftment. This work will be fully completed when He comes, for "All of us are to be changed—changed in a moment; in the twinkling of an eye." (Cor. xv, 52, Moffat.) This is the perfecting of a work already going on in our inward (new) man, "which is being renewed unto full-knowledge (epignosis) after the image of Him that created him." (Col. iii, 10, Greek.) As we continue to grow up in all things unto Him, He is being formed and growing up in us. For He, Christ, is the Head, and under Him as the entire body is welded together and compacted by every joint with which it is supplied, the due activity of every part enables the body to grow and build itself up in Love. (Eph. iv, 15-16.)

"God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him the Name which is above every name." He is "God over all, blessed for ever." But through it all He is the Man, our "Friend who sticketh closer than a brother." Except through Him we had not known the Father; for no man cometh to the Father except by Him, and no one has seen God at any time, but all the manifestations of God have been by means of the Son of Man. He was the Man who talked with Abraham (Gen. xviii, 1-22). He was in the Pillar of Cloud which talked with Moses. (Exod. xxxii, 9-11.) Isaiah saw Him sitting upon the Throne. He is distinguished from the Father (Jehovah) by another name (Adonai). Isaiah says: "I saw Adonai." (Chap. vi, 1.) And quoting this chapter John says: "These things said Isaiah, when he saw His glory and spake of Him." (John xii, 41.) Ezekiel also in his "visions of God" saw Him on the Throne: "Like the appearance of a Man sitting upon it." (Ezek. i, xxvi.) He has always been the Saviour, and we who are members of His Body were chosen in Him, before the founding of a world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in Love. (Eph. i, 4.)

DISTORTION IN THE PYRAMID.

By Rev. Commander Roberts, R.N.

In "The Covenant People," July 15th, 1921, Mr. Davidson pointed out a series of distortions taking effect in the Antechamber and extending into the King's Chamber. This effect is remarkable from the Great Step right into the Southern wall of the King's Chamber, but more particularly where the granite floor commences. Mr. Davidson leaves the reader to his own deductions. Mine are these. The Pyramid, as originally constructed, must have been perfect, as a Divinely inspired, though humanly constructed, revelation for the latter day. An earthquake has at one time caused this distortion. Are we to understand that the Almighty was not in this earthquake? Did He not direct even its limitation? To me it appears as if He meant to assert that His date is perfect, but we know not what is taking place subtly, underhand, and apparently unsettling God's order. Let us hold fast our faith, especially to God's Word: "Of that day and of that hour knoweth no man." Though He tarry, wait for Him; He will come. His Elect must be completed in a little while. On looking back we shall see May 29th-30th, and even August 22nd seeds were sown by the Evil one, by God's permission only, which will eventuate into the chaotic convulsion taking full effect upon the earth, whilst God's people shall be called into their chambers of safety, hid until this tyranny be overpast.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of The National Message and Banner.

Daniel IX, 25, 26, 27.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Dobbs in his article under the above heading, like many others before him, seems to have failed to observe that "At the beginning of thy supplications the Commandment came forth . . ." (verse 23). Therefore neither Mr. Dobbs nor his chief authority, the marginal note in the A.V., have any right to say that the words of verse 25 refer to any later time; whether to what he calls the original decree of Cyrus, which he thinks became "abortive," or to "the decree granted to Ezra by Artaxerxes," whatever king he may mean by the latter name.

No! there should be no doubt in the mind of anyone who reads the whole of Daniel ix carefully. We are told exactly when the Commandment came forth. It was at the beginning of Daniel's supplications. He made those supplications in the first year of Darius the Mede. See verses 1-3, 21-23. Therefore "from the going forth of the Commandment" (verse 25) was from the first year of Darius the Mede; consequently the 483 years of verse 25 began at that year.

Once a fallacious opinion is started, especially so highly esteemed an one as a note in the A.V. margin, it lives long and dies hard. But this is not a matter of opinion, however high. It is a matter of the Bible's own words, which, moreover, are so clear and definite that there is no room for mere opinion. Anyone who can read is definitely informed by the words themselves.

Yours very truly,

C. C. Ogilvy Van Lennep.

THE GREAT PYRAMID BASE.

BY THE REV. F. S. RALPH, M.A.

WHILE in Egypt this year, I purchased a copy of Survey of Egypt Paper No. 39, being "The determination of the exact size and orientation of the Great Pyramid of Giza," which is published by the Government Publications Office, Cairo. This careful survey was undertaken by J. H. Cole, B.A. (Cantab.), F.R.G.S., Inspector of the Computation Office, in 1925, and the results published the same year; and it is valuable to all British-Israelites inasmuch that the survey yields wonderful data in British measures. Mr. Cole states that the four sides of the Pyramid at the casing stone edge are absolutely straight and the total lengths amount to exactly 36277·8 British inches at the platform level. But when the socket edges are taken into account the total lengths from corner to corner is 36532·694 British inches, if we admit that the non-existent south-west socket was approximately the same as the other three. This is so very nearly 36525 or the days in a solar year multiplied by 100 that Professor Piazzi Smyth's contention that the Great Pyramid enshrined the year length in inches in its base seems borne out, but instead of "Pyramid inches" it is British inches: a very wonderful thing. Another equally remarkable result is brought out by Mr. Cole's valuable survey; he states that the platform on which the casing stones rest is not the same distance out from the casing stone at all four sides. The north side is given in round figures as 42 centimetres, or, say, 16·5 inches. The east side is 48 centimetres, or, say, 18·8 inches. The south side is 40 centimetres, or, say, 15·7 inches; and the west side is 38 centimetres, or, say, 14·9 inches. If we subtract the various breadths from each other it would appear that some value of the pi-ratio is revealed in British inches. For instance: North 16·5 minus west 14·9 would give, when we add on the fractions to the left of the decimal point, 1·5708 inches. East is 18·8 minus south 15·7 equals 3·1416 inches; so that east is really 18·8496 British inches and the south 15·708 British inches, or, say, 6 pi and 5 pi expressed in the measures of modern British-Israel. The west side breadth of 14·9 seems to be really 15·708 minus ·7854 equals 14·9226, or 5 pi minus pi over 4. There may be other meanings that I have not observed, but these are so remarkable that I hasten to draw attention to them at once. The survey by Mr. Cole can be had from Cairo by sending the equivalent of PT. 10, plus postage. Although all measurements are given in metres, centimetres and millimetres, yet they are easily converted into British measures. Have the French measures obscured the pi-ratio results from British eyes?

1. Jesu, Light and Life and Love,
King Triumphant, Kings above;
Thus we pray on bended knee,
Make us more like Thee.

2. We, Thine heritage, Thine own,
Come before Thy heavenly Throne,
Pleading Thine own Name that we May be more like Thee.

3. More like Thee in heart and mind
Gentler, humbler, and more kind,
In Thy perfect Charity,
Make us more like Thee.

4. So, when Thou shalt come again,
In great love and power to reign,
Us, and ours O grant to be,
Jesu, more like Thee.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S NEWS AND NOTES.

IN this the last issue of our journal before the opening of our Ninth Congress we would emphasize the importance of the meetings next week and appeal to our readers to make every effort to attend each day if possible. The Headquarters' staff has worked assiduously at the organization for weeks past, and we are grateful for the cordial assistance of our supporters throughout the country in the circulation of leaflets, etc., and for their generous response to our appeal for funds. Scores of thousands of leaflets have been sent out in all directions. Announcements have been made in a large number of newspapers. Many hundreds of railway vouchers for cheap fares have been applied for. We have not spared either effort or wise expenditure to secure publicity. Only those with wide experience can appreciate the difficulty of arresting public attention in the midst of the numerous attractions and the multitude of distractions of modern life, and frankly the strain both mental and physical upon some of us has been considerable. But we are rewarded in the spiritual blessing received and in the joy of service in a Cause we hold so dear. We know that prayers have daily ascended to the Throne of Grace from thousands of true-hearted friends, and we know they will continue to pray for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the whole of the Congress proceedings.

We rejoice to record the safe arrival of the Rev. Pascoe Goard, Professor Odlum, the Rev. Dr. McConnell and his party, the Rev. E. J. Springett, Mr. W. H. Blackaller and others from Canada and U.S.A. in excellent health and spirits, all eager for the work ahead.

* * *

The Rev. Pascoe Goard, Dr. McConnell and Professor Odlum will speak at the opening meeting of Congress and several times thereafter. Mr. David Davidson, M.C., will make a very important statement concerning the Pyramid at one of the meetings. Programmes will be available on Monday afternoon. Mr. Harrison Hill and Mr. Ashby will be at the great organ during the week. As the Central Hall is booked for a concert on Saturday evening, October 6th, our meeting that night will be held in the Great Hall of the Church House, Great Smith Street.

* * *

Delegates and members are reminded that morning sessions will be held at H.Q. from Tuesday next to Saturday inclusive, at 11 o'clock, and that interesting addresses will be delivered each day.

* * *

An important article by Mr. D. Davidson on "The Truth about the Great Pyramid's Prophecy and its Fulfilment" will appear in this journal next week.

* * *

The Rev. Pascoe Goard and Professor Odlum gave between them over thirty addresses from Victoria to Toronto before sailing from Montreal for London. At Waukegan, in Illinois, Mr. Goard spoke to a combination of nine Churches under the leadership of the President of the Ministerial Association. We hope to receive some particulars presently of the Conference in Toronto, which was held from September 5th to 11th. In the meantime we are able to say it was successful in spite of the Toronto Exhibition which was on at the time and attracted some two million visitors. The Rev. Pascoe Goard, Professor Odlum, Chancellor Du Bois, Mr. Howard Rand and Mr. Blackaller were the speakers. Mr. Brown, formerly soloist and musical conductor for Gipsy Smith, led the musical portion of the services, and several soloists of exceptional ability rendered selections.

* * *

The Secretary-General's Round Table Conference at H.Q. on September 12th proved useful in discussion on Congress publicity. A cordial welcome was extended to the Rev. E. J. Springett, who had just arrived from Winnipeg and who gave a short address. A goodly number sat down to tea, and a happy time of social converse was enjoyed.

* * *

Miss Hamilton Hunter and Miss Gladys Modin have given excellent addresses on Wednesday afternoons. Prayer meetings have been held on Thursday evenings.

* * *

We have been favoured with visits from several members from South Africa, including Mrs. Cameron Swan. All speak in terms of praise of the work being carried on there by our Missioner, the Rev. Maxwell Carnson, F.R.G.S., F.R.S.A.

* * *

The Women's Bible Class will be resumed at H.Q. on the third Saturday in October, at 3 p.m.

* * *

Congress Continuation Meetings will be held at H.Q. from October 8th to 13th, at 2.45 and 7.30.

* * *

A new Branch has been formed in the West end of Belfast, and the winter's work will be commenced on October 19th in the West Belfast Orange Hall, when a large attendance is expected. Other meetings are to be held in the Unionist Hall, Tennant Street.

SOME ENGAGEMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

BIRMINGHAM, Erdington Folk-house, Monday, October 1st, at 7.30. Rev. T. H. Whitehouse.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation; the inheritors of her Charters; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction; the executors of her commissions.

It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—XIII.

EZEKIEL—continued.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, F.R.G.S.

We have done with the first part of Ezekiel, which deals with persistent rebellion and idolatry, self-induced punishment, Divine judgment, and the consequent fall of nations and disintegration of a whole civilization.

We now come to the restoration of Israel.

The great prophetic movement sweeps with amazing vigour over the preparatory movements towards re-establishment. The literature touching this period is contained in chapters xxxvi and xxxvii.

The Land of Israel.

In order to show the contrast between the "then" of Israel prophecy at the beginning of the prophetic period and the "now" of Israel prophecy at the end of the prophetic period, we shall place side by side in parallel columns parts of the two messages:—

Ezekiel vi, 1-7.

"And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

Son of man, set thy face toward the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them,

And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys; Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places.

And your altars shall be desolate, and your images shall be broken: and I will cast down your slain men before your idols.

And I will lay the dead carcases of the children of Israel before their idols; and I will scatter your bones round about your altars.

In all your dwellingplaces the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works may be abolished.

Ezekiel xxxvi, 6-15.

"Prophesy therefore concerning the land of Israel, and say unto the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy and in my fury, because ye have borne the shame of the heathen:

Therefore thus saith the Lord God: I have lifted up mine hand, Surely the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame.

But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come.

For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown:

And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded:

And I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men.

Thus saith the Lord God; Because they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations;

Therefore thou shalt devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord God.

Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God."

Let the reader turn to his Bible and read from the first verse of chapter xxxvi.

THE PURIFICATION OF ISRAEL.

(Ezekiel xxxvi, 21-38.)

"But I had pity for mine holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went.

Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went.

And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes.

For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.

Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.

A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

I will also save you from all your uncleannesses: and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you.

And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall lothe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities and for your abominations.

Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.

Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded.

And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by.

And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited.

Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate: I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it.

Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock.

As the holy flock, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts; so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men: and they shall know that I am the Lord."

ISRAEL REVIVED.

(Ezekiel xxxvii, 1-14.)

"The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord, and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones,

And caused me to pass by them round about: and, behold, there were very many in the open valley; and, lo, they were very dry.

And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest.

Again he said unto me, Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.

Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live:

And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

So I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone.

And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them.

Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.

So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts.

Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel.

And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves.

And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it, saith the Lord."

JUDAH AND ISRAEL REUNITED.

(Ezekiel xxxvii, 18-28.)

"And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not shew us what thou meanest by these?

Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes.

And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all:

Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

And David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them.

And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince for ever.

Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them: it shall be an everlasting covenant with them; and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore.

My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore."

Thus we have in rapid succession the following undertakings to be carried out in "the mountain of the height of Israel," that is to say, in Britain and the Overseas daughter nations, and in the nations of kindred stock on the Continent.

1. The restoration of Israel to Palestine. This restoration includes Judah in Israel as one of the twelve tribes. To talk of the restoration of the Jews to Palestine, except under those circumstances, as though such an event were prophesied in the Scriptures, is to fall into a fundamental error, which has cost already, and is likely to cost, Great Britain dearly.

2. The purification of Israel. Let it be noted that this is not by the substitution of the Gospel for the Divine law, but by restoring in the hearts of Israel the commandments, statutes and judgments of the Lord. He who preaches a Gospel divorced from the commandments, statutes and judgments which constitute the Israel constitution will find himself out of harmony with the Scriptures and strangely lacking in power in his ministry.

THE RESURRECTION OF ALL ISRAEL AS TYPIFIED BY THE VALLEY OF DRY BONES.

3. As a matter of fact, although in Israel there is some life stirring in regard to the Gospel of Salvation, shall we hazard the estimate of that life as being twenty per cent. efficient and eighty per cent. withered and dead in regard to the Gospel of Salvation? It will be agreed by all that in regard to the Gospel of the Kingdom Israel has been a valley of dry bones indeed, bleached skeletons, possessing the vertebrate form indeed of national organization, but dead and dry.

The wind of God is breathing upon the dry bones, as the Gospel of the Kingdom, like a breath from heaven, sweeps over them, and there is a shaking and a reconstruction among the hitherto lifeless multitude.

4. The reunion of Israel and Judah by the joining of the two sticks reverses the action of Our Lord breaking the staff "bands and beauty," spoken of in connection with the Crucifixion of Our Lord, by which action it is specifically declared "that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel" (see Ezek. xi, 7).

By the breaking of the staff, Judah and Israel ceased to be brothers in the old time; now, by the joining of the two sticks, Israel and Judah are to be reunited in the brotherhood of Israel.

Thus step by step is taken in rapid order in preparation for the complete restoration of the spiritual life of Israel in Church and State.

THE FINAL CONFLICT.

Now, at the end of the seven times of prophecy, when Israel is arising in the restoration process, comes the menace from Rosh, of Meshech and Tubal, or, in modern terms, Russia, of Moscow and Tobolsk.

The conflict is unexpected and tremendous. Our organization as Israel is thus indicated "Sheba and Dedan, the merchants of Tarshish and all the young lions thereof."

Digitized by Google

The tremendous organization of Russia is thus listed :—

" Rosh, of Meshech and Tubal.
Persia, Ethiopia and Libya.
Gomer and all his bands.
The house of Togarmah of the north quarters and all his bands : and many people with thee."

The conflict is so tremendous, and the description so majestic, that we must ask the reader to read it in the Book itself, Ezekiel xxxviii and xxxix.

This constitutes the last of Israel's wars. Unlike all the others, it is taken over, and the overwhelming victory gained by the Lord Himself on behalf of Israel, by the use of natural phenomena.

The result of this conflict is that, from that time forward, all rivalry and all opposition to the government of the Lord in the earth administered through the House of Israel will cease for ever.

It seems as though that ultimate and terrible conflict—terrible, that is to say, for the enemies of the Lord, is already overshadowing the very decade in which we live.

Well may the Lord say " Behold, it is come and it is done, saith the Lord."

Let us as Israel remember that Our Lord makes one stipulation in order that He thus might fight our battles in this coming conflict. " Nevertheless I will be enquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them." Let us be instant in prayer that God will indeed take upon Himself this conflict and save Israel from threatened disaster.

PART III OF THE BOOK OF EZEKIEL.

Unlike the other prophets, and because of the fact that Ezekiel is pre-writing the history of that nation which alone as a Kingdom will survive and go on into the millennium, the prophet does not halt his stride at the end of the prophetic period. He sweeps right forward into the millennial reign of Our Lord, and pre-figures the activities to be carried out in the reorganization of the national life and social and religious structure of the world.

The chapters are so graphic and plain as to speak for themselves.

We must therefore invite the reader to take his Bible and turn to chapter xl, and from that forward read the wonderful story of the reorganization of Israel and of the world preparatory to the millennial reign of Our Lord.

Thus Ezekiel makes his contribution to the great prophetic story. It is the contribution of the prophet to the Captivity concerning the then future history and the ultimate destiny of Israel.

ISRAEL IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

BY THE REV. COMMANDER L. G. A. ROBERTS, R.N.

To one who has had the Word of God as his guide without prejudice, and is uninfluenced by public opinion or theological dogma, the wonder is that people can be so blind as not to see the continuity of the Old Testament in the New. Has God changed? This we are told in the very last Book of the Old Testament is impossible : " I, the Lord, change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed " (Mal. iii, 6). Again, " Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord : And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse " (Mal. iv, 5-6) ; and we are commanded to " Remember the Law of Moses which I commanded in Horeb for ALL Israel, with the Statutes and the Judgments."

Then passing on to the New Testament (Matt. i, 21) : " Thou shalt call His Name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins."

Is not Israel included? What do we find on the very threshold of the Gospel when Herod slew all the little children of two years old and under, in Bethlehem? " Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying : In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not." Who were these but children of Benjamin, from Galilee of the Gentiles? It is to them especially that Jesus was sent, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, " He shall be called a Nazarene " (Matt. ii, 18, 22, 23). Where do we find that Jesus shall be called a Nazarene? Gen. xlix, 26 : " Let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph and on the crown of the head of him that was the Nazarene (separate) from his brethren." Look back at v. 24. Of Joseph, " from thence, or, that time he was the shepherd (keeper), the Stone of Israel." Then in Deut. xxxiii, 16 : " Let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was Nazarene (separated) from his brethren."

It is so we understand the words in John i, 45 : " We have found Him, of Whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." Bethlehem-Ephrath is especially connected with Rachel (Gen. xxxv, 19), and with Ruth, the wife of Boaz, the ancestor of David (Mic. v, 2) in the vicinity of the portion of Benjamin. We can understand the peculiar affection both tribes of Rachel would have for their mother's burial-place and especially Benjamin, for the place wherein he was born. Anyhow Matt. ii, 18, connects the " innocents " with Rachel, and Moses connects Joseph with Our Lord.

Our Lord's first mission as set forth was in Galilee, the land of Zebulun and Naphtali, in fulfilment of Isa. ix, 1-6 : " Jesus began to preach and to say, Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand " (Matt. iv, 17).*

What did He mean? We know of " the Kingdom set up by the God of Heaven," mentioned in Dan. ii, 44. Now, here was its King, offering Himself to those about Him. We are told in John iv, 45, the Galileans received Him ; the word signifies received him gladly.† But as for the Jews, He came to His own (kin) of Judah, and the Jews received Him not, as the whole of St. John tells you plainly (i, 11). Jesus told these

* Mark i, 14 : " Preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and saying, the time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand ; repent ye, and believe the Gospel." The Kingdom of Heaven is never alluded to in Mark, Luke or John, nor is the word Church alluded to in any of the other Gospels. The fact is evident, the Kingdom was offered to the Jews, and it was not until they had refused Him (Matt. xv, 1-9 ; 12-14. xv, v. 22-28) as Son of David that He turns to a Syro-Phœnician. Is it worth considering who this woman typified? For Israel in the Islands had come through Tyre and Sidon on their way into Britain (Isa. xxiii ; xxiv, 15-16a).

Jews, "Ye are not My sheep," "My sheep hear My voice and follow Me" (John x, 26, 27). But to as many as received Him, to them He gave power to become the sons of God. Born of God. Yes, out of Galilee came all His disciples! So He, on choosing His disciples, Matt. x, 6 (though one was a Jew, Judas Iscariot), said, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, nor into any of the cities of the Samaritans enter ye not, but go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel; and as ye go, preach, saying, the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand" (Matt. x, 5-7); and as if to show that this preaching is to Israel throughout this dispensation, He says in v. 23, "Verily I say unto you, ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of Man be come." "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel" (Matt. xv, 24).

After laying down the blessings of the Kingdom, Jesus says (Matt. v, 17-20), "Think not that I have come to destroy the law and the prophets, I am not come to destroy but to fulfil; for verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." St. Paul (Rom. xv, 8) says: "Now I say, Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers: And that the Gentiles might glorify God for His mercy." For had He not said to Abraham, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."‡

In St. Matthew's Gospel especially He talks of the Kingdom of Heaven. All His parables are concerning this Kingdom, and every one of these parables which concern the Kingdom relate to Israel as well as Judah.

In Matt xiii, He set forth the seed of the Kingdom sown broadcast through the whole world, but the world is composed of the wayside, the stony ground, the thorny ground, and the good ground hearers. It is only in the good ground that the seed bears fruit. This is the parable of the sower.

The second is a parable of "the good seed" and the tares; the good seed are the children of the Kingdom, the tares sown by the devil are the children of the wicked one; both these grow together till the harvest, and at the time of harvest the Son of Man sends forth His angels and gathers out the tares. It is possible, however, that the devil has overstepped himself, and some of his tares may eventually become wheat, impossible naturally; but with God all things are possible. So we must not take upon ourselves to judge before the Lord comes. Now every subsequent parable as told is also a parable concerning "the Kingdom of God"; except the seventh, or the last, which is the parable of the draw-net, and concerns the Kingdom of Heaven only, where good and bad are gathered in, in our last great missionary effort. The discrimination takes place at the end; the good are put into vessels, whilst the bad are cast away. This parable is not concerning the Kingdom of God.§

Now we pass on to the establishment of the community or assembly, forming what has been termed "The Church." In the first place we notice (Matt. xvi, 13) there were only His disciples present, and Dean Farrar tells us they were all from Galilee, except Judas Iscariot. It was the confession of Peter on behalf of all the Apostles, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God," which gave Our Lord the opportunity of saying at Cæsarea Philippi, at the very source of the Jordan under Mount Hermon, "Thou art πετρος and upon this πετρα I will build My Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." How significant as we look round and see the number of small stones or rocks, and then compare these to the solid Rock, all so firm and rigid. Peter was but a little stone, but the foundation of His Kingdom was the massive Rock, which typified the faith in Peter's confession.

Let us notice that this is the only time Jesus mentions His εκκλεσια as a whole or universal; the subsequent mention of the word in Matt. xviii refers to the local community only. Our Lord's references are all to the Kingdom. By this I would infer that the Kingdom of Heaven is the material or earthly kingdom, but those who are the ideal are the Kingdom of God. This ideal is the goal of all. The treasure hid in the field is Israel, the Kingdom of Heaven materially. The pearl of great price is the ideal Israel, the Kingdom of God.

In Matt. xxi, 30, as the Jews refused to work (see parable)¶ in the vineyard, when Jesus had set forth the righteousness of the Kingdom, He told them, "Verily I say unto you, the publicans and harlots go into the Kingdom of God before you"; finally, in v. 43, He shows that Israel is the nation unto whom the Kingdom of God is given, and they will bring forth the fruits of it. His last parable (Matt. xxii), in the marriage of the King's Son, they that were bidden (the Jews) would not come, and the Lord is wroth and sent forth His armies and destroyed their city (Jerusalem). He then sent forth His servants (Benjamin), to Israel especially, but into all the world, and gathered in all as many as they could find. The offer to each as he came was the wedding garment, the righteousness of Christ. And so ends this wonderful Gospel of the Kingdom of Heaven. We may call it the Gospel of the Son of David; it was really the offer of the Kingdom of God to the Jew, but as he refused it Israel and the individual Gentiles received it. This is confirmed throughout the other Gospels.

The high expectation of the disciples, as seen in Acts i, 6, and as we see in Luke xxiv, 21, was that Christ would have redeemed Israel. This we see was really the fact, from Luke i, 68-75, which, remember, was written afterward by St. Luke. We can now critically analyse this Song of Zacharias, and see that the mission of John the Baptist has been to make ready a people for the Lord. But his work is not done, and one might suggest that the Spirit and power of Elias will yet come upon Israel redeemed; and when the nation realizes its responsibility and its privilege, it will yet, and that very soon, "Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain" (Zech. x, i), "I will be enquired of by the House of Israel to do it for them." The descent of the Holy Spirit upon us, to fit us for the last struggle before Armageddon, is promised. Look at Joel ii, 28-32; Acts ii, 16-21; iii, 19-21, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. It is our prerogative to ward off much of the curse which will otherwise descend upon the earth. This can only be done by doing our utmost to bring Judah into the Gospel, for "what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?" (Rom. xi, 15).

Every Epistle is written to the Saints (Israel, Deut. xxxiii, 2-3; Ps. cxlviii, 14; cxlix) and faithful in Christ Jesus, both their Lord and ours, if in Christ (Gal. iii, 16, 29).

The Book of Revelation is Israel in spiritual combat against the world powers. For with God there is no variableness, neither shadow made by turning. Of His own Will begat He us (twelve tribes) with the Word of Truth, that we should be the first-fruits of His creatures (Jas. i, 17, 18; 1 Pet. i, 1-5; ii, 9-12; Hebrews).

§The parable of the tares and the wheat is concerning the Kingdom of Heaven, for there is not bad and good in the Kingdom of God (see v. 37-42). At the time of the harvest, the Son of Man sends forth His angels and gathers out of His Kingdom all that offend and do iniquity . . . . . then shall the righteous shine in the Kingdom of their Father. This parable is not in Mark or Luke, which only speak of the Kingdom of God.

¶In this parable the two sons are Israel and Judah. Israel refused at first, but afterwards repented (Jer. iii, 7, 12-14, 19-22). So Israel repents (xxxi, 18-22). With Judah we have it backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

MAGNA EST VERITAS.

By Henry Proctor, F.R.S.L.

The Rev. D. M. Panton, in a series of articles called "Panton Papers," has in one of them raised a series of objections to British-Israel Truth. He expects, as in the case of the Jews, the Ten Tribes would have carried with them throughout their migrations such characteristics as the following:—

(1) Customs and Religion (Synagogues).
(2) Language.
(3) Physiognomy.
(4) Unchanged Mode of Writing.
(5) Memory; and
(6) Records.

Customs and Religion.

(1) From the time of Jeroboam I, Israel had no opportunity for the worship of Jehovah, being cut off from the Temple-worship and probably from the synagogue also. For there could be no reading of the Torah. The worship of Baal and Ashtaroth would further tend to destroy the very memory of the Mosaic institutions, and so dead had the worship of Jehovah become that, in the time of Ahab, Elijah believed himself to be the only one remaining faithful. There were indeed 7,000 left somewhere, but known only to God, because the open worship of Jehovah meant death, and they were probably living as hermits like the hundred prophets that Obadiah hid away in a cave. How then could they carry the customs and religion with th_m which for centuries they had abandoned?

Language.

(2) As to language, we can give a list of hundreds of words, identical in sound and meaning with Hebrew, which are imbedded in our language, and the language of some of the earliest inhabitants of this country was Hebrew, for Dr. Margoliouth affirms that the old Cornish was a dialect of Hebrew.

Digitized by Google

PHYSIOGNOMY.

(3) The physiognomy of the British and Anglo-Saxon peoples is just what we would expect that of the Ten Tribes to be, for Professor A. H. Sayce, D.D., LL.D., tells us that "even in Biblical times the Jewish race was by no means a pure one. David we are told was blond and red-haired; *(1) and that even after the revolt of the Ten Tribes, the bulk of the population in Southern Judah continued to be Amorite in race though not in name"; (2) and "it is plain that the Amorite belonged to the blond race. His blue eyes and light hair prove this incontestably. So also does the colour of his skin"; (3) Even Abraham was confederate with three Amorite brothers, and when Jacob took Shechem "out of the hand of the Amorite" all the women and children were taken captive and formed part of the camp of Israel and would furnish wives to the ten sons of Jacob, the ancestors of the Ten Tribes. The city of Shechem was bequested to Joseph (Gen. xlviii, 15-22), and Joshua in dividing the land recognized the claims of the children of Joseph to this particular spot, though they did not succeed in driving out the Amorites, but intermarried with them.

* "Races of the Old Testament." (1) p. 115.
(2) p. 116.
(3) p. 167.

MODE OF WRITING.

This has actually happened to the Greeks, for the oldest Greek inscriptions found at Thera and Athens read from right to left,† and there are later inscriptions in the British Museum which mark such a transition by writing alternate lines from right to left and from left to right.

Mr. Wm. Sleeman, Secretary, Covenant Publishing Co., Ltd., and his stenographer, Miss Hinton. Mr. Morey on the left.

MEMORY AND RECORDS.

(5) and (6) In Malacca there are two or three thousand Portuguese descendants of the conquerors of Malaysia who were companions of Vasco di Gama and Albuquerque, of whom Dr. Yvan says that "Religion, morals, tradition and written transmission of thought are effaced from their remembrance. They had no idea of time, and neither knew who they were, nor whence they came."

"In Ecuador there are barbarous Spaniards of entirely unmixed blood who have lost every trace of historic tradition." (Brace "Manual of Ethnology," pp. 369-371.)

In the face of these facts why should it be deemed incredible that similar things have happened in the case of the Ten Tribes, which have happened in comparatively recent times, and in a much shorter period, to descendants of cultured European peoples. How otherwise could God's Word be fulfilled that Ephraim should be lost, "cast out of His sight" as Lo-ammi, but restored again as Ammi—My people—"My firstborn," "for all Israel shall be saved," not alone the Jews, of whom the Chief Rabbi in London says that they consist only of Judah, Benjamin and a certain number of Levites, and "as far as is known there is no admixture of any other tribes. We look forward to the gathering of the other tribes at some future day." And this is generally believed among the Jews to-day. We have had among us, as devout believers in British-Israel Truth, eminent Jewish scholars such as Marcus Bergmann and Eliezer Bassin who knew this. Men eminent for holiness, such as Mark Guy Pearse and Reader Harris, have also been our supporters. Mark Guy Pearse's dictum is as follows:

"Ephraim is my Firstborn" (Jeremiah xxxi, 9). "If England is Ephraim, then I can see this whole book of prophecies living to-day and being fulfilled in our midst. If England is not Ephraim, there is no nation answering to this description, nor as yet has there been one, nor is there at present any promise of such a nation appearing."

There are many other objections which must be dealt with by abler hands. But these facts are undeniable, and seemingly conclusive. We breathe no word of reproach, however, against our brother, but merely leave them to his consideration and that of his sympathizers, for: "The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle towards all, apt to teach, forbearing; in meekness instructing them that oppose themselves." All of us are liable to error, and there is a call for patient consideration and examination of each other's views, rather than recrimination. So we wish to deal so very gently with our opponents that we may one day hear them say: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a British-Israelite." Very soon, many now living will see the day, when all doubts on this matter will be dissolved, for He will come Whose right it is to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. Then shall we all see "Eye to eye when the Lord returneth to Zion." (Isaiah lii, 8.) For:

"There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer;
He shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob;
And they shall see the fulfilment of My Covenant,
When I have taken away their sins."
"And so all Israel shall be saved."

THE SPIRIT'S EXPULSION OF FALSE SHAME.

BY THE REV. GEORGE MATHESON, M.A., D.D.

"And hope maketh not ashamed: because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us."—ROMANS v, 5.

THE great difficulty with which early Christianity had to fight was a false shame. It was on the unpopular side, and youth does not like to be unpopular. The rising generation was in the minority; it was ashamed of its own hopes. How was the Christian hope to be lifted out of this shame? Paul says it could only be done in one way—by the coming into the heart of the spirit of love. And truly Paul is right. Love is the only conqueror of shame. A conviction may penetrate my intellect and yet I may shrink from avowing it. But when it is "shed abroad in my heart" all shame vanishes. When love comes I lift up my head before the world. The unpopularity of the cause becomes to me its glory. Love longs for sacrifice and the unpopularity presents the sacrifice. Love struggles to pour out its treasures, and the poverty of its object supplies its need. It glories in its chain, it rejoices in its tribulation, it exults in its humility. It would not give up its cross for the crown of a king or the robe of a seraph. It would not resign its burden of another's care though it were offered in exchange the wings of an eagle to mount and not be weary. It finds its highest pride in flying downwards; it "maketh not ashamed."

Spirit Divine, shed abroad in my heart the love of Jesus. Create within me that perfect love which maketh not ashamed. Inspire me with the power to follow Him into these lowly places where He delights to dwell. Impel me to go down with Him into the regions that sit in darkness, to accompany Him into the valley of the shadow of death. Help me to lift His Cross in the face of the universe, to carry His burden in the sight of all mankind. Enable me to see the majesty of His crown of thorns. Let me feel the glory of being with Him in the solitude of Gethsemane, of watching when others sleep, of standing when others flee. Let me learn the privilege of pouring the costly ointment on that wounded head that was wreathed with the sorrows of humanity. When thou hast shed abroad the love of Him in my soul I shall not be ashamed to hope for the outcasts whom He bore.

From "Voices of the Spirit."

Mrs. Josephine Butler, in her "Life of Saint Catherine," relates how Catherine told a friend that the anguish which she experienced in the realization of the sufferings of Christ was the greatest at the moment when she was pleading for the salvation of others. "Promise me that thou wilt save them!" she cried, and, stretching forth her right hand to Jesus, she again implored, in agony, "Promise me, dear Lord, that thou wilt save them! Oh, give me a token that thou wilt!" Then her Lord seemed to clasp her outstretched hand in His, and to give her the promise, and she felt a piercing pain, as though a nail had been driven through the palm.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

BY THE REV. G. H. LANCASTER, M.A.

QUESTIONS.—Are we right in the use of the Sunday as the Lord's Day? The Lord Jesus kept the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, and there is no Scriptural authority for the change.

Is Infant Baptism really necessary, or is it merely a pretty ceremony?

In reference to Malachi iv, 5. Does this mean that Elijah may be expected to come to the world again before the Second Coming of Christ?

F. H. (Tasmania).

ANSWER.—Yes, most certainly we are right in keeping Sunday as the Lord's Day, and would to God that it were more faithfully observed! The Christian Sunday originated with the Resurrection of the Lord, which took place on the first day of the week (the day which followed the Sabbath), a day which was again emphasized by the appearing of Christ on the following Sunday (the eighth day) to the disciples, including St. Thomas (John xx, 26). The day of Pentecost fell, of course, on Sunday (not on the Sabbath), while the Epistle of Barnabas says, "For which cause we observe the eighth day with gladness, in which Jesus rose from the dead, and having manifested himself to the disciples, ascended into heaven" (xiii, 10), which looks as if Sunday was such an important day in the early sub-apostolic period that they tried to fix Ascension Day on the first day of the week, which would obviously be an impossibility, as it is contrary to tradition and Christian observance.

For a long time the early Christians conducted their worship daily in the Temple (Acts ii, 46), observing at the same time the Jewish Sabbath ritual on the seventh day. But they also began to make a gradual and distinctive observance of the "first day of the week" (Acts xx, 7), thus keeping both Sabbath and Sunday. Apostolic custom and command, however, accentuated the importance of the "first day of the week" (1 Cor. xvi, 2), since it marked the Lord's Resurrection, so that before the end of the first Christian century Sunday was recognized as "the Lord's Day" (Rev. i, 10).

It is exemplary to note that the early fathers laid great stress upon the "Lord's Day observance." Thus we find Ignatius (who was known as "Theophorus," or "God-clad"), Bishop of Antioch, who wrote his Epistles A.D. 110-117, exhorting the Christians to be "no longer Sabbatizing, but living in observance of the Lord's Day, on which also our life sprang up again" (To the Magnesians, ix). In the same Epistle Ignatius says: "It is monstrous to talk of Jesus Christ and to practise Judaism, for Christianity did not believe in Judaism, but Judaism in Christianity," Melito of Sardis (A.D. 170) taught the same as Ignatius, as also did Eusebius (circ. A.D. 260-340).

The word "Sunday" was first used by Justin Martyr (A.D. 114-165). He says, "And on the day called Sunday τῇ τοῦ Ἡλίου λεγομένῃ ἡμέρα all who live in cities or in the country gather together to one place, and the memoirs of the prophets, or the writings of the Apostles, are read . . . then the president verbally instructs and exhorts to the imitation of these good things. Then we all rise together and pray, and . . . bread and wine and water are brought, and the president in like manner offers prayers and thanksgiving, according to his ability, and the people assent, saying Amen; and there is a distribution to each . . . and to those who are absent a portion is sent by the deacons. And they who are well-to-do, and willing, give what each thinks fit; and what is collected is deposited with the president, who succours the orphans and widows . . . and those who are in want, and . . . takes care of those who are in need. But Sunday is the day on which we all hold our common assembly . . . and Jesus Christ on the same day rose from the dead." (Apol. i, 67.)

Thus, after the Resurrection of Christ the seventh day and the first day were kept in each week. Gradually the importance of the first day of the week (the Lord's Day) overshadowed that of the Sabbath Day (although the Ebionites long continued to use both days), until Sunday began to take precedence, and the Sabbath Day worship fell into abeyance amongst the Christians.

Finally, in A.D. 321, the Emperor Constantine, in his famous Constitution, as a "legal duty," ordered "all courts of justice, inhabitants of towns and workshops, to rest on Sunday (venerabili die solis)," when Sunday observance became the law of the land. It is a "sign" between God and Israel (Exod. xxxi, 13; Isa. lviii, 13, 14), while it also serves as our national witness to the world.

(2) We cannot here enter into a discussion about Infant Baptism. Your best plan is to refer to some of the numerous books which deal with the subject.

(3) Mal. iv, 5. This verse had reference to the work of John the Baptist, who prepared for the Coming of Christ, and who came in the spirit and power of Elijah. This interpretation was confirmed by Our Lord on two occasions (Matt. xi, 14; Mark ix, 11-12).

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE GREAT PYRAMID'S PROPHECY AND ITS FULFILMENT.

BY D. DAVIDSON.

THE day of technical demonstrations that prove the Great Pyramid's prophecy is past. Such demonstrations were formerly necessary, but now that the day of fulfilment is come the issue is simple. The issue resolves itself into two simple questions:

(1) What in essence is the Great Pyramid's prophecy? and
(2) Has the prophecy been fulfilled?

These questions, of course, relate primarily to the inch-month scale of Pyramid prophecy, and readers of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE know that I have adopted a severely critical attitude in regard to this scale during the past seven years. This attitude has governed all my investigations, and any demonstrations that I have published confirming the scale and its prophecy have had to pass through a sieve of rigorous criticism. I have, in consequence, too frequently allowed my mental attitude on this question to weight my judgment against the evidence for the inch-month prophecy. This compelled me—probably unwisely and certainly with unnecessary dogmatism—to declare, in THE NATIONAL MESSAGE, 14th April, 1928, that "If the average normal man does not realize that the British Race is in a period of Tribulation during the early days of June, then THE INCH-MONTH SCALE INTERPRETATION OF THE PROPHETIC ALLEGORY FROM THE GREAT STEP INTO THE KING'S CHAMBER is proved to be erroneous." It would have been wiser to have realized—what indeed many suggested both in THE NATIONAL MESSAGE and in private correspondence—that we might as a nation be in dire tribulation without realizing our position for some time. In the same article I referred to this attitude and criticized it adversely. The facts considered in the present article prove conclusively that precisely what was suggested has happened and is now happening. We did enter a period of Tribulation on 29th-30th May, 1928, but, as a nation, we did not realize the symptoms and did not immediately submit our trouble for diagnosis. It is a trouble that immediately affected the most important section of our community but not immediately the majority. It is a trouble that strikes at the very roots of national stability and prosperity. What therefore matters in relation to Pyramid prophecy is not whether any personal OPINION has been confirmed but whether my DEMONSTRATIONS of the Pyramid's prophecy interpretation have been confirmed in detail by recent events.

I would emphasize, however, that the Tribulation need not necessarily proceed by the present phase of trouble becoming accentuated. The present phase may yet assume a less threatening aspect and may give place IN IMPORTANCE to another phase of attrition. I would therefore ask those who are interested in the question of Pyramid prophecy to maintain a WATCHFUL attitude, and not to jump hastily to conclusions, but to wait until each phase successively develops so that the facts of current history can be compared with the related facts of the Pyramid's prophecy interpretation. In this article I have dealt with only one phase of the Tribulation. Those acquainted with my work know that other phases are specified by the Great Pyramid's prophecy.

THE PROPHECY.

The prophecy of the Great Pyramid—enshrined in structural and geometrical form and allegory nearly 5,000 years ago—is essentially a Divine Revelation delivered to modern civilization in the current terms of modern science. Thus the Great Pyramid confirms the teaching of the Bible by means of the principles and discoveries of modern science, and proves to be a veritable "Witness unto the Lord of Hosts." This has been conclusively demonstrated in my various publications during the past seven years.

The demonstrations have shown that the object of the Scientific Revelation is to establish, independently of any other Revelation or experience, that Jesus Christ is the Truth and the Light of men, and the Saviour of humanity; that He, "by whom all things were created," existed "before all things"; and that He is "the stone rejected by the builders" in the Scriptural Pyramid allegory of "the Stone Kingdom," in which Jesus Christ is "the head and chief Corner Stone."

The Revelation furthermore portrays that the passage system of the Great Pyramid represents a prophetical record of history for a period of 6,000 years, beginning in 4,000 B.C. and, inter alia, that this record contains a Message of warning and instruction concerning the Final Tribulation. The Message is addressed to the whole of humanity, but its warning and instruction are primarily addressed to a particular race that should bear the initial burden of the Tribulation, and be moulded by the experience as clay in the hands of the Divine Potter.

The Message of warning and instruction is primarily addressed to a nation that should undergo a period of intensive trouble from 4th-5th August, 1914, to 10th-11th November, 1918, and that should be in possession of the inch-unit of measurement of the Adamic (or Aryan) agricultural race at the period of time specified. The dated period of trouble corresponds with Britain's participation in the Great War, and is symbolized, in the Great Pyramid, by a low narrow passage in limestone. The details mentioned thus identify the British race as the race to which the Message is addressed, and specify the British race as the race that must undergo the initial experience of the Final Tribulation. This Tribulation is symbolized by a second low narrow passage as extending from 29th-30th May, 1928, to 15th-16th September, 1936. This passage is built in granite, and, as I had pointed out previously, the use of "granite here signifies conditions altogether different from those that held during the period of the First (Limestone) Tribulation Passage"—defining the Great War period.

In articles and publications in which I have given the precise dates of the Final Tribulation during the past seven years I have endeavoured to the best of my ability to direct public attention to the troublous times ahead of our nation. But although much interest has been aroused, this has been overweighed, in its influence, by the all-pervading atmosphere of scepticism peculiar to our life and times. The consequence is that those who have possessed the necessary ability to enlighten the public generally as to the accuracy and truth of the Pyramid's Revelation have been "found wanting." The force of facts, the logical sequence of the pressure of events and the attendant suffering will, however, in the course of time, awaken mankind to the actuality of the Revelation.

In "The Great Pyramid: Its Divine Message"—published in July, 1924—the Pyramid prophecy was interpreted on pages 398-400 as indicating a revolutionary change, between 12th December, 1919, and 29th May, 1928, in industrial conditions due to "mass production on a large scale by unskilled and semi-skilled labour," the change being portrayed as "reaching the climax of its symbolical intention at the doorway to the second Low Passage, the passage of Chaos resumed—dating 29th May, 1928." "The Pyramid defines its Message and the period of Chaos as relating to the British race." (p. 412.)

THE FULFILMENT.

Four months have passed since we entered the period of the Final Tribulation passage. Within this short time the serious position of our basic industries has been revealed to the public, and this, together with many significant happenings at home and abroad since the Tribulation period began, is giving deep concern to serious-minded people, producing perplexity and an increasing burden of anxiety concerning the future prospects of our country and Empire. These, however, are of too general a nature to reveal the overwhelming Truth of the Pyramid's prophecy. The definitive indications that prove the incidence of a National Tribulation at 29th-30th May, 1928, and the intensification of the Tribulation since that date are the Ministry of Labour statistics relating to unemployment in the basic industries of the country. These statistics are the barometer that indicates the general condition of the basic industries upon which depends the prosperity or adversity of our national life.

Digitized by Google

"EVER SINCE THE END OF MAY," says the leading article of The Daily Telegraph, 10th August, 1928, "the unemployment figures, which had dropped considerably, have been bounding up at the rate of more than 20,000 a week . . . Unemployment normally tends to increase in the winter months, and it looks as though we may have to look forward to the worst winter that we have had since 1879. Then the cause was a succession of hard winters and sunless wet summers; now Nature has done her best for us and the fault cannot be laid at her door. There is no sovereign specific for the present troubles, and the politician or creed that pretends to have one is guilty of a cruel imposture on the sufferers. . . . 'The problem of unemployment in the depressed industries,' says the recent Report of the Industrial Transference Board, 'is one which can only be solved IF THE WHOLE COMMUNITY REALIZES ITS EXISTENCE AND CONSCIOUSLY RESOLVES TO GRAPPLE WITH IT.' But there is no such general realization of our trouble. . . . The South of England knows nothing of it; it is acute only in the North and in THE GREAT STAPLE AND COMPETITIVE INDUSTRIES WHICH ARE TO OUR GENERAL TRADE WHAT THE FIGHTING FRONT WAS TO THE HOME FRONT DURING THE WAR."

Mr. Benjamin Talbot, President of the National Federation of Iron and Steel Manufacturers, states (The Daily Mail, 24th July, 1928) that "increasing unemployment and continued depression of our basic industries constitute A CRISIS, which in its possible influence on the future of this country is COMPARABLE WITH THE GREAT WAR ITSELF."

I have quoted my interpretation in 1924 as indicating that the revolutionary change in British industrial conditions would be due to "mass-production on a large scale by UNSKILLED AND SEMI-SKILLED labour," and that this revolutionary change would reach its climax in the period beginning 29th-30th May, 1928. The date has been confirmed, and, as the following quotations will show, the prophecy interpretation is now being confirmed in detail.

The Special Commissioner of The Times Trade and Engineering Supplement (1st September, 1928) states:—

"After seven years of severe depression (in the basic industries) a dangerous situation has arisen. . . ."

"Probably more than half the unemployed are UNSKILLED OR SEMI-SKILLED WORKERS. . . . For any other work they must be trained de novo, and all sorts of obstacles in the form of Trade Union rules reinforce the purely technical and economic difficulties of a change of occupation."

"A TURN FOR THE WORSE SINCE MAY."

"No secret need be made of the fact," says The Daily News (13th August, 1928) "that the banking element of the city is DEEPLY CONCERNED ABOUT THE TURN TRADE TOOK ABOUT MAY, A TURN FOR THE WORSE WHICH HAS BEEN ACCENTUATED. The great banks all thought and predicted at the annual meetings in February last that the longed-for revival of trade was genuinely on the way this year."

INDUSTRIAL DECLINE.

To explain what has happened and what is now taking place it is necessary to resort to a simple illustration. Leakage from a reservoir to an adjacent lower reservoir is generally first indicated by the fall of water level in the higher reservoir and the rise of water level in the lower. An observant engineer, however, might be able to foresee a leakage from certain warning indications in the embankment or wall between the two reservoirs. Analogously financial experts saw the warning signs of economic instability as Whitsuntide of this year approached. The reservoir of employment emptied for the Whitsuntide holidays and A DANGEROUS LEAKAGE DEVELOPED ON 29TH-30TH MAY—THE PYRAMID'S PROPHETIC DATING—WHEN THE RESERVOIR OF EMPLOYMENT REFILLED AS INDUSTRY WAS RESUMED. The level in the reservoir of UNEMPLOYMENT rapidly rose in consequence of the failure in economic stability. There were no signs even of incipient failure during the early part of the year. For the first three months of 1928 the relative levels of employment and unemployment were the best of any year since the post-war "boom" ended. With the financial systems of Europe largely stabilized and the promise of early financial stabilization in France, the omens were interpreted as indicating a return to normal trade conditions during 1928. The general downward trend of the annual curve of unemployment from 1922 to 1927 inclusive—except for the General Strike and Coal Strike of 1926—indicated a steady return to normal conditions. This general downward trend in the unemployment figures was maintained for the early months of 1928.

UNEMPLOYMENT 53 PER CENT. ABOVE EXPECTATIONS.

Comparison of the first seven week-endings in 1927 with the first seven week-endings in 1928 showed an average unemployment decrease from 1927 to 1928 of 163,000. Had this average decrease been maintained the unemployment figure for 13th August, 1928, would have been as low as 859,150. Such was the outlook when, as The Daily News of 13th August, 1928, states: "The great banks all thought and predicted at the annual meetings in February last that the longed-for revival of trade was genuinely on the way at last." Instead, however, of UNEMPLOYMENT being as low as 859,150 on 13th August, the figures rose to 1,314,159 on that date, representing an excess of 455,000, or 53 PER CENT. ABOVE EXPECTATIONS. In place of the bright prospects of February, The Sunday Times of 12th August has nothing brighter to offer than "that the winter ahead of us will be one of the gloomiest on record."

The outlook presented is no blacker than are the conclusions of the series of articles entitled "Our Regional Survey" in The Times Trade and Engineering Supplement. "We could wish that they (the conclusions) were of a more cheerful nature," states the leading article in the issue of 1st September, 1928, "but obviously it would be absurd to send a carefully chosen observer out and then to restrict his expression of opinion. No good purpose is to be served by bidding reporters go forth in search of trade prosperity and printing only the favourable points and omitting the less satisfactory news. That kind of thing pleases none but the extremely short-sighted and misguided gentlemen who think that trade 'booms' can be called into being by announcing their existence . . . OPTIMISM AT HOME HAS LITTLE INFLUENCE ON BUYERS ABROAD . . ."

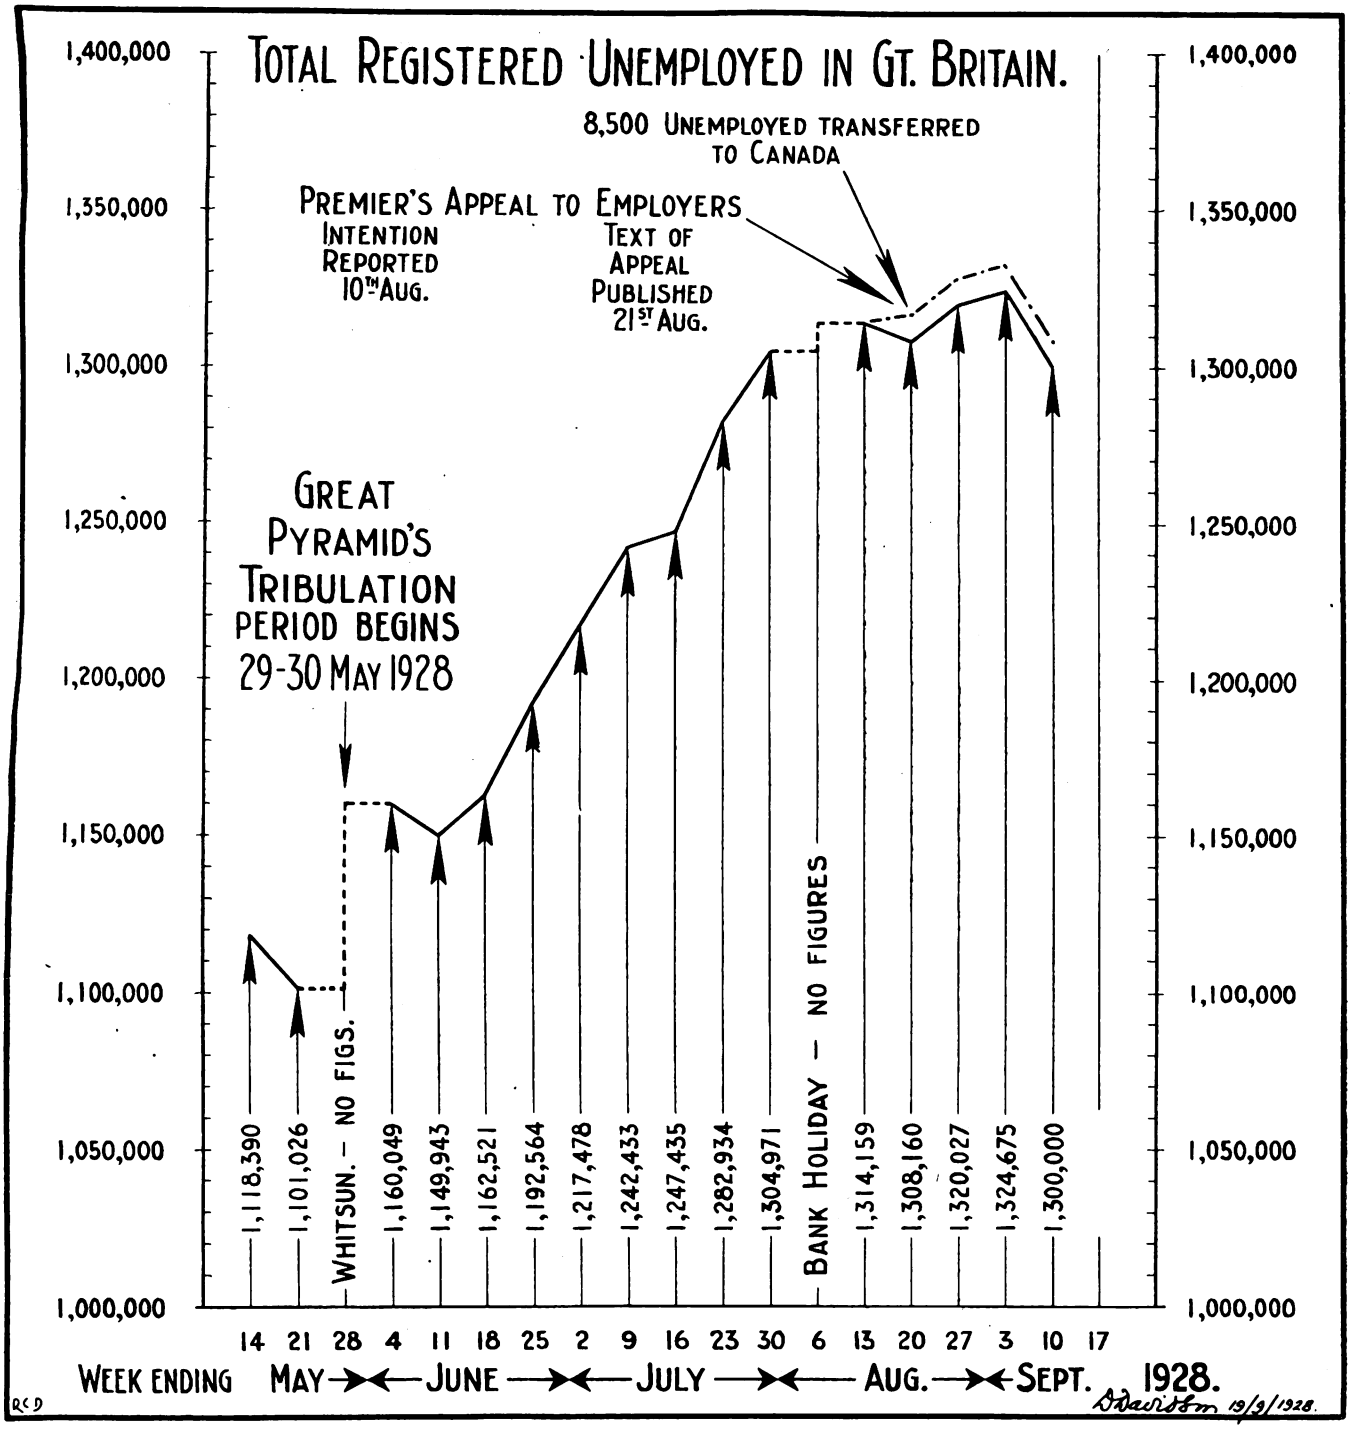
". . . the world has changed very rapidly, and if this country is to keep its rightful place its rulers, its leaders, and its general population must be prepared to BREAK WITH THE PAST AND TO ADOPT AN ENTIRELY NEW ATTITUDE TO MEET THE NEW CONDITIONS."

"THE WAY OF ECONOMIC SALVATION."

In this connection the leading article in The Morning Post, 11th August, 1928, states that ". . . What Mr. Baldwin's appeal (to employers) does is to emphasize forcibly THE VERY SERIOUS PLIGHT INTO WHICH WE, AS AN INDUSTRIAL NATION, HAVE FALLEN. IT IS NO LONGER POSSIBLE TO PRETEND THAT THE EXISTING TRADE DEPRESSION IS A TRANSIENT PHENOMENON. CLEARLY ITS CAUSES ARE DEEP ROOTED, AND IT HAS COME TO STAY, UNLESS VERY RESOLUTE METHODS ARE TAKEN TO ABATE OR REMOVE THE CAUSES. IT WILL NOT CURE ITSELF. That much is certain; and we are wasting time and opportunity if we allow ourselves 'to look for health from seeds that have been sown in sickness.' . . . We must face the realities . . . if this country is to contrive to support its present population somebody has to tell the people the truth—which is that THE WAY OF ECONOMIC SALVATION IS BY SACRIFICE AND NOT BY CONCESSION."

"The bankers . . ." says the leading article in The Morning Post, 21st July, 1928, "know very well that THE PLIGHT OF THE HEAVY INDUSTRIES DOMINATES THE ECONOMIC SITUATION. . . . Iron and steel are essential to the coal trade; the coal trade is necessary to the railways—here is a simple chain of causes and consequences on which the whole question hangs."

The brilliant French publicist, M. Andre Siegfried, thinks that the present crisis indicates "THE PASSING OF ENGLAND'S ECONOMIC HEGEMONY." THE GREAT PYRAMID'S PROPHECY PORTRAYS THE CRISIS AS THE DARKNESS PRECEDING THE DAWN OF A NEW AND BRIGHTER AGE, NOT ONLY FOR THE BRITISH RACE, BUT FOR ALL SUFFERING HUMANITY.



HOW EVENTS ARE SHAPING.

The Tribulation began—on the date the Great Pyramid's prophecy indicated it would begin—on the resumption of work in the basic industries of Great Britain, on 29th-30th May, 1928, after the Whitsuntide holidays. The number of registered unemployed at the official week-end following the Whitsuntide holidays immediately increased by 59,023 on the total for the week-end preceding the holidays; and in ten weeks, by the official week-end preceding August Bank Holiday, increased by 203,945—an average rate of increase of over 20,000 per week. Coincidently with this revelation, the critical financial state of the railways, and the plight of British agriculture were disclosed, together with the dearth of orders in the shipbuilding industry. Realization of a common danger brought employers and employed into temporary sympathy with their respective grievances—and, let it be said, in most cases legitimate grievances; threatened strikes, lock-outs, suspensions, and extensions of part-time employment in the basic industries were avoided or cancelled, orders were accelerated, and attempts were made, in certain quarters, to create an artificial "prosperity wave" to give a fillip to the basic industries. At the same time, the Government promised to accelerate the derating policy as applied to the basic industries, and, following this, the Premier appealed to employers to retain or absorb as many workers as their resources would permit.

The result of all the sympathetic factors operating is seen in the flattening of the unemployment curve from 30th July onwards. This beginning is hopeful, in that it indicates an early understanding of the humanitarian aspects of the crisis. The Great Pyramid's Message clearly indicates that sympathetic understanding and conciliatory measures are of infinitely greater value, in the current crisis, than either financial stability or the future of the basic industries. For we are entering a new age in which the spirit of things is everything, and in which financial stability and the basic industries—AS WE HAVE KNOWN THESE—will matter not at all. No particular party is to blame for what is happening, unless all are to be condemned in part for the trend of modern civilization, and for the consequences of its evils. The Premier's appeal is an honest beginning and it would be well for all parties, all employers, and all employees to realize this. It is not the last word but it is a good first endeavour, as it was meant to be. Many phases of conciliation and good endeavour will have to be experienced before the Tribulation is ended. The higher the ideals of conciliation and good endeavour the sooner will civilization regain its true focus and attain its true stabilization. For the focus from which modern civilization derived its urge, and from which modern civilization is now DISPLACED is the spiritual focus that is centred in Jesus Christ, the Great Conciliator, in Whom all divergent forces must become reconciled. He is the focus of the civilization of the New Age, and the Spirit of the new humanitarianism. He it is who will prove to be the Redeemer of the British Race in its current crisis, and the Saviour of humanity. The Message of the Great Pyramid's Prophecy is that the British Race must pass through its travail of redemption first, and that the travail has already commenced. This Message proclaims that the latest date for the Tribulation ending is 15th-16th September, 1936, but that the burden upon the British Race will be removed as soon as the race appeals collectively to God, in sincerity of spirit and in national repentance, to "do it for them."

There are, however, several phases of attrition in the Tribulation period, and no phase is necessarily continuous, although the Tribulation itself is continuous. Economic instability and industrial decline mark the initial stage of attrition. This phase may yet assume a less threatening aspect and may give place in importance to another phase of attrition. Other phases seem already to be developing, as, for example, in the rapid deterioration of the personal factor in every phase of modern responsibility. The essential matter to realize now is that every phase of Tribulation is for the ultimate good of the British Race and for all humanity. They lead to the time concerning which Our Lord spoke when He said, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." (Luke xxi, 28.)

THE FIRST FIFTEEN WEEKS OF THE TRIBULATION.

All trade predictions were falsified by the sudden jump up in the figures of unemployment when work was resumed in the basic industries on 29th-30th May, 1928, after the Whitsuntide holidays. THE OMINOUS FEATURE OF UNEMPLOYMENT this summer and autumn is the steadily persistent increase in persons WHOLLY unemployed. In the Ministry of Labour weekly returns of the number of registered persons unemployed in Great Britain, the total number of unemployed—as given on the above diagram—is made up of "persons wholly unemployed," "persons temporarily stopped," and "persons normally in casual employment." Since the official week-end preceding Whitsuntide the number of "totally unemployed" has increased by nearly 120,000; and at 10th September totalled 877,100. At 10th September, 1928, the figures were 59 per cent. above expectations for this date on 9th January, 1928; and although the figures for the total number of unemployed indicated a fall of 24,675 on the previous week, the number of persons wholly unemployed increased by 5,800.

The opening lecture of the season at the Watford Branch, given by Rev. Commander Roberts on September 24th, was splendid. "The Vindication of the Bible and the Great Pyramid" was the subject dealt with by able exposition. Colonel C. W. Brazier-Creagh kindly assisted in the position of Chairman.

The Harrogate Branch enjoyed an excellent lecture on September 24th, by Mr. G. R. Gair, entitled "The Ethnological Origin of the British Race." The speaker received marked attention throughout.

The Bradford Branch opened the season on September 21st with a lecture by Rev. R. G. F. Waddington, who dealt with pamphlets and books written against British-Israel teaching, analysing and comparing them with Scripture and history. It was a fine address. A lively discussion followed. Dr. J. C. Sykes was in the chair.

THE BIBLE, CHRIST AND MODERNISM. By T. J. McCrossan, B.A, B.D. 3s. 6d. net, 3s. 9d. by post. London : The Covenant Publishing Co., 6, Buckingham Gate, S.W.1.

There is nothing like plain speaking if you wish to convince your readers or hearers. Some people may object to this, but so serious is the subject under examination that we must nolens volens declare the truth.

We are exceedingly glad to recommend an author who takes care to measure his language in accordance with the importance of the theme under discussion. To mince matters is simply to play into the hands of the opponent.

We have in this most interesting volume of 22 pages five reasons given why the Bible is inspired of God. Not one single prophecy that has ever appeared in its pages but what has received fulfilment, so far as we have yet gone in our world's history. Science has never yet been able to disprove anything that the Bible has ever stated. Many recent discoveries of science are seen to have been anticipated, and to be so spoken of, thousands of years before science had found them out, as to be clearly understood immediately experts came to an agreement. Even the archæologist, with his spade and shovel, in every instance, shows the Bible to be more trustworthy than any historicist.

Our Lord's authority for everything He spoke was God Himself. The present-day "experts" who dare to question Our Lord's words are exposed by their own writers, and are proved to be ignorant and intellectual fools. This may be strong language, but it is Scripture phraseology.

The teachings of Modernism are set forth as denying the essential fundamentals of the Christian faith. All these are exposed and dealt with in a most convincing style. The original Greek is set out as it stands, and its literal rendering is so dealt with as to leave no doubt in the mind of a sincere seeker after Truth as to who is right.

The advice to parents, as to their action towards children who are nowadays being misled by their school teachers, is most salutary.

Cleverly written, with an earnest desire to counteract the terrible schism of corrupting the Word of God and dishonouring Our Lord Jesus Christ, this book should be found in every household.

We can but say we have read many works debating "evolution," "the Virgin birth," "the humanity and Deity of Our Lord," and His solemn warnings, but we do not call to mind one which goes so straight to the point of proving the Bible to be true, and that "Christ is very God and very man," God Himself upon earth, as this admirable work of our Greek and Hebrew examiner, Dr. McCrossan.

Most opportune for the present age of the devil's last struggle. L.G.A.R.

HOURS WITH THE PROPHETS.—XIV.

DANIEL.

By the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, F.R.G.S.

As is the case with the rest of the prophets, the literature of Daniel makes a fragmentary contribution to the great whole.

With Jeremiah and Ezekiel he wrote at a most tremendous period of world history. There had been a balance of power in Western Asiatic civilization, having on the one hand Judah, Israel and Syria on the Mediterranean, together with a number of minor States; and Assyria, later merging into Babylon, on the Euphrates. While Israel was united under David and Solomon they held the balance of power. When Israel divided, and the lesser nations failed to coalesce, while at the same time Euphratean organization of peoples became united in Assyria and, later, Babylon, the divided nations of the West, one by one, fell before the concentrated power and authority of Assyria and, later, Babylon.

Thus Israel and Syria fell before the impact of Assyria.

Judah and the remaining Western nations fell before the impact of Babylon.

At the beginning of this period Isaiah wrote his wonderful literature, [illegible] at all events, that is the period the Isaiah literature covered.

Towards the end of this period of disturbance Jeremiah prophesied, covering the period and events which prophetically depended thereon from the standpoint of Judah and Jerusalem.

Ezekiel, dwelling amongst the Israel captivity, prophesied, covering the period and the events depending therefrom from the standpoint of Israel.

Daniel, carried captive to Babylon and there attaining eminence and authority, prophesied, covering the period and the events depending therefrom from the standpoint of the non-Israel Babylon succession of Empires.

The field covered by Daniel's prophecies is unique, being the field of the Gentile Empires.

The form of Daniel's prophecies is also unique, being a presentation of a succession of pictures. The other prophets expressed their message plainly in words and figures, with here and there an illustration carried out often by the action of the prophet; but the Daniel message consists of pictures of statuary and of living creatures illustrating the message prophetically given to Nebuchadnezzar and his successors.

Now, why should the form of the Daniel message differ from that of all the other prophets? Because of the fact that it does so differ, and so takes on the form of pictures, men of affairs are apt to say, "This is very interesting for children and people of leisure, but men of affairs desire a more direct form of communication." Therefore the prophecies of Daniel are lightly esteemed.

The answer to the question seems to be self-evident when once one's attention is drawn to the matter.

Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel took up and carried forward a prophetic story that was ages old, adding a new chapter to a well-known story.

They were sent to branches of a people who had been trained for generations upon generations to a knowledge of the great story contained in history and prophecy. So the groundwork of the story and the terms in which it was expressed was familiar to the Israel people and the Judah people from childhood for many generations. Pictorial representations were therefore unnecessary for them.

Digitized by Google

But the story was entirely new for Babylon; no prior teaching; no age-long groundwork of antecedent knowledge had prepared their minds for the reception of the truth; their language did not contain suitable terms for the expression of the message of the Jehovah kingdom; neither were there concepts already in their minds to which to make appeal.

Therefore the story was not told in words and figures, done into sentences, paragraphs and logical arguments, but in that universal mode of expression, namely, graphic pictures which carry the information through the eye.

Thinking the matter over carefully from this standpoint, the form of the Daniel literature, intended for a heathen king and his heathen people, was just such as one would expect it to be.

It is not our intention in this article to go into a detailed examination of the prophecies of Daniel, nor to show how they apply in detail to the seven times of Gentile dominance; it is simply our intention to show how the prophecies of Daniel relate themselves and are necessary to the great prophetic story.

Let us now commence with chapter ii, the great dream-image seen by Nebuchadnezzar in his dream. It will be noticed that the picture was double-panelled, having two major figures in the foreground. The first of these was a military image in the form of a man. The composition of the image was metallic throughout, showing that it was not directly the product of the handiwork of the Creator, but that it was composed of metals artificially produced and moulded by the hand of man.

The head of the image was gold.

The shoulders of silver.

The loins and thighs were of brass.

The legs of iron.

This presents to us a fourfold imperial succession, and as they were worked out in history we know them to stand for, and to have fulfilment in, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome.

We have said it was a succession of Empires.

Medo-Persia succeeded Babylon by the overthrow of the Nebuchadnezzar dynasty.

Greece succeeded Medo-Persia by the overthrow of Medo-Persian authority.

Rome in turn absorbed and subjugated Greece.

We now turn to the second panel of the picture. On this panel is shown a stone; it is not the product of the handiwork of man; there is nothing artificial about it. It is the product of the Divine creative activity.

In connection with this stone four things are said, as follows:

"In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which

1. Shall never be destroyed.
2. Which shall not be left to other people.
3. Which shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms.
4. And which shall stand for ever."

It may be necessary to say in regard to the term "these kings" that the kings are numbered in this 2nd chapter before us as follows:—

1. "Thou art this head of gold."
2. "After thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee."
3. "And another third kingdom of brass . . ."
4. "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; . . ."

It is in the days of these kings that the God of Heaven shall set up a kingdom.

The vision now takes on the aspects of a moving picture which can only be briefly noted by a quotation. (Dan. ii, 34-35.)

> "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces.
> Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshingfloors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."

Where was this second kingdom set up? It was no part of Daniel's message to declare, for the kingdom was to be "as a treasure hidden" . . . But if we will go to the Israel in the Isles' message of Isaiah, to the "mountain of the height of Israel" to which the tender one of Hezekiah's line was taken as in the 17th Ezekiel, we shall be compelled to the conclusion that the kingdom set up by the God of Heaven was set up there, and that the person in whom it was so set up was the daughter of Zedekiah, who became the heir apparent to the throne of David when Nebuchadnezzar slew the sons of Zedekiah.

We must now pass on to chapter iii and see the great pageant the unveiling of "the image of gold" set up upon the plains of Dura. Let us be careful not to read this as a golden image, but as the image of gold. Nebuchadnezzar had become a believer in the God of Daniel and had made the following declaration:—

"Of a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldest reveal this secret." But this did not break Nebuchadnezzar from idol worship.

While he permitted Daniel and his followers to worship their God, he nevertheless demanded that they should worship the image of gold which he had set up. This pageant seems to have been the setting-up of an established religion for the Empire of Babylon, as has been the spirit of the Babylon organization, especially in ecclesiastical matters, down to the present day; the proclamation was made to worship the image or suffer in the fiery furnace.

In the 2nd chapter of Daniel the national imperial organization is set up.

In the 3rd chapter of Daniel the ecclesiastical system was inaugurated and established.

Wherever thereafter we cross-sect the history of the Babylon succession down to the fall of the Cæsars, and even down to the loss of the temporal power by the Papacy in 1870, and still on down to the destruction of the Empires in 1918, we find two branches of authority, the national and temporal, the ecclesiastical and spiritual.

Digitized by Google

It will be noted, however, that the image of gold was set up upon the plains of Dura after the imperial image had been revealed to Nebuchadnezzar by the Most High.

If we could count aright the years between the dream-image and the setting-up of the image on the plains of Dura, then counting from the fall of the Empires in 1918 forward the same number of years, we should be able to estimate the time of the ending of the established religion of the imperial succession.

Perhaps not the ending of the faith, but the ending of the ecclesiastical organization, which is a very different matter.

Coming now to chapter iv, we find the prophet dealing with the dynasty of Nebuchadnezzar. In his own person Nebuchadnezzar experienced in miniature the full seven times of Gentile rule. It was a period of madness, when the imperial king herded with the beasts of the field and ate grass like oxen. This was the type of the low sensuality which should be the basis and the manifestation of the madness of the imperial succession.

At the end of the Babylonian period the tree representing the dynasty of Nebuchadnezzar was hewn down by the command of "the watchers." Its stump was left in the field and it was bound about by bands of iron and brass, indicating that it should be preserved as a family in lowly circumstances during the brass and iron period. Then it was declared that it should sprout again at the end of the seven times.

If at any time it is permissible to allow fulfilment to explain prediction, then we should say in connection with European history the meteor-like rise of the House of Hohenzollern from the rank of Margrave to the rank of King, bitterly contested and hardly allowed by the crowned heads of Europe, onward still to an established position among the crowned heads of Europe; through the tremendous efforts of Frederick the Great in the Seven Years' War; on again to the imperial crown of an united Germany; and on still higher to the absolute command of all the territories and all the nations included in ancient Babylon, with the exception of the Latin peoples; then we should say fulfilment points to the Hohenzollern as the House of Nebuchadnezzar redivivus.

Recollect Daniel is dealing with the Gentile or Continental Empires, and it would be the strangest possible thing if a prophetic message so far-reaching and accurate in outline and detail should overlook the final tremendous development or the personality under whom it took place.

Each of these prophecies overleap the full seven times of prophecy and cover the period of Gentile domination.

There follow now in rapid succession contributions to Daniel's prophecy concerning the Empire, bringing into bold relief great outstanding events which mark the course of the fulfilment of the general scheme of Daniel prophecy.

We shall deal with these at large on another occasion.

Towards the end of this Book of Daniel are a series of prophecies which had a preliminary fulfilment in part during the first half of the seven times. But of such a nature are they that the answer of past history has been insufficient to completely fulfil these prophecies.

It is becoming more and more manifest that the larger and complete fulfilment is now going on before our eyes. The prophecies of Daniel carry forward the succession of Empires to their end. They then show the kingdom and the dominion being given to the saints of the Most High; they foreshow that kingdom becoming universal in the earth, and that it shall stand unassailable and indestructible to the end of time under the beneficent reign of the coming King of Israel.

WATCH THE 153 GREAT FISHES.

By Bishop J. H. Allen.

In our article entitled "What we saw at Windsor Castle" we gave an account of how we were permitted to verify the fact of the descent of the Royal Family of Great Britain from David, the ancient King of Israel, with whom our covenant-keeping God made a covenant that his house, his throne, his kingdom and his seed should endure as long as the light of day should remain in the astronomic heavens.

In a further pursuit of this subject we find the following: "And of all my sons (for the Lord hath given me many sons), he hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the Kingdom of the Lord over Israel." (I Chronicles xxviii, 5.) In consequence of which we have the following: "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father, and prospered; and all Israel obeyed him." (I Chronicles xxix, 23.)

In the study of this subject it is absolutely necessary to keep in mind the fact that it is "The Kingdom of the Lord"—Jehovah—and that it is also "The throne of the Lord," that was turned over to David, and that it is someone of his posterity—of his "seed" only—that must for ever succeed him as the ruler of that Theocratic Kingdom. In verification of which we will take time at present to give only the following: "Thus saith the Lord; If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob." (Jeremiah xxxiii, 25-26.)

It is such a well-known fact that Zedekiah, of the royal line of Israel's race, is the last King of the Judo-David-Pharez line that has ever reigned over the Jews, that we need only to mention the fact to have the approval of all interested. But it is not so well known that the prophet Jeremiah was commanded by the Lord to pull down, root out, throw down, afflict, and destroy the reign of this royal line over the Kingdom of Judah, over the Jews, and then build and plant the Kingdom anew in the Kingdom of Israel, the ten tribes—which command was backed by the following promise: "And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them to build and to plant, saith the Lord." (Jeremiah xxxi, 28.)

Neither is it well known that after Zedekiah's sons—all the royal princes—had been slain before his eyes, his eyes put out, and he taken to Babylon where he died, that Jeremiah had "The King's daughters" left with which to place on the removed, rebuilded and replanted throne of David. (Jeremiah xliii, 6-8.) These King's daughters were as much the seed of David as was their father or their royal brothers,

It should be known to Bible students that Pharez the son of Judah and ancestor of David had a twin brother, Zarah, who was just as much a legal son of this royal father as was Pharez. Zarah was also as lawful an heir to the sceptre as was Pharez; although at that time he and his heirs belonged to the non-ruling line. Consequently, at the time of the dethronement of Zedekiah, we find the following related prophecy from Ezekiel, who lived contemporaneously with Jeremiah: "Thus saith the Lord God: Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be (on) the same: exalt him that is low (the non-ruling line of Zarah, the twin brother of Pharez, the progenitor of the Judo-Davidic line) and abase him that is high (Zedekiah). I will overturn (it), overturn (it), overturn it; and it shall be (overturned) no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." (Ezekiel xxi, 26-27.)

In this prophecy, in connection with the fact that the "high" or ruling line was to be abased or dethroned while the low or non-ruling line was to be exalted, we have the fact that eventually this exalted and ruling line, although legal, lawful heirs of the racial royal line, must be dispossessed, and abdicate in favour of Him whose RIGHT IT IS when He comes. Remember "Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord instead of his father David," and that to David was given "the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel."

All of which is inevitably connected with the great and never disputed Messianic prophecy as given by Isaiah, which is as follows: "For unto us (the chosen race) a child is born, unto us a (royal) son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his Government and Peace there shall be NO END. Upon the throne of David and upon his Kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever." (Isaiah ix, 6-7.) The phrase "from henceforth" means from that time on, that is, from the time when the "Child," the "Son" of David who is also "the Mighty God," "the Lord from Heaven," takes again the throne of His Kingdom over Israel. Which event, together with its related facts, are found in the New Testament prophecy concerning them as given by the angel Gabriel: "Fear not Mary, for thou hast found favour with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." (Luke i, 30-33.)

Herein, we must note first, that there are eight individual features to this prophecy:

(1) Thou shalt conceive,
(2) And bring forth a son,
(3) And shalt call His name Jesus,
(4) He shall be great,
(5) And shall be called the Son of the Highest,
(6) The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David,
(7) He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever,
(8) Of His Kingdom there shall be no end.

The first five of these individual features were not only fulfilled at Our Lord's First Coming, but they became the foundation facts upon which the entire structure of Christianity has been builded. To destroy these, or any one of them, is to destroy Christianity. To attempt it is an attempt to destroy Christianity. Don't try it, you'll get hurt. The last three of these features are yet to be fulfilled. Jesus came the first time as the Babe of Bethlehem, He is coming as the Lion of the Tribe of Judah. He came to suffer—He is coming to reign. He came in humility—He is coming in power.

Now, in order to connect all these foregoing facts with the specific point made in our former article entitled "What we saw at Windsor Castle" in its relation to the Royal Family of Great Britain as the present occupants of the throne of David, the earthly inheritor of the throne of the Kingdom of the Lord over Israel, we need to call to memory the fact that in the thirteenth chapter of Matthew Our Lord put forth seven parables concerning the Kingdom of Heaven, six of which are prepared with "The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto —," the last of which seven is as follows: "Again, the Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: which, when it was full, they drew to the shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world," that is, "this present evil world"—or age.

It is also a significant fact of related truth to this Kingdom of Heaven parable that the only miracle which Our Lord performed after His Crucifixion and Resurrection was that of a net cast into the sea which was filled full to its utmost capacity; which, at the command of the Lord Himself, was cast on the right side of the ship, in which, when they were counted, there were just one hundred and fifty-three great fishes, which in themselves are significant evidence of a meaning beyond the mere fact of a local successful haul of fish. And it is only by a comparison of related facts that we may find a reason why this event took place, or be made to comprehend its possible prophetic significance, if there be any. And we are sure there is. Therefore, the first related facts to which we wish to call your attention are, that in the parable in which the Kingdom of Heaven is likened unto a net cast into the sea, the net was not drawn to the shore until it was full. Correspondingly, this net is declared to be "SO FULL they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes," that is, both nets had reached the utmost limit of their possible capacity.

Second, the Lord promised to make a new covenant both with the House of Israel, the ten-tribed Kingdom, and with "the House of Judah," of which latter House are the Jews, whose House—because they received Him not (they would not), is left desolate during the Gospel age, but who are to be again grafted into their own Olive tree—who meanwhile are the enemies of the Gospel, but as a portion of the elect race are beloved of God for the sake of their forefathers, with whom, according to Romans xi, 27, the Lord will yet make His promised covenant.

Consequently, when they still persisted, and "would not," Our Lord made a special visit to this earth, met Paul, a wrathful Jew, on the way to Damascus—and sent him specifically "To the Children and Kings of Israel." (Acts ix, 15.) Do not for one moment get the idea that Israel, as herein used, means the Jews, for none of the Kings of Israel were then ruling over them, nor had they been for over five hundred years. Prior to the Lord's call to Paul, He had instructed His Apostles, saying "Go not in the way of the Gentiles, but go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." That is, the ten tribes, or as Luke puts it, "His Ten Servants," to whom were given the ten pounds and to whom the Lord gave command, "Occupy till I come." (Luke xix, 13.) Which selfsame ten-tribed Kingdom, as foretold by the prophet, was to "Increase as the fishes increase." Fish was an early and the earliest symbol of Christianity.

Digitized by Google

Third related fact: Sir Robert Anderson, the author of "Daniel in the Critic's Den," who is a strong opponent of the Anglo-Israel Truth, needed to use the text Acts ix, 15, to make a certain point, and because he was writing to scholars was compelled to make a perfectly correct translation of the same. Consequently, his translation is as follows: "But the Lord said unto him (Ananias), go thy way, he (Paul) is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the nations, even the kings and children of Israel." These are the "many nations" and the "Kings" of these nations which the Lord promised to Abraham and Sarah, and pertain to the ten tribes whose territorial home was formerly Samaria. Of which people, Jeremiah, as the mouthpiece of the Lord says: "I will cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers." (Jeremiah xvi, 13.) Three of the major prophets, namely, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Isaiah, locate this unknown land as the "Island of the Sea," which Isaiah declares is north-west of Palestine. Concerning these dispersed ten tribes, the Lord further declares: "Behold, I will send for many FISHERS, saith the Lord, and they shall FISH them." (Jeremiah xvi, 16.) The Apostles were made "Fishers of men," but Our Lord Himself sent Paul to fish among "the nations, even the kings and children of Israel." Twenty-seven years later he returned, saying, "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision."

The fourth related truth is, that Christ, as the second Adam, is "The Lord from Heaven," who, as the Virgin-born child, is Emmanuel, "God with us," and to whom, as the Son of David according to the flesh, is to be given the throne of His father David, which selfsame throne is, and ever shall be, by the right of priority, the throne of the Lord—Jehovah—over the Theocratic Kingdom of Israel, which throne is now occupied by the Royal Family of Great Britain, who are of the Judo-Davidic royal line of Israel.

Hence the fifth related fact is, that there will come a day, a glorious day, when someone of this present ruling line of royal heirs must either abdicate or be deposed in favour of Our Lord. And it is on record that Queen Victoria declared again and again how thankful, how gladly, she would lay that Sceptre down at the feet of Jesus Christ, her Lord. In fact, all the Family know what to expect on that line. And since, as we have shown in the book "Judah's Sceptre and Joseph's Birthright," it is absolutely true that Queen Victoria was the 150th generation from Adam, it follows that her son, King Edward VII, was the 151st, that King George V is the 152nd, and that his son, the present Prince of Wales, the heir apparent to the throne, is the 153rd.

The sixth related fact is, that since there are 153 generations among the people to whom the Gospel was sent, and that the 153 fishes in this miraculous draught were all "Great Fishes," it shows an intended meaning that is deeper than the mere fact of a successful haul of fish; especially, since there are 153 generations of royalty along the line of the chosen race. "Sarai's" name was changed to "Sarah," which means "Princess," because the Lord had declared "Kings of people—nations—shall be of her." Only a Princess may become the mother of Kings. Adam was made a King when His Creator said "Have dominion." This is the reason why Luke gives the Genealogy of the Royal mother of David's Son—the Princess Mary—on past David back to Adam, the son of God; "he thereby being a Prince of the King Eternal."

Finally, the symbolic facts are :—

(1) The night is past,
(2) The morning had now come,
(3) The last fishing cruise was over,
(4) The last haul was made,
(5) The Lord stood on the shore,
(6) They were not far from land,
(7) There were just 153 Great Fishes,
(8) No possible chance for more,
(9) The end of fishing—of work—had come,
(10) The Lord had prepared a feast and given the invitation :

COME AND DINE!!!

Finally, connect these facts with the fact that the two Low Passages of the Great Pyramid measure 153 inches, and that they are on a level with, and at, the entrance of the King's Chamber, which is declared to usher us into the immediate presence of the King; and we have another most tremendous fact that the Coming of Our Lord to take the throne of His father David is at the door.

CONGRESS NOTES.

BY THE COMMISSIONERS.

THE Ninth Annual Congress of the British-Israel-World Federation opened on Monday, October 1st, in the large Central Hall, Westminster. A large gathering assembled from all parts of the British Isles, and representatives from Canada, Australia, the United States of America and South Africa were also present.

Under the Chairmanship of the President, Major James Knowles, O.B.E., the afternoon meeting opened at 2.45 with the singing of "O God, our help in ages past." Scripture was read by the Rev. J. Lumley Davies, L.D. The Chairman then asked the meeting to send a telegram of loyalty to His Majesty the King, and this was unanimously assented to. Major Knowles then introduced Prof. Odlum, Dr. Lincoln McConnell, Mr. W. H. Blackaller, the Rev. E. J. Springett, Mr. Frame, special speakers from Overseas, not forgetting the Rev. W. Pascoe Goard, who has returned from Canada. The Chairman then proceeded to address the meeting, and referred to the consequences which naturally follow the truth of our identity with Israel. He instanced the prophecies referring to the Israel of the latter days. These must, of necessity, apply to the British people, and can have no other logical interpretation. God's promises to Abraham and David have been literally fulfilled in our Empire, and he urged all our people to claim them as their own.

The Rev. W. Pascoe Goard then addressed the Congress. He referred to the remarkable centre of world-life in which we met, and to the critical days in which we live. We were in the midst of world-wide movements, and amongst them all the great movement of modern Israel is the key to the international position. He outlined the story of the division of Israel into two nations, Israel and Judah, and showed that the Jews belong only to the latter.

Following the prophecies relating to the Northern House of Israel, he traced them to the Isles of the West, and fearlessly stated that all such prophecies are being fulfilled in the Celto-Anglo-Saxon race.

He reminded us of the great revival of Josiah's reign, of the appointment of Judges to enforce the law of God, and showed that to-day the great movement among the nations towards the adoption of the British Common Law was a return to the law of God, and the greatest revival since the day of Pentecost. In all our Empire and in the U.S.A. the law of God is administered.

Referring to Modernism, he declared that we believe in the supernatural and the miraculous, and we act accordingly every time we pray. Mr. Goard urged all to use that power for our great nation at this critical period in her history.

* * *

Dr. Lincoln McConnell was then called upon, and expressed his pleasure at being present. One phrase was uppermost in his mind, viz.: "The greatest story in the world." This Congress was a six-day pleading with the British people as a jury for a great verdict on a great question. There is no romance in all history to compare with it, and no dramatic plot ever staged can touch it for thrill and movement. God had a definite plan for this planet, and chose the best people in the world to carry it out. With considerable legal experience he had never found any case so easily proved as British-Israel Truth; and he believed any honest-minded jury would have no difficulty in finding that the evidence for our case is absolutely overwhelming. There is more than mere accident in the power and influence of the British race. Are you willing for it to be true? That is the first necessary condition. And just there is the initial difficulty with many critics. Many speakers will present the case to the Congress, and he asked for a willing ear to their statements and appeals.

After the singing of a hymn and the taking of the collection, Professor Odlum, of Vancouver, took the platform, and addressed the audience as Israelites, "whether they liked it or not!"

He asked for a sympathetic mind and an attitude of prayer as essentials to successful gatherings. Prayer is universal, for everything is reaching out for something it does not now possess. Many people came ostensibly to learn, but are not unbiassed and open to be convinced. He urged patience and tolerance with clergy and others who do not see our Truth, for we ourselves have in time past been in their position. When a man has proved and mastered a proposition in Euclid he knows for ever that it is true. So with British-Israel Truth; you must first study and prove it, and you will know it is Truth for ever. He dealt with the argument of Design in the Universe, in general and in detail, and showed that the Great Designer must have some plan and purpose for the human race, and must make it known. The Bible is the revelation of God's design for mankind, and must harmonize with all God's creation and with God Himself. The speaker dealt with the question of control and predestination in relation to the Bible. We recognize in every realm that man possesses free will, and from the days of Adam until now God has acted upon the ground of man's free choice. He has not developed His purpose in opposition to that principle. God has dealt with His human children with discrimination, as a wise parent does. He has treated different races according to their special qualifications, and has chosen Israel in His wisdom to do certain great work in the world, for the reason that He saw they were the best fitted to the task.

Further, all stock-breeders and wise farmers try to upbreed their stock, and it is really important for a man to know that he comes from the finest branch of the human race. God is no respecter of persons, but He has undoubted respect to the man or the race who will do right and work righteousness. The man who accepts God's will is not on the same plane as the man who refuses it.

Again, the mind or soul can do better work if it can work through a healthy body, and for this and many reasons God chose the seed of Abraham, because He wanted the best human medium possible for the working-out of His great world purposes.

That people were called to be servants, God's servants, and they should realize the tremendous responsibility of such a great choice.

MONDAY EVENING.

Prof. Odlum, M.A., B.Sc., in the chair. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Osborn Goodchild, and Scripture read by the Rev. E. J. Springett, of Winnipeg.

The Chairman addressed us on the word "British." He explained that the word was made up of the two Hebrew words "Brith" a covenant, and "ish" a man—a covenant man. Abraham was British because he was the "covenant man." All true Israelites were British. Americans who dislike the word are British if they are of the Israel covenant stock. Anglo-Saxons are "John Bull" Saxons, for "Anglo" means "a bull."

Dr. Lincoln McConnell then spoke, and addressed us on the menace of Modernism. He thought that Modernism was an intellectual phase of Antichrist. He could not imagine the devil conceiving anything more destructive to Christianity than the Modernism of to-day. He learned from a visit to Hyde Park on Sunday last that the English mind is really tolerant, and does allow the other man to have his say. The Modernists are not sufficiently tolerant; they would bind us all down to the findings of scholarship, as they understand it, and throw over all the old beliefs in the Bible and fundamental Christianity. They do not believe in the miraculous and supernatural, and reject the Resurrection, Ascension and Second Coming of Christ. They accept the philosophy of evolution and reject the doctrine of the fall of man. They ridicule the idea of the Flood, and thereby reject the authority of God as revealed in Scripture and confirmed by Jesus Christ. He showed the Flood to be literally possible by levelling up the land and ocean surface of the globe. Perverted scholarship is capturing the minds of people who are led easily away from the straight path. He has never yet found a scholar who would face up to a few straight questions on the facts of nature and their relationship to the Bible. He contrasted the reasonable, logical beliefs of the Fundamentalist with the hazy speculations of the Modernist. We believe in a personal, imminent God, not an absentee God. The speaker gave most striking examples of ministers, deacons and others who have ceased to believe in Scripture and its presentations of truth, and the results are chaotic for all the great Churches in the world. He liked British-Israelites because they remained true to the Word of God.

The Rev. E. J. Springett took the platform and said he felt like the thin layer in the sandwich, between the two thick solid portions represented by the other speakers, having been called upon to speak at a moment's notice. He said he came from Winnipeg to gather inspiration for his work in his prairie town. Referring to Dr. Moffatt's visit to Winnipeg, he attended the Doctor's lectures, expecting to learn much upon Bible exposition. St. James wrote addressing the twelve tribes scattered abroad, but in dealing with this text Dr. Moffatt assured his audience that St. James' letter had nothing to do with that movement which concerned itself with the lost tribes of Israel. Such expositions only confuse the reader and make the Book the more difficult to understand! The speaker bore his testimony to the danger of modern teaching, and emphasized the value of clear exposition on British-Israel lines of Scripture which the scholars fail to explain. Because they cannot explain them they are endeavouring to put them away. There are signs, however, of a great awakening and a real return to the Word of God.

* * *

Mr. Herbert Garrison, in making announcements, assured the audience that our Movement is making more rapid progress than ever before. In Canada and U.S.A., as well as in South Africa and the other Dominions, British-Israel teaching is spreading like a flame. He stated officially that we were not Modernists, but were true to all the fundamentals of Christianity. He spoke of the methods of our critics as most unreasonable, because they condemned the Movement before studying it, a practice quite opposed to the British spirit of fair play.

The Rev. W. Pascoe Goard then addressed the Congress. He faced the positive side of the question. The one great Voice is that of Our Lord, and all who have followed should simply pass on His great word. Any minister who fails to do that is untrue to his ordination.

We rest on facts. Some want facts without faith; others want faith without facts; but we take both, and there are no forces that can bar our progress. In the wonderful chapters beginning with John xiv we get illuminating statements of Christ. Because we believe in God we are not to be troubled. We do believe in God. The Modernist rejects the God of the Old Testament, but Christ preached Him and Him alone. He is Israel's God, and if Israel has failed then God has failed. If we do not believe in Israel we do not believe God. "Ye believe in God," Christ said, "believe also in Me." Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." If we do not believe that, we do not believe in God. We are forced to believe in the supernatural if we believe in Christ. We can know, as Peter knew, by the revelation from Our Father in Heaven. The Modernist is denying us the privilege of the experience Peter had. The scientist refuses to accept our testimony as real knowledge of God and Christ. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." The Modernist refuses to accept such testimony. We would lead all to the light which the Holy Spirit gives, and thus confound the Modernist on higher ground. Was Jesus Christ an impostor? Is all this wrong? Impossible. "I go to prepare a place for you," Jesus said. They believed it, and looked for His return. For ages His birth had been foretold and expected, and at last He came, and thus fulfilled many prophecies. Then He said "I go." No man could say that. "To prepare a place." What kind of place? We do not know, but it will suit our needs. We know what He has already prepared, a garden, a beautiful world, and He will be able to do all that is necessary for our supreme happiness. He tells us that He had appointed a place for His people Israel, and Isaiah found it in the Isles.

Jesus said, "I will come again and receive you unto Myself." He has fulfilled everything up to this. Will He break this promise now? Modernists say He is not coming, and will not fulfil that word. British-Israelites show that God has kept His word, and thus it inspires our faith in God to-day. He foretold His own Resurrection and Ascension, and the events proved the truth of His word. Modernists say He did not rise, and did not ascend into Heaven. Then God is not true, and Christ is not true. Impossible! With such tremendous evidences Mr. Goard confounded the Modernists and expounded and defended the Word of God. "Let not your hearts be troubled."

We went away comforted and strengthened.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The Rev. W. Pascoe Goard presided and was supported on the platform by about twenty clergy and ministers, who were to give their testimony to-day as to the value of British-Israel teaching to them in their ministry. After the hymn "Crown Him with many crowns" had been sung, the Rev. T. Childs, of Birmingham, offered prayer, and the 91st Psalm was read by the Rev. Capt. T. E. Grout, of Southwark.

The Chairman commented upon the Scripture which had been read. He thought that "the secret place of the Most High" was the place where God had hidden His treasure, and throughout the Bible God's treasure was His people Israel. In our own great Empire that treasure is hidden to-day. He believed we were now in the secret place of the Most High, and doubtless were abiding under the shadow of the Almighty.

and spoke to us in his usual delightful manner upon the Lord's Prayer. He thought that this was not merely a recitation, but a statement of great principles of the Christian life. He more especially selected the clause, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory." Are we willing to be led, not simply from temptation, but actively into an experience of God's kingdom, His power in our lives, and a realization of His glory. He commented upon the term "temptation," and showed that the temptations of Our Lord illustrated the three great points upon which we are ourselves tempted. He thought the prayer was one to be led wherever the Lord wills. "Lead me anywhere out of the way of sin and evil, but right into the great experiences of Thy kingdom." Are we willing to be led into kingdom truth? Many men stipulate where they must be led; they limit God's power, and are not willing to be taught the whole truth of God's kingdom on earth.

The men who are willing to be led of God are the men who are the safest guides in the religious life of to-day.

* * *

The Rev. W. H. Stuart-Fox, M.A., who spoke next, declared that we cannot get away from the truth, and the truth has a habit of sticking to us. An enquiring mind finds it alive still all around him. Critics think that if they can inoculate one with prejudice and higher criticism they will render one immune from our Truth, but we find the Movement growing everywhere in spite of all enemy action. Truth is pointed, penetrating, explosive, and will blow to atoms all the delusions of the devil.

Prophecies are God's finger-prints, not only duplicated but multiplied, and prove conclusively His purpose and His truth. We are unpacking God's treasure-chest, and the evidences will convince the most exacting Bible critic of to-day.

PART OF THE GREAT AUDIENCE AT THE OPENING MEETING

Digitized by Google

The Rev. Canon Hollis followed, and expressed his desire to see the clergy and ministers of our time open their minds to our teaching.

So many of them are afraid to entertain any subject which is unpopular.

In this difficult age the speaker said he would be a pessimist were it not for our Truth. The Bible needs rediscovery, and our Movement is meeting that need. He criticized the modernized statements of to-day. We are now told that a new Bible, containing selected extracts from other great religions, is wanted. Our work is to restore the old paths, preaching the old, old truths, and reviving the old Word of God. He referred to the revival of Josiah's day as an example of what we need to-day. At the Reformation England got back to the Bible, and the need is again pressing. We must get back to the Book, and preserve it from disaster.

Our venerable and esteemed Dr. James Mountain then rose to address the gathering.

He first expressed his delight at the size and importance of the Congress meetings, and was sure that immense possibilities were behind it. He has been bearing his testimony for forty years to the truth of our teaching, sometimes at great cost, but he is convinced of the soundness of our position. He proceeded to state that British-Israel teaching had strengthened and perfected his faith in the Bible. In his early days he began to suffer from an attack of German measles, but after a serious illness he was brought back to simple truth. He visited Heidelberg University and studied there for six months, but he had met with British-Israel Truth, and it had won. No rationalistic teaching could stand against it. He is now a member of various Bible Unions doing splendid work for the Bible, but he considers that our Movement is doing better work than any of them. He included all, and went still further. British-Israel teaching had also given him an illuminated Bible. Dark pages are now lit up, and obscure passages made plain. He stirred the audience by his statement that in his eighty-sixth year he was determined to devote the remainder of his life to British-Israel work.

The Rev. Sparshott Johnson, a returned C.M.S. missionary from China, and a newly-appointed Commissioner for our Federation, was then called to speak.

He said he was to-day commencing a new phase of his career. The position of the Church of England clergy was most unenviable, with mediævalism on one hand and modernism on the other. He recommended them to take on a British-Israel pilot, remarking that B.-I. were the first two letters of the Bible. There are two pillars of the Temple of Truth which the Samson of modernism has laid unholy hands upon, viz.: The Word of God and the Christ of God, the Incarnate Word, but all such attacks must come to naught. He had read in his youth the books of the Rev. Grattan Guinness, and his mind was opened to God's great purposes in history. When he went to Ceylon he very soon met with British-Israel Truth and his Bible problems were solved. Ever since then he had preached with this new light in his soul.

He spoke of his interesting experiences in Ceylon, more especially during the war, and in 1917 when he expected the deliverance of the Holy City and the entrance into Palestine of the Israel people. Nineteen hundred years ago three crosses were erected outside Jerusalem, and now the flag of the Cross flies over that sacred spot. The Master's own words have come true, for Jerusalem is no longer trodden down of the Gentiles.

The Rev. J. E. Springett, of Winnipeg, responded to the Chairman's call. As a clergyman of the Church of England he was not in either of the extreme camps mentioned by a previous speaker, and he believed that our National Church had an exceptional opportunity to-day to lead the people into truth.

He referred to the great success of our Movement in Winnipeg, and bore testimony to the fine spirit there displayed. He traced the growth of the Branch from small beginnings, and of his own growth in the knowledge of our Truth. This knowledge had greatly helped him in his ministry, for he found everywhere a great hunger for the truth of the Word of God.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Chairman, the Rev. Canon Hollis, of Worthing.

Prayer was offered by the Chairman, and the Rev. Kenneth Dodds read the Scripture passage. The Chairman remarked that our great outstanding belief is that the Bible is true from beginning to end. We believe in God's faithfulness concerning His promises to the Israel nation as well as concerning His love to all men. The Chairman outlined many of those national promises. We believe in the identity of Britain with the Israel of old. Here we part company with many other Christian people. We believe in the twofold Gospel—of the Kingdom and of Salvation, and in these concise terms the Chairman summarized the tenets of our British-Israel faith.

Dr. Lincoln McConnell addressed the Congress for the last time this session. He expressed the great pleasure he had had in meeting such hard-headed, well-balanced, enthusiastic friends as those he had met at this Congress. He humorously described Mr. Pascoe Goard as he had mentally pictured him, and he was surprised to find him such a strong, well-balanced man. Similarly he described Prof. Odlum and Mr. Garrison as he had imagined them. He was carrying home most delightful impressions of his visit. He had thought much lately about God's leading of the British people. It was surely the Providence of God which kept America waiting until Englishmen had come to freedom in religion and were ready and fit to found that new Republic over the seas. There are three great ideas underlying the American Constitution, which was one of the greatest documents in the world:

Firstly, God. A personal God, to whom all men could approach, a concept the Pilgrim Fathers took from England.

Secondly, Individualism. The world was bound by fetters which the Pilgrim Fathers had broken when they went out to establish a free country.

Thirdly, Democracy. Not a political democracy, but a nation ruled by law. England is coming to the same point of experience. Genuine democracy means genuine submission to the Common Law of Great Britain. America got these great principles from Israel in the homeland from which the Pilgrim Fathers went. Kindred ideas betoken kindred origin. Each of these great ideas is now being assaulted. The modern menace of modern scepticism has come from a people which have ever been the enemies of God. German theologians represent old Assyria. From the same racial source, via Russia, there comes the great challenge to the reign of law. All the great modern movements have their roots in Bible history. He then gave us some amusing instances of the use of the number 13 in various phases of American (Manasseh) social and political life. It cropped up everywhere, in names and dates of many notable characters and events. Dr. McConnell's racy and energetic addresses found a warm response in all our hearts. We wished him and his wife and friends God-speed as they returned to their important work in America.

After his forceful address the meeting rose to express their gratitude and love to him, and Dr. McConnell suitably responded.

Mr. Garrison read a reply from His Majesty the King, expressing the thanks of His Majesty and that of the Queen for our telegram of loyalty sent from the Congress on Monday.

The Rev. Chas. Cooper, F.C.S., Vicar of Canonbury, bore his testimony to the value of British-Israel teaching in his experience. He had always longed to understand the Bible fully, and not until he met the Rev. Pascoe Goard did he find a teacher who could satisfy that longing.

Bishops and other clergy had told him they knew nothing about the subject of the Lord's Coming, and confessed they could not help him. The Church was in a hopeless state of ignorance on many important subjects. He found the light he wanted in British-Israel teaching, and had often told his brethren that where they were forced to stop he was now able to go on. There are very few original thinkers in ordinary Church circles, and they fail to clear up Bible difficulties.

He wished our Movement every success.

* * *

The Rev. Joseph Gay, A.T.S., our Commissioner for Wales, spoke upon "British-Israel, a working hypothesis." Large numbers, for various reasons, fail to study our subject closely. If they will start with British-Israel as a workable scheme, and then read the Bible, they will find proof and evidence of truth. Take the key and proceed to use it.

You must take God for granted, you cannot argue with Him. Do the same with British-Israel. Start with the hypothesis that the Israel kingdom, as distinct from that of Judah, now functions in the British race. Take that for granted and you will find the Bible is clear.

Others say that the Church is the key, while some say the Jew is the key.

These working hypotheses do not explain anything, and fail.

Our key unlocks the Book, the rest do not. If the key fits, it must be the right one. The speaker dealt with specific texts, and showed that in each case our key turns in the lock, while the others refuse to turn. Judge your examination by results. If it really does explain the Bible and the British Empire, and if the two fit perfectly, the key must be right. Taking Matthew xxi, 43, Mr. Gay showed that the kingdom which was to be given to a nation has not been given to either the Church or the Jew, but to Britain, because we are the only nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

The Rev. W. Turpitt, B.A., B.D., as a recent convert, testified to the strength and value of our work. Like Samson, it will soon carry away the gates of Gaza of error. The one thing which appealed to him was the Bible argument, and he could see as a result there would be a re-enthronement of the Word of God and of God Himself.

The movement away from the Bible has led to lawlessness, and he looked for the return which our teaching must bring. It was a tragedy that our theological colleges were destroying the Book they professed to teach, and instanced many modernist theories which he was taught as a student. The subject of prophecy is entirely ignored, and there is no wonder that the Church is in chaos. He urged wealthy believers to supply our clergy and ministers with our valuable books. Such gifts would be a wise investment. At present the old world has its lights put out, and we are called to relight them for the nation and the world.

* * *

The Rev. J. Lumley Davies, of Plumstead, said he had found real friendship amongst the British-Israel people. He had joined our Movement because of the help our teaching had brought to him in his study of the Word. Formerly a modernist, he found it difficult at first to agree with some of our claims, but he now had no difficulty in doing so. He urged all parents to be careful in the teaching of their children. He found modernism busy amongst Sunday School teachers, and he was concerned about the young entrusted to them. He was seriously thinking of preparing himself a series of lessons for use in his large Sunday School of 600 scholars. It was important for the nation that our children should now be taught the truth. The Word of God must eventually wear out and overcome all the criticism brought against it to-day.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

General Coventry Williams presided. Prayer was offered by the Rev. W. Turpitt, B.A., and Scripture was read by Mr. J. J. Morey.

The Chairman referred to the meetings of the Church Congress and the published opinions of leading modernists.

He thought it unfair that the Press should give prominence to the propaganda of one section of Christian workers and ignore or mis-state the work of this Federation, which stands for the authority and integrity of the Word of God. If the Bible is our foundation, why should we be ignored? It is a deplorable fact that the enemies of truth can always secure prominence in the Press while those who are loyal to truth are kept in the background.

The Chairman traced the growth of the Movement since its early days, and complimented our President and indefatigable Secretary-General and his staff upon the great progress achieved.

* * *

Prof. Odlum, M.A., who next spoke, remarked that the Press which is now antagonistic will soon be glad to give us all the space we need.

Long ago God was looking for a man with whom He could work, and found him in Ur of Chaldea. Abraham answered the Lord's call and received from Him the great promises of an everlasting covenant. The covenant embraced the promise of the land of Palestine to Abraham and his seed for ever. Later God promised David that his seed should rule over the Israel people for ever.

The speaker then traced the people into captivity, the northern kingdom to Assyria and the southern kingdom to Babylon. Ezekiel is sent to Israel while in captivity, and amongst other things he told them that the two nations would at some future date be reunited under one king in the land of their fathers. After that they should possess the land of Palestine as one united kingdom for ever.

Prof. Odlum then referred to the dream-image of Nebuchadnezzar, and pointed out that God would set up a kingdom which should cover the same period as the four Gentile kingdoms, but should survive them, consume them, and should never be destroyed. This fifth kingdom must, therefore, be the same united kingdom of Israel and Judah as Ezekiel wrote about. Daniel wrote about the same "for ever" kingdom in chapter vii of his Book.

Psalm cxlviii promises the kingdom to the saints of the Most High, "even the children of Israel, a people near unto Him."

Jesus Christ told His disciples who had given up everything to follow Him, that when He should sit upon the throne of His glory, they should sit upon twelve thrones, ruling the twelve tribes of Israel. The twelve tribes and the throne of Christ must be in the world to-day awaiting that grand consummation.

* * *

Mr. John Leech, K.C., was called, and he spoke upon the Third Commandment. This Commandment was given to Israel.

Digitized by Google

God had put His Name upon Israel, and they were not to be guilty of misrepresenting it or abusing the honour of bearing it. He called Israel out from the other nations to be a peculiar people. When a woman marries she bears the name of her husband, and can either honour it or disgrace it. At Mount Sinai God married Israel and gave her His Name. "They shall put My Name upon the children of Israel, and I will bless them."

"All people shall see that thou art called by the Name of Jehovah."

The letters EL in the name IS-RA-EL stands for the Name of God.

Do we bear that Name in vain? Wonderful results followed the marriage of Israel to God, and if they had been true they would have enjoyed the many blessings of which God's Name was the guarantee. The Name gives us the right to be forgiven and restored. It is a pledge of the love of God. He is going to restore all "who are called by the Name of Jehovah." He calls Palestine His land, His inheritance, and His wife and children are to return to God's land in the approaching millennium. We hold Palestine to-day, not because of a mandate from the League of Nations, but because God gave it to us long ago, and because we bear His Name.

The Rev. E. J. Springett, of Winnipeg, commenced a brief address by saying "I believe God." Many believe "in God" but do not really believe HIM. We must not simply give an intellectual assent to the nature of God, we must believe implicitly the word God has spoken. God's promises abound. They were spoken first at the Fall concerning man's redemption, and we believe Christ to be the Divine Son of God Who came to complete that redemption.

Then the promises to Abraham, notably that given on Mount Moriah. Isaac consecrated himself and the Israel seed following to the redemptive work of mankind. Christ fulfilled that promise, and we believe what God has said concerning the way of salvation.

We believe what Christ said about His return to earth and His reign upon David's throne. Because we believe God, we believe all the promises which have not yet been fulfilled.

* * *

Mr. W. H. Blackaller, President of the British-Israel Confederation of Canada, said that surely God knew what He was doing when He chose Israel. He took a race in hand and trained them for their task.

Read carefully their history. Formerly a race of slaves, they were called to free the slaves of the world. Once oppressed, they were to be the example of mercy and kindness to all nations. They were to shed their blood in the interests of righteousness.

The character of modern Israel will be a proof of their identity.

Israel's first treaty is recorded in the 9th chapter of Joshua. A nation supposedly in great need came to Israel and sought union with them, but Israel did not enquire of Jehovah and entered into a treaty. They soon found they had been deceived. Some of them sought to annul the treaty, but it had been made in the Name of Jehovah and must stand.

Later they suffered because they sought to break that treaty. Israel must keep her word, and none of her engagements must be treated as "scraps of paper."

If God was so insistent upon Israel keeping her bond, we can surely rely that God will keep His own promises and engagements.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

General Sir Arthur Phayre, K.C.B., presided.

Prayer was offered by Commander Roberts, and a portion of Scripture read by the Rev. Kenneth Dodds.

The Chairman at once called upon the Rev. Pascoe Goard to speak. Mr. Goard remarked that the Congress was really a wonderful event and many wonderful things were being said. Concerning the Great Pyramid, the Federation simply called attention to the word of Isaiah, viz., that it is "a witness to the Lord of Hosts in the land of Egypt." It contained a system of chronology stretching over 6,000 years, marking the outstanding events in Israel's history. Mr. Goard briefly described the Pyramid's interior passage system leading to the Great War and the Armistice. Most of this chronology has been translated into history, and we believe the small portion remaining will also bear its witness to God's prophetic Word.

We do not complain that the scholars of to-day are challenging our position; we rely for our foundation upon the Bible.

Take the Book of Isaiah. The critics refuse to accept the Book upon the plan laid down in the Book itself.

Mr. Goard proceeded to describe the geography of Isaiah, and the national territories occupied by the races of whom the prophet wrote. He covers the Middle East, Western Asia, all of Africa, and then goes on to write to Israel in the Isles.

He writes of a civilization just being born in the Isles of the north-west, at the uttermost parts of the earth.

A logical study of Isaiah's geography will bring you to Britain; not to the Orient, but to the Occident; not to the dying civilizations of Asia, but to the new civilization then rising in these Islands. In the realm of scholarship we meet fact with fact, and we welcome all investigation. In the realm of law also we have evidence which proves our case.

Mr. Goard spoke of various law systems of Europe and Asia and compared them with the Common Law of Britain. Our great jurists tell us that the Common Law did not come from Roman law.

In 1800 only Britain administered the Common Law, and authorities prove that our ancient British fathers administered the same Common Law 1,000 years B.C. They were not savages, but the most civilized people in Europe.

There has been a conspiracy to bury all reliable British facts that do not agree with Roman influences in Britain. In 1100 B.C. Brutus from Troy laid the foundations of London and codified the Common Law.

Now our law system is being studied in every nation, and is spreading over the world before the near return of Our Lord and King, Who will administer that law when He governs all nations. We are not in controversy in regard to the Bible itself. We read in it one great national story, and its early history, its prophecy, its Gospel, the Kingdom of Christ on earth, are all parts of its great Israel narrative. The teaching of the Bible as to God is now being challenged, for critics say they have no use for the God of the Old Testament. They do not understand Him. Christ spoke of Him, and He it is Who sent His Son to save mankind.

When they find Israel they will find Israel's God. "O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before Jehovah our Maker, for He is our God . . . ." We must come again to realize that Jehovah is our God to-day.

* * *

Mr. Herbert Garrison expressed the thanks of the Council to all who have so generously and consistently supported our work during the past nine years. He paid tribute to the devotion of an able staff, and outlined some of the provincial, Dominion and international organizations now at work. He emphasized the importance of our Movement at this critical time, when the faith of our people is being undermined by the menace of Modernism. We are a Fundamentalist organization. We shall go forward, knowing that God will support us. Mr. Garrison appealed for at least £10,000 for the work of the coming year.

Prof. Odlum took up his story and addressed us as the "sons and daughters of Isaac."

He spoke upon the subject of "Prophecy Fulfilled." Our fathers used to speak of the covenant-keeping God, and that is true in a real sense. The speaker dealt with God's covenant with Abraham as to land, which was literally fulfilled. Later, the Israel people left Palestine, but in 1917 the promise was again made good and is in force to-day. Taking Isaiah, chapter xix, Prof. Odlum spoke of the Great Pyramid as a sign to the Egyptians. They were to look upon it, and remember what God had said about punishments for their wrongdoing, and about their deliverance.

It was a sign that He would send them a great deliverer. Up to 1882 the promise had never been fulfilled, but in that year Great Britain liberated Egypt and the prophecy came true. Further, the promise to Abraham that his seed should possess the land from the Euphrates to the river of Egypt came true also, and his seed hold it to-day. Egypt has not returned to the Lord, so there remains a fulfilment yet to come. The speaker referred to the highway mentioned in verse 23, and this began to be fulfilled during the last war by British troops. Isaiah's highway exists to-day, and the speaker has travelled comfortably along it.

The whole land of promise is under the rule of Britain-Israel to-day.

The last verse says, "Blessed be Egypt my people," and the speaker told us that this refers to the original Egyptians, before the Hamitic period in Egypt; they were God's people, and the land is dear to Him.

Egypt will therefore be restored and saved.

* * *

The Rev. W. H. Stuart-Fox, M.A., took us back to the night of Belshazzar's feast, when the mystic writing on the wall was seen. Our Lord rebuked the Church because they neglected to read the writing on the wall, and the Church to day is similarly guilty. Some great systems are now condemned by that great finger, notably Romanism, Spiritism, Bolshevism, etc.

The speaker referred to the recent attempts of spiritualists to secure legislation to permit their mediumistic practices. Our Israel constitution cannot be so amended if we remain true to God's commands. The speaker referred to the recent attempt to introduce monkey glands into the human physique and strongly condemned it.

It is time Britain stood firmly against the Church of Rome. She is permitted to make progress in our Empire while she is losing ground in all other nations. We are under the shadow of Babylon, and must return to our Israel God and His eternal law. God's Kingdom must come, and the wicked systems now so powerful must of necessity be overthrown.

Let them read the writing on the wall.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Chairman, the Rev. G. H. Lancaster, M.A. Prayer was offered by the Rev. E. J. Springett and Scripture read by the Rev. J. T. Childs.

The Chairman substituted for Col. Gosset, who was ill, and the meeting joined the Chairman in expressing our sympathy with Col. and Mrs. Gosset. Remarking upon the 67th Psalm, the Chairman said the Psalm was full of British-Israel teaching. In Germany this summer the Chairman saw a placard stating "Germany's Grip of the World." Britain is to grip the world for Jesus Christ, and, as the Psalm states, "God will bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him." We are not to mind the opposition, for it is simply an expression of the ignorance which exists as to God's revealed Word.

* * *

Mr. David Davidson, of Great Pyramid fame, said he was not here to make a defence, for the Pyramid needed no defence. Those who had misrepresented the Pyramid teaching were really on their defence. All the Pyramid prophecies had been demonstrated up to the present moment. He accepted responsibility for fixing the date, May 29th, but he had not stated what events would transpire. Others had made him appear to have said many absurd things.

Mr. Davidson quoted from various leading newspapers, showing that the writers saw that Britain had entered a great tribulation at the end of May last.

He had never prophesied Armageddon to begin on May 29th, for he had carefully avoided such a statement.

The speaker explained what he understood the Antechamber to indicate—a hand of restraint holding back the coming trouble until May 29th. The speaker referred to the foolish ridicule and intolerance which we meet continually. Truth will in the end prove itself and win through.

He went on to speak of the purpose of the Great Pyramid, and dealt with some of its general features. It is not a tomb; it was not built to enshrine knowledge which had been acquired by its builders; it was built and designed to enshrine a Divine revelation, a message of warning to modern times and one of hope. Its essential message is that Jesus Christ is the real source and guide of the life of man, delivered in terms of modern scholarship. Its message was revealed surely to its builders by its Divine Architect. The speaker quoted from his book a warning he wrote four and a half years ago which has been ignored and overlooked by those who have misrepresented his statements. He argued that no prophecy interferes with man's free will, but shows God's foreknowledge as to how man will use his free will. God indicates His foreknowledge to man, and generally the full meaning of the prophecy is not understood until the event has taken place. The speaker then showed that real trouble exists, principally in the industrial districts, and all agree that a critical phase of such trouble was entered upon at the end of May last. He thought we were to learn the worthlessness of gold unless a man can work, and we were going to experience serious differences in the economic and financial spheres. The basic industries were suffering severely. He thought the Government responsibility was very great, and the question should be above all Party politics. Every Party knew the seriousness of the situation. It was a national crisis comparable with the Great War itself. Four and a half years ago he had prophesied a critical stage in industry, and the events proved the truth of that prophecy.

All financial experts believed 1928 would see a great improvement in our trade and a turning-point in industry, but, instead, there had been a great lapse since the end of May.

We are bearing the burden of the world's troubles.

Our physical man-power will fail unless spiritual man-power is put behind it.

Jesus Christ is coming to put us right, and we shall then be through the Low Passage indicating tribulation.

We shall come through, a purified race, ready for the age of the Kingdom of Christ on earth.

The Rev. Pascoe Goard, who followed, rightly interpreted our thought when he said Mr. Davidson had given us a wonderful address from two documents, the Bible and the Great Pyramid. Any man who refused to believe in the miraculous and the supernatural put himself outside the understanding of God's great plan. The Pyramid teaches that the Celto-Saxon race is the Israel of prophecy; also that from 1914 to 1936 this race would pass through a period of tribulation which would end in their redemption and deliverance.

The speaker then led us to the Mount of Transfiguration, which shows the scale on which the earth shall be governed—by Our Lord and His Israel servants.

Elias did not restore anything when he came as John the Baptist, so he will return and restore all things as Our Lord said. Mr. Goard showed a striking parallel between Elijah's experience with Ahab and the tribulation of to-day. In order to bring Israel back to God both Moses and Elijah will return, and the experience of Mount Carmel will be repeated.

The tribulation is foretold by many of the prophets, and they see the trouble end when Israel returns to God, and calls upon Him. Some apt passages were quoted. Britain must lead the way in the renewing of the earth. Mr. Goard reviewed the conditions of the world:—the Jew amassing wealth; the German conquering the markets of the world; the British enquiring their way back to truth and God. The trouble will increase, must increase, until we open our eyes. Britain must face her new task, the reformation of the world. Her people are destined for greater work than digging coal. God is surely going to compel our people to go out into the larger Empire which He has given us, to develop and build a new world.

And there they must not only develop the land but establish Christian communities. We are being led through the last stage to victory, and the Divine purpose will be fulfilled. The great cause of our darkness is the fact that some of the shepherds of Israel have not preached the Word of God, but the traditions of men. The teachers of to-day could, if they would, rapidly lead the nation back to God, but if they fail God will raise up other shepherds to take their places.

God's Covenant Man: British Israel.

by

EDWARD ODLUM, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.G.S., F.R.C. Inst.
(Also Fellow of The American Geographical Society)

A most amazing book. Its breadth of scope takes away the breath. Authorities of all races, and speaking all tongues, have been laid under contribution. Not by the pen of the writer, but by his researches, by his quotations from these world-famous authorities he proves the British-Israel case. It is unanswerable.

Rev. W. Pascoe Goard writes in his foreword:—

"I know of no man living who has carried on wider research than has Professor Odlum . . . he has brought together in this book samples of the opinions and contributions of the world's great scholars to the great truth that the Celto-Saxon peoples are the people chosen and ordained of God to carry out His great national purposes . . . No such compendium will be found elsewhere."

EDITORIAL.

The following should be read in the light of Israel truth, namely, that the Anglo-Saxon nations are the continuation of the Israel nation ; the inheritors of her Charters ; the possessors of her guarantees and immunities from destruction ; the executors of her commissions.

It should be understood that Authors alone are responsible for the views expressed in their Articles.

THE CONGRESS—1928.

BY THE REV. W. PASCOE GOARD, F.R.G.S.

ONCE again in Westminster there have gathered from all over the Anglo-Saxon world enthusiastic delegates and visitors to the Annual Congress. It is with delight we have greeted friends from South Africa, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, America, Anglo-Indians, and delegates and visitors from all the provinces of Britain, and distinguished visitors from the United States of America, with a sprinkling from other countries. What wonderful fellowship has been enjoyed in the between-times of the Congress as these visitors have mingled together, lunched together, and had good fellowship during the days of the Congress week !

Two years ago and last year the outstanding executive feature of the Congress was the organization of the work in the Dominion of South Africa. For this purpose the Rev. Maxwell Carnson volunteered, and with his wife and family, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Burton—the parents of Mrs. Carnson—as a pioneer band they said " Good-bye " and went to Africa to organize that great field. Whole-heartedly the Council contributed a considerable sum to enable them to get started in that great field, with the assurance from some of South Africa's strong men that they would thereafter sustain the work. Reports from time to time show the progress that undertaking is making. May God bless, and the people support, the work in South Africa.

The present year has been marked by the movement towards complete organization of the work in Canada.

Preliminary steps have been taken to perfect a Dominion organization. This is in the provisional stage at present.

The effort this winter in the Dominion will be to perfect provincial organizations, and it is hoped that provincial organization will be so far advanced as to appoint delegates to a Dominion Conference to be called for May next, so that the provisional organization may be put upon a permanent basis. In view of this great movement in the Dominion of Canada, there came to this Congress an important delegation, consisting of Professor Odlum, who must be looked upon as among the chief of the fathers of the work in the Dominion of Canada ; Mr. and Mrs. Blackaller, from the western gate of the Empire, the capital city of Victoria in British Columbia : Mr. Blackaller is provisional President of the Dominion organization ; Mr. and Mrs. Frame, with their two daughters, from the capital city of Toronto : Mr. Frame being provisional Vice-President of the Dominion organization. The Rev. E. J. Springett, from the capital city of Winnipeg, came as the President of the Manitoba provincial organization ; he is Rector of an important church in the city of Winnipeg.

The writer had the privilege of accompanying this delegation on his return from his home city, Vancouver, B.C.

These delegates entered with zest and pleasure into the activities of the Congress, gathering information and enthusiasm on every hand, and contributing materially by their fellowship and by their inspiring addresses to the success of the Congress.

A luncheon with the President, the Secretary-General and the Canadian delegation was rich with wise consultation, and it is hoped that when the provinces send their delegates to the Dominion organization meeting in May, one of the general officers of the parent body will visit the Dominion and attend the Conference.

Next in importance to this, and promising to be of prime importance, was an important group of visitors from the United States, chief among whom, from the B.-I. standpoint, was the Rev. Lincoln McConnell, of Florida, U.S.A. Dr. McConnell's personality and characteristic addresses stood with easy prominence among the many home and overseas visitors. His breezy, genial messages, filled with the power of the full Gospel, greatly impressed and cheered the whole gathering; and his inimitable conversations instructed and enlightened every group into which from time to time he mingled.

Dr. McConnell is a friend and associate of Dr. Fowler Ham, who was such a welcome visitor two years ago. Dr. McConnell is a stalwart, uncompromising preacher of the Gospel of the Kingdom and of Grace; a fundamental British-Israelite, he is an host in himself, or, as we should say in the West, a whole team and the dog under the wagon. He is one of a group among many groups who are introducing and upholding British-Israel Truth in the United States. It is eminently desirable that all these groups should be brought together. It must be remembered that the United States is as large as Europe, and as diversified; but, unlike Europe, it is bound together by the English tongue, by the Common Law, and by common literature. Perhaps no centre can so easily bring these groups together as our Headquarters in London, through our correspondence with all these groups, and the agency of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE. To this end Mr. Howard Rand, LL.B., of Haverhill, Mass., U.S.A., came to us a year ago and spent six months in getting into step with our organization and methods of working, with a view to devoting his time and energy to the work of bringing together the organizations and forming new Branches in the United States of America. He has returned full of zeal, and entered upon his task, having already secured the hearty goodwill of the Anglo-Israelites of New England and of Ontario.

Great Britain will not attempt any organization in the United States, but the good offices of Headquarters are available to the leaders in the United States to help them in initial meetings, which after their organization will be carried forward with a driving power second to none. We hope this may be the outstanding feature of executive work for the coming year as Canadian organization is this year.

At home the outstanding feature of this year's Congress was the emergence of the clerical and ministerial forces, who, with firm hand and certain voice, supported the Congress all through, and assumed complete responsibility for the second day of the great Congress. The galaxy of clergymen and ministers which appeared upon our platform on that day numbered far more than those whose voice could be heard because of time limitation. The testimonies given during the time available will be duly reported in the pages of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE; but the presence and silent witness, as far as the platform is concerned, and the hearty strong lead in the conversations of the between-time hours, given by the many clerical men present, added a body and sense of stability to the work of the Congress above what has been experienced before.

By actual information at hand we are led to the conclusion that for every Commissioner the Federation has been enabled to put into the field to devote his full time to our work and evangel, ten clergymen and ministers have taken up and are fearlessly proclaiming the Gospel of the Kingdom. This is as it should be; the great facts of British-Israel Truth are being introduced as a stream of living water into the pulpits of the country and into the church work.

The work of the Commissioners, led by Mr. John Leech, K.C., during the last year, has been wonderfully fruitful, and the effects have been manifested in the Congress this year. The story of their activities and experiences, if written by a master of narrative, would make very fascinating reading. Reports of their activities will be found in other columns of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE, from time to time.

Turning now to the written message, we have to thank God indeed for the great success which has attended this part of the Movement. The Covenant Publishing Company has fought its way in the face of the greatest possible difficulties to a place among the publishing houses of this great city of London. It is now firmly established as a permanent, going concern, which has justified the faith of those who contributed or invested the initial capital which has made the work of that department possible. The Covenant Publishing Company has sent out something like ten million items of literature in book and pamphlet form, and yet has assets sufficient to cover the initial investment of the shareholders. The energy and devotion of the President and Directors, of the Secretary and staff, which has made this possible, are to be highly appreciated. It needs only the loyal co-operation and support of our British-Israel constituency in buying and distributing the literature produced by the Covenant Publishing Company to multiply the powerful influence of this wing of our organization. Remember that great Societies who misunderstand our Truth are using monies contributed for the spreading of the truths of the Gospel to obstruct and hinder this work; not until their somewhat lazy minds take the trouble to find out the work we are really doing, instead of depending upon their grotesque imaginations of things we are not doing, will they understand that they are using monies contributed for the spread of the Gospel to hinder the preaching of the Gospel. When they wake up to this fact, being honest although prejudiced men, their repentance will, no doubt, be sincere; but in the meantime we have to proceed against the current of their opposition.

We write this in the hope that it will meet the eye of some who are responsible for misapprehending and therefore misrepresenting our work; and even though it should first stir them to anger, no doubt it will cause them, being honest, to come to Headquarters for actual information and knowledge of facts. When they do this, they will become our friends and supporters, as we are the friends and supporters of everyone who in any degree preaches the Gospel of Our Lord.

We thank God for the stream of testimony to the fact that THE NATIONAL MESSAGE AND BANNER is carrying a stream of light and comfort to the ends of the earth. For instance—and we speak this with sincere gratitude—there came to us in the Church House on Saturday night a gentleman who said something as follows: "I have come a journey of 500 miles for the one purpose of meeting you to bear the greetings and thanks of an aged relative, now 85 years old, for the comfort that has come through the pages of THE NATIONAL MESSAGE, and to say that, although it will not be possible for her to meet us face to face here, she will be waiting on the other side to meet and convey her thanks in person." Through these pages we respond to that greeting and accept that appointment, never doubting that there will be much happy conversation over the childhood of eternal life spent in this earthly sphere when the beginnings of things eternal are experienced. How could one but have a heart full of gratitude for such a message carried at such a cost!

The publication has cost much labour and somewhat more in money for printers' bills than has come in for subscriptions and advertising. This amount would have been made up, and more, if we felt free to open our advertising pages to a wider range of advertisement, but the character of the paper and its message leads us to debar very wide fields of advertising from our columns. Therefore we ask our friends to push the circulation, and if there is anything in the way of currency of the realm likely to be rusted through non-use, send it forward as a contribution and we will guarantee its productive investment in the Kingdom.

Under the leadership of President Major James Knowles, O.B.E., and Secretary-General Herbert Garrison, F.R.G.S., F.R.C.I., the work has gone forward. The Council are aware that their success has depended upon the devoted administration and activities of these two officers of the Federation; especially has Mr. Garrison given up his life absolutely, and most successfully, to the administration of the work of the Federation. That his energies have not been spent in vain, the present standing of the work is a demonstration.
